If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1602 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2002 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 945.03(1m)(b) involving "receiving" a bet. The statute also applies to "recording" or "forwarding" a bet.

1. The definition of "bet" is adapted from the lengthy statutory definition found in § 945.01(1). See note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1601.

2. The instruction uses the "mental purpose" alternative for the definition of "intentionally." A second alternative is that the defendant be "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause" the result. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923.1 and 923.2.

1605 COMMERCIAL GAMBLING: SETTING UP OR COLLECTING THE PROCEEDS OF A GAMBLING MACHINE — § 945.03(1m)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Commercial gambling, as defined in § 945.03(1m)(e) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally [sets up a gambling machine for use for the purpose of gambling] [or] [collects the proceeds of a gambling machine].[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [two] [three][2] elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The machine in question was a gambling machine.

   A "gambling machine" is a device which for a consideration[3] affords the player an opportunity to obtain something of value, the award of which is determined by chance, even though accompanied by some skill and whether or not the prize is automatically paid by the machine.[4]

   [The phrase "chance, even though accompanied by some skill," means that chance must predominate over skill in determining the outcome of the game.][5]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

["Gambling machine" does not include an amusement device if it rewards the player exclusively with one or more nonredeemable free replays for achieving certain scores and does not change the ratio or record the number of the free replays so awarded.][6]

2. The defendant intentionally [set up the gambling machine for use for the purpose of gambling] [or] [collected the proceeds of the gambling machine].[7]

This means that the defendant knew that the machine was being used for gambling and knew that the proceeds were derived from gambling.[8]

ADD THE FOLLOWING AS A THIRD ELEMENT IF THE CHARGE INDICATES OR THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE ALLEGED VIOLATION OCCURRED ON LICENSED PREMISES.[9]

[3. The defendant intentionally (set up for the purpose of gambling) (or) (collected the proceeds of) six or more gambling machines.]

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that [both] [all three][10] elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1605 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 1999, 2000, and 2002. The 2002 revision adapted the instruction to the new format and added the third element for certain types of cases. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it added to the comment.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 945.03(1m)(e). It is set up to include either two or three elements, depending on whether the alleged violations took place on a licensed premises. The two element version should be used for offenses on non-licensed premises; setting up or collecting the proceeds of a single machine violates the statute in that situation. The three element version should be used either when the charge identifies the site as a licensed premises or evidence is introduced to that effect. The penalty provisions in § 945.03(2m) punish offenses on Class "B" or "Class B" premises as forfeitures if one to five machines are involved. The criminal penalty applies only if six or more machines are involved.

1. The bracketed alternative supported by the evidence should be selected. If the evidence supports both alternatives, both may be submitted, joined with "or." The Committee concluded that jury agreement on one alternative or the other is not required; the alternatives are believed to be like the "use or threat of force" required for robbery – see Manson v. State, 101 Wis.2d 413, 304 N.W.2d 729 (1981); Cheers v. State, 102 Wis.2d 367, 306 N.W.2d 676 (1981).

2. The instruction is set up to include either two or three elements, depending on whether the alleged violations took place on a licensed premises. The two element version should be used for offenses on non-licensed premises; setting up or collecting the proceeds of a single machine violates the statute in that situation. The three element version should be used either when the charge identifies the site as a licensed premises or evidence is introduced to that effect. The penalty provisions in § 945.03(2m) punish offenses on Class "B" or "Class B" premises as forfeitures if one to five machines are involved. The criminal penalty applies only if six or more machines are involved.

3. Wis. Stat. § 945.01(3) does not further define the term "consideration." However, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has applied the definition provided in Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019), and concluded that it is consistent with the meaning of consideration in common law. See Quick Charge Kiosk LLC v. Kaul, 2020 WI 54, ¶18, 392 Wis. 2d 35, 944 N.W.2d 598. See also, DOR v. River City Refuse Removal, Inc., 2007 WI 27, ¶¶50-51, 299 Wis. 2d 561, 729 N.W.2d 396, for a discussion on various formulations Wisconsin courts have utilized to define consideration.

4. This is based on the definition provided in § 945.01(3)(a). The Committee concluded that "device" should be substituted for the statutory term "contrivance." Subsection (3)(b) provides three exceptions. The instruction addresses one of the exceptions – an amusement device rewarding the player exclusively with free replays. See text at note 5.

One of the bases for the defendant's challenge to the definition of "gambling machine" used in State v. Hahn, 221 Wis.2d 670, 586 N.W.2d 5 (Ct. App. 1998) [Hahn II], was to the word "contrivance," which is not used in this instruction. Hahn II held that the portion of the statutory definition referring to "affording an opportunity . . ." and "automatically paid by the machine . . ." is not ambiguous. Relying on the words' usual meanings, the court held that "this portion of the statute requires that the machine, or contrivance, has a role in providing the opportunity to obtain something of value, but that something of value need not be provided by the machine alone without external influence or control." 221 Wis.2d 670, 682.

A machine is not exempt from this definition simply because it has uses other than illegal gambling. As the Wisconsin Supreme Court noted in Quick Charge Kiosk LLC, "Wisconsin Stat. § 945.01(3) does not define a gambling machine as a contrivance whose sole use is gambling. It says the opposite, namely, that a 'gambling machine is a contrivance which for a consideration affords the player an opportunity to obtain something of value, the award of which is determined by chance.' (emphasis added)." Quick Charge Kiosk LLC, supra, at ¶21. Therefore, the fact that a machine has non-gambling features, such as cellphone charging capabilities or limited free use functions, does not negate the fact that the results of its games are determined completely by chance. The same reasoning applies to machines that offer preview features that allow players the ability to determine in advance the outcome of any particular game. See JD Prime Games Kiosk, LLC v. DOR, 2022 WI App 6, ¶¶14-16, 400 Wis.2d 499, 969 N.W.2d 778.

5. The material in brackets is based on the state's requested instruction in State v. Hahn, 203 Wis.2d 450, 453, fn. 3, 553 N.W.2d 292 (Ct. App. 1996). It was not expressly approved or disapproved by the court in Hahn, but the Committee concluded it was a correct interpretation of the phrase "determined by chance, even though accompanied by some skill."

In Hahn II, the court explicitly adopted the equivalent of the bracketed material: the phrase means that "chance rather than skill must be the dominant factor controlling the award." 221 Wis.2d 670, 679. The court relied in part on the interpretation of similar language in the lottery statute, as interpreted in State v. Dahlk, 111 Wis.2d 287, 330 N.W.2d 611 (Ct. App. 1983).

6. This is based on the exception to the definition of "gambling machine" set forth in § 945.01(3)(b)2. It was discussed in State v. Hahn, 203 Wis.2d 450, 553 N.W.2d 292 (Ct. App. 1996). Arcade games, such as pinball machines and Pac Man fall under this exception. See JD Prime Games Kiosk, LLC v. DOR, 2022 WI App 6, ¶15, 400 Wis.2d 499, 969 N.W.2d 778.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. This is based on the holding in State v. Hahn, 203 Wis.2d 450, 455, 553 N.W.2d 292 (Ct. App. 1996).

9. The third element should be added for violations that took place on a licensed premises. In some cases, the charge may indicate as much; in others the issue may be raised by the evidence. The penalty provisions in § 945.03(2m) punish offenses on Class "B" or "Class B" premises as forfeitures if one to five machines are involved. The criminal penalty then applies only if six or more machines are involved.

The statute sets this up by providing, in sub. (2m), an exception to the generally applicable criminal penalty. The Committee concluded that this should be handled in the same manner as similar statutory exceptions. For example, the offense of carrying concealed weapon applies to "any person except a peace officer." § 941.23. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has concluded that whether the defendant is a peace officer, and thus exempted from the statute, is an issue that must be raised by the defendant as an affirmative defense. See, State v. Williamson, 58 Wis.2d 514, 524, 206 N.W.2d 613 (1973), and the discussion in footnote 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

Factual disputes about the applicability of the exception for licensed premises are likely to be determined by pretrial motion. The Committee concluded that it is not an issue at trial until there is some evidence of the existence of a valid license. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the exception is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981). This requires, in this situation, proof that six or more machines are involved.

10. See note 2, supra.

1607 COMMERCIAL GAMBLING: USING WIRE COMMUNICATION TO PLACE A BET — § 945.03(1m)(g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Commercial gambling, as defined in § 945.03(1m)(g) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally, for gain, uses a wire communication facility for the transmission or receipt of information assisting in the placing of a bet on a sporting event.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used a wire communication facility[1] for the transmission or receipt of information.
2. The information transmitted or received assisted the placing of a bet on a sporting event.

   A bet is an agreement in which one stands to win or lose something of value dependent upon chance even though accompanied by some skill.[2]

   A sporting event is any contest of skill, speed, strength, or endurance.
3. The defendant acted intentionally, for gain.

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[3] to use a wire communication facility to transmit or receive information to assist in the placing of a bet on a sporting event for gain.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1607 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2002 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes.

1. The statutory definition of "wire communication facility" is found in § 945.01(6) and reads as follows:

> "Wire communication facility" means any and all instrumentalities, personnel and services, and among other things the receipt, forwarding or delivery of communications used or useful in the transmission of writings, signs, pictures and sounds of all kinds by means of wire, cable, microwave or other like connection between the points of origin and reception of such transmission.

2. The definition of "bet" is adapted from the lengthy statutory definition found in § 945.01(1). See note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1601.

3. The instruction uses the "mental purpose" alternative for the definition of "intentionally." A second alternative is that the defendant be "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause" the result. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923.1 and 923.2.

1610 PERMITTING REAL ESTATE TO BE USED AS A GAMBLING PLACE — § 945.04(1m)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

A person violates § 945.04(1m)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin if the person intentionally permits any real estate owned or occupied by that person, or under that person's control, to be used as a gambling place.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant owned, occupied, or controlled real estate.
2. The real estate was used as a gambling place.[1]
3. The defendant intentionally permitted the real estate to be used as a gambling place.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to permit the use of the real estate as a gambling place and knew that it was being used in such a way.[2]

Meaning of "Gambling Place"

A gambling place is any building or any room within it, one of whose principal uses is any of the following: making and settling bets or receiving, holding, recording or forwarding bets or offers to bet.[3]

Meaning of "Principal Use"

"A principal use" means one of the more important uses of the real estate. It need not be the only use or even 50% of the total usage of the real estate. No mathematical definition can be given. The use of any place or room at any given time may determine its principal use at that time, but for purposes of this offense, that use must be considered in light of the overall or other uses of the place or room. In order to constitute one of the principal uses, the usage must be more than incidental. You must view the character of the alleged gambling place over a sufficient period of time to determine whether gambling constituted one of the principal uses.[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1610 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. This offense requires the use of real estate as a "gambling place"; proof of use for "commercial gambling" is not required, even though "commercial gambling" appears in the title to § 945.04. "'Gambling place' is defined by § 945.01(4) without reference to 'commercial gambling.' Because § 945.04(1) is unambiguous in this respect, we ignore its title." State v. Dahlk, 111 Wis.2d 287, 294, 330 N.W.2d 611 (Ct. App. 1985).

2. "Intentionally" is divided into two parts: purpose and knowledge. Having the mental purpose to cause the result is one of the two definitions of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3) and is believed to be most likely to apply in the context of this offense. The other alternative is being "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause the result." See the discussion in Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3), which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires knowledge of all the facts which make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

In State v. Dahlk, cited in note 1, supra, the defendant contended that because he did not know that his pyramid club was an illegal lottery, the jury could not find he permitted the warehouse to be used as a gambling place. The court of appeals rejected this claim, emphasizing that mistake as a defense requires an honest error of fact or law other than criminal law. See § 939.43(1). "Defendant's mistake as to the legality of the pyramid club under the criminal laws of this state does not negate the existence of criminal intent." 111 Wis.2d 287, 305.

3. The definition of "gambling place" is adapted from the one provided in § 945.01(4)(a):

> (4) Gambling place. (a) A gambling place is any building or tent, any vehicle (whether self-propelled or not) or any room within any of them, one of whose principal uses is any of the following: making and settling bets; receiving, holding, recording or forwarding bets or offers to bet; conducting lotteries; or playing gambling machines.

4. Three decisions of the Wisconsin appellate courts have discussed the "principal use" requirement. The definition in the instruction is based on those cases.

In State v. Morrissy, 25 Wis.2d 638, 131 N.W.2d 366 (1969), the Wisconsin Supreme Court rejected the defendant's argument that "principal" required that the use be the "single, main, chief, or dominant" use, or that it be given a meaning of "more than 50 percent of the use."

> The term "one of the principal uses" contemplates a comparison of the degree of use between a class of principal uses and incidental uses. No mathematical definition can be given, and admittedly the line of demarcation is difficult to draw. . . .

> The use of a place or room at any given time may determine its principal use at that time but for the purpose of sec. 945.01(4), Stats., such use must be considered in light of the overall or other uses of the place or room. A sufficient period of time must be considered to fairly ascertain the character of the alleged gambling place in terms of principal uses.

The Morrissy court found the evidence to be sufficient to establish that a tavern was a gambling place where Monday night poker games were conducted 25 or 26 times a year.

In State v. Dahlk, note 1, supra, the court of appeals found that the definition of "gambling place" was constitutional in the face of the defendant's claim that it was vague and overbroad. The court held that a person of ordinary intelligence can be expected to understand the distinction between principal and incidental uses of premises. 111 Wis.2d 287, 304. The Dahlk court applied the Morrissy definition of "principal use" to find that a warehouse qualified as a gambling place where it was used over a three-week period for meetings of a club engaged in an illegal pyramid investment scheme.

In State v. Nixa, 121 Wis.2d 160, 360 N.W.2d 52 (Ct. App. 1984), the court of appeals reversed a conviction under § 945.02(2) for illegally remaining in a gambling place. The court concluded that a one-time use of an apartment recreational building for gambling did not make gambling a principal use of the premises; prior gambling activity must be shown. The court found that the phrase "one of whose principal uses" was ambiguous and therefore investigated the intent of the legislature and reviewed Morrissy and Dahlk: "This case law, combined with the statute and its legislative history, convinces us that evidence of prior gambling activity is necessary to prove the existence of a gambling place." 121 Wis.2d 160, 166. The court referred to the Judiciary Committee Report on the 1953 Criminal Code which states that a "tavern where customers occasionally play cards for money is not a gambling place because that is not one of its principal uses." 1953 Report at 153. "This language indicates that, even with multiple event gambling evidence, the statute is not violated if a principal use for gambling purposes is not demonstrated." 111 Wis.2d 160, 164-65.

1650 ALTERING A LOTTERY TICKET — § 565.50(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 565.50(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who alters[1] a lottery ticket

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant altered[2] a lottery ticket.[3]

   A lottery ticket is altered when it has been changed from the form in which it was originally issued by the State of Wisconsin.

2. The defendant altered a lottery ticket with intent to defraud.[4]

   This requires that the defendant altered the lottery ticket with the purpose to use it to obtain money (he) (she) was not entitled to receive.[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1650 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of subsection (2) of § 565.50 which provides as follows:

(2) Any person who alters or forges a lottery ticket or share or intentionally utters or transfers an altered or forged lottery ticket or share is guilty of a Class I felony.

For violations of sub. (2) involving intentionally uttering or transferring an altered or forged lottery ticket, see Wis JI Criminal 1651. Violations of § 565.50 (3) are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1652.

1. The statute refers to "alters or forges" a lottery ticket or share. The instruction uses the term "alter" throughout. If there is an intended difference between the two terms, the term "alter" appears to be the broader one.

2. See note 1, supra.

3. "Lottery ticket" is not defined in the statutes relating to the state lottery. It is defined in the Wisconsin Administrative Code at Chapter Tax 61, § Tax 61.02(3), but that definition is not easily adaptable for use in a standard instruction.

4. The Committee concluded that this offense requires "intent to defraud" even though the statute does not expressly provide for it. Subsection (2) of § 565.50 defines this offense without referring to "intent to defraud" and provides that a violation is a Class I felony. Subsection (3) of the same statute prohibits possessing an altered or forged lottery ticket with intent to defraud and provides for a maximum penalty of a $10,000 fine or 9 months imprisonment or both. The Committee concluded that the offense with the more severe penalty should also include a culpable mental element.

Further, the use of the word "forges" carries with it the connotation of an intent to defraud. "The knowledge of the falsity of the instrument and the intent to defraud are of the very essence of the crime of forgery." 37 C.J.S. Forgery § 4. Also see Wells v. State, 195 Wis. 551, 218 N.W. 811 (1929).

Several Wisconsin cases have interpreted criminal statutes to include criminal intent where it was not expressly required. In State v. Alfonsi, 33 Wis.2d 469, 147 N.W.2d 550 (1967), the court noted that "the element of scienter is the rule rather than the exception in our criminal jurisprudence." (Also see United States v. U.S. Gypsum, 438 U.S. 422, 436 (1978): "the existence of mens rea is the rule of, rather than the exception to, the principles of Anglo-American criminal jurisprudence.") The Alfonsi court found that the crime of bribery, as defined in § 946.10, required "corrupt intent" even though not explicitly included in the statutory definition of the offense. The court relied on the general rule noted above, as well as on the fact that the crime of bribery "by its inherent nature has traditionally required a corrupt motivation." One of the cases relied on in Alfonsi was State v. Croy, 32 Wis.2d 118, 145 N.W.2d 118 (1966). In Croy, the court found that "intent to defraud" remained an element of defrauding an innkeeper under § 943.21 despite the fact that the statute had been revised to eliminate "intent to defraud" from the definition of the crime. The Wisconsin Supreme Court applied the Alfonsi rationale to an offense defined outside the Criminal Code in State v. Collova, 79 Wis.2d 473, 255 N.W.2d 581 (1977). The court held that the legislature did not intend operating after revocation to be a strict liability offense because of the "severe consequences attached to a violation." An "objective standard of care" was added to the statutory definition of the offense: the defendant must have cause to believe his license might be revoked or suspended.

There are also decisions declining to read a mental element into a statute that does not expressly require one. See, for example, State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (Ct. App. 1986), and State v. Temby, 108 Wis.2d 521, 322 N.W.2d 522 (Ct. App. 1982).

5. Lottery prizes are generally in the form of payment of money, though the prize may be a trip or some other type of noncash award. If the prize is for other than money, this definition of "intent to defraud" must be changed to refer, for example, to "something of value." In any event, it is the purpose to obtain something the person is not entitled to receive that the Committee concluded is the essence of "intent to defraud" in the context of this offense.

1651 UTTERING AN ALTERED LOTTERY TICKET — § 565.50(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 565.50(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one intentionally utters or transfers an altered[1] lottery ticket.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (uttered) (transferred) a lottery ticket.[2]

   ("Utter" means to present for payment.)[3]

   ("Transfer" means to give possession to another person.)[4]

2. The lottery ticket was altered.[5]

   A lottery ticket is altered when it has been changed from the form in which it was originally issued by the State of Wisconsin.

3. The defendant intentionally (uttered) (transferred) an altered lottery ticket.

   This requires that the defendant knew that the lottery ticket was altered and acted with the purpose to (present it for payment) (transfer possession to another person).[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1651 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of subsection (2) of § 565.50 which provides as follows:

> (2) Any person who alters or forges a lottery ticket or share or intentionally utters or transfers an altered or forged lottery ticket or share is guilty of a Class I felony.

For violations of sub. (2) involving intentionally altering or forging a lottery ticket, see Wis JI Criminal 1651. Violations of § 565.50 (3) are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1652.

1. The statute refers to an "altered or forged" lottery ticket or share. The instruction uses the term "alter" throughout. If there is an intended difference between the two terms, the term "alter" appears to be the broader one.

2. "Lottery ticket" is not defined in the statutes relating to the state lottery. It is defined in the Wisconsin Administrative Code at Chapter Tax 61, § Tax 61.02(3), but that definition is not easily adaptable for use in a standard instruction.

3. This is based on the definition of "utter" used for forgery offenses under § 943.38(2). See Wis JI-Criminal 1492 at note 4. Also see State v. Tolliver, 149 Wis.2d 166, 440 N.W.2d 571 (Ct. App. 1989): a forged check is uttered when it is introduced into the stream of commerce.

4. The Committee believes this definition explains the plain and ordinary meaning of "transfer."

5. See note 1, supra.

6. "Intentionally" is divided into two parts: purpose and knowledge. Having the mental purpose to cause the result is one of the two definitions of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3) and is believed to be most likely to apply in the context of this offense. The other alternative is being "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause the result." See the discussion in Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3), which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires knowledge of all the facts which make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

1652 POSSESSION OF AN ALTERED LOTTERY TICKET WITH INTENT TO DEFRAUD — § 565.50(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 565.50(3) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who possesses an altered[1] lottery ticket with intent to defraud.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a lottery ticket.[2]

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had the lottery ticket under his actual physical control.[3]

2. The lottery ticket was altered.[4]

   A lottery ticket is altered when it has been changed from the form in which it was originally issued by the State of Wisconsin.[5]

3. The defendant possessed an altered lottery ticket with the intent to defraud.

   This requires that the defendant knew the lottery ticket was altered and had the purpose to use it to obtain money (he) (she) was not entitled to receive.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1652 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of subsection (3) of § 565.50 which provides as follows:

> (3) Any person who possesses an altered or forged lottery ticket or share with intent to defraud shall be fined not less than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months or both.

For violations involving altering or forging a lottery ticket under § 565.50(2) , see Wis JI Criminal 1650. For violations of § 565.50(2) , involving intentionally uttering or transferring an altered or forged lottery ticket, see Wis JI Criminal 1651.

1. The statute refers to possession of "an altered or forged" lottery ticket or share. The instruction uses the broader term "altered" throughout. If there is an intended difference between the two terms, the term "altered" appears to be the broader one.

2. "Lottery ticket" is not defined in the statutes relating to the state lottery. It is defined in the Wisconsin Administrative Code at Chapter Tax 61, § Tax 61.02(3), but that definition is not easily adaptable for use in a standard instruction.

3. See Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a more complete definition of "possess."

4. See note 1, supra.

5. The instruction assumes that the statute applies only to conduct involving the lottery tickets issued by the State of Wisconsin, as opposed to privately produced documents relating to something that might qualify as a "lottery" broadly defined.

6. Lottery prizes are generally in the form of payment of money, though the prize may be a trip or some other type of noncash award. If the prize is for other than money, this definition of "intent to defraud" must be changed to refer, for example, to "something of value." In any event, it is the purpose to obtain something the person is not entitled to receive that the Committee concluded is the essence of "intent to defraud" in the context of this offense.

1705 SABOTAGE — § 946.02(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sabotage, as defined in § 946.02(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally damages, interferes with, or tampers with any property with reasonable grounds to believe that his act will hinder, delay, or interfere with (the prosecution of war or other military action) (the preparation for defense) by the United States.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally damaged property.[2]

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to damage property or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[3]

2. The defendant had reasonable grounds to believe that (his) (her) act would hinder, delay, or interfere with the preparation for defense by the United States.

"Reasonable grounds to believe" means that a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have believed that (his) (her) act would hinder, delay or interfere with the preparation for defense by the United States.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of sabotage have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1705 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of subsec. (1)(a) of § 946.02. Subsection (1)(b) of the statute defines a different type of offense: intentionally making a defective article that is to be used in national defense. Subsection (2) explains that nothing in the statute should be construed to impair the rights of employees to engage in lawful collective bargaining or other labor activities.

The only reported Wisconsin decision dealing with the sabotage statute is State v. Ostenson, cited in note 4, below. Ostenson involved damage to the United States Navy ELF (extremely low frequency) communication facility in Ashland County.

1. The rest of the instruction refers only to the "preparation for defense" alternative on the assumption that it would be the most commonly used.

2. The instruction refers to "damage to property" throughout, although two other alternatives are also prohibited by the statute: interfering with property or tampering with property.

3. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). For more extensive definition of the term, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. The definition of "reasonable grounds to believe" is based on the decision in State v. Ostenson, 150 Wis.2d 656, 442 N.W.2d 501 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court held that "the statute does not require proof of the actor's subjective intent to interfere. Rather, it requires merely that a reasonable person, acting with the defendant's knowledge, has grounds to believe it will." 150 Wis.2d 656, 661. Also see State v. Hurd, 135 Wis.2d 266, 400 N.W.2d 42 (Ct. App. 1986), which discusses the related phrase, "reasonable cause to suspect" as used in § 48.981, the statute requiring the reporting of suspected child abuse. Hurd is discussed in footnote 3 to Wis JI-Criminal 2119.

1720 BRIBERY: TRANSFERRING PROPERTY TO A PUBLIC EMPLOYEE TO INDUCE ACTION OR FAILURE TO ACT — § 946.10(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.10(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, with the intent to induce a public employee[1] to act[2] in violation of the employee's lawful duty, transfers[3] property[4] to the employee which the employee is not authorized to receive.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of employee) was a public employee.

   A (title of employee) is a public employee.[5]

2. The defendant transferred property to (name of employee).[6]

3. (Name of employee) was not authorized to receive the property for the performance of official duties.[7]

4. The defendant intended to induce (name of employee) to act[8] in violation of the employee's lawful duty.

   "Intent to induce" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to induce (name of employee) to act.[9]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of bribery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1720 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

There are two instructions for violations of subsec. (1) of § 946.10: Wis JI Criminal 1720 is for offering a bribe with intent to "induce a public officer or employee to do or omit to do any act in violation of the officer's or employee's lawful duty"; Wis JI Criminal 1721 is for offering a bribe with intent to "influence the conduct of any public officer or public employee in relation to any matter which by law is pending or might come before the officer or employee in the officer's or employee's capacity as such officer or employee."

The instruction has selected from the several alternatives offered by the statutory definition of the offense in the interest of providing a clearer and more easily understood model. Wis JI Criminal 1720 uses "public employee" instead of "public officer," "act" instead of "omit to do any act," "transfers" instead of "promises," and "property" instead of "personal advantage." Where necessary, of course, the instruction should be modified to use the appropriate alternative.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving "public employees." The statute also applies to "public officials." Both terms are defined in § 939.22(30). See note 5, below.

2. The instruction is drafted for cases involving inducements to "act." The statute also applies to inducements to "omit to do any act" in violation of the employee's lawful duty.

3. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the transfer of property. The statute also applies to promises to transfer.

4. The instruction is drafted for cases involving transfer of property. The statute also covers transfer or promise of any "personal advantage."

5. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a police officer is a public employee. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a police officer. The same would be true for cases involving "public officers."

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> A "public officer" is any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> A "public employee" is any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

A juror is a "public employee" for purposes of § 946.10. State v. Sammons, 141 Wis.2d 833, 417 N.W.2d (Ct. App. 1987).

6. The wording of § 946.10 is essentially the same as that proposed in the 1953 draft of the revised Criminal Code. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft included the following:

> The bribe may be either property or a personal advantage, which covers anything that can be used to bribe someone. "Personal advantage" includes such things as a job or some social advancement.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 171.

7. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft of the Criminal Code revision (see note 6, supra) included the following:

> . . . . The requirement that the property or personal advantage be one which the actor is not authorized to receive was made to exclude the case of the officer or employee who is on a fee basis and who might come within the wording of the statute because the fee is given to influence him to perform certain acts in his official capacity.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 171.

8. See note 2, supra.

9. Under the Criminal Code, the phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1721 BRIBERY: TRANSFERRING PROPERTY TO A PUBLIC OFFICER TO INFLUENCE A DECISION — § 946.10(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.10(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, with the intent to influence the conduct of any public officer[1] in relation to any matter which by law is pending or might come before the officer in the officer's official capacity,[2] transfers[3] property[4] to a public officer which the officer is not authorized to receive.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of officer) was a public officer.

   A (title of officer) is a public officer.[5]

2. The defendant transferred property to (name of officer).[6]

3. (Name of officer) was not authorized to receive the property for the performance of official duties.[7]

4. The defendant intended to influence the conduct of (name of officer) in relation to any matter which by law was pending or might have come before (name of officer) in an official capacity.

"Intent to influence" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to influence the conduct of (name of officer) .[8]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of bribery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1721 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

There are two instructions for violations of subsec. (1) of § 946.10: Wis JI Criminal 1720 is for offering a bribe with intent to "induce a public officer or employee to do or omit to do any act in violation of the officer's or employee's lawful duty"; Wis JI Criminal 1721 is for offering a bribe with intent to "influence the conduct of any public officer or public employee in relation to any matter which by law is pending or might come before the officer or employee in the officer's or employee's capacity as such officer or employee."

The instruction has selected from the several alternatives offered by the statutory definition of the offense in the interest of providing a clearer and more easily understood model. Wis JI Criminal 1721 uses "public officer" instead of "public employee," "transfers" instead of "promises," and "property" instead of "personal advantage." Where necessary, of course, the instruction should be modified to use the appropriate alternative.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving "public officer." The statute also applies to a "public employee." Both terms are defined in § 939.22(30). See note 5, below.

2. The instruction uses the term "official capacity" instead of the statute's phrase: "in the officer's or employee's capacity as such officer or employee." No change in meaning is intended.

3. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the transfer of property. The statute also applies to promises to transfer.

4. The instruction is drafted for cases involving transfer of property. The statute also covers transfer or promise of any "personal advantage."

5. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a member of the county board is a public officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a member of the county board.

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> A "public officer" is any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> A "public employee" is any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

A juror is a "public employee" for purposes of § 946.10. State v. Sammons, 141 Wis.2d 833, 417 N.W.2d (Ct. App. 1987).

6. The wording of § 946.10 is essentially the same as that proposed in the 1953 draft of the revised Criminal Code. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft included the following:

> The bribe may be either property or a personal advantage, which covers anything that can be used to bribe someone. "Personal advantage" includes such things as a job or some social advancement.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 171.

7. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft of the Criminal Code revision (see note 6, supra) included the following:

> . . . . The requirement that the property or personal advantage be one which the actor is not authorized to receive was made to exclude the case of the officer or employee who is on a fee basis and who might come within the wording of the statute because the fee is given to influence him to perform certain acts in his official capacity.

8. Under the Criminal Code, the phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

For a discussion of the sufficiency of the evidence on the "intent to influence" element, see State v. Rosenfeld, 93 Wis.2d 325, 286 N.W.2d 596 (1980).

1723 BRIBERY: ACCEPTING A BRIBE — § 946.10(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.10(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a public officer or employee who directly or indirectly accepts any property[1] which the officer or employee is not authorized to receive, pursuant to an understanding that the officer or employee will act in a certain manner in relation to any matter which by law is pending or might come before the officer or employee in an official capacity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a (public officer) (public employee).

   A (title of officer) is a public (officer) (employee).[2]

2. The defendant directly or indirectly accepted property.[3]

3. The defendant was not authorized to receive the property for the performance of official duties.[4]

4. The defendant accepted property pursuant to an understanding that the defendant would act in a certain manner in relation to a matter which, by law, was pending or might come before the defendant in an official capacity.

[This understanding must exist at the time the acceptance of property occurred. The term "understanding" refers to the defendant's state of mind. It does not require that there was an agreement between the defendant and another person. It requires that the defendant determined in (his) (her) own mind to accept property in return for acting in a certain manner with respect to a matter which was pending or which might come before the defendant in an official capacity.]

5. The defendant acted with a corrupt understanding.

A "corrupt understanding" means that the defendant accepted property knowing that it was given to influence the defendant's conduct as a public (officer) (employee).[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of bribery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1723 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for violations of subsec. (2) of § 946.10, which involves accepting or offering to accept a bribe. There are also two instructions for violations of subsec. (1) of § 946.10: Wis JI Criminal 1720 is for offering a bribe with intent to "induce a public officer or employee to do or omit to do any act in violation of the officer's or employee's lawful duty"; Wis JI Criminal 1721 is for offering a bribe with intent to "influence the conduct of any public officer or public employee in relation to any matter which by law is pending or might come before the officer or employee in the officer's or employee's capacity as such officer or employee."

1. The statute applies to anyone who "accepts or offers to accept any property or personal advantage." The instruction is drafted for "accepting property" and would have to be modified if a case involves "offering to accept" or "personal advantage."

2. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a member of the county board is a public officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a member of the county board.

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> A "public officer" is any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> A "public employee" is any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

A juror is a "public employee" for purposes of § 946.10. State v. Sammons, 141 Wis.2d 833, 417 N.W.2d (Ct. App. 1987).

3. See note 1, supra. The wording of § 946.10 is essentially the same as that proposed in the 1953 draft of the revised Criminal Code. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft included the following:

> The bribe may be either property or a personal advantage, which covers anything that can be used to bribe someone. "Personal advantage" includes such things as a job or some social advancement.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 171.

4. The Comment to the bribery statute in the 1953 draft of the Criminal Code revision (see note 3, supra) included the following:

> . . . . The requirement that the property or personal advantage be one which the actor is not authorized to receive was made to exclude the case of the officer or employee who is on a fee basis and who might come within the wording of the statute because the fee is given to influence him to perform certain acts in his official capacity.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 171.

5. This element is intended to reflect the interpretation of § 946.10(2) found in State v. Alfonsi, 33 Wis.2d 469, 147 N.W.2d 550 (1967). The Alfonsi decision reversed a state legislator's bribery conviction, holding that it was error for the trial court to refuse a requested instruction to the effect that bribery requires "a corrupt understanding." The decision did not directly define what a "corrupt understanding" is, but a later decision suggested that it involves a transfer of property with intent to influence a public official's conduct. See State v. Duda, 60 Wis.2d 431, 210 N.W.2d 763 (1973), interpreting § 946.61, Bribery Of A Witness, and treating it as analogous to the general bribery statute. Duda referred to several cases cited in Alfonsi, emphasizing parts of those decisions that tied "corrupt" to "intent to influence." 60 Wis.2d 431, 436-37. The Committee concluded that when applied to the individual who allegedly accepted a bribe, this requires that the property was accepted with knowledge that the property was given with intent to influence.

1730 MISCONDUCT IN PUBLIC OFFICE (BY FAILURE OR REFUSAL TO PERFORM DUTY) — § 946.12(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Misconduct in public office, as defined in § 946.12(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a (public officer) (public employee) who intentionally fails or refuses to perform a known mandatory, nondiscretionary, ministerial duty of (his) (her) (office) (employment) within the time or in the manner required by law.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was a (public officer) (public employee). A (position) is a (public officer) (public employee).[1]

2. The defendant failed to perform a mandatory, nondiscretionary, ministerial duty of (his) (her) office.

   [The mandatory, nondiscretionary, ministerial duties of a (position) include: _____ .][2]

3. The defendant intentionally did not (describe duty) .[3]

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[4] to fail or refuse to perform the duty.

4. The defendant knew (he) (she) was required to (describe duty) (in the manner) (within the time) required by law.[5]

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1730 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and changes to the text and footnotes.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, "A member of the county board is a public officer."

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

2. The nondiscretionary duties of some public officers and public employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's nondiscretionary duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person failed or refused to perform a nondiscretionary duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 823.

In State v. Schwarze, 120 Wis.2d 453, 355 N.W.2d 842 (Ct. App. 1984), the court (in interpreting subsec. (3) of § 946.12) held that the question of legal duty of a public employee presents an issue of law and that it is proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that such a duty existed.

In State v. Dekker, 112 Wis.2d 304, 332 N.W.2d 816 (Ct. App. 1983), the court held that a police officer's responsibility to provide first aid to an injured person in police custody is not a "mandatory, nondiscretionary, ministerial duty" under subsection (1) of § 946.12. The court discussed the meanings of those terms, referring to the Black's Law Dictionary definition of "mandatory": "[c]ontaining a command; preceptive; imperative; preemptory; obligatory." Black's Law Dictionary 867 (5th ed. 1979). "Nondiscretionary" was identified as the opposite of "discretionary" and the latter defined as: "[t]hose acts wherein there is no hard and fast rule as to course of conduct that one must or must not take and, if there is clearly defined rule, such would eliminate discretion." Black's Law Dictionary 419 (5th ed. 1979).

The Dekker court referred to statutes and case law for definition of "ministerial":

> The code of ethics for public officials defines "ministerial action" as: "an action that a person performs in a given state of facts in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to the exercise of the person's own judgment as to the propriety of the action being taken." [citing § 19.42(8), Stats.]
> Our supreme court has stated that "[a] public officer's duty is ministerial only when it is absolute, certain and imperative, involving merely the performance of a specific task when the law imposes, prescribes and defines the time, mode and occasion for its performance with such certainty that nothing remains for judgment or discretion." [Citing Cords v. Anderson, 80 Wis.2d 525, 541, 259 N.W.2d 672, 679 (1977).]

112 Wis.2d 304, 311-12.

3. See note 2, supra.

4. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) to include not only "mental purpose," but also "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

5. Section 946.12(1) specifically refers to failure to perform a known duty, emphasizing the presence of a knowledge requirement that also flows from the use of the word "intentionally." See § 939.23(3). The defendant must know that the duty in question was mandatory, nondiscretionary, and ministerial and that it had to be performed within a specified time or in a certain manner. The 1953 Report on the Criminal Code described the knowledge requirement as follows: "[I]t is necessary to find that the officer or employee, at the time of his refusal or failure, knew the duty existed or knew that the duty was supposed to be performed within a certain time or in a particular manner. . . . [B]ut if the officer believes in good faith that the law imposes no duty on him in the particular case, he is not guilty, for such a mistake negatives the existence of the mental element required for the crime." [Citing the rules now found in §§ 939.23 and 939.43]. 1953 Report at 175.

1731 MISCONDUCT IN PUBLIC OFFICE (BY PERFORMANCE OF UNAUTHORIZED OR FORBIDDEN ACT) — § 946.12(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Misconduct in public office, as defined in § 946.12(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a (public officer) (public employee) who, in (his) (her) capacity as an (officer) (employee), does an act which (he) (she) knows is in excess of (his) (her) lawful authority or which (he) (she) knows (he) (she) is forbidden by law to do in an official capacity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was a (public officer) (public employee). A (position) is a (public officer) (public employee).[1]
2. The defendant, in (his) (her) capacity[2] as a public (officer) (employee) (describe conduct) .
3. (Describe conduct) was (in excess of the defendant's lawful authority) (conduct in which the defendant was forbidden by law to engage in (his) (her) official capacity).[3]

4. The defendant knew (that the conduct was in excess of (his) (her) lawful authority) (that (he) (she) was forbidden by law to engage in the conduct in (his) (her) official capacity).

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1731 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, "A member of the county board is a public officer."

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

2. In State v. Schmit, 115 Wis.2d 657, 340 N.W.2d 752 (Ct. App. 1983), the court of appeals addressed the connection between the conduct and the defendant's official capacity. The court concluded that § 946.12(2) was not violated by a prison guard who engaged in consensual sexual relations with an inmate. The court emphasized that there must be a "material connection" between the forbidden act and the public office, that it must be "inherently related to the duties of the office." 115 Wis.2d 657, 665.

3. It may be helpful to refer to any statutes defining the particular officer's duties in instructing on whether the acts claimed to have been committed by the defendant violated a lawful duty or were in excess of lawful authority.

1732 MISCONDUCT IN PUBLIC OFFICE (BY EXERCISE OF DISCRETIONARY POWER FOR A DISHONEST ADVANTAGE) — § 946.12(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Misconduct in public office, as defined in § 946.12(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a (public officer) (public employee) and who, in (his) (her) capacity as an (officer) (employee), exercises a discretionary power in a manner inconsistent with the duties of (his) (her) (office) (employment) (the rights of others) and with intent to obtain a dishonest advantage for (himself) (herself) or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was a (public officer) (public employee). A (position) is a (public officer) (public employee).[1]
2. The defendant, in (his) (her) capacity as a public (officer) (employee) exercised a discretionary power of (his) (her) office.[2] The defendant may exercise discretionary power either by doing something or by failing to do something.[3]

   [The discretionary powers of a (position) include: _____ .][4]

3. The defendant exercised a discretionary power in a manner inconsistent with (the duties of (his) (her) office) (the duties of (his) (her) employment) (the rights of others).

[The duties of a (position) include _____.][5]

4. The defendant exercised discretionary power with intent to obtain a dishonest advantage for (himself) (herself) (or) (another).[6]

The phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to obtain a dishonest advantage or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[7] You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. While this intent to obtain a dishonest advantage must be found as a fact before you can find the defendant guilty, it must be found, if found at all, from acts and words and statements, if any, bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1732 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and changes to the text and footnotes.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, "A member of the county board is a public officer."

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

2. "Discretionary powers of office" are not limited to expressly conferred powers but apply to de facto powers which arise by custom and usage. State v. Tronca, 84 Wis.2d 68, 80, 267 N.W.2d 216 (1978). Tronca held that an "alderman's privilege" allowing the veto of any liquor license in his district constituted a discretionary power of office under the statute. Tronca also upheld the constitutionality of § 946.12(3) in the face of challenges claiming it was vague and overbroad.

In State v. Schwarze, 120 Wis.2d 453, 457, 355 N.W.2d 842 (Ct. App. 1984), the court discussed the difference between mandatory and discretionary powers, citing State v. Dekker, 112 Wis.2d 304, 332 N.W.2d 816 (Ct. App. 1983).

3. This statement is intended to be a more understandable equivalent of the statutory phrase: "whether by act of commission or omission."

4. The discretionary powers of some public officers and public employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the powers in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's discretionary powers are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was exercising the powers in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 823.

5. The duties of some public officers and public employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case.

In State v. Schwarze, 120 Wis.2d 453, 355 N.W.2d 842 (Ct. App. 1984), the court held that the question of legal duty of a public employee presents an issue of law and that it is proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that a duty existed. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 823.

6. In State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468, the court of appeals reversed a conviction under § 946.12(3) because it concluded that the trial court erred in adding the following to the jury instruction on the fourth element: "The use of a state resource to promote a candidate in a political campaign or to raise money for a candidate provides to that candidate a dishonest advantage." The court held that this had the effect of directing a verdict against the defendant on the element of the crime requiring that the defendant exercise discretionary power with intent to obtain a dishonest advantage. Jensen, ¶14.

Jensen also held that ". . . the court erred in excluding Jensen's testimony as to his understanding of the use of state resources for campaigns by other legislators, because the testimony was relevant to the contested issue of Jensen's intent." Jensen, supra, ¶40.

7. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1733 MISCONDUCT IN PUBLIC OFFICE (BY FALSE ENTRY, RETURN, CERTIFICATE, REPORT, OR STATEMENT) — § 946.12(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Misconduct in public office, as defined in § 946.12(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a (public officer) (public employee) and who, in (his) (her) capacity as an (officer) (employee), makes an entry in (an account or record book) (a return) (a certificate) (a report) (a statement) which (he) (she) intentionally falsifies in a material respect.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was a (public officer) (public employee). A (position) is a (public officer) (public employee).[1]
2. The defendant, in (his) (her) capacity as a public (officer) (employee) made an entry in (an account or record book) (a return) (a certificate) (a report) (a statement).
3. The entry was false in a material respect.[2]
4. The defendant intentionally falsified the entry in a material respect.

"Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose[3] to falsify the entry in (an account or record book) (a return) (a certificate) (a report) (a statement) in a material respect and knew that the entry was false when (he) (she) made it.

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

"Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

2. If it is believed to be necessary to define "material," the original version of this instruction suggested that a material false entry may be defined as "an entry which causes the instrument to speak differently in legal effect than it spoke originally." Wis JI-Criminal 1733 8 1966. Black's Law Dictionary (7th ed. 1999) defines "Material alteration" as follows: "A significant change in something; esp., a change in a legal instrument sufficient to alter the instrument's legal meaning or effect."

3. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) to include not only "mental purpose," but also "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. 1734 MISCONDUCT IN PUBLIC OFFICE (BY UNLAWFUL SOLICITATION OR ACCEPTANCE OF ANYTHING OF VALUE) — § 946.12(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Misconduct in public office, as defined in § 946.12(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a (public officer) (public employee) and who, under color of (his) (her) (office) (employment) intentionally solicits or accepts for the performance of any service or duty anything of value which (he) (she) knows is greater or less than fixed by law.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was a (public officer) (public employee). A (position) is a (public officer) (public employee).[1]
2. The defendant intentionally solicited or accepted anything of value[2] for the performance of any service or duty.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose[3] to solicit or accept anything of value for the performance of any service or duty.

   [The (services) (duties) of a (position) include _____.][4]

3. The defendant knew that the amount (solicited) (accepted) was greater or less than is fixed by law.

4. The defendant acted under color of (his) (her) (office) (employment).[5]

"Under color of (office) (employment)" means to act under the apparent authority of the (office) (employment).[6]

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1734 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

The constitutionality of subsec. (5) of § 946.12 was upheld in Ryan v. State, 79 Wis.2d 83, 255 N.W.2d 910 (1977). See notes 2 and 5, below.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, "A member of the county board is a public officer."

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

"Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.

"Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

2. The "anything of value" standard is specific enough to be constitutional. Ryan v. State, 79 Wis.2d 83, 255 N.W.2d 910 (1977). "There is a standard and it is simple. Anything of value which is accepted and known to be greater or lesser than what is fixed by law for a particular duty or service subjects the public officeholder to prosecution for violation of this section. This does not mean that the public officeholder can never accept a gift. Section 946.12(5), Stats., is only violated when that which was accepted was 'for the performance of any service or duty.'" 79 Wis.2d 83, 92.

3. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) to include not only "mental purpose" but also "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

4. The duties of some public officers and public employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case.

In State v. Schwarze, 120 Wis.2d 453, 355 N.W.2d 842 (Ct. App. 1984), the court held that the question of legal duty of a public employee presents an issue of law and that it is proper for the trial court to instruct the jury that a duty existed. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 823.

5. Ryan v. State, note 2, supra, involved the acceptance of $600 worth of gift certificates by an alderman allegedly in return for his not exercising his veto power over liquor license applications. The court rejected Ryan's claim that the statute did not apply to him because no fees were set by law for aldermanic approval of licenses and that the statute was intended to cover only public employees holding administrative positions. The court concluded that "Ryan had a duty as an alderman to vote upon the recommendations of the license committee, which he did. His salary was fixed by law. The jury could infer that he accepted $600 worth of certificates as a greater compensation than was fixed by law for his services as an alderman." 79 Wis.2d 83, 93.

6. Black's Law Dictionary, (7th ed., 1999), offers the following definition of "color of office": "The authority or power that is inherent in an office, esp. a public office. Acts taken under the color of an office are vested with, or appear to be vested with, the authority entrusted to that office."

1740 PRIVATE INTEREST IN A PUBLIC CONTRACT: ENTERING INTO A CONTRACT IN A PRIVATE CAPACITY AND BEING AUTHORIZED BY LAW TO PARTICIPATE IN THE MAKING OF THE CONTRACT AS A PUBLIC OFFICER[1] — § 946.13(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Private interest in a public contract, as defined in § 946.13(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a public officer or public employee who, in a private capacity, negotiates, bids for, or enters into a contract in which the officer or employee has a private pecuniary interest and at the same time is authorized or required by law to participate in a capacity as a public officer or employee in the making of the contract.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a public (officer) (employee).

   [A _____ is a public (officer) (employee).][2]

2. The defendant (negotiated) (bid for) (entered into) a contract[3] in a private capacity.

   IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE CONTRACT DID NOT INVOLVE RECEIPTS OR DISBURSEMENTS OF MORE THAN $15,000[4] IN ANY YEAR ADD THE FOLLOWING:[5]

[This element also requires that the contract involved receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.]

3. The defendant had a private pecuniary interest in the contract.

A "pecuniary interest" is one involving money (or one that can be valued in money).[6]

4. The defendant was authorized or required by law to participate in the making of the contract in a capacity as a public (officer) (employee).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1740 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of subsection (1)(a) of § 946.13. Violations of subsection (1)(b) are covered by Wis JI Criminal 1741 and 1742.

The elements of the crime as set forth in this instruction were cited with approval in State v. Venema, 2002 WI App 202, 257 Wis.2d 491, 650 N.W.2d 898 (1986). Venema also analyzed the application of § 946.13(1)(a) to a situation where the defendant participated in the making of a contract but left office before it was executed.

The offenses defined in § 946.13(1)(b) were discussed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986). The case involved a director of a state technical institute who received payments in excess of his regular salary from a contract between the institute and entities representing foreign nations. The court held that § 946.13(1)(b) is a strict liability statute in the sense that it does not require the proof of any unlawful intent or corrupt purpose. (The specific offense involved in Stoehr was the type covered by Wis JI Criminal 1742, but the court's holding applies to the statute generally.)

For a discussion of the defense of good faith reliance on the advice of governmental counsel in connection with a violation of § 946.13, see State v. Davis, 63 Wis.2d 75, 216 N.W.2d 31 (1974).

The scope of § 946.13 appears to be very broad. The extent of its application is discussed in several Opinions of the Attorney General. See Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87 (August 24, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87 (August 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87 (April 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 4 87 (February 25, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 33 86 (September 12, 1986), 64 Op. Att'y Gen. 108 (1975), 63 Op. Att'y Gen. 44 (1974), 60 Op. Att'y Gen. 98, 310, and 367 (1971), and 52 Op. Att'y Gen. 367 (1963). One point emphasized by several of the opinions is that a county board member, for example, would be able to avoid liability under § 946.13(1)(b) by abstaining from voting on matters relating to their private contracts. See, for example, Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87, Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87, and Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87. However, those opinions advise that abstaining from voting does not avoid a violation of subsec. (1)(a) of the statute (which is covered by this instruction).

A number of exceptions are provided in subsections (2), and (5) - (12). The most common exception is the one found in subsection (2)(a), which excludes contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year. See notes 4 and 5, below.

1. Section 946.13(1)(a) prohibits public officers or employees from negotiating, etc., any contract in a private capacity when they will be involved in that contract in a public capacity in either of two ways: by participating in the making of the contract; or by performing some discretionary function in regard to the contract. The first alternative – participating in the making – is addressed by this instruction. If the "discretionary function" alternative is involved, the fourth element would have to be changed; the third element of Wis JI-Criminal 1742 may be helpful as a guide.

2. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example that a member of the county board is a public officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a member of the county board.

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

3. Section 946.13(4) provides that "contract," as used in this statute, includes a conveyance.

4. 1995 Wisconsin Act 435 (effective date: June 25, 1996) increased the amount from $7,500 to $15,000.

5. A number of exceptions are set forth in subsections (2), and (5) - (12) of § 946.13. Most are quite specialized and are unlikely to apply to most cases. However, the exception that will apply to all cases is the one found in subsec. (2)(a), excluding contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.

The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477,204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

6. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged) defines "pecuniary" as follows: "taking the form of or consisting of money; of or relating to money." Black's Law Dictionary (Fourth Edition) adds: "consisting of money or that which can be valued in money." Although "pecuniary" has apparently not been defined in Wisconsin case law, the Committee believes the meaning should include not only actual money but also "that which can be valued in money" per the Black's definition. For example, if a public officer exchanged land parcels with the county, such an exchange might not involve the transfer of money but "could be valued in money."

The statute extends to both "direct and indirect" pecuniary interests. In a case involving an indirect interest, it may be helpful to elaborate. The 1953 Report on the Criminal Code stated: "The private pecuniary interest may be either direct or indirect, i.e., it may be a pecuniary interest which the actor as an individual expects to get directly, or it may be one which he expects to get indirectly, as when he is an officer or stockholder of a corporation in whose behalf the contract is made." 1953 Report, page 180.

1741 PRIVATE INTEREST IN A PUBLIC CONTRACT: PARTICIPATING IN THE MAKING OF A CONTRACT IN WHICH ONE HAS A PRIVATE PECUNIARY INTEREST[1] — § 946.13(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Private interest in a public contract, as defined in § 946.13(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a public officer or public employee who, in a capacity as a public officer or public employee, participates in the making of a contract in which the officer or employee has a private pecuniary interest.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a public (officer) (employee).

   [A _____ is a public (officer) (employee).][2]

2. The defendant participated in the making of a contract in a capacity as a public (officer) (employee).

   IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE CONTRACT DID NOT INVOLVE RECEIPTS OR DISBURSEMENTS OF MORE THAN $15,000[3] IN ANY YEAR ADD THE FOLLOWING:[4]

   [This element also requires that the contract involved receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.]

3. The defendant had a private pecuniary interest in the contract.

A "pecuniary interest" is one involving money (or one that can be valued in money).[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI Criminal 1741A in 1988. It was revised and the number changed to 1741 in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008.

This instruction is for one type of violation of subsection (1)(b) of § 946.13. For a second type, see Wis JI Criminal 1742. Violations of subsection (1)(a) are covered by Wis JI Criminal 1740.

The offenses defined in § 946.13(1)(b) were discussed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986). The case involved a director of a state technical institute who received payments in excess of his regular salary from a contract between the institute and entities representing foreign nations. The court held that § 946.13(1)(b) is a strict liability statute in the sense that it does not require the proof of any unlawful intent or corrupt purpose. (The specific offense involved in Stoehr was the type covered by Wis JI Criminal 1742, but the court's holding applies to the statute generally.)

For a discussion of the defense of good faith reliance on the advice of governmental counsel in connection with a violation of § 946.13, see State v. Davis, 63 Wis.2d 75, 216 N.W.2d 31 (1974).

The scope of § 946.13 appears to be very broad. The extent of its application is discussed in several Opinions of the Attorney General. See Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87 (August 24, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87 (August 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87 (April 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 4 87 (February 25, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 33 86 (September 12, 1986), 64 Op. Att'y Gen. 108 (1975), 63 Op. Att'y Gen. 44 (1974), 60 Op. Att'y Gen. 98, 310, and 367 (1971), and 52 Op. Att'y Gen. 367 (1963). One point emphasized by several of the opinions is that a county board member, for example, would be able to avoid liability under § 946.13(1)(b) by abstaining from voting on matters relating to their private contracts. See, for example, Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87, Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87, and Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87. However, those opinions advise that abstaining from voting does not avoid a violation of subsec. (1)(a) of the statute (which is covered by this instruction).

A number of exceptions are provided in subsections (2), and (5) - (12). The most common exception is the one found in subsection (2)(a), which excludes contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $1,500 in any year. See notes 3 and 4, below.

1. Section 946.13(1)(b) prohibits two types of activities on the part of public officers or employees: participating in the making of a contract in which one has a private pecuniary interest (Wis JI-Criminal 1741 is drafted for this situation); and performing a discretionary function with regard to a contract in which one has a private pecuniary interest (Wis JI-Criminal 1742 is drafted for this situation).

2. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example that a member of the county board is a public officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a member of the county board.

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

3. 1995 Wisconsin Act 435 (effective date: June 25, 1996) increased the amount from $7,500 to $15,000.

4. A number of exceptions are set forth in subsections (2), and (5) - (12) of § 946.13. Most are quite specialized and are unlikely to apply to most cases. However, the exception that will apply to all cases is the one found in subsec. (2)(a), excluding contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.

The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477,204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

5. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged) defines "pecuniary" as follows: "taking the form of or consisting of money; of or relating to money." Black's Law Dictionary (Fourth Edition) adds: "consisting of money or that which can be valued in money." Although "pecuniary" has apparently not been defined in Wisconsin case law, the Committee believes the meaning should include not only actual money but also "that which can be valued in money" per the Black's definition. For example, if a public officer exchanged land parcels with the county, such an exchange might not involve the transfer of money but "could be valued in money."

The statute extends to both "direct and indirect" pecuniary interests. In a case involving an indirect interest, it may be helpful to elaborate. The 1953 Report on the Criminal Code stated: "The private pecuniary interest may be either direct or indirect, i.e., it may be a pecuniary interest which the actor as an individual expects to get directly, or it may be one which he expects to get indirectly, as when he is an officer or stockholder of a corporation in whose behalf the contract is made." 1953 Report, page 180.

1742 PRIVATE INTEREST IN A PUBLIC CONTRACT: PERFORMING A DISCRETIONARY FUNCTION IN REGARD TO A CONTRACT IN WHICH ONE HAS A PRIVATE PECUNIARY INTEREST[1] — § 946.13(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Private interest in a public contract, as defined in § 946.13(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a public officer or public employee who, in a capacity as a public officer or public employee, performs some function requiring the exercise of discretion in regard to a contract in which the officer or employee has a private pecuniary interest.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a public (officer) (employee).

   [A _____ is a public (officer) (employee).][2]

2. The defendant in a capacity as a public (officer) (employee), performed a function requiring the exercise of discretion[3] in regard to a contract.[4]

   IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE CONTRACT DID NOT INVOLVE RECEIPTS OR DISBURSEMENTS OF MORE THAN $15,000[5] IN ANY YEAR ADD THE FOLLOWING:[6]

[This element also requires that the contract involved receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.]

3. The defendant had a private pecuniary interest in the contract.

A "pecuniary interest" is one involving money (or one that can be valued in money).[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI Criminal 1741B in 1988. It was revised and the number changed to 1742 in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008.

This instruction is for one type of violation of subsection (1)(b) of § 946.13. For a second type, see Wis JI Criminal 1741. Violations of subsection (1)(a) are covered by Wis JI Criminal 1740.

The offenses defined in § 946.13(1)(b) were discussed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986). (The specific offense involved in Stoehr was the type covered by Wis JI Criminal 1742, but the court's holding applies to the statute generally.)

For a discussion of the defense of good faith reliance on the advice of governmental counsel in connection with a violation of § 946.13, see State v. Davis, 63 Wis.2d 75, 216 N.W.2d 31 (1974).

The scope of § 946.13 appears to be very broad. The extent of its application is discussed in several Opinions of the Attorney General. See Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87 (August 24, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87 (August 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87 (April 21, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 4 87 (February 25, 1987), Op. Att'y Gen. 33 86 (September 12, 1986), 64 Op. Att'y Gen. 108 (1975), 63 Op. Att'y Gen. 44 (1974), 60 Op. Att'y Gen. 98, 310, and 367 (1971), and 52 Op. Att'y Gen. 367 (1963). One point emphasized by several of the opinions is that a county board member, for example, would be able to avoid liability under § 946.13(1)(b) by abstaining from voting on matters relating to their private contracts. See, for example, Op. Att'y Gen. 44 87, Op. Att'y Gen. 42 87, and Op. Att'y Gen. 22 87. However, those opinions advise that abstaining from voting does not avoid a violation of subsec. (1)(a) of the statute (which is covered by this instruction).

A number of exceptions are provided in subsections (2), and (5) - (12). The most common exception is the one found in subsection (2)(a), which excludes contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year. See notes 5 and 6, below.

1. Section 946.13(1)(b) prohibits two types of activities on the part of public officers or employees: participating in the making of a contract in which one has a private pecuniary interest (Wis JI-Criminal 1741 is drafted for this situation); and performing a discretionary function with regard to a contract in which one has a private pecuniary interest (Wis JI-Criminal 1742 is drafted for this situation).

2. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example that a member of the county board is a public officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in fact, the individual was a member of the county board.

"Public officer" and "public employee" are defined as follows in § 939.22(30):

> "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.
> "Public employee" means any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.

3. The "discretionary acts" requirement was discussed briefly in State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986). The criminal complaint alleged that the defendant, as a director of a state technical institute, "authorized and received . . . monies, over and above his normal salary, for work performed in connection with" four public contracts. The court in Stoehr held that the words "authorized and received" denote the performance of a function requiring the exercise of discretion.

If a definition of "discretionary" is necessary, an adaptation of the following might be helpful: "A public officer has discretion whenever the effective limits on his power leave him free to make a choice among possible courses of action or inaction." Davis, Administrative Law, § 4.02 (3d ed. 1972).

4. Section 946.13(4) provides that "contract," as used in this section, includes a conveyance.

5. 1995 Wisconsin Act 435 (effective date: June 25, 1996) increased the amount from $7,500 to $15,000.

6. A number of exceptions are set forth in subsections (2), and (5) - (12) of § 946.13. Most are quite specialized and are unlikely to apply to most cases. However, the exception that will apply to all cases is the one found in subsec. (2)(a), excluding contracts which do not involve public receipts or disbursements of more than $15,000 in any year.

7. Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged) defines "pecuniary" as follows: "taking the form of or consisting of money; of or relating to money." Black's Law Dictionary (Fourth Edition) adds: "consisting of money or that which can be valued in money." Although "pecuniary" has apparently not been defined in Wisconsin case law, the Committee believes the meaning should include not only actual money but also "that which can be valued in money" per the Black's definition. 1750 PERJURY — § 946.31

Perjury, as defined in § 946.31 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, while under (oath) (affirmation) orally makes a false material statement which the person does not believe to be true, in any proceeding[1] before a court.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant orally made a statement while under (oath) (affirmation).[3]
2. The statement was false when made.
3. The defendant did not believe the statement to be true when made.

   [It is not a defense to a prosecution under this section that testimony that constituted perjury at the time it was given was subsequently corrected or retracted.][4]
4. The statement was made in a proceeding before a court.[5]
5. The statement was material to the proceeding.

   A material statement is one that tends to prove or disprove any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the proceeding in which the statement was made.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1750 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1994, 1995, 2004, and 2020. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It removed a footnote that addressed the matter of the defendant's knowledge of whether the statement was true or false.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.31, Perjury. Related offenses are covered by § 946.32, False Swearing. See Wis JI-Criminal 1754, 1755, and 1756.

The doctrine of issue preclusion does not bar the State from prosecuting a defendant for perjury allegedly committed at a criminal trial where the defendant was acquitted on a single issue but where the State claims to have discovered new evidence that the defendant falsely testified regarding that issue. The State must show that the evidence meets the four requirements of the newly discovered evidence test. State v. Canon, 2001 WI 11, ¶¶1, 25, 241 Wis.2d 164, 622 N.W.2d 270.

Multiple counts of perjury based on statements in a single proceeding are permissible where each requires proof of a fact the other does not and each required a new "volitional departure." State v. Warren, 229 Wis.2d 172, 599 N.W.2d 379 (Ct. App. 1999).

Regarding solicitation of perjury, see State v. Manthey, 169 Wis.2d 673, 487 N.W.2d 44 (Ct. App. 1992). The court held that a solicitation of perjury charge was established where the defendant solicited another to pay money to the defendant for false testimony (referring to this as a "double inchoate crime"). 169 Wis.2d 673, 687.

The problem of perjury prosecutions of witnesses after an acquittal in a criminal case is discussed in Shellenberger, "Perjury Prosecutions After Acquittals. . . ." 71 Marquette Law Review 703 (1988).

1. Section 946.31(1) applies to statements made in "any matter, cause, action or proceeding." The instruction uses the term "proceeding" throughout based on the Committee's conclusion that it is a general term that includes the other alternatives. (See, for example, § 801.01(1), which provides: "Proceedings in the courts are divided into actions and special proceedings." Emphasis added.)

2. "Court" is selected from the list of alternatives set forth in § 946.31(1):

(a) A court;
(b) A magistrate;
(c) A judge, referee or court commissioner;
(d) An administrative agency or arbitrator authorized by statute to determine issues of fact;
(e) A notary public while taking testimony for use in an action or proceeding pending in court;
(f) An officer authorized to conduct inquests of the dead;
(g) A grand jury;
(h) A legislative body or committee.

The instruction must be modified if an alternative other than "court" is involved. See text at notes 6 and 8 below.

See Layton School of Art & Design v. WERC, 82 Wis.2d 324, 262 N.W.2d 218 (1978), for a discussion of the alternative set forth in § 946.31(1)(d): ". . . an . . . arbitrator authorized by statute to determine issues of fact."

Omitted from the instruction's definition of the offense is the statutory language: "whether legally constituted or exercising powers as if legally constituted." That phrase was added to § 946.31(1) in 1980 to replace "whether de jure or de facto." (See Chapter 110, section 58, Laws of 1979.) The previous version of this instruction included definitions of "de jure" and "de facto" and followed them with a statement that there is no reason to distinguish between the two for purposes of this offense. The same is true for the current statute's "legally constituted" phrase and, therefore, the Committee concluded that it is not necessary to include it in the instruction.

This interpretation is supported by State v. Petrone, 166 Wis.2d 220, 479 N.W.2d 212 (Ct. App. 1991). Petrone challenged her perjury conviction on the ground that the reserve judge who conducted the John Doe proceeding at which she made a false statement had not been properly appointed by the chief justice under § 753.075(1). The court rejected the argument, citing the statute: ". . . legally constituted or exercising powers as if legally constituted." The court held that the judge was acting with what was formerly referred to as de facto powers and, therefore, was covered by the statute. The court cited footnote 7 to the 1966 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1750, which, as explained above, instructed the jury that the distinction between de facto and de jure made no difference. That principle has not changed; the Committee concluded that it is not a matter that needs to be communicated to the jury. As illustrated by the Petrone case, it is a legal matter relating to the scope of the statute, not a factual question for the jury to decide.

3. "Oath" is defined to include "affirmation" in § 990.01(24). The form of the testimonial oath is described in §§ 906.03(2) and 990.01(24). Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

Section 906.03(3) provides for taking a statement under affirmation where a person has conscientious scruples against taking an oath and sets forth the form.

4. This instruction should be given when warranted by the evidence. § 946.31(2).

5. See notes 1 and 2, supra.

6. This definition of "material" was cited with approval in State v. Munz, 198 Wis.2d 379, 382, 541

N.W.2d 821 (Ct. App. 1995). The court held that testimony is material if the court could have relied on it, "irrespective of whether the court ultimately relied upon the testimony in reaching its decision." 198 Wis.2d 379, 385.

The definition of "material" is adapted from part of the definition of "relevant evidence," in § 904.01. The Judicial Council Committee's Note indicates § 904.01 is consistent with recent Wisconsin cases, including State v. Becker, 51 Wis.2d 659, 188 N.W.2d 449 (1971), which "adopted McCormick's view of the distinction between materiality and relevancy which is imported into § 904.01 by the phrase 'that is of consequence to the determination of the action.'" 59 Wis.2d R67 (1973).

Federal Rule of Evidence 404 is identical. "The rule uses the phrase 'fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action'. . .; it has the advantage of avoiding the loosely used and ambiguous word 'material.'" Federal Advisory Committee's Note, 59 Wis.2d R69.

The 1966 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1750 included the following in parentheses in the text of the instruction:

(In a proper case, the court may instruct the jury that the statement is material, as a matter of law.)

There was no explanation that identified "a proper case" and no citation of authority for the proposition that materiality was a matter of law.

The Committee decided to delete the parenthetical sentence from the 1993 revision of the instruction because there is no direct authority in Wisconsin for having the judge, as opposed to the jury, decide whether a statement was material.

The history of the Wisconsin perjury statute shows that the 1953 Criminal Code draft eliminated "materiality" altogether. However, it was restored by the Criminal Code Advisory Committee during the 1954-55 discussions of the draft, which essentially reestablished the common law definition of the crime. During those discussions, the minutes indicate that there was a motion to add a definition of "materiality" and include a statement that "materiality is a question of law for the court." The motion failed. (See Minutes of the Criminal Code Advisory Committee, May 26, 1955, pages 2-6.)

Prior to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506 (1995), the rule in the majority of federal circuits was that materiality is a matter of law for the court to decide. The statement in United States v. Watson, 623 F.2d 1198 (7th Cir. 1980), was typical:

> Although proof of a statement's materiality, . . . is an essential element of the crime charged in the indictment, it is well settled that the determination of materiality is a question of law for the court. . . . Since the issue of materiality is a legal question, not a question of fact, the government need not prove materiality beyond a reasonable doubt. . . .

The Gaudin decision rejected this view, holding that it was error for a trial court to refuse to submit the question of materiality to the jury. Gaudin was charged with violating 18 U.S.C. § 1001 by making false representations on HUD forms in connection with real estate transactions. The government conceded that the statute is violated only when the false representations go to "material facts." The court stated the basic principles that apply to resolving the question presented in this case and rejected government arguments that the basic principles should not apply:

> The Constitution gives a criminal defendant the right to demand that a jury find him guilty of all the elements of the crime with which he is charged; one of the elements in the present case is materiality; respondent therefore had a right to have the jury decide materiality.

515 U.S 506, 511.

The court found no basis in law or history for treating the materiality differently than other elements of other crimes. It repudiated the decision in Sinclair v. United States, 279 U.S. 263 (1929), which had held that the issue of whether questions were "pertinent" under a statute penalizing the refusal to answer questions "pertinent" to a congressional inquiry was for the court, not the jury.

Gaudin, though involving a federal statute, articulated basic constitutional principles that ought to apply to the analysis of the Wisconsin perjury statute. Its holding confirms the Committee's conclusion the parenthetical reference in the 1966 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1750 was insufficient authority for removing the materiality element from the jury's consideration. Wisconsin cases have been strict in refusing to approve trial court actions that arguably remove an element from the jury's consideration, even where an element involves largely a "legal" conclusion. See, for example, State v. Leist, 141 Wis.2d 34, 414 N.W. 2d 45 (Ct. App. 1987), where the court held it was error for the trial court to tell the jury that the document involved in the case was "false, sham, or frivolous." (Leist is discussed in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1499.)

This conclusion is further supported by the decision in State v. Williams, 179 Wis.2d 80, 505 N.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1993), which involved medical assistance fraud under § 49.49(1)(a). That offense also requires "material" false statements and the court held that it was error for the trial court to deny the defendant the opportunity to introduce evidence relevant to the materiality of the statements made. "If the statements had no legal effect, the court could determine as a matter of law that the false statements were not material. At the very least, the jury should be given the opportunity to determine whether the false statements were material based upon the evidence concerning the legal effect of the statements." 179 Wis.2d 80, 87-88. Thus, if it is error to limit evidence as to "materiality," it should be error to withdraw the "materiality" issue from the jury's consideration.

1754 FALSE SWEARING: FALSE STATEMENT UNDER OATH: FELONY — § 946.32(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

False swearing, as defined in § 946.32(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who under (oath) (affirmation) makes or subscribes a false statement which (he) (she) does not believe is true, when such (oath) (affirmation) is (authorized or required by law)[1] (required by any public officer or governmental agency as a prerequisite to such officer or agency taking some official action).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (made) (subscribed)[2] a false statement.
2. The defendant did not believe the statement to be true when (made) (subscribed).
3. The statement was (made) (subscribed) under (oath) (affirmation).[3]

USE THE FOLLOWING IF WRITTEN STATEMENTS ARE INVOLVED.[4]

[The meaning of being under (oath) (affirmation) is usually well understood, as when the witnesses in this case were put under oath before you. A written statement is under (oath) (affirmation) when it is subscribed or signed by a person who swears that it is the truth before some person authorized[5] to administer an (oath) (affirmation).]

4. The (oath) (affirmation) was (authorized or required by law) (required by any public officer or governmental agency as a prerequisite to the officer or agency taking some official action).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1754 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It removed a footnote that addressed the matter of the defendant's knowledge of whether the statement was true or false.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.32(1)(a); violations of sub. (1)(b) are addressed in Wis JI Criminal 1755. Violations of sub. (1) are felonies. The misdemeanor offense defined in sub. (2) is addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1756.

1. One alternative is that the sworn statement must be "authorized or required" by law. An affidavit made for no reason or for a purpose for which the law does not specifically authorize or require an oath, e.g., endorsement of a product, is not within the statute. See State v. Zisch, 243 Wis. 175, 9 N.W.2d 625 (1943). The unauthorized affidavit, if false, is covered by § 946.32(2), the misdemeanor false swearing offense.

In State v. Devitt, 82 Wis.2d 262, 270, 262 N.W.2d 73 (1978), the court concluded that "authorized by law" must "be narrowly construed in light of a penal statute, the definition of 'permitted' [urged by the state] is inappropriate." The court cited the definition provided in Black's Law Dictionary, 4th ed., p. 169, as indicating "that 'authorize' means more than consistent with the general scheme. Among its definitions: 'To empower; to give a right or authority to act . . . It has a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act. Authorized is sometimes construed as equivalent to directed.'" The court found that the filing of the statements in question were not "authorized" by the state Corrupt Practices Act (§ 12.09(5)(b), 1971 Wis. Stats.). The court also noted that the alleged misconduct was "not a wrong without a remedy. The misdemeanor false swearing statute, see § 946.32(2), would clearly apply in this case because it has no requirement that the false statement be made under oath or affirmation required or authorized by law." 82 Wis.2d 262, 270-71.

2. The meanings of "make" and "subscribe" were discussed in State v. Devitt, 82 Wis.2d 262, 262, N.W.2d 73 (1978). Both parties and, apparently, the Wisconsin Supreme Court agreed that "subscribes" refers to signing a written document. The defendant argued that "makes" is limited to preparing or drawing up a writing. The court rejected this narrow definition, favoring a more general concept that includes making an oral statement in a judicial proceeding. 82 Wis.2d 262, 271-75.

3. "Oath" is defined to include "affirmation" in § 990.01(24). The form of the testimonial oath is described in §§ 906.03(2) and 990.01(24). Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

Section 906.03(3) provides for taking a statement under affirmation where a person has conscientious scruples against taking an oath and sets forth the form.

4. The bracketed material is provided for possible use where one or more written statements are involved. Jurors are familiar with testimony made under oath but may be less clear about how written statements are sworn to or affirmed.

5. Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

1755 FALSE SWEARING: INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS — § 946.32(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

False swearing, as defined in § 946.32(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who makes or subscribes two inconsistent statements under (oath) (affirmation) in regard to any matter respecting which an (oath) (affirmation) is, in each case, (authorized or required by law)[1] (required by any public officer or governmental agency as a prerequisite to such officer or agency taking some official action) under circumstances which demonstrate that the witness or subscriber knew at least one of the statements to be false when made.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (made) (subscribed)[2] inconsistent statements.

   Statements are inconsistent when they are contrary or contradictory to each other, so that the truth of one implies the negation and falsity of the other.[3]

2. The statements were (made) (subscribed) under (oath) (affirmation).[4]

   USE THE FOLLOWING IF WRITTEN STATEMENTS ARE INVOLVED.[5]

[The meaning of being under (oath) (affirmation) is usually well understood, as when the witnesses in this case were put under oath before you. A written statement is under (oath) (affirmation) when it is subscribed or signed by a person, who swears that it is the truth, before some person authorized[6] to administer an (oath) (affirmation).]

3. The (oath) (affirmation) was (authorized or required by law)[7] (required by any public officer or governmental agency as a prerequisite to the officer or agency taking some official action).

4. The defendant (made) (subscribed) the statements under circumstances which demonstrate that the defendant knew at least one of the statements was false when (made) (subscribed).

"Knew" requires only that the defendant believed that at least one of the statements was false when made.[8]

You need not determine which statement the defendant knew was false as long as you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew that at least one of the statements was false when made.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1755 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1993 and 1997. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2003 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.32(1)(b); violations of sub. (1)(a) are addressed in Wis JI Criminal 1754. Violations of sub. (1) are felonies. The misdemeanor offense defined in sub. (2) is addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1756.

If a statement was made in each of two different counties within Wisconsin, venue lies in either county. § 971.19(2). If one of the statements was made out of the state, an issue of jurisdiction under § 939.03 may arise. See Wis JI Criminal 268.

Section 946.32(1)(b) also provides: "The period of limitations within which the prosecution may be commenced runs from the time of the first statement." In State v. Slaughter, 200 Wis.2d 190, 198, 546 N.W.2d 490 (Ct. App. 1996), the court held the statute of limitations language "refers to an affirmative defense, which means it must be raised by the defendant." The Committee interprets this to mean that the limitations issue would be raised by a pretrial motion and not submitted to the jury. This is consistent with the court's statement that the limitations language in the false swearing statute "simply clarifies the point at which the statute should begin running." 200 Wis.2d 190, 197. Slaughter also held that the tolling provisions of the regular statute of limitations, § 939.74, apply in this situation.

1. The sworn statement must be "authorized or required" by law. An affidavit made for no reason for a purpose for which the law does not specifically authorize or require an oath, e.g., endorsement of a product, is not within the statute. See State v. Zisch, 243 Wis. 175, 9 N.W.2d 625 (1943). The unauthorized affidavit, if false, is covered by § 946.32(2).

In State v. Devitt, 82 Wis.2d 262, 270, 262 N.W.2d 73 (1978), the court concluded that "authorized by law" must "be narrowly construed in light of a penal statute, the definition of 'permitted' [urged by the state] is inappropriate." The court cited the definition provided in Black's Law Dictionary, 4th ed., p. 169, as indicating "that 'authorize' means more than consistent with the general scheme. Among its definitions: 'To empower; to give a right or authority to act . . . It has a mandatory effect or meaning, implying a direction to act. Authorized is sometimes construed as equivalent to directed.'" The court found that the filing of the statements in question were not "authorized" by the state Corrupt Practices Act (§ 12.09(5)(b), 1971 Wis. Stats.). The court also noted that the alleged misconduct was "not a wrong without a remedy. The misdemeanor false swearing statute, see § 946.32(2), would clearly apply in this case because it has no requirement that the false statement be made under oath or affirmation required or authorized by law." 82 Wis.2d 262, 270-271.

2. The meanings of "make" and "subscribe" were discussed in State v. Devitt, 82 Wis.2d 262, 262 N.W.2d 73 (1978). Both parties and, apparently, the Wisconsin Supreme Court, agreed that "subscribes" refers to signing a written document. The defendant argued that "makes" is limited to preparing or drawing up a writing. The court rejected this narrow definition, favoring a more general concept that includes making an oral statement in a judicial proceeding. 82 Wis.2d 262, 271-75.

3. This definition is a slightly revised version of the one provided in the 1966 version of the instruction. The 1966 instruction cited 20-A, Words & Phrases, pp. 341-44.

4. "Oath" is defined to include "affirmation" in § 990.01(24). The form of the testimonial oath is described in §§ 906.03(2) and 990.01(24).

Section 906.03(3) provides for taking a statement under affirmation where a person has conscientious scruples against taking an oath and sets forth the form.

5. The bracketed material is provided for possible use where one or more written statements is involved. Jurors are familiar with testimony made under oath but may be less clear about how written statements are sworn to or affirmed.

6. Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

7. In State v. Slaughter, 200 Wis.2d 190, 199, 546 N.W.2d 490 (Ct. App. 1996), the court cited Wis JI-Criminal 1755 as support for its conclusion that it is the oath or affirmation that must be "required by law," not the making of the statement.

8. Section 939.23(2).

1756 FALSE SWEARING: FALSE STATEMENT UNDER OATH: MISDEMEANOR — § 946.32(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

False swearing, as defined in § 946.32(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who under (oath) (affirmation) makes or subscribes a false statement which (he) (she) does not believe is true.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (made) (subscribed)[1] a false statement.
2. The defendant did not believe the statement to be true when (made) (subscribed).
3. The statement was (made) (subscribed) under (oath) (affirmation).[2]

[USE THE FOLLOWING IF WRITTEN STATEMENTS ARE INVOLVED.][3]

[The meaning of being under (oath) (affirmation) is usually well understood, as when the witnesses in this case were put under oath before you. A written statement is under (oath) (affirmation) when it is subscribed or signed by a person who swears that it is the truth before some person authorized[4] to administer an (oath) (affirmation).]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1756 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It removed a footnote that addressed the matter of the defendant's knowledge of whether the statement was true or false.

This instruction is for the misdemeanor offense defined in § 946.32(2). The felony offenses defined in sub. (1) are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1754 and 1755.

1. The meanings of "make" and "subscribe" were discussed in State v. Devitt, 82 Wis.2d 262, 262 N.W.2d 73 (1978). Both parties and, apparently, the Wisconsin Supreme Court agreed that "subscribes" refers to signing a written document. The defendant argued that "makes" is limited to preparing or drawing up a writing. The court rejected this narrow definition, favoring a more general concept that includes making an oral statement in a judicial proceeding. 82 Wis.2d 262, 271-75.

2. "Oath" is defined to include "affirmation" in § 990.01(24). The form of the testimonial oath is described in §§ 906.03(2) and 990.01(24). Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

Section 906.03(3) provides for taking a statement under affirmation where a person has conscientious scruples against taking an oath and sets forth the form.

If further elaboration in the oath or affirmation requirement is desired, see the text at note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1755.

3. The bracketed material is provided for possible use where one or more written statements are involved. Jurors are familiar with testimony made under oath but may be less clear about how written statements are sworn to or affirmed.

4. Section 887.01 identifies those who may administer oaths.

1765 RESISTING AN OFFICER — § 946.41(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Resisting an officer, as defined in § 946.41 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly resists an officer while the officer is doing any act in an official capacity and with lawful authority.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant resisted an officer.

   A (title – e.g., sheriff) is an officer.[1]

   To resist an officer means to oppose the officer by force or threat of force. The resistance must be directed to the officer personally.[2]

2. The officer was doing an act in an official capacity.[3]

   _____[4] act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed to perform.[5] [The duties of a _____ include: _____.][6]

3. The officer was acting with lawful authority.

_____[7] act with lawful authority if their acts are conducted in accordance with the law. In this case, it is alleged that the officer was _____.[8]

4. The defendant knew that (officer) was an officer acting in an official capacity and with lawful authority and that the defendant knew (his) (her) conduct would resist the officer.[9]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[10] IF THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED WITH THE FELONY OFFENSE UNDER § 946.41(2r): SUBSTANTIAL BODILY HARM OR A SOFT TISSUE INJURY WAS CAUSED TO AN OFFICER:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must consider the following question:

Did the defendant cause (substantial bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) to an officer?

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing (substantial bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury).[11]

["Substantial bodily harm" means bodily injury that causes [a laceration that requires (stitches) (staples) (a tissue adhesive)] [any fracture of a bone] [a broken nose] [a burn] [a petechia] [a temporary loss of consciousness, sight, or hearing] [a concussion] [a loss or fracture of a tooth].][12]

["Soft tissue injury" means an injury that requires medical attention to a tissue that connects, supports, or surrounds other structures and organs of the body and includes tendons, ligaments, fascia, skin, fibrous tissues, fat, synovial membranes, muscles, nerves, and blood vessels.[13]]

Before you may answer the question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused (substantial bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) to an officer.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

ADD THE FOLLOWING[14] IF THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED WITH THE FELONY OFFENSE UNDER § 946.41(2t): GREAT BODILY HARM WAS CAUSED TO AN OFFICER:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must consider the following question:

Did the defendant cause great bodily harm to an officer?

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.[15]

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[16]

Before you may answer the question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant caused great bodily harm to an officer.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1765 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1985, 1990, 1992, 1999, 2004, 2008, 2010, and 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2011; it revised the instruction to reflect changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 74.

2011 Wisconsin Act 74 amended § 946.41 in two ways: it added reference to "soft tissue injury" to subsec. (2r); and, it created subsec. (2t) which makes it a Class G felony to cause great bodily harm by violating subsec. (1). See footnotes 10 and 14, below. The effective date of Act 74 is December 2, 2011.

The 1990 revision split former Wis JI Criminal 1765 into three instructions. Wis JI Criminal 1765 is limited to offenses involving "resisting" an officer, which is interpreted to require physical interference. Wis JI Criminal 1766 is limited to offenses involving "obstructing," interpreted to involve nonphysical interference. Wis JI Criminal 1766A is limited to offenses involving the giving of false information.

Section 946.41 was amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 251 [effective date: May 22, 2010]. Subsection (2r) was created to read: "Whoever violates sub. (1) and causes substantial bodily harm to an officer is guilty of a Class H felony." A special question has been added to the instruction to account for the fact increasing the penalty.

In State v. Hobson, 218 Wis.2d 550, 577 N.W.2d 825 (1998), the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that Wisconsin has historically recognized the common law privilege to forcibly resist an unlawful arrest. However, based on public policy considerations, the court abrogated that common law defense prospectively. Hobson involved a defendant charged with battery to a law enforcement officer who sought to invoke a true "affirmative defense" in the sense that the privilege would have provided a defense that prevented conviction even though all the elements of the crime charged were present. That is, Hobson did commit a battery against a law enforcement officer, but claimed a defense to that crime based on facts that were not inconsistent with the presence of any of the elements of the crime. Notwithstanding the Hobson decision, the fact that a police officer was acting unlawfully in making an arrest would be inconsistent with the proof of an element of resisting or obstructing an officer. An element of the crime is that the officer was acting "with lawful authority." See element 3. and note 8. An officer making an unlawful arrest would not be acting with lawful authority, thus negating an element of the crime. For a more complete discussion, see Wis JI Criminal 795 Law Note: Privilege: Resisting An Unlawful Arrest.

In State v. Ferguson, 2009 WI 50, 317 Wis.2d 587, 767 N.W.2d 187, the court concluded that a jury instruction for a charge of obstructing an officer should include a definition of "lawful authority" and that the definition should include description of "exigent circumstances" when the obstructing occurs directly after a warrantless entry of a dwelling. However, the failure to so instruct in this case was not error, or, if error, was harmless, because the evidence supported conviction for obstructing after the defendant was arrested and had been removed from the dwelling.

Four justices also concluded that the decision of the court of appeals in State v. Mikkelson, 2002 WI App 152, 256 Wis.2d 132, 647 N.W.2d 421, is overruled. Mikkelson was characterized as holding that exigent circumstances could not justify a warrantless entry to arrest for a misdemeanor. Ferguson holds that a warrantless entry, based on probable cause and exigent circumstances, may be made for any jailable offense.

The general definition of "lawful authority" provided in Wis JI Criminal 1766 was used in the Ferguson case, though the standard instruction was not cited. A model description of what "lawful authority" involves where there is an "exigent circumstances" entry has been added to footnote 8.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, a sheriff is an officer. "Officer" is defined as follows in sec. 946.41(2)(b):

> "Officer" means a peace officer or other public officer or public employee having the authority by nature of his office or employment to take another into custody.

2. The only Wisconsin case that directly discusses the meaning of "resist" is State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 196 (1875). Welch analyzed the predecessor to present § 946.41, a statute that prohibited only "resisting." Welch said: "To resist, is to oppose by direct, active and quasi-forcible means." 37 Wis. at 201. The 1966 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1765 used the Welch definition. The revised definition in this instruction is intended to be a more understandable expression of the same basic concept.

3. Acting "in an official capacity" and acting "with lawful authority" are two separate questions. State v. Barrett, 96 Wis.2d 174, 180-81, 291 N.W.2d 498 (1980). For the purposes of sec. 940.20(2), Battery To A Law Enforcement Officer, the court in Barrett adopted the following test for "in his official capacity": "whether the official is acting in the scope of his employment as opposed to being engaged in a personal act of his own." Barrett, supra. "Lawful authority" goes to whether the officer's actions "are conducted in accordance with the law." Barrett, 96 Wis.2d at 181. See note 8, below.

4. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

5. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

6. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some peace officers are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

7. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

8. The Committee suggests specifying the lawful function being performed and, if raised by the evidence, instructing the jury on the applicable legal standard. For example, if a "stop and question" situation is involved, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was conducting a lawful stop to investigate a suspected crime. A stop is lawful when the officer has reasonable suspicion that a person is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a crime. A stop may continue for a reasonable period of time required to inquire into the person's identity and to ask for an explanation of the person's conduct. An officer conducting a stop may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to detain the person while the inquiry into identity and conduct is made.

Or, if the evidence raises a question about the legality of an arrest, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful arrest. An arrest is lawful when the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person has committed a crime. An officer making an arrest may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to take the person into custody.

If the evidence raises a question about the "lawful authority" for an "exigent circumstances" entry, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful entry under the "exigent circumstances" rule. That rule allows an officer to enter a dwelling without a warrant when the entry is necessary [to prevent the imminent destruction of evidence] [in hot pursuit of a criminal suspect] [to prevent injury to the suspect or another person] [to prevent the likelihood that the suspect will escape.]

The four bracketed examples of exigent circumstances are based on those set forth in State v. Ferguson, supra, 2009 WI 50, ¶20, citing State v. Richter, 2000 WI 58, 235 Wis.2d 524, ¶29, 612 N.W.2d 29 and State v. Smith, 131 Wis.2d 220, 229, 388 N.W.2d 601 (1986).

9. That the interpretation of the knowledge element reflected in Wis JI-Criminal 1765 is correct was confirmed in State v. Lossman, 118 Wis.2d 526, 536, 348 N.W.2d 159 (1984):

> The accused must believe or know he (1) resisted the officer, while the officer was (2) acting in an official capacity and (3) with lawful authority.

Also see State v. Elbaum, 54 Wis.2d 213, 194 N.W.2d 1660 (1972), and State v. Zdiarstek, 53 Wis.2d 776, 193 N.W.2d 833 (1972).

10. As amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 74, § 946.41(2r) provides:

"Whoever violates sub. (1) and causes substantial bodily harm or a soft tissue injury to an officer is guilty of a Class H felony."

Where the felony offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if the jury finds the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant cause (substantial bodily harm) (soft tissue injury) to an officer?

11. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of (substantial bodily harm) (soft tissue injury). The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

12. This is the definition of "substantial bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(38). Note that the definition provides only a list of harms that constitute "substantial bodily harm." Compare this with the definitions of "bodily harm" [§ 939.22(4)] and "great bodily harm" [§ 939.22(14)] which contain a general category in addition to a list of specific harms: in § 939.22(4) – "any impairment of physical condition," in § 939.22(14) – "other serious bodily injury."

13. 2011 Wisconsin Act 74 amended § 946.41(2r) to add as an alternative harm the causing of "a soft tissue injury." The definition in the instruction is the one provided in § 946.41(2)(c).

14. 2011 Wisconsin Act 74 created subsec. (2t) of § 946.41 to read:

"Whoever violates sub. (1) and causes great bodily harm to an officer is guilty of a Class G felony."

Where the felony offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if the jury finds the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant cause great bodily harm to an officer?

15. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of great bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

16. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

1766 OBSTRUCTING AN OFFICER — § 946.41(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Obstructing an officer, as defined in § 946.41 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly obstructs an officer while the officer is doing any act in an official capacity and with lawful authority.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obstructed an officer.

   A (title – e.g., sheriff) is an officer.[1]

   To obstruct an officer means that the conduct of the defendant prevents or makes more difficult the performance of the officer's duties.[2]

   (The refusal to answer an officer's questions, by itself, is not obstructing an officer.)[3]

2. The officer was doing an act in an official capacity.[4]

   _____[5] act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed to perform.[6] [The duties of a _____ include: _____.][7]

3. The officer was acting with lawful authority.

   _____[8] act with lawful authority if their acts are conducted in accordance with the law. In this case, it is alleged that the officer was _____.[9]

4. The defendant knew that (officer) was an officer acting in an official capacity and with lawful authority and that the defendant knew (his) (her) conduct would obstruct the officer.[10]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1766 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1992, 1999, 2003, 2005, and 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009; it added to the Comment and to footnote 9.

The 1990 revision split former Wis JI Criminal 1765 into three instructions. Wis JI Criminal 1765 is limited to offenses involving "resisting" an officer, which is interpreted to require physical interference. Wis JI Criminal 1766 is limited to offenses involving "obstructing," interpreted to involve nonphysical interference. Wis JI Criminal 1766A is limited to offenses involving the giving of false information.

In State v. Ferguson, 2009 WI 50, 317 Wis.2d 587, 767 N.W.2d 187, the court concluded that a jury instruction for a charge of obstructing an officer should include a definition of "lawful authority" and that the definition should include description of "exigent circumstances" when the obstructing occurs directly after a warrantless entry of a dwelling. However, the failure to so instruct in this case was not error, or, if error, was harmless, because the evidence supported conviction for obstructing after the defendant was arrested and had been removed from the dwelling.

Four justices also concluded that the decision of the court of appeals in State v. Mikkelson, 2002 WI App 152, 256 Wis.2d 132, 647 N.W.2d 421, is overruled. Mikkelson was characterized as holding that exigent circumstances could not justify a warrantless entry to arrest for a misdemeanor. Ferguson holds that a warrantless entry, based on probable cause and exigent circumstances, may be made for any jailable offense.

The general definition of "lawful authority" provided in Wis JI Criminal 1766 was used in the Ferguson case, though the standard instruction was not cited. A model description of what "lawful authority" involves where there is an "exigent circumstances" entry has been added to footnote 9.

1. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, a sheriff is an officer. "Officer" is defined as follows in sec. 946.41(2)(b):

> "Officer" means a peace officer or other public officer or public employee having the authority by nature of his office or employment to take another into custody.

2. This part of the definition of "obstruct" was adapted from the one found in the 1966 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1765 which referred to "hinder, delay, impede, frustrate or prevent" an officer from performing his duties. No change of meaning is intended.

"Obstructing" was added to the statute in the 1955 version of the Criminal Code. Earlier definitions of this offense had prohibited only "resisting." See discussion in State v. Welch, 37 Wis. 196 (1875). The addition of "obstructing" was intended to cover the type of conduct (e.g., "impeding," "hindering," "frustrating") that Welch said was not covered by "resisting" standing alone.

The instruction's definition of "obstruct" was referred to with apparent approval [but without citing the instruction] in State v. Grobstick, 200 Wis.2d 242, 249, 546 N.W.2d 187 (Ct. App. 1996), where the court found that the defendant's jumping out a window and then returning to hide in a closet "made more difficult" the execution of a bench warrant.

3. An important question that has not been completely answered is whether failure to cooperate with police can be "obstructing" if no physical resistance is offered. For example, is it "obstructing an officer" for a person to refuse to identify himself and answer questions during a lawful "stop and question" situation? The Wisconsin Supreme Court recognized this question but found it unnecessary to answer definitively in State v. Hamilton, 120 Wis.2d 532, 356 N.W.2d 169 (1984). In Hamilton, the court assumed for the purposes of the case that the definition of "obstruct" in Wis JI-Criminal 1765 (© 1966) was correct and found that the facts of the case did not show a hindering, delaying, impeding, etc. Hamilton involved a person suspected of knowing about or being involved in the breaking of windows with a pellet gun. When confronted in a friend's house, Hamilton refused to identify himself or answer questions. The court held this refusal could not constitute "obstructing," primarily because the officers could easily have identified Hamilton by asking the other person who was present.

Some states have tried to address this problem by enacting statutes making it a crime to refuse to answer questions posed by police during a lawful stop. The constitutionality of such statutes has been raised in at least three cases before the United States Supreme Court. On each occasion, the Court has avoided giving a complete answer to the constitutional questions. (See Michigan v. DeFillipo, 443 U.S. 31 (1979); Texas v. Brown, 443 U.S. 47 (1979); and Kolender v. Lawson, 461 U.S. 352 (1983).)

In the Committee's judgment, a refusal to answer questions, by itself, should not be considered "obstructing an officer" in violation of § 946.41. The history of Wisconsin's statute shows that the type of conduct covered has been broadened substantially over the years to extend well beyond the "direct, forcible resistance" required by previous versions of the statute. (See note 2, supra.) Further expansion to cover simple refusal to answer questions should be done, if done at all, only by direct and carefully focused legislative action. (See, for example, sec. 946.40, Refusing To Aid Officer, which identifies a situation where persons do have an affirmative duty to assist a peace officer.)

The conclusion of the Committee in the paragraph above was approved in Henes v. Morrissey, 194 Wis.2d 339, 533 N.W.2d 802 (1995). Henes was a civil case against police officers who arrested Henes when he refused to identify himself during a Terry stop. The court held that > mere silence, standing alone, is insufficient to constitute obstruction under the statute. Here, all Henes did was remain silent. He did not affirmatively act to obstruct the deputies' investigation: he did not give them false information, he did not flee from the deputies, nor did he act in any violent manner towards them. Without more than mere silence, there is no obstruction.

> Further, the deputies have not shown how Henes' refusal to identify himself "obstructed" their investigation. . . .
> 194 Wis.2d 339, 355.

In State v. Espinosa, 2002 WI App 51, 250 Wis.2d 804, 641 N.W.2d 484, the court court of appeals recognized an "exculpatory denial" exception to § 946.41(2)(a). This was overruled by State v. Reed, 2005 WI 53, ¶48, 280 Wis.2d 68, 695 N.W.2d 315:

> In sum, we conclude that there is no exculpatory denial exception in the obstructing statute. The statute criminalizes all false statements knowingly made and with intent to mislead the police. Although the State should have sound reasons for believing that a defendant knowingly made false statements with intent to mislead the police and were not made out of a good-faith attempt to defend against accusations of a crime, we conclude that the latter can never include the former; knowingly providing false information with intent to mislead the police is the antithesis of a good-faith attempt to defend against accusations of criminal wrongdoing. Accordingly, we overrule Espinoza.

4. Acting "in an official capacity" and acting "with lawful authority" are two separate questions. State v. Barrett, 96 Wis.2d 174, 180-81, 291 N.W.2d 498 (1980). For the purposes of sec. 940.20(2), Battery To A Law Enforcement Officer, the court in Barrett adopted the following test for "in his official capacity": "whether the official is acting in the scope of his employment as opposed to being engaged in a personal act of his own." Barrett, supra. "Lawful authority" goes to whether the officer's actions "are conducted in accordance with the law." Barrett, 96 Wis.2d at 181. See note 9, below.

5. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

6. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

7. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some peace officers are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

8. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

9. The Committee suggests specifying the lawful function being performed and, if raised by the evidence, instructing the jury on the applicable legal standard. For example, if a "stop and question" situation is involved, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was conducting a lawful stop to investigate a suspected crime. A stop is lawful when the officer has reasonable suspicion that a person is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a crime. A stop may continue for a reasonable period of time required to inquire into the person's identity and to ask for an explanation of the person's conduct. An officer conducting a stop may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to detain the person while the inquiry into identity and conduct is made.

Or, if the evidence raises a question about the legality of an arrest, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful arrest. An arrest is lawful when the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person has committed a crime. An officer making an arrest may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to take the person into custody.

If the evidence raises a question about the "lawful authority" for an "exigent circumstances" entry, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful entry under the "exigent circumstances" rule. That rule allows an officer to enter a dwelling without a warrant when the entry is necessary [to prevent the imminent destruction of evidence] [in hot pursuit of a criminal suspect] [to prevent injury to the suspect or another person] [to prevent the likelihood that the suspect will escape.]

The four bracketed examples of exigent circumstances are based on those set forth in the Ferguson decision, 2009 WI 50, ¶20, citing State v. Richter, 2000 WI 58, 235 Wis.2d 524, ¶29, 612 N.W.2d 29 and State v. Smith, 131 Wis.2d 220, 229, 388 N.W.2d 601 (1986).

10. That the interpretation of the knowledge element reflected in Wis JI-Criminal 1765 and 1766 is correct was confirmed in State v. Lossman, 118 Wis.2d 526, 536, 348 N.W.2d 159 (1984):

> The accused must believe or know he (1) resisted the officer, while the officer was (2) acting in an official capacity and (3) with lawful authority.

Also see State v. Elbaum, 54 Wis.2d 213, 194 N.W.2d 1660 (1972), and State v. Zdiarstek, 53 Wis.2d 776, 193 N.W.2d 833 (1972).

1766A OBSTRUCTING AN OFFICER: GIVING FALSE INFORMATION — § 946.41(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Obstructing an officer, as defined in § 946.41 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly gives false information to an officer with intent to mislead the officer in the performance of his or her duty while the officer is doing any act in an official capacity and with lawful authority.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly gave false information to an officer.

   A (title – e.g., sheriff) is an officer.[2]

2. The officer was doing an act in an official capacity.[3]

   _____[4] act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed to perform.[5] [The duties of a _____ include: _____.][6]

3. The officer was acting with lawful authority.

_____[7] act with lawful authority if their acts are conducted in accordance with the law. In this case, it is alleged that the officer was _____.[8]

4. The defendant intended to mislead the officer.

This requires that the defendant knew that (officer) was an officer acting in an official capacity and with lawful authority[9] and that the defendant had the purpose to mislead the officer in the performance of his or her duties.[10] It is not required that the officer was misled.[11]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1766A was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1992, 2003, 2005, 2008, and 2009. This revision added to the Comment and to footnote 8.

The 1990 revision split former Wis JI Criminal 1765 into three instructions. Wis JI Criminal 1765 is limited to offenses involving "resisting" an officer, which is interpreted to require physical interference.

Wis JI Criminal 1766 is limited to offenses involving "obstructing," interpreted to involve nonphysical interference. Wis JI Criminal 1766A is limited to offenses involving the giving of false information.

Section 946.41 was amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 121 (effective date: January 31, 1990) to add "or knowingly place physical evidence" to the definition of "obstruct" in subsec. (2)(a). A separate instruction has not been prepared for the "placing physical evidence" offense. Wis JI Criminal 1766A should be usable as a model with relatively little change.

1989 Wisconsin Act 121 also created sub. (2m), which provides that it is a Class H felony if § 946.41(1) is violated under all the following circumstances: the person gives false information or places physical evidence with intent to mislead the officer; and, the trier of fact at a criminal trial considers the false information or physical evidence; and, the trial results in the conviction of an innocent person. A uniform instruction has not been drafted for the felony offense.

In State v. Ferguson, 2009 WI 50, 317 Wis.2d 587, 767 N.W.2d 187, the court concluded that a jury instruction for a charge of obstructing an officer should include a definition of "lawful authority" and that the definition should include description of "exigent circumstances" when the obstructing occurs directly after a warrantless entry of a dwelling. However, the failure to so instruct in this case was not error, or, if error, was harmless, because the evidence supported conviction for obstructing after the defendant was arrested and had been removed from the dwelling.

Four justices also concluded that the decision of the court of appeals in State v. Mikkelson, 2002 WI App 152, 256 Wis.2d 132, 647 N.W.2d 421, is overruled. Mikkelson was characterized as holding that exigent circumstances could not justify a warrantless entry to arrest for a misdemeanor. Ferguson holds that a warrantless entry, based on probable cause and exigent circumstances, may be made for any jailable offense.

The general definition of "lawful authority" provided in Wis JI Criminal 1766 was used in the Ferguson case, though the standard instruction was not cited. A model description of what "lawful authority" involves where there is an "exigent circumstances" entry has been added to footnote 8.

1. This instruction is for a charge of obstructing an officer based on the giving of false information with intent to mislead the officer in the performance of his or her duties. Section 946.41(2)(a) provides as follows:

> "Obstructs" includes without limitation knowingly giving false information to the officer or knowingly placing physical evidence with intent to mislead the officer in the performance of his or her duty including the service of any summons or civil process.

In State v. Caldwell, 154 Wis.2d 683, 454 N.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1990), the court held that giving false information with intent to mislead constitutes "obstructing" as a matter of law. There is no need for further proof that the defendant's conduct made the officer's performance of duties more difficult.

In State v. Espinoza, 2002 WI App 51, 250 Wis.2d 804, 641 N.W.2d 484, the court of appeals recognized an "exculpatory denial" exception to § 946.41(2)(a). This was overruled by State v. Reed, 2005 WI 53, ¶48, 280 Wis.2d 68, 695 N.W.2d 315:

> In sum, we conclude that there is no exculpatory denial exception in the obstructing statute. The statute criminalizes all false statements knowingly made and with intent to mislead the police. Although the State should have sound reasons for believing that a defendant knowingly made false statements with intent to mislead the police and were not made out of a good-faith attempt to defend against accusations of a crime, we conclude that the latter can never include the former; knowingly providing false information with intent to mislead the police is the antithesis of a good-faith attempt to defend against accusations of criminal wrongdoing. Accordingly, we overrule Espinoza.

2. The Committee believes that it is clearer to the members of the jury if they are simply instructed that, for example, a sheriff is an officer. "Officer" is defined as follows in sec. 946.41(2)(b):

> "Officer" means a peace officer or other public officer or public employee having the authority by nature of his office or employment to take another into custody.

3. Acting "in an official capacity" and acting "with lawful authority" are two separate questions. State v. Barrett, 96 Wis.2d 174, 180-81, 291 N.W.2d 498 (1980). For the purposes of sec. 940.20(2), Battery To A Law Enforcement Officer, the court in Barrett adopted the following test for "in his official capacity": "whether the official is acting in the scope of his employment as opposed to being engaged in a personal act of his own." Barrett, supra. "Lawful authority" goes to whether the officer's actions "are conducted in accordance with the law." Barrett, 96 Wis.2d at 181. See note 8, below.

4. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

5. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

6. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some peace officers are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

7. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

8. The Committee suggests specifying the lawful function being performed and, if raised by the evidence, instructing the jury on the applicable legal standard. For example, if a "stop and question" situation is involved, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was conducting a lawful stop to investigate a suspected crime. A stop is lawful when the officer has reasonable suspicion that a person is committing, has committed, or is about to commit a crime. A stop may continue for a reasonable period of time required to inquire into the person's identity and to ask for an explanation of the person's conduct. An officer conducting a stop may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to detain the person while the inquiry into identity and conduct is made.

Or, if the evidence raises a question about the legality of an arrest, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful arrest. An arrest is lawful when the officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the person has committed a crime. An officer making an arrest may use only the amount of force reasonably necessary to take the person into custody.

If the evidence raises a question about the "lawful authority" for an "exigent circumstances" entry, something like the following may be helpful:

> In this case, it is alleged that the officer was making a lawful entry under the "exigent circumstances" rule. That rule allows an officer to enter a dwelling without a warrant when the entry is necessary [to prevent the imminent destruction of evidence] [in hot pursuit of a criminal suspect] [to prevent injury to the suspect or another person] [to prevent the likelihood that the suspect will escape.]

The four bracketed examples of exigent circumstances are based on those set forth in the Ferguson decision, 2009 WI 50, ¶20, citing State v. Richter, 2000 WI 58, 235 Wis.2d 524, ¶29, 612 N.W.2d 29 and State v. Smith, 131 Wis.2d 220, 229, 388 N.W.2d 601 (1986).

9. This interpretation of the knowledge element is based on the one found in Wis JI-Criminal 1765 and 1766, which was confirmed as correct in State v. Lossman, 118 Wis.2d 526, 536, 348 N.W.2d 159 (1984):

> The accused must believe or know he (1) resisted the officer, while the officer was (2) acting in an official capacity and (3) with lawful authority.

Also see State v. Elbaum, 54 Wis.2d 213, 194 N.W.2d 1660 (1972), and State v. Zdiarstek, 53 Wis.2d 776, 193 N.W.2d 833 (1972).

10. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new versions have "mental purpose" as one part of the definition. It is the other alternative that changed from "believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

11. State v. Caldwell, 154 Wis.2d 683, 454 N.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1990), discussed in note 1, supra.

1768 FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH AN OFFICER'S ATTEMPT TO TAKE A PERSON INTO CUSTODY — § 946.415

Section 946.415 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who intentionally does all of the following:

- refuses to comply with an officer's lawful attempt to take the person into custody;
- retreats or remains in a building or place and, through action or threat, attempts to prevent the officer from taking the person into custody; and,
- remains or becomes armed with a dangerous weapon or threatens to use a dangerous weapon, regardless of whether the person has a dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally refused to comply with an officer's[1] lawful attempt to take the defendant into custody.

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant knew that an officer was lawfully attempting to take the defendant into custody.[2]

2. The defendant intentionally retreated or remained in a building or place and, through action or threat, intentionally attempted to prevent the officer from taking the defendant into custody.

3. While committing elements 1. and 2.,[3] the defendant intentionally [(remained) (became) armed with a dangerous weapon] [threatened to use a dangerous weapon regardless of whether the defendant had a dangerous weapon].[4]

IF DEFINITION OF "ARMED" IS NEEDED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Armed" means that a dangerous weapon must have been either on the defendant's person or within the defendant's reach.][5]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1768 was originally published in 1997. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for violations of § 946.415, which was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 93, effective date: December 16, 1995.

In State v. Koeppen, 2000 WI App 121, 237 Wis. 2d 418k, 614 N.W.2d 530, the court held that § 946.415 "delineates one crime that can be committed in several ways. . . . [T]he offense has a refusal component, a physical manifestation of the refusal with threat component and a dangerous weapon component." ¶21. The jury is required to agree that each component was committed but not as to the way the component is committed. 2000 WI App 121, ¶24.

1. The definition of "officer" provided in § 946.41(2)(b) is adopted by § 946.415(1) and reads as follows:

> "Officer" means a peace officer or other public officer or public employee having the authority by virtue of the officer's or employee's office or employment to take another into custody.

2. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a statute it requires that the defendant have knowledge of those facts set forth after the word and which are necessary to make the conduct criminal. The Committee concluded that with this offense, this rule means that the defendant must know that the officer was lawfully attempting to take the defendant into custody.

3. The phrase "while committing elements 1. and 2." was added to the instruction to track the statute as closely as possible. Subsection (2)(c) requires that "[w]hile acting under pars. (a) and (b)," the actor must remain or become armed, etc. Elements 1. and 2. address the requirements of "pars. (a) and (b)"; element 3. addresses subsection (2)(c).

4. If definition of "dangerous weapon" is needed, see Wis JI-Criminal 910.

5. This is based on the definition of "went armed" used in the uniform instruction for carrying a concealed weapon. See Wis JI-Criminal 1335; cases discussing the phrase are collected in footnote 3 of that instruction.

1770 ESCAPE FROM THE CUSTODY OF A PEACE OFFICER AFTER LEGAL ARREST FOR A FORFEITURE OFFENSE[1] — § 946.42(2)(a)and (3)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Escape from custody, as defined in § 946.42(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally escapes from custody when that custody resulted from legal arrest for a forfeiture offense.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was in custody.[2]

   "Custody" means that a person's freedom of movement is restricted either by the use of physical force by a peace officer or by the assertion of authority by a peace officer to which the person has submitted.[3]

2. The custody resulted from legal arrest for a forfeiture offense.

   An arrest for a forfeiture offense is legal when the officer making the arrest[4]

   (CHOOSE THE FOLLOWING WHICH APPLIES)

   (has reasonable grounds to believe that the person is committing or has committed a forfeiture offense).

(has a warrant commanding that the person be arrested, where that warrant is fair on its face, notwithstanding unsubstantial irregularities).

(believes on reasonable grounds that a warrant for the person's arrest has been issued in this state).

AT THE REQUEST OF THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:

[Evidence that the defendant was in custody as the result of being arrested is an essential element of this offense. However, the fact that the defendant was suspected of illegal activity must not be considered proof that the defendant is likely to have committed the offense of escape as charged in this case.][5]

3. The defendant escaped from custody.

Escape means to leave in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[6]

4. The escape from custody was intentional.

This requires that the defendant intentionally escaped from custody, that is, that the defendant had the mental purpose to escape.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[8] IF DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 946.42(3)(e): LEAVING THE STATE TO AVOID APPREHENSION.

If you find the defendant guilty of escape, you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant leave the state to avoid apprehension?"

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant left the state to avoid apprehension you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1770 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988, 1993, and 1997. This revision combined JI 1770 and 1771. It also involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes and was approved by the Committee in October 2007.

The Wisconsin escape statute, § 946.42, divides escape offenses into two classifications: offenses under § 946.42(2) are punished as Class A misdemeanors; offenses under § 946.42(3) are Class H felonies. The severity of the penalty is dependent upon the seriousness of the underlying reason for the accused being in custody.

This instruction is drafted for those violations of subsection (2)(a) involving escape from the custody of a police officer. These basic offenses are punished as Class A misdemeanors. The penalty is increased to that for a Class H felony if the defendant leaves the state to avoid apprehension. See § 946.42(3)(e). This instruction includes a special question to be used when the felony offense is submitted to the jury.

Escape charges under § 946.42(2) apply to persons who were jailed for nonpayment of a municipal forfeiture and failed to return to jail from work release. State v. Smith, 214 Wis.2d 541, 571 N.W.2d 472 (Ct. App. 1997).

Former § 946.42(4), which required that sentences imposed for escape be consecutive to any sentence previously imposed or which may be imposed for any crime or offense for which the person was in custody when he escaped, was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

1. Section 946.42(2) deals with escape from custody resulting from arrest for, charge of, or conviction of a statutory traffic regulation, statutory forfeiture or municipal ordinance violation, from civil arrest or body execution, or from custody under § 938.19 resulting from a traffic regulation, etc. This instruction is drafted for only one of the types of custody possible under § 946.42(2) – custody resulting from legal arrest for a forfeiture offense. For cases involving the other types of custody, the second element will have to be modified throughout the instruction.

2. This instruction is drafted for cases involving escape from the actual custody of a police officer after arrest. The definition of "custody" is based on recent decisions of the Wisconsin appellate courts. See note 3, below.

For cases involving escape from an institutional setting after arrest for or conviction of a forfeiture offense, defining "custody" in the following manner may be helpful:

> Custody means physical control of a person by (an institution) (a peace officer) (an institution guard). (A person is also in custody when temporarily outside an institution for the purpose of working or receiving medical care or other authorized purpose.)

The sentence in parentheses should be read to the jury only when the accused was lawfully outside the institution when the alleged escape took place. Prisoners may be taken from jails or other institutions for "rehabilitative and educational activities. . . . While away from the institution grounds, an inmate is deemed to be under the care and control of the institution in which he is an inmate and subject to its rules and discipline." Wis. Stat. § 302.15.

3. The definition of "custody" is adapted from decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court and Court of Appeals. These decisions held that the proper definition of custody was broader than being in the "physical control" of a police officer or institution guard, which had been the definition in the previous versions of this instruction. Rather, it is enough if freedom of movement has been restricted. State v. Adams, 152 Wis.2d 68, 447 N.W.2d 90 (Ct. App. 1989); State v. Hoffman, 163 Wis.2d 752, 472 N.W.2d 558 (Ct. App. 1991); State v. Swanson, 164 Wis.2d 437, 475 N.W.2d 437 (1991). See footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1772 for complete discussion of these cases.

4. What constitutes a legal arrest is defined in subsection (1)(c) of § 946.42 as follows: "'Legal arrest' includes without limitation an arrest pursuant to process fair on its face notwithstanding insubstantial irregularities and also includes taking a juvenile into custody under s. 938.19." The question of an arrest's legality can become complicated; the instruction has not attempted to deal with each of the individual problems that can arise. The material in parentheses is based on the description of arrest authority provided in s. 968.07.

As far as the "privilege" to escape from an unlawful arrest is concerned, the comment to the Judiciary Committee's 1953 Report on the Criminal Code states at page 191:

> A prisoner in custody pursuant to an illegal arrest has a privilege to escape without the use of deadly or excessive force and so has a defense to a prosecution under this section. See § 339.48 Self-defense and defense of others. (Note, now § 939.48.) What is a legal arrest is partially set out in subsection (5) of this section. See also, Restatement, Torts § 124 (1934). If the illegality of the original arrest has been overcome by subsequent events making the custody lawful, the privilege to escape no longer exists. The actor's innocence of the crime for which he is in custody is, of course, no defense to the crime of escape.

5. This cautionary instruction is intended to advise the jury that the fact of arrest is a necessary element of the escape offense but must not be used to find that the defendant is probably guilty of the escape charge simply because the defendant has been arrested. It should be given only at the request of the defendant, since it may serve to highlight the arrest.

6. This is the definition of "escape" found in § 946.42(1)(b).

7. The crime of escape is considered to be a continuing offense. Thus, a person who claims he was unable to form the intent to escape because of drunkenness or epileptic seizure may still be convicted since the person could have formed the required intent when he sobered up or when the disability ceased. See Parent v. State, 31 Wis.2d 106, 141 N.W.2d 878 (1966) (drunkenness), and Ray v. State, 33 Wis.2d 685, 148 N.W.2d 31 (1967) (psychomotor or epileptic seizure).

See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B regarding instructing the jury on "intentionally."

8. Section 946.42(3)(e) provides for an increased penalty (from a Class A misdemeanor to a Class H felony) if the defendant leaves the state to avoid apprehension. Where the aggravated offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if they find the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant leave the state to avoid apprehension?

1771 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY RESULTING FROM VIOLATION OF PROBATION, PAROLE, OR EXTENDED SUPERVISION — § 946.42(2m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Escape from custody, as defined in § 946.42(2m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally escapes from the custody of a probation, parole, or extended supervision agent, or a correctional officer, when that custody resulted from an allegation or finding of a violation of the rules or conditions of probation, parole, or extended supervision.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was in the custody of a (probation agent) (parole agent) (extended supervision agent) (correctional officer).

   "Custody" means the physical custody or authorized physical control of a person by a (probation agent) (parole agent) (extended supervision agent) (correctional officer).[1]

2. The custody resulted from (an allegation) (a finding) that the defendant violated the rules or conditions of (probation) (parole) (extended supervision).[2]

3. The defendant escaped from custody.

"Escape" means to leave in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[3]

4. The escape from custody was intentional.

This requires that the defendant intentionally escaped from custody, that is, that the defendant had the mental purpose to escape.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1771 was approved by the Committee in December 2008.

This instruction is drafted for violations of subsection (2m) of § 946.42, which reads as follows:

> (2m) A person who is in the custody of a probation, parole, or extended supervision agent, or a correctional officer, based on an allegation or a finding that the person violated the rules or conditions of probation, parole, or extended supervision and who intentionally escapes from custody is guilty of a Class H felony.

This subsection was created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: May 31, 2008]. It was apparently intended to address a gap in the former statute identified in State v. Zimmerman, 2001 WI App 238, 248 Wis.2d 370, 635 N.W.2d 864, which held that a probationer or parolee, taken into custody for violating terms of release by a probation or parole agent, was not "in custody" for purposes of § 946.42 when being transported to jail.

1. The definition of "custody" is based on § 946.42(1)(a)1.c.: "Actual custody or authorized physical control of a probationer, parolee, or person on extended supervision by the department of corrections." The instruction uses "physical custody" in place of "actual custody"; no change in meaning is intended. In the Committee's judgment, the custody requirement and its definition are intended to make the distinction between "legal custody" – all persons under supervision are in the legal custody of the department – and the "actual" or "physical" custody required as the predicate for an escape charge. For court decisions discussing "custody" in other contexts, see Wis JI-Criminal 1772, footnote 2.

Section 302.113 provides authority for the department to take physical custody of persons released on extended supervision. Section 304.06 does the same regarding persons released on parole. DOC 328.22, Wis. Admin. Code, promulgated under the authority of § 973.01(1), authorizes custody of probationers.

2. If a cautionary instruction is requested regarding the evidence that the defendant was alleged or found to have violated conditions of supervision, see Wis JI-Criminal 275 Cautionary Instruction: Evidence Of Other Conduct and Wis JI-Criminal 312 Prisoner As Witness Or Defendant: Prisoner Status An Issue.

3. This is the definition of escape found in § 946.42(1)(b).

4. The crime of escape is considered to be a continuing offense. Thus, a person who claims he was unable to form the intent to escape because of drunkenness or epileptic seizure may still be convicted since the person could have formed the required intent when he sobered up or when the disability ceased. See Parent v. State, 31 Wis.2d 106, 141 N.W.2d 878 (1966) (drunkenness), and Ray v. State, 33 Wis.2d 685, 148 N.W.2d 31 (1967) (psychomotor or epileptic seizure).

See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B regarding instructing the jury on "intentionally."

1772 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY RESULTING FROM LEGAL ARREST FOR A CRIME — § 946.42(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Escape from custody, as defined in § 946.42(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally escapes from custody when that custody resulted from legal arrest for a crime.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was in custody.

   SELECT THE APPLICABLE DEFINITION OF "CUSTODY."[1]

   [Custody means the physical control of a person by (an institution) (a peace officer) (an institution guard).[2] (A person is also in custody when temporarily outside an institution for the purpose of working or receiving medical care or other authorized purpose.)[3]]

   ["Custody" means that a person's freedom of movement is restricted either by the use of physical force by a peace officer or by the assertion of authority by a peace officer to which the person has submitted.[4]]

2. The custody resulted from legal arrest for a crime.

An arrest for a crime is legal when the officer making the arrest[5]

CHOOSE THE FOLLOWING WHICH APPLIES

(has reasonable grounds to believe that the person is committing or has committed a crime. _____ is a crime.)[6]

(has a warrant commanding that the person be arrested, where that warrant is fair on its face, notwithstanding unsubstantial irregularities).

(believes on reasonable grounds that a warrant for the person's arrest has been issued in this state).

(believes on reasonable grounds that a felony warrant for the person's arrest has been issued in another state).

AT THE REQUEST OF THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:

[Evidence that the defendant was in custody as the result of being arrested is an essential element of this offense. However, the fact that the defendant was suspected of illegal activity must not be considered proof that the defendant is likely to have committed the offense of escape as charged in this case.][7]

3. The defendant escaped from custody.

Escape means to leave in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[8]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CASE INVOLVES FAILURE TO REMAIN WITHIN THE LIMITS OF A HOME DETENTION PROGRAM UNDER § 302.425.

[Escape includes the intentional failure to remain within the limits of a home detention program.][9]

4. The escape from custody was intentional.

This requires that the defendant intentionally escaped from custody, that is, that the defendant had the mental purpose to escape.[10]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1772 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988, 1993, and 1997. This revision combined JI 1772 and 1773. It also involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes and was approved by the Committee in October 2007.

The Wisconsin escape statute, § 946.42, divides escape offenses into two classifications: offenses under § 946.42(2) are punished as Class A misdemeanors; offenses under § 946.42(3) are Class H felonies. The severity of the penalty is dependent upon the seriousness of the underlying reason for the accused being in custody.

Section 946.42(3) deals with escapes from custody that result from the following circumstances:

(a) Pursuant to a legal arrest for, lawfully charged with or convicted of or sentenced for a crime.

(b) Lawfully taken into custody under s. 938.19 for or lawfully alleged or adjudged under ch. 938 to be delinquent on the basis of a violation of a criminal law.

(c) Subject to a disposition under s. 938.34(4d), (4h), or (4m), to a placement under s. 938.357(4) or to aftercare revocation under s. 938.357(5)(e).

(d) Subject to an order under s. 48.366.

(e) In custody under the circumstances described in sub. (2) and leaves the state to avoid apprehension. Leaving the state and failing to return is prima facie evidence of intent to avoid apprehension.

(f) Pursuant to a legal arrest as a fugitive from justice in another state.

(g) Committed to the department of health and family services under ch. 971 or 975.

This instruction is drafted for violations of subsection (3)(a) involving escape from the custody of a police officer or from the actual physical control of an institution or officer. [Escape from an officer at the time of arrest was formerly addressed in Wis JI Criminal 1773; that instruction has been combined in this version of Wis JI Criminal 1772.] The first element provides alternative definitions of "custody" for the two types of cases.

Wis JI Criminal 1774 is drafted for violations of subsection (3)(a) involving escapes following conviction or sentence. Wis JI Criminal 1770 is drafted for violations of subsection (3)(e) involving escapes under sub. (2) where the defendant leaves the state to avoid apprehension. For any of the other alternatives in § 946.42(3)(b) through (g), the second element of the instruction would need to be modified (along with corresponding changes in the opening and concluding paragraphs).

Note that the statute does not distinguish between arrests for felonies and misdemeanors or between custody resulting from arrest or conviction or sentence.

A note on the defense of necessity or coercion follows the Comment to Wis JI Criminal 1774.

A probationer or parolee, taken into custody for violating terms of release by a probation or parole agent, is not "in custody" for purposes of § 946.42 when being transported to jail. State v. Zimmerman, 2001 WI App 238, 248 Wis.2d 370, 635 N.W.2d 864.

1. This instruction is drafted for those violations of subsection (3) involving escape from the actual physical control of an institution or officer or from the custody of a police officer at the time of arrest. The applicable definition should be selected.

2. The definition of "custody" is based on the one provided in § 946.42(1)(a).

"Custody" was discussed at length in State v. Schaller, 70 Wis.2d 107, 233 N.W.2d 416 (1974), where it was held that it was not escape when a person committed to the county jail during nonworking hours as a condition of probation failed to return at the close of the working day. The court discussed "actual" and "constructive" custody and determined that a probationer was not in the constructive custody of the sheriff during the periods of release and therefore his elopement did not constitute escape under § 946.42.

In State v. Rosenberg, 208 Wis.2d 191, 560 N.W.2d 266 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the holding in Schaller, at least as it applied to offenses charged under the 1994 version of § 946.42. The statute was again amended in 1996; the court "decline[d] to rule on the impact the 1996 amendments have on Schaller." Wis.2d 191, 193n.1. The Committee concluded that the plain language of the statute after the 1996 amendments covers a probationer who does not return to jail as required. The relevant portion is the last sentence of § 946.42(1)(a) which provides that custody does not include a probationer "unless the person is in actual custody or is subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4)." The underlined portion was added by 1995 Wisconsin Act 154. Rosenberg noted that the Legislative Reference Bureau analysis of the bill that was enacted as 1995 Wisconsin Act 154 stated: "This bill makes a probationer subject to the escape law at all times when he or she is subject to an order of confinement as a condition of probation."

A probationer or parolee, taken into custody for violating terms of release by a probation or parole agent, is not "in custody" for purposes of § 946.42 when being transported to jail. State v. Zimmerman, 2001 WI App 238, 248 Wis.2d 370, 635 N.W.2d 864.

3. The sentence in parentheses should be read to the jury only when the accused was lawfully outside the institution when the alleged escape took place. Prisoners may be taken from jails or other institutions for "rehabilitative and educational activities. . . . While away from the institution grounds, an inmate is deemed to be under the care and control of the institution in which he is an inmate and subject to its rules and discipline." Wis. Stat. § 302.15. Also, see note 2, above, regarding the custody status of prisoners confined to the county jail as a condition of probation.

4. The definition of "custody" is adapted from decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court and Court of Appeals. These decisions held that the proper definition of custody was broader than being in the "physical control" of a police officer or institution guard, which had been the definition in the previous versions of this instruction. Rather, it is enough if freedom of movement has been restricted. The Committee modified this definition in light of recent decisions dealing with "seizures" under the 4th Amendment to develop the definition used here.

In State v. Adams, 152 Wis.2d 68, 447 N.W.2d 90 (Ct. App. 1989), police stopped the suspect on suspicion of drunk driving and he failed the field sobriety tests. While the officer was running a license check, the suspect ran away but was chased down by the officer. The suspect and his companion then overwhelmed the officer, locked him up in his own handcuffs, and got away. They later turned themselves in. The defendant challenged his escape conviction on the ground that he was never in "custody." He argued that "custody" should be defined (as in Wis JI-Criminal 1772) as "in physical control" of the officer. Since they successfully resisted the arrest, so the argument goes, the defendants were never in the officer's control. The court of appeals rejected the argument, holding that "custody" means "ability or freedom of movement had been restricted."

In State v. Hoffman, 163 Wis.2d 752, 472 N.W.2d 558 (Ct. App. 1991), an officer went to Hoffman's house with a warrant for his arrest. He found Hoffman in his driveway and told him he had a warrant and was placing him under arrest. Hoffman moved toward the house but the officer positioned himself in his way. The officer refused Hoffman permission to go to the house to get clothing. While discussing this,

Hoffman's brother executed a "basketball pick" type of maneuver, blocking the officer while Hoffman ran away through the garage. The trial court modified the escape instruction to use the Adams definition of custody instead of the "physical control" definition from the standard instruction. Hoffman argued that Adams was wrong and the standard instruction was right. He conceded he may have been under legal arrest, but said he was never in the officer's control. The court rejected the argument, holding that "custody" is broader than the "physical control" definition used in the former instruction. It is satisfied by the restraint on freedom of movement that is required as the first element of the "three elements of arrest" test that has traditionally been used in Wisconsin. Everyone who is under legal arrest is in custody. A footnote establishes that there was enough restraint to satisfy what is required for an arrest: a reasonable jury could find that Hoffman submitted to the officer's assertion of authority. [This relates to the definition of "seizure" adopted by the U.S. Supreme Court for 4th Amendment purposes, see Hodari D., discussed below.]

In State v. Swanson, 164 Wis.2d 437, 475 N.W.2d 437 (1991), officers observed an automobile drive onto the sidewalk in the city of Prescott at 2:00 a.m. They made contact with Swanson, the driver, who could not produce a driver's license and smelled of intoxicants. The officers began to conduct field sobriety tests and did not detect slurred speech or difficulty in standing. Before completing the field sobriety test, the officers conducted a patdown and discovered a bag of marijuana. At that point the officers received a call for backup assistance at a domestic disturbance. They put Swanson in the police car and drove to the site of the disturbance. When they got there, Swanson was left alone and he escaped. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed Swanson's escape conviction because he was not "in custody." The court focused on the 4th Amendment test for arrest, holding that the suspect was not under arrest on the street because field sobriety tests are not "custody." Probable cause did not exist until after the marijuana bag was discovered, and it was discovered by an unlawful search - one that exceeded the scope of a lawful frisk. Thus, Swanson was not lawfully arrested and not covered by the escape statute. In the course of its decision, the court overruled the "three elements of arrest" test previously used in Wisconsin and relied on in Adams and Hoffman. In its place, the court adopted the "objective" test, under which the question is: would a reasonable person in the suspect's position have considered himself to be under arrest? The court mentioned neither Adams nor Hoffman and referred to escape only at the very end of the opinion:

> As Swanson was not "in custody" at the time he eluded police he cannot be considered as to have escaped from custody under sec. 946.42(3)(a), Stats.

The Committee concluded that the result of these three decisions is that "custody" for the purposes of the escape statute is to be defined in a manner consistent with the definition of "seizure" employed for 4th Amendment purposes. The United States Supreme Court addressed the issue in California v. Hodari D., 499 U.S. 621 (1991). Hodari D. involved police pursuit of a young man who ran away when he saw police approaching. Just before the officers caught him, he threw away a bag that turned out to have cocaine in it. The question was whether the man had been "seized" before he tossed the bag aside. For the purpose of determining when there is a 4th Amendment "seizure," the U.S. Supreme Court equated "seizure" with "arrest" and defined it as follows:

> An arrest requires either physical force (laying on of hands or application of physical force to restrain movement) or, where that is absent, submission to the assertion of authority.

The definition of "custody" used in the instruction is based on this formulation.

5. What constitutes a legal arrest is defined in subsection (1)(c) of § 946.42 as follows: "'Legal arrest' includes without limitation an arrest pursuant to process fair on its face notwithstanding insubstantial irregularities and also includes taking a juvenile into custody under s. 938.19." The question of an arrest's legality can become complicated; the instruction has not attempted to deal with each of the individual problems that can arise. The material in parentheses is based on the description of arrest authority provided in s. 968.07.

As far as the "privilege" to escape from an unlawful arrest is concerned, the comment to the Judiciary Committee's 1953 Report on the Criminal Code states at page 191:

> A prisoner in custody pursuant to an illegal arrest has a privilege to escape without the use of deadly or excessive force and so has a defense to a prosecution under this section. See § 339.48 Self-defense and defense of others. (Note, now § 939.48.) What is a legal arrest is partially set out in subsection (5) of this section. See also, Restatement, Torts § 124 (1934). If the illegality of the original arrest has been overcome by subsequent events making the custody lawful, the privilege to escape no longer exists. The actor's innocence of the crime for which he is in custody is, of course, no defense to the crime of escape.

6. Misdemeanor traffic violations are punishable by imprisonment and therefore are "crimes" under § 946.42. State v. Beasley, 165 Wis.2d 97, 477 N.W.2d 57 (Ct. App. 1991).

7. This cautionary instruction is intended to advise the jury that the fact of arrest is a necessary element of the escape offense but should not be used to find that the defendant is probably guilty of the escape charge simply because the defendant has been arrested. It should be given only at the request of the defendant, since it may serve to highlight the arrest.

8. This is the definition of "escape" found in § 946.42(1)(b).

9. Section 302.425 provides that the sheriff or superintendent of a house of correction may place a prisoner in a home detention programs to be monitored by an electronic monitoring system. Subsection (6) of the statute provides:

> Any intentional failure of a prisoner to remain within the limits of his or her detention or to return to his or her place of detention, as specified in the terms of detention under sub. (3), is considered an escape under s. 946.42(3)(a).

The Committee concluded that offenses involving electronic monitoring under sec. 302.045 are best handled by adding the recommended statement to the regular escape instruction. Electronic monitoring is also authorized by sec. 973.03(4)(a), which provides that "in lieu of a sentence of imprisonment to the county jail, a court may impose a sentence of detention at the defendant's place of residence . . ." Subsection (4)(c) provides that if the defendant fails to comply with the terms of the detention, the court may order that the remainder of the sentence be served in the county jail. Subsection (4)(d) provides that a sentence under sec. 973.04 is not a sentence of imprisonment, and lists exceptions that do not include the escape statute. Because sec. 973.04 apparently provides a specific remedy for failure to abide by the terms of the detention and because it does not reference the escape statute as sec. 302.045 does, the Committee concluded that violations of detention conditions under sec. 973.04 are not punishable as escape.

10. The crime of escape is considered to be a continuing offense. Thus, a person who claims he was unable to form the intent to escape because of drunkenness or epileptic seizure may still be convicted since the person could have formed the required intent when he sobered up or when the disability ceased. See Parent v. State, 31 Wis.2d 106, 141 N.W.2d 878 (1966) (drunkenness), and Ray v. State, 33 Wis.2d 685, 148 N.W.2d 31 (1967) (psychomotor or epileptic seizure).

1774 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY: JAIL OR PRISON ESCAPE — § 946.42(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Escape from custody, as defined in § 946.42(3)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally escapes from custody when that custody resulted from being sentenced for a crime.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was in custody.

   "Custody" means the physical control of a person by (an institution) (a peace officer) (an institution guard).[1] (A person is also in custody when temporarily outside an institution for the purpose of working or receiving medical care or other authorized purpose.)[2]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CASE INVOLVES FAILURE TO REMAIN WITHIN THE LIMITS OF A HOME DETENTION PROGRAM UNDER § 302.425.

   [Escape includes the intentional failure to remain within the limits of a home detention program.][3]

2. The custody was the result of being sentenced[4] for a crime.[5]

AT THE REQUEST OF THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:

[While evidence that the defendant was in custody as the result of a prior criminal conviction is an essential element of this offense, it must not be used for any other purpose (than determining the weight and credit to be given to testimony).[6] Particularly, you should bear in mind that conviction of the defendant of a crime at some previous time is not proof that the defendant is guilty of the offense which is now charged.][7]

3. The defendant escaped from custody.

   Escape means to leave in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[8]

4. The escape from custody was intentional.

   This requires that the defendant intentionally escaped from custody, that is, that the defendant had the mental purpose to escape.[9]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1774 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988, 1993, and 1997. This revision involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes and was approved by the Committee in October 2007.

The Wisconsin escape statute, § 946.42, divides escape offenses into two classifications: offenses under § 946.42(2) are punished as Class A misdemeanors; offenses under § 946.42(3) are Class H felonies. The severity of the penalty is dependent upon the seriousness of the underlying reason for the accused being in custody.

Section 946.42(3) deals with escapes from custody that result from the following circumstances:

(a) Pursuant to a legal arrest for, lawfully charged with or convicted of or sentenced for a crime.

(b) Lawfully taken into custody under s. 938.19 for or lawfully alleged or adjudged under ch. 938 to be delinquent on the basis of a violation of a criminal law.

(c) Subject to a disposition under s. 938.34(4d), (4h), or (4m), to a placement under s. 938.357(4) or to aftercare revocation under s. 938.357(5)(e).

(d) Subject to an order under s. 48.366.

(e) In custody under the circumstances described in sub. (2) and leaves the state to avoid apprehension. Leaving the state and failing to return is prima facie evidence of intent to avoid apprehension.

(f) Pursuant to a legal arrest as a fugitive from justice in another state.

(g) Committed to the department of health and family services under ch. 971 or 975.

Subsection (3)(a) of § 946.42 prohibits escape from custody "pursuant to a legal arrest for, lawfully charged with or convicted of or sentence for a crime." This instruction is drafted for violations of subsection (3)(a) involving escapes following conviction or sentence. There is a technical distinction in Wisconsin to the effect that one placed on probation is not serving a sentence. If that distinction is implicated in a case for which this instruction might be used, the text should be changed to refer to custody that "resulted from being convicted of a crime." Also see note 1, below.

The penalties provided in the escape statute do not distinguish between escapes from county jail and escapes from prison. All escapes from custody resulting from conviction for a crime are treated the same. They are also treated the same as escapes following arrest for a crime but before conviction. Wis JI Criminal 1774 is drafted for escapes following conviction and can be used if escape is from a jail or a prison. The place of imprisonment is no longer significant. What is significant is the cause of the custody – conviction of a crime.

For violations of subsection (3)(a) involving escapes after lawful arrest, see Wis JI Criminal 1772. Wis JI Criminal 1770 is drafted for violations of subsection (3)(e) involving escapes under sub. (2) where the defendant leaves the state to avoid apprehension. For any of the other alternatives in § 946.42(3)(b) through (g), the second element of the instruction would need to be modified (along with corresponding changes in the opening and concluding paragraphs).

Former § 946.42(4), which required that sentences imposed for escape be consecutive to any sentence previously imposed or which may be imposed for any crime or offense for which the person was in custody when he escaped, was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

A note discussing the defense of duress, necessity, or coercion follows these footnotes.

1. The definition of "custody" is based on the one provided in § 946.42(1)(a).

"Custody" was discussed at length in State v. Schaller, 70 Wis.2d 107, 233 N.W.2d 416 (1974), where it was held that it was not escape when a person committed to the county jail during nonworking hours as a condition of probation failed to return at the close of the working day. The court discussed "actual" and "constructive" custody and determined that a probationer was not in the constructive custody of the sheriff during the periods of release and therefore his elopement did not constitute escape under § 946.42.

In State v. Rosenberg, 208 Wis.2d 191, 560 N.W.2d 266 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the holding in Schaller, at least as it applied to offenses charged under the 1994 version of § 946.42. The statute was again amended in 1996; the court "decline[d] to rule on the impact the 1996 amendments have on Schaller." Wis.2d 191, 193n.1. The Committee concluded that the plain language of the statute after the 1996 amendments covers a probationer who does not return to jail as required. The relevant portion is the last sentence of § 946.42(1)(a) which provides that custody does not include a probationer "unless the person is in actual custody or is subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4)." The underlined portion was added by 1995 Wisconsin Act 154. Rosenberg noted that the Legislative Reference Bureau analysis of the bill that was enacted as 1995 Wisconsin Act 154 stated: "This bill makes a probationer subject to the escape law at all times when he or she is subject to an order of confinement as a condition of probation."

In State v. Sugden, 143 Wis.2d 728, 422 N.W.2d 624 (1988), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "custody" refers to secure custodial facilities within the general geographical boundary of a particular penal institution. Thus, Sugden's conviction for escape was affirmed where he left the locked cottage in which he was confined but was apprehended before he progressed beyond the outer fence defining the outer boundaries of the institution.

A probationer or parolee, taken into custody for violating terms of release by a probation or parole agent, is not "in custody" for purposes of § 946.42 when being transported to jail. State v. Zimmerman, 2001 WI App 238, 248 Wis.2d 370, 635 N.W.2d 864.

2. The sentence in parentheses should be read to the jury only when the accused was lawfully outside the institution when the alleged escape took place. Prisoners may be taken from jails or other institutions for "rehabilitative and educational activities. . . . While away from the institution grounds, an inmate is deemed to be under the care and control of the institution in which he is an inmate and subject to its rules and discipline." Wis. Stat. § 302.15. Also, see note 2, above, regarding the custody status of prisoners confined to the county jail as a condition of probation.

3. Section 302.425 provides that the sheriff or superintendent of a house of correction may place a prisoner in a home detention programs to be monitored by an electronic monitoring system. Subsection (6) of the statute provides:

> Any intentional failure of a prisoner to remain within the limits of his or her detention or to return to his or her place of detention, as specified in the terms of detention under sub. (3), is considered an escape under s. 946.42(3)(a).

The Committee concluded that offenses involving electronic monitoring under sec. 302.045 are best handled by adding the recommended statement to the regular escape instruction. Electronic monitoring is also authorized by sec. 973.03(4)(a), which provides that "in lieu of a sentence of imprisonment to the county jail, a court may impose a sentence of detention at the defendant's place of residence . . ." Subsection (4)(c) provides that if the defendant fails to comply with the terms of the detention, the court may order that the remainder of the sentence be served in the county jail. Subsection (4)(d) provides that a sentence under sec. 973.04 is not a sentence of imprisonment, and lists exceptions that do not include the escape statute. Because sec. 973.04 apparently provides a specific remedy for failure to abide by the terms of the detention and because it does not reference the escape statute as sec. 302.045 does, the Committee concluded that violations of detention conditions under sec. 973.04 are not punishable as escape.

4. Although there apparently is no Wisconsin law on the subject, the Committee is of the opinion that the legality of the underlying conviction and sentence is not an issue where the charge is escape after conviction or sentence. Thus, it should be no defense that the defendant's underlying conviction is subject to challenge. See cases cited in 27 Am.Jur.2d Escape, Prison Breaking, and Rescue, §§ 1, 7, 14, and 16, for the general rule that where imprisonment is under color of law, the prisoner is not entitled to resort to self-help but must challenge the validity of the conviction through legal channels.

5. Misdemeanor traffic violations are punishable by imprisonment and therefore are "crimes" under § 946.42. State v. Beasley, 165 Wis.2d 97, 477 N.W.2d 57 (Ct. App. 1991).

6. Include the phrase in parentheses when the evidence of a prior conviction has been admitted as relevant to credibility under § 906.09. Subsection (2) of § 906.09 provides for the exclusion of such evidence if its probative value is outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice. The trial judge must make a prior determination that such evidence is admissible (see §§ 906.09(3) and 901.04).

7. This cautionary instruction is suggested to deal with the fact that evidence of a prior conviction will be before the jury in most escape cases. It is intended to advise the jury that the prior conviction is a necessary element of the escape offense but must not be used to find that the defendant is probably guilty of the escape charge simply because he has been convicted before. It should be given only at the request of the defendant, since it may serve to highlight the prior conviction.

8. This is the definition of "escape" found in § 946.42(1)(b).

9. The crime of escape is considered to be a continuing offense. Thus, a person who claims he was unable to form the intent to escape because of drunkenness or epileptic seizure may still be convicted since the person could have formed the required intent when he sobered up or when the disability ceased. See Parent v. State, 31 Wis.2d 106, 141 N.W.2d 878 (1966) (drunkenness), and Ray v. State, 33 Wis.2d 685, 148 N.W.2d 31 (1967) (psychomotor or epileptic seizure).

See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B regarding instructing the jury on "intentionally."

NOTE ON DURESS, COERCION, OR NECESSITY DEFENSE

A commonly raised defense in escape cases is that the prisoner had no choice but to escape because of threats of violence or homosexual attacks by other inmates, unbearable conditions of confinement, or mistreatment by prison authorities. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has not specifically rejected or recognized such a defense to a charge of escape, although the court has recognized the defense of coercion for other criminal offenses, see Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979). Wis. Stat. § 939.47 defines the defense of coercion and § 939.46 defines the related defense of necessity. See Wis JI-Criminal 790 and 792.

Several states have recognized that coercion, necessity, or duress may be a defense to an escape charge, although relatively strict limits are usually placed on its availability. See, for example: People v. Lovercamp, 118 Cal. Rptr. 110, 43 Cal.App.3d 823 (1974); People v. Harmon, 220 N.W.2d 212 (Mich. 1974); People v. Unger, 362 N.E.2d 319 (Ill. 1977). Also see, 69 A.L.R.3d, "Duress, Necessity or Conditions of Confinement as Justifications for Escape from Prison."

Often the cases are not clear in distinguishing between coercion and necessity as the basis for the defense. In Wisconsin the two are theoretically distinct in the sense that coercion refers to threats or force from a third person and necessity refers to threats from natural physical forces. See §§ 939.46 and 939.47. (Also see Gardner, "The Defense of Necessity and the Right to Escape from Prison," 49 S. Cal. L. Rev. 110, 115 (1975); and Note, Duress – Defense to Escape, 3 Am. J. Crim. L. 331, 332 (1975).)

Some of the uncertainty regarding the scope and viability of the defense has been resolved by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Bailey, 444 U.S. 394, (1980). In Bailey, the Court analyzed the applicability of the duress or necessity defense to a charge of escape under 18 U.S.C. § 751(a), a federal statute that is similar to Wis. Stat. § 946.42. The Court recognized that this type of defense could be available to one charged with escape but restricts its availability to cases where the defendant "demonstrates that, given the imminence of the threat, violation of [the escape statute] was his only reasonable alternative." Further, "in order to be entitled to an instruction on duress or necessity as a defense to the crime charged, an escapee must first offer evidence justifying his continued absence from custody as well as his initial departure and that an indispensable element of such an offer is testimony of a bona fide effort to surrender or return to custody as soon as the claimed duress or necessity had lost its coercive force."

The Committee recommends that Bailey's reasoning be applied in Wisconsin. Before an instruction on coercion (or necessity) is given, there must be evidence, either offered by the defendant or presented as part of the state's case, that shows a justification for the defendant's initial departure from custody and an effort to surrender or return when the alleged coercive force ceased to exist.

1775 ESCAPE FROM CUSTODY: CHAPTER 980 CUSTODY ORDER — § 946.42(3m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Escape from custody, as defined in § 946.42(3m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally escapes from custody while subject to a [detention order under § 980.04(1)] [custody order under § 980.04(3)] [a commitment order under § 980.06].[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was in custody.

   "Custody" means the physical control of a person by (an institution) (a peace officer) (an institution guard).[2] (A person is also in custody when temporarily outside an institution for the purpose of working or receiving medical care or other authorized purpose.)[3] (A person is also in custody when on supervised release under Chapter 980.)[4]

2. The custody was the result of a [detention order under § 980.04(1)] [custody order under § 980.04(3)] [commitment order under § 980.06].

AT THE REQUEST OF THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:

[While evidence that the defendant was in custody as the result of a (detention order) (custody order) (commitment order) is an essential element of this offense, it must not be used for any other purpose. Particularly, you should bear in mind that evidence of conviction of the defendant of a crime at some previous time is not proof that the defendant is guilty of the offense which is now charged.][5]

3. The defendant escaped from custody.

   Escape means to leave in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[6]

4. The escape from custody was intentional.

   This requires that the defendant intentionally escaped from custody, that is, that the defendant had the mental purpose to escape.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1775 was approved by the Committee in October 2007.

This instruction is drafted for violations of subsection (3m) of § 946.42, which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 – effective date: August 1, 2006. It reads as follows:

(3m) A person who intentionally escapes from custody under any of the following circumstances is guilty of a Class F felony:

(a) While subject to a detention order under s. 980.04(1) or a custody order under s. 980.04(3).
(b) While subject to an order issued under s. 980.06 committing the person to custody of the department of health and family services, regardless of whether the person is placed in institutional care or on supervised release.

1. Subsection (3m) of § 946.42 was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434. The text of the statute is provided in the Comment preceding this footnote. It applies to escape from custody imposed as a result of any of three orders issued under Chapter 980: a detention order issued after the petition is filed under § 980.04(1); a detention order issued after a finding of probable cause under § 980.04(1); and, a commitment order issued after a finding that the person is a sexually violent person under § 980.06.

2. The definition of "custody" is based on the one provided in § 946.42(1)(a).

"Custody" was discussed at length in State v. Schaller, 70 Wis.2d 107, 233 N.W.2d 416 (1974), where it was held that it was not escape when a person committed to the county jail during nonworking hours as a condition of probation failed to return at the close of the working day. The court discussed "actual" and "constructive" custody and determined that a probationer was not in the constructive custody of the sheriff during the periods of release and therefore his elopement did not constitute escape under § 946.42.

In State v. Rosenberg, 208 Wis.2d 191, 560 N.W.2d 266 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the holding in Schaller, at least as it applied to offenses charged under the 1994 version of § 946.42. The statute was again amended in 1996; the court "decline[d] to rule on the impact the 1996 amendments have on Schaller." Wis.2d 191, 193n.1. The Committee concluded that the plain language of the statute after the 1996 amendments covers a probationer who does not return to jail as required. The relevant portion is the last sentence of § 946.42(1)(a) which provides that custody does not include a probationer "unless the person is in actual custody or is subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4)." The underlined portion was added by 1995 Wisconsin Act 154. Rosenberg noted that the Legislative Reference Bureau analysis of the bill that was enacted as 1995 Wisconsin Act 154 stated: "This bill makes a probationer subject to the escape law at all times when he or she is subject to an order of confinement as a condition of probation."

In State v. Sugden, 143 Wis.2d 728, 422 N.W.2d 624 (1988), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "custody" refers to secure custodial facilities within the general geographical boundary of a particular penal institution. Thus, Sugden's conviction for escape was affirmed where he left the locked cottage in which he was confined but was apprehended before he progressed beyond the outer fence defining the outer boundaries of the institution.

3. The sentence in parentheses should be read to the jury only when the accused was lawfully outside the institution when the alleged escape took place. Prisoners may be taken from jails or other institutions for "rehabilitative and educational activities. . . . While away from the institution grounds, an inmate is deemed to be under the care and control of the institution in which he is an inmate and subject to its rules and discipline." Wis. Stat. § 302.15.

4. This statement is part of the definition of "custody" in sec. 946.42.

5. This cautionary instruction is suggested to deal with the fact that evidence of the Chapter 980 order, which is based on a prior conviction, will be before the jury in most cases. It is intended to advise the jury that the existence of the order is a necessary element of the escape offense but must not be used to find that the defendant is probably guilty of the escape charge simply because he has been convicted before. It should be given only at the request of the defendant, since it may serve to highlight the prior conviction.

6. This is the definition of "escape" found in § 946.42(1)(b).

7. The crime of escape is considered to be a continuing offense. Thus, a person who claims he was unable to form the intent to escape because of drunkenness or epileptic seizure may still be convicted since the person could have formed the required intent when he sobered up or when the disability ceased. See Parent v. State, 31 Wis.2d 106, 141 N.W.2d 878 (1966) (drunkenness), and Ray v. State, 33 Wis.2d 685, 148 N.W.2d 31 (1967) (psychomotor or epileptic seizure).

See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B regarding instructing the jury on "intentionally."

1775A ESCAPE: INDIVIDUAL WITH CUSTODY INJURED — § 946.42(4)

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE ESCAPE OFFENSE CHARGED.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Was an individual who had custody of the defendant injured during the course of the escape?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1775A was approved by the Committee in July 2008.

This instruction provides a special question to be added to instructions for escape offenses where a violation of subsection (4) of § 946.42 is alleged. This subsection was created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: May 31, 2008] and reads as follows:

> (4) If a person is convicted of an escape under this section, the maximum term of imprisonment for the escape may be increased by not more than 5 years if an individual who had custody of the person who escaped is injured during the course of the escape.

Because the facts identified in this subsection increase the maximum penalty for the crime, they must be submitted to the jury. Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000).

The Committee recommends that this penalty-enhancing fact be submitted to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of escape, under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the (information) (complaint).
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Was an individual who had custody of the defendant injured during the course of the escape?"

1776 FAILURE TO REPORT TO JAIL: PERIODS OF IMPRISONMENT — § 946.425(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.425 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who is subject to a series of periods of imprisonment and who intentionally fails to report to the county jail as required under the sentence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was subject to a series of periods of imprisonment[1] which required that the defendant report to the county jail on (specify date).

2. The defendant intentionally failed to report as required.

   "Intentionally," as used here, means that the defendant knew (he) (she) had to report to jail on (specify date), had the ability to report as required, and purposely failed to do so.[2]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1776 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1994 and 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2022; its added to the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.425(1), created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 85 (effective date: December 19, 1989). Subsection (1) applies only to persons sentenced to a series of periods of imprisonment under § 973.03(5)(b), see note 1, below. Persons who fail to report after receiving a stay of execution of sentence are covered by sub. (1m); see Wis JI-Criminal 1777A. Persons who fail to report who are subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4) as a result of a conviction for a misdemeanor or felony are covered by sub. (1r); see Wis JI-Criminal 1777B.

Subsection (2) of § 946.425 formerly provided that a court "shall impose a sentence under this section consecutive to any sentence previously imposed or that may be imposed for any crime or offense for which the person was sentenced under § 973.03(5)(b) (or 973.15(8)(a))." This provision was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

1. Subsection (1) of 946.425 applies only to periods of imprisonment "under s. 973.03(5)(b)." That sentencing alternative was created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 85 and provides as follows:

> In lieu of a continuous sentence, a court may sentence a person to serve a series of periods, not less than 48 hours nor more than 3 days for each period, of imprisonment in a county jail. The person is not subject to confinement between periods of imprisonment.

Subsection (5)(c) of § 973.03 provides this sentencing option does not apply to violations of Chapter 161 (where offenses involving controlled substances are defined) or to a "serious crime." "Serious crime" has the meaning given in § 969.08(10)(b).

Because § 946.425 is limited to persons sentenced under § 973.03(5)(b), it does not apply, for example, to persons who fail to report on time to begin serving a stayed sentence or prisoners who fail to report back to jail after being released for work or school. Persons who fail to report after receiving a stay of execution of sentence are covered by sub. (1m); see Wis JI-Criminal 1777.

2. The word "intentionally" is defined to include two aspects: knowledge and purpose. The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3) which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The purpose requirement is based on one of the two definitions of intent provided in § 939.23(3). The other, being aware that one's conduct is practically certain to cause the result, is not likely to apply to this offense. For a discussion of that alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

The second element also provides that the defendant must have the ability to report to jail as required. This is based on the general principles for criminal omissions, which include the ability to do the act that is required. See State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986).

1777A FAILURE TO REPORT TO JAIL: AFTER STAY OF SENTENCE — § 946.425(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.425 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who receives a stay of execution of a sentence of imprisonment [of 10 days or more][1] and who intentionally fails to report to the county jail as required under the sentence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was sentenced to imprisonment [of 10 days or more][2] and received a stay of execution which required that the defendant report to the county jail on (specify date).
2. The defendant intentionally failed to report as required.

   "Intentionally," as used here, means that the defendant knew (he) (she) had to report to jail on (specify date), had the ability to report as required, and purposely failed to do so.[3]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1777 in 1994 and revised in 2008. It was revised as Wis JI-Criminal 1777A in 2022. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2022; it added to the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.425(1m), created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 273 (effective date: April 27, 1994). Subsection (1) of § 946.425 applies to a person sentenced to a series of periods of imprisonment under § 973.03(5)(b) and who fails to report to jail as required. See Wis JI-Criminal 1776. Persons who fail to report who are subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4) as a result of a conviction for a misdemeanor or felony are covered by sub. (1r); see Wis JI-Criminal 1777B.

Subsection (2) of § 946.425 formerly provided that a court "shall impose a sentence under this section consecutive to any sentence previously imposed or that may be imposed for any crime or offense for which the person was sentenced under § 973.03(5)(b) (or 973.15(8)(a))." This provision was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

The offense is a Class A misdemeanor, unless the stayed sentence is of 10 days or more, which increases the penalty to a Class H felony.

1. The offense is a Class H felony if the stayed sentence was for "10 or more days." If the felony is charged, the bracketed material should be included.

2. See note 1, supra.

3. The word "intentionally" is defined to include two aspects: knowledge and purpose. The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3) which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The purpose requirement is based on one of the two definitions of intent provided in § 939.23(3). The other, being aware that one's conduct is practically certain to cause the result, is not likely to apply to this offense. For a discussion of that alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A

The second element also provides that the defendant must have the ability to report to jail as required. This is based on the general principles for criminal omissions, which include the ability to do the act that is required. See State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986).

1777B FAILURE TO REPORT TO JAIL: CONFINEMENT ORDER — § 946.425(1r)(a) and (b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.425(1r) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who, as a condition of probation, is subject to a confinement order as the result of a conviction for a (misdemeanor) (felony) and who intentionally fails to report to the (county jail) (house of correction) as required under the order.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4) as a result of a conviction for a (misdemeanor) (felony).[1]
2. The confinement order required that the defendant report to the (county jail) (house of corrections[2]) as a condition of probation on (specify date).
3. The defendant intentionally failed to report as required.

   "Intentionally," as used here, means that the defendant knew (he) (she) had to report to the (county jail) (house of corrections) on (specify date), had the ability to report as required, and purposely failed to do so.[3]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1777B was approved by the Committee in August 2022.

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.425(1r)(a) and (b), created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 154 [effective date: April 4, 1996]. Subsection (1r)(a) applies to persons subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4) as a result of a conviction for a misdemeanor. Subsection (1r)(b) applies to persons subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4) as a result of a conviction for a felony. For person sentenced to a series of periods of imprisonment under § 973.03(5)(b) and who fails to report to jail as required; see Wis JI-Criminal 1776. For persons who fail to report after receiving a stay of execution of sentence are covered by sub. (1m); see Wis JI-Criminal 1777A.

The offense is a Class A misdemeanor if the confinement order is the result of a conviction for a misdemeanor. If the confinement order is the result of a conviction for a felony, the offense is a Class H felony.

1. § 973.09(4)(a) – provides:

> The court may also require as a condition of probation that the probationer be confined during such period of the term of probation as the court prescribes, but not to exceed one year. The court may grant the privilege of leaving the county jail, Huber facility, > work camp, or tribal jail during the hours or periods of employment or other activity under s. 303.08 (1) while confined under this subsection. The court may specify the necessary and reasonable hours or periods during which the probationer may leave the jail, Huber facility, work camp, or tribal jail or the court may delegate that authority to the sheriff. In those counties without a Huber facility under s. 303.09, a work camp under s. 303.10, or an agreement under s. 302.445, the probationer shall be confined in the county jail. In those counties with a Huber facility under s. 303.09, the sheriff shall determine whether confinement under this subsection is to be in that facility or in the county jail. In those counties with a work camp under s. 303.10, the sheriff shall determine whether confinement is to be in the work camp or the county jail. The sheriff may transfer persons confined under this subsection between a Huber facility or a work camp and the county jail. In those counties with an agreement under s. 302.445, the sheriff shall determine whether a person who is confined under this subsection but who is not subject to an order under par. (b) is to be confined in the tribal jail or the county jail, unless otherwise provided under the agreement. In those counties, the sheriff may transfer persons confined under this subsection between a tribal jail and a county jail, unless otherwise provided under the agreement.

2. § 973.09 (4)(b) provides:

> With the consent of the department and when recommended in the presentence investigation, the court may order that a felony offender subject to this subsection be confined in a facility located in the city of Milwaukee under s. 301.13 or 301.16 (1q), for the purpose of allowing the offender to complete an alcohol and other drug abuse treatment program.

3. The word "intentionally" is defined to include two aspects: knowledge and purpose. The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3) which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The purpose requirement is based on one of the two definitions of intent provided in § 939.23(3). The other, being aware that one's conduct is practically certain to cause the result, is not likely to apply to this offense. For a discussion of that alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1778 ASSAULT BY A PRISONER: PLACING AN OFFICER, EMPLOYEE, VISITOR, OR INMATE IN APPREHENSION OF AN IMMEDIATE BATTERY LIKELY TO CAUSE DEATH OR GREAT BODILY HARM — § 946.43(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assault by a prisoner, as defined in § 946.43(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility] who intentionally places (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (an inmate) of the institution in apprehension of an immediate battery likely to cause death or great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].

   This requires that the defendant was confined in a (prison) (detention facility) as a result of a violation of law.[1]

   (Name of institution) is a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].[2]

2. (Name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (an inmate) of (name of institution) .

3. The defendant placed (name of victim) in apprehension of an immediate battery likely to cause death or great bodily harm.[3]

"Apprehension" refers to being fearful of what is about to occur.

"Immediate," as used here, means near at hand, on the point of happening and capable of happening right away.

"Battery" means intentionally causing injury to another without consent.[4]

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[5] [Injury which creates a serious risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury, is great bodily harm.]

4. The defendant intended to place (name of victim) in apprehension of an immediate battery likely to cause death or great bodily harm.

This requires that the defendant had the purpose to place (name of victim) in apprehension of an immediate battery likely to cause death or great bodily harm.[6]

5. The defendant knew (name of victim) was (an employee) (an officer) (a visitor) (an inmate) of (name prison or institution) .[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1778 was originally published in 1979 and revised in 1982, 1984, and 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2000 and involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the comment.

1. The defendant's status as a "prisoner" should rarely be in question, but the Committee concluded there should be some definition of the term in the instruction. The definition in the instruction was adapted from that found in Wis. Stat. § 46.011 and from the decision in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957), where the court made the following observations:

> So far as we know, the word "prisoner" has not been defined by this court. Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed.), p. 1358, defines the word as follows:
> "One who is deprived of his liberty; one who is against his will kept in confinement or custody."
> Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed.) gives the following definition:
> "A person under arrest, in custody or in prison; one involuntarily restrained; a captive; as a prisoner of justice, or war or at the bar; to take one prisoner."

State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 291.

The Brill definition has been cited with approval in several cases involving § 940.20(1), Battery by prisoner. Because that statute and § 946.43 are worded similarly, the Committee concluded that "prisoner" should have the same definition under each statute. In C.D.M. v. State, 125 Wis.2d 170, 370 N.W.2d 287 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that a juvenile confined as a delinquent at the Lincoln Hills School was a "prisoner" under § 940.20(1) because he had violated a criminal law and was confined for a correctional objective. 125 Wis.2d 170, 173.

The Committee concluded that "prisoner" includes all persons who are confined to one of the identified institutions as a result of a violation of the law. "Prisoner" is also defined in § 46.011(2) (for purposes of Chapter 46 to 51, 55, and 58) and in § 301.01(2) (for purposes of chapters 301 to 304). But the Committee concluded that these definitions are not directly applicable here because they are concerned primarily with defining the authority of state agencies.

A person committed to a state mental health facility (in this case, the Mendota Mental Health Institute) after being found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect is a "prisoner" for purposes of § 940.20(1), Battery by prisoner. State v. Skampfer, 176 Wis.2d 304, 500 N.W.2d 369 (Ct. App. 1993). The important fact is that the person's liberty was restrained premised on a finding that the person had violated the criminal law.

A probationer who violates a condition of probation and as a result is taken into custody is a prisoner "confined as a result of a violation of the law" as provided in C.D.M., supra, and this instruction. State v. Fitzgerald, 2000 WI App 55, ¶12, 233 Wis.2d 584, 608 N.W.2d 391 [also involving a charge under § 940.20(1).]

2. The institution's status as one of the designated facilities should not be a contested issue in most cases, and the Committee concluded that it is appropriate for the trial court to so instruct the jury.

Before being amended by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, § 946.43 applied to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or to any other institution by virtue of a transfer from a state prison. . . ." (Wis. Stat. § 946.43 (1975).) As amended, the statute applies to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or other state, county or municipal detention facility. . . ." The Wisconsin Legislative Council staff note to 1977 Senate Bill 14, which was enacted as Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, stated: "This bill expands the application of § 946.43 to cover assaults by prisoners in all detention facilities in the state."

The question of what institutions are covered by the statute is arguably difficult only with regard to "state detention facilities." "County detention facility" most likely refers to a county jail (and possibly to the House of Correction in Milwaukee County); "municipal detention facility" most likely refers to city jails. But it is not clear what institutions are included in the term "state detention facility." The term "state prison" in the former statute included all correctional institutions (§ 53.01), so it could be argued that the revision was intended to include state mental health institutes. The Committee concluded that the statute may be applied to persons confined in mental health institutes provided their confinement is a result of criminal charges. This interpretation would include those committed for determination of competency to stand trial, those committed as not competent to stand trial, and those committed as not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. This conclusion is consistent with the decision in State v. Skampfer, see note 1, supra.

Section 302.01 identifies the institutions which are "state prisons." Also see § 302.02 which defines the "precincts" of the state prisons, that is, those locations that are considered part of the prisons for legal purposes. See note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1228.

3. For a case finding evidence to be sufficient on the "apprehension of an immediate battery" element, see State v. Block, 222 Wis.2d 586, 587 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1998), also holding that "the onset of apprehension of a battery may occur while the battery is in progress." 222 Wis.2d 586, 589.

4. The Committee concluded that "battery" in the context of this offense refers to the general meaning of the term as reflected in the definition used in the instruction, not to any of the many, specifically-defined, types of battery currently included in the Wisconsin Statutes.

5. The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 914 for further discussion of "great bodily harm."

6. Under § 939.23(3), "intentionally" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." The Committee concluded that the "purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to the typical offense under § 946.43. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

7. The question of the defendant's knowledge of the victim's status is usually not contested, but because of the way the statute is drafted, knowledge is an element of the offense. See § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'"

The alternative types of victims have been placed in parentheses so that in the usual case, where the victim's status and the defendant's knowledge are not disputed, the applicable type of victim may be selected to simplify the instruction for the jury. However, the Committee concluded that it should not be an obstacle to conviction if, for example, some jurors are convinced that the defendant thought the victim was an officer while other jurors are convinced that the defendant thought the victim was a visitor. In other words, it would be permissible to instruct the jury that the defendant must have known the victim was "an officer, or an employee, or a visitor, or another inmate."

1779 ASSAULT BY A PRISONER: RESTRAINING OR CONFINING AN OFFICER, EMPLOYEE, VISITOR, OR INMATE — § 946.43(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assault by a prisoner, as defined in § 946.43(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility] who intentionally confines or restrains (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (an inmate) of the institution without the consent of that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].

   This requires that the defendant was confined in a (prison) (detention facility) as a result of a violation of law.[1]

   (Name of institution) is a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].[2]

2. (Name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (an inmate) of (name of institution).

3. The defendant intentionally confined or restrained (name of victim).

If the defendant deprived (name of victim) of freedom of movement or compelled (him) (her) to remain where (he) (she) did not wish to remain, then (name of victim) was confined or restrained. The use of physical force is not required. One may be confined or restrained by acts or words or both.[3]

"Intentionally confined or restrained" means that the defendant had the purpose to confine or restrain (name of victim).[4]

4. The defendant confined or restrained (name of victim) without consent.[5]

5. The defendant knew (name of victim) was (an employee) (an officer) (a visitor) (an inmate) of (name prison or institution) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the confining or restraining.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

2. The institution's status as one of the designated facilities should not be a contested issue in most cases, and the Committee concluded that it is appropriate for the trial court to so instruct the jury.

Before being amended by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, § 946.43 applied to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or to any other institution by virtue of a transfer from a state prison. . . ." (Wis. Stat. § 946.43 (1975).) As amended, the statute applies to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or other state, county or municipal detention facility. . . ." The Wisconsin Legislative Council staff note to 1977 Senate Bill 14, which was enacted as Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, stated: "This bill expands the application of § 946.43 to cover assaults by prisoners in all detention facilities in the state."

3. For further instruction on this element, see Wis JI-Criminal 1275, False Imprisonment, especially at notes 1-3.

4. Under § 939.23(3), "intentionally" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." The Committee concluded that the "purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to the typical offense under § 946.43. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. The question of the defendant's knowledge of the victim's status is usually not contested, but because of the way the statute is drafted, knowledge is an element of the offense. See § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'"

1779A ASSAULT BY A PRISONER: THROWING OR EXPELLING A BODILY SUBSTANCE AT AN OFFICER, EMPLOYEE, VISITOR, OR INMATE — § 946.43(2m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assault by a prisoner, as defined in § 946.43(2m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility] and who throws or expels a bodily substance[1] at or toward [(an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (another prisoner) of the prison or facility] under the following circumstances: the prisoner intends that the bodily substance come into contact with the other person; the prisoner intends to cause bodily harm to or to abuse, harass, offend, intimidate, or frighten the other person; and the other person does not consent to the substance being thrown or expelled.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].

   This requires that the defendant was confined in a (prison) (detention facility) as a result of a violation of law.[2]

(Name of institution) is a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].[3]

2. (Name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (another prisoner) of (name of institution).

3. The defendant threw or expelled a bodily substance at or toward (name of victim) with intent that the bodily substance come into contact with (name of victim).[4]

(Identify substance) is a bodily substance.[5]

4. The defendant intended [to cause bodily harm to] [to abuse, harass, offend, intimidate or frighten][6] (name of victim).

5. (Name of victim) did not consent to the substance being thrown or expelled at or toward (him) (her).[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1779A was approved by the Committee in August 2000.

Subsection (2m) of § 946.43 was created by 1999 Wisconsin Act 188 [effective date: June 2, 2000]. The penalty is expressed as follows: ". . . may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 2 years or both." Note that the penalty is not designated as one of the standard penalty classes for felony offenses. Section 973.01(2)(b) defines the imprisonment portion of bifurcated sentences under "Truth In Sentencing" for Class B, BC, C, D, and E felonies. § 973.01(2)(b)1.-5. That section also provides that "[f]or any felony other than a felony specified in subds. 1. to 5., the term of confinement in prison may not exceed 75% of the total length of the bifurcated sentence." Thus, the maximum term of confinement for a violation of § 946.43(2m) appears to be 18 months – 75% of the two year maximum. The sentence must be imposed "consecutive to any sentence previously imposed or which may be imposed for any crime or offense for which the person was in custody when he or she committed the violation of par. (a)." § 946.43(2m)(b).

1. "Bodily substance" is used in place of the following phrase in the statute: ". . . blood, semen, vomit, saliva, urine, feces or other bodily substance . . ."

2. The defendant's status as a "prisoner" should rarely be in question, but the Committee concluded there should be some definition of the term in the instruction. The definition in the instruction was adapted from that found in Wis. Stat. § 46.011 and from the decision in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957), where the court made the following observations:

> So far as we know, the word "prisoner" has not been defined by this court. Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed.), p. 1358, defines the word as follows:
> "One who is deprived of his liberty; one who is against his will kept in confinement or custody."
> Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed.) gives the following definition:
> "A person under arrest, in custody or in prison; one involuntarily restrained; a captive; as a prisoner of justice, or war or at the bar; to take one prisoner."

State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 291.

The Brill definition has been cited with approval in several cases involving § 940.20(1), Battery by prisoner. Because that statute and § 946.43 are worded similarly, the Committee concluded that "prisoner" should have the same definition under each statute. In C.D.M. v. State, 125 Wis.2d 170, 370 N.W.2d 287 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that a juvenile confined as a delinquent at the Lincoln Hills School was a "prisoner" under § 940.20(1) because he had violated a criminal law and was confined for a correctional objective. 125 Wis.2d 170, 173.

The Committee concluded that "prisoner" includes all persons who are confined to one of the identified institutions as a result of a violation of the law. "Prisoner" is also defined in § 46.011(2) (for purposes of chapters 46 to 51, 55, and 58) and in § 301.01(2) (for purposes of chapters 301 to 304). But the Committee concluded that these definitions are not directly applicable here because they are concerned primarily with defining the authority of state agencies.

A person committed to a state mental health facility (in this case, the Mendota Mental Health Institute) after being found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect is a "prisoner" for purposes of § 940.20(1), Battery by prisoner. State v. Skampfer, 176 Wis.2d 304, 500 N.W.2d 369 (Ct. App. 1993). The important fact is that the person's liberty was restrained premised on a finding that the person had violated the criminal law.

A probationer who violates a condition of probation and as a result is taken into custody is a prisoner "confined as a result of a violation of the law" as provided in C.D.M., supra, and this instruction. State v. Fitzgerald, 2000 WI App 55, 12, 233 Wis.2d 584, 608 N.W.2d 391 [also involving a charge under § 940.20(1)].

3. The institution's status as one of the designated facilities should not be a contested issue in most cases, and the Committee concluded that it is appropriate for the trial court to so instruct the jury.

Before being amended by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, § 946.43 applied to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or to any other institution by virtue of a transfer from a state prison. . . ." (Wis. Stat. § 946.43 (1975).) As amended, the statute applies to "any prisoner confined to a state prison or other state, county or municipal detention facility. . . ." The Wisconsin Legislative Council staff note to 1977 Senate Bill 14, which was enacted as Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, stated: "This bill expands the application of § 946.43 to cover assaults by prisoners in all detention facilities in the state."

The question of what institutions are covered by the statute is arguably difficult only with regard to "state detention facilities." "County detention facility" most likely refers to a county jail (and possibly to the House of Correction in Milwaukee County); "municipal detention facility" most likely refers to city jails. But it is not clear what institutions are included in the term "state detention facility." The term "state prison" in the former statute included all correctional institutions (§ 53.01), so it could be argued that the revision was intended to include state mental health institutes. The Committee concluded that the statute may be applied to persons confined in mental health institutes provided their confinement is a result of criminal charges. This interpretation would include those committed for determination of competency to stand trial, those committed as not competent to stand trial, and those committed as not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. This conclusion is consistent with the decision in State v. Skampfer, see note 2, supra.

Section 302.01 identifies the institutions which are "state prisons." Also see § 302.02 which defines the "precincts" of the state prisons, that is, those locations that are considered part of the prisons for legal purposes. See note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1228.

4. The statute requires two intents. The instruction places the first one in this element and treats the second one as a separate element 5.

5. Subsection 946.43(2m) applies to the following: "blood, semen, vomit, saliva, urine, feces or other bodily substance." Because the statute specifies certain substances as "bodily substances," the Committee concluded that the jury may be told, for example, that "blood is a bodily substance."

6. The offense is defined as engaging in one of the prohibited acts "with the intent either to cause bodily harm . . . or to abuse, harass, offend, intimidate or frighten . . ." The instruction puts the alternative intents in parentheses on the assumption that one or the other is likely to apply. However, the Committee concluded that it would be permissible to instruct on more than one type of intent and that jury agreement on the intent involved would not be required. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has reached that conclusion with offenses under § 948.07, Child enticement. State v. Derango, 2000 WI 89, 236 Wis.2d 721, 613 N.W.2d 833.

7. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

1780 PERMITTING ESCAPE — § 946.44(1)(a) and (1g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Permitting escape, as defined in § 946.44(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by an officer or an employee of an institution where prisoners are detained who intentionally permits a prisoner in his custody to escape.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (three) (four)[1] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was an (officer) (employee) of an institution where prisoners[2] are detained.

   (Name of institution) is an institution where prisoners are detained.[3]

2. The defendant permitted a prisoner[4] in his custody to escape.

   "Escape" means to leave custody in any manner without lawful permission or authority.[5]

3. The defendant intentionally permitted a prisoner in his custody[6] to escape.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose of permitting a prisoner to escape.[7] It also requires that the defendant knew that

(name of prisoner) was a prisoner and knew that (name of prisoner) was leaving custody without lawful permission or authority.[8]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CLASS F FELONY UNDER SUBSEC. (1g) IS CHARGED:

[4. The defendant is a public (officer) (employee).[9]]

[A "public officer" is any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.]

[A "public employee" is any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all (three) (four) elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1780 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

The basic offense is defined by § 946.44(1)(a) and is punished as a Class H felony. The penalty is increased to a Class F felony if "any public officer or public employee" violates the statute – see § 946.44(1g). It appears that any "officer or employee of an institution where prisoners are detained" under subsec. (1)(a) would also be a "public officer or employee" under subsec. (1g) (but see note 9, below). But since the statutes call for the different penalties, the instruction is drafted with an optional fourth element, for use when the Class F felony is charged.

1. Use four elements if the Class F felony offense is charged. See Comment.

2. "Prisoner" is defined in Wis JI-Criminal 1778 as "one who is confined in a prison or detention facility as a result of a violation of law." It was adapted from the definition in § 46.011 and from the discussion in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957).

3. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be told that, for example, "The _____ county jail is an institution where prisoners are detained." The jury must be satisfied that the defendant was an officer or employee of that type of institution.

4. See note 2, supra.

5. This is the definition of "escape" provided in § 946.42(1)(b), which applies to violations of § 946.44. See § 946.44(2)(b).

6. "Custody" is defined in § 946.42(1)(a) and that definition applies to § 946.44. See § 946.44(2)(a).

7. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. "Intentionally," as defined in § 939.23(3), also requires knowledge of those facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

9. See Comment preceding note 1. The definitions of "public officer" and "public employee" are those provided in § 939.22(30).

1781 ASSISTING ESCAPE — § 946.44(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assisting escape, as defined in § 946.44(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to aid any prisoner to escape from custody, introduces into the institution[1] where the prisoner is detained anything adapted for or useful in making an escape.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant introduced into the institution, where (name of prisoner) was detained, something adapted for or useful in making an escape.
2. The defendant acted with the intent to aid a prisoner[2] to escape from custody.

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to help (name of prisoner) escape from custody.[3] "Escape" means to leave custody without lawful permission or authority.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1781 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 946.44(1)(b). For violations of § 946.44(1)(a), see Wis JI Criminal 1780.

The offense defined in § 946.44(1)(b) is punished as a Class H felony. The penalty increases to that of a Class F felony if the defendant is a public officer or employee. See Wis JI Criminal 1782 for an instruction for the Class F felony.

1. This instruction does not address the other type of conduct prohibited by § 946.44(1)(b): "transfer to the prisoner" anything adapted or useful in making an escape. In a case involving a "transfer to a prisoner," those words must be substituted for "introduce into the institution where the person is detained" throughout the instruction.

2. "Prisoner" is defined in Wis JI-Criminal 1778 as "one who is confined in a prison or detention facility as a result of a violation of law." It was adapted from the definition in § 46.011 and from the discussion in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957).

3. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. This is the definition of "escape" provided in § 946.42(1)(b), which applies to violations of § 946.44. See § 946.44(2)(b).

1782 ASSISTING ESCAPE: PUBLIC OFFICER OR EMPLOYEE — § 946.44(1)(b) and (1g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assisting escape, as defined in § 946.44(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a public (officer) (employee) who, with intent to aid any prisoner to escape from custody, introduces into the institution[1] where the prisoner is detained anything adapted for or useful in making an escape.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a public (officer) (employee).[2]

   [A "public officer" is any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.]

   [A "public employee" is any person, not an officer, who performs any official function on behalf of the state or one of its subordinate governmental units and who is paid from the public treasury of the state or subordinate governmental unit.]

2. The defendant introduced into the institution, where (name of prisoner) was detained, something adapted for or useful in making an escape.

3. The defendant acted with the intent to aid a prisoner[3] to escape from custody.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to help (name of prisoner) escape from custody.[4] "Escape" means to leave custody without lawful permission or authority.[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1783 INTRODUCING A FIREARM INTO AN INSTITUTION — § 946.44(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Assisting escape, as defined in § 946.44(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally introduces a firearm,[1] loaded or unloaded, into an institution where prisoners are detained.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant introduced a firearm into an institution where prisoners[2] are detained. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[3]
2. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant knew the item was a firearm.[4]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction is for a violation of § 946.44(1m). For violations of § 946.44(1)(a) and (b), see Wis JI Criminal 1780 1782.

1. The statute applies not only to firearms but also to "any article used or fashioned in a manner to lead another person to believe it is a firearm." The instruction refers to "firearm" throughout and would have to be changed if the "any article" alternative is used. Similar language is used in § 940.225(1)(b), see Wis JI-Criminal 1202, and § 943.32(2), see Wis JI-Criminal 1480A. (Note that both those statutes refer to leading a person "reasonably to believe"; "reasonably" is missing from § 946.44(1m).)

2. "Prisoner" is defined in Wis JI-Criminal 1778 as "one who is confined in a prison or detention facility as a result of a violation of law." It was adapted from the definition in § 46.011 and from the discussion in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957).

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns. The statute applies to "any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded." Sec. 946.44(1m). Also see note 1, supra.

4. "Intentionally," as defined in § 939.23(3), requires knowledge of those facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B regarding definition of the word "intentionally." In the context of this offense, the essence of the intent element appeared to the Committee to be knowledge that the item introduced was a firearm.

1784 INMATE POSSESSING AN ARTICLE WITH INTENT TO RETAIN—§ 302.095(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 302.095(2)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who has in (his) (her) possession any (article) (thing whatever) with intent to retain for (himself) (herself), contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or other keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an article.
2. The defendant intended to retain the article for (himself) (herself).
3. The possession of the article was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or other keeper of the jail[1]) (warden or superintendent of the prison).

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1784 was approved by the Committee in October, 2020.

Section 302.095(2)(b) was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 111 [effective date: March 1, 2019] for violations concerning an inmate possessing an article with intent to retain. The offense is a Class I felony. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning delivery of an article to an inmate, see Wis JI-Criminal 1785. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning possession of an article with intent to deliver it to an inmate, see Wis JI-Criminal 1786. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)3 concerning receiving an article from an inmate to convey out of jail or prison, see Wis JI-Criminal 1787.

§ 302.095(2)(a)2 prohibits depositing or concealing an article in or about a jail or prison or in a vehicle going into jail or prison premises. There is not a uniform instruction for violation of sub (2)(a)2.

1. Section 302.095(1) provides that "'jail' means any of the following:

   (a) A jail, as defined in s. 302.30.
   (b) A house of correction.
   (c) A Huber facility under s. 303.09.
   (d) A lockup facility, as defined in s. 302.30."

1785 DELIVERING AN ARTICLE TO AN INMATE — § 302.095(2)(a)1

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 302.095(2)(a)1 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who (delivers) (procures to be delivered) any article to an inmate confined in a (jail) (prison) with intent that any inmate confined in the jail or prison shall obtain or receive the same, contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (delivered) (procured to be delivered) an article to an inmate confined in a (jail)[1] (prison).
2. The defendant intended that an inmate receive or obtain the article.
3. The (delivery) (procuring to be delivered) of the article was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or other keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).[2]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1785 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2007. This revision was approved by the committee in October 2020; it reflects changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 111[effective date: March 1, 2020].

This instruction is for the type of violation of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning delivery of an article to an inmate. The offense is a Class I felony. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning possession of an article with intent to deliver it to an inmate, see Wis JI Criminal 1786. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)3 concerning the receipt of an article from an inmate for conveyance out of the jail, see Wis JI-Criminal 1787. For violations concerning an inmate possessing an article with intent to retain, see Wis JI-Criminal 1784. The statute was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 437 to apply to jails as well as to prisons.

§ 302.095(2)(a)2 prohibits depositing or concealing an article in or about a jail or prison or in a vehicle going into jail or prison premises. There is not a uniform instruction for violation of sub (2)(a)2.

1. Section 302.095(1) provides that "'jail'' means any of the following:

   (a) A jail, as defined in s. 302.30.
   (b) A house of correction.
   (c) A Huber facility under s. 303.09.
   (d) A lockup facility, as defined in s. 302.30."

2. Previous versions of this instruction required that the defendant have knowledge that the delivery of an article to an inmate was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the sheriff or other keeper of the jail. The Committee concluded 2019 Wisconsin Act 111 amended § 302.095(2)(a)(1) so that the statute no longer includes the knowledge requirement for this element.

1786 POSSESSING AN ARTICLE WITH INTENT TO DELIVER IT TO AN INMATE — § 302.095(2)(a)(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 302.095(2)(a)(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who possesses any article[1] with intent to deliver it to an inmate confined in a [jail] [prison] contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the [sheriff or keeper of the jail] [warden or superintendent of the prison].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an article.

   ["Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control of an article.][3]

2. The defendant intended to deliver the article to an inmate confined in a [jail][4] [prison].

3. The (delivery) of the article was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or other keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1786 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2007. This revision was approved by the committee in October 2021; it reflects changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 111 [effective date: March 1, 2020].

This instruction is for the type of violation of § 302.095(2) (a)(1) concerning possessing and article with intent to deliver to an inmate. The offense is a Class I felony. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)(1) concerning delivery of an article to an inmate, see Wis JI-Criminal 1785. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)(3) concerning the receipt of an article from an inmate for conveyance out of the jail, see Wis JI-Criminal 1787. For violations concerning an inmate possessing an article with intent to retain, see Wis JI-Criminal 1784. The statute was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 437 to apply to jails as well as to prisons.

§ 302.095(2)(a)2 prohibits depositing or concealing an article in or about a jail or prison or in a vehicle going into jail or prison premises. There is not a uniform instruction for violation of sub (2)(a)2.

1. The statement of the offense omits the following language from the statute: "with intent that any inmate confined in the jail or prison shall obtain or receive the same. . ." The Committee concluded that it is redundant to say "possess an article with intent to deliver it and with intent that an inmate receive it." The intent to deliver covers both concepts.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so called constructive possession.

4. Section 302.095(1) provides that "'jail' means any of the following:

(a) A jail, as defined in s. 302.30.
(b) A house of correction.
(c) A Huber facility under s. 303.09.
(d) A lockup facility, as defined in s. 302.30."

5. Previous versions of this instruction required that the defendant have knowledge that the delivery of an article to an inmate was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the sheriff or other keeper of the jail. The Committee concluded 2019 Wisconsin Act 111 amended § 302.095(2)(a)(1) so that the statute no longer includes the knowledge requirement for this element.

1787 RECEIVING AN ARTICLE FROM AN INMATE TO CONVEY OUT OF JAIL OR PRISON — § 302.095(2)(a)3

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 302.095(2)(a)3 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who receives from an inmate any article with intent to convey the same out of (jail) (prison), contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant received an article from an inmate.
2. The defendant intended to convey the article out of the (jail)[1] (prison).
3. The conveyance of the article out of the (jail) (prison) was contrary to the rules or regulations and without the knowledge or permission of the (sheriff or other keeper of the jail) (warden or superintendent of the prison).[2]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1787 was approved by the committee in October 2020.

This instruction is for violations of § 302.095(2)(a)3, as amended by 2019 Wisconsin Act 111 [effective date: March 1, 2020], concerning the receipt of an article from an inmate for conveyance out of the jail. The offense is a Class I felony. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning delivery of an article to an inmate, see Wis JI-Criminal 1785. For violations of § 302.095(2)(a)1 concerning possession of an article with intent to deliver it to an inmate, see Wis JI Criminal 1786. For violations of § 302.095(2)(b) concerning an inmate possessing an article with intent to retain, see Wis JI-Criminal 1784.

§ 302.095(2)(a)2 prohibits depositing or concealing an article in or about a jail or prison or in a vehicle going into jail or prison premises. There is not a uniform instruction for violation of sub (2)(a)2.

1. Section 302.095(1) provides that "'jail' means any of the following:

   (a) A jail, as defined in s. 302.30.
   (b) A house of correction.
   (c) A Huber facility under s. 303.09.
   (d) A lockup facility, as defined in s. 302.30."

1788 ENCOURAGING A VIOLATION OF PROBATION, EXTENDED SUPERVISION OR PAROLE — § 946.46

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Encouraging a violation of (probation) (extended supervision) (parole) as defined in Section 946.46 of the Wisconsin Statutes is committed by one who intentionally aids or encourages a person on (probation) (extended supervision) (parole)[1] to abscond or to violate a term or condition of (probation) (extended supervision) (parole).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of person) was on (probation supervision) (extended supervision) (parole supervision).
2. The defendant intentionally aided or encouraged (name of person) [to abscond.] [to violate a term or condition of supervision.]

   ["To abscond" means to fail to make oneself available as directed by the person supervising (name of person).][2]

   This element requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to aid or encourage the violation or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

3. The defendant knew[3] that (name of person) was on supervision and knew [that (name of person) was required to make (himself) (herself) available as directed] [that _____ was a condition of supervision].

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1788 was approved by the Committee in July 2010.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 946.46.

1. Section 946.46 also applies to aiding or encouraging "any person committed to the custody or supervision of the department of corrections or a county department under s. 46.215, 46.22 or 46.23 by reason of crime or delinquency." [Section 46.215 addresses the Milwaukee County social services department; § 46.22 addresses all other county departments; § 46.23 addresses county social services departments generally.] The phrase in quotes above apparently creates two additional options not addressed by the instruction: (1) a person committed to the custody or supervision of the department of corrections but not on probation, parole, or extended supervision; and, (2) a person committed to the custody or supervision of a county social services department.

2. The definition of "abscond" is based on the definition of "absconding" provided in DOC 328.03(1), Wisconsin Administrative Code: "Absconding means the failure of a client to make himself or herself available as directed by the agent."

3. Including the separate knowledge requirement is based on the conclusion that the use of "intentionally" in the statute requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3).

1790 AIDING A FELON — § 946.47(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Aiding a felon, as defined in § 946.47(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to prevent the apprehension of a felon, harbors or aids the felon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant aided (name of person aided).

   To aid means to help or assist.[1]

2. (Name of person aided) [was a felon] [had engaged in the prohibited felonious conduct of (name of crime)[2]].

   [A felon is a person who has committed a crime punishable by imprisonment in the Wisconsin state prisons.[3] (Name of crime) is such a crime,[4] and the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of person aided) committed that crime. (Name of crime) is committed by one who

NECESSARY.[5]]

[(Name of crime) is prohibited felonious conduct in Wisconsin,[6] and the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of person aided) engaged in this prohibited felonious conduct. (Name of crime) is committed by one who

3. The defendant knew that (name of person aided) had engaged in the conduct which constitutes (name of crime).[8]

4. The defendant aided (name of person aided) with the intent to prevent the apprehension of (name of person aided).[9]

This element requires that the defendant had the purpose of preventing (name of person aided) from being taken into custody by law enforcement officers or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[10]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1790 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1991, 2007, and 2009, and 2014. The 2014 revision added to the text at element 2 and revised the Comment and footnotes to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 254. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023. It modified element 2 by providing an option for individuals who have engaged in the prohibited felonious conduct.

This instruction is for an offense under § 946.47(1)(a). It covers conduct which at common law made the accused an "accessory after the fact." Conduct relating to the destruction of evidence is prohibited by § 946.47(1)(b). See Wis JI Criminal 1791.

Section 946.47(3) formerly provided an exclusion for persons related to the felon. That provision was repealed by 2013 Wisconsin Act 254 [effective date: April 10, 2014].

2013 Wisconsin Act 254 also changed the penalty structure for this offense. See subsection (2m) of § 946.47. It is a Class G felony if the defendant aided a felon who committed a Class A, B, C, or D felony; it is a Class I felony if the defendant aided a felon who committed a Class E, F, G, H, or I felony. Because the crime committed by the felon will be specified in the second element, there is no need for any additional fact-finding as to the classification of that crime.

Section 946.47 applies to aiding felons who committed a crime outside of Wisconsin that was a felony in that jurisdiction and would also be a felony if committed in Wisconsin. See § 946.47(2). The Committee concluded that the jury must find that the facts constituting the out-of-state crime occurred, but that it is for the judge to determine that those facts constituted a felony in the other state and would constitute a felony in Wisconsin.

In State v. Schmidt, 221 Wis.2d 189, 198, 585 N.W.2d 16 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 946.47 could be applied to a person who aided a convicted felon who was wanted for a parole violation:

. . . The plain language of § 946.67(1)(a) and (2)(a) suggests no distinction between a person who has already been convicted of a felony and is now wanted for a parole violation following that conviction, and a person who is now wanted for, but has not yet been convicted of, a felony. Each is a "felon" within the definition of § 946.47(2)(a) because each "commits an act . . . which constitutes a felony under the laws of this state."

Note that § 946.46 makes it a Class A misdemeanor to aid or encourage a person under supervision to abscond or violate a condition of supervision.

1. "'Harbor or aid' includes giving the person food, shelter, medical treatment or money or performing an operation to change his fingerprints or his appearance." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 195 (Wis. Legislative Council). (1953 Report.) "Harbor" means to give shelter or refuge to. Webster's Third International Dictionary.

2. "Felon," as used in § 946.47, refers to a person who has engaged in prohibited felonious conduct, whether convicted or not. State v. Jones, 98 Wis.2d 679, 681, 298 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1988).

3. Wis. Stat. § 939.60.

4. Here use the short title for the felony, for example: "Burglary is such a crime." The Committee concludes that the jury may be told that a certain crime constitutes a felony under the laws of Wisconsin. However, the jury must find that the person aided committed the crime. In the usual case, the person aided will have been convicted and proof will not be difficult.

In State v. Schmidt, 221 Wis.2d 189, 198, 585 N.W.2d 16 (Ct. App. 1980), the court held that § 946.47 could be applied to a person who aided a convicted felon who was wanted for a parole violation. See Comment preceding note 1.

5. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

6. Here use the short title for the felony, for example: "Burglary is such a crime." The Committee concludes that the jury may be told that a certain crime is prohibited felonious conduct in Wisconsin. However, the jury must find that the person aided engaged in this prohibited felonious conduct. It is not necessary that the person aided have been convicted of, or even charged with, the felony. State v. Jones, 98 Wis.2d 679, 298 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1980).

7. See footnote 5, supra.

8. In State v. Jones, 98 Wis.2d 679, 681, 298 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1988), the court held that a required element of this offense is that "the accused had actual knowledge" of the offense committed by the person aided.

The third element of the instruction does not require that the defendant know the precise name of the felony committed or know that the conduct engaged in by the person aided is a felony. It does require that the defendant know what conduct was engaged in by the person aided. That conduct must constitute a felony under the law of Wisconsin.

"This section requires that the actor (1) intend to prevent the apprehension of a person he knows has committed a crime which in fact constitutes a felony. . . ." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 195 (Wis. Legislative Council).

In a case where further definition of the defendant's knowledge is desired, and additional sentence connecting the knowledge requirement with the elements of the crime may be helpful. For example, where the felony is burglary: "This requires that the defendant knew that (name person aided) intentionally entered a building without the consent of the person in lawful possession and with intent to steal."

In State v. Schmidt, 221 Wis.2d 189, 198, 585 N.W.2d 16 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 946.47 could be applied to a person who aided a convicted felon who was wanted for a parole violation. See Comment preceding note 1. For a case like Schmidt, the elements of the crime need not be summarized, since it is likely the state will simply introduce documentary proof that the person had been convicted of a felony and was on parole on a sentence for the conviction.

9. "Whether the actor has an intent to prevent the apprehension of the felon is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. For example, a person who has committed a felony might go to the home of a friend who, having never been faced with such a situation before, might allow him to remain there for an hour or might give him food or medical treatment without having formed an intent to prevent his apprehension by the police." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 195 (Wis. Legislative Council).

1791 AIDING A FELON BY DESTROYING, ETC., PHYSICAL EVIDENCE — § 946.47(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Aiding a felon, as defined in § 946.47(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to prevent the apprehension, prosecution, or conviction of a felon, destroys, alters, hides, or disguises physical evidence.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of person aided) was a felon.

   A felon is a person who has committed a crime punishable by imprisonment in the Wisconsin state prisons.[2] (Name of crime) is such a crime[3] and the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of person aided) committed that crime. (Name of crime) is committed by one who

   > LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE ALLEGED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTIONS AS NECESSARY.[4]

2. The defendant knew that (name of person aided) had engaged in conduct which constitutes (name of crime).[5]

3. The defendant (destroyed) (altered) (hid) (disguised) physical evidence.

4. The defendant (destroyed) (altered) (hid) (disguised) physical evidence with the intent to prevent the (apprehension) (prosecution) (conviction) of (name of person aided).[6]

This element requires that the defendant had the purpose of preventing (name of person aided) from being (taken into custody) (prosecuted) (convicted) or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1791 was originally published in 1991 and revised in 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it added text at element 2. and revised the Comment and footnotes to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 254.

This instruction is for an offense under § 946.47(1)(b). Aiding a felon by harboring is covered by § 946.47(1)(a). See Wis JI Criminal 1790.

Section 946.47(3) formerly provided an exclusion for persons related to the felon. That provision was repealed by 2013 Wisconsin Act 254 [effective date: April 10, 2014].

2013 Wisconsin Act 254 also changed the penalty structure for this offense. See subsection (2m) of § 946.47. It is a Class G felony if the defendant aided a felon who committed a Class A, B, C, or D felony; it is a Class I felony if the defendant aided a felon who committed a Class E, F, G, H, or I felony. Because the crime committed by the felon will be specified in the second element, there is no need for any additional fact-finding as to the classification of that crime.

Section 946.47 applies to aiding felons who committed a crime outside of Wisconsin that was a felony in that jurisdiction and would also be a felony if committed in Wisconsin. See § 946.47(2). The Committee concluded that the jury must find that the facts constituting the out-of-state crime occurred, but that it is for the judge to determine that those facts constituted a felony in the other state and would constitute a felony in Wisconsin.

"Felon," as used in § 946.47, refers to a person who has engaged in prohibited felonious conduct, whether convicted or not. State v. Jones, 98 Wis.2d 679, 681, 298 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1988).

In State v. Schmidt, 221 Wis.2d 189, 198, 585 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 946.47 could be applied to a person who aided a convicted felon who was wanted for a parole violation:

> . . . The plain language of § 946.67(1)(a) and (2)(a) suggests no distinction between a person who has already been convicted of a felony and is now wanted for a parole violation following that conviction, and a person who is now wanted for, but has not yet been convicted of, a felony. Each is a "felon" within the definition of § 946.47(2)(a) because each "commits an act . . . which constitutes a felony under the laws of this state."

Though Schmidt was concerned with a crime charged under sub. (1)(a), the same conclusion should apply to violations of sub. (1)(b).

Note that § 946.46 makes it a Class A misdemeanor to aid or encourage a person under supervision to abscond or violate a condition of supervision.

1. The statute also covers placing false evidence. Section 946.47(1)(b).

2. Wis. Stat. § 939.60.

3. Here use the short title for the felony, for example: "Burglary is such a crime." The Committee concludes that the jury may be told that a certain crime constitutes a felony under the laws of Wisconsin. However, the jury must find that the person aided committed the crime. In the usual case, the person aided will have been convicted and proof will not be difficult. However, it is not necessary that the person aided have been convicted of, or even charged with, the felony. State v. Jones, 98 Wis.2d 679, 298 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1980). The Committee recommends advising the jury of the elements of the underlying crime allegedly committed by the person aided, requiring them to find each element before finding the defendant guilty of aiding a felon.

4. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

5. In State v. Jones, cited in note 3 above, the court held that a required element of this offense is that "the accused had actual knowledge" of the offense committed by the person aided. 98 Wis.2d at 681.

The third element of the instruction does not require that the defendant know the precise name of the felony committed or know that the conduct engaged in by the person aided is a felony. It does require that the defendant know what conduct was engaged in by the person aided. That conduct must constitute a felony under the law of Wisconsin.

"This section requires that the actor (1) intend to prevent the apprehension of a person he knows has committed a crime which in fact constitutes a felony. . . ." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 195 (Wis. Legislative Council).

In a case where further definition of the defendant's knowledge is desired, the sentence in brackets may be helpful. For example: "This requires that the defendant knew that (name persons aided) intentionally entered a building without the consent of the person in lawful possession and with intent to steal."

In State v. Schmidt, 221 Wis.2d 189, 198, 585 N.W.2d 100 (Ct. App. 1980), the court held that § 946.47 could be applied to a person who aided a convicted felon who was wanted for a parole violation. See Comment preceding note 1. For a case like Schmidt, the elements of the crime need not be summarized, since it is likely the state will simply introduce documentary proof that the person had been convicted of a felony and was on parole on a sentence for that conviction.

6. "Whether the actor has an intent to prevent the apprehension of the felon is a question of fact depending on the circumstances of each case. For example, a person who has committed a felony might go to the home of a friend who, having never been faced with such a situation before, might allow him to remain there for an hour or might give him food or medical treatment without having formed an intent to prevent his apprehension by the police." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 195 (Wisconsin Legislative Council).

7. Section 939.23(4). See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1795 BAIL JUMPING — § 946.49(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Bail jumping, as defined in § 946.49(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has been released from custody on bond[1] and intentionally fails to comply with the terms of that bond.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (arrested for) (charged with)[2] (a felony) (a misdemeanor).[3]

   (A felony is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the Wisconsin state prisons.[4] _____ is a felony.)[5]

   (A misdemeanor is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the county jail.[6] _____ is a misdemeanor.)[7]

2. The defendant was released from custody on bond.

   This requires that after (arrest) (being charged),[8] the defendant was released from custody on bond under conditions established by a (judge) (court commissioner)[9] (bail schedule).[10]

3. The defendant intentionally failed to comply with the terms of the bond.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to fail to comply with the terms of the bond. This also requires that the defendant knew of the terms of the bond and knew that (his) (her) actions did not comply with those terms.[11]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE VIOLATION OF BOND IS ALLEGED TO INVOLVE THE COMMISSION OF A CRIMINAL OFFENSE[12]

[The defendant is charged with violating a condition of bond that required that (he) (she) not commit any crime. The State alleges that the defendant committed the crime of _____. The State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of _____.[13]

The crime of _____ is committed by one who

LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE ALLEGED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTIONS AS NECESSARY.]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1795 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1987, 1988, 1990, 1994, 1999, 2003, 2005, 2010, and 2015. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2017; it made an addition to element 3.

This instruction is for an offense under § 946.49(1). The penalty is a Class A misdemeanor if the defendant was released from custody on a misdemeanor charge; the penalty is a Class H felony if the defendant was released from custody on a felony charge.

Subsection (2) of § 946.49 applies to witnesses who fail to comply with conditions of bail after release under § 969.01(3). There is no uniform instruction for that offense.

The three elements set forth in this instruction were cited with approval in State v. Dawson, 195 Wis.2d 161, 170-71, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995).

In State ex rel. Jacobus v. Wisconsin, 208 Wis.2d 39, 559 N.W.2d 900 (1997), the court affirmed a conviction for bail jumping based on violation of a condition forbidding the consumption of alcohol. The court concluded that "§ 51.45(1) does not prohibit the criminal prosecution of an individual for bail jumping under these circumstances." 208 Wis.2d 39, 44. This reversed the contrary decision of the court of appeals in this case, see 198 Wis.2d 783, 544 N.W.2d 234 (Ct. App. 1995).

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has held that where a bail jumping charge is based on the commission of a new crime, that new crime is not a lesser included offense and conviction of both bail jumping and the new crime is not barred by double jeopardy principles. See State v. Nelson, 146 Wis.2d 442, 432 N.W.2d 115 (Ct. App. 1988). In State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698, reversed on other grounds, 2004 WI 89, 273 Wis.2d 352, 681 N.W.2d 871, the court of appeals held that when a bail jumping charge is based on the commission of a new crime, the jury must be instructed on the elements of that crime. See the text of the instruction at footnote 12.

The statute is also violated by one who has been released from custody under Chapter 969 and commits a crime in another jurisdiction. State v. West, 181 Wis.2d 792, 512 N.W.2d 207 (Ct. App. 1994).

A defendant may be charged with multiple counts of bail jumping for violating separate terms of the same bond. State v. Anderson, 219 Wis.2d 740, 580 N.W.2d 329 (1998), reversing 214 Wis.2d 126, 570 N.W.2d 872 (Ct. App. 1997).

In State v. Schaab, 2000 WI App 204, 238 Wis.2d 598, 617 N.W.2d 872, the court held that the evidence was insufficient to support a bindover on a charge of bail jumping based on the alleged violation of a "no contact" condition of bond.

In State v. Bowen, 2015 WI App 12, 359 Wis.2d 650, 859 N.W.2d 166, the court of appeals affirmed Bowen's conviction for bail jumping based on a violation of a "no contact" provision of his bond. He challenged his conviction on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient if judged by the jury instruction given in the case, which required that he "had contact with [F.B.]." The word "contact" is not defined in the statutes or in the jury instruction, so the court gave it its common and ordinary meaning, which "can include touching and face-to-face interactions, as Bowen argues, but it can also include auditory observations and indirect contact of the type F.B. testified occurred here." ¶21.

> ¶30 In sum, the jury instruction requiring the State to prove that Bowen made "contact with [F.B.]" did not require the State to show that F.B. saw Bowen or that Bowen directly communicated with F.B. F.B.'s testimony that she saw Bowen's truck in the driveway, heard glass breaking, and heard someone walking up and down her stairs, combined with police officer testimony that Bowen was found intoxicated in F.B.'s basement, was sufficient to demonstrate that Bowen made "contact with F.B."

A positive urine test is sufficient to establish a bail jumping charge based on the violation of a "no drug" condition of bond. State v. Taylor, 226 Wis.2d 490, 595 N.W.2d 56 (Ct. App. 1999).

Two counts of bail jumping are permissible under the following circumstances: the defendant was released on one bond covering 2 cases; the preliminary hearing was set for the same date and time for each case; and, the defendant failed to appear. While the bail jumping offenses are "identical in law," each requires "an individual factual inquiry" so multiple charges are lawful. State v. Eaglefeathers, 2009 WI App 2, 316 Wis.2d 152, 762 N.W.2d 690.

In State v. Dewitt, 2008 WI App 134, 313 Wis.2d 794, 758 N.W.2d 201, the defendant was charged with nine counts of bail jumping based on nine phone calls he made from jail in violation of a no contact order. He was entitled to release on his signature on one misdemeanor charge but could not post bail on two other charges. So, while he was in jail, he was "released" on the one charge and was properly charged with violating conditions of that release.

A conviction for bail jumping can stand despite the same jury finding "not guilty" on the felony that was the basis for the bail jumping charge. State v. Rice, 2008 WI App 10, 307 Wis.2d 335, 743 N.W.2d 517.

1. The 1994 revision changed the wording from "released from custody under conditions" to "released from custody on bond." The statute refers to "released from custody under Chapter 969." The Committee concluded that the offense is committed only by someone who violates a "term of his bond." Persons may be released under Chapter 969 without a bond being required. Thus, it is logical to limit the instruction to situations where release is "on bond." This interpretation was approved in State v. Dawson, 195 Wis.2d 161, 171, n.1, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995). The court held that Dawson could not be charged with bail jumping where he had been released from custody without bail and where there was no evidence that a bond had been executed before his release. "[T]he express language of the statute requires that defendants must be under a bond before they can 'fail to comply' with the terms of that bond." 195 Wis.2d 161, 168.

"Bond" is defined as follows in § 967.02(4):

> 'Bond' means an undertaking either secured or unsecured entered into by a person in custody by which the person binds himself or herself to comply with such conditions as are set forth therein.

2. The appropriate alternative should be selected. It appears that the alternatives are required because the statute could apply in two different situations. The "arrested for" alternative would be used where the defendant is arrested, released on bail under a bail schedule, and is alleged to have violated a condition of that release before being officially "charged with" a crime. See note 8, below. The "charged with" alternative would be used where a defendant appears in court in response to a summons, receives a copy of the criminal complaint, and is released on bond without an official arrest having taken place.

3. The nature of the underlying crime for which the defendant was in custody determines the penalty range, see § 946.49(1)(a) and (b), and must be established at trial.

4. See § 939.60.

5. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told that a certain crime is in fact a felony or a misdemeanor. The jury must find that the defendant was actually arrested for or charged with that crime.

6. See §§ 939.60 and 939.12. "County jail" includes the Milwaukee County House of Correction.

7. See note 5, supra.

8. Chapter 969 governs release on bail and applies to any "defendant arrested for a criminal offense." (§ 969.01(1).) In the Committee's judgment, § 946.49 applies to any person released under Chapter 969, whether or not the person has been officially charged with a crime in a criminal complaint. Thus, the statute applies to persons released by reference to a misdemeanor bail schedule (§ 969.06) or by a duty judge or court commissioner prior to being charged.

For a similar interpretation of the word "charged" in connection with Wis. Stat. Ch. 969, see 65 Opinions of the Attorney General 102 (1976).

9. A court commissioner's power to set bail is governed by §§ 967.07 and 757.69(1)(b).

10. The Committee concluded that release on a uniform bail schedule is, in effect, release on conditions set by a judge because the schedule has been approved by the court. When a court continues a bond, it adopts and approves all conditions of that bond and it becomes an act of the court.

11. Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" means that the actor must have had the purpose to cause the result specified or be aware that his or her act is practically certain to have that result and that the actor have knowledge of those facts necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word "intentionally." See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

In some cases, defendants may wish to challenge the legality of the condition they are charged with violating. In the Committee's judgment, this should be done prior to trial upon proper motion and not at trial by interpreting the statute to require failure to comply with a "legal" or "valid" condition. See the discussion at note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 2031.

12. In State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698, the court of appeals held that when a bail jumping charge is based on the commission of a new crime, the jury must be instructed on the elements of that crime:

> We think it self-evident that when a bail jumping charge is premised upon the commission of a further crime, the jury must be properly instructed regarding the elements of that further crime. We think it equally self-evident that when a bail jumping charge is premised upon the commission of a lesser-included offense of such further crime, the jury must be properly instructed under the law of lesser-included offenses.
> NOTE: Henning was reversed as to the remedy ordered by the Court of Appeals. See State v. Henning, 2004 WI 89, 273 Wis.2d 352, 681 N.W.2d 871. The part of the decision relating to defining the new crime was not affected.

In the Committee's judgment, a full instruction on the "further crime" is not necessary if that crime was also charged separately and the jury was instructed on it. Stating to the jury that "the crime of _____ has already been defined for you and you should apply the same definition here" should be sufficient. As specified in Henning, it can be necessary to include instructions on a lesser included offense if appropriate. The instruction provided here does not address that issue. See SM-6 on lesser included offenses, generally. See Wis JI-Criminal 112 for an instruction providing the transition between a charged crime and a lesser included offense.

13. This sentence was added in the 2005 revision to make it clear to the jury that the State must prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defendant committed the new crime on which the bail jumping charge is based.

1805 CONCEALING IDENTITY

[INSTRUCTION RENUMBERED — SEE WIS JI CRIMINAL 994]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1805 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1979 and 1981. It was renumbered Wis JI Criminal 994 in 1986. This note was republished without change in 1995.

1985 Wisconsin Act 104 (effective date: November 28, 1985) renumbered the statute that penalizes committing a crime while identity is concealed. Former § 946.62 was renumbered § 939.641. The revision also clarified the point over which there had been some confusion: that "concealing identity" is not a separate criminal offense but is a fact that increases the penalty for the underlying crime.

The suggested uniform instruction was renumbered to correspond to the legislative change.

1808A BRIBERY OF WITNESSES: TRANSFERRING PROPERTY — § 946.61(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.61(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, with the intent to induce another to refrain from (giving evidence) (testifying) in any civil or criminal matter before any court, judge, grand jury, magistrate, court commissioner, referee or administrative agency authorized by statute to determine issues of fact, transfers (to him or her) (on his or her behalf), any property or any pecuniary advantage.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant transferred [(property) (money)[1]] [(to) (on behalf of)] (name of witness).[2]
2. The defendant did so with intent to induce (name of witness) to refrain[3] from (giving evidence) (testifying) in [specify proceeding, e.g., a criminal trial before a judge][4].

   "With intent to" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to influence (name of witness) .[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all two elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1808A was approved in 2021.

This instruction is for violations of § 946.61(1)(a), Bribery of Witness. The offense is a Class H felony. The offense was created as part of the 1956 revision of the Criminal Code. See L.1955, c. 696, § 1.

There are two instructions for violations of § 946.61: Wis JI-Criminal 1808A concerns subsec. (1)(a) and is for offering a bribe with intent to "induce another to refrain from giving evidence or testifying in any civil or criminal matter"; Wis JI-Criminal 1808B concerns subsec. (1)(b) and is for accepting a bribe "knowing that such property or pecuniary advantage was transferred to him or her or on his or her behalf with intent to induce him or her to refrain from giving evidence or testifying in any civil or criminal matter."

1. The instruction refers to "money," deleting the statute's "pecuniary advantage" and would need to be modified if money was not involved. Although "pecuniary" has apparently not been defined in Wisconsin case law, Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged) defines "pecuniary" as follows: "taking the form of or consisting of money; of or relating to money." Black's Law Dictionary (Fourth Edition) adds: "consisting of money or that which can be valued in money." The Committee believes the meaning should include not only actual money but also "that which can be valued in money" per the Black's Law definition.

2. This section does not apply to a person who is charged with a crime, or any person acting on his or her behalf, who transfers property to which he or she believes the other is legally entitled. § 946.61(2). The Committee concluded that a "does not apply" provision should be handled in the same manner as affirmative defenses under Wisconsin law. The burden of production is on the defendant to introduce or point to "some evidence," tending to show that he or she believed that the witness was legally entitled to the transfer of property. If that showing is made, the burden is on the State to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not believe that the witness was legally entitled to the transfer of property. As to the general rules in Wisconsin relating to "affirmative defenses," see Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979) and State v. Felton, 110 Wis.2d 485, 329 N.W.2d 161 (1983). See also, Wis JI-Criminal 700.

3. This section only prohibits transferring property or money to a person to "refrain" from testifying and does not include influencing testimony. As noted in State v. Manthey, 169 Wis.2d 673, 487 N.W. 2d 44 (1992), "The plain language of the statute makes it a crime to pay or accept inducement to refrain from testifying or giving evidence." Id. at 685. See also, State v. Duda, 60 Wis.2d 431, 210 N.W. 2d 763 (1973).

For matters involving the making of a false material statement under oath, see Wis JI-Criminal 1750 Perjury. § 946.31.

4. § 946.61(1)(b) provides the complete list of proceedings as meaning any civil or criminal matter before any:

- court,
- judge,
- grand jury,
- magistrate,
- court commissioner,
- referee, or
- administrative agency authorized by statute to determine issues of fact.

5. Under the Criminal Code, the phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. For a discussion of the sufficiency of the evidence on the "intent to influence" element, see State v. Rosenfeld, 93 Wis.2d 325, 286 N.W.2d 596 (1980).

1808B BRIBERY OF WITNESS: ACCEPTING A BRIBE — § 946.61(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.61(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who accepts any property or any pecuniary advantage, knowing that such property or pecuniary advantage was transferred (to him or her) (on his or her behalf) with intent to induce him or her to refrain from (giving evidence) (testifying) in any civil or criminal matter before any court, judge, grand jury, magistrate, court commissioner, referee, or administrative agency authorized by statute to determine issues of fact.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant accepted (property) (money)[1].
2. The defendant knew the transfer of [(property) (money)] [(to him or her) (on his or her behalf)] was intended to induce him or her to refrain[2] from (giving evidence) (testifying) in [specify proceeding, e.g., a criminal trial before a judge][3].

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all two elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1808B was approved in 2021.

This instruction is for violations of § 946.61(1)(b), Bribery of Witness. The offense is a Class H felony. The offense was created as part of the 1956 revision of the Criminal Code. See L.1955, c. 696, § 1.

There are two instructions for violations of § 946.61: Wis JI-Criminal 1808B concerns subsec. (1)(b) and is for accepting a bribe "knowing that such property or pecuniary advantage was transferred to him or her or on his or her behalf with intent to induce him or her to refrain from giving evidence or testifying in any civil or criminal matter"; Wis JI-Criminal 1808A concerns subsec. (1)(a) and is for offering a bribe with intent to "induce another to refrain from giving evidence or testifying in any civil or criminal matter."

1. The instruction refers to "money," deleting the statute's "pecuniary advantage" and would need to be modified if money was not involved. Although "pecuniary" has apparently not been defined in Wisconsin case law, Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged) defines "pecuniary" as follows: "taking the form of or consisting of money; of or relating to money." Black's Law Dictionary (Fourth Edition) adds: "consisting of money or that which can be valued in money." The Committee believes the meaning should include not only actual money but also "that which can be valued in money" per the Black's Law definition.

2. This section only prohibits transferring property or money to a person to "refrain" from testifying and does not include influencing testimony. As noted in State v. Manthey, 169 Wis.2d 673, 487 N.W. 2d 44 (1992), "The plain language of the statute makes it a crime to pay or accept inducement to refrain from testifying or giving evidence." Id. at 685. See also, State v. Duda, 60 Wis.2d 431, 210 N.W. 2d 763 (1973).

For matters involving the making of a false material statement under oath, see Wis JI-Criminal 1750 Perjury.

3. § 946.61(1)(b) provides the complete list of proceedings as meaning any civil or criminal matter before any:
    - court,
    - judge,
    - grand jury,
    - magistrate,
    - court commissioner,

- referee, or
- administrative agency authorized by statute to determine issues of fact.

4. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1810 CONCEALING DEATH OF CHILD — § 946.63

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1810 was originally published in 1974. It was withdrawn in 1989.

This instruction was withdrawn because the statute with which it deals was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. The offense was recreated, with minor substantive change, as § 948.23. See Wis JI Criminal 2154.

1812 COMMUNICATING WITH A JUROR — § 946.64)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 946.64 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, with intent to influence a person summoned or serving as juror, in relation to any matter which is before or which may be brought before that person, communicates with that person otherwise than in the regular course of proceedings in the trial or hearing of that matter.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of juror) was (summoned) (serving) as a juror.
2. The defendant communicated with (name of juror) other than in the regular course of proceedings in a trial or hearing.
3. The defendant communicated with (name of juror) with intent to influence (name of juror) in relation to any matter which (was before) (might have come before) (name of juror).

   "With intent to" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to influence (name of juror).[1]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1812 was originally published in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for violations of § 946.64, Communicating with Jurors. There are no reported decisions interpreting the statute, which was created as part of the 1956 revision of the Criminal Code. Often referred to as "jury tampering," the offense was known at common law as "embracery." See Platz, "The Criminal Code," 1956 Wis. L. Rev. 350, 380.

1. Under the Criminal Code, the phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1815 OBSTRUCTING JUSTICE — § 946.65

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Obstructing justice, as defined in § 946.65 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, for a consideration, knowingly gives false information to any officer of any court with intent to influence the officer in the performance of official functions.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant gave false information to (name of officer).
2. (Name of officer) was an officer of a court.[1]
3. The defendant knowingly gave false information to an officer of the court.

   This requires that the defendant knew the information was false and knew that (name of officer) was an officer of a court.[2]
4. The defendant gave false information with intent to influence (name of officer) in the performance of official functions.

   "With intent to influence" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to influence the officer.[3]

"Official functions" are duties that an officer of a court is employed to perform.[4]

5. The defendant gave false information for a consideration.

"For a consideration" means that another person provided or agreed to provide some benefit to the defendant for giving false information.[5]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1815 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. Section 946.65(2) provides: "Officer of any court includes the judge, reporter, bailiff, and district attorney." This provides authority for advising the jury that, for example, a judge is an officer of a court.

2. Section 939.23(2) provides that "'know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified facts exist."

3. Section 939.23(4) provides that "with intent to" means that the actor has the purpose to cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. The definition of "official functions" is adapted from the one provided for "acting in official capacity" in Wis JI-Criminal 915.

5. The definition of consideration is adapted from the decision in State v. Howell, 141 Wis.2d 58, 414 N.W.2d 54 (Ct. App. 1987), where the court concluded that "only conduct which involves a third party contracting with another to give false information to a court officer . . . is proscribed by the statute." 141 Wis.2d 58, 62. Howell's conduct was not covered, therefore, since he had provided false information to the court during a hearing on his bail reduction request. The court found there was no consideration because, "in a contractual sense, the false information did not induce the court to carry out its statutory function to litigate a bail reduction request. Regardless of the quality of the information given, the trial court would have made a bail determination." 141 Wis.2d 58, 62. Further, the court held that some concerted activity between two or more persons is required; a person providing false information to advance his own interests is not covered by the statute.

1825 SIMULATING LEGAL PROCESS — § 946.68

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Simulating legal process, as defined in § 946.68 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who sends or delivers to another person any document which simulates legal process.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant sent or delivered a document to another person.
2. The document simulated legal process.

"Simulate" means to imitate or have the appearance of without being genuine.[1]

"Legal process" includes a subpoena, summons, complaint, warrant, injunction, writ, notice, pleading, order, or other document that directs a person to perform or refrain from performing a specified act and compliance with which is enforceable by a court or governmental agency.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CLASS D FELONY DEFINED IN SUB. (1r)(b) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE DOCUMENT WAS SENT OR DELIVERED WITH INTENT TO INDUCE PAYMENT OF A CLAIM:[3]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant send or deliver the document with intent to induce payment of a claim?

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant sent or delivered the document with intent to induce payment of a claim.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CLASS D FELONY DEFINED IN SUB. (1r)(c) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE DOCUMENT SIMULATED CRIMINAL PROCESS:[4]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the document simulate criminal process?

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the document simulated criminal process.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1825was originally published in 1997. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for violations of § 946.68. The basic offense is a Class I felony. It increases to a Class H felony in two situations: where the document is sent or delivered with intent to induce payment of a claim [see sub. (1r)(b)]; and where the document simulates any criminal process [see sub. (1r)(c)]. The Committee recommends handling the Class H felonies by adding a special question to the instruction for the basic offense that asks the jury to determine if the aggravating factor is established.

1. The definition of "simulate" is based on the one provided in The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, with the addition of "without being genuine."

2. This is the definition provided in sub. (1g) of § 946.68.

3. As with similar provisions that increase the maximum penalty for a criminal offense, the Committee concluded that the facts that increase the penalty for this offense to a Class H felony should be submitted to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of simulating legal process under § 946.68 of the Wisconsin Statutes at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "Did the defendant send or deliver the document with intent to induce payment of a claim?"

4. As with similar provisions that increase the maximum penalty for a criminal offense, the Committee concluded that the facts that increase the penalty for this offense to a Class H felony should be submitted to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of simulating legal process under § 946.68 of the Wisconsin Statutes at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "Did the document simulate criminal process?"

1830 IMPERSONATING A PEACE OFFICER, FIRE FIGHTER, OR OTHER EMERGENCY PERSONNEL — § 946.70(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Impersonating a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician) (first responder), as defined in § 946.70(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who impersonates a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician) (first responder) with intent to mislead others into believing that the person is actually a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician) (first responder).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant impersonated a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician)[1] (first responder).[2]

   To "impersonate" means to (assume the identity or characteristics of) (represent oneself to be) (pretend to be) another person without authority to do so.[3] (One may impersonate another by verbal declarations as well as by obvious physical impersonations as in wearing a badge or a uniform.)[4]

[A "peace officer" is a person vested by law with a duty to maintain public order or to make arrests for crime, whether that duty extends to all crimes or is limited to specific crimes.][5]

2. The defendant impersonated a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician) (first responder) with intent to mislead[6] (another person) (other persons) into believing the defendant was actually a (peace officer) (fire fighter) (emergency medical technician) (first responder).

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1830 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1986, 1995, and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2012; it reflects changes made in § 946.70 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 276.

This instruction is drafted for a violation of subsec. (1) of § 946.70 which is a Class A misdemeanor. The maximum penalty for the basic offense is increases to a Class H felony if the person acts "with the intent to commit or aid and abet the commission of a crime. . . ." § 946.70(2). Wis JI-Criminal 1831 is the suggested uniform instruction for the felony offense.

1985 Wisconsin Act 97 amended § 946.70 by substituting the word "impersonate" for "personate." Since the two words have essentially the same meaning, it is assumed that no change in meaning was intended.

2011 Wisconsin Act 276 amended § 946.70 by creating subs. (1)(b), (c), and (d), extending the coverage to include impersonating a fire fighter, an emergency medical technician, and a first responder. [Effective date: April 24, 2012.]

1. Section 946.70(1)(c) refers to "an emergency medical technician as defined in s. 256.01(5)."

2. Section 946.70(1)(d) refers to "a first responder as defined in s. 256.01(9)."

3. Webster's Third New International Dictionary.

4. This definition was adopted when the instruction was first published in 1980. It was based on one found in 35 C.J.S. False Personation § 3 (1960).

5. This is the definition provided in Wis. Stat. § 939.22(22).

6. The phrase "with intent to" means that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1831 IMPERSONATING A PEACE OFFICER, FIRE FIGHTER, OR OTHER EMERGENCY PERSONNEL WITH INTENT TO COMMIT A CRIME — § 946.70(2)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1831 was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1995, 2009 and 2013. Its withdrawal was approved by the Committee in October 2017.

Wis JI-Criminal 1831 provided a separate instruction for a violation of subsec. (2) of § 946.70 which is a Class H felony and requires that a person violating § 946.70(1) act "with the intent to commit or aid and abet the commission of a crime. . . ." The additional facts necessary for the Class H felony have been added to Wis JI-Criminal 1830 as a special question.

Wis JI Criminal 1838 was originally published in 1987 and was revised in 1988.

All the instructions were withdrawn in 1989 because the statutes with which they deal, §§ 946.71 and 946.715, were repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. Section 948.31, Interference With Custody By Parent Or Others, was created in place of the repealed provisions. See Wis JI Criminal 2166 through 2169.

1848 UNEMPLOYEMENT INSURANCE FRAUD: MAKING A FALSE STATEMENT TO OBTAIN A BENEFIT PAYMENT — § 108.24(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unemployment insurance fraud, as defined in § 108.24(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by any person who knowingly makes a false statement or representation to obtain any benefit payment under Chapter 108, either for himself or herself or for any other person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained a benefit under Chapter 108 for (himself) (herself) (another person), by making a (statement) (representation).

2. The (statement) (representation) to obtain a benefit under Chapter 108 was false when made.

3. The defendant knew the (statement) (representation) to obtain a benefit under Chapter 108 was false when made.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH FRAUDULENTLY SECURING MORE THAN $2,500 AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT THAT FINDING.[1]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must also determine beyond a reasonable doubt the value of any unemployment insurance benefits for which the defendant was not eligible and insert that amount in the verdict.[2]

Determining Value

("Was the value of any benefit obtained more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of any benefit obtained more than $5,000?"

Answer "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of any benefit obtained more than $2,500?"

Answer "yes" or "no.")

Before you answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of any benefit obtained was more than the amount stated in the question.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1848 was approved by the Committee in July 2018.

This instruction is for criminal violations of § 108.24(1)(a), making a false statement to obtain unemployment insurance benefit payments. The penalty structure was modified by 2017 Wisconsin Act 147 [effective date: April 1, 2018]. Fraudulently obtaining unemployment benefits not exceeding $2,500 is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the benefit received exceeds specified amounts. There are four ranges of criminal penalties, depending on the value of the benefits or payments obtained. See sub. (2) of § 108.24. The penalty issue is addressed by adding a special question at the end of the instruction. See footnote 1, below.

1. The jury must make a finding of the value of the unemployment insurance benefit payment if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt."

2. The penalties for violations of § 108.24(1)(a) depend on the value of the payment or benefit. The jury should be asked to determine that value. (See, by analogy, Wis JI-Criminal 1441 Theft, footnote 8.) The applicable penalty is capped by the crime charged in the complaint or information. The penalties are specified in sub. (1)(b) as follows:

Value of benefit	Penalty
less than $2,500	Class A misdemeanor
more than $2,500 but does not exceed $5,000	Class I felony
more than $5,000 but does not exceed $10,000	Class H felony
more than $10,000	Class G felony

The Committee concluded that if the securing of less than $2,500 is charged, the jury need not make a finding of value.

1850 PUBLIC ASSISTANCE FRAUD: MAKING A FALSE STATEMENT IN AN APPLICATION FOR PUBLIC ASSISTANCE — § 946.93(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Public assistance fraud, as defined in § 946.93(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who intentionally makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of material fact in any application for or receipt of public assistance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (made) (caused to be made) a (statement) (representation) of material fact in an application for or receipt of public assistance.

   The [statement] [representation] claimed to have been made in this case is: (specify the alleged statement or representation) .

   A material fact is one that affects eligibility for or the amount of public assistance.[1]

   "Public assistance" means any aid, benefit, or services provided under Chapter 49 of the Wisconsin Statutes.[2]

2. The (statement) (representation) of material fact was false when made.

3. The defendant knew the (statement) (representation) of material fact was false when made.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1850 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it reflects the repeal and recreation of former § 49.95 as § 946.93.

This offense was originally defined in § 49.12; that statute was renumbered § 49.95 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 27. 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: April 10, 2014] repealed § 49.95 and recreated it as § 946.93. The offense definition in current § 946.93(2) is the rough equivalent of the one provided in former § 49.95(1).

This instruction is for criminal violations of § 946.93(2), which are Class A misdemeanors. The penalty for this offense no longer depends on the value of the assistance received.

1. The definition of "material" is consistent with the discussion of that term in State v. Williams, 179 Wis.2d 80, 87-88, 505 N.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1993), a case dealing with the related offense of medical assistance fraud:

> If the false statements did not affect the amount of benefits or payments made, an issue of materiality is raised. If the statements had no legal effect, the court could determine as a matter of law that the false statements were not material. At the very least, the jury should be given the opportunity to determine whether the false statements were material based upon the evidence concerning the legal effect of the statements.

2. Section 946.93(1).

3. The recreation of former § 49.95 as § 946.93 substituted "intentionally" for "willfully," clarifying the mental element required. When used in the Criminal Code, "intentionally" requires that the actor have the purpose to cause the result specified and "have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Section 939.23(3). As applied to this offense, that requires that the defendant knew the statement or representation in the application was false.

1851 PUBLIC ASSISTANCE FRAUD: CONCEALING OR FAILING TO DISCLOSE AN EVENT AFFECTING ELIGIBILITY — § 946.93(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Public assistance fraud, as defined in § 946.93(3)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who, having knowledge of an event affecting the initial or continued eligibility for public assistance, conceals or fails to disclose that event with an intent to fraudulently secure public assistance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had knowledge of an event affecting the initial or continued eligibility for public assistance.

   The event alleged to have occurred in this case is: (specify the alleged event) .

   "Public assistance" means any aid, benefit, or services provided under Chapter 49 of the Wisconsin Statutes.[1]

2. The defendant (concealed) (failed to disclose) that event.

3. The defendant (concealed) (failed to disclose) that event with an intent to fraudulently secure public assistance.

This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to obtain public assistance to which (he) (she) was not entitled.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must also determine beyond a reasonable doubt the value of the public assistance for which the defendant was not eligible and insert that amount in the verdict.[2]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1851 was approved by the Committee in February 2015.

This instruction is for criminal violations of § 946.93(3)(a), as created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: April 10, 2014]. Offenses now defined in § 946.93 were formerly found in § 49.95; there does not appear to be an equivalent of sub. (3)(a) in former § 49.95.

This instruction is for criminal violations of § 946.93(3), which involve payments or benefits of more than $300. There are five ranges of criminal penalties, depending on the value of the payments or benefits. This is addressed by adding a special question at the end of the instruction. See footnote 2, below.

1. Section 946.93(1).

2. The penalties for violations of § 946.93(3) depend on the value of the payment or benefit. The jury should be asked to determine that value. (See, by analogy, Wis JI-Criminal 1441 Theft, footnote 8.) The applicable penalty is capped by the crime charged in the complaint or information. The penalties are specified in sub. (3)(e) as follows:

Value of payment or benefit	Penalty
less than $300	Class B forfeiture
more than $300 but does not exceed $1000	Class B misdemeanor
more than $1000 but does not exceed $2000	Class A misdemeanor
more than $2000 but does not exceed $5000	Class I felony
more than $5000 but does not exceed $10,000	Class H felony
more than $10,000	Class G felony

1852 PUBLIC ASSISTANCE FRAUD: FAILURE TO REPORT RECEIPT OF INCOME OR ASSETS — § 946.93(3)(b)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1852 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988, 1995, and 2003. It was withdrawn by the Committee in December 2014.

Wis JI Criminal 1852 addressed violations of former § 49.95(6). 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: April 10, 2014] repealed § 49.95 and replaced it with § 946.93. The offense definition in current § 946.93(3)(b) is the rough equivalent of the one provided in former § 49.95(6) – it addresses the failure to report receipt of income or assets.

The Committee decided to withdraw Wis JI Criminal 1852 because the conduct it addressed now appears to be covered by § 946.93(3)(a), a section created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 and for which there was no substantial equivalent under prior law. Section 946.93(3)(a) prohibits concealing or failing to disclose "an event affecting the initial or continued eligibility for public assistance" with an intent to fraudulently secure public assistance. The Committee concluded that sub. (3)(a)'s reference to "an event affecting initial or continued eligibility for public assistance" is broad enough to include the receipt of income or assets and that therefore Wis JI Criminal 1852 could be withdrawn. See Wis JI Criminal 1851 for violations of § 946.93(3)(a).

1854 PUBLIC ASSISTANCE FRAUD: FAILURE TO NOTIFY AUTHORITIES OF CHANGE OF FACTS — § 946.93(3)(c)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1854 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1988, 1995, and 2003. It was withdrawn by the Committee in December 2014.

Wis JI-Criminal 1854 addressed violations of former § 49.95(9). 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: April 10, 2014] repealed § 49.95 and replaced it with § 946.93. The offense definition in current § 946.93(3)(c) is the rough equivalent of the one provided in former § 49.95(9) – it addresses the failure to notify the public assistance agency "of any change in circumstances for which notification by the recipient must be provided under law."

The Committee decided to withdraw Wis JI-Criminal 1854 because the conduct it addressed now appears to be covered by § 946.93(3)(a), a section created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 and for which there was no substantial equivalent under prior law. Section 946.93(3)(a) prohibits concealing or failing to disclose "an event affecting the initial or continued eligibility for public assistance" with an intent to fraudulently secure public assistance. The Committee concluded that sub. (3)(a)'s reference to "an event affecting initial or continued eligibility for public assistance" is broad enough to include the failure to notify "of any change in circumstances" and that therefore Wis JI-Criminal 1854 could be withdrawn. 1862 FOOD STAMP FRAUD: MISSTATING FACTS ON AN APPLICATION — § 946.92(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Food stamp fraud, as defined in § 946.92(2)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who misstates or conceals facts in a food stamp program application or report of income, assets, or household circumstances with the intent to secure or continue to receive food stamp program benefits.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (misstated) (concealed) facts in a food stamp program [application] [report of income, assets, or household circumstances].

   The facts claimed to have been (misstated) (concealed) in this case are: (specify the alleged facts) .

2. The defendant (misstated) (concealed) facts with the intent to [secure] [continue to receive] food stamp program benefits.

   "With intent to"[1] requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to obtain food stamp program benefits by (misstating) (concealing) facts in the application.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH FRAUDULENTLY SECURING MORE THAN $100 AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT THAT FINDING[2]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must also determine beyond a reasonable doubt the value of the food stamp program benefits for which the defendant was not eligible and insert that amount in the verdict.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1862 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995, 2003, and 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2014; it reflects the renumbering of § 49.795 as § 946.92.

This instruction is for violations of subsection (2) of § 946.92, Food Stamp Offenses. The statute prohibits two different kinds of conduct: misstating or concealing facts in an application with intent to secure food stamp program benefits; and, misstating or concealing facts in a report of income, assets, or household circumstances with intent to continue to receive benefits.

This offense was previously defined in § 49.127; that statute was renumbered § 49.795 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16. That statute was renumbered 946.92 by 2013 Wisconsin Act 226, effective date: April 10, 2014. The offense definition in current § 946.92(2)(a) is the same as that formerly found in § 49.795(2).

There are three ranges of criminal penalties, depending on the value of the benefits obtained. This is addressed by adding a special question at the end of the instruction. See footnote 2, below.

1. "With intent to" requires either the mental purpose to cause the result specified or being aware that conduct is practically certain to cause the result. See § 939.22(24) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to this offense.

2. The penalties for violations of § 946.92(2)(a) are determined by reference to "the value of the food stamp program benefits." The jury should be asked to determine that value. (See, by analogy, Wis JI-Criminal 1441 Theft, footnote 8.) The applicable penalty is capped by the crime charged in the complaint or information.

The penalties for this offense are specified in § 946.92(3)(a) as follows:

Value of benefits secured	Penalty
less than $100	Class B misdemeanor
more than $100 but less than $5000	Class I felony Class H felony if the defendant has a prior conviction under this section
more than $5000	Class G felony

The Committee concluded that if the securing of less than $100 is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

1870 MEDICAL ASSISTANCE FRAUD: MAKING A FALSE STATEMENT IN AN APPLICATION FOR A BENEFIT OR PAYMENT — § 946.91(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Medical assistance fraud, as defined in § 946.91(2)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who intentionally makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in any application for any medical assistance payment or benefit.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally made or caused to be made a (statement) (representation) of a material fact in an application for (payment) (a benefit) in connection with a medical assistance program.

   The (statement) (representation) claimed to have been made is that: (specify the alleged statement or representation) .

   A material fact is one that affects eligibility for or the amount of a (payment) (benefit).[2]

"Medical assistance program" means a program providing services and items relating to health care to persons who apply for that assistance.[3]

2. The (statement) (representation) was false when made.

3. The defendant knew that the (statement) (representation) was false.[4]

4. The application for (payment) (benefit) was submitted.

The defendant does not have to receive the (payment) (benefit) sought. All that is required is that the application be submitted for payment.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1870 was originally published in 1992 and revised in 1993 and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it reflects the renumbering of § 49.795 as § 946.92.

The offense was formerly defined in § 49.49; that statute was renumbered § 946.91 by 2013 Wisconsin Act 226 [effective date: April 10, 2014]. The offense definition in § 946.91(2)(a) is the rough equivalent of the one provided in former § 49.49(a) ¶1.

1. This instruction is for violations of § 946.91(2)(a), which can be committed either by the person who provides services as part of the medical assistance program or by the person who receives the services. The provider of services may commit the offense by submitting a fraudulent "application for payment." The recipient may commit the offense by submitting fraudulent "application for benefits." The offense is a Class H felony with a maximum fine of $25,000.

2. This definition of "material" is consistent with the discussion of the term in State v. Williams, 179 Wis.2d 80, 505 N.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1993):

> If the false statements did not affect the amount of benefits or payments made, an issue of materiality is raised. If the statements had no legal effect, the court could determine as a matter of law that the false statements were not material. At the very least, the jury should be given the opportunity to determine whether the false statements were material based upon the evidence concerning the legal effect of the statements.

179 Wis.2d 80, 87-88.

3. The definition of "medical assistance program" was devised by the Committee. "Medical assistance" is defined in § 946.91(1)(b) as: "the program providing aid under subch. IV of Ch. 49, except ss. 49.468 and 49.471." The statutes referred to in the definition are extremely long and complex and do not lend themselves to convenient use as a definition of the term "medical assistance."

4. The recodification of former § 49.49 as § 946.91 substituted "intentionally" for "willfully," clarifying the mental element required. When used in the Criminal Code, "intentionally" requires that the actor have the purpose to cause the result specified and "have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Section 939.23(3). As applied to this offense, that requires that the defendant knew the statement or representation in the application was false.

1881 RACKETEERING ACTIVITY — USING PROCEEDS OF A PATTERN OF RACKETEERING ACTIVITY TO ESTABLISH OR OPERATE AN ENTERPRISE — § 946.83(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Engaging in racketeering activity, as defined by § 946.83(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has received any proceeds with knowledge that they were derived, directly or indirectly, from a pattern of racketeering activity and uses or invests them directly or indirectly, to establish or operate an enterprise.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant received proceeds that were derived from a pattern of racketeering activity.

   "Pattern of racketeering activity" means that at least three interrelated felonies occurred within a seven-year period and that these felonies amounted to, or posed a threat of, continued criminal activity.[2]

   Felonies are "interrelated" if they have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission, or share other distinguishing characteristics.[3]

Felonies amount to or show a threat of continued criminal activity if they have been or will be a part of a regular way of doing business.[4]

In this case, it is alleged that the proceeds were derived, directly or indirectly, from the following felonies: (name the felonies - at least three - they must be listed in sec. 946.82(4)) . Each of the felonies will be defined at the end of this instruction.

2. The defendant knew that the proceeds were derived from a pattern of racketeering activity.

3. The defendant used any of the proceeds to (establish) (operate) (name of alleged enterprise) .[5]

4. (Name of alleged enterprise) was an enterprise.

Meaning of "Enterprise"

"Enterprise" means any [(sole proprietorship) (partnership) (corporation) (business trust) (union) organized under the laws of this state] [(legal entity) (union) not organized under the laws of this state] [association or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity].[6]

In this case, it is alleged that the proceeds were derived, directly or indirectly, from the following felonies: (name the felonies - at least three - they must be listed in sec. 946.82(4)) .

[DEFINE THE ELEMENTS OF EACH OF THE CRIMES.][7]

Before you may return a verdict of guilty, all 12 jurors must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed at least three predicate felonies as charged in the information. All 12 jurors must also be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the same three predicate felonies.[8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1881 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a charge under § 946.83(1). Subsections (2) and (3) are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1882 and 1883, respectively. These are the primary criminal provisions of the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, which is modeled after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. The latter is commonly referred to as "RICO" and is found at 18 U.S.C. §§ 1961-1968. The federal RICO statute has both criminal and civil provisions, as does the Wisconsin counterpart. There has been extensive litigation under the federal statute, some of which is relevant to interpreting the Wisconsin statute. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has recognized that "the voluminous federal law concerning RICO may be persuasive authority as to the interpretation of" the Wisconsin Act. State v. Judd, 147 Wis.2d 398, 401, 433 N.W.2d 260 (Ct. App. 1988).

1. This instruction addresses one type of violation of subsection (1) of § 946.83(1) – investing the proceeds of racketeering activity in an enterprise. Another type of violation is also prohibited but is not addressed by the instruction – using proceeds "in the acquisition of any title to, or any right, interest, or equity in, real property."

2. The requirement of three interrelated felonies in a seven-year period is based on the statutory definition of "pattern of racketeering activity" in § 946.82(3):

> "Pattern of racketeering activity" means engaging in at least three incidents of racketeering activity that have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics, provided at least one of the incidents occurred after April 27, 1982 and that the last of the incidents occurred within 7 years after the first incident of racketeering activity. Acts occurring at the same time and place which may form the basis for crimes punishable under more than one statutory provision may count for only one incident of racketeering activity.

The requirement that the felonies amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity is based on the decision in H. J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. 229 (1989), where the United States Supreme Court interpreted the "pattern" requirement under the federal RICO statute. The Court held that Congress had a "natural and commonsense approach to RICO's pattern element in mind, intending a more stringent requirement than proof simply of two predicates, but also envisioning a concept of sufficient breadth that it might encompass multiple predicates within a single scheme that were related to and that amounted to, or threatened the likelihood of, continued criminal activity." 492 U.S. 229, 237.

The Court relied on the plain meaning of the word "pattern" to conclude that more than "just a multiplicity of racketeering predicates" is required:

> A "pattern" is an "arrangement or order of things or activity," 11 Oxford English Dictionary 357 (2d ed. 1989), and the mere fact that there are a number of predicates is no guarantee that they fall into any arrangement or order. It is not the number of predicates but the relationship that they bear to each other or to some external organizing principle that renders them "ordered" or "arranged."

492 U.S. 229, 238.

The court noted that the text of the statute fails to identify any "forms of relationship or external principles" to be used to determine whether a "pattern" exists. Given the legislative purpose of the RICO statutes, however, the Court concludes that a flexible approach is to be used: ". . . a pattern might be demonstrated by reference to a range of different ordering principles or relationships between predicates." This relationship between predicates requires that the predicates be related and that they amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. "'It is this factor of continuity plus relationship which combines to produce a pattern.'" 492 U.S. 229, 239, citing S. Rep. No. 91-617 at 158. The Court elaborated on the "continuity" requirement:

> "Continuity" is both a closed- and open-ended concept, referring either to a closed period of repeated conduct, or to past conduct that by its nature projects into the future with a threat of repetition. See Barticheck v. Fidelity Union Bank/First National State, 832 F.2d 36, 39 (CA3 1987). It is, in either case, centrally a temporal concept – and particularly so in the RICO context, where what must be continuous, RICO's predicate acts or offenses, > and the relationship these predicates must bear one to another, are distinct requirements. A party alleging a RICO violation may demonstrate continuity over a closed period by proving a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time. Predicate acts extending over a few weeks or months and threatening no future criminal conduct do not satisfy this requirement: Congress was concerned in RICO with long-term criminal conduct. Often a RICO action will be brought before continuity can be established in this way. In such cases, liability depends on whether the threat of continuity is demonstrated. See S.Rep. No. 91-617, at 158.

> Whether the predicates proved establish a threat of continued racketeering activity depends on the specific facts of each case. Without making any claim to cover the field of possibilities – preferring to deal with this issue in the context of concrete factual situations presented for decision – we offer some examples of how this element might be satisfied. A RICO pattern may surely be established if the related predicates themselves involve a distinct threat of long-term racketeering activity, either implicit or explicit. Suppose a hoodlum were to sell "insurance" to a neighborhood's storekeepers to cover them against breakage of their windows, telling his victims he would be reappearing each month to collect the "premium" that would continue their "coverage." Though the number of related predicates involved may be small and they may occur close together in time, the racketeering acts themselves include a specific threat of repetition extending indefinitely into the future, and thus supply the requisite threat of continuity. In other cases, the threat of continuity may be established by showing that the predicate acts or offenses are part of an ongoing entity's regular way of doing business. Thus, the threat of continuity is sufficiently established where the predicates can be attributed to a defendant operating as part of a long-term association that exists for criminal purposes. Such associations include, but extend well beyond, those traditionally grouped under the phrase "organized crime." The continuity requirement is likewise satisfied where it is shown that the predicates are a regular way of conducting defendant's ongoing legitimate business (in the sense that it is not a business that exists for criminal purposes), or of conducting or participating in an ongoing and legitimate RICO "enterprise."
> The limits of the relationship and continuity concepts that combine to define a RICO pattern, and the precise methods by which relatedness and continuity or its threat may be proved, cannot be fixed in advance with such clarity that it will always be apparent whether in a particular case a "pattern of racketeering activity" exists. The development of these concepts must await future cases, absent a decision by Congress to revisit RICO to provide clearer guidance as to the Act's intended scope.

492 U.S. 229, 241-243.

In justifying its conclusion about the "continuity" requirement, the Court relied on the text of the federal statute which, in defining the pattern requirement, states that a pattern "requires" at least two predicate acts. The Court emphasized the significance of the use of "requires" rather than "means" in concluding that the presence of the two predicate acts is the minimal requirement: "it assumes that there is something to a RICO pattern beyond simply the number of predicate acts involved." 492 U.S. 229, 238. The Wisconsin definition of "pattern," however, does use the word "means" where the federal statute uses "requires." This may offer a basis for interpreting the Wisconsin pattern requirement differently than the United States Supreme Court interpreted the federal definition in Northwestern Bell. But in the absence of direct authority for doing so, the Committee decided that the Northwestern Bell definition should be used as a guide for this instruction.

The definition of "pattern of racketeering activity" in § 948.82(3) is not unconstitutionally vague. State v. O'Connell, 179 Wis.2d 598, 615, 508 N.W.2d 23 (Ct. App. 1993).

3. This is based on § 946.82(3), see note 2, supra.

4. This is based on H. J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell, cited in note 2, supra.

5. The instruction is drafted on the assumption that the "enterprise" will be a legitimate or regular business and therefore will have a name that can be used to identify it. If that is not the case, substitute a description of the enterprise for the name.

6. The definition of "enterprise" is taken from the statutory definition found in § 946.82(2). Parentheses are added on the assumption that only the alternatives supported by the evidence will be presented to the jury. In State v. Judd, 147 Wis.2d 398, 433 N.W.2d 260 (Ct. App. 1988), the court of appeals held that a one-man corporation could be an "enterprise," at least for purposes of a charge under subsec. (3) of § 946.83. While the "person" who conducts the pattern of racketeering activity through the enterprise must be separate from the enterprise, that test is met where the "one-man band" has incorporated. The act of incorporation forms the enterprise. Also see, State v. O'Connell, 179 Wis.2d 598, 508 N.W.2d 23 (Ct. App. 1993).

7. The Committee assumes that all the elements of the crimes alleged to be the three interrelated felonies must be proved. There are suggested uniform instructions for most of the felonies listed in § 946.82(4).

8. This addition is based on Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813 (1999). Richardson held that unanimous agreement on the predicate acts was required in prosecutions under a "continuing criminal enterprise" statute which is separate from, but similar to, the RICO statute. Adding it here is by analogy to that situation. The 7th Circuit uniform jury instructions require unanimity under the federal RICO statute. See, http://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/Rules/pjury.pdf.

1882 RACKETEERING ACTIVITY — ACQUIRING OR MAINTAINING AN INTEREST IN OR CONTROL OF AN ENTERPRISE THROUGH A PATTERN OF RACKETEERING ACTIVITY — § 946.83(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Engaging in racketeering activity, as defined by § 946.83(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, directly or indirectly, acquires or maintains any interest in or control of any enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of the alleged enterprise) [2] was an enterprise.

   "Enterprise" means any [(sole proprietorship) (partnership) (corporation) (business trust) (union) organized under the laws of this state] [(legal entity) (union) not organized under the laws of this state] [association or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity].[3]

2. The defendant (acquired) (maintained), directly or indirectly, an interest[4] in (name of the alleged enterprise) .

3. The defendant (acquired) (maintained) an interest in (name of the alleged enterprise) through a pattern of racketeering activity.

"Pattern of racketeering activity" means that at least three interrelated felonies occurred within a seven-year period and that these felonies amounted to, or posed a threat of, continued criminal activity.[5]

Felonies are "interrelated" if they have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission, or share other distinguishing characteristics.[6]

Felonies amount to or show a threat of continued criminal activity if they have been or will be a part of a regular way of doing business.[7]

In this case, it is alleged that the defendant (acquired) (maintained) an interest in an enterprise through the following three felonies: (name the felonies - at least three - they must be listed in sec. 946.82(4)) .

[DEFINE THE ELEMENTS OF EACH CRIME.][8]

Before you may return a verdict of guilty, all 12 jurors must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed at least three predicate felonies as charged in the information. All 12 jurors must also be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the same three predicate felonies.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1882 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a charge under § 946.83(2). Subsections (1) and (3) are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1881 and 1883, respectively. These are the primary criminal provisions of the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, which is modeled after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. See the Comment to Wis JI Criminal 1881 for discussion of these provisions.

1. This instruction is drafted for one type of violation of subsection (2) of § 946.83 – acquiring an interest in an enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity. The statute also applies to maintaining an interest and to acquiring or maintaining control of an enterprise. If any of those alternatives are involved, the second element would need to be modified and similar changes made in the concluding paragraphs.

2. The instruction is drafted on the assumption that the "enterprise" will be a legitimate or regular business and therefore will have a name that can be used to identify it. If that is not the case, substitute a description of the enterprise for the name.

3. The definition of "enterprise" is taken from the statutory definition found in § 946.82(2). Parentheses are added on the assumption that only the alternatives supported by the evidence will be presented to the jury. In State v. Judd, 147 Wis.2d 398, 433 N.W.2d 260 (Ct. 4. This element would need to be modified if an alternative other than "acquiring an interest" is involved, see note 1, supra.

5. The approach to defining the "pattern" requirement is described in detail in note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1881.

6. This is based on § 946.82(3), see note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1881.

7. This is based on the decision in H. J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell, 492 U.S. 229 (1989), discussed at length in note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1881.

8. The Committee assumes that all the elements of the crimes alleged to be the three interrelated felonies must be proved. There are suggested uniform instructions for most of the felonies listed in § 946.82(4).

9. This addition is based on Richardson v. United States, 526 U.S. 813 (1999). Richardson held that unanimous agreement on the predicate acts was required in prosecutions under a "continuing criminal enterprise" statute which is separate from, but similar to, the RICO statute. Adding it here is by analogy to that situation. The 7th Circuit uniform jury instructions require unanimity under the federal RICO statute. See, http://www.ca7.uscourts.gov/Rules/pjury.pdf.

1883 RACKETEERING ACTIVITY — CONDUCTING OR PARTICIPATING IN AN ENTERPRISE THROUGH A PATTERN OF RACKETEERING ACTIVITY — § 946.83(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Engaging in racketeering activity, as defined by § 946.83(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is employed by or associated with an enterprise and who, directly or indirectly, conducts or participates in the enterprise through a pattern of racketeering activity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of the alleged enterprise) [1] was an enterprise.

   "Enterprise" means any [(sole proprietorship) (partnership) (corporation) (business trust) (union) organized under the laws of this state] [(legal entity) (union) not organized under the laws of this state] [association or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity].[2]

2. The defendant was (employed by) (associated with)[3] (name of the alleged enterprise) .

3. The defendant, directly or indirectly, (conducted) (participated in) (name of the alleged enterprise) through a pattern of racketeering activity.

"Pattern of racketeering activity" means that at least three interrelated felonies occurred within a seven-year period and that these felonies amounted to, or posed a threat of, continued criminal activity.[4]

Felonies are "interrelated" if they have the same or similar intents, results, accomplices, victims or methods of commission, or share other distinguishing characteristics.[5]

Felonies amount to or show a threat of continued criminal activity if they have been or will be part of a regular way of doing business.[6]

In this case, it is alleged that the defendant (conducted) (participated in) an enterprise through the following three felonies: (name the felonies - at least three - they must be listed in sec. 946.82(4)) .

[DEFINE THE ELEMENTS OF EACH CRIME.][7]

All 12 jurors must also be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the same three predicate felonies.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

These are the primary criminal provisions of the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act, which is modeled after the federal Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act. See the Comment to Wis JI Criminal 1881 for discussion of these provisions.

Violations of § 946.83 do not involve a mental element beyond any that may be required for the underlying predicate offenses. State v. Mueller, 201 Wis.2d 121, 145 (Ct. App. 1996). The court found that the absence of a separate intent element in this instruction "buttressed" that conclusion.

1. The instruction is drafted on the assumption that the "enterprise" will be a legitimate or regular business and therefore will have a name that can be used to identify it. If that is not the case, substitute a description of the enterprise for the name.

2. The definition of "enterprise" is taken from the statutory definition found in § 946.82(2). 1900 DISORDERLY CONDUCT — § 947.01

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Disorderly conduct, as defined in § 947.01 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who, in a public or private place, engages in violent, abusive, indecent, profane, boisterous, unreasonably loud, or otherwise disorderly conduct under circumstances in which such conduct tends to cause or provoke a disturbance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant engaged in (violent) (abusive) (indecent) (profane) (boisterous) (unreasonably loud) (or otherwise disorderly) conduct.[1]
2. The conduct of the defendant, under the circumstances as they then existed, tended to cause or provoke a disturbance.

Meaning of "Disorderly Conduct"

"Disorderly conduct" may include physical acts, or language, or both.[2]

[The general phrase "otherwise disorderly conduct" means conduct having a tendency to disrupt good order and provoke a disturbance.[3] It includes all acts and conduct as are of a nature to corrupt the public morals or to outrage the sense of public decency, whether committed by words or acts. Conduct is disorderly although it may not be violent, abusive, indecent, profane, boisterous, or unreasonably loud if it is of a type which tends to disrupt good order and provoke a disturbance.][4]

The principle upon which this offense is based is that in an organized society a person should not unreasonably offend others in the community.[5] This does not mean that all conduct that tends to disturb another is disorderly conduct. Only conduct that unreasonably offends the sense of decency or propriety of the community is included. It does not include conduct that is generally tolerated by the community at large, but that might disturb an oversensitive person.

Meaning of "Tend to Cause or Provoke a Disturbance"

It is not necessary that an actual disturbance must have resulted from the defendant's conduct. The law requires only that the conduct be of a type that tends to cause or provoke a disturbance under the circumstances as they then existed.[6] You must consider not only the nature of the conduct but also the circumstances surrounding that conduct. What is proper under one set of circumstances may be improper under other circumstances. This element requires that the conduct of the defendant, under the circumstances as they then existed, tended to cause or provoke a disturbance.

WHERE THE STATE'S CASE RELIES IN PART ON EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS CARRYING A FIREARM AT THE TIME OF THE ALLEGED OFFENSE, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[7]

[Loading, carrying, or going armed with a firearm does not, by itself, constitute disorderly conduct unless other facts and circumstances indicate a criminal or malicious intent.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1900 was originally published in 1966. Non-substantive revisions and additions to the comment were made in 1989, 1991, 1998, 1999, 2001, 2002, 2004, 2009 and 2022. In 2012, revisions were made that involved the addition of the bracketed material preceding the "Jury's Decision" paragraph to reflect 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" provided in the comment.

In State v. Givens, 28 Wis.2d 109, 135 N.W.2d 780 (1965), the court affirmed the convictions of several civil rights demonstrators on the grounds that the defendant's conduct met the requirements of the disorderly conduct statute as to being disruptive of good order and tending to provoke a disturbance and on the additional grounds that each defendant deliberately and knowingly violated commands of persons in authority. In so ruling, the court held that persons in authority over public buildings must be accorded discretion to regulate conduct therein. In appropriate cases, the jury should be instructed on failure to obey lawful commands of persons in authority as constituting disorderly conduct. See note 4, below.

The application of disorderly conduct and related statutes often involves claims that the exercise of constitutional rights prevents such application or excuses what would otherwise be a criminal violation. For recent discussions, see the following: City of Oak Creek v. King, 148 Wis.2d 532, 436 N.W.2d 285 (1989) (disorderly conduct ordinance); State v. Migliorino, 150 Wis.2d 513, 442 N.W.2d 36 (1989) (criminal trespass to medical facility statute); Milwaukee v. K.F., 145 Wis.2d 24, 426 N.W.2d 329 (1988) (juvenile loitering ordinance); Milwaukee v. Nelson, 149 Wis.2d 434, 439 N.W.2d 562 (1989) (adult loitering ordinance); State v. Dronso, 90 Wis.2d 110, 279 N.W.2d 710 (Ct. App. 1979) (§ 947.01). Also see Texas v. Johnson, 109 S. Ct. 2533 (1989), dealing with the federal flag desecration statute.

In State v. Olsen, 99 Wis.2d 572, 299 N.W.2d 632 (Ct. App. 1980), the defendants were charged with disorderly conduct as a result of demonstrations against a shipment of spent fuel from a nuclear power plant. The court of appeals held that the trial court acted properly in excluding evidence offered by the defendant to show that his conduct was privileged under the defense of necessity as set forth in § 939.47. The court held that necessity is limited to the pressure of natural physical forces such as "storms, fires and privations" and, therefore, is not available in the context of a protest against the transportation of spent nuclear fuel. 99 Wis.2d 572, 576.

1. The Committee recommends selecting one of the terms in parentheses where possible but believes it is proper to instruct on all alternatives that are supported by the evidence. The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed this position in Doubek v. Kaul, 2022 WI 31, ¶14, --N.W.2d--, stating that "[T]he language of Wis. Stat. § 947.01(1) is most naturally read as creating a single crime of disorderly conduct, while listing alternative means to satisfy its first element. The focus of the list is any type of conduct that is disorderly." Based on this finding, the court concluded that "Wisconsin's disorderly conduct statute is indivisible, and enumerates different means of committing the same crime." Id.

Speech alone in certain contexts can constitute disorderly conduct. State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶1, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712. Also see State v. Douglas D., 2001 WI 47, ¶3, 243 Wis.2d 204, 626 N.W.2d 725. Verbal or written statements may constitute "abusive conduct" if they "tended to provoke retaliatory conduct on the part of the person or persons to whom the statements were addressed." A.S., ¶29. Also see Douglas D., ¶32. Speech can be considered "otherwise disorderly" if it is of a type that tends to disrupt good order. A.S., ¶33. If the statements constitute threats, they must be "true threats." Douglas D., ¶32; A.S., ¶22. Both A.S. and Douglas D. applied a definition of "true threat" announced in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶29, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins involved a charge under § 940.203, which prohibits threats to a judge. Wis JI-Criminal 1240B, Threat To A Judge, offers the following definition of "true threat," based on Perkins:

> A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.

2. Teske v. State, 256 Wis. 440, 444, 41 N.W.2d 642 (1950).

A common disorderly conduct situation involves directing abusive language to police officers. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has discussed the general principles applicable to this situation in a civil case where a person arrested for disorderly conduct sued the arresting officer for false imprisonment:

> The fact that the abusive language is directed to a policeman or other law enforcement officer and is not overheard by others does not prevent it from being a violation . . . [of a disorderly conduct statute or ordinance].

> However, a police officer cannot provoke a person into a breach of the peace, such as directing abusive language to the police officer, and then arrest him without a warrant. Lane v. Collins, 29 Wis.2d 66, 72, 138 N.W.2d 264 (1965) (footnote omitted).

3. In State v. Givens, 28 Wis.2d 109, 115, 135 N.W.2d 780 (1965), the court held that the phrase "otherwise disorderly conduct" which tends to provoke a disturbance means conduct of a type not previously enumerated in the statute but similar thereto in having a tendency to disrupt good order and to provoke a disturbance. This interpretation rests upon the rule of ejusdem generis. The statute is not unconstitutionally vague.

In State v. Schwebke, 2002 WI 55, 253 Wis.2d 1, 644 N.W.2d 666, the court upheld the application of the disorderly conduct statute to mailings sent by the defendant to three different victims. The conduct can be considered "otherwise disorderly conduct" under § 947.01:

> . . . [T]he disorderly conduct statute does not necessarily require disruptions or disturbances that implicate the public directly. The statute encompasses conduct that tends to cause a disturbance or disruption that is personal or private in nature, as long as there exists the real possibility that this disturbance or disruption will spill over and disrupt the peace, order or safety of the surrounding community as well. Conduct is not punishable under the statute when it tends to cause only personal annoyance to a person. See Douglas D., 2001 WI 47, ¶27. An examination of the circumstances in which the conduct occurred must take place, considering such factors as the location of the conduct, the parties involved, and the manner of the conduct. 2002 WI 55, ¶30.
> . . . [T]he disorderly conduct statute requires, at a minimum, that, when the conduct tends to cause or provoke a disturbance that is private or personal in nature, there must exist the real possibility that this disturbance will spill over and cause a threat to the surrounding community as well. 2002 WI 55, ¶31.
> . . . [W]e conclude that the disorderly conduct statute was appropriately applied to Schwebke's conduct in this case. In each instance, the conduct at issue, in light of the circumstances, went beyond conduct that merely tended to annoy or cause personal discomfort in another person. In each instance, the mailings constituted conduct that not only caused disturbances to the lives of the recipients, but the conduct was of the type that would be disruptive to peace and good order in the community. 2002 WI 55, ¶32.

4. The paragraph in brackets is intended for use primarily where the "otherwise disorderly conduct" alternative is used. In Teske v. State, supra, the court quotes this definition from 17 Am. Jur. Disorderly Conduct § 1 (1957), which is also adopted by the court in State v. Givens, supra.

In City of Oak Creek v. King, 148 Wis.2d 532, 436 N.W.2d 285 (1989), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed the application of a disorderly conduct ordinance (modeled after § 947.01) to a television reporter who refused to obey police orders to leave the scene of the 1985 Midwest Express airplane crash. The court held that the defendant's conduct violated the statute under the "otherwise disorderly" provision. There was a legitimate need to maintain control at the crash site, which was threatened by the defendant's refusal to obey the police order to stay out of the restricted area. The conduct tended to cause a disturbance because others may have followed the defendant if he had been allowed to disobey the officer.

5. This statement is based on the decision in State v. Givens, supra, where the court quoted from the comment to a proposed disorderly conduct section contained in Volume V, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 208 (Wis. Legislative Council, February 1953). The 1999 revision made minor changes in this statement in the interest of clarity; no change in meaning was intended.

Deciding whether conduct "unreasonably" offends the sense of decency or propriety of the community may be aided by comparing the harm to the public and the social value of the defendant's conduct.

An instruction attempting to explain this comparison might read as follows:

> In determining whether the conduct "unreasonably" offends the public sense of decency and propriety, you should weigh the degree to which decency and propriety were offended by the conduct against any contribution to the public interest made by the conduct. In this case, (here specify the reason the conduct was engaged in). [EXAMPLE: In this case the defendant has testified that he engaged in the conduct in order to protest the Viet Nam War.] Conduct unreasonably offends the public sense of decency and propriety if, but only if, the harm to the public outweighs the social value achieved by the defendant's conduct.

6. This statement is found in the comment to proposed § 347.01 in Volume V, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 208 (Wis. Legislative Council, February 1953). The phrase "tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace," as found in § 943.145, Criminal Trespass To A Medical Facility, was discussed in State v. Migliorino, 150 Wis.2d 513, 442 N.W.2d 36 (1989).

7. Section 947.01 was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35, the "licensed carry" law. The current statute was renumbered § 947.01(1) and a new subsection (2) was created to read:

> (2) Unless other facts and circumstances that indicate a criminal or malicious intent on the part of the person apply, a person is not in violation of, and may not be charged with a violation of, this section for loading, carrying, or going armed with a firearm, without regard to whether the firearm is loaded or is concealed or openly carried.

The Committee concluded that the new provision is best addressed by adding a statement for cases where there is evidence that the defendant was carrying a firearm at the time of the alleged disorderly conduct.

The phrase "criminal or malicious intent" is used in new sub. (2) of § 947.01. The Committee concluded that "criminal intent" means "intent to commit a crime." "Malicious" does not have an established meaning in the current Wisconsin Criminal Code [with one exception: see § 940.41(1r), that is not applicable here].

1901 DISRUPTING A FUNERAL OR MEMORIAL SERVICE — § 947.011(2)(a)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Disrupting a funeral or memorial service, as defined in § 947.011(2)(a)1. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who engages in disorderly conduct (during a funeral or memorial service) (during the 60 minutes immediately preceding the scheduled starting time of a funeral or memorial service) (during the 60 minutes immediately following a funeral or memorial service),[1] within 500 feet of any entrance to a facility being used for the service, and with intent to disrupt the service.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant engaged in (violent) (abusive) (indecent) (profane) (boisterous) (unreasonably loud) (or otherwise disorderly) conduct.[2]
2. The conduct of the defendant, under the circumstances as they then existed, tended to cause or provoke a disturbance.
3. The conduct of the defendant occurred (during a funeral or memorial service) (during the 60 minutes immediately preceding the scheduled starting time of a funeral or memorial service) (during the 60 minutes immediately following a funeral or memorial service).[3]

4. The conduct of the defendant occurred within 500 feet of any entrance to a facility being used for the service.

5. The defendant engaged in the conduct with intent to disrupt the service.

Meaning of "Disorderly Conduct"

"Disorderly conduct" may include physical acts, language, or both.[4]

[The general phrase "otherwise disorderly conduct" means conduct having a tendency to disrupt good order and provoke a disturbance.[5] It includes all acts and conduct as are of a nature to corrupt the public morals or to outrage the sense of public decency, whether committed by words or acts. Conduct is disorderly, although it may not be violent, abusive, indecent, profane, boisterous, or unreasonably loud if it is of a type that tends to disrupt good order and provoke a disturbance.][6]

The principle upon which this offense is based is that in an organized society, a person should not unreasonably offend others in the community.[7] This does not mean that all conduct that tends to disturb another is disorderly conduct. Only conduct that unreasonably offends the sense of decency or propriety of the community is included. It does not include conduct that is generally tolerated by the community at large, but that might disturb an oversensitive person.

Meaning of "Tend to Cause or Provoke a Disturbance"

It is not necessary that an actual disturbance must have resulted from the defendant's conduct. The law requires only that the conduct be of a type that tends to cause or provoke a disturbance under the circumstances as they then existed.[8] You must consider not only the nature of the conduct but also the circumstances surrounding that conduct. What is proper under one set of circumstances may be improper under other circumstances. This element requires that the conduct of the defendant, under the circumstances as they then existed, tended to cause or provoke a disturbance.

Deciding About Intent To Disrupt

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1901 was approved by the Committee in June 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" provided in the comment.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 947.011(2)(a)1. Section 947.011 was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 114; effective date: March 1, 2006.

Act 114 created six offenses. Subsection (2)(a) defines two offenses: subd. 1. prohibits engaging in disorderly conduct within 500 feet and 60 minutes of a funeral service with intent to disrupt the service. This is the offense addressed by this instruction. Subsection (2)(a)2. prohibits intentionally blocking access to a facility being used for a service; an instruction has not been drafted for this violation. Subsection (2)(b) prohibits impeding vehicles with intent to disrupt a funeral process; see Wis JI Criminal 1901A. Subsections (2)(c) and (d) define offenses that are the same as subs. (2)(a) and (b), respectively, except that they do not include an intent element. Wis JI Criminal 1901 or 1901A could be adapted for use for those offenses by deleting the intent elements.

Violations of § 947.011 are Class A misdemeanors except that: "Any person who violates sub. (2)(a) or (b) after having been convicted of a violation of this section is guilty of a Class I felony." See sub. (3). Thus, only second offenses charged under sub. (2)(a) or (b) become felonies if the defendant has a prior conviction under any subsection of § 947.011.

1. The Committee recommends selecting the alternative supported by the evidence.

2. Speech alone in certain contexts can constitute disorderly conduct. State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶1, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712. Also see State v. Douglas D., 2001 WI 47, ¶3, 243 Wis.2d 204, 626 N.W.2d 725. Verbal or written statements may constitute "abusive conduct" if they "tended to provoke retaliatory conduct on the part of the person or persons to whom the statements were addressed." A.S., ¶29. Also see Douglas D., ¶32. Speech can be considered "otherwise disorderly" if it is of a type that tends to disrupt good order. A.S., ¶33. If the statements constitute threats, they must be "true threats." Douglas D., ¶32; A.S., ¶22. Both A.S. and Douglas D. applied a definition of "true threat" announced in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶29, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins involved a charge under § 940.203, which prohibits threats to a judge. Wis JI-Criminal 1240B, Threat To A Judge, offers the following definition of "true threat," based on Perkins:

> A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.

3. The Committee recommends selecting the alternative supported by the evidence.

4. Teske v. State, 256 Wis. 440, 444, 41 N.W.2d 642 (1950).

1901A DISRUPTING A FUNERAL OR MEMORIAL SERVICE: IMPEDING VEHICLES — § 947.011(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Disrupting a funeral or memorial service, as defined in § 947.011(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who, with intent to disrupt a funeral procession, impedes vehicles that he or she knows are part of the procession.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant impeded vehicles that he or she knew were part of a funeral procession.
2. The defendant impeded vehicles with intent to disrupt a funeral procession.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1901A was approved by the Committee in June 2006.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 947.011(2)(b). Section 947.01 was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 114; effective date: March 1, 2006.

Act 114 created six offenses. Subsection (2)(b) prohibits impeding vehicles with intent to disrupt a funeral process. This is the offense addressed by this instruction. Subsection (2)(a) defines two offenses: subd. 1. prohibits engaging in disorderly conduct within 500 feet and 60 minutes of a funeral service with intent to disrupt the service. See Wis JI-Criminal 1901. Subsection (2)(a)2. prohibits intentionally blocking access to a facility being used for a service; an instruction has not been drafted for this violation. Subsections (2)(c) and (d) define offenses that are the same as subs. (2)(a) and (b), respectively, except that they do not include an intent element. Wis JI Criminal 1901 or 1901A could be adapted for use for those offenses by deleting the intent elements.

Violations of § 947.011 are Class A misdemeanors except that: "Any person who violates sub. (2)(a) or (b) after having been convicted of a violation of this section is guilty of a Class I felony." See sub. (3). Thus, only second offenses charged under sub. (2)(a) or (b) become felonies if the defendant has a prior conviction under any subsection of § 947.011.

1902 UNLAWFUL USE OF TELEPHONE — § 947.012(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of telephone, as defined in § 947.012(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to frighten, intimidate, threaten, abuse or harass, makes a telephone call and threatens to inflict injury or physical harm to any person or the property of any person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant made a telephone call to (name of victim).
2. In making the telephone call to (name of victim), the defendant intended to[1] (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass)[2] (name of victim).

   "With intent to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass)" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass) another person or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[3]
3. In the course of that telephone call, the defendant threatened[4] to inflict (physical harm to) (damage to the property of) any person.

It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1902 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1992, 1996, and 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; it updated case law citations in the comment.

Section 947.012, Unlawful Use Of Telephone, was created by Chapter 131, Laws of 1979. The original statute contained six subsections and was apparently modeled after a federal statute, 47 U.S.C. § 223. The statute was revised by 1991 Wisconsin Act 39, effective August 15, 1991. This instruction is for an offense under subsection (1)(a) of the revised statute; the offense was previously defined in § 947.012(1), 1989 90 Wis. Stats. 1991 Wisconsin Act 39 changed some violations of § 947.012 from crimes to forfeitures. The penalty for this offense was not affected; it is a Class B misdemeanor.

1. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives in parentheses should be elected if possible because it clarifies the issue for the jury. The Committee does not conclude that an instruction joining one or more alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979); and United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

2. "Harassment" is referred to in § 947.013(1m)(b), which identifies one type of harassment penalized by that statute:

> (b) Engages in a course of conduct or repeatedly commits acts which harass or intimidate the person and which serve no legitimate purpose.

The § 947.013(1m)(b) reference is the same as the one used in the harassment restraining order statute, § 813.125(1)(b). The restraining order statute and its definition of harassment were found to be constitutional by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Bachowski v. Salamone, 139 Wis.2d 397, 407 N.W.2d 533 (1987), where the court found the meaning of harassment readily ascertainable by reference to a dictionary: "'Harass' means to worry or impede by repeated attacks, to vex, trouble or annoy continually or chronically, to plague, bedevil, or badger." 139 Wis.2d 397, 407, citing Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1031 (1961).

"Harass" is defined as "to annoy persistently" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

3. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. Wisconsin appellate courts have held that some criminal statutes prohibiting threats must be read to apply only to "true threats." For example, in State v. Robert T., 2008 WI App 22, 307 Wis.2d 488, 746 N.W.2d 564, the court of appeals held that "§ 947.015 must be read with the limitation that only a false bomb scare that constitutes a 'true threat' can be charged." ¶12. State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762, reached the same conclusion for violations of § 940.203, Threat to a judge. Also see State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712, holding that a "true threat" is required for disorderly conduct charges based on threats.

The Committee concluded that a separate definition of "true threat" is not necessary in this instruction because its substance is covered by the second element, which requires that the defendant "intended to frighten, intimidate, threaten, abuse, or harass" the victim.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in State v. Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

1903 UNLAWFUL USE OF TELEPHONE — § 947.012(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of telephone, as defined in § 947.012(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who telephones another and uses any obscene, lewd, or profane language[1] with intent to frighten, intimidate, threaten, or abuse or suggests any lewd or lascivious act.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant made a telephone call to _____.
2. In making the telephone call to _____, the defendant [used obscene, lewd, or profane language] [suggested any lewd or lascivious act].
3. The defendant made the telephone call to _____ with intent to[3] (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) any person at the called number.

   "With intent to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse)" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) another person or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1903 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format.

Section 947.012, Unlawful Use Of Telephone, was created by Chapter 131, Laws of 1979. The original statute contained six subsections and was apparently modeled after a federal statute, 47 U.S.C. § 223. The statute was revised by 1991 Wisconsin Act 39, effective August 15, 1991. This instruction is for an offense under subsection (1)(a) of the revised statute; the offense was previously defined in § 947.012(1), 1989 90 Wis. Stats. 1991 Wisconsin Act 39 changed some violations of § 947.012 from crimes to forfeitures. The penalty for this offense was not affected; it is a Class B misdemeanor.

1. The statute also applies to one who "suggests any lewd or lascivious act." That alternative is not included in this instruction.

2. 1991Wisconsin Act 39 revised the statute to eliminate two alternatives from this subsection ("harass" and "offend") and created new § 947.012(2) which punishes that conduct as a Class B forfeiture.

3. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives in parentheses should be elected if possible because it clarifies the issue for the jury. The Committee does not conclude that an instruction joining one or more alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979); and United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1904 UNLAWFUL USE OF TELEPHONE — § 947.012(1)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of telephone, as defined in § 947.012(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who makes a telephone call, whether or not conversation ensues, without disclosing his or her identity and with intent to abuse[1] or threaten any person at the called number.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant made a telephone call.

   This does not require that any conversation took place.

2. In making the telephone call the defendant did not disclose (his) (her) identity.

3. The defendant made the telephone call to with intent to[2] (abuse) (threaten) any person at the called number.

   "With intent to (abuse) (threaten)" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (abuse) (threaten) another person or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[3]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1904 was originally published in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format.

Section 947.012, Unlawful Use Of Telephone, was created by Chapter 131, Laws of 1979. The original statute contained six subsections and was apparently modeled after a federal statute, 47 U.S.C. § 223. This instruction was for an offense under subsection (5) of the original statute. The section was renumbered subsec. (1)(c) by 1991 Wisconsin Act 39, effective date August 15, 1991. 1991 Wisconsin Act 39 changed some violations of § 947.012 from crimes to forfeitures. The penalty for this offense was not affected; it is a Class B misdemeanor. But see note 1, below.

1. The former statute also prohibited calls made with intent to "harass." The 1991 revision recreated the "harass" version of the offense in subsec. (2)(d) where it is punished as a Class B forfeiture.

2. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives in parentheses should be elected if possible because it clarifies the issue for the jury. The Committee does not conclude that an instruction joining one or more alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979); and United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

1906 UNLAWFUL USE OF TELEPHONE — § 947.012(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of telephone, as defined in § 947.012(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes the telephone of another repeatedly to ring with intent to harass any person at the called number.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant caused the telephone of _____ repeatedly to ring.

   This does not require that any conversation took place.

2. The defendant caused the telephone of _____ repeatedly to ring with intent to harass[1] any person at the called number.

   "With intent to harass" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to harass another person or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1908 UNLAWFUL USE OF A COMPUTERIZED COMMUNICATION SYSTEM — § 947.0125(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system, as defined in § 947.0125(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to frighten, intimidate, threaten, abuse or harass another person, sends a message to the person on [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system, and threatens to inflict injury or physical harm to any person or the property of any person

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant sent a message[1] to (name of victim) on [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system.
2. The defendant sent the message to (name of victim) with intent to[2] (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass)[3] (name of victim).

   "With intent to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass)" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass) another person or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[4]

3. In the message, the defendant threatened[5] to inflict [physical harm to] [damage to the property of] any person.

It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1908 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; it updated case law citations in the comment.

Section 947.0125, Unlawful Use Of Computerized Communication Systems, was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 353. Effective date: June 7, 1996. Violations of subsec. (2) are Class B misdemeanors.

1. "Message" is defined as follows in § 947.0125(1): "any transfer of signs, signals, writing, images, sounds, data, or intelligence of any nature, or any transfer of a computer program." The definition also provides that "computer program" is as defined in § 943.70.

2. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives in parentheses should be elected if possible because it clarifies the issue for the jury. The Committee does not conclude that an instruction joining one or more alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979); and United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

3. "Harassment" is referred to in § 947.013(1m)(b), which identifies one type of harassment penalized by that statute:

(b) Engages in a course of conduct or repeatedly commits acts which harass or intimidate the person and which serve no legitimate purpose.

The § 947.013(1m)(b) reference is the same as the one used in the harassment restraining order statute, § 813.125(1)(b). The restraining order statute and its definition of harassment were found to be constitutional by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Bachowski v. Salamone, 139 Wis.2d 397, 407 N.W.2d 533 (1987), where the court found the meaning of harassment readily ascertainable by reference to a dictionary: "'Harass' means to worry or impede by repeated attacks, to vex, trouble or annoy continually or chronically, to plague, bedevil, or badger." 139 Wis.2d 397, 407, citing Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1031 (1961).

"Harass" is defined as "to annoy persistently" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. Wisconsin appellate courts have held that some criminal statutes prohibiting threats must be read to apply only to "true threats." For example, in State v. Robert T., 2008 WI App 22, 307 Wis.2d 488, 746 N.W.2d 564, the court of appeals held that "§ 947.015 must be read with the limitation that only a false bomb scare that constitutes a 'true threat' can be charged." ¶12. State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762, reached the same conclusion for violations of § 940.203, Threat to a judge. Also see State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712, holding that a "true threat" is required for disorderly conduct charges based on threats.

The Committee concluded that a separate definition of "true threat" is not necessary in this instruction because its substance is covered by the second element, which requires that the defendant "intended to frighten, intimidate, threaten, abuse, or harass" the victim.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in State v. Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

1909 UNLAWFUL USE OF A COMPUTERIZED COMMUNICATION SYSTEM: USE OF OBSCENE LANGUAGE — § 947.0125(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Unlawful use of [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system, as defined in § 947.0125(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to frighten, intimidate, threaten, or abuse another person, sends a message to the person on [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system, and uses any obscene, lewd, or profane language or suggests any lewd or lascivious act.

State's Burden of Proof

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant sent a message[1] to (name of victim) on [an electronic mail] [a computerized communication] system.
2. The defendant sent the message to (name of victim) with intent to[2] (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (name of victim).

   "With intent to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse)" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (frighten) (intimidate) (threaten) (abuse) (harass) another person or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[3]

3. In sending the message, the defendant used any obscene, lewd, or profane language or suggested any lewd or lascivious act.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1910 HARASSMENT: SUBJECTING ANOTHER TO PHYSICAL CONTACT — § 947.013(1r) and (1m)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Harassment, as defined in § 947.013 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is subject to an order under § _____[1] that prohibits or limits contact with another person and who, with intent to harass or intimidate that person, strikes, shoves, kicks, or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts to do the same, and accompanies the conduct with a credible threat that places the person in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. An order under § _____ prohibited or limited the defendant's contact with (name of victim) .
2. The defendant [subjected] [attempted to subject][3] (name of victim) to physical contact.[4]
3. The defendant engaged in the conduct with intent to harass or intimidate (name of victim) .

"With intent to harass or intimidate" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to harass or intimidate another person or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to harass or intimidate another.[5]

4. The defendant's conduct was accompanied by a credible threat that placed (name of victim) in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

"Credible threat" means a threat made with the intent and apparent ability to carry out the threat.[6]

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF ONE THE PENALTY FACTORS SET FORTH IN SUBS. (1t), (1v), OR (1x) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACTOR IS ESTABLISHED[8]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1t)[9]

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[10]

Was the victim of that crime the victim of the crime in this case?

Did the crime in this case occur within 7 years after the previous conviction?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1v)

[Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in electronic format that contained personally identifiable information regarding the victim in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][11]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1x)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[12]

Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][13]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES

Before you may answer "yes", you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1910 was originally published in 1993 and revised in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2002 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is for one type of offense defined in subsec. (1m)(a) of § 947.013 – subjecting another to physical contact. For threats to engage in physical contact, see Wis JI-Criminal 1911.

Prior to the revision of the statute in 1992, there had been no instruction for violations of § 947.013, Harassment, because violations were Class B forfeitures, not crimes. When the statute was amended in 1992 to punish some offenses as misdemeanors and others as felonies, instructions were drafted. The penalties were revised by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective date: February 1, 2003.

Closely related offenses are covered by other statutes. Section 940.32 prohibits "stalking." See Wis JI-Criminal 1248, 1248A, and 1248B. Violations of restraining orders are already made criminal by §§ 813.12, 813.122, and 813.125. See Wis JI-Criminal 2040, which offers a suggested instruction for the three different restraining order offenses recognized by Wisconsin law. In State v. Sveum, 2002 WI App 105, 254 Wis.2d 868, 648 N.W.2d 496, the court held that violations of restraining orders are not lesser included offenses of charges under § 947.013(1r).

A violation of § 943.017(1r) is a Class A misdemeanor. The facts identified in sub. (1t) increase the penalty to a Class I felony. The facts identified in subs. (1v) and (1x) increase the penalty to a Class H felony. These penalty classifications take effect February 1, 2003.

The facts specified in subs. (1t), (1v), and (1x) must be submitted to the jury because they increase the statutorily-authorized penalty range. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of harassment under Wis. Stat. § 947.013, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

[State the applicable question.]"

1. Here insert the number of the statute under which the order was entered: § 813.12, § 813.122, or § 813.125. See § 947.013(1r)(b). The validity of the underlying order may not be collaterally attacked in the criminal prosecution for violating the order, absent a showing of fraud in the obtaining of the order. State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992).

2. Identifying the elements of this offense requires combining facts found in several subsections of § 947.013. Subsection (1r) states that it is a Class A misdemeanor if a person "violates subsection (1m) under all the following circumstances":

(a) The act is accompanied by a credible threat that places the victim in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

(b) The act occurs while the actor is subject to an order or injunction under s. 813.12, 813.122 or 813.125 that prohibits or limits his or her contact with the victim.

So two of the elements of the offense are those specified above. The other two are provided in subsection (1m). Subsection (1m)(a) refers to: "Strikes, shoves, kicks or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts or threatens to do the same." This was adapted for the second element. The introductory clause of subsection (1m) refers to engaging in conduct "with intent to harass or intimidate another person." This is used as the third element in the instruction.

3. If a case is based on the claim that the defendant attempted to subject the victim to physical contact, definition of "attempt" should be included. See Wis JI-Criminal 580.

4. The full description of the offense used in the statute provides: "strikes, shoves, kicks, or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts . . . to do the same." The instruction uses only "physical contact" because that term includes the other, more specific, alternatives.

5. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Harass" is defined as "to annoy persistently" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary. Also see footnote 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1912.

"Intimidate" is defined as "to make timid or fearful" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

6. Section 947.013(1)(b). The Wisconsin statutes uses the same definition of "credible threat" that is found in § 646.9 of the California Penal Code, which defines the crime of "stalking."

7. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete definition of "great bodily harm."

8. The questions address the penalty-increasing facts set forth is subs. (1t), (1v), and (1x) of § 943.017.

9. The following three questions address the penalty-increasing provision set forth in sub. (1t) of § 943.017: "Whoever violates sub. (1r) is guilty of a Class I felony if the person has a prior conviction under this subsection or (sub. (1r), (1v), or (1x) or s. 940.32 (2), (2e), (2m), or (3) involving the same victim and the present violation occurs within 7 years of the prior conviction."

10. The applicable crimes are: a violent crime as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.; stalking under § 940.32; or, harassment under § 947.013(1r), (1t), (1v), or (1x).

11. The factor specified in § 947.013(1v) increases the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

Sub. (1)(c) of § 943.017 provides: "'Personally identifiable information' has the meaning given in s. 19.62(5)."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

12. The facts set forth in sub. (1x) increase the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

The applicable crimes are: violations § 947.013(1r), (1t), or (1v); or, violations of § 940.32(2), (2e), (2m), or (3).

13. Note that this fact is not worded in the same manner as the similar fact in sub. (1v). This statement requires only access to a "record," not a "record in electronic format that contains personally identifiable information regarding the victim."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

1911 HARASSMENT: THREATENING PHYSICAL CONTACT WITH ANOTHER — § 947.013(1r) and (1m)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Harassment, as defined in § 947.013 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is subject to an order under § _____[1] that prohibits or limits contact with another person and who, with intent to harass or intimidate that person, makes a credible threat of physical contact that places the person in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. An order under § _____ prohibited or limited the defendant's contact with (name of victim).
2. The defendant made a credible threat of physical contact[3] that placed (name of victim) in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

   "Credible threat" means a threat made with the intent to carry out the threat and with the apparent ability to do so.[4]

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[5]

3. The defendant made the threat with intent to harass or intimidate (name of victim) .

"With intent to harass or intimidate" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to harass or intimidate another person or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to harass or intimidate another.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF ONE THE PENALTY FACTORS SET FORTH IN SUBS. (1t), (1v), OR (1x) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACTOR IS ESTABLISHED[7]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1t)[8]

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[9]

Was the victim of that crime the victim of the crime in this case?

Did the crime in this case occur within 7 years after the previous conviction?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1v)

[Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in electronic format that contained personally identifiable information regarding the victim in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][10]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1x)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[11]

Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][12]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1910.1 in 1993 and republished without change in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2002; it renumbered the instruction, adopted a new format and made nonsubstantive changes in the text.

This instruction is for one type of offense defined in subsec. (1m)(a) of § 947.013 – threats to engage in physical contact. For subjecting another to physical contact, see Wis JI-Criminal 1910.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1910 for general information about § 947.013.

The facts specified in subs. (1t), (1v), and (1x) must be submitted to the jury because they increase the statutorily-authorized penalty range. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of harassment under Wis. Stat. § 947.013, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

[State the applicable question.]"

1. Here insert the number of the statute under which the order was entered: § 813.12, § 813.122, or § 813.125. See § 947.013(1r)(b). The validity of the underlying order may not be collaterally attacked in the criminal prosecution for violating the order, absent a showing of fraud in the obtaining of the order. State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992).

2. Identifying the elements of this offense requires combining facts found in several subsections of § 947.013. Subsection (1r) states that it is a Class A misdemeanor if a person "violates subsection (1m) under all the following circumstances":

(a) The act is accompanied by a credible threat that places the victim in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

(b) The act occurs while the actor is subject to an order or injunction under s. 813.12, 813.122 or 813.125 that prohibits or limits his or her contact with the victim.

So two of the elements of the offense are those specified above. The other two are provided in subsection (1m). Subsection (1m)(a) refers to: "Strikes, shoves, kicks or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts or threatens to do the same." This was adapted for the second element. The introductory clause of subsection (1m) refers to engaging in conduct "with intent to harass or intimidate another person." This is used as the third element in the instruction.

3. The full description of the offense used in the statute provides: "strikes, shoves, kicks, or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts or threatens to do the same." The instruction uses only "physical contact" because that term includes the other, more specific, alternatives.

4. This is the definition provided in § 947.013(1)(b). It is modeled after § 646.9 of the California Penal Code.

As described in the comment preceding note 1, supra, the instruction collapses into one element two statements that result from a literal reading of the statute. Subsection (1m)(a) refers to a threat of physical contact; subsection (1r)(a) refers to accompanying a violation of sub. (1m) with a "credible threat." Thus, a literal reading would require a "threat accompanied by a credible threat." The Committee concluded that the statute does not require proof of two separate threats. Rather, reading the subsections together indicates that what is required is a threat made under such circumstances that it is a "credible threat," as defined in § 947.013(1)(b).

5. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete definition of "great bodily harm."

6. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Harass" is defined as "to annoy persistently" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary. Also see footnote 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1912.

"Intimidate" is defined as "to make timid or fearful" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

7. The questions address the penalty-increasing facts set forth in subs. (1t), (1v), and (1x) of § 943.017.

8. The following three questions address the penalty-increasing provision set forth in sub. (1t) of § 943.017: "Whoever violates sub. (1r) is guilty of a Class I felony if the person has a prior conviction under this subsection or (sub. (1r), (1v), or (1x) or s. 940.32 (2), (2e), (2m), or (3) involving the same victim and the present violation occurs within 7 years of the prior conviction."

9. The applicable crimes are: a violent crime as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.; stalking under § 940.32; or, harassment under § 947.013(1r), (1t), (1v), or (1x).

10. The factor specified in § 947.013(1v) increases the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

Sub. (1)(c) of § 943.017 provides: "'Personally identifiable information' has the meaning given in s. 19.62(5)."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

11. The facts set forth in sub. (1x) increase the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

The applicable crimes are: violations § 947.013(1r), (1t), or (1v); or, violations of § 940.32(2), (2e), (2m), or (3).

12. Note that this fact is not worded in the same manner as the similar fact in sub. (1v). This statement requires only access to a "record," not a "record in electronic format that contains personally identifiable information regarding the victim."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

1912 HARASSMENT: ENGAGING IN A COURSE OF CONDUCT WHICH HARASSES OR INTIMIDATES ANOTHER — § 947.013(1r) and (1m)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Harassment, as defined in § 947.013 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is subject to an order under § _____[1] that prohibits or limits contact with another person and who, with intent to harass or intimidate that person, engages in a course of conduct which harasses or intimidates the person, serves no legitimate purpose, and is accompanied by a credible threat that places the person in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. An order under § _____ prohibited or limited the defendant's contact with (name of victim) .
2. The defendant engaged in a course of conduct which harassed[3] or intimidated[4] (name of victim) and which served no legitimate purpose.

   A course of conduct is a series of acts over a period of time, however short, showing a continuity of purpose.[5]

3. The defendant engaged in the conduct with intent to harass or intimidate (name of victim) .

"With intent to harass or intimidate" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to harass or intimidate another person or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to harass or intimidate another.[6]

4. The defendant's conduct was accompanied by a credible threat that placed (name of victim) in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

"Credible threat" means a threat made with the intent to carry out the threat and with the apparent ability to do so.[7]

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[8]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF ONE THE PENALTY FACTORS SET FORTH IN SUB. (1t) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACTOR IS ESTABLISHED[9]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1t)[10]

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[11]

Was the victim of that crime the victim of the crime in this case?

Did the crime in this case occur within 7 years after the previous conviction?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1v)

[Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in electronic format that contained personally identifiable information regarding the victim in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][12]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1x)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime) ?[13]

Did the defendant intentionally gain access to a record in order the facilitate the crime in this case?][14]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES

Before you may answer "yes", you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1912 was originally published in 1993 and revised in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2002 and involved adoption of a new format.

See the Comment to Wis JI Criminal 1910 for general information about § 947.013.

A violation of § 943.017 is a Class A misdemeanor. The facts identified in subs. (1t) increase the penalty to a Class I felony. The facts identified in sub. (1v) and (1x) increase the penalty to a Class H felony. These penalty classifications take effect February 1, 2003.

The facts must be submitted to the jury because they increase the statutorily-authorized penalty range. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of harassment under Wis. Stat. § 947.013, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

[State the applicable question.]"

1. Here insert the number of the statute under which the order was entered: § 813.12, § 813.122, or § 813.125. See § 947.013(1r)(b). The validity of the underlying order may not be collaterally attacked in the criminal prosecution for violating the order, absent a showing of fraud in the obtaining of the order. State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992).

2. Identifying the elements of this offense requires combining facts found in several subsections of § 947.013. Subsection (1r) states that it is a Class A misdemeanor if a person violates subsection (1m) under "all the following circumstances":

(a) The act is accompanied by a credible threat that places the victim in reasonable fear of death or great bodily harm.

(b) The act occurs while the actor is subject to an order or injunction under s. 813.12, 813.122 or 813.125 that prohibits or limits his or her contact with the victim.

So two of the elements of the offense are those specified above. The other two are provided in subsection (1m). Subsection (1m)(a) states: "Engages in a course of conduct which harasses or intimidates the person and serves no legitimate purpose." This is used in the second element. [An alternative is provided in (1m)(a): "Strikes, shoves, kicks or otherwise subjects the person to physical contact or attempts or threatens to do the same." See Wis JI-Criminal 1910.] The introductory clause of subsection (1m) refers to engaging in conduct "with intent to harass or intimidate another person." This is used as the third element in the instruction.

3. The way "harass" is used in § 947.013(1m)(b) is the same as that used in the harassment restraining order statute, § 813.125(1)(b). The restraining order statute was found to be constitutional by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Bachowski v. Salamone, 139 Wis.2d 397, 407 N.W.2d 533 (1987), where the court found the meaning of harassment readily ascertainable by reference to a dictionary: "'Harass' means to worry and impede by repeated attacks, to vex, trouble or annoy continually or chronically, to plague, bedevil, or badger." 139 Wis.2d 397, 407 citing Webster's Third New International Dictionary 1031 (1961).

"Harass" is defined as "to annoy persistently" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

4. "Intimidate" is defined as "to make timid or fearful" in Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

5. This definition is based on the one provided in § 947.013(1)(a), which reads as follows:

"Course of conduct" means a pattern of conduct composed of a series of acts over a period of time, however short, evidencing a continuity of purpose.

6. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

For a discussion of the meaning of "harass" and "intimidate," see notes 3 and 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1912.

7. This definition is based on the one provided in § 947.013(1)(b), which reads as follows:

"Credible threat" means a threat made with the intent and apparent ability to carry out the threat.

8. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete discussion of the definition of "great bodily harm."

9. The questions address the penalty-increasing facts set forth is subs. (1t), (1v), and (1x) of § 943.017.

10. The following three questions address the penalty-increasing provision set forth in sub. (1t) of § 943.017: "Whoever violates sub. (1r) is guilty of a Class I felony if the person has a prior conviction under this subsection or (sub. (1r), (1v), or (1x) or s. 940.32 (2), (2e), (2m), or (3) involving the same victim and the present violation occurs within 7 years of the prior conviction."

11. The applicable crimes are: a violent crime as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.; stalking under § 940.32; or, harassment under § 947.013(1r), (1t), (1v), or (1x).

12. The factor specified in § 947.013(1v) increases the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

Sub. (1)(c) of § 943.017 provides: "'Personally identifiable information' has the meaning given in s. 19.62(5)."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

13. The facts set forth in sub. (1x) increase the penalty to that for a Class H felony.

The applicable crimes are: violations § 947.013(1r), (1t), or (1v); or, violations of § 940.32(2), (2e), (2m), or (3).

14. Note that this fact is not worded in the same manner as the similar fact in sub. (1v). This statement requires only access to a "record," not a "record in electronic format that contains personally identifiable information regarding the victim."

Sub. (1)(d) of § 943.017 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

1919 SWATTING — § 947.014

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Swatting, as defined in section 947.014 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally conveys or causes to be conveyed any false information that an emergency exists, which elicited, or could elicit a response from a specialized tactical team, knowing such information to be false.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (conveyed) (caused to be conveyed) information concerning the existence of an emergency.

   "Emergency" means [Specify type of emergency as provided in 947.014(1)(b)].[1]

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to (convey) or (cause to be conveyed) information that an emergency exists.[2]

2. The information was false.

3. The defendant knew that the information was false. This requires only that the defendant believed that the information was false.[3]

4. The information (elicited) (could have elicited) a response from a specialized tactical team.

A "specialized tactical team" means a special weapons and tactics team or tactical response team that is designated by a law enforcement agency and whose members are recruited, selected, trained, equipped, and assigned to resolve critical incidents that involve a threat to public safety.[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS H OR E FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE PENALTY-INCREASING FACT IS PRESENT[5]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

(Did the violation result in bodily harm to any person?)

(Did the violation result in great bodily harm to any person?)

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1919 approved by the Committee in June 2020.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 947.014, created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 132 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

The offense is a Class I felony, unless the violation "resulted in bodily harm to any person," in which case the penalty increases to a Class H felony. If the violation "resulted great bodily harm to any person," the penalty increases to a Class E felony. § 947.014(3).

1. Section 947.014(1)(b) provides: "Emergency" means any of the following:
    1. A condition that results in or could result in the response of a law enforcement officer, tribal law enforcement officer, state-certified commission warden, fire fighter, emergency medical responder, or emergency medical services practitioner in an authorized emergency vehicle, aircraft, or vessel.
    2. A condition that jeopardizes or could jeopardize public safety and results in or could result in the evacuation of any area, building, structure, or vehicle.

2. "Intentionally" means that the actor has the mental purpose to cause the result specified or "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." § 939.23(3) The "mental purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. For discussion of the "practically certain" alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

3. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'"

4. Section 947.014(1)(h).

5. The special question addresses the penalty-increasing facts that are provided in § 947.014(3). A violation resulting in bodily harm to any person is a Class H felony. An offense resulting in great bodily harm to any person is a Class E felony.

1920 BOMB SCARES — § 947.015

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Bomb scare, as defined in section 947.015 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally conveys or causes to be conveyed any threat or false information, knowing such to be false, concerning an attempt or alleged attempt being made or to be made to destroy any property by means of explosives.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (conveyed) (caused to be conveyed) (a threat) (information) concerning an attempt or alleged attempt (being made) (to be made) to destroy any property by means of explosives.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to convey or cause to be conveyed (a threat) (information) concerning an attempt or alleged attempt (being made) (to be made) to destroy property by means of explosives.[1]

   FOR CASES INVOLVING A THREAT ADD THE FOLLOWING.[2]

   [A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires that a reasonable person making the threat would foresee that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in making this determination.]

2. The (threat) (information) was false.[3]

3. The defendant knew that the (threat) (information) was false. This requires only that the defendant believed that the (threat) (information) was false.[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1920 was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1905 in 1971. It was renumbered and republished without change in 1987 and revised in April 1993. The instruction was revised in 2008. This revision was approved in 2020; it added to the comment.

In State v. Van Ark, 62 Wis.2d 155, 215 N.W.2d 41 (1974), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a violation of § 947.015 was not a lesser included offense of what was then endangering safety by conduct regardless of life. The current counterpart to that offense is Recklessly Endangering Safety under § 941.30.

1. "Intentionally" means that the actor has the mental purpose to cause the result specified or "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." § 939.23(3) The "mental purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. For discussion of the "practically certain" alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

2. In State v. Robert T., 307 Wis.2d 488, 746 N.W.2d 564 (2008), the court of appeals held that "§ 947.015 must be read with the limitation that only a false bomb scare that constitutes a 'true threat' can be charged." ¶12. The definition of "threat" in the instruction is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. State v. Robert T. cited Perkins with approval. The Committee concluded that the term "true threat" is a constitutional term of art that need not be communicated to the jury in a situation like the one covered by this instruction where it could be especially confusing given the requirement that the threat be false.

Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

3. Although the statute does not specify that the threat be "false," the Committee is satisfied this is implied by the next clause referring to the actor to "knowing such to be false."

This conclusion is bolstered by the decision in State v. Van Ark, supra. In concluding that a violation of § 947.015 was not a lesser included offense of what was then called endangering safety by conduct regardless of life, the court identified the elements of § 947.015 as follows:

> It is apparent from a comparison of the two statutes that sec. 947.015, Stats., is not an included crime in sec. 941.30 because it does require proof of additional facts, namely, the conveyance of a false bomb threat and knowledge that it is false. The state would be required to prove under sec. 941.30 that the "bomb" was imminently dangerous and under sec. 947.015 that the "bomb" was false or inoperable.

62 Wis.2d 155, 164

4. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'"

1925A INTENTIONAL TERRORIST THREATS — § 947.019(1)(a) - (d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Making a terrorist threat, as defined in § 947.019 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who threatens to cause the death of or bodily harm to any person or to damage any person's property and who intends to (prevent the occupation of or cause the evacuation of a building)[1] (cause public inconvenience) (cause public panic or fear) (cause an interruption or impairment of governmental operations).[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant threatened to cause the death of or bodily harm to any person or to damage any person's property.

   A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.[3]

2. The defendant intended to (prevent the occupation of or cause the evacuation of a building) (cause public inconvenience) (cause public panic or fear) (cause an interruption or impairment of governmental operations).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1925A was approved by the Committee in December 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

This instruction is drafted for violations of sec. 947.019(1)(a) - (d), created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 311 [effective date: April 1, 2016]. Each subsection requires intent to cause the specified result. Violations of sub. (1)(e), which involve recklessness instead of intent, are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1925B.

The offense is a Class I felony unless the violation "contributes to any individual's death," in which case the penalty increases to a Class G felony. Sec. 947.019(2).

1. In addition to applying to a "building," the statute also applies to "dwelling, school premises, vehicle, facility of public transportation, or place of public assembly or any room within a building, dwelling, or school." The instruction is drafted for "building" because that appears to be the most comprehensive term. If one of the more specific terms applies, it should be substituted here and in the second element.

2. The statute also applies to causing an interruption or impairment of "public communication, of transportation, or of a supply of water, gas, or other public service." The instruction is drafted for impairment of "governmental operations" because that appears to be the most comprehensive term. If one of the more specific terms applies, it should be substituted here and in the second element.

3. Other Wisconsin statutes prohibiting a "threat" have been interpreted to require a "true threat." The definition of "true threat" is based on the one used for the other criminal offenses involving threats and is derived from State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. For a complete explanation of the definition, see footnote 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1240B Threat To A Judge.

1925B RECKLESS TERRORIST THREATS — § 947.019(1)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The making of terrorist threats, as defined in § 947.019 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who threatens to cause the death of or bodily harm to any person or to damage any person's property and creates an unreasonable and substantial risk of (preventing the occupation of or causing the evacuation of a building)[1] (causing public inconvenience) (causing public panic or fear) (causing an interruption or impairment of governmental operations)[2] and is aware of that risk.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant threatened to cause the death of or bodily harm to any person or to damage any person's property.

   A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.[3]

2. The defendant created an unreasonable and substantial risk of (preventing the occupation of or causing the evacuation of a building) (causing public inconvenience) (causing public panic or fear) (causing an interruption or impairment of governmental operations).

3. The defendant was aware of that risk.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1925B was approved by the Committee in December 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

This instruction is drafted for violations of sec. 947.019(1)(e), created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 311 [effective date: April 1, 2016]. Subsection (1)(e) requires creating "an unreasonable and substantial risk" that one of the specified harms will occur and being "aware of that risk," a standard equivalent to criminal recklessness under § 939.25. Violations of sub. (1)(a) - (d), which involve intent instead of recklessness, are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1925A.

1. In addition to applying to a "building," the statute also applies to "dwelling, school premises, vehicle, facility of public transportation, or place of public assembly or any room within a building, dwelling, or school." The instruction is drafted for "building" because that appears to be the most comprehensive term. If one of the more specific terms applies, it should be substituted here and in the second element.

2. The statute also applies to causing an interruption or impairment of "public communication, of transportation, or of a supply of water, gas, or other public service." The instruction is drafted for impairment of "governmental operations" because that appears to be the most comprehensive term. If one of the more specific terms applies, it should be substituted here and in the second element.

1930 FAILURE TO WITHDRAW FROM AN UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY — § 947.06(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 947.06(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person who intentionally fails or refuses to withdraw from an unlawful assembly which the person knows has been ordered to disperse.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. An unlawful assembly existed.

CHOOSE THE ALTERNATIVE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[1]

[An assembly consists of three or more persons. An assembly is unlawful when it causes a disturbance of public order such that it is reasonable to believe[2] that the assembly will cause injury to persons or damage to property unless it is immediately dispersed.][3]

[An assembly consists of three or more[4] persons. An assembly is unlawful when those persons assemble for the purpose of blocking or obstructing the lawful use by any other person of any property and the assembly does in fact block or obstruct the lawful use of such property.][5]

2. The defendant was part of that assembly.[6]

3. The assembly was ordered to disperse by a police officer.[7]

4. The defendant knew that the assembly had been ordered to disperse.[8]

5. The defendant intentionally failed or refused to withdraw from the unlawful assembly.[9]

"Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to fail or refuse to withdraw.[10]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1930 was originally published in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This offense was described as follows in the 1953 Legislative Council Report on the Criminal Code:

> Making assemblies which are likely to result in disorder unlawful is essentially a crime prevention device. An unlawful assembly is basically an assembly which is so dominated by mob psychology that its members are very likely to do acts of violence which as individuals they would not do. One type of unlawful assembly is bent on doing some particular unlawful act. The lynch mob is an example. Another type is best illustrated by the college homecoming riot type of situation. There, the assembly is not bent on any particular unlawful act, but in the process of "letting off steam," the loss of a sense of individual responsibility which results from large numbers acting together is apt to culminate in injury to person or property. The crux of the matter is that most of the people in an unlawful assembly are peaceful citizens who would never commit a violent crime if it were not for the fact that mob psychology dominates their thinking. Therefore, it follows that if the assembly can be dispersed and mob spirit dissipated before violence results, a real step toward preventing crime has been taken.

The constitutionality of § 947.06 was upheld by a three-judge district court panel in Cassidy v. Ceci, 320 F. Supp. 223 (E.D. Wis. 1970). The court held that the statute is not "vague or indefinite, but fairly apprises those required to comply with what 'it commands or forbids.' Lanzetta v. New Jersey, 306 U.S. 451, 453 (1939)." 320 F. Supp. 223, 226. The court also rejected the claim that the statute delegated too much discretion to police: ". . . the enactment with reasonable clarity delimits the officers' discretion in that it authorizes an arrest only where 'it is reasonable to believe' that the disturbance will cause injury. This is akin to the 'probable cause' standard. . . ." 320 F. Supp. 223, 226.

The court also held that the statute does not apply where the disturbance or damage is caused by hostile onlookers, not by the participants in the assembly: ". . . this statute adequately evidences a design to penalize the members of assemblies only when it is their own conduct which causes a disturbance or damage, as distinguished from a disturbance or damage that is caused by militant onlookers." 320 F. Supp. 223, 226. The court cited legislative history for the current version of the statute, indicating that the legislature intended to restate the rule found in Shields v. State, 187 Wis. 448, 204 N.W. 486 (1925).

The Shields decision affirmed the conviction of a man who assaulted a participant in a Ku Klux Klan parade in Boscobel in 1924. In reviewing the case, the court found it "appropriate to consider the legal status of the parade. . . ." The court found that as long as the people in the parade were conducting themselves peacefully, they were not engaged in an unlawful assembly, defined as assembling in such a manner "that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously." The fact that the beliefs and tenets of those in the assembly might be expected to "excite resentment" in observers does not make the assembly unlawful. Thus, the defendant had no right to interfere with the parade and his conviction for assault was allowed to stand.

1. The two definitions of "unlawful assembly" deal with different kinds of conduct. The first involves an assembly that creates a risk of injury or damage. The second involves obstruction of the lawful use of property.

2. "Reasonable to believe" has been likened to the standard of probable cause. See Cassidy v. Ceci, 330 F. Supp. 223 (E.D. Wis. 1970).

3. This is adapted from the last sentence of § 947.06(1). Note that there are three parts to this definition of an unlawful assembly: (1) it must consist of three or more persons; (2) it must be causing a disturbance of public order; and (3) it must be reasonable to believe that the assembly will cause personal injury or property damage unless it is immediately dispersed.

4. Including the requirement that there be three or more persons in this second definition is based on the reference in § 947.06(2) that an unlawful assembly "includes" an assembly as described in that subsection. The Committee interpreted this as a reference to incorporating the "three or more" requirement from the definition of unlawful assembly in subsection (1). While common law definitions of unlawful assembly vary, it was common that they required three or more persons. 1953 Report on the Criminal Code, p. 217. Also see Black's Law Dictionary (7th Edition), referring to unlawful assembly at common law as the meeting together of three or more persons.

5. This is adapted from the alternative definition of "unlawful assembly" provided in § 947.06(2).

6. This element is implicit in the definition of the crime, which penalizes refusal to withdraw from an unlawful assembly.

7. Section 947.06(1) provides that an order to disperse may be given by "sheriffs, their undersheriffs, and deputies, constables, marshals, and police officers." If other than a police officer is involved, the proper title should be substituted.

8. The definition of the crime refers to an assembly "which the person knows has been ordered to disperse." § 947.06(3). The knowledge requirement also results from the use of "intentionally" at the beginning of that section. See § 939.23(3).

9. The essence of this offense is the refusal to disperse when ordered to do so.

> While no crime has been committed under this section until there has been a refusal to comply with a lawful order to disperse, this section does not confer immunity on persons who commit some other crime while members of an unlawful assembly. Individual members of the assembly may be guilty of disorderly conduct, of conspiracies or attempts, or even of criminal damage to property or of homicide if the assembly has progressed to that stage. In this section, however, the emphasis is on the preventive police measures and obstruction to those measures.

1953 Report on the Criminal Code p. 216.

10. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" definition of intent is most likely to apply in the context of this offense. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1960 was originally published in 1967 and was revised in 1980.

Wis JI-Criminal 1961 was originally published in 1981.

Both instructions were withdrawn in 1989 because the statute with which they deal was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. The conduct covered by the repealed statutes is prohibited by two new statutes. See § 948.21, Neglecting A Child (Wis JI-Criminal 2150) and § 948.40, Contributing To The Delinquency Of A Child (Wis JI-Criminal 2170, 2170A, and 2171).

1980 MISTREATING AN ANIMAL — §§ 951.02 and 951.18(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Mistreating an animal, as defined in §§ 951.02 and 951.18 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (intentionally) (negligently)[1] treats any animal in a cruel manner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant treated an animal[2] in a cruel manner.

   "Cruel" means causing (unnecessary and excessive pain or suffering) (unjustifiable injury or death).[3]

2. The defendant (intentionally) (negligently) treated an animal in a cruel manner.

   ["Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to treat the animal in a cruel manner or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.][4]

   ["Negligently" requires that the defendant's conduct amounted to "criminal negligence."[5] "Criminal negligence" means:

   - the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and

- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED[6]

If you find the defendant intentionally treated an animal in a cruel manner, you must answer the following question:

["Did treating the animal in a cruel manner result in the (mutilation) (disfigurement) (death) of the animal?"][7]

["Did the defendant cause injury to the animal and know that the animal was used by a law enforcement agency to perform agency functions or duties?"][8]

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to the question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1980 was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1986, 1989, 1995, and 2005. The 2005 revision adopted a new format and changed the definition of "negligently." The 2012 revision updated the Comment and footnote 2. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2012; it added to the text for felony offenses and added to footnote 4.

1987 Wisconsin Act 332 renumbered the chapter containing crimes against animals from Chapter 948 to Chapter 951. The effective date of the change was July 1, 1989.

2011 Wisconsin Act 32 made changes in Chapter 951 relating to its application to scientific research. § 951.02 Mistreating Animals was amended to read as follows:

> No person may treat any animal, whether belonging to the person or another, in a cruel manner. This section does not prohibit ~~bona fide experiments carried on for scientific research or~~ normal and accepted veterinary practices.

And, § 951.015(3) was created to provide that the chapter does not apply to research pursuant to a procedure approved by an educational or research institution.

Simple violations of the statutes relating to cruelty to animals are Class C forfeitures. When a person "intentionally or negligently violates" the statutes, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor. See § 951.18(1). Section 951.18(1) further provides for a felony penalty in two circumstances: "Any person who intentionally violates s. 951.02, resulting in the mutilation, disfigurement, or death of an animal, is guilty of a Class I felony"; and, "Any person who intentionally violates § 951.02 or 951.06, knowing that the animal that is the victim is used by a law enforcement agency to perform agency functions or duties and causing injury to the animal, is guilty of a Class I felony."

If the felony offense is charged, the Committee suggests adding a special question to address the penalty-increasing fact.

Chapter 951 applies to individuals who used snowmobiles to run down and kill deer. Criminal charges are not superceded by regulations relating to hunting in Chapter 29, Wisconsin Statutes. State v. Kuenzi, 2011 WI App 30, ¶3, 332 Wis.2d 299, 796 N.W.2d 222.

1. "Intentionally" or "negligently" violating the statutes relating to cruelty to animals makes the conduct criminal (see Comment, supra). The instruction is drafted on the premise that one of the alternatives will be selected.

2. The following definition is provided in § 951.01(1):

(1) "Animal" includes every living:
(a) Warm-blooded creature, except a human being;
(b) Reptile; or
(c) Amphibian.

"The definition of 'animal' is based on § 346.20, Minn. Stats. Anno. (1971). The term includes not only animals strictly so-called but birds and other living warm-blooded creatures except people." Legislative Council Note to 1973 Senate Bill 16.

The definition of "animal" includes non-captive wild animals, such as deer. State v. Kuenzi, 2011 WI App 30, ¶17, 332 Wis.2d 299, 796 N.W.2d 222.

3. This definition is provided in § 951.01(2).

4. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. A charge of intentionally mistreating an animal, resulting in death, under §§ 951.02 and 951.18(1) requires proof of intent to treat the animal in a cruel manner; the state does not have to prove the defendant intended to cause the animal's death. State v. Klingelhoets, 2012 WI App 55, 341 Wis.2d 432, 814 N.W.2d 885.

5. The Committee concluded that "criminal negligence" applies to this offense because § 939.25(2) states: "If criminal negligence is an element of a crime in chs. 939 to 951 . . . the negligence is indicated by the term "negligent" or "negligently." This offense is defined in §§ 951.02 and 951.18 and the latter uses the term "negligently."

If reference to ordinary negligence is believed to be helpful in defining "criminal negligence," see Wis JI-Criminal 925.

6. Intentionally treating an animal in a cruel manner becomes a Class I felony in two situations. See footnotes 7 and 8, below. The Committee recommends that the penalty increasing fact be submitted to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict; one of the bracketed questions should be included:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of mistreating an animal, under Wis. Stat. § 951.02, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

["Did treating the animal in a cruel manner result in the (mutilation) (disfigurement) (death) of the animal?"]

["Did the defendant cause injury to the animal and know that the animal was used by a law enforcement agency to perform agency functions or duties?"]

7. Section 951.18(1) provides: "Any person who intentionally violates s. 951.02, resulting the mutilation, disfigurement or death of an animal, is guilty of a Class I felony."

8. Section 951.18(1) provides: "Any person who intentionally violates s. 951.02 or 951.06, knowing that the animal that is the victim is used by a law enforcement agency to perform agency functions or duties and causing injury to the animal, is guilty of a Class I felony."

1981 HARASSMENT OF POLICE OR FIRE ANIMALS — §§ 951.095 and 951.18(2m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sections 951.095 and 951.18(2m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin are violated by one who causes injury to an animal that is used by a law enforcement agency or fire department to perform agency or department functions by intentionally striking, shoving, kicking, or otherwise subjecting the animal to physical contact and knows that the animal is used by a law enforcement agency to perform agency functions.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name animal) was an animal used by a (law enforcement agency) (fire department) to perform (agency) (department) functions.
2. The defendant knew that the animal was used by a (law enforcement agency) (fire department) to perform (agency) (department) functions.
3. The defendant intentionally struck, shoved, kicked, or otherwise subjected the animal to physical contact.
4. Striking, shoving, kicking, or otherwise subjecting the animal to physical contact caused injury to the animal.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

1987 Wisconsin Act 332 renumbered the chapter containing crimes against animals from Chapter 948 to Chapter 951. The effective date of the change was July 1, 1989.

This instruction is drafted for a violation of § 951.095 that is punished as a Class I felony pursuant to § 951.18(2m): "Any person who intentionally violates s. 951.095, knowing that the animal that is the victim is used by a law enforcement agency or fire department to perform agency or department functions or duties and causing injury to the animal, is guilty of a Class I felony."

Simple violations of § 951.095 are punished as Class B forfeitures. When a person "intentionally or negligently violates" the statute, the punishment is that of a Class A misdemeanor. See § 951.18(2m). Section 951.18(2m) further provides for another felony penalty in addition to the offense addressed by this instruction: "Any person who intentionally violates s. 951.095, knowing that the animal that is the victim is used by a law enforcement agency or fire department to perform agency or department functions or duties and causing death to the animal, is guilty of a Class H felony."

1982 FAILING TO PROVIDE AN ANIMAL WITH SUFFICIENT FOOD AND WATER — §§ 951.13 and 951.18(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failing to provide an animal with sufficient food and water, as defined in §§ 951.13 and 951.18 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who owns or is responsible for confining or impounding an animal and (intentionally) (negligently)[1] fails to supply the animal with a sufficient supply of food and water.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (owned) (was responsible for confining) an animal.[2]
2. The defendant failed to supply the animal with a sufficient supply of food and water.
3. The defendant (intentionally) (negligently) failed to supply the animal with a sufficient supply of food and water.

   ["Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to fail to supply the animal with a sufficient supply of food and water or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.][3]

["Negligently" requires that the defendant's conduct amounted to "criminal negligence."[4] "Criminal negligence" means:

- the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1982 was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1989 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved adoption of a new format and a change in the definition of "negligently."

1987 Wisconsin Act 332 renumbered the chapter containing crimes against animals from Chapter 948 to Chapter 951. The effective date of the change was July 1, 1989.

Simple violations of the statutes relating to cruelty to animals are punished as Class C forfeitures. When a person "intentionally or negligently violates" the statutes, the punishment is that of a Class A misdemeanor. See § 951.18(1). Section 951.18(1) further provides for a felony penalty in certain circumstances that do not apply to violations of § 951.13, the statute addressed by this instruction.

1. "Intentionally" or "negligently" violating the statutes relating to cruelty to animals makes the conduct criminal (see Comment, supra). The instruction is drafted on the premise that one of the alternatives will be selected.

2. The following definition is provided in § 951.01(1):

(1) "Animal" includes every living:
(a) Warm-blooded creature, except a human being;
(b) Reptile; or

(c) Amphibian.

"The definition of 'animal' is based on § 346.20, Minn. Stats. Anno. (1971). The term includes not only animals strictly so-called but birds and other living warm-blooded creatures except people." Legislative Council Note to 1973 Senate Bill 16.

3. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. The Committee concluded that "criminal negligence" applies to this offense because § 939.25(2) states: "If criminal negligence is an element of a crime in chs. 939 to 951 . . . the negligence is indicated by the term "negligent" or "negligently." This offense is defined in §§ 951.02 and 951.18 and the latter uses the term "negligently."

If reference to ordinary negligence is believed to be helpful in defining "criminal negligence," see Wis JI-Criminal 925.

1983 DOGNAPPING AND CATNAPPING — §§ 951.03 and 951.18(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

(Dognapping) (Catnapping) as defined in §§ 951.03 and 951.18 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally[1] takes the (dog) (cat) of another from one place to another without the owner's consent.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant took the (dog) (cat) of another from one place to another.
2. The owner of the (dog) (cat) did not consent to the taking.
3. The defendant acted intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to take the (dog) (cat) of another and knew that the (dog) (cat) belonged to another and knew that the owner did not consent to the taking.[3]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1983 was originally published in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is for one type of violation of § 951.03, Dognapping and Catnapping: taking a dog or cat from one place to another without the owner's consent. The violation is punished as a Class A misdemeanor if committed "negligently or intentionally." § 951.18(1).

The statute" does not apply to law enforcement officers or humane society agents engaged in the exercise of their official duties." The Committee concluded that exceptions like this are usually resolved at the pretrial motion stage. It does not become an issue at trial until there is some evidence that the exception may apply. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that "the defendant was not a (law enforcement officer) (humane society agent) engaged in the exercise of official duties." Appropriate additions should be made to the instruction.

1. Violations of § 951.03 become Class A misdemeanors if committed "intentionally or negligently." See § 951.18(1). The instruction uses the term "intentionally," the Committee having concluded that negligent dognappings or catnappings are unlikely to be criminally charged.

2. Section 951.03 also prohibits "caus[ing] such a dog or cat to be confined or carried out of this state or held for any purpose without the owner's consent." These options are not addressed in the instruction, which is drafted for violations involving a taking of the animal. For the other options, reference to the uniform instructions for kidnapping offenses might be helpful. See Wis JI-Criminal 1280 - 1282.

3. The definition of "intentionally" uses the mental purpose alternative, which the Committee believes is most likely to apply to this offense. "Intentionally" also applies to one who is "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. Section 939.23(3) also provides that "intentionally" requires that the "actor have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." With this offense, "intentionally" becomes applicable because it is set forth in the penalty section, § 951.18. See note 1, supra.

1984 FAILING TO PROVIDE AN ANIMAL WITH PROPER SHELTER — §§ 951.14 and 951.18(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failing to provide an animal with proper shelter, as defined in §§ 951.14 and 951.18 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who owns or is responsible for confining or impounding an animal and (intentionally) (negligently)[1] fails to supply the animal with proper shelter.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (owned) (was responsible for confining) an animal.[2]
2. The defendant failed to proper shelter for the animal.

   Shelter is proper when it is sufficient to maintain the animal in good health.[3]
3. The defendant (intentionally) (negligently) failed to supply the animal with proper shelter.

   ["Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to fail to supply the animal with proper shelter or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.][4]

["Negligently" requires that the defendant's conduct amounted to "criminal negligence."[5] "Criminal negligence" means:

- the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1987 Wisconsin Act 332 renumbered the chapter containing crimes against animals from Chapter 948 to Chapter 951. The effective date of the change was July 1, 1989.

Simple violations of the statutes relating to cruelty to animals are punished as Class D forfeitures. When a person "intentionally or negligently violates" the statutes, the punishment is that of a Class A misdemeanor. See § 951.18(1). Section 951.18(1) further provides for a felony penalty in certain circumstances that do not apply to § 951.14, the statute addressed by this instruction.

1. "Intentionally" or "negligently" violating the statutes relating to cruelty to animals makes the conduct criminal (see Comment, supra). The instruction is drafted on the premise that one of the alternatives will be selected.

2. The following definition is provided in § 951.01(1):

3. If more detailed explanation of "proper shelter" is required, see subsecs. (1) through (4) of sec. 951.14 which address indoor standards, outdoor standards, space standards, and sanitation standards, respectively.

4. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1986 INSTIGATING FIGHTS BETWEEN ANIMALS — § 951.08(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 951.08(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally [(instigates) (promotes)] [participates in the earnings from] [maintains or allows any place to be used for] a (cockfight) (dogfight).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [(instigated) (promoted)] [participated in the earnings from] [maintained or allowed any place to be used for] a (cockfight) (dogfight).[1]
2. The defendant did so intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[2] to [(instigate) (promote)] [participate in the earnings from] [maintain or allow any place to be used for] a (cockfight) (dogfight).

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1986 was approved by the Committee in February 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Penalties for violations of § 951.08(1) are set forth in § 951.18(2): a Class I felony for the first violation and a Class H felony for the second or subsequent violation. For a case charged as a Class H felony, the fact of the prior conviction would not be a fact that is submitted to the jury. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000).

1. The instruction provides for selecting "cockfight" or "dogfight," which the Committee believes are the most likely cases to be charged. The statute applies however, to additional conduct: ". . . bullfight or other fight between the same or different kinds of animals or between an animal and a person." § 951.08(1).

2. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition of "intentionally" is most likely to apply to this offense. For a complete discussion of the meaning of "intentionally" see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

1988 KEEPING AN ANIMAL WITH INTENT THAT IT ENGAGE IN FIGHTING — § 951.08(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 951.08(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who owns, possesses, keeps, or trains any animal with the intent that the animal be engaged in an exhibition of fighting.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (owned) (possessed) (kept) (trained) an animal.[1]
2. The defendant did so with the intent that the animal be engaged in an exhibition of fighting.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[2] that the animal be engaged in an exhibition of fighting.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

2000 ABANDONMENT BY HUSBAND OR FATHER

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2000 was published in 1971. It applied to violations of Sec. 53.05(1) which defined a felony offense. That statute was repealed by 1985 Wisconsin Act 29 and replaced by § 940.27. An instruction for violations of § 940.27 is provided at Wis JI Criminal 1264. This note was republished without change in 1995.

2010 PATERNITY

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2010 dealt with the adjudication of paternity under § 52.21, et seq., 1963 Wis. Stats. Chapter 352, Laws of 1979, extensively changed paternity procedures, making Wis JI-Criminal 2010 obsolete. The instruction was withdrawn. Jury instructions for current paternity procedures will be published in Wis JI-Civil. This note was republished without change in 1995.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2020 and 2021 were originally published in 1986 and revised in 1995. Their withdrawal was approved in February 2009.

1995 Wisconsin Act 77 changed the procedures for delinquency determinations – see Chapter 938, Juvenile Justice Code – that do not provide for a jury determination. See § 938.31(2). The provisions took effect on July 1, 1996.

2031 CONTEMPT OF COURT: PUNITIVE SANCTION — § 785.01)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Contempt of court, as defined in § 785.01(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who intentionally disobeys an order of a court.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. A court ordered the defendant to (describe terms of order).[2]
2. The defendant had the ability to comply with that order.[3]
3. The defendant intentionally disobeyed that court order.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant knew the court order had been issued and acted with the purpose to disobey it.[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2031was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for "criminal contempt," more precisely termed "punitive sanction for contempt of court." The "punitive sanction" is set forth in § 785.04(2)(a) which provides that a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year or both may be imposed "after a finding of contempt of court in a nonsummary procedure." Nonsummary procedures for punitive sanctions are described in § 785.03(1)(b) which provides, inter alia, that the "complaint shall be processed under chs. 967-973." The Committee has concluded that regular criminal procedure is to be followed, including the giving of regular criminal jury instructions.

The court of appeals has ruled that punitive contempt is not a crime, and thus its penalty cannot be enhanced by reference to the general repeater statute, § 939.62. State v. Carpenter, 179 Wis.2d 838, 842, 508 N.W.2d 69 (Ct. App. 1993), quoting from McGee v. Racine County Circuit Court, 150 Wis.2d 178, 441 N.W.2d 308 (Ct. App. 1989): "Contempt proceedings are sui generis and are neither civil actions nor criminal prosecutions within the ordinary meaning of those terms."

The dismissal of a criminal complaint charging punitive contempt was reversed in State v. Chinavare, 185 Wis.2d 528, 518 N.W.2d 772 (Ct. App. 1994), the court holding that it is proper to charge someone with violating a court order as a party to the crime: "One directly violates a court order by having others do the things prohibited by the order even if those others are not bound by the order." 185 Wis.2d 528, 535.

Section 785.01(1)(bm) provides that contempt includes intentional "Violation of any provision of s. 767.117(1)," which prohibit certain conduct during the pendency of an action affecting the family.

Procedures relating to the contempt power of the court are addressed in CR-29, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbooks, Volume I.

1. This instruction is for one type of offense defined in subsection (1)(b) of § 785.01: "Disobedience, resistance or obstruction of the authority, process, or order of a court." The instruction is drafted in terms of disobeying an order of the court because the Committee concluded that in most contempt cases, a court order is issued and the contempt charge is based on the defendant's disobeying that order.

It apparently is not appropriate to challenge the validity of the order in the context of the criminal prosecution based on failure to obey that order. In State v. Orethun, 84 Wis.2d 487, 267 N.W.2d 318 (1978), the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed a conviction for operating after revocation. The defendant had claimed that his revocation should have been deemed not to have occurred because a speeding conviction on which the revocation was based had been vacated. The court held that legal channels were available to challenge the speeding conviction and the revocation. Those are the remedies that must be pursued – a driver has to comply with the revocation until it is set aside through one of the proper channels.

The court in Orethun analogized the case to "that of the person who fails to comply with an injunction but then argues that he should not be held in contempt because the injunction was erroneously granted." 84 Wis.2d 487, 480. Getka v. Lader, 71 Wis.2d 237, 238 N.W.2d 87 (1976), was quoted:

> Setting aside the trial court injunction against the defendants does not, ipso facto, erase the contempt finding. . . . Where a court has jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, the fact that an order or judgment is erroneously or improvidently rendered does not justify a person in failing to abide by its terms. The subsequent appeal and reversal of the injunction here does not alter the obligation of the defendants in this case to initially comply with such injunction until it was stayed or set aside. [Footnote omitted.]

2. The Committee recommends describing the order that is the basis for the contempt charge.

3. The essence of this offense is an omission – the failure to obey a court order. Criminal liability for an omission generally requires the ability to perform the required acts. See State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 251, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986), citing LaFave and Scott, Criminal Law, sec. 26 at 182. This general rule can be changed by the statutory definition of a particular offense. See, for example, § 948.22, Failure To Support, discussed in notes 5 and 10, Wis JI-Criminal 2152. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that ". . . it is essential in contempt cases that the thing ordered to be done be within the power of the person." In re Adam's Rib, Inc. (Kaminsky), 39 Wis.2d 741, 746, 159 N.W.2d 643 (1968).

4. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) as either having the mental purpose to cause the result specified or being "aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." Having the "mental purpose" is believed to be the most likely alternative for this offense. For definition of the other alternative, see Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

The meaning of "intentional" as used in § 785.01 was discussed in Shepard v. Outagamie County Circuit Court, 189 Wis.2d 279, 535 N.W.2d 764 (Ct. App. 1994). The court fell short of explicitly adopting the definition from § 939.23, but its decision is consistent with that definition of the term "intentionally."

2040 VIOLATING A TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER OR AN INJUNCTION — §§ 813.12, 813.122, 813.123, 813.125[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Violating (an injunction) (a temporary restraining order), as defined in § _____[2] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who knowingly violates (an injunction) (a temporary restraining order) issued under § _____[3] of the Wisconsin Statutes.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (An injunction) (A temporary restraining order) was issued against (name of defendant) under § _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes.

   (An injunction) (A temporary restraining order) is a court order prohibiting specified conduct.

   ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR VIOLATIONS OF § 813.12 WHEN SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE

   [An injunction remains in effect even if the petitioner allows or initiates contact with the respondent or if the respondent is admitted into a dwelling that the injunction directs him or her to avoid.][4]

2. The defendant committed an act that violated the terms of the (injunction) (temporary restraining order).

3. The defendant knew that the (injunction) (temporary restraining order) had been issued and knew that (his) (her) acts violated its terms.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2040 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1988, 1995, 2001, 2010, and 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it updated the Comment and made non-substantive changes in the text.

Wis JI-Criminal 2040 is drafted for use for any one of the four restraining order/injunction statutes in chapter 813. See note 1, below. The statutes are essentially the same, though variations in the text are present. Violations of restraining orders may also constitute the offense of "harassment" as defined in § 947.013. See Wis JI-Criminal 1910, 1911, and 1912.

The constitutionality of § 813.12 was upheld in Schramek v. Bohren, 145 Wis.2d 695, 429 N.W.2d 501 (Ct. App. 1988).

For a discussion of cases involving harassment restraining orders under § 813.125, see the material following note 5.

A defendant cannot collaterally attack the validity of a harassment injunction [issued under § 813.125] in a criminal prosecution for the violation of that injunction. State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992).

A judge's oral remarks relating to the scope of an injunction issued under § 813.125 modify the terms of the written order. State v. O'Dell, 193 Wis.2d 333, 532 N.W.2d 741 (1995). The court noted, however, that trial courts are "strongly encouraged" to incorporate all oral modifications into the written injunction. 193 Wis.2d 333, 344.

The restraining order statutes were amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 71, to prohibit possession of firearms by persons subject to the orders. All persons enjoined under §§ 813.12 and 813.122 are prohibited from possessing firearms. See §§ 813.12(4m) and 813.122(5m), created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 71. Persons enjoined under §§ 813.123 and 813.125 may be prohibited from possessing firearms if a specific finding is made. See § 813.123(5m) and 813.125(4m). Possession of a firearm by persons subject to these injunctions is punishable as a violation of § 941.29. See Wis JI-Criminal 1344.

1. The instruction has been drafted for use for any one of the four restraining order/injunction offenses now defined by the Wisconsin Statutes:

§ 813.12 - Domestic Abuse
§ 813.122 - Child Abuse
§ 813.123 - Individuals at Risk
§ 813.125 - Harassment.

Note: Domestic abuse injunctions and orders under § 813.12 include an injunction or order "issued by a tribal court under a tribal domestic abuse ordinance adopted in conformity with this section." § 813.12(1)(e).

2. In the blank provided, insert one of the following:

§ 813.12(8) - for a domestic abuse case
§ 813.122(11) - for a child abuse case
§ 813.123(10) - for an individual at risk case
§ 813.125(7) - for a harassment case.

3. In the blank provided, insert one of the following if the case involves violation of an injunction:

§ 813.12(4) - for a domestic abuse case
§ 813.122(5) - for a child abuse case
§ 813.123(5) - for an individual at risk case
§ 813.125(4) - for a harassment case.

If a temporary restraining order is involved, substitute § 813.12(3), § 813.122(4), § 813.123(4), or § 813.125(3), as appropriate.

4. This is a paraphrase of the rules stated in § 813.12(4)(c); no change in meaning is intended. Similar provisions are not found in the other injunction statutes to which this instruction applies.

5. That the defendant "knowingly" violated the order is explicitly required by §§ 813.12(8) and 813.122(11). Section 813.123(10) requires that the defendant "intentionally violates" the order. "Knowingly" is absent from § 813.125(7), which establishes the criminal penalty for violations of harassment orders. The Committee concluded that "knowingly" should be required in the latter situation as well.

Whether the order was properly served is relevant to the knowledge requirement since it is an effective way to prove that the defendant did have knowledge of the order. However, service of the injunction is not specifically dealt with in the instruction. In domestic abuse, child abuse and individual at risk cases, §§ 813.12(2), 813.122(2), and 813.123(2), respectively, provide that the "action commences with service of the petition." Thus, without service, there could be no action and no criminal charge for violating the injunction or temporary restraining order. There is no counterpart for this subsection in § 813.125 for harassment cases. However, in order to issue the harassment injunction, the court must have found that the temporary restraining order was served on the defendant, see § 813.125(4)(a)2. Therefore, the same result – no action without service – ought to follow in the harassment case, despite the difference between the statutes.

Statutes in each of the four types of cases require that notice of the injunction hearing be served. If the defendant did not appear at the hearing, proof of service would show that he has received notice that an injunction may be issued which will contain the same terms as the temporary restraining order. It is error to instruct the jury to "accept as conclusively proven" that the defendant was served with the order. State v. Gordon, 2002 WI App 53, ¶45, 250 Wis.2d 702, 641 N.W.2d 183.

Bachowski v. Salamone, 139 Wis.2d 397, 407 N.W.2d 533 (1987), and State v. Sarlund, 139 Wis.2d 386, 407 N.W.2d 544 (1987), upheld the constitutionality of the harassment injunction statute, § 813.125. In the process, however, the court emphasized that to be valid, the injunctions had to be narrowly drawn: they "must be specific as to acts and conduct which are enjoined." The injunction in the Salamone case, restraining "any contact" with the petitioner, was held invalid because it described the prohibited conduct too broadly.

In the Committee's judgment, the injunction would be properly framed if it prohibited future "harassment." Section 813.125 allows the issuance of an injunction if the person has engaged in "harassment" under § 947.013. While a violation of § 947.013 is directly punishable as a Class B forfeiture, engaging in conduct prohibited by the criminal statute also justifies the issuance of an injunction. The injunction may order a person not to engage in any more "harassment," see § 813.125(4)(a). Violating the injunction is then punishable as a crime. That is, a person may not engage in another violation of § 947.013 without suffering criminal penalties under § 813.125. Such an injunction is valid because it only covers conduct prohibited by § 947.013. The definition of "harassment" found in that statute was upheld in the two cases cited above as providing sufficient notice of the prohibited conduct and not infringing on innocent or protected behavior.

Under this approach, a violation of § 947.013 supports the issuance of an injunction ordering the person not to violate § 947.013 again. A second violation of § 947.013 violates the injunction. This seems to avoid the overbreadth and vagueness problems of orders that prevent "all contact" or "any communication." And in the criminal action, the issues would be: (1) was there an order; and (2) did the defendant (knowingly) engage in "harassment" as defined in § 947.013 (which definition has been upheld as constitutional).

2042 VIOLATING A FOREIGN PROTECTION ORDER — § 813.128

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Violating a foreign protection order, as defined in § 813.128 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who knowingly violates a condition of a foreign protection order that is entitled to full faith and credit under § 806.247.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. A foreign protection order was issued against (name of defendant) .
2. The foreign protection order was entitled to full faith and credit under § 806.247.
3. The defendant committed an act that violated a condition of the foreign protection order.[2]
4. The defendant knew that the foreign protection order had been issued and knew that (his) (her) acts violated its terms.

Definition of Foreign Protection Order

"Foreign protection order" means any temporary or permanent injunction or order of a civil or criminal court (of the United States) (of an Indian tribe) (of any other state) issued for preventing abuse, bodily harm, communication, contact, harassment, physical proximity, threatening acts or violence by or to a person, other than support or custody orders.[3]

Determination of Full Faith and Credit

"Full faith and credit" means that an order from a court outside the state is enforced as if the order was an order of a court in this state. An order shall be accorded full faith and credit if all of the following conditions are met:[4]

- the person against whom the order was issued received reasonable notice; and,
- the person against whom the order was issued received an opportunity to be heard that was sufficient to protect (his) (her) right to due process; and,
- the court that issued the order had jurisdiction over the parties and over the subject matter.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2042 was approved by the Committee in December 2001.

Section 813.128(1) provides that a "foreign protection order or modification of a foreign protection order that meets the requirements under s. 806.247(2) has the same effect as an order issued under s. 813.12, 813.122, 813.123, or 813.125, except that the foreign protection order or modification shall be enforced according to its own terms." Subsection (2) provides a criminal penalty [a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 9 months or both] for "a person who knowingly violates a condition of a foreign protection order. . ."

This instruction follows the approach used for violations of the other restraining order/injunction statutes. See Wis JI-Criminal 2040.

1. The Committee concluded that the "full faith and credit" issue is a fact that the jury must find. This is based on the conclusion that it is part of the definition of the crime in § 813.128(2): "A person who knowingly violates a condition of a foreign protection order . . . that is entitled to full faith and credit . . ."

This conclusion is consistent with the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in United States v. Gaudin, 515 U.S. 506 (1995). That decision resolved a split among the federal circuits regarding whether "materiality" under a federal false swearing statute was a fact that the jury must decide. The court rejected the Government's argument that "materiality" was a legal question to which the right to a jury determination does not attach. The court stated:

> . . . [T]he resolution of the question before us seems simple. The Constitution gives a criminal defendant the right to demand that a jury find him guilty of all the elements of the crime with which he is charged; one of the elements in the present case is materiality; respondent therefore had a right to have the jury decide materiality.
> 515 U.S. 506, 511.

2. Section 813.128(2) applies to one who "knowingly violates a condition of a foreign protection order or modification of a foreign protection order ..." The instruction refers only to violating a condition of the order, the Committee having concluded that it should be sufficient to cover a violation of a modification to an original order.

3. This is the definition of "foreign protection order" provided in § 806.247(1)(b) without change.

4. The requirements for "full faith and credit" are based on the conditions set forth in § 806.247(2)(a). Expert testimony may be required to establish that the procedures in the foreign jurisdiction meet these requirements.

2044 VIOLATING A DOMESTIC ABUSE CONTACT PROHIBITION — § 968.075(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 968.075(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, within 72 hours of an arrest for a domestic abuse incident, intentionally does not avoid [the residence of the alleged victim of the domestic abuse incident] [any premises temporarily occupied by the alleged victim] [contacting or causing any person to contact the alleged victim].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was arrested for a domestic abuse incident.

   "Domestic abuse" means (identify the type of conduct specified in § 968.075(1)(a)) [1] engaged in by an adult person against [his or her (spouse) (former spouse)] [an adult with whom the person (resides) (formerly resided)] [an adult with whom the person has a child in common].

2. The defendant was advised orally and in writing[2] that (he) (she) avoid [the residence of the alleged victim of the domestic abuse incident] [any premises temporarily occupied by the alleged victim] [contacting or causing any person to contact the alleged victim].

3. The defendant intentionally did not avoid [the residence of the alleged victim of the domestic abuse incident] [any premises temporarily occupied by the alleged victim] [contacting or causing any person to contact the alleged victim] within 72 hours of the arrest for a domestic abuse incident.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2044 was approved by the Committee in July 2012.

Violating the contact prohibition under § 968.075(5) was changed from a forfeiture to a crime punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 9 months or both by 2011 Wisconsin Act 267 [effective date: April 24, 2012].

The contact prohibition is set forth in § 968.075(5)(a). It applies "unless there is a waiver under par. (c)." The Committee concluded that the existence of a waiver should be treated as an affirmative defense: it is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of its existence; then, the state must prove the absence of the waiver beyond a reasonable doubt to support a finding of guilt.

1. Section 968.075(1)(a)1. - 4. identify the following conduct that may constitute "domestic abuse":

1. Intentional infliction of physical pain, physical injury or illness.
2. Intentional impairment of physical condition.
3. A violation of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3).
4. A physical act that may cause the other person reasonably to fear imminent engagement in the conduct described under subd. 1., 2. or 3.

Violations of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3) refer to first, second, or third degree sexual assault. If that option is used, the crimes should be defined. See Wis JI-Criminal 1201 - 1218B.

2. Subsection (5)(b)1. of § 968.075 requires that a law enforcement officer "shall inform the arrested person orally and in writing" of the contact prohibition. Section § 968.075(b)3. provides that a failure to comply with the notice requirement "bars a prosecution under par. (a)."

2101A SEXUAL CONTACT — § 948.01(5)

SELECT ONE OF THE FOLLOWING ALTERNATIVES RELATING TO THE TYPE OF SEXUAL CONTACT AND INSERT IT IN THE INSTRUCTION FOR THE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD OFFENSE.[1]

Meaning of "Sexual Contact"

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING INTENTIONAL TOUCHING OF THE INTIMATE PARTS OF THE VICTIM:

[Sexual contact is an intentional touching of the (name intimate part)[2] of (name of victim) (by the defendant) (by another person upon the defendant's instruction)[3]. The touching may be of the (name intimate part) directly or it may be through the clothing. The touching may be done by any body part or by any object, but it must be an intentional touching.

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)][4]

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING INTENTIONAL TOUCHING BY THE VICTIM OF THE INTIMATE PARTS OF THE DEFENDANT OR OF ANOTHER PERSON:

[Sexual contact is a touching by (name of victim) of the (name intimate part)[5] (of the defendant) (of another person upon the defendant's instruction),[6] if the defendant intentionally caused or allowed[7] (name of victim) to do that touching. The touching may be of the (name intimate part) directly or it may be through the clothing.

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)][8]

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING INTENTIONAL EJACULATION OR INTENTIONAL EMISSION OF URINE OR FECES UPON THE COMPLAINANT:

[Sexual contact is intentional penile ejaculation of ejaculate or intentional emission of urine or feces (by the defendant) (by another person upon the defendant's instruction)[9] upon any part of the body clothed or unclothed of (name of victim) .[10]

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)[11]]

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING INTENTIONALLY CAUSING THE VICTIM TO EJACULATE OR EMIT URINE OR FECES ON ANY PART OF THE DEFENDANT'S BODY:

[Sexual contact is ejaculation or emission of urine or feces by (name of victim) on any part of the defendant's body, clothed or unclothed, which the defendant intentionally causes.[12]

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)[13]]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances bearing upon intent.

CONTINUE WITH THE INSTRUCTION FOR THE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD OFFENSE.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2101A was originally published in 1996 and revised in 1999, 2001, 2002, and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2006; it reflected changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 273 and 435.

This instruction provides definitions of "sexual contact" that are to be integrated into the instruction for sexual assault of a child offenses involving sexual contact as appropriate to the facts of the case. The material provided here was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction, dividing the sexual contact definition into two separate elements: one involving the type of touching; the other involving the purpose of the touching. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing this separate instruction with all the alternatives for both the type of touching and the purpose of the touching. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

A similar instruction is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 1200A for offenses in violation of § 940.225. This instruction differs in several ways, due to differences between the statutory definition of "sexual contact" provided in § 948.01(5), addressed in this instruction, and the definition of the same term provided in § 940.225(5)(b), addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A. This instruction should be used only for violations of § 948.02.

The following definition of "sexual contact" is provided in § 948.01(5), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 273 and 435 (effective date: June 6, 2006):

(5) "Sexual contact" means any of the following:

(a) Any of the following types of intentional touching whether direct or through clothing if that intentional touching is either for the purpose of sexually degrading or sexually humiliating the complainant or sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant:

1. Intentional touching by the defendant or, upon the defendant's instruction, by another person, by the use of any body part or object, of the complainant's intimate parts.

2. Intentional touching by the complainant, by the use of any body part or object, of the defendant's intimate parts or, if done upon the defendant's instructions, the intimate parts of another person.

(b) Intentional penile ejaculation of ejaculate or intentional emission of urine or feces by the defendant or, upon the defendant's instruction, by another person upon any part of the body clothed or unclothed of the complainant if that ejaculation or emission is either for the purpose of sexually degrading or sexually humiliating the complainant or for the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant.

(c) For the purpose of sexually degrading or humiliating the complainant or sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant, intentionally causing the complainant to ejaculate or emit urine or feces on any part of the defendant's body, whether clothed or unclothed.

1. The definition of "sexual contact" in § 948.01(5) identifies two types of intentional touchings and two alternatives involving intentional emission of bodily substances. The instruction provides separate alternatives for each alternative, one of which should be selected and added to the instruction for the sexual assault of a child offense.

Each alternative includes the second part of the statutory sexual contact definition: that the contact was for a sexual purpose. See note 4, below.

2. Section 939.22(19) defines "intimate parts": "'Intimate parts' means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being." The Committee suggests naming the specific intimate part involved in the sexual contact.

In State v. Morse, 126 Wis.2d 1, 374 N.W.2d 388 (Ct, App. 1985), the court of appeals held that a trial court did not improperly broaden the scope of the sexual contact definition in § 939.22(19) by defining "intimate part" to include "the vaginal area."

A child's testimony referring to her "private," her "potty place," and "between her legs" was sufficient to support a jury finding that the defendant touched her "groin, vagina, or pubic mound." State v. Brunette, 220 Wis.2d 431, 453-54, 583 N.W.2d 174 (Ct. App. 1998).

"[T]he plain language of Wis. Stat. § 939.22(19) is meant to include a female and a male breast because each is 'the breast . . . of a human being' and thereby the touching of a [15 year old] boy's breast constitutes 'sexual contact' within the meaning of Wis. Stat. § 948.02(2)." State v. Forster, 2003 WI App 29, 260 Wis.2d149, 659 N.W.2d 144.

3. "By another person upon the defendant's instruction" was added by 2005 Wisconsin Act 435, effective date: June 6, 2006.

4. Each alternative definition includes the requirement that the contact be for one of two prohibited purposes. Earlier versions of the instructions included the purpose as a separate element, but the Committee concluded that it was preferable to deal with at as a second part of the sexual contact definition. The Committee also concluded that including purpose as part of each alternative will reduce the possibility that it would be inadvertently overlooked. Failure to include the purpose of the contact as a part of the jury instruction is reversible error. State v. Krueger, 2001 WI App 14, 240 Wis.2d 644, 623 N.W.2d 211. Likewise, failure to include reference to purpose when accepting a guilty plea may be grounds for withdrawal of the plea. State v. Bollig, 2000 WI 6, 232 Wis.2d 561, 605 N.W.2d 199; State v. Jipson, 2003 WI App 222, 267 Wis.2d 467, 671 N.W.2d 18; and, State v. Nichelson, 220 Wis.2d 214, 582 N.W.2d 460 (1998).

The two purposes set forth as alternatives are the only two contained in the definition of "sexual contact" provided in § 948.01(5). The definition of "sexual contact" in § 940.225(5)(b) includes touching which "contains the elements of actual or attempted battery . . ." The Committee has interpreted this as a "purpose to cause bodily harm," but note that this purpose does not apply to offenses under § 948.02.

The instruction phrases the two alternatives as requiring that the defendant acted "with intent to" achieve one of the prohibited results. The statute refers to acting with "the purpose of . . ." No change in meaning is intended.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. "Of another person upon the defendant's instruction" was added by 2005 Wisconsin Act 435, effective date: June 6, 2006.

7. The instruction refers to the touching of the defendant by the complainant as a touching which the defendant "caused or allowed" the complainant to do. The statute does not expressly provide for the "causing" alternative, but the Committee concluded that the requirement is implicit. The "or allowed" alternative was added after the Wisconsin Court of Appeals approved an instruction to which it had been added. State v. Traylor, 170 Wis.2d 393, 489 N.W.2d 626 (Ct. App. 1992). In Traylor, the court rejected the defendant's argument that sexual contact requires an affirmative act and that mere passivity is not "intentional touching" as contemplated by the statute:

> . . . the defendant does not have to initiate sexual contact with a child. If the defendant allows the contact, that is sufficient to constitute intentional touching because it indicates that the defendant had the requisite purpose of causing sexual arousal or gratification. 170 Wis.2d 393, 404.

In a footnote, the court emphasized that there must be evidence that a defendant allowed the touching:

> The mere fact of a child's touching an adult does not raise the inference [that the defendant sanctioned the touching for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification]. There might indeed be evidence in a specific case that the adult called an immediate halt to this activity. Absent other evidence that the event was sanctioned by the adult, the mere fact that a touching took place is not the same as "allowing" it. 170 Wis.2d 393, 404, note 2.

Applied literally to a case where the victim is caused to touch the defendant, § 948.01(5)(a) requires an "intentional touching by the complainant . . . of the . . . defendants' intimate parts . . ." The Committee concluded that the Traylor decision interpreted this definition in a manner that focuses on the defendant's, rather than the victim's, intent. Thus, the instruction refers simply to "a touching" by the victim that the defendant "intentionally caused or allowed."

8. See note 4, supra.

9. "Of another person upon the defendant's instruction" was added by 2005 Wisconsin Act 435, effective date: June 6, 2006.

10. This is the type of "sexual contact" defined in sub. (5)(b) of § 948.01. It was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, which first applies to offenses committed on December 2, 1995.

11. See note 4, supra.

12. This is the type of "sexual contact" defined in sub. (5)(c) of § 948.01. It was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 273, which first applies to offenses committed on April 20, 2006.

13. See notes 4 and 5, supra.

2101B SEXUAL INTERCOURSE — § 948.01(6)

Meaning of "Sexual Intercourse"

INSERT THE ALTERNATIVE[S] SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE INTO THE INSTRUCTION ON THE SEXUAL ASSAULT OFFENSE.

["Sexual intercourse" means any intrusion, however slight, by any part of a person's body or of any object, into the genital or anal opening of another. Emission of semen is not required.][1]

(Cunnilingus means oral contact with the clitoris or vulva.)[2]

(Fellatio means oral contact with the penis.)[3]]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[The act of sexual intercourse must be either by the defendant or upon the defendant's instruction.][4]

["Sexual intercourse" does not include an intrusion for a proper non-sexual purpose, such as a medical examination or appropriate child care or treatment.][5]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2101B was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2001, 2006, and 2007. This revision added bracketed material to the text at footnote 5 and was approved by the Committee in February 2010.

The definitions provided here were formerly provided in each instruction for a sexual assault of a child offense involving sexual intercourse. The 1996 revision combined sexual contact and sexual intercourse offenses into one instruction, making it necessary to refer to this instruction for definition of "sexual intercourse" and to Wis JI-Criminal 2101A for definition of "sexual contact."

The 2006 revision changed the definitions of "cunnilingus" and "fellatio." See footnotes 2 and 3.

A similar instruction is provided in Wis JI Criminal 1200B for sexual assault offenses under § 940.225. Though there is one difference in the definitions of "sexual intercourse" found in § 948.01(6) and § 940.225(5)(c), the Committee concluded that no substantive difference is intended. Thus, the text of Wis JI Criminal 2101B and Wis JI Criminal 1200B is the same. Note that both the § 948.01(6) and § 940.225(5)(c) definitions are substantially broader than the one provided in § 939.22(36).

1. The definition of "sexual intercourse" is a paraphrase of the complete statutory definition found in § 948.01(6). NOTE: The definition in § 948.01(6) is substantially broader than the one provided in § 939.22(36) and is essentially the same as the one provided in § 940.225(5)(b).

2. This definition was revised in 2006 in light of the decision in State v. Harvey, 2006 WI App. 26, 289 Wis.2d 222, 710 N.W.2d 482, which held that defining cunnilingus as "oral stimulation . . ." is not required by the "statutory scheme of the sexual assault law" and "offends the principles underpinning the sexual assault law." Par. 14. The former definition was taken from Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary, but the court of appeals held that "a standard dictionary definition should not by default become the legal definition of a term if it unfairly or inaccurately states the law or misconveys the legislative intent." Par. 17. The court stated: "We think a better resource is BLACK'S LAW DICTIONARY 380 (6th ed. 1990) which more neutrally defines cunnilingus as '[a]n act of sex committed with the mouth and the female sexual organ.'" Par. 17. The Committee decided not to use that definition because it refers to a "sex act," which is inconsistent with the emphasis of Harvey that a purpose of the sexual assault law was to recognize that sexual assaults were crimes of violence, not of sexual passion. Par. 15. As noted in the Harvey decision, the current edition of Black's does not define the term. [See Par. 17, footnote 6.] The Committee believes the revised definition in the instruction is faithful to the substance of the Harvey decision.

3. This definition was revised in 2006 in light of the decision in State v. Harvey, 2006 WI App. 26, see note 2, supra. Harvey was concerned only with the definition of "cunnilingus," but the Committee concluded that the logic of the court's analysis would also apply to defining fellatio as "oral stimulation," which the instruction formerly did. The former definition had been approved in State v. Childs, 146 Wis.2d 116, 430 N.W.2d 353 (Ct. App. 1988).

4. This phrase appears in the definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 948.01(6) and in the similar definition found in § 940.225(5)(b).

In State v. Olson, 2000 WI App. 158, 238 Wis.2d 74, 616 N.W.2d 144, the court construed the definition provided in § 948.01(6) to require that "the defendant has to either affirmatively perform one of the actions on the victim, or instruct or direct the victim to perform one of them on him- or herself." Olson, ¶10. The Committee concluded that the bracketed sentence in the instruction adequately addresses the Olson requirement. The Olson decision also implies that "allowing" the sexual intercourse to take place may also satisfy the statute (see ¶12), but the holding is limited to the "upon the defendant's instruction" issue.

In State v. Lackershire, 2007 WI 74, 288 Wis.2d 609, 707 N.W.2d 891, the court held there was a defect in establishing a factual basis for a guilty plea to second degree sexual assault of a child, where the defendant claimed to be the victim of a sexual assault by the "child." The court held that being a victim constitutes a defense and that the trial court should have explored that issue as part of the factual basis inquiry: ". . . If the defendant was raped, the act of having sexual intercourse with a child does not constitute a crime. § 948.01(6)." ¶29. The court relied on State v. Olson, supra, to conclude that the entire definition in § 948.01(6) is modified by the phrase "by the defendant or upon the defendant's instruction." Thus, sexual intercourse resulting from being forced to engage in it by the other party is not "by the defendant or upon the defendant's instruction."

5. This statement is based on State v. Lesik, 2010 WI App 12, ___ Wis.2d ___, ___ N.W.2d ___, [2008 AP 3072-CR]. The court of appeals construed the definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 948.01(6) narrowly and agreed with the trial court's conclusion that "it would be 'patently and obviously absurd' to make medical personnel and parents guilty of a Class B felony for performing 'certain appropriate conduct relative to proper treatment of children.'" Lesik, ¶10. The court of appeals held that the trial court was correct in giving the statute a limiting construction by adding the following to the jury instruction:

> "Sexual intercourse" does not, however include such an intrusion for a proper non-sexual purpose, such as a medical examination or appropriate child care or treatment.

Lesik, ¶5.

Also see, State v. Neumann, 179 Wis.2d 687, 712, n. 14, 508 N.W.2d 54 (Ct. App. 1993), reaching the same conclusion with respect to the definition of "sexual intercourse" applicable to prosecutions under § 940.225.

2102 INTRODUCTORY COMMENT: § 948.02 SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: AS AMENDED BY 2007 WISCONSIN ACT 80 [EFFECTIVE DATE: MARCH 27, 2008] AND 2013 WISCONSIN ACT 167 [EFFECTIVE DATE: MARCH 29, 2014]

Background

Section 948.02 was amended by both 2005 Wisconsin Act 430 and 2005 Wisconsin Act 437. The changes were inconsistent with one another, so the Revisor of Statutes published the statute as amended by Act 437. The statute as amended by Act 430 was printed immediately following that version in the 2005-06 Wisconsin Statutes – in boldface type. A study committee of the Wisconsin Legislative Council was convened to review the matter, and issued a report with recommendations for additional legislation. The Legislative Council draft was introduced in both houses: 2007 Assembly Bill 209 and 2007 Senate Bill 103. Senate Bill 103 was enacted as 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: March 27, 2008.] Section 948.02(1)(e) was later amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 167.

Summary: Offenses Defined in § 948.02

As amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 and 2013 Wisconsin Act 167, § 948.02(1) defines 5 types of first degree sexual assault of a child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2102A-E. Section 948.02(2), which defines second degree sexual assault of a child, was not affected by Act 80. See Wis JI-Criminal 2104.

Because some of the offense definitions differ only slightly, the Committee concluded that a summary of the elements, penalties, and related issues might be helpful.

§ 948.02(1) 1st degree sexual assault of a child

(am) • sexual contact or sexual intercourse
• with a person who has not attained the age of 13
• causes great bodily harm
[Wis JI-Criminal 2102A]

Class A felony. Minimum of 25 years confinement before extended supervision eligibility – § 939.616(1g).

(b) • sexual intercourse
• with a person who has not attained the age of 12
[Wis JI-Criminal 2102B]

Class B felony. Mandatory minimum term of confinement of 25 years – § 939.616(1r).

(c) • sexual intercourse
• with a person who has not attained the age of 16
• by use or threat of force or violence
[Wis JI-Criminal 2102C]

Class B felony. Mandatory minimum term of confinement of 25 years – § 939.616(1r).

(d) • sexual contact
• with a person who has not attained the age of 16
• by use or threat of force or violence
• by a person who is at least 18 years of age
[Wis JI-Criminal 2102D]

Class B felony. Mandatory minimum term of confinement of 5 years – § 939.616(2).

(e) • sexual contact or sexual intercourse
• with a person who has not attained the age of 13
[Wis JI-Criminal 2102E]

Class B felony.
NOTE: 2013 Wisconsin Act 167 amended § 948.02(1)(e) by adding "sexual intercourse." [Effective date: March 29, 2014.]

§ 948.02(2) 2nd degree sexual assault of a child
[Not affected by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80]

• sexual contact or sexual intercourse
• with a person who has not attained the age of 16
[Wis JI-Criminal 2104]

Class C felony.

NOTE: Section 948.02(2) was amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018] to add the following: "This section does not apply if s. 948.093 applies." Section 948.093, Underage sexual activity, applies to sexual activity by a defendant who has not attained the age of 19.

Mandatory Minimum Sentences – § 939.616

As noted above, § 939.616 provides for mandatory minimum sentences for violations of § 948.02(1)(am) through (d). In State v. Lalicata, 2012 WI App 138, 345 Wis.2d 342, 824 N.W.2d 921, the court of appeals held that the mandatory minimum sentence under § 939.616(1r) for convictions under § 948.02(1)(b) is "truly mandatory, with no probation option." ¶1.

Section 939.616(3) provides: ". . . The mandatory minimum sentences in this section do not apply to an offender who was under 18 years of age when the violation occurred."

Penalty Increase for Sexual Assault or Physical Abuse of a Child by a Child Care Provider – § 939.635

Section 939.635 was created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 82 [effective date: December 9, 2011]. It allows an increase of not more than 5 years for violations of §§ 948.02, 948.025, 948.03(2) and (3), and 948.03(5)(a)1., 2., 3., and 4. if the defendant committed the crime against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation. Wis JI-Criminal 2115 provides a special question to be added to the applicable offense instruction when the enhanced penalty authorized by § 939.635 is alleged in the charging document and the evidence would support a finding that the penalty-increasing facts are established.

Lesser Included Offenses

Section 939.66(2p), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 430, provides that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged" is a lesser included crime.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2102 Introductory Comment was originally published in 2008 and revised in 2013 and 2015. The 2013 revision added reference to State v. Lalicata. The 2015 revision reflected a change made in § 948.02(1)(e) by 2013 Wisconsin Act 167. The 2016 revision corrected editorial errors. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it added a section describing the penalty increase under § 939.635.

2102A FIRST DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 13 YEARS: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.02(1)(am)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(1)(am) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a person who has not attained the age of 13 years and causes great bodily harm to that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 13 years at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not required[1] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[2]

   Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[3]

3. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[4]

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2102A was approved by the Committee in April 2008. It reflects changes made in § 948.02 by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.02(1)(am) as created by 2008 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: March 27, 2008]. A violation of this subsection is a Class A felony.

As revised by Act 80, the statute defines the crime in the same manner as § 940.225(1)(a): "Has sexual contact or sexual intercourse . . . and causes . . . great bodily harm." Under § 940.225(1)(a), the act itself need not cause the great bodily harm. See Wis JI-Criminal 1201, footnote 1, and State v. Schambow, 176 Wis.2d 286, 298-99, 500 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1993). The Wisconsin Legislative Council Act Memo for 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 states that the revision "clarifies that harm to the victim caused by the offender at the time of a first-degree sexual of a child, and not necessarily caused by the sexual intercourse or contact, would satisfy the great bodily harm element . . ."

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Section 939.66(2p), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 430, provides that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged" is a lesser included crime.

1. See § 939.23(6).

2. See § 939.43(2).

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

4. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

2102B FIRST DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 12 YEARS — § 948.02(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual intercourse with a person who has not attained the age of 12 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim) .
2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 12 years at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[1] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[2]

Consent to sexual intercourse is not a defense.[3]

Meaning of Sexual Intercourse

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2102B was approved by the Committee in April 2008; it reflects changes made by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.02(1)(b) as created by 2008 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: March 27, 2008.] The offense is a Class B felony.

NOTE: The age limit for this offense is that the victim "has not attained the age of 12 years." The similar offense involving sexual contact applies to a victim who "has not attained the age of 13 years." See § 948.02(1)(e).

Section 939.66(2p), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 430, provides that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged" is a lesser included crime.

1. See § 939.23(6).

2. See § 939.43(2).

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2102C FIRST DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 16 YEARS BY USE OR THREAT OF FORCE OR VIOLENCE — § 948.02(1)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual intercourse with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years by the use or threat of force or violence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 16 years at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not required[1] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[2]

3. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim) by the use or threat of force or violence.

   The use or threat of force of violence may occur at any time before or as part of the sexual intercourse.[3]

As a matter of law, a person who has not attained the age of 16 years cannot consent to sexual intercourse. Any consideration of the conduct of (name of victim) must be limited to determining whether the defendant had sexual intercourse by the use or threat of force or violence.[4]

Meaning of Sexual Intercourse

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

2102D FIRST DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL CONTACT WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 16 YEARS BY USE OR THREAT OF FORCE OR VIOLENCE BY A PERSON WHO HAS ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS — § 948.02(1)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(1)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has attained the age of 18 years who has sexual contact with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years by the use or threat of force or violence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual contact with (name of victim) .
2. The defendant had attained the age of 18 years.
3. (Name of victim) was under the age of 16 years at the time of the alleged sexual contact.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2102E was originally published in 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2014; it reflects changes made in § 948.02 by 2013 Wisconsin Act 167.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.02(1)(e) as created by 2008 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: March 27, 2008] and as amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 167 [effective date: March 29, 2013].

2013 Wisconsin Act 167 amended § 948.02(1)(e) to add "sexual intercourse." Before that amendment, sub. (1)(e) applied only to "sexual contact."

NOTE: The age limit for this offense is that the victim "has not attained the age of 13 years." Section 948.02(1)(b) prohibits "sexual intercourse with a person who has not attained the age of 12 years.".

1. See § 939.23(6).

2. See § 939.43(2).

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2104 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 16 YEARS — § 948.02(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 16 years at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1989 as Wis JI-Criminal 2104 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 2105 [for sexual contact offense]. It was revised in 1996 to combine the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 2104. The 2001 revision adopted a new format, made nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updated the Comment. The 2008 revision added a reference to 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 to the Comment. The 2018 revision reflected a change made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2020; it corrected an inadvertent error in the statutory citation.

Section 948.02(2) was amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018] to add the following: "This section does not apply if s. 948.093 applies." Section 948.093, Underage sexual activity, applies to sexual activity by a defendant who has not attained the age of 19. The Committee concluded that any factual discrepancies regarding the applicability of § 948.093 would likely be resolved before trial and in any event should be treated in the same manner as statutory exceptions. The Committee's judgment has been that statutory exceptions are best addressed as follows. The question whether an exception applies is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of that fact. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise that issue, the burden is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the exception does not apply. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1335B explaining the application of this approach to exceptions to the prohibition on carrying a concealed weapon.

This instruction is for two of the types of second degree sexual assault of a child defined by § 948.02(2): sexual contact or sexual intercourse with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years.

2008 Wisconsin Act 80 made significant changes in subsection (1) of § 948.02(2). Subsection (2) was not affected.

Section 939.66(2p), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 430, provides that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged" is a lesser included crime.

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Second degree sexual assault of a child under § 948.02(2) is a lesser included offense of first degree sexual assault of a child under § 948.02(1) and is properly submitted when the evidence supports a reasonable doubt about the child's age. State v. Moua, 215 Wis.2d 511, 573 N.W.2d 2020 (Ct. App. 1997).

Prohibiting consensual sexual activity with a person under the age of 16 does not violate an adult defendant's alleged "constitutional privacy right to engage in sexual activity and his privacy right to make decisions regarding procreation." State v. Fisher, 211 Wis.2d 665, 668, 565 N.W.2d 565 (Ct. App. 1997).

1. See § 939.23(6).

2. See § 939.43(2).

In State v. Jadowski, 2004 WI 68, 272 Wis.2d 418, 680 N.W.2d 810, the court held that "no affirmative defense of the victim's intentional misrepresentation of his or her age exists in a prosecution under § 948.02(2). . . . If an accused's reasonable belief about the victim's age, based on the victim's intentional misrepresentation of age, is not a defense, then neither evidence regarding the defendant's belief about the victim's ages nor evidence regarding the cause for or reasonableness of that is relevant." ¶3.

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2105A ATTEMPTED SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO HAS NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 16 YEARS: ACTUAL CHILD — §§ 948.02(2); 939.32

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Attempted second degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 939.32 and § 948.02(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years, does acts toward the commission of that crime which demonstrate unequivocally, under all of the circumstances, that he or she had formed that intent and would commit the crime except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intended[1] to have sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim) .

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 16 years.

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[3]

3. The defendant did acts which demonstrate unequivocally, under all of the circumstances, that the defendant intended to and would have had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim) except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.[4]

Meaning of "Unequivocally"

"Unequivocally" means that no other inference or conclusion can reasonably and fairly be drawn from the defendant's acts, under the circumstances.

Meaning of "Another Person"

"Another person" means anyone but the defendant and may include the intended victim.

Meaning of "Extraneous Factor"

An "extraneous factor" is something outside the knowledge of the defendant or outside the defendant's control.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2105A was approved by the Committee in August 2004.

This instruction provides a model for attempted second degree sexual assault of a child based on an attempt to assault an actual child. It combines Wis JI-Criminal 2104 and 580 but departs from the format recommended by the general instruction on attempt and involves three elements: the first two being the elements of the completed crime and the third being the definition of attempt.

A separate instruction is provided for cases based on attempts to assault what turns out to be a fictitious child, which result from "sting" operations based on electronic communications. See Wis JI-Criminal 2105B.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. Statutory Definition of the Crime

Attempted second degree sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 939.32 and § 948.02(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a person who has not attained the age of 16 years, does acts toward the commission of that crime which demonstrate unequivocally, under all of the circumstances, that he or she had formed that intent and would commit the crime except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

An "extraneous factor" is something outside the knowledge of the defendant or outside the defendant's control.

That the victim was fictitious can constitute an extraneous factor. What is required is that the defendant believed the person (he) (she) was dealing with was a child who was under the age of 16 years and that the defendant intended to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with that person.[3]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2105B was approved by the Committee in August 2004.

This instruction provides a model for attempted second degree sexual assault of a child based on an attempt to assault what turns out to be a fictitious child, which result from "sting" operations based on electronic communications. It combines Wis JI-Criminal 2104 and 580. A separate instruction is provided for cases based on attempts to assault an actual child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2105A.

Prosecutions based on activities directed toward fictitious children have been upheld in connection with charges of enticing a child under § 948.07 and sexual assault of a child under § 948.02.

In State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287, the Wisconsin Supreme Court upheld the application of the child enticement statute to a defendant charged with arranging, over the internet, a meeting in a motel with a boy he believed to be 13 years old. In fact, the boy was the fictitious creation of a government agent. The court held:

> . . . attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the "child" is fictitious. 2002 WI 65, ¶34.

Robins upheld State v. Koenck, 2001 WI App 93, 242 Wis.2d 693,626 N.W.2d 359, where the court of appeals reached the same conclusion: "the fictitiousness of the girls constituted an extraneous factor beyond Koenck's control that prevented him from successfully enticing a child for the express purpose of sexual intercourse or contact." 2001 WI APP 93, ¶28.

State v. Grimm, 2002 WI App 242, 258 Wis.2d 166, 653 N.W.2d 284, and State v. Brienzo, 2003 WI App 203, 267 Wis.2d 349, 671 N.W.2d 700, held that prosecutions for attempted sexual assault of a child can also be maintained in "internet sting" situations. ". . . [T]he reasoning in Koenck and Robins is equally applicable to the charge of attempted second-degree sexual assault of a child." Grimm, 258

Wis.2d 166, ¶10. Brienzo held that "the crime of attempted sexual assault of a child by means of sexual intercourse is a crime known to law. A defendant may have the intent to engage in sexual intercourse and may engage in acts in furtherance of that intent. When he or she does, he or she is liable for that attempt." 267 Wis.2d 349, ¶21.

Also see § 948.075, which prohibits use of a computerized communication system to facilitate a child sex crime. Wis JI-Criminal 2135 provides a model for violations of that statute.

1. The Committee concluded that where the case involves a fictitious victim, that is, where a government agent poses as a child, the state must prove that the defendant believed that the person with whom he or she was dealing was a child. In a case involving intent to engage in sexual contact or intercourse with a child in violation of § 948.02(2), for which this instruction is drafted, the victim must be under the age of 16, so the defendant's belief must match that element of the crime.

The Committee concluded that requiring that the defendant believe the victim was a child is the equivalent of the requirement stated in State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298,646 N.W.2d 287: "attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the 'child' is fictitious." 253 Wis.2d 298, ¶34.

The two cases dealing with attempted sexual assault of a child also contain statements supporting this conclusion: "The facts alleged and their reasonable inferences permit the conclusion that [the defendant] intended to have sexual contact with a person he believed to be under the age of sixteen." State v. Grimm, 2002 WI App 242, 258 Wis.2d 166, 653 N.W.2d 284, ¶20; State v. Brienzo, 2003 WI App 203, 267 Wis.2d 349, 671 N.W.2d 700, ¶25.

2. The definition of "attempt" is based on § 939.32 and Wis JI-Criminal 580. For explanation of the definitions of "unequivocally," "another person," and "extraneous factor," see the footnotes to Wis JI-Criminal 580.

3. This is based on the statement in State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287, that "attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the 'child' is fictitious." 253 Wis.2d 298, ¶34.

2106 SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: FAILURE TO ACT TO PREVENT SEXUAL INTERCOURSE OR SEXUAL CONTACT — § 948.02(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to act to prevent sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.02(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person responsible for the welfare of a child who has not attained the age of 16 years, if that person has knowledge that another person (intends to have) (is having) (has had) sexual (intercourse) (contact) with a child, is physically and emotionally capable of taking action which will prevent sexual (intercourse) (contact) from (taking place) (being repeated), fails to take that action, and whose failure to act [exposes the child to an unreasonable risk that (intercourse) (contact) may occur between the child and the other person] [facilitates the sexual (intercourse) (contact) that does occur between the child and the other person].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of a child, (name of victim) .

A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)) .[1]

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 16 years[2] at the time of the alleged offense.

3. (Name of principal) [3] (intended to have) (was having) (had) sexual (intercourse) (contact) with (name of victim) .

4. The defendant had knowledge[4] that (name of principal) (intended to have) (was having) (had) sexual (intercourse) (contact) with (name of victim) .

5. The defendant was physically and emotionally capable of taking action which would have prevented the sexual (intercourse) (contact) from (taking place) (being repeated).

6. The defendant failed to take action that would have prevented the sexual (intercourse) (contact) from (taking place) (being repeated).

7. The defendant's alleged failure to act [exposed the child to an unreasonable risk that sexual (intercourse) (contact) may occur] [facilitated the sexual (intercourse) (contact) that occurred between (name of victim) and (name of principal)].

["Facilitate" means to make easier.][5]

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2106 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008. It involved updating footnote 1.

Section 948.02 defines crimes relating to the sexual assault of children. Subsection (1) defines first degree sexual assault – see Wis JI-Criminal 2102. Subsection (2) defines second degree sexual assault – see Wis JI-Criminal 2104. Subsection (3), addressed by this instruction, imposes liability for failing to act to prevent the sexual assault of a child who has not attained the age of 16 years.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B.

As revised in 2001, the instruction includes bracketed or parenthetical material that cover all the alternative ways of committing the offense defined by § 948.02(3), including exposing the child to an unreasonable risk that a sexual assault will occur or be repeated.

In State v. Carol M.D., 198 Wis.2d 162, 542 N.W.2d 476 (Ct. App. 1995), the court affirmed multiple charges of failing to act to prevent sexual assault. Carol was informed by her son that Carol's live-in boyfriend had sexually assaulted him on a number of occasions. Carol confronted the boyfriend and he denied the assaults. Carol did nothing further. The boyfriend allegedly assaulted the son nine more times during September 1994. The son did not inform Carol of any of those assaults. Carol was charged under § 948.02(3) for failing to act to prevent the September 1994 assaults. The court of appeals held that she can be charged with nine counts – one for each of the assaults allegedly committed by the boyfriend. "[A] defendant may be convicted of more than one count under this statute if knowledge of the prior sexual assault is accompanied by failure to take action on each separate occasion." 198 Wis.2d 162, 168.

A similar provision relating to physical abuse of a child is found in § 948.03(4). See Wis JI-Criminal 2108.1. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has stated that "[t]he legislature deliberately enacted sec. 948.03(4) to penalize the conduct described in the Williquette decision." State v. Rundle, 176 Wis.2d 985, 999, 500 N.W.2d 916 (1993). That reference is to State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a person could violate the prior child abuse statute (§ 940.201, 1985-86 Stats.) by failing to protect children from a risk of physical abuse by another. That statute required that the defendant "subject the child to cruel maltreatment," which the court found was established where the defendant mother was shown to have failed to act in the face of repeated abuse of her children by the children's father. The Williquette court also recognized that general omissions liability exists in Wisconsin, notwithstanding the fact that no specific statute exists. 129 Wis.2d 239, 251-55.

1. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authorities relating to "person responsible for the child's welfare."

2. For purposes of offenses under Chapter 948, "child" is generally defined as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years." § 948.01(1). However, § 948.02(3) applies only to a person responsible for the welfare of a child who has not attained the age of 16 years.

3. The "principal" is the person who intends to have, was having, or had sexual intercourse or contact with the child. The defendant accused of the crime addressed by this instruction is charged with failing to act to prevent that sexual intercourse or contact from taking place or being repeated.

4. This element was revised in 2001 to use the words of the statute: "has knowledge that." The previous version of the instruction substituted "knew or believed," based on the definition of "know" in § 939.23(2): "'Know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified fact exists." The Committee concluded that in the context of this offense, it may be confusing to introduce the concept of "believes." That is, a defendant may "have knowledge of" facts that indicate sexual activity but may not "believe" that the activity is taking place. Repeating the words of the statute was believed to be the better approach.

5. This is based on a typical dictionary definition of "facilitate." See The American Heritage Dictionary Of The English Language, Third Edition (1992).

2106A LAW NOTE: "PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CHILD'S WELFARE" — § 948.01(3)

Chapter 948 Offenses

The term "person responsible for the child's welfare" is currently used in five offense definitions in Chapter 948:

- 948.02(3) Sexual assault of a child; failure to act
- 948.03(4)(a) Physical abuse of a child; failing to act to prevent great bodily harm
- 948.03(4)(b) Physical abuse of a child; failing to act to prevent bodily harm
- 948.21(1) and (2) Neglecting a child
- 948.40(2) Contributing to the delinquency of a child; by a "person responsible . . ."

Chapter 948 Definition

Section 948.01(3) defines the term as follows:

> "Person responsible for the child's welfare" includes the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution, or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

The Committee concluded that the § 948.01(3) definition applies to all Chapter 948 offenses even though there is a slight difference in the wording of the phrase in § 948.02(3), which refers to "a person responsible for the welfare of a child."

Compare Privilege of Parental Discipline

Note that the same phrase – "person responsible for the child's welfare" – is used in defining the class of persons who have the privilege to discipline a child under § 939.45(5). However, that statute provides its own definition, which differs slightly from the Chapter 948 definition. Compare § 939.45(5)(a)3. with § 948.01(3).

Penalty Enhancers Repealed

The term was formerly used in penalty enhancers that applied to violations of §§ 948.02, 948.025, and 948.03. Those provisions were repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 ["TIS II"]; effective date: February 1, 2003.

Case Law Interpreting the Term

In State v. Sostre, 198 Wis.2d 409, 542 N.W.2d 774 (1996), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a live-in boyfriend, who was a volunteer caretaker of a child, was a "person . . . responsible for the welfare of [a] child" under § 948.01(3). The defendant had lived with the mother of the victim for about three years. During this time the defendant did everything the mother did with regard to taking care of the children, including feeding and bathing them. The child considered the defendant his father or stepfather, called him "Poppy," and had a father-son relationship with the defendant. The definition of "person responsible . . ." includes those who are "employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child." The court held:

> One of the common meanings of the word "employed" is to "engage the service of" or "to make use of." Under these facts, it seems clear that the mother made use of the services of the defendant, or engaged the services of the defendant, in order to take care of her child when it was necessary for her to be away. In other words, the defendant was clearly "employed" by a person "legally responsible" for a child to "care for that child."
> 198 Wis.2d 409, 415

The fact that the word "employed" is usually equated with economic payment for services does not require a different result. Nor does the fact that a person in this defendant's position may not qualify as a "person responsible" for purposes of the privilege of parental discipline defined in § 939.45(5). That definition does not include the phrase "employed by one legally responsible . . ." that was at issue in this case. [State v. Dodd, 185 Wis.2d 560, 518 N.W.2d 300 (Ct. App. 1994), held that a live-in boyfriend was not covered by the privilege.] The court concluded the legislature specifically and deliberately defined the same term differently in the two statutes.

A biological father, who has admitted paternity in writing, is a "parent" and thus a "person responsible for the child's welfare" under § 948.21, Neglecting a Child. State v. Evans, 171 Wis.2d 471, 492 N.W.2d 141 (1992). The definition of "person responsible . . ." in § 948.01(3) applies to § 948.21.

In State v. Ward, 228 Wis.2d 301, 596 N.W.2d 301 (Ct. App. 1999), the court held that "person responsible . . ." under § 948.02(3) applied to an unpaid, volunteer babysitter whose husband sexually assaulted children of a neighbor. The evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant was employed by the parent in the sense that she was "used by the child's legal guardian to act as a caretaker for the child." 228 Wis.2d 301, 307, citing Sostre, cited above.

"A seventeen-year-old employed by a parent to care for the parent's child can be a person responsible for the welfare of the child. . . . [She] became a voluntary caretaker of [the child] and, as such, she was a person responsible for his welfare." State v. Hughes, 2005 WI App 155, 285 Wis.2d 388, 702 N.W.2d 87.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal A was originally published in 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2009.

This Law Note is intended to collect authority relating to the term "person responsible for the welfare of a child" as it is used in Chapter 948 and in § 939.45(5).

The 2010 revision deleted reference to "treatment foster parent," which was removed from the definition in § 948.01(3) by 2009 Wis Act 28 (Section 3352).

2107 REPEATED ACTS OF SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD — § 948.025

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.025 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, within a specified period of time,[1] commits three or more sexual assaults of the same child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed at least three sexual assaults of (name of victim).

   In this case, the defendant is alleged to have committed sexual assault of a child by violating (identify the subsection of § 948.02 that defines the sexual assault alleged).[2]

   Section _____ requires the State to prove that:[3]

   LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE INTENDED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTIONS AS NECESSARY.[4]

2. At least three sexual assaults took place within a specified period of time. The specified period of time is from (beginning date of specified period) through (ending date of specified period).[5]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF MORE THAN THREE ACTS HAVE BEEN ALLEGED.

[More Than Three Acts Alleged]

[Before you may find the defendant guilty you must unanimously agree that at least three sexual assaults occurred between (beginning date of specified period) and (ending date of specified period), but you need not agree on which acts constitute the required three.][6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed three violations of (specify statute) within the specified period of time, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2107 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 1996, 2002, 2003, 2008, and 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2019; it updated the Comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.025(1), which was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 227 [effective date: April 23, 1994]. Act 227 provided that "[t]his act first applies to offenses committed on the effective date of this SECTION." 1993 Wisconsin Act 227, Section 44, Initial Applicability. Thus it appears that all of the acts must have occurred after April 23, 1994. The statute was amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: March 27, 2008].

NOTE: This instruction is drafted for a case where the predicate acts alleged are all violations of the same subsection of § 948.02. [See Wis JI-Criminal 2107 EXAMPLE for a case where all predicates are violations of § 948.02(1)(b).] If the charge alleges violations of different subsections of § 948.02, considerable complexity could result and great care should be taken in drafting the instruction. Issues of concern include:

- slight variations in the elements of the predicate crimes, as with, for example, the age limits;
- determining whether less serious violations of § 948.025 are lesser included offenses – there is no special rule for § 948.025 in § 939.66, so the strict compare-the-statutory elements test would apply;
- submitting individual predicate offenses as lesser included offenses;
- making a proper statement regarding jury agreement – see § 948.025(2); and,
- potential confusion if evidence of other similar acts are submitted under § 904.04(2).

The 2008 revision of Wis JI-Criminal 2107 reflected the penalty changes made by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80. There are five possible penalties for convictions under § 948.025:

- § 948.025(1)(a) requires at least three violations of § 948.02(1)(am) and is a Class A felony with a mandatory minimum of 25 years confinement before extended supervision eligibility – see § 939.616(1g).

- § 948.025(1)(b) requires at least three violations of § 948.02(1)(am), (b), or (c) and is a Class B felony with a mandatory minimum term of confinement of 25 years – see § 939.616(1r).

- § 948.025(1)(c) requires at least three violations of § 948.02(1)(am), (b), (c), or (d) and is a Class B felony with a mandatory minimum term of confinement of 5 years – see § 939.616(2).

- § 948.025(1)(d) requires at least three violations of § 948.02(1) and is a Class B felony with no mandatory minimum term of confinement.

- § 948.025(1)(e) requires at least three violations of § 948.02(1) or (2) and is a Class C felony with no mandatory minimum term of confinement.

Penalties and elements for offenses defined in § 948.02 are outlined in Wis JI-Criminal 2102 INTRODUCTORY COMMENT: § 948.02 SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD: AS AMENDED BY 2007 WISCONSIN ACT 80 AND 2013 WISCONSIN ACT 167.

Section 939.635 provides that the maximum penalty for violations of § 948.025 "may be increased by not more than 5 years" if the offense was "against a child for whom the person was providing child care for compensation." See Wis JI-Criminal 2115 for a special question that should be added to the instruction when that penalty-increasing fact is charged.

State v. Colton M., 2015 WI App 94, 366 Wis.2d 119, 875 N.W.2d 642, concerned a claim by the 15-year-old defendant that applying § 948.025(1)(e) to him violated his due process and equal protection rights because statutes defined him as both a victim and an offender. The court concluded that "§ 948.025(1)(e), as applied to Colton, is not unconstitutionally vague beyond a reasonable doubt and, therefore, his delinquency adjudication under that statute does not violate his due process rights. We also conclude the prosecutor's decision to charge Colton and not D. [the underage victim] was not made on a discriminatory basis and, therefore, did not violate Colton's right to equal protection." 2015 WI App 94, ¶6.

Section 948.025(3) prohibits separate charges for sexual assaults that are predicates for the repeated sexual assault charge. See State v. Cooper, 2003 WI App 227, 267 Wis.2d 886, 672 N.W.2d 118. Separate charges for offenses that are not predicates for the repeated sexual assault charge are permissible. State v. Nommensen, 2007 WI App 224, 305 Wis.2d 695, 741 N.W.2d 481.

1. The statute refers to 3 or more violations "within a specified period of time." The Committee concluded that the intent of the statute must be that the prosecutor will specify the applicable period in the charge. That "specified period" should be carried over to the jury instruction. See note 5, below.

2. This instruction is drafted for a case where the predicate acts alleged are all violations of the same subsection of § 948.02. Refer to the standard instruction for that subsection and insert it here, using the bullet points in place of numbers for each element. For an illustration, see Wis JI-Criminal 2107 EXAMPLE.

3. To avoid a second reference to "elements" in defining the predicate crimes, the Committee decided that a bulleted list should be used instead of a numerical one. The instruction introduces the list with ". . . requires the State to prove that: . ." to allow simply plugging in the regular statement of the element without change, using a bullet point instead of a number. See Wis JI-Criminal 2107 EXAMPLE.

4. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "predicate crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and the intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

5. Here identify the beginning and ending dates of the period specified by the prosecution. For example: "The specified period of time is from January 1, 2008 through June 16, 2008."

In State v. Schultz, 2019 WI App 3, 385 Wis.2d 494, 922 N.W.2d 866, the defendant was tried and acquitted on a charge of repeated sexual assault of child. The specified time period was identified as "late summer or early fall" of 2012. After the acquittal, he was charged with a single act of child sexual assault against the same victim alleged to have occurred on or about Oct. 19, 2012. This was based on a paternity test showing he was the father of a child conceived at that time. Schultz argued that principles of double jeopardy should bar the charge for child sexual assault. The issue for the court of appeals was whether Oct. 19 was included in the specified time period of "late summer or early fall."

The court concluded that "early fall" was ambiguous and that it was "appropriate to look at the entire record to clarify the meaning of the phrase ..." ¶25. The proper test "is to consider how a reasonable person familiar with the facts and circumstances of a particular case would understand that charging language." ¶30. The court concluded that the reasonable person "would not consider the phrase 'early fall of 2012' to include October 19." ¶34.

The court added:

> We thus emphasize an important point, lest our decision be read to encourage the use of ambiguous charging language to manipulate double jeopardy protections in future prosecutions: well-established law in Wisconsin already provides a remedy for a defendant facing an ambiguous charge. Specifically, a defendant may move for the dismissal – or, in the alternative, move to make more definite and certain the allegations against him or her – of charges based on allegedly overbroad or ambiguous timeframes in a charging document.
> ¶35.
> [The Wisconsin Supreme Court granted review in Schultz on April 2, 2019.]

6. This statement is based on § 948.025(2). It is sufficient for cases where all the alleged predicate violations are of the same subsection of § 948.02. If the alleged predicate violations are of different subsections of § 948.02, a more detailed statement is required. See subs. (b) and (c) of § 948.025.

The rules in subsec. (2) of § 948.025 do "not violate due process or the right to a unanimous verdict." State v. Johnson, 2001 WI 52, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 365, 627 N.W.2d 455.

2107 EXAMPLE REPEATED ACTS OF SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD — § 948.025(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.025(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, within a specified period of time, commits three or more sexual assaults of the same child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed at least three sexual assaults of (name of victim).

In this case, the defendant is alleged to have committed sexual assault of a child by violating Section 948.02(1)(b).

Section 948.02(1)(b) requires the State to prove that:

$ The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim).

$ (Name of victim) was under the age of 12 years at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.

Consent to sexual intercourse is not a defense.

Meaning of Sexual Intercourse

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

2. At least three sexual assaults took place within a specified period of time. The specified period of time is from (beginning date of specified period) through (ending date of specified period) .

GIVE THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF MORE THAN THREE ACTS HAVE BEEN ALLEGED.

[More Than Three Acts Alleged]

[Before you may find the defendant guilty you must unanimously agree that at least three sexual assaults occurred between (beginning date of specified period) and (ending date of specified period) , but you need not agree on which acts constitute the required three.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed three violations of § 948.02(1)(b) within the specified period of time, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2107 EXAMPLE was approved by the Committee in December 2008.

This instruction is drafted as an example of how Wis JI-Criminal 2107 would read when applied to a case where all the predicate offenses for a charge under § 948.025(1)(b) are violations of § 948.02(1)(b).

2108 PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: INTENTIONALLY CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.03(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes great bodily harm to a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally[2] caused great bodily harm.

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

3. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age by the defendant is not required[3] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2108 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 948.03 defines crimes relating to the physical abuse of children. Subsection (2) identifies three types of intentional physical abuse. Subsection (3) identifies three types of reckless physical abuse.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.03(2)(a), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

The privilege of parental discipline as defined in § 939.45(5) is not available as a defense to a charge under § 948.03(2)(a). As amended by the same legislation that created § 948.03, § 939.45(5)(b) provides that "it is never reasonable discipline to use force which is intended to cause great bodily harm. . . ." Thus, by proving that the defendant intentionally caused great bodily harm, the state will also prove that the privilege does not apply. If evidence was received that might raise the issue of parental discipline, it might be helpful to the jury to instruct in the words quoted above that the privilege does not apply to the intentional causing of great bodily harm. If the lesser included offense of intentionally causing bodily harm is submitted, the privilege could apply to that offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 950.

1. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

2. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

3. Section 939.23(6).

4. Section 939.43(2).

2108A PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: FAILING TO ACT TO PREVENT GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.03(4)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(4)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person responsible for the welfare of a child who has knowledge that another person intends to cause great bodily harm to the child, is physically and emotionally capable of taking action which will prevent the great bodily harm from occurring, fails to take that action, and whose failure to act facilitates the great bodily harm to the child that is intentionally caused by the other person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. First, that the defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of a child, (name of victim) .

   A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)) .[1]

2. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. (Name of principal) intentionally[4] caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that (name of principal) had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[5]

4. The defendant knew or believed[6] that (name of principal) intended to cause[7] great bodily harm to (name of victim).

What the defendant knew or believed must be determined from the standpoint of the defendant at the time of the alleged offense and not from the viewpoint of the jury now.[8]

5. The defendant was physically and emotionally capable of taking action which would have prevented the great bodily harm from occurring.[9]

6. The defendant failed to take that action.

7. The defendant's alleged failure to act facilitated the great bodily harm to (name of victim) that was intentionally caused by (name of principal).[10]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2108.1 in 1993. This revision renumbered the instruction and was approved by the Committee in December 2008; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 948.03 defines crimes relating to the physical abuse of children. Subsection (2) identifies three types of intentional physical abuse. Subsection (3) identifies three types of reckless physical abuse. Subsection (4), addressed by this instruction, imposes liability for failing to act to prevent great bodily harm.

This instruction is drafted for one type of liability defined by § 948.03(4)(a) – that where a person's failure to act facilitates great bodily harm intentionally caused by another person. The statute also prohibits exposing a child to an unreasonable risk of great bodily harm. That alternative is not covered by this instruction.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has stated that "[t]he legislature deliberately enacted sec. 948.03(4) to penalize the conduct described in the Williquette decision." State v. Rundle, 176 Wis.2d 985, 999, 500 N.W.2d 916 (1993). The reference is to State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a person could violate the prior child abuse statute (§ 940.201, 1985-86 Stats.) by failing to protect children from a risk of physical abuse by another. That statute required that the defendant "subject the child to cruel maltreatment," which the court found was established where the defendant mother was shown to have failed to act in the face of repeated abuse of her children by the children's father. The Williquette court also recognized that general omissions liability exists in Wisconsin, notwithstanding the fact that no specific statute exists. 129 Wis.2d 239, 251-55.

Section 940.201 was repealed and replaced by § 948.03. 1987 Wisconsin Act 332. In Rundle, supra, the court held that the Williquette holding was codified in § 948.03(4). The court reversed Rundle's conviction for aiding and abetting a violation of § 948.03 because the evidence was not sufficient to prove "conduct, either verbal or overt, that as a matter of objective fact, aids another in the execution of a crime." 176 Wis.2d 985, 1004. The court held that omissions cannot be used to satisfy the "conduct" requirement of party to crime liability (at least for violations of § 948.03): "In sec. 948.03(4) the legislature has specified which omissions to act are unlawful." 176 Wis.2d 985, 1003.

1. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

NOTE: The same phrase is used in defining the class of persons who have the privilege to discipline a child under § 939.45(5), but a different definition applies. Compare § 939.45(5)(c)3 with § 948.01(3).

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authority relating to "person responsible for the welfare of a child."

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. This instruction is drafted for cases where great bodily harm is intentionally caused by another person. Section 948.03(4)(a) applies where the other person "intends to cause, is causing or has intentionally or recklessly caused great bodily harm." The Committee concluded that for the variety of conduct addressed by this instruction, the other person must have intentionally caused great bodily harm and the defendant must have known that the person intended to cause such harm.

5. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

6. The instruction uses "knew or believed" in place of the phrase "has knowledge that" which is used in the statute. No change in meaning is intended. See § 939.23(2).

7. See note 4, above.

8. Section 939.23(2).

9. Section 948.03(4)(a) also applies to preventing the harm from "being repeated." The Committee concluded that the "being repeated" alternative fits better with exposing the child to a risk of harm, which is not addressed by this instruction.

10. The instruction addresses the case where the defendant's failure to act is alleged to have facilitated great bodily harm caused by another. The statute also covers exposing the child to a risk of harm, which is not addressed by this instruction.

2108B PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: FAILING TO ACT TO PREVENT RECKLESS CAUSING OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.03(4)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(4)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person responsible for the welfare of a child who has knowledge that another person has recklessly caused great bodily harm to the child, is physically and emotionally capable of taking action which will prevent the great bodily harm from occurring, fails to take that action, and whose failure to act facilitates the great bodily harm to the child that is recklessly caused by the other person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. First, that the defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of a child, (name of victim) .

   A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)) .[1]

2. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. (Name of principal) recklessly caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[4]

In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should consider all the factors relating to the conduct. These include the following: what the defendant was doing; why (he) (she) was doing it; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; and whether the conduct showed any regard for the safety of (name of victim).[5]

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[6]

4. The defendant knew or believed[7] that (name of principal) recklessly caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

What the defendant knew or believed must be determined from the standpoint of the defendant at the time of the alleged offense and not from the viewpoint of the jury now.[8]

5. The defendant was physically and emotionally capable of taking action which would have prevented the great bodily harm from occurring.[9]

6. The defendant failed to take that action.

7. The defendant's alleged failure to act facilitated the great bodily harm to (name of victim) that was recklessly caused by (name of principal) .[10]

Deciding About Knowledge and Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and belief. Knowledge and belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was approved by the Committee in March 2015.

Section 948.03 defines crimes relating to the physical abuse of children. Subsection (2) identifies three types of intentional physical abuse. Subsection (3) identifies three types of reckless physical abuse. Subsection (4), addressed by this instruction, imposes liability for failing to act to prevent great bodily harm.

This instruction is drafted for one type of liability defined by § 948.03(4)(a) – that where a person's failure to act facilitates great bodily harm recklessly caused by another person. See Wis JI-Criminal 2108A for offenses involving great bodily harm intentionally caused by another person. The statute also prohibits exposing a child to an unreasonable risk of great bodily harm. That alternative is not covered by this instruction.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has stated that "[t]he legislature deliberately enacted sec. 948.03(4) to penalize the conduct described in the Williquette decision." State v. Rundle, 176 Wis.2d 985, 999, 500 N.W.2d 916 (1993). The reference is to State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a person could violate the prior child abuse statute (§ 940.201, 1985-86 Stats.) by failing to protect children from a risk of physical abuse by another. That statute required that the defendant "subject the child to cruel maltreatment," which the court found was established where the defendant mother was shown to have failed to act in the face of repeated abuse of her children by the children's father. The Williquette court also recognized that general omissions liability exists in Wisconsin, notwithstanding the fact that no specific statute exists. 129 Wis.2d 239, 251-55.

Section 940.201 was repealed and replaced by § 948.03. 1987 Wisconsin Act 332. In Rundle, supra, the court held that the Williquette holding was codified in § 948.03(4). The court reversed Rundle's conviction for aiding and abetting a violation of § 948.03 because the evidence was not sufficient to prove "conduct, either verbal or overt, that as a matter of objective fact, aids another in the execution of a crime." 176 Wis.2d 985, 1004. The court held that omissions cannot be used to satisfy the "conduct" requirement of party to crime liability (at least for violations of § 948.03): "In sec. 948.03(4) the legislature has specified which omissions to act are unlawful." 176 Wis.2d 985, 1003.

1. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

NOTE: The same phrase is used in defining the class of persons who have the privilege to discipline a child under § 939.45(5), but a different definition applies. Compare § 939.45(5)(c)3 with § 948.01(3).

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authority relating to "person responsible for the welfare of a child."

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. The definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 948.03(1). Note that this definition is different from the definition of "criminal recklessness" in § 939.24. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has discussed the difference in two cases.

In State v. Williams, 2006 WI App 212, 296 Wis.2d 834, 723 N.W.2d 719, the court held that "'recklessly' causing harm to a child under § 948.03(3)(b) is distinguished from 'criminal recklessness,' because only the latter includes a subjective component. We therefore conclude that recklessly causing harm to a child, unlike criminal recklessness, does not contain a subjective component." ¶23. Thus, reckless child abuse does not require that the defendant was subjectively aware of the risk to the child's safety.

In State v. Hemphill, 2006 WI App 185, 296 Wis.2d 199, 722 N.W.2d 393, the issue was whether the defendant was entitled to an instruction on the mistake defense in his prosecution for physical abuse of a child by recklessly causing great bodily harm. The court of appeals concluded that the mistake defense did not apply because the crime charged does not require a mental element that the alleged mistake could negate. "Inasmuch as § 948.03 sets out its own unique definition of 'recklessly,' the general definition of criminal recklessness [in § 939.24] does not apply." 2006 WI App 185, ¶11.

5. This paragraph is modeled after the one used for crimes involving recklessness as defined in § 939.24. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1020. It is believed to be appropriate here because, even though"recklessly" is defined differently in § 948.03, the basic concept is the same – all the circumstances relating to the conduct should be considered in considering whether it created an unreasonable risk of harm and whether it showed conscious disregard for safety.

In the Committee's judgment, the purpose of the conduct may also be considered in making this determination. This would include the purpose of parental discipline, even though it is not completely clear whether the privilege as defined in § 939.45(5) would apply. See Wis JI-Criminal 951.

6. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

7. The instruction uses "knew or believed" in place of the phrase "has knowledge that" which is used in the statute. No change in meaning is intended. See § 939.23(2).

8. Section 939.23(2).

9. Section 948.03(4)(a) also applies to preventing the harm from "being repeated." The Committee concluded that the "being repeated" alternative fits better with exposing the child to a risk of harm, which is not addressed by this instruction.

10. The instruction addresses the case where the defendant's failure to act is alleged to have facilitated great bodily harm caused by another. The statute also covers exposing the child to a risk of harm, which is not addressed by this instruction.

2109 PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: INTENTIONALLY CAUSING BODILY HARM — § 948.03(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally[2] caused bodily harm.

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

3. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[3] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2109 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 948.03 defines crimes relating to the physical abuse of children. Subsection (2) identifies three types of intentional physical abuse. Subsection (3) identifies three types of reckless physical abuse.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.03(2)(b), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

See Wis JI-Criminal 950 for an instruction on the privilege of parental discipline.

1. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

2. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and B.

2110 PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: INTENTIONALLY CAUSING BODILY HARM BY CONDUCT WHICH CREATES A HIGH PROBABILITY OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.03(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a child by conduct which creates a high probability of great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally[2] caused bodily harm.

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

3. The defendant's conduct created a high probability of great bodily harm.

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[3]

4. The defendant knew that (his) (her) conduct created a high probability of great bodily harm.[4]

5. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[5] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

The Committee concluded that this requires that the defendant charged under § 948.03(2)(c) must have known that his conduct created a high probability of great bodily harm.

   This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[2]

   In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should consider all the factors relating to the conduct. These include the following: what the defendant was doing; why (he) (she) was doing it; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; and whether the conduct showed any regard for the safety of (name of victim) .[3]

3. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

2113 PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD: RECKLESSLY CAUSING BODILY HARM BY CONDUCT WHICH CREATES A HIGH PROBABILITY OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 948.03(3)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of a child, as defined in § 948.03(3)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes bodily harm to a child by conduct which creates a high probability of great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[1]

2. The defendant recklessly caused bodily harm.

   This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[2]

   In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should

2114 PHYSICAL ABUSE OR SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD BY A PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR THE WELFARE OF THE CHILD — §§ 948.02(3m), 948.025(2m), and 948.03(5)

CAUTION: THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED BEFORE FEBRUARY 1, 2003.

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE OFFENSE CHARGED.

ADD THE FOLLOWING TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2102-2105, 2107, or 2108-2113:[1]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of (name of offense)[2] of a child but also that the defendant was responsible for the welfare of the child who is alleged to be the victim of that crime.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"At the time of the (name of offense),[3] was the defendant responsible for the welfare of (name of victim)?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was responsible for the welfare of (name of victim) at the time of the (name of offense).[4]

A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes _____.[5]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant was responsible for the welfare of (name of victim) at the time of the (name of offense),[6] you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2114 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1995 and 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003.

Sections 948.02(3m), 948.025(2m), and 948.03(5) were repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective February 1, 2003. This instruction is to be used only for charges based on conduct occurring before that date. The facts formerly addressed by §§ 948.02(3m), 948.025(2m), and 948.03(5) have been recast as an aggravating factor to be considered in imposing a sentence. See § 973.017(6).

This instruction is drafted for use in cases involving any one of three provisions that enhance the penalty for offenses against children when those offenses are committed by a "person responsible for the welfare of the child." Each of the following statutes allows for increasing the maximum term of imprisonment by not more than 5 years: § 948.02(3m) for sexual assault of a child; § 948.025(2m) for repeated acts of sexual assault of a child; and § 948.03(5) for physical abuse of a child.

Sections 948.02(3m) and 948.025(2m) were created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 14 and apply to offenses committed on or after May 31, 1995.

The Committee has concluded that penalty enhancement provisions are best handled by submitting them to the jury as a special question. For other examples, see Wis JI-Criminal 990, 994, and 996. The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of physical abuse of a child, under Wis. Stat. § 948.03___, at the time and place charged in the information.
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "At the time of the physical abuse, was the defendant responsible for the welfare of (name of victim) ?"

1. The penalty enhancement provision found in § 948.02(3m) applies to offenses defined in § 948.02(1) and (2). Wis JI-Criminal 2102 and 2104 are the instructions for those offenses.

The penalty enhancement provision in § 948.025(2m) applies to the offense defined in § 948.025. See Wis JI-Criminal 2107.

Sections 948.02(3m) and 948.025(2m) were created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 14 and apply to offenses committed on or after May 31, 1995.

The penalty enhancement provision in § 948.03(5) applies to offenses defined in § 948.03(2) and (3). Wis JI-Criminal 2108, 2109, and 2110 are the instructions for the three types of intentional physical abuse defined in sub. (2). Wis JI-Criminal 2111, 2112, and 2113 are the instructions for the three types of reckless physical abuse defined in sub. (3).

2. Use the name of the offense: "sexual assault" if the case involves § 948.02(3m); "repeated acts of sexual assault" if the case involves § 948.025(2m); "physical abuse" if the case involves § 948.03(5).

3. See note 2, supra.

4. See note 2, supra.

5. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; an employe of a public or private residential home, institution, or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child. [NOTE: "Stepparent" was added to the definition by 1995 Wisconsin Act 214 (effective date: May 1, 1996).]

The Committee concluded that the § 948.01(3) definition applies even though there is a slight difference in the wording of the phrase in § 948.03(5). Compare ". . . the person is responsible for the welfare of the child" in § 948.03(5) with "person responsible for the child's welfare" in § 948.01(3).

[NOTE: The same phrase is used in defining the class of persons who have the privilege to discipline a child under § 939.45(5), but a different definition applies. Compare § 939.45(5)(c)3 with § 948.01(3).]

In State v. Sostre, 198 Wis.2d 409, N.W.2d (1996), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a live-in boyfriend, who is a volunteer caretaker of a child, is a "person . . . responsible for the welfare of [a] child" under § 948.01(3). The defendant had lived with the mother of the victim for about three years. During this time the defendant did everything the mother did with regard to taking care of the children, including feeding and bathing them. The child considered the defendant his father or stepfather, called him "Poppy," and had a father-son relationship with the defendant. The definition of "person responsible . . ." includes those who are "employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child." The court held:

> A common meaning of the word "employed" is to "engage the service of" or "to make use of." Under these facts, it seems clear that the mother made use of the services of the defendant, or engaged the services of the defendant, in order to take care of her child when it was necessary for her to be away. In other words, the defendant was clearly "employed" by a person "legally responsible" for a child to "care for that child."

The fact that the word "employed" is usually equated with economic payment for services does not require a different result. Nor does the fact that a person in this defendant's position may not qualify as a "person responsible" for purposes of the privilege of parental discipline defined in § 939.45(5). That definition does not include the phrase "employed by one legally responsible . . ." that was at issue in this case. [State v. Dodd, 185 Wis.2d 560, 518 N.W.2d 300 (Ct. App. 1994), held that a live-in boyfriend was not covered by the privilege.] The court concluded the legislature specifically and deliberately defined the same term differently in the two statutes.

A biological father, who has admitted paternity in writing, is a "parent" and thus a "person responsible for the child's welfare" under § 948.21, Neglecting a Child. State v. Evans, 171 Wis.2d 471, 492 N.W.2d 141 (1992). The definition of "person responsible . . ." in § 948.01(3) applies to § 948.21 and to the offenses covered by this instruction.

2114A REPEATED ACTS OF PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD — § 948.03(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.03(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, within a specified period of time,[1] commits three or more acts of physical abuse of the same child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed at least three acts of physical abuse of (name of victim).

   In this case, the defendant is alleged to have committed physical abuse of a child by violating (identify the subsection of § 948.03 that defines the physical abuse alleged).[2]

   Section _____ requires the State to prove that:[3]

   LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE APPLICABLE INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION AS NECESSARY.[4]

2. At least three acts of physical abuse took place within a specified period of time.

The specified period of time is from (beginning date of specified period) through (ending date of specified period).[5]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF MORE THAN THREE ACTS HAVE BEEN ALLEGED.

[More Than Three Acts Alleged]

[Before you may find the defendant guilty you must unanimously agree that at least three acts of physical abuse occurred between (beginning date of specified period) and (ending date of specified period), but you need not agree on which acts constitute the required three.][6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed three violations of (specify statute) within the specified period of time, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS A, B, C, OR D FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE PENALTY-INCREASING FACT IS PRESENT.[7]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

(Did at least one violation cause the death of the child? You must all agree on the violation that caused death.)

(Did at least two violations involve intentionally causing great bodily harm to the child? You must all agree on the violations that caused great bodily harm.)

(Did at least one violation cause great bodily harm to the child? You must all agree on the violation that caused[8] great bodily harm.)

(Did at least one violation create a high probability of great bodily harm to the child?

You must all agree on the violation that created a high probability of great bodily harm.)

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2114A was originally published in 2017. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2019; it updated footnote 5.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.03(5), which was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 366 [effective date: April 21, 2016].

NOTE: This instruction is drafted for a case where the predicate acts alleged are all violations of the same subsection of § 948.03. See Wis JI-Criminal 2114A EXAMPLE for a case where all predicates are violations of § 948.03(2)(a). If the charge alleges violations of different subsections of § 948.03, considerable complexity could result and great care should be taken in drafting the instruction. Issues of concern include:

- determining whether less serious violations of § 948.03(5) are lesser included offenses – there is no special rule for § 948.03(5) in § 939.66, so the strict compare-the-statutory elements test would apply;
- submitting individual predicate offenses as lesser included offenses;
- making a proper statement regarding jury agreement – see § 948.03(5)(b); and,
- potential confusion if evidence of other similar acts is submitted under § 904.04(2).

There are five possible penalties for convictions under § 948.03(5):

- § 948.03(5)(a)1. provides that it is a Class A felony "if at least one violation caused the death of the child."

- § 948.03(5)(a)2. provides that it is a Class B felony "if at least 2 violations were violations of sub. (2)(a)" – referring to intentionally causing great bodily harm to a child.

- § 948.03(5)(a)3. provides that it is a Class C felony "if at least one violation resulted in great bodily harm to the child."

- § 948.03(5)(a)4. provides that it is a Class D felony "if at least one violation created a high probability of great bodily harm to the child."

- § 948.03(5)(a)5. states: "A Class E felony." The Committee concluded that this applies where none of the facts addressed by the other penalty provisions are alleged.

If the offense is charged as a Class E felony, nothing need be added to the text of the instruction. If the offense is charged as a Class A, B, C, or D felony, a special question should be added to assure a jury finding on the penalty-increasing fact. See footnote 7, below.

Section 939.635, as amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 366, provides that the maximum penalty for violations of § 948.03(5)(a)1., 2., or 3. "may be increased by not more than 5 years" if the offense was "against a child for whom the person was providing child care for compensation." See Wis JI-Criminal 2115 for a special question that should be added to the instruction when that penalty-increasing fact is charged.

1. The statute refers to 3 or more violations "within a specified period of time." The Committee concluded that the intent of the statute must be that the prosecutor will specify the applicable period in the charge. That "specified period" should be carried over to the jury instruction. See note 5, below.

2. This instruction is drafted for a case where the predicate acts alleged are all violations of the same subsection of § 948.03. Refer to the standard instruction for that subsection and insert it here, using bullet points in place of numbers for each element. For an illustration, see Wis JI-Criminal 2114A EXAMPLE.

3. To avoid a second reference to "elements" in defining the predicate crimes, the Committee decided that a bullet-point list should be used instead of a numerical one. The instruction introduces the list with ". . . requires the State to prove that: . ." to allow simply plugging in the regular statement of the element without change, using a bullet point instead of a number. See Wis JI-Criminal 2114A EXAMPLE.

4. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the crime be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion in similar situations: bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698] and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

5. Here identify the beginning and ending dates of the period specified by the prosecution. For example: "The specified period of time is from July 1, 2016, through October 1, 2016."

Section 948.025 Engaging in repeated acts of sexual assault of the same child, also requires specifying the time period. In State v. Schultz, 2019 WI App 3, 385 Wis.2d 494, 922 N.W.2d 866, the defendant was tried and acquitted on a charge of repeated sexual assault of child. The specified time period was identified as "late summer or early fall" of 2012. After the acquittal, he was charged with a single act of child sexual assault against the same victim alleged to have occurred on or about Oct. 19, 2012. This was based on a paternity test showing he was the father of a child conceived at that time. Schultz argued that principles of double jeopardy should bar the charge for child sexual assault. The issue for the court of appeals was whether Oct. 19 was included in the specified time period of "late summer or early fall."

The court concluded that "early fall" was ambiguous and that it was "appropriate to look at the entire record to clarify the meaning of the phrase ..." ¶25. The proper test "is to consider how a reasonable person familiar with the facts and circumstances of a particular case would understand that charging language." ¶30. The court concluded that the reasonable person "would not consider the phrase 'early fall of 2012' to include October 19." ¶34.

The court added:

> We thus emphasize an important point, lest our decision be read to encourage the use of ambiguous charging language to manipulate double jeopardy protections in future prosecutions: well-established law in Wisconsin already provides a remedy for a defendant facing an ambiguous charge. Specifically, a defendant may move for the dismissal – or, in the alternative, move to make more definite and certain the allegations against him or her – of charges based on allegedly overbroad or ambiguous timeframes in a charging document.
> ¶35.

[The Wisconsin Supreme Court granted review in Schultz on April 2, 2019.]

6. This statement is based on § 948.03(5)(b).

7. The penalties for convictions under § 948.03(5) range from a Class A to a Class E felony – see the Comment preceding footnote 1, above. If the offense is charged as a Class E felony, nothing need be added to the text of the instruction. If the offense is charged as a Class A, B, C, or D felony, a special question should be added to assure a jury finding on the penalty-increasing fact. While the jury need not agree on which acts constitute the required three for conviction under § 948.03(5) if more than three acts were alleged, see § 948.03(5)(b), the Committee concluded that the jury must unanimously agree on the on the facts that increase the penalty. Those facts are the equivalent of elements of the Class A, B, C, or D felony.

If the facts may support submitting more than one question, the situation is essentially the same as one involving lesser included offenses. SM-6 Instructing On Lesser Included Offenses provides a review of the law relating to lesser included offenses, including the recommended way to instruct on the transition between greater and lesser offenses.

8. Section 948.03 (5)(a)3. uses "resulted in" rather than "caused." The instruction uses "cause;" Wisconsin case law holds that the two terms have the same meaning. See State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989) and State v. Wille, 2007 WI App 27, 299 Wis.2d 531, 798 N.W.2d 343.

2114A EXAMPLE REPEATED ACTS OF PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD — § 948.03(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.03(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, within a specified period of time, commits three or more acts of physical abuse of the same child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed at least three acts of physical abuse of (name of victim).

   In this case, the defendant is alleged to have committed physical abuse of a child by violating Section 948.03(2)(a).

   Section 948.03(2)(a) requires the State to prove that:

   - The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

     "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.

   - The defendant intentionally caused great bodily harm.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

- (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required, and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.

2. At least three acts of physical abuse took place within a specified period of time. The specified period of time is from (beginning date of specified period) through (ending date of specified period).

GIVE THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF MORE THAN THREE ACTS HAVE BEEN ALLEGED.

[More Than Three Acts Alleged]

[Before you may find the defendant guilty, you must unanimously agree that at least three acts of physical abuse occurred between (beginning date of specified period) and (ending date of specified period), but you need not agree on which acts constitute the required three.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed three violations of Section 948.03(2)(a) within the specified period of time, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2114A IF SPECIAL QUESTIONS ON PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS ARE NECESSARY.[1]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2114A EXAMPLE was approved by the Committee in August 2017. It was revised in 2023 to correct a formatting issue.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.03(5), which was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 366 [effective date: April 21, 2016].

The instruction is drafted as an example of how Wis JI-Criminal 2114A would read when applied to a case where all the predicate offenses for the charge under § 948.03(5) are violations of § 948.03(2)(a) – intentionally causing great bodily harm to a child.

1. The instruction assumes that the case is charged as a Class B felony under § 948.03(5)(a)2.: "at least 2 violations were violations of sub. (2)(a)." If only three predicate offenses were alleged, a special question on penalty is not necessary – the jury returning a guilty verdict will have agreed that the same three acts in violation of § 948.03(2)(a) were proved. If more than three predicate acts were alleged, the jury will have been told that agreement is not required on which acts constituted the required three. However, for purposes of the penalty, the jurors must all agree that the same two acts "were violations of sub. (2)(a)." Wis JI-Criminal 2114A provides special questions for the penalty-increasing facts.

2115 SEXUAL ASSAULT OR PHYSICAL ABUSE OF A CHILD BY A CHILD CARE PROVIDER — § 939.635

CAUTION: THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED ON OR AFTER DECEMBER 9, 2011.

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON OFFENSES CHARGED UNDER §§ 948.02, 948.025, 948.03(2) and (3), AND 948.03(5)(a)1., 2., 3., and 4.[1]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of _____ but also that the defendant did so against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:[2]

"Did the defendant commit the crime of _____ against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation?"[3]

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2115 was approved by the Committee in August 2017. This revision was approved in December 2018; it updated the list of statutes to which it applies.

This instruction is drafted for the penalty enhancer found in § 939.635, which was created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 82 [effective date: December 9, 2011.] It allows an increase of not more than 5 years for violations of §§ 948.02, 948.025, 948.03(2) and (3), and 948.03(5)(a)1., 2., 3., and 4. if the defendant committed the crime against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation. The reference to offenses under § 948.03(5), Engaging In Repeated Acts Of Physical Abuse Of A Child, was added by 2015 Wisconsin Act 366 [effective date: April 21, 2016] to include the Class A, B, C, and

D felony violations of that statute. The prosecutor's intention to seek the enhanced penalty authorized by § 939.635 should be disclosed by alleging in the charging document that the defendant committed the crime against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation. This instruction should be added to the instruction for the crime charged if the evidence would support a finding that the penalty-increasing facts are established.

Until repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 (TIS II), a set of penalty enhancers existed for violations of §§ 948.02, 948.025, and 948.03 committed by a "person responsible for the welfare of the child." See Wis JI-Criminal 2114. Act 109 eliminated many penalty enhancers in the view that penalties had increased for most offenses and the new maximums provided sufficient sentencing authority. Act 109 recast them as aggravating circumstances to be considered in imposing a bifurcated sentence. The enhancers formerly found in §§ 948.02, 948.025, and 948.03 were recognized as aggravating factors in § 973.017(6) AGGRAVATING FACTORS; CHILD SEXUAL ASSAULT OR CHILD ABUSE.

1. The relevant instructions are:

- for violations of §§ 948.02: JI 2102A through 2102E; JI 2104; JI 2105A and B; 2106, and 2107.
- for violations of § 948.03(2): JI 2107; JI 2108; and JI 2109.
- for violations of § 948.03(3): JI 2111; JI 2112; and JI 2113.
- for violations of § 948.03(5)(a)1., 2., 3., and 4.: JI 2114.

2. The Committee recommends that the penalty enhancing fact be submitted to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of _____, under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant commit the crime of _____ against a child for whom the defendant was providing child care for compensation?"

3. Section 939.635 does not define "for compensation." The bill creating the statute originally specified that it applied only to persons licensed under certain statutes relating to providers of child care. [See 2011 Assembly Bill 102.] Senate Amendment 1 to AB 102 was adopted and changed the specific statutory references to the more general "child care for compensation."

2116 CAUSING MENTAL HARM TO A CHILD — § 948.04

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Causing mental harm to a child, as defined in § 948.04 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is exercising temporary or permanent control of a child and causes mental harm to that child by conduct which demonstrates substantial disregard for the mental well-being of the child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was exercising temporary or permanent control[1] of (name of victim) .

2. (Name of victim) suffered mental harm.

"Mental harm" means substantial harm to a child's psychological or intellectual functioning which may be evidenced by a substantial degree of certain characteristics of the child, including, but not limited to, anxiety, depression, withdrawal, or outward aggressive behavior. "Mental harm" may be demonstrated by a substantial and observable change in behavior, emotional response, or cognition that is not within the normal range for the child's age and stage of development.[2]

3. The defendant caused mental harm to (name of victim) .

This requires that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the mental harm.[3]

4. The defendant caused mental harm by conduct which demonstrated substantial disregard for the mental well-being of (name of victim) .[4]

5. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time the alleged harm was caused.[5]

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age by the defendant is not required[6] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2116 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.04, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

The offense defined by § 948.04 did not exist under prior law, at least to the extent that "cruel maltreatment" under § 940.201, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., did not include "mental harm" as defined for purposes of this offense.

1. "Exercising temporary or permanent control of a child" is not defined in Chapter 948. Compare the definition of "person responsible for the child's welfare" in § 948.01(3). There was nothing in the legislative history that indicated the intended scope of this term, so the Committee concluded that further definition in the instruction could not be provided with substantial assurance of accuracy.

2. This is the definition provided in § 948.01(2). It is comparable to the definition of "emotional damage" in the statute requiring the reporting of child abuse or neglect. See § 48.981(1)(cm). The term "emotional damage" is also used in § 813.122 which provides for child abuse restraining orders and injunctions. The definition provided in § 813.122(1)(e) is similar to the one in § 948.01(2). The Wisconsin Court of Appeals applied the § 813.122(1)(e) definition in In The Interest of H.Q., 152 Wis.2d 701, 449 N.W.2d 75 (Ct. App. 1989), and found that "emotional damage" was not established by evidence showing that children were concerned or upset about their father's drunken behavior:

> That a child became upset and cried twice in six months because of a parent's acts and dislikes being with the parent is insufficient for a finding of emotional damage, in the absence of expert testimony.

152 Wis.2d 701, 709.

3. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of mental harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

4. "Demonstrates substantial disregard for the mental well-being" appears to state a standard related to "recklessness." It is similar to the definition of recklessness used in § 948.03 – "demonstrates a conscious disregard for the safety of the child." The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has held that the § 948.03 definition states a different standard than the one provided by the definition of "criminal recklessness" in § 939.24 which requires a substantial and unreasonable risk and awareness of that risk. Those cases have made it clear that a subjective awareness of the risk is not required. See State v. Williams, 2006 WI App 212, 296 Wis.2d 834, 723 N.W.2d 719 and State v. Hemphill, 2006 WI App 185, 296 Wis.2d 199, 722 N.W.2d 393.

5. The crime is defined as causing mental harm "to a child," that is, to someone who has not attained the age of 18 years. Thus, the victim must have suffered mental harm before reaching the age of 18, even though the expanded statute of limitations would allow prosecution after the victim's 18th birthday. See § 939.74(2)(c).

6. Section 939.23(6).

7. Section 939.43(2).

2119 FAILURE TO REPORT CHILD ABUSE — § 48.981(2), (3), and (6)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to report child abuse, as defined in § 48.981[1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who is required to report child abuse or neglect, has reasonable cause to suspect that a child seen in the course of professional duties has been abused or neglected, and intentionally fails to report as required.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was required to report child (abuse) (neglect).

   A _____ is required to report child (abuse) (neglect).[2]

2. The defendant saw (name of child) in the course of professional duties.

3. The defendant had reasonable cause to suspect that (name of child) had been (abused) (neglected).

   "Reasonable cause to suspect" means that a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have suspected that the child had been (abused) (neglected).[3]

["Abused" means physical injury inflicted by other than accidental means.][4]

["Neglected" means failure, refusal, or inability on the part of a caregiver, for reasons other than poverty, to provide necessary care, food, clothing, medical or dental care, or shelter so as to seriously endanger the physical health of the child.][5]

4. The defendant intentionally failed to report.

"Intentionally," as used here, means that the defendant purposely failed to report. This does not require that the defendant knew that the law required the reporting of suspected (abuse) (neglect).[6]

"Report" requires immediately informing, by telephone or personally, the county department of (social) (human) services, or the sheriff, or the city police department of the facts and circumstances contributing to the reasonable suspicion that (abuse) (neglect) has occurred.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

The 2002 revision adopted a new format, made nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updated the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2011; it updated the text and the Comment.

The offense defined by the combination of subsections (2), (3), and (6) of § 48.981 (see note 1, below) can be committed in two different situations: where a person has "reasonable cause to suspect" that a child has been abused or neglected; and where a person has "reason to believe" that a child has been threatened with abuse or neglect and that abuse or neglect will occur. Wis JI-Criminal 2119 is drafted for the first situation: reasonable cause to suspect that a child has been abused or neglected.

Section 48.981 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 27 (the Budget Bill) to create an exception to the reporting requirement for "health care providers." The exception apparently excuses health care providers from the reporting requirement with regard to instances of consensual sexual contact and sexual intercourse with persons other than relatives, guardians, etc. The statutory changes are complex; see § 48.981(2m).

Subsection (2r) of § 48.981 recognizes an exception for persons delegated care and custody of a child under § 48.979.

1. The facts necessary to constitute the crime of failure to report child abuse or neglect are derived from subs. (2), (3), and (6) of § 48.981. Subsection (6) is the penalty section, providing that "whoever intentionally violates this section by failure to report as required" may be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 6 months or both. Those who are required to report are identified in sub. (2). Subsection (2m) provides an exception to the reporting requirement for "health care providers." Subsection (2r) of § 48.981 recognizes an exception for persons delegated care and custody of a child under § 48.979. Subsection (3) describes the nature of the required report.

2. The Committee suggests inserting the title of required reporters from the list provided in § 48.981(2) that allegedly applies to the defendant. For example: "A nurse is required to report child (abuse) (neglect)." It is for the jury to determine whether the defendant is in fact a person required to report.

Note that an exception to the reporting requirement is provided in § 48.981(2m) for "health care providers" in connection with some cases of sexual contact or sexual intercourse.

2011 Wisconsin Act 81 added to the list of required reporters by creating subsec. (2)(a)(16m) to read: "A school employee not otherwise specified in this paragraph."

3. The definition is adapted from the discussion in State v. Hurd, 135 Wis.2d 266, 400 N.W.2d 42 (Ct. App. 1986), where the constitutionality of the standard was upheld. The statute actually phrases the test in two different ways: "reasonable cause to suspect" that a child has been abused or neglected and

"having reason to believe" that a child has been threatened with abuse or neglect and that abuse or neglect will occur. The instruction would have to be modified if the case involved the "threatened with abuse" option.

In Hurd, the court held that "the test becomes whether a prudent person would have had reasonable cause to suspect child abuse if presented with the same totality of circumstances as that acquired and viewed by the defendant. Under this statute, conviction is only permitted when, under the totality of the circumstances presented to the defendant, a prudent person would have had reasonable cause to suspect child abuse." 135 Wis.2d 266, 273.

4. The definition of "abused" is based on the alternative provided in § 48.02(1)(a). Nine other types of harm are also defined as "abuse" by § 48.02(1). "Physical injury" is further defined in § 48.02(14g).

5. The definition of "neglect" is based on the one provided in § 48.02(12g).

6. In State v. Hurd, note 3, supra, the court of appeals interpreted § 48.981 in its previous version when it used the word "wilfully." The court said "wilfully" means the same thing as "intentionally" under § 939.23(3). Section 48.981 was amended by 1985 Wis. Act. 29, sec. 926, to substitute "intentionally" for "wilfully." So it is fair to assume that what the Hurd court said about the "wilfully" version of the statute also applies to the present statute.

The Committee believes that "intentionally" failing to report requires an actual suspicion of child abuse (see element three) and an intentional (that is, purposeful) failure to report (element four). The statute is "intended to hold accountable those persons who reasonably suspect child abuse and intentionally fail to notify the appropriate agencies." State v. Hurd, 135 Wis.2d 266, 278. Knowledge of the statutory duty itself is not required. See § 939.23(3) and (5) and State v. Hurd, 135 Wis.2d 266, 277.

7. The definition of "report" is based on the description of the reporting requirement provided in § 48.981(3)(a)(1), which refers to "the county department." Section 48.02(2g) provides: "'County department' means a county department under s. 46.22 or 46.23, unless the context requires otherwise." Section 46.22 refers to the county department of social services; section 46.23 refers to the county department of human services.

2120 SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD — § 948.05(1)(a)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.05(3).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who employs, uses, persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any child to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of recording[2] or displaying in any way the conduct, with knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct involving the child.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (employed) (used) (persuaded) (induced) (enticed) (coerced) (name of child) to engage in sexually explicit conduct.[4]

   [Consent by (name of child) is not a defense.][5]

2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][6]

3. The defendant acted for the purpose of (recording) (displaying in any way) the sexually explicit conduct.

["Record" means to reproduce an image or a sound or to store data representing an image or a sound.][7]

4. The defendant knew that the person in the (recording) (display) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.[8]

Meaning of "Sexually Explicit Conduct"

"Sexually explicit conduct" means[9] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)).[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS C FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[11]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2120 was approved by the Committee in June 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019; it added to the Comment to reflect changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

NOTE: The instruction previously designated as Wis JI-Criminal 2120 was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 2121 in 2010.

This instruction is for violations of sub. (1)(a) of § 948.05 where there is no evidence of the affirmative defense defined in sub. (3). Section 948.05 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. Section 948.05 was based on § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats., for which there had been no published instruction.

Subsection (2) of § 948.05 extends liability to a person responsible for the welfare of a child who "knowingly permits, allows or encourages the child" to engage in conduct prohibited by sub. (1). See Wis JI-Criminal 2123.

Section 948.05 was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: May 13, 1999. The act recreated what was sub. (1)(c) as new sub. (1m); see Wis JI-Criminal 2122. Act 3 also amended the affirmative defense provided in sub. (3), which can apply to violations addressed by this instruction. For cases involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2120A.

Section 948.05 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 5 years for violations of § 948.05.

1. Wis JI-Criminal 2120A provides instruction for violations of § 948.05(1)(a) where there is evidence of the defense provided in § 948.05(3). The defense applies if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age of the child.

2. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

3. The statement of the facts necessary to constitute the crime is derived by combining the definition of the offense found in sub. (1)(a) of § 948.05 with the introductory statement in that portion of § 948.05(1) which precedes sub. (a).

4. If the name of the child is not known, substitute "the person" wherever the instruction calls for "(name of child)."

5. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to so inform the jury.

6. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). However, sub. (3) of § 948.05 provides an affirmative defense if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age. Do not use this statement where there is evidence of the defense. Instead, use Wis JI-Criminal 2120A.

7. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

8. Subsection 948.05(1) requires that the defendant have "knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as ". . . the defendant knew that the person in the recording was engaged in sexually explicit conduct" adequately covers the "knowledge of the character and content" aspect.

9. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

> (7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
> (a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
> (b) Bestiality;
> (c) Masturbation;
> (d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
> (e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

10. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

> "Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

11. 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 [effective date: June 6, 2006] changed the penalty structure for violations of sec. 948.05: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

2120A SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE — § 948.05(1)(a)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.05(3).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who employs, uses, persuades, induces, entices, or coerces any child to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of recording[2] or displaying in any way the conduct, with knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct involving the child.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (employed) (used) (persuaded) (induced) (enticed) (coerced) (name of child) to engage in sexually explicit conduct.[4]

   [Consent by (name of child) is not a defense.][5]

2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][6]

3. The defendant acted for the purpose of (recording) (displaying in any way) the sexually explicit conduct.

["Record" means to reproduce an image or a sound or to store data representing an image or a sound.][7]

4. The defendant knew that the person in the (recording) (display) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.[8]

"Sexually explicit conduct" means[9] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)).[10]

Consider Whether the Defense is Proved

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that (name of child) had attained the age of 18 years.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is established.[11]

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[12]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS C FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[13]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2120A was approved by the Committee in June 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019; it added to the Comment to reflect changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

NOTE: The instruction previously designated as Wis JI-Criminal 2120A was renumbered JI 2121A in 2010.

This instruction is for a case involving a violation of sub. (1)(a) of § 948.05 where there is evidence of the affirmative defense defined in sub. (3) of the same statute. See Wis JI-Criminal 2120 for an instruction intended to be used where there is no evidence of the affirmative defense. See the Comment to that instruction for general information about the statute.

The definition of the affirmative defense in § 948.05(3) was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3; effective date: May 13, 1999. The defense was limited to violations of subs. (1)(a), (1)(b), and (2) and requirements that the defendant's reasonable belief be supported by some sort of documentary proof of age exhibited by the child were deleted. The defense now requires only that "the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years."

The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

Subsection (2) of § 948.05 extends liability to a person responsible for the welfare of a child who "knowingly permits, allows or encourages the child" to engage in conduct prohibited by sub. (1). See Wis JI-Criminal 2123.

Section 948.05 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 5 years for violations § 948.05.

1. Wis JI-Criminal 2120A provides instruction for violations of § 948.05(1)(a) where there is evidence of the defense provided in § 948.05(3). The defense applies if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age of the child. The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

2. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

3. The statement of the facts necessary to constitute the crime is derived by combining the definition of the offense found in sub. (1)(a) of § 948.05 with the introductory statement in that portion of § 948.05(1) which precedes sub. (a).

4. If the name of the child is not known, substitute "the person" wherever the instruction calls for "(name of child)."

5. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to so inform the jury.

6. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). However, sub. (3) of § 948.05 provides an affirmative defense if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age. Do not use this statement where there is evidence of the defense. Instead, use Wis JI-Criminal 2120A.

7. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

8. Subsection 948.05(1) requires that the defendant have "knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as ". . . the defendant knew that the person in the recording was engaged in sexually explicit conduct" adequately covers the "knowledge of the character and content" aspect.

9. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

(7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

10. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

"Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

11. The statute provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence." The statement used in the instruction is the description typically used to explain the civil burden of persuasion.

12. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

(1) not guilty because the elements are not proven [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

(2) not guilty even though the elements are proven, because the defense has been established.

13. Section 948.05 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of sexual exploitation of a child, under sec. 948.05(1)(b), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2121 SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD — § 948.05(1)(b)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.05(3).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who records[2] or displays in any way a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct with knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct involving the child.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (recorded) (displayed in any way) (name of child).[4]

   "Record" means to reproduce an image or a sound or to store data representing an image or a sound.[5]

   [Consent by (name of child) is not a defense.][6]

2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][7]

3. The defendant (recorded) (displayed in any way) (name of child) while (name of child) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

"Sexually explicit conduct" means[8] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)).[9]

4. The defendant knew that the person in the (recording) (display) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS C FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[11]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2120 in 1995 and revised in 2000, 2001, 2003, 2004, 2007, and 2010. The 2010 revision renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 2121.

This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

This instruction is for violations of sub. (1)(b) of § 948.05 where there is no evidence of the affirmative defense defined in sub. (3). Section 948.05 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. Section 948.05 was based on § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats., for which there had been no published instruction.

Subsection (2) of § 948.05 extends liability to a person responsible for the welfare of a child who "knowingly permits, allows or encourages the child" to engage in conduct prohibited by sub. (1). See Wis JI-Criminal 2123.

Section 948.05 was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: May 13, 1999. The act recreated what was sub. (1)(c) as new sub. (1m); see Wis JI-Criminal 2122. Act 3 also amended the affirmative defense provided in sub. (3), which can apply to violations addressed by this instruction. For cases involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2121A.

Section 948.05 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 5 years for violations of § 948.05.

1. Wis JI-Criminal 2121A provides instruction for violations of § 948.05(1)(b) where there is evidence of the defense provided in § 948.05(3). The defense applies if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age of the child.

2. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

3. The statement of the facts necessary to constitute the crime is derived by combining the definition of the offense found in sub. (1)(b) of § 948.05 with the introductory statement in that portion of § 948.05(1) which precedes sub. (a).

4. If the name of the child is not known, substitute "the person" wherever the instruction calls for "(name of child)."

5. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

6. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to so inform the jury.

7. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). However, sub. (3) of § 948.05 provides an affirmative defense if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age. Do not use this statement where there is evidence of the defense. Instead, use Wis JI-Criminal 2121A.

8. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

> (7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
> (a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
> (b) Bestiality;
> (c) Masturbation;
> (d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
> (e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

9. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

> "Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

10. Subsection 948.05(1) requires that the defendant have "knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as ". . . the defendant knew that the person in the photograph was engaged in sexually explicit conduct" adequately covers the "knowledge of the character and content" aspect.

11. Section 948.05 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of sexual exploitation of a child, under sec. 948.05(1)(b), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2121A SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE — § 948.05(1)(b)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.05(3).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who records[2] or displays in any way a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct with knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct involving the child.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (recorded) (displayed in any way) (name of child).[4]

   "Record" means to reproduce an image or a sound or to store data representing an image or a sound.[5]

   [Consent by (name of child) is not a defense.][6]

2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

3. The defendant (recorded) (displayed in any way) (name of child) while (name of child) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

"Sexually explicit conduct" means[7] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate parts)).[8]

4. The defendant knew that the person in the (recording) (display) was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.[9]

Consider Whether the Defense is Proved

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that (name of child) had attained the age of 18 years.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is established.[10]

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[11]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS C FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[12]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2120A in 2000 and revised in 2001, 2003, 2004, 2007, 2008, and 2010. The 2010 revision renumbered the instruction Wis JI-Criminal 2121A. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

This instruction is for a case involving a violation of sub. (1)(b) of § 948.05 where there is evidence of the defense provided in sub. (3) of the same statute. See Wis JI-Criminal 2121 for an instruction intended to be used where there is no evidence of the affirmative defense. See the Comment to that instruction for general information about the statute.

The definition of the affirmative defense in § 948.05(3) was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3; effective date: May 13, 1999. The defense was limited to violations of subs. (1)(a), (1)(b), and (2) and requirements that the defendant's reasonable belief be supported by some sort of documentary proof of age exhibited by the child were deleted. The defense now requires only that "the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years."

The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

Section 948.05 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 5 years for violations of § 948.05.

1. This instruction is intended to be used for cases involving violations of § 948.05(1)(b) where there is evidence of the defense provided in § 948.05(3). The defense applies if the defendant "had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years." The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

2. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

3. The statement of the facts necessary to constitute the crime is derived by combining the definition of the offense found in sub. (1)(b) of § 948.05 with the introductory statement in that portion of § 948.05(1) which precedes sub. (a).

4. If the name of the child is not known, substitute "the person" wherever the instruction calls for "(name of child)."

5. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

6. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to so inform the jury.

7. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

> (7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
> (a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
> (b) Bestiality;
> (c) Masturbation;
> (d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
> (e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

8. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

> "Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

9. Subsection 948.05(1) requires that the defendant have "knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as ". . . the defendant knew that the child in the photograph was engaged in sexually explicit conduct" adequately covers the "knowledge of the character and content" aspect.

10. The statute provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence." The statement used in the instruction is the description typically used to explain the civil burden of persuasion.

11. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

(1) not guilty because the elements are not proven [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

(2) not guilty even though the elements are proven, because the defense has been established.

12. Section 948.05 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of sexual exploitation of a child, under sec. 948.05(1)(b), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2122 SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD — § 948.05(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who distributes[1] any recording[2] of a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct, knows the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct involving the child and knows or reasonably should know that the child engaged in the sexually explicit conduct has not attained the age of 18 years.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant distributed a recording of [a child] [(name of child)][4] engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

   "Recording" means a reproduction of an image or a sound or the storage of data representing an image or a sound.[5]

   "Sexually explicit conduct" means[6] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate parts)).[7]

2. The defendant knew that [the person] [(name of child)] in the recording was engaged in sexually explicit conduct.[8]

[Consent by (name of child) is not a defense.][9]

3. [The person] [(Name of child)] had not attained the age of 18 years.

4. The defendant knew or reasonably should have known that [the person] [(name of child)] had not attained the age of 18 years.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS C FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[11]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2122 was originally published in 2000 and revised in 2001, 2003, 2004, and 2007. The 2007 revision involved adding a special question at the end of the instruction. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (1m) of § 948.05, which was created as sub. (1)(c) by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. Section 948.05 was based on § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats., for which there had been no published instruction.

The statute was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: May 13, 1999. That amendment renumbered sub. (1)(c) as sub. (1m) and added a mental element relating to the child's age. The latter change was intended to remedy the constitutional defect noted in State v. Zarnke, 224 Wis.2d 116, 589 N.W.2d 370 (1999). See note 10, below.

Subsection (2) of § 948.05 extends liability to a person responsible for the welfare of a child who "knowingly permits, allows or encourages the child" to engage in conduct prohibited by sub. (1)(a) or (b) or (1m).

Section 948.05 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 5 years for violations of § 948.05.

1. "Distributes" refers to just one of the activities proscribed by § 948.05(1m) and was selected for use in the instruction because it appears to be an alternative likely to be used. The other alternatives are: produces; performs in; profits from; promotes; imports into the state; reproduces; advertises; sells; or, possesses with intent to sell or distribute. For cases involving one of those alternatives, the applicable term would, of course, have to be substituted for "distributes" throughout the instruction.

2. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1m) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to "any undeveloped film, photographic negative, motion picture, videotape, sound recording, or other reproduction . . ."

3. The requirement that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known the age of the child was added to the statute by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: May 13, 1999. The change was intended to remedy the constitutional defect noted in State v. Zarnke, 224 Wis.2d 116, 589 N.W.2d 370, (1999). See note 10, below.

4. One of the alternatives should be selected: using the name of the child if known, or just referring to "a child" if the name of the child is not known.

5. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

6. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

(7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

7. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

"Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

8. Subsection 948.05(1) requires that the defendant have "knowledge of the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as ". . . the defendant knew that the child in the photograph was engaged in sexually explicit conduct" adequately covers the "knowledge of the character and content" aspect.

9. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to so inform the jury.

10. The knowledge element was extended to the age of the child by 1999 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: May 13, 1999. The change was intended to remedy the constitutional defect noted in State v. Zarnke, 224 Wis.2d 116, 589 N.W.2d 370 (1999) [reversing 215 Wis.2d 71, 572 N.W.2d 491 (Ct. App. 1997)]. The defendant in Zarnke was charged with distributing pictures of children engaged in sexually explicit conduct in violation of sub. (1)(c) of § 948.05, 1997-98 Wis. Stats. In rejecting Zarnke's constitutional challenges to the statute, the court of appeals interpreted it to require the state to prove the defendant's knowledge of the child being under age. The court concluded that the legislature did not intend to treat the knowledge issue as an affirmative defense "where the illegal conduct occurs outside of the child's presence." 215 Wis.2d 71, 82-83.

The supreme court held that sub. (1)(c) of § 948.05 was "unconstitutional as it applies to the distribution of sexually explicit material depicting minors, as well as to the other prohibited conduct which does not entail a personal interaction between the accused and the child-victim." 224 Wis.2d 116, 124. The defect is the statute's "failing to require that the State prove that a distributor of sexually explicit materials had knowledge of the minority of person(s) depicted in the materials." 224 Wis.2d 116, 120-21. Act 3 renumbered sub. (1)(c) to sub. (1m) and revised it to include an element requiring that the defendant knew, or reasonably should have known, the age of the child. It also revised the affirmative defense provision in § 948.05(3) so that it does not apply to violations of sub. (1m).

11. Section 948.05 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class C felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class F felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class C felony is charged. If the Class F felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of sexual exploitation of a child, under sec. 948.05(1m), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2123 SEXUAL EXPLOITATION OF A CHILD: BY A PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CHILD'S WELFARE — § 948.05(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation of a child, as defined in § 948.05(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person responsible for the welfare of a child who knowingly permits, allows, or encourages the child to engage in sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of recording[1] or displaying it in any way.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of a child, (name of victim).

   A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)).[2]

2. The defendant knowingly permitted, allowed, or encouraged (name of victim) to engage in sexually explicit conduct.

   "Sexually explicit conduct" means[3] actual or simulated (sexual intercourse) (bestiality) (masturbation) (sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse) (lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)).[4]

3. The defendant intended that the sexually explicit conduct be recorded or displayed in any way.[5]

["Record" means to reproduce an image or a sound or to store data representing an image or a sound.][6]

4. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.[7]

[Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2123 was approved by the Committee in June 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

This instruction is for violations of sub. (2) of § 948.05 which applies only to "a person responsible for a child's welfare." Violations of sub. (1)(b) are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 2120 and 2120A; violations of sub. (1m) are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 2122.

Subsection (3) of § 948.05 provides that it is an affirmative defense if a defendant "has reasonable cause to believe that the child ha d attained the age of 18 years." It may be unlikely that the defense would apply to violations of sub. (2), where the defendant must be a person responsible for the child's welfare. If the defense does apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2120A for a model that could be adapted for use for violations of sub. (2).

1. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

2. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

A biological father, who has admitted paternity in writing, is a "parent" and thus a "person responsible for the child's welfare" under § 948.21. State v. Evans, 171 Wis.2d 471, 391 N.W.2d 141 (1992).

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2114 for discussion of case law interpreting this term.

3. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7), which provides as follows:

> (7) "Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
> (a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
> (b) Bestiality;
> (c) Masturbation;
> (d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
> (e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

4. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

> "Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats.

The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

5. This reflects the change made in § 948.05(1) by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. Before the amendment, the statute applied to one who "photographs, films, videotapes, records the sound of, or displays in any way . . ."

The statute requires that the defendant "knowingly permit, allow or encourage the child to engage in sexually explicit conduct for a purpose proscribed in sub. (1)(a) or(b) or (1m) . . ." In the Committee's judgment, the "purpose proscribed" in the cross-referenced sections boil down to "recording or displaying" sexually explicit conduct. The element uses the more direct requirement that the defendant "intend" that the conduct be recorded or displayed as the equivalent of permitting, allowing or encouraging for that purpose. No change of meaning is intended.

6. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

7. See s. 948.01(1).

8. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). However, sub. (3) of § 948.05 provides an affirmative defense if the defendant is reasonably mistaken about the age. Do not use this statement where there is evidence of the defense. Instead, see Wis JI-Criminal 2120A for a model that could be adapted for use for violations of sub. (2).

2124 TRAFFICKING OF A CHILD — § 948.051(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Trafficking of a child, as defined in § 948.051 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly [(recruits) (entices) (provides) (obtains) (harbors) (transports) (patronizes) (solicits)] [attempts to (recruit) (entice) (provide) (obtain) (harbor) (transport) (patronize) (solicit)] any child for the purpose of commercial sex acts.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly [(recruited) (enticed) (provided) (obtained) (harbored) (transported) (patronized) (solicited)] [attempted to (recruit) (entice) (provide) (obtain) (harbor) (transport) (patronize) (solicit)] (name of child) .
2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child) 's age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child) 's age is not a defense.][1]
3. The defendant (use the term selected in element 1.) (name of child) for the purpose of commercial sex acts.[2]

"Commercial sex act" means (sexual contact) (sexual intercourse) (sexually explicit performance) (any conduct done for the purpose of sexual humiliation, degradation, arousal, or gratification) for which anything of value is given to, promised, or received, directly or indirectly, by any person.[3]

[Meaning of Sexual Contact]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT"]

Deciding About Knowledge and Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge and purpose. Knowledge and purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2124 was originally published in 2011 and was revised in 2015. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2016; it reflects changes made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 367.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.051, Trafficking of a child, which was created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 116 [effective date: April 3, 2008]. The statute was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date April 25, 2014]. See footnotes 2 and 3. 2015 Wisconsin Act 367 amended the statute to add "transport" "patronize" and "solicit" to the list of prohibited acts. [Effective date: May 29, 2017.]

2007 Wisconsin Act 116 also created § 940.302, Human trafficking, – see Wis JI-Criminal 1276.

Subsection (2) of § 948.051 provides: "Whoever benefits in any manner from a violation of sub. (1) is guilty of a Class C felony if the person knows that the benefits come from an act described in sub. (1)." This instruction does not address this means of violating the statute.

2007 Wisconsin Act 116 also created § 939.46(1m) which provides an affirmative defense for any offense committed by a trafficking victim as a direct result of the violation of the trafficking statute.

1. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

2. 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 amended § 948.051(1) to eliminate a reference to "sexually explicit performance." The same conduct is now covered by the term "commercial sex act" as specified as prohibited conduct in § 940.302(1)(a), which applies to violations of § 948.051.

3. This is the definition provided in § 940.302(1)(a) as amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014]. Section 948.051(1) specifically refers to this definition. For a definition of "sexual contact" see Wis JI-Criminal 934 and § 939.22(34). The Committee concluded that the definition in § 939.22(34) applies to the offense because § 948.051(1) specifically refers to trafficking "any child for the purpose of commercial sex acts, as defined in s. 940.302(1)(a) . . ." The definition in § 940.302(1)(a) refers to "sexual contact" and, since that statute is not part of § 940.225 or in Chapter 948, the definition of "sexual contact" in § 939.22(34) applies.

2125 CAUSING A CHILD TO VIEW OR LISTEN TO SEXUAL ACTIVITY — § 948.055

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.055 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who intentionally causes [a child] [an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age] to view or listen to sexually explicit conduct for the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the person or humiliating or degrading the child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused [(name of child)] [an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age][1] to view or listen to sexually explicit conduct.

   "Sexually explicit conduct"[2] means actual or simulated [sexual intercourse] [bestiality] [masturbation] [sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse] [lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)].[3]

   Consent by [(name of child)] [the individual] is not a defense.

2. The defendant intentionally caused [(name of child)] [an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age] to view or listen to sexually explicit conduct.

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to cause [(name of child)] [the individual] to view or listen to sexually explicit conduct.[4]

[SELECT THE THIRD ELEMENT THAT FITS THE FACTS OF THE CASE.]

[3. (Name of child) had not attained the age of (13) (18) years.[5]

Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[6]]

[3. The defendant believed or had reason to believe that the individual had not attained the age of (13) (18) years.[7]]

4. The defendant acted with the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant or humiliating or degrading [(name of child)] [an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age].

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2125 was originally published in 1996 and was revised in 2004 and 2011. The 2011 revision reflected changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 284. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

Section 948.055 was originally enacted as § 940.227 by 1987 Wisconsin Act 334. It was renumbered § 948.055 by 1993 Wisconsin Act 218 and amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67.

The 1995 amendment made three changes in the text of § 948.055:

1) deleted the requirement that the defendant act "by use or threat of force or violence," replacing it with "intentionally";

2) added "or listen to"; and,

3) added "if the viewing or listening is for the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the actor or humiliating or degrading the child."

The statute was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 284 [effective date: April 27, 2012] to extend its coverage to situations where "the actor believes or has reason to believe [the individual] has not attained 18 years of age." Act 284 also created § 939.32(1)(cr) to read: "Whoever attempts to commit a crime under s. 948.055(1) is subject to the penalty for the completed act, as provided in s. 948.055(2)."

Violations of § 948.055 are punished as a Class F felony if the child has not attained the age of 13 years [or if the defendant believes or has reason to believe the person has not attained the age of 13 years] and as a Class H felony if the child has not attained the age of 18 years [or if the defendant believes or has reason to believe the person has not attained the age of 18 years]. See § 948.055(2). The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate age limit as part of the third element.

1. 2011 Wisconsin Act 284 amended § 948.055 to apply to causing "an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age" to view or listen to sexually explicit conduct, in addition to causing a child to do the same. This is apparently intended to address the "internet sting" situation, where the actor believes he or she is communicating with a child but the supposed child is in fact a government investigator. For cases involving this situation, the Committee recommends using the entire phrase "an individual who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained 18 years of age" where the name of the child would otherwise be used.

2. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is based on the one provided in § 948.01(7).

3. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in § 948.01(7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

"Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area. . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

4. The instruction uses the common "mental purpose" definition of intent. Intent is also present where a defendant "is practically certain that his or her conduct" will have the prohibited result. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. Violations of this statute are punished as a Class F felony if the child has not attained the age of 13 years and as a Class H felony if the child has not attained the age of 18 years. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate age limit as part of the third element.

6. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

7. This is the alternative added to the statute by 2011 Wisconsin Act 284. Violations of this statute are punished as a Class F felony if the defendant believes or has reason to believe the individual has not attained the age of 13 years and as a Class H felony if the defendant believes or has reason to believe the individual has not attained the age of 18 years. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate age limit as part of the third element.

2130 INCEST WITH A CHILD: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE OR CONTACT — § 948.06(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Incest with a child, as defined in § 948.06(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual [intercourse] [contact] with a child he or she knows is related, either by blood or adoption, and the child is related in a degree of kinship closer than second cousin.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [intercourse] [contact] with (name of victim) .
2. The defendant knew that (name of victim) was related to (him) (her) by blood or adoption.[1]
3. (Name of victim) was related to the defendant in a degree of kinship closer than second cousin.[2]
4. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.[3]

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[4] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[5]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[6]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2130 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980, 1991, 1994, and 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision also combined the instructions formerly published as Wis JI-Criminal 2130 [incest involving sexual intercourse] and Wis JI-Criminal 2131 [incest involving sexual contact].

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.06(1), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. Note that § 944.06 also defines a crime of incest which is not limited to child victims. See Wis JI-Criminal 1510.

Section 948.06(1) also applies to one who marries a child. And sub. (2) imposes liability on a person responsible for a child's welfare whose failure to act exposes the child to a risk that incest may occur or facilitates incest. Neither of those offenses are addressed by uniform instructions.

Section 948.06 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277 to create sub. (1m) which prohibits sexual contact or intercourse by a child's stepparent. See Wis JI-Criminal 2131.

1. The knowledge requirement is included in the statutory definition of the offense. Note that the knowledge required is that the defendant and the victim are "related." The statute further requires that they be related "in a degree closer than second cousin," but the knowledge requirement apparently does not extend to the degree of relation.

2. "Second cousin" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary (7th Edition) as follows: "A person related to another by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother." The table following footnote 6 shows the degree of relationship of second cousins.

3. Section 948.01(1) defines "child" as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

4. Section 939.23(6).

5. Section 939.43(2).

6. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

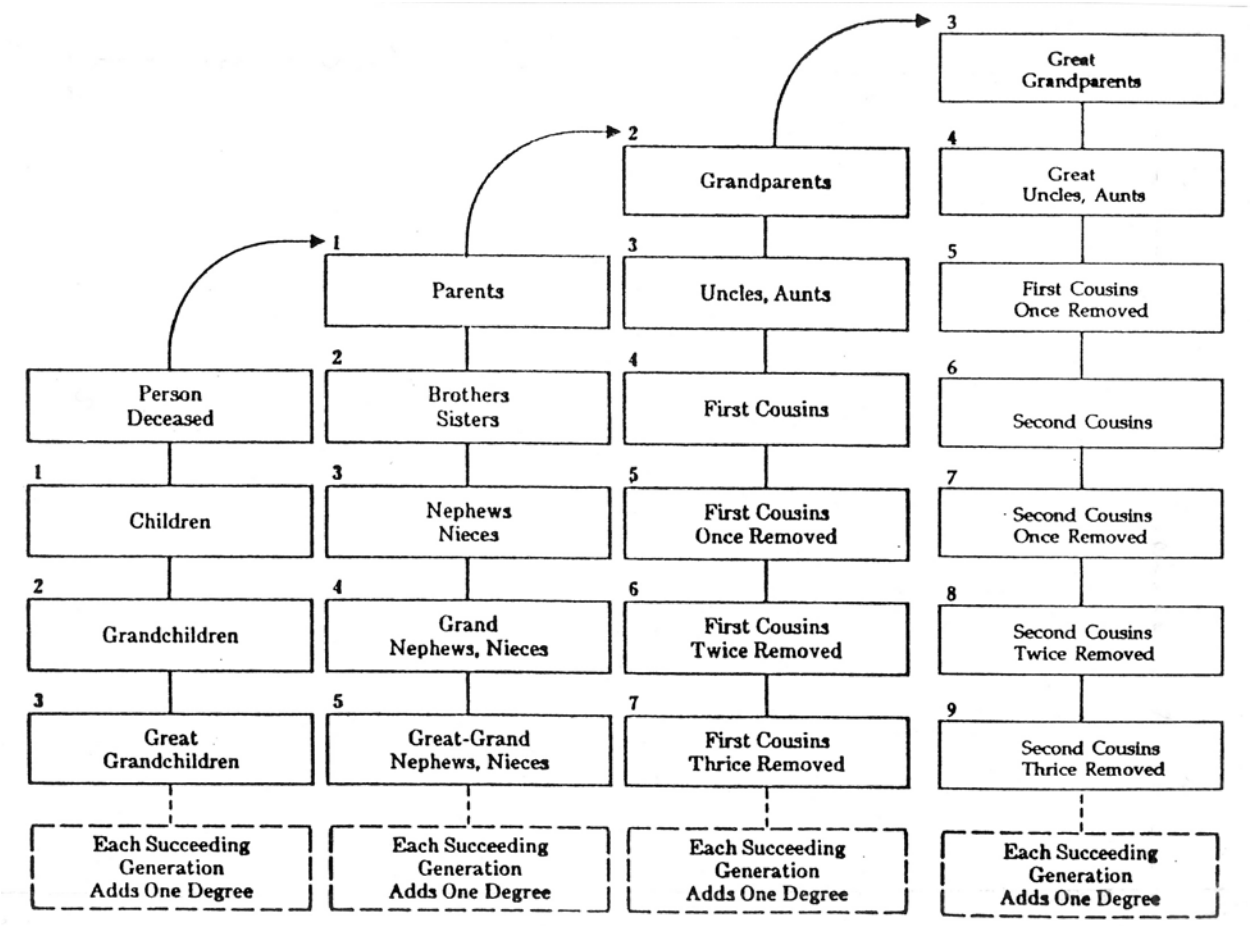
Degree of Kinship

The following chart is based on the table showing degrees of kinship found at s. 990.001(16) of the Wisconsin Statutes. The column at the far right has been added to show how the various degrees of kinship compare to second cousins. The added column is based on the chart appearing at page 48, Decedents' Estates and Trusts, by Ritchie, Alford, and Effland, 4th Edition, © 1971, Foundation Press. Note that the degree of kinship of second cousins is indicated by the number "6." Thus, all those degrees indicated by the number "5" or less are "related in a degree closer than second cousin" and fall within the prohibition of s. 948.096(1).



2131 INCEST WITH A CHILD: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE OR CONTACT BY STEPPARENT — § 948.06(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Incest with a child, as defined in § 948.06(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual [intercourse] [contact] with a child and who is the child's stepparent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [intercourse] [contact] with (name of victim) .

2. The defendant was the stepparent of (name of victim) .

   USE THE FOLLOWING IF IT IS BELIEVED TO BE NECESSARY TO DEFINE "STEPPARENT"

   "Stepparent" means a person who was married to the biological or adoptive parent of (name of child) at the time of the alleged offense.[1]

3. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.[2]

   Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[3] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[4]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[5]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2131 was approved by the Committee in March 2007.

An instruction formerly published as Wis JI-Criminal 2131 [incest involving sexual contact] was combined with Wis JI-Criminal 2130 in 2007.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.06(1m), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277 [effective date: April 20, 2006].

See Wis JI-Criminal 2130 for violations of § 948.06(1). Subsection (2) of 948.06 imposes liability on a person responsible for a child's welfare whose failure to act exposes the child to a risk that incest may occur or facilitates incest. That offense is not addressed by uniform instructions.

1. There is no statutory definition of "stepparent." The definition suggested in the text was developed by the Committee.

2. Section 948.01(1) defines "child" as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

3. Section 939.23(6).

4. Section 939.43(2).

5. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2134 CHILD ENTICEMENT: COMPLETED ACT — § 948.07)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Child enticement, as defined in § 948.07 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to _____[1] causes any child who has not attained the age of 18 years[2] to go into any vehicle, building, room, or secluded place.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused[3] (name of victim) to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place).[4]
2. The defendant caused (name of victim) to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place) with intent to _____.[5]

   The phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose[6] to _____.[7]
3. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years.[8]

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[9] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[10]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2134 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1994, 1997, 1998, 2000, 2003, 2006, 2011, 2014, and 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it added to footnote 5.

This instruction is drafted for charges based on a completed act of enticement. For charges based on an attempt, see Wis JI-Criminal 2134A and 2134B.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.07, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1530 (8 1983) which applied to an offense with the same name as defined in former § 944.12, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332. The primary changes in the definition of the offense are explained in notes 1 and 4, below. One other change is to delete "the provision under current law limiting the applicability of the child enticement statute to offenders 18 years of age or over. Thus, any person can be charged with and convicted of enticing a child, even if the offender is also a child. Consequently, an offender who is a child would be treated as a juvenile offender, as is done with other crimes committed by minors." Note to § 948.07, 1987 Senate Bill 203 (enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332).

In State v. Derango, 2000 WI 89, 236 Wis.2d 721, 613 N.W.2d 833, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that § 948.07 prohibits the act of enticement, with any one of six prohibited intents. Jury unanimity on which intent is present is not required and multiple charges of child enticement are not proper where based on a single act of enticement done with more than one of the prohibited intents. On the latter point, also see State v. Church, 223 Wis.2d 641, 589 N.W.2d 638 (Ct. App. 1998). [Review dismissed as improvidently granted because the issue was resolved in Derango, State v. Church, 2000 WI 90.]

In Derango, supra, the court also held that charges of child enticement and attempted sexual exploitation of a child may be based on a single phone call. 2000 WI 89, ¶¶26-36.

In State v. Hanson, 182 Wis.2d 481, 513 N.W.2d 700 (Ct. App. 1994), the defendant argued that his conviction under § 948.07(3) was unconstitutional. He claimed that it was irrational to consider enticement to commit an act of indecent exposure, a Class C felony, [note: now a Class BC felony] to be so much more serious than the completed act of exposure itself, a Class A misdemeanor. The court rejected the argument, holding that a rational basis exists for the legislative scheme: "enticement of a child is a social evil in and of itself regardless of the specific sexual motive which causes the defendant to act." 182 Wis.2d 481, 487.

In State v. Gomez, 179 Wis.2d 400, 507 N.W.2d 378 (Ct. App. 1993), the court affirmed a conviction under § 948.07. The court held that the statute unambiguously applies to causing the child to enter any room, including the child's own bedroom. The court also found the evidence sufficient to establish intent to expose a sex organ to the child at the time the defendant told her to go to her bedroom.

In State v. Provo, 2004 WI App 97, ¶12, 272 Wis.2d 837, 681 N.W.2d 272, the court that prior cases had recognized "that the gravamen of the child enticement statute is to prevent children from being taken into places outside of the protection of the public where the commission of some illegal conduct might be facilitated . . . No language says that the place from which the child was taken had to be a public place."

1. In this blank, insert a statement identifying one or more of the prohibited acts specified in § 948.07(1)-(6):

(1) Having sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the child in violation of s. 948.02, 948.085, or 948.095.

(2) Causing the child to engage in prostitution.

(3) Exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to the child or causing the child to expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of s. 948.10.

(4) Recording the child engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

(5) Causing bodily or mental harm to the child.

(6) Giving or selling to the child a controlled substance or controlled substance analog in violation of ch. 961.

Subsection (3) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014] to delete "sex organ" and to substitute "genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts."

Subsection (4) was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 (effective date: September 1, 2001) to refer to "recording." Recording is defined in § 948.01(3r).

Some of the acts listed are crimes defined in a specified statute: sexual assault in violation of § 948.02, § 948.085, or § 948.095 (see subsec. (1), supra), and exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of § 948.10 (see subsec. (3), supra). The acts specified in subsecs. (2), (4), (5), and (6) have identifiable counterparts in other criminal statutes found in chapter 948, but those statutes are not specifically identified. When the second element of this offense is explained, all the aspects of the underlying conduct should be identified. See note 4, below.

Specifying these acts is a change from prior § 944.12, which referred to "crimes against sexual morality." The Note to 1987 Senate Bill 203, which was enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, explains the change as follows:

> [This section] . . . enumerates specific intended purposes as those for which enticing a child would be a criminal act (e.g., having sexual contact, including sexual intercourse, with the child). These enumerated purposes are substituted for the current language requiring an intent to commit "a crime against sexual morality."

2. The age reference should be changed to "has not attained the age of 16 years" if the case involves a charge of enticement with intent to have sexual contact or sexual intercourse in violation of § 948.02. See subsec. (1) of § 948.07. Section 948.02 defines offenses against children who have not attained the age of 16 years.

3. Section 948.07 uses "causes or attempts to cause" in place of "persuades or entices" found in former § 944.12. The Note to 1987 Senate Bill 203 (enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332) explained the change as follows:

> Note: This Section:
> 1. Deletes the words "persuades or entices" contained in the current child enticement statute [s. 944.12] and, instead, characterizes the crime of child enticement as "causing or attempting to cause" a child to go into any vehicle, building, room or secluded place with the intent to commit a criminal act or acts. The substitution of "causes" for "persuades or entices," eliminates as an element of the crime the state of mind of the child being enticed. The language "attempts to cause" is added to further clarify that the crime of child enticement includes the attempted act of enticement, consistent with s. 939.32(1)(d), as created by this bill.

Charges of child enticement based on "attempts to cause" are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 2134A and 2134B.

4. The instruction has never included a definition of "secluded place." In State v. Pask, 2010 WI App 53, 324 Wis.2d 555, 781 N.W.2d 751, the court addressed the meaning of the term. Pask was convicted of enticing a child in violation of § 948.07 based on attempting to lure a 9-year old girl into a park shelter area for the purpose of having sexual contact. The court of appeals concluded that the park shelter qualifies as a "secluded place":

> . . . when there is evidence that a defendant has an intention to take a child to a place that is partially screened or hidden from view, a jury may find that it is with the purpose to take the child away from public safety. Indeed, any place that removes the child from the public's protection to a place less likely to be detected by the public could suffice as being a "secluded place." ¶1.

The instruction has never defined "secluded place." The trial judge in this case instructed that "secluded place means a place screened or hidden from view or remote from others." The court of appeals noted that this promoted a more limited definition of "secluded place" than the statute requires and therefore "inured to Pask's benefit."

5. Here identify the conduct specified in subsecs. (1) to (6) of § 948.07. Care should be taken to provide a complete description of what the conduct requires, including definition of terms where necessary. The Committee suggests the following:

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.02:

". . . have sexual intercourse with (name of victim) . Sexual intercourse means any intrusion, however slight, by any part of a person's body or of any object, into the genital or anal opening of another. Emission of semen is not required."

or

". . . have sexual contact with (name of victim) . Sexual contact is an intentional touching by the defendant of an intimate part of another, done for the purpose of (sexual arousal or gratification) (sexually degrading or humiliating that person)."

See Wis JI-Criminal 2101B for discussion of the definition of sexual intercourse. See Wis JI-Criminal 2101A for discussion of the definition of sexual contact. Note that for violations of subsection (1), the victim must be under the age of 16 years. See note 2, supra.

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.085(1):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.085(1). Section 948.085(1) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child for whom the person is a (foster parent) (treatment foster parent).

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.085(2):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.085(2). Section 948.085(2) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who was placed in a substitute care facility, where the person (works or volunteers at the facility) (is responsible for managing the facility).

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.095(2):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.095(2). Section 948.095(2) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years and who is not the person's spouse, if the child is enrolled as a student in a school or a school district and the person is a member of the school staff of the school or school district in which the child is enrolled as a student."
[See Wis JI-Criminal 2139 for a complete description of the offense defined in § 948.095(2).]

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.095(3):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.095(3). Section 948.095(3) is violated by a person who has attained the age of 21 years, who engages in an occupation or participates in a volunteer position that requires him or her to work or interact directly with children, who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years, who is not the person's spouse, and with whom the person works or interacts through that occupation or volunteer position.

Under subsec. (2):

". . . cause (name of victim) to engage in an act that, if engaged in between adults, would be an act of prostitution. An act of prostitution is an act of sexual intercourse or sexual contact engaged in for something of value."

Under subsec. (3):

". . . expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to (name of victim) for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification."

See Wis JI-Criminal 2140 and 2141 for descriptions of two offenses defined by § 948.10.

Under subsec. (4):

". . . recording (name of victim) engaging in sexually explicit conduct. Sexually explicit conduct means actual or simulated (see § 948.01(7))."

The appropriate part of the definition of "sexually explicit conduct" provided in § 948.01(7) should be included.

Under subsec. (5):

". . . cause bodily harm to (name of victim) . Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition."

The definition of "bodily harm" is from § 939.22(4).

A violation involving subsec. (5) may also be based on intent to cause mental harm, a term defined in § 948.01(2).

Under subsec. (6):

". . . give or sell a controlled substance to (name of victim) ."

Subsection (6) refers to giving or selling a controlled substance or controlled substance analog "in violation of Chapter 961." It is unclear what that reference adds, since any delivery to a child would appear to be in violation of Chapter 961.

In any case, the facts may require elaborating on the brief statements suggested above. The key is to assure that the jury is told of all the aspects of the underlying conduct that the defendant must intend to perform to make the enticement a violation of § 948.07.

In State v. Hendricks, 2018 WI 15, 379 Wis.2d 549, 906 N.W.2d 666, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a guilty plea acceptance colloquy for a child enticement charge based on "intent to have sexual contact." The court held that the colloquy was sufficient despite the court's failure to explain the definition of "sexual contact." The decision makes several references to sexual contact not being an "element" of the crime of child enticement. See, for example, ¶33. The Committee concluded that these statements do not affect the approach reflected in the instruction which calls for fully defining the crime the defendant intended to commit by the act of enticement. The purpose with which the defendant acted – e.g., with intent to have sexual contact – is a fact necessary to constitute the crime and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. See In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970): ". . . the Due Process Clause protects the accused against conviction except upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime with which he is charged."

6. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

7. Add the same statement used at note 5, supra.

8. See note 2, supra.

2134A CHILD ENTICEMENT: ATTEMPT: ACTUAL CHILD — § 948.07

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Child enticement, as defined in § 948.07 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to _____[1] attempts to cause any child who has not attained the age of 18 years[2] to go into any vehicle, building, room, or secluded place.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant attempted to cause[3] (name of victim) to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place).
2. The defendant attempted to cause (name of victim) to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place) with intent to _____.[4]

   The phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose[5] to _____.[6]
3. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years.[7]

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[8] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[9]

Definition of Attempt

Attempt requires that the defendant intended to cause (name of victim) to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place) for the purpose of _____[10] and that the defendant did acts which demonstrate unequivocally, under all of the circumstances, that he had formed that intent and would commit the crime except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.[11]

Meaning of "Unequivocally"

"Unequivocally" means that no other inference or conclusion can reasonably and fairly be drawn from the defendant's acts, under the circumstances.

Meaning of "Another Person"

"Another person" means anyone but the defendant and may include the intended victim.

Meaning of "Extraneous Factor"

An "extraneous factor" is something outside the knowledge of the defendant or outside the defendant's control.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2134A was originally published in 2003 and revised in 2007 and 2015. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it added to footnote 4.

Section 948.07 prohibits "causing or attempting to cause" a child to go into designated places for one of several prohibited purposes. Thus, it punishes the completed crime and the attempt equally. This instruction is drafted for the enticement case based on an attempt to entice an actual child. A separate instruction is provided for enticement cases based on an attempt to entice what turns out to be a fictitious child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2134B.

When an enticement charge is based on an attempt, it incorporates attempt as defined in § 939.32. State v. Koenck, 2001 WI App 93, ¶20, 242 Wis.2d 693, 626 N.W.2d 359; State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, ¶28, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287. This instruction incorporates the definition of attempt provided in § 939.32 as interpreted by Wis JI-Criminal 580.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2134 for a general discussion of § 948.07 and the crime of child enticement.

1. In this blank, insert a statement identifying one or more of the prohibited acts specified in § 948.07(1)-(6):

(1) Having sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the child in violation of s. 948.02, 948.085, or 948.095.

(2) Causing the child to engage in prostitution.

(3) Exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to the child or causing the child to expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of s. 948.10.

(4) Recording the child engaging in sexually explicit conduct.

(5) Causing bodily or mental harm to the child.

(6) Giving or selling to the child a controlled substance or controlled substance analog in violation of ch. 961.

Subsection (3) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014] to delete "sex organ" and to substitute "genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts."

Subsection (4) was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 (effective date: September 1, 2001) to refer to "recording." Recording is defined in § 948.01(3r).

Some of the acts listed are crimes defined in a specified statute: sexual assault in violation of § 948.02, § 948.085, or § 948.095 (see subsec. (1), supra), and exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of § 948.10 (see subsec. (3), supra). The acts specified in subsecs. (2), (4), (5), and (6) have identifiable counterparts in other criminal statutes found in chapter 948, but those statutes are not specifically identified. When the second element of this offense is explained, all the aspects of the underlying conduct should be identified. See note 4, below.

Specifying these acts is a change from prior § 944.12, which referred to "crimes against sexual morality." The Note to 1987 Senate Bill 203, which was enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, explains the change as follows:

> [This section] . . . enumerates specific intended purposes as those for which enticing a child would be a criminal act (e.g., having sexual contact, including sexual intercourse, with the child). These enumerated purposes are substituted for the current language requiring an intent to commit "a crime against sexual morality."

2. The age reference should be changed to "has not attained the age of 16 years" if the case involves a charge of enticement with intent to have sexual contact or sexual intercourse in violation of § 948.02. See subsec. (1) of § 948.07. Section 948.02 defines offenses against children who have not attained the age of 16 years.

3. Section 948.07 uses "causes or attempts to cause" in place of "persuades or entices" found in former § 944.12. The Note to 1987 Senate Bill 203 (enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332) explained the change as follows:

> Note: This Section:
> 1. Deletes the words "persuades or entices" contained in the current child enticement statute [s. 944.12] and, instead, characterizes the crime of child enticement as "causing or attempting to cause" a child to go into any vehicle, building, room or secluded place with the intent to commit a criminal act or acts. The substitution of "causes" for "persuades or entices," eliminates as an element of the crime the state of mind of the child being enticed. The language "attempts to cause" is added to further clarify that the crime of child enticement includes the attempted act of enticement, consistent with s. 939.32(1)(d), as created by this bill.

This instruction is drafted for enticements based on attempt to entice an actual child. For enticements based on attempt to entice a fictitious child, see Wis JI-Criminal 2134B. For enticements based on completed acts, see Wis JI-Criminal 2134.

4. Here identify the conduct specified in subsecs. (1) to (6) of § 948.07. Care should be taken to provide a complete description of what the conduct requires, including definition of terms where necessary. The Committee suggests the following:

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.02:

". . . have sexual intercourse with (name of victim) . Sexual intercourse means any intrusion, however slight, by any part of a person's body or of any object, into the genital or anal opening of another. Emission of semen is not required."

or

". . . have sexual contact with (name of victim) . Sexual contact is an intentional touching by the defendant of an intimate part of another, done for the purpose of (sexual arousal or gratification) (sexually degrading or humiliating that person)."

See Wis JI-Criminal 2101B for discussion of the definition of sexual intercourse. See Wis JI-Criminal 2101A for discussion of the definition of sexual contact. Note that for violations of subsection (1), the victim must be under the age of 16 years. See note 2, supra.

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.085(1):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.085(1). Section 948.085(1) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child for whom the person is a (foster parent) (treatment foster parent).

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.085(2):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.085(2). Section 948.085(2) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who was placed in a substitute care facility, where the person (works or volunteers at the facility) (is responsible for managing the facility).

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.095(2):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.095(2). Section 948.095(2) is violated by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years and who is not the person's spouse, if the child is enrolled as a student in a school or a school district and the person is a member of the school staff of the school or school district in which the chile is enrolled as a student."
[See Wis JI-Criminal 2139 for a complete description of the offense defined in § 948.095(2).]

Under subsec. (1), for violations based on § 948.095(3):

". . . have sexual (contact) (intercourse) in violation of § 948.095(3). Section 948.095(3) is violated by a person who has attained the age of 21 years, who engages in an occupation or participates in a volunteer position that requires him or her to work or interact directly with children, who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years, who is not the person's spouse, and with whom the person works or interacts through that occupation or volunteer position.

Under subsec. (2):

". . . engage in an act with (name of victim), that, if engaged in between adults, would be an act of prostitution. An act of prostitution is an act of sexual intercourse or sexual contact engaged in for something of value."

Under subsec. (3):

". . . expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to (name of victim) for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification."

See Wis JI-Criminal 2140 and 2141 for descriptions of two offenses defined by § 948.10.

Under subsec. (4):

". . . recording (name of victim) engaging in sexually explicit conduct. Sexually explicit conduct means actual or simulated (see § 948.01(7))."

The appropriate part of the definition of "sexually explicit conduct" provided in § 948.01(7) should be included.

Under subsec. (5):

". . . cause bodily harm to (name of victim). Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition."

The definition of "bodily harm" is from § 939.22(4).

A violation involving subsec. (5) may also be based on intent to cause mental harm, a term defined in § 948.01(2).

Under subsec. (6):

". . . give or sell a controlled substance to (name of victim)."

Subsection (6) refers to giving or selling a controlled substance or controlled substance analog "in violation of Chapter 961." It is unclear what that reference adds, since any delivery to a child would appear to be in violation of Chapter 961.

In any case, the facts may require elaborating on the brief statements suggested above. The key is to assure that the jury is told of all the aspects of the underlying conduct that the defendant must intend to perform to make the enticement a violation of § 948.07.

In State v. Hendricks, 2018 WI 15, 379 Wis.2d 549, 906 N.W.2d 666, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a guilty plea acceptance colloquy for a child enticement charge based on "intent to have sexual contact." The court held that the colloquy was sufficient despite the court's failure to explain the definition of "sexual contact." The decision makes several references to sexual contact not being an "element" of the crime of child enticement. See, for example, ¶33. The Committee concluded that these statements do not affect the approach reflected in the instruction which calls for fully defining the crime the defendant intended to commit by the act of enticement. The purpose with which the defendant acted – e.g., with intent to have sexual contact – is a fact necessary to constitute the crime and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. See In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970): ". . . the Due Process Clause protects the accused against conviction except upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime with which he is charged."

5. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

7. See note 2, supra.

8. Section 939.23(6).

9. Section 939.43(2).

10. Use same statement used at note 4, supra.

2134B CHILD ENTICEMENT: ATTEMPT: FICTITIOUS CHILD — § 948.07

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Child enticement, as defined in § 948.07 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to have sexual contact with a child,[1] attempts to cause a person (he) (she) believed to be a child who has not attained the age of 16 years[2] to go into any vehicle, building, room, or secluded place.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant attempted to cause a person to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place).
2. The defendant attempted to cause a person to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room) (secluded place) with intent to have sexual contact.

   The phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose[3] to engage in sexual contact.
3. The defendant believed that the person was under the age of 16 years.[4]

Definition of Attempt

Attempt requires that the defendant intended to cause a person the defendant believed to be a child who was under 16 years of age[5] to go into a (vehicle) (building) (room)

(secluded place) for the purpose of having sexual contact and that the defendant did acts which demonstrate unequivocally, under all of the circumstances, that he had formed that intent and would commit the crime except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.[6]

Meaning of "Unequivocally"

"Unequivocally" means that no other inference or conclusion can reasonably and fairly be drawn from the defendant's acts, under the circumstances.

Meaning of "Another Person"

"Another person" means anyone but the defendant and may include the intended victim.

Meaning of "Extraneous Factor"

An "extraneous factor" is something outside the knowledge of the defendant or outside the defendant's control.

That the victim was fictitious can constitute an extraneous factor. What is required is that the defendant believed the person (he) (she) was dealing with was a child who was under the age of 16 years and that the defendant intended to have sexual contact with that person.[7]

Meaning of Sexual Contact

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2134B was originally published in 2003 and revised in 2007, 2014, and 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it added to footnote 2.

Section 948.07 prohibits "causing or attempting to cause" a child to go into designated places for one of several prohibited purposes. Thus, it punishes the completed crime and the attempt equally. This instruction is drafted for the enticement case based on an attempt to entice what turns out to be a fictitious child. A separate instruction is provided for enticement cases based on an attempt to entice an actual child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2134A.

When an enticement charge is based on an attempt, it incorporates attempt as defined in § 939.32. State v. Koenck, 2001 WI App 93, ¶20, 242 Wis.2d 693, 626 N.W.2d 359; State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, ¶28, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287. This instruction incorporates the definition of attempt provided in § 939.32 as interpreted by Wis JI-Criminal 580.

In State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, the Wisconsin Supreme Court upheld the application of the child enticement statute to a defendant charged with arranging, over the internet, a meeting in a motel with a boy he believed to be 13 years old. In fact, the boy was the fictitious creation of a government agent. The court held:

> . . . attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the "child" is fictitious. 2002 WI 65, ¶34.

Robins upheld State v. Koenck, 2001 WI App 93, where the court of appeals reached the same conclusion: "the fictitiousness of the girls constituted an extraneous factor beyond Koenck's control that prevented him from successfully enticing a child for the express purpose of sexual intercourse or contact." 2001 WI App 93, ¶28.

Both Robins and Koenck stop short of expressly holding that the defendant must believe that the person with whom he or she is dealing is a child. The Committee concluded that the statement in Robins that the fact that the victim is a fictitious child must be "unbeknownst" to the defendant is the equivalent of requiring that the defendant believe the victim is a child. This requirement is reflected in the instruction's definition of attempt.

The court of appeals interpreted Robins and Koenck in this manner in State v. Grimm, 2002 WI App 242, 258 Wis.2d 166, 653 N.W.2d 284. Grimm held that "the state may properly charge attempted child enticement . . . when the intended victim is actually an adult whom the defendant believes to be a child." ¶2.

Robins also rejected claims that applying § 948.07 based on communications over the internet violated the First Amendment:

> The child enticement statute regulates conduct, not speech. . . That an act of child enticement is initiated or carried out in part by means of language does not make the child enticement statute susceptible of First Amendment scrutiny. 2002 WI 65, ¶43.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2134 for a general discussion of § 948.07 and the crime of child enticement.

1. This instruction is drafted for a case involving intent to have sexual contact with a child. Other types of prohibited conduct are specified in § 948.07(1)-(6):

> (1) Having sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the child in violation of s. 948.02, 948.085, or 948.095.
> (2) Causing the child to engage in prostitution.
> (3) Exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to the child or causing the child to expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of s. 948.10.
> (4) Recording the child engaging in sexually explicit conduct.
> (5) Causing bodily or mental harm to the child.
> (6) Giving or selling to the child a controlled substance or controlled substance analog in violation of ch. 961.

Subsection (3) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014] to delete "sex organ" and to substitute "genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts."

Subsection (4) was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 (effective date: September 1, 2001) to refer to "recording." Recording is defined in § 948.01(3r).

Some of the acts listed are crimes defined in a specified statute: sexual assault in violation of § 948.02, § 948.085, or § 948.095 (see subsec. (1), supra), and exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts in violation of § 948.10 (see subsec. (3), supra). The acts specified in subsecs. (2), (4), (5), and (6) have identifiable counterparts in other criminal statutes found in chapter 948, but those statutes are not specifically identified. See footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 2134A for suggested summaries of the elements of the other predicate crimes.

Specifying these acts is a change from prior § 944.12, which referred to "crimes against sexual morality." The Note to 1987 Senate Bill 203, which was enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, explains the change as follows:

> [This section] . . . enumerates specific intended purposes as those for which enticing a child would be a criminal act (e.g., having sexual contact, including sexual intercourse, with the child). These enumerated purposes are substituted for the current language requiring an intent to commit "a crime against sexual morality."

2. The instruction is drafted for a case alleged to involve intent to have "sexual contact with a child under § 948.02," as prohibited in § 948.07(1). Sexual contact [or sexual intercourse] with a child in violation of § 948.02 requires that the victim be under the age of 16 years. The other prohibited conduct specified in subs. (2) through (6) of § 948.07 apply when the victim is under the age of 18 years.

In State v. Hendricks, 2018 WI 15, 379 Wis.2d 549, 906 N.W.2d 666, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a guilty plea acceptance colloquy for a child enticement charge based on "intent to have sexual contact." The court held that the colloquy was sufficient despite the court's failure to explain the definition of "sexual contact." The decision makes several references to sexual contact not being an "element" of the crime of child enticement. See, for example, ¶33. The Committee concluded that these statements do not affect the approach reflected in the instruction which calls for fully defining the crime the defendant intended to commit by the act of enticement. The purpose with which the defendant acted – e.g., with intent to have sexual contact – is a fact necessary to constitute the crime and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt. See In Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970): ". . . the Due Process Clause protects the accused against conviction except upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime with which he is charged."

3. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

4. The Committee concluded that where the case involves a fictitious victim, that is, where a government agent poses as a child, the state must prove that the defendant believed that the person with whom he or she was dealing was a child. In a case involving intent to engage in sexual contact with a child in violation of § 948.02, for which this instruction is drafted, the victim must be under the age of 16, so the defendant's belief must match that element of the crime.

The Committee concluded that requiring that the defendant believe the victim was a child is the equivalent of the requirement stated in State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287: "attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the 'child' is fictitious." 2002 WI 65, ¶34.

The court of appeals interpreted Robins and Koenck in this manner in State v. Grimm, 2002 WI App 242, 258 Wis.2d 166, 653 N.W.2d 284. Grimm held that "the state may properly charge attempted child enticement . . . when the intended victim is actually an adult whom the defendant believes to be a child." ¶2.

5. See note 4, supra.

6. The definition of attempt is based on § 939.32 and Wis JI-Criminal 580. For explanation of the definitions of "unequivocally," "another person," and "extraneous factor," see the footnotes to Wis JI-Criminal 580.

7. This is based on the statement in State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287, that "attempted child enticement . . . can be charged where the extraneous factor that intervenes to make the crime an attempted rather than completed child enticement, is the fact that, unbeknownst to the defendant, the "child" is fictitious." 2002 WI 65, ¶34.

2135 USE OF A COMPUTER TO FACILITATE A CHILD SEX CRIME — § 948.075

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.075 is violated by a person who uses a computerized communication system to communicate with an individual who the person believes or has reason to believe has not attained the age of 16 years with intent to have sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the individual.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (four) (five)[2] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used a computerized communication system[3] to communicate with an individual.
2. The defendant believed or had reason to believe that the individual was under the age of 16 years.
3. The defendant used a computerized communication system to communicate with the individual with intent to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with the individual.
4. The defendant did an act, in addition to using a computerized communication system, to carry out the intent to have sexual (contact) (intercourse).[4]

ADD THE FOLLOWING AS A FIFTH ELEMENT IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE[5]

[5. At the time of the communication, the defendant did not reasonably believe that the age of the individual to whom the communication was sent was no more than 24 months less than the age of the defendant.][6]

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

Deciding About Intent and Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and belief. Intent and belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all (four) (five) elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2135 was originally published in 2003 and revised in 2007, 2009 and 2013. The 2009 revision updated footnote 4 and the 2013 revision updated the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2016; it added to the Comment and to footnote 3.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.075, which was created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: July 30, 2002.]

2011 Wisconsin Act 284 [effective date: April 27, 2012] created § 939.32(1)(de), which provides: "Whoever attempts to commit a crime under s. 948.075(1r) is subject to the penalty provided in that section for the completed act."

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. As amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 272, it provides for a minimum sentence of 5 years for violations of § 948.075. In State v. Heidke, 2016 WI App 55, 370 Wis.2d 771, 883 N.W.2d 162, the court of appeals addressed the constitutionality of § 939.617. Heidke argued that the mandatory penalty was irrational and unconstitutional because it doesn't apply to the completed sex crimes that he allegedly intended to facilitate by his computer use. The court of appeals rejected the claim, finding that the legislature had a rational basis for the distinction.

Conduct that may violate § 948.075 may also constitute enticement of a child under § 948.07 or attempted sexual assault of a child. See State v. Robins, 2002 WI 65, 253 Wis.2d 298, 646 N.W.2d 287; State v. Koenck, 2002 WI App 93, 242 Wis.2d 693, 626 N.W.2d 359; and, State v. Grimm, 2002 WI App 242, 258 Wis.2d 166, 653 N.W.2d 284. Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 2134B Child Enticement: Attempt: Fictitious Child.

1. The statutory definition of the crime refers to "sexual contact or sexual intercourse in violation of s. 948.02(1) or (2)." The reference to the statute numbers was not included in the instruction because the Committee concluded that it was not necessary. Any sexual contact or sexual intercourse with a person under the age of 16 is a violation of § 948.02(1) or (2).

2. The instruction will contain five elements if there is evidence of the defense recognized in sub. (2) of § 948.75. See note 5, below.

3. "Computerized communication system" is not defined in § 948.075. Section 943.70, Computer crimes, provides definitions of "computer" and "computer system." See § 943.70(1)(am) and (e).

In State v. McKellips, 2016 WI 51, 369 Wis.2d 437, 881 N.W.2d 258, the trial court may have followed these references in adding the following to the standard instruction:

> Evidence has been received that the defendant communicated with a child under the age of 16 via a mobile or cellphone. You must determine whether the phone described in the evidence constitutes a computerized communication system. To aid you in that determination, you are instructed that under Wisconsin law, a computer is defined as – computer is defined as computer, which means an electronic device that performs logical, arithmetic, and memory functions by manipulating electronic or magnetic impulses, and includes all input, output, processing, storage, computer software and communication facilities that are connected or related to a computer in a computer system or computer network. Computer system is defined as a set of related computer equipment, hardware, or software.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court found that this instruction, "while not perfect," accurately stated the law. The court also provided its own definition, based on the plain meaning of the terms used: "A group of interacting, interrelated, or interdependent elements forming a complex whole used to exchange thoughts or messages through a computer." 2016 WI 51, ¶34.

4. This element is intended to reflect sub. (3) of § 948.075, which provides:

> Proof that the actor did an act, other than use a computerized communication system to communicate with the individual, to effect the actor's intent under sub. (1) shall be necessary to prove that intent.

The instruction departs from the statutory language in two respects: it uses "in addition to" in place of the statute's "other than"; and, it uses "to carry out" in place of the statute's "to effect." Both changes are intended to make the instruction clearer for the jury; no substantive change is intended. The conclusion that "carry out" has the same meaning as "effect" was cited with apparent approval in State v. Olson, 2008 WI App 171, 314 Wis.2d 630, 762 N.W.2d 393 at footnote 6.

In State v. Schulpius, 2006 WI App 263, 298 Wis.2d 155, 726 N.W.2d 706, the court found the evidence sufficient to prove that the defendant did something "other than use a computerized communication system to communicate with" the person he believed to be a fourteen-year old girl. The defendant drove through the victim's neighborhood for the purpose of meeting her and purchased condoms, which he referred to in his computer communication.

In State v. Olson, 2008 WI App 171, 314 Wis.2d 630, 762 N.W.2d 393, the court found there was not sufficient evidence to satisfy the "act" requirement. The defendant's use of a webcam to transmit video of himself was nothing more than using his computer to communicate. The court noted, however, that in other situations, "it may be possible to use a communication function of a computer to engage in an 'act' within the meaning of the statute." 2008 WI App 171, ¶16.

5. The fifth element should be added if there is evidence of the defense recognized by § 948.075(2). That subsection provides:

> This section does not apply if, at the time of the communication, the actor reasonably believed that the age of the person to whom the communication was sent was no more than 24 months less than the age of the actor.

The Committee concluded that this provision should be handled like other statutory exceptions: when the evidence supports the exception, the state must prove that the exception does not apply. For example, this is the way the exception for peace officers is handled with regard to charges of carrying a concealed weapon. See Wis JI-Criminal 1335 and State v. Williamson, 58 Wis.2d 514, 206 N.W.2d 613 (1973).

6. This statement takes the statement of the exception in sub. (2) and phrases it so the state has to prove the exception does not apply.

2136 SOLICITING A CHILD FOR PROSTITUTION — § 948.08

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Soliciting a child for prostitution, as defined in § 948.08 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally solicits any child to engage in an act of prostitution.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant solicited (name of victim) to engage in an act of prostitution.

   "To solicit" means to command, encourage, or request another person to engage in specific conduct that constitutes an act of prostitution.[2]

   "An act of prostitution" means engaging in [sexual intercourse][3] [(specify act that would constitute prostitution under § 944.30)][4] for anything of value.

2. The defendant solicited (name of victim) intending that an act of prostitution be committed.

3. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required[5] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2136 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1986. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2008. It updated the text to reflect changes made by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 and adopted a new format.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.08, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. Section 948.08 replaced § 944.32, Soliciting Prostitutes, for offenses involving children. Soliciting a person under the age of 18 years was specified as a fact that increased the penalty under that statute. Section 944.32 is retained but amended to provide that it applies "except as provided under s. 948.08." See Wis JI-Criminal 1566 for violations of § 944.32.

Section 948.08 was amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80 to refer to "engage in an act of prostitution" in place of "to practice prostitution." [Effective date: March 27, 2008.] "To practice prostitution" was interpreted to require engaging in acts of prostitution on an ongoing basis. See State v. Johnson, 108 Wis.2d 703, 324 N.W.2d 447 (Ct. App. 1982), interpreting § 944.32.

1. Section 948.08 refers to "solicits or causes any child to engage in an act of prostitution or establishes any child in a place of prostitution." The instruction is drafted for what is believed to be the most common offense – soliciting a child to engage in an act of prostitution.

2. The definition of "solicit" is adapted from the one used in § 5.02(1), Model Penal Code. Also see § 939.30, defining the inchoate crime of solicitation as "advising" another to commit a crime. Also see § 939.05(2)(c), defining party to a crime liability in terms of "advises, hires, counsels or procures another to commit a crime."

3. If a definition of "sexual intercourse" is needed, see Wis JI-Criminal 2101B.

4. The committee concluded that "act of prostitution" as used in § 948.08 must refer to those acts that could be the basis for a charge of prostitution under § 944.30: sexual intercourse, acts of sexual gratification, masturbation, and sexual contact.

5. Section 939.23(6).

6. Section 939.43(2).

2136A PATRONIZING A CHILD — § 948.081)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.081 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who enters or remains in any place of prostitution with intent to have nonmarital sexual intercourse or to commit an act of sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another, masturbation or sexual contact with a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant entered or remained in a place of prostitution.

   "Place of prostitution" means any place where persons habitually engage in or offer to engage in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact for anything of value.[1]

2. The defendant entered or remained in the place with intent to (have nonmarital sexual intercourse) (commit an act of sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (commit an act of masturbation) (have sexual contact) with a person who had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.[2]

Knowledge of the person's age by the defendant is not required and mistake regarding the person's age is not a defense.[3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2136A was approved by the Committee in April 2018.

Wis JI-Criminal 2136A is drafted for a violation of § 948.081, created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 128 [effective date: December 10, 2017]. The offense is a Class G felony.

1. "Place of prostitution" is defined in § 939.22(24) as "a place where a person habitually engages, in public or in private, in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse, sexual gratification . . ., masturbation, or sexual contact for anything of value." The Committee concluded that referring to "acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact" would make the instruction more understandable to the jury and would cover acts of sexual gratification and masturbation.

If further explanation is required, see § 939.22(36) for a definition of "sexual intercourse" and § 939.22(34) for a definition of "sexual contact."

While the "state must . . . prove 'habitual use' of the premises [as a place of prostitution] beyond a reasonable doubt . . . [it] need not be established by specifically proving a number of incidents beyond a reasonable doubt. Rather, what is required is that evidence be adduced at trial from which the jury can infer 'habitual use.'" Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 678, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977).

"Habitual" is defined as "customary . . . resorted to on a regular basis." Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

2. The crime is defined as intending to commit one of the specified acts "with a person . . . if that person is a child." "Child" is defined as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years." § 948.01(1). The statement of element two condenses this into the statement: "with a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

3. Section 948.081(1) provides: "In a prosecution under this section, it need not be proven that the actor knew the age of the person and it is not a defense that the actor reasonably believed that the person was not a child." This states the same rules as §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

2137A SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A FOSTER CHILD — § 948.085(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.085(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child for whom the person is a foster parent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim).

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years[1] at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

   Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[4]

3. The defendant was a foster parent to (name of victim).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2137A was originally published in 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2009.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.085(1), which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277 (effective date: April 20, 2006). For violations of § 948.085(2), see Wis JI-Criminal 2137B.

The 2010 revision deleted reference to "treatment foster parent" which was removed from § 948.085 by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 (Section 3353).

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each instruction for sexual assault offenses. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

1. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2137B SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD PLACED IN A SUBSTITUTE CARE FACILITY[1] — § 948.085(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.085(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who was placed in a substitute care facility, where the person (works or volunteers at the facility) (is responsible[2] for managing the facility).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim) .

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

2. (Name of victim) was under the age of 18 years[3] at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].

   Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[4] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[5]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[6]

3. (Name of victim) was placed in a substitute care facility.

"Substitute care facility" means

[a shelter care facility licensed under s. 48.66(1)(a).][7]

[a group home licensed under s. 48.625 or 48.66(1).][8]

[a facility described in s. 940.295(2)(m).][9]

4. The defendant (worked or volunteered at the facility) (was responsible[10] for managing the facility).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2137B was approved by the Committee in August 2006.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.085(2), which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277 (effective date: April 20, 2006). For violations of § 948.085(1), see Wis JI-Criminal 2137A.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each instruction for sexual assault offenses. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

1. The instruction uses the term "substitute care facility," borrowing it from the title of the statute. The offense definition refers to "any of the following facilities" and then lists three types of facilities that are defined primarily by cross references to other statutes. See notes 7, 8, and 9, below.

2. The statute refers to a person who "is directly or indirectly responsible" for managing the facility. The Committee concluded that it was not necessary to include the full statement in most cases. If the case is expected to focus on the defendant being "indirectly" responsible for managing the facility it may be helpful to add Adirectly or indirectly" to the fourth element. See note 10, below.

3. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

4. Section 939.23(6).

5. Section 939.43(2).

6. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

7. Section 48.66(1)(a) refers to licensing shelter care facilities but does not provide a definition of the term.

8. Section 48.625 requires a license to operate a group home but does not provide a definition of the term. Section 48.66(1) lists a variety of institutions and agencies.

9. Section 940.295(2)(m) refers to: "A residential care center for children and youth operated by a child welfare agency licensed under s. 48.60 or an institution operated by a public agency for the care of neglected, dependent, or delinquent children."

Sec. 48.60 does not include a definition or list of agencies to which it applies. Sub. (2) lists many types of institutions to which it does not apply.

10. The statute refers to a person who "is directly or indirectly responsible" for managing the facility. The Committee concluded that it was not necessary to include the full statement in most cases. If the case is expected to focus on the defendant being "indirectly" responsible for managing the facility it may be helpful to add "directly or indirectly" to the fourth element.

2138 SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH A CHILD — § 948.09

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual intercourse with a child, as defined in § 948.09 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has attained the age of 19 years and has sexual intercourse with a child[1] who has not attained the age of 18 years[2] and who is not his or her spouse.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements where present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim) .

2. (Name of victim) had not attained the age of age of 18 years at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.

   Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[3] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[4]

   Consent to sexual intercourse is not a defense.[5]

3. Defendant had attained the age of 19 year at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.[6]

4. (Name of victim) was not the defendant's spouse at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse.

Meaning of Sexual Intercourse

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, then you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, then you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2138 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1996 and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018 and involved adding element 3 pertaining to the age of the defendant.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.09, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

Section 948.09 replaces sub. (2) of § 944.15 which prohibits sexual intercourse with a minor who is 16 years old or older but younger than 18. It replaces sub. (2)(b) of § 944.17 which prohibited acts of sexual gratification with a minor of the same age. Repeal of the sexual gratification statute was possible because the definition of sexual intercourse covers all of the acts covered by the former statute.

Section 948.09 was amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 to add the following at the end of the offense definition: "Yif the defendant has attained the age of 19 years when the violation occurs." The effective date of the change is March 30, 2018.

1. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

2. The instruction states the age limits "has not attained the age of 18 years" because this is how "child" is defined in § 948.01(1). The Committee believes that is preferable to following the statement in § 948.09 that the victim must be "a child . . . who has attained the age of 16 years." There is no reason to submit the lower age limit (has attained the age of 16 years) to the jury because if the victim is under the age of 16, the offense would be a more serious one: sexual assault of a child defined in § 948.02(1) or (2).

This interpretation comports with the common sense conclusion that a person should not be able to defend against a criminal charge on the grounds that he or she is actually guilty of a more serious offense that in fact includes the one charged. This issue was raised in a number of cases interpreting the state's homicide law at a time when first degree murder required "premeditated design" and second degree murder required "without design to effect death." Defendant's convicted of second degree murder appealed on the ground that they were really guilty of first degree murder because they intended to kill. The Wisconsin Supreme Court rejected this argument on several occasions. See Walsh v. State, 195 Wis. 543-45, 218 N.W. 714 (1928), and cases cited therein. Though the cases involved jury verdicts finding the defendant guilty of lesser included offenses, the logic of the decision applies in the present context.

3. See § 939.23(6).

4. See § 939.43(2).

5. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded that it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

6. This element was added to reflect changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018].

2138A UNDERAGE SEXUAL ACTIVITY — § 948.093

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Underage sexual activity, as defined in § 948.093 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has not attained the age of 19 years and has [sexual contact with a child who has attained the age of 15 years but has not attained the age of 16 years] [sexual intercourse with a child who has attained the age of 15 years] and is not his or her spouse.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim) .
2. The defendant had not attained the age of 19 years at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].
3. (Name of victim) had attained the age of 15 years [but had not attained the age of 16 years at the time of the alleged sexual contact] [but had not attained the age of 18 years[1] at the time of the alleged sexual intercourse].

   Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[3]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[4]

4. (Name of victim) was not the defendant's spouse at the time of the alleged sexual [contact] [intercourse].

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2138A was approved by the Committee in June 2018.

This instruction is for criminal violations of § 948.093, underage sexual activity, created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018]. This instruction provides for two types of underage sexual activity defined by § 948.093: sexual contact with a child who has attained the age of 15 years but has not attained the age of 16 years, or sexual intercourse with a child who has attained the age of 15 years. For violations of § 948.09, see Wis JI-Criminal 2138.

This instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definition material was formerly included in the text of each instructions for sexual assault offenses. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by the 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instructions that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Prohibiting consensual sexual activity with a person under the age of 16 does not violate an adult defendant's alleged "constitutional privacy right to engage in sexual activity and his privacy right to make decisions regarding procreation." State v. Fisher, 211 Wis.2d 665, 668, 565 N.W.2d 565 (Ct. App. 1997).

1. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

2. See § 939.23(6).

3. See § 939.43(2).

In State v. Jadowski, 2004 WI 68, 272 Wis.2d 418, 680 N.W.2d 810, the court held that "no affirmative defense of the victim's intentional misrepresentation of his or her age exists in a prosecution under § 948.02(2). . . If an accused's reasonable belief about the victim's age, based on the victim's intentional misrepresentation of age, is not a defense, then neither evidence regarding the defendant's belief about the victim's age nor evidence regarding the cause for or reasonableness of that belief is relevant.

4. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded that it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2139 SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD BY A SCHOOL STAFF PERSON — § 948.095(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.095(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years and who is not the person's spouse, if the child is enrolled as a student in a school or a school district and the person is a member of the school staff of the school or school district in which the child is enrolled as a student.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present at the time of the offense.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim), who was not the defendant's spouse.

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

2. (Name of victim) had attained the age of 16 years and had not attained the age of 18 years.[1]

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[3]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[4]

3. (Name of victim) was enrolled as a student in a school or a school district.

["School" means a public or private elementary or secondary school.][5]

4. The defendant was a member of the school staff of the school or school district in which (name of victim) was enrolled as a student.

["School staff" means any person who provides services to a school or a school board, including an employee of a school or school board and a person who provides services to a school or a school board under a contract.][6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2139 was originally published in 1997 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2006; it reflects changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Act 274.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.095, which was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 456 (effective date: July 11, 1996). 2005 Wisconsin Act 274 amended the title of the statute to read as follows: "Sexual assault of a child by a school staff person or a person who works or volunteers with children." Act 274 also created sub. (3), which defines a new offense addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 2139A.

Before being amended by Act 274, the title of the statute referred to "instructional staff" but the text referred simply to "staff." The definition of "school staff" in sub. (1)(b) extends to anyone who provides "services" – it is not limited to "instructional services." In State v. Kaster, 2003 WI App 105, 264 Wis.2d 751, 663 N.W.2d 390, the court of appeals noted the potentially broad application of the statutory definition but concluded that it did not make the statute unconstitutional or ambiguous. The statute does not require that a person be "under contract" and can apply to volunteers. The court also concluded that Wis JI-Criminal 2139 adequately instructs the jury on § 948.095. 2003 WI App 105, ¶16. Kaster returned to the appellate courts, claiming that the court of appeals had added a new element to the statute and that he was denied the opportunity to present a defense to that element. The court of appeals held that the first decision "did not create an additional element but instead provided a description of Kaster's relationship with the school for the purpose of analyzing whether Kaster was school staff. . . . Thus, we reject Kaster's argument that he was denied the right to present a defense . . ." State v. Kaster, 2006 WI App 72, ¶8, 292 Wis.2d 252, 714 N.W.2d 238.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each instruction for sexual assault offenses. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

1. The statute requires that the victim be "a child who has attained the age of 16 years." "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years." Thus, the victim must have attained the age of 16 but not 18. Sexual contact or intercourse with a child under the age of 16 is made criminal by § 948.02.

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

5. This is the definition provided in § 948.095(1)(a).

6. This is the definition provided in § 948.095(1)(b). See the discussion of State v. Kaster in the Comment preceding footnote 1.

2139A SEXUAL ASSAULT OF A CHILD BY A PERSON WHO WORKS OR VOLUNTEERS WITH CHILDREN — § 948.095(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual assault of a child, as defined in § 948.095(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has attained the age of 21 years, who engages in an occupation or participates in a volunteer position that requires him or her to work or interact directly with children, who has sexual [contact] [intercourse] with a child who has attained the age of 16 years, who is not the person's spouse, and with whom the person works or interacts through that occupation or volunteer position.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present at the time of the offense.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had attained the age of 21 years.
2. The defendant (engaged in an occupation) (participated in a volunteer position) that required (him) (her) to work or interact directly with children.
3. The defendant had sexual [contact] [intercourse] with (name of victim), who was not the defendant's spouse.

Meaning of [Sexual Contact] [Sexual Intercourse]

[REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.]

4. (Name of victim) had attained the age of 16 years and had not attained the age of 18 years.[1]

Knowledge of (name of victim) 's age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim) 's age is not a defense.[3]

Consent to sexual [contact] [intercourse] is not a defense.[4]

5. (Name of victim) was a person with whom the defendant worked or interacted through (his) (her) (occupation) (volunteer position).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2139A was approved by the Committee in October 2006.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.095(3)(a), which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 274 (effective date: April 20, 2006). For violations of § 948.095(2), see Wis JI-Criminal 2139.

Act 274 also changed the title of § 948.095 to refer to "school staff person or a person who works or volunteers with children." This, with the addition of sub. (3), arguably makes it more clear that the statute applies to a broad category of individuals. See State v. Kaster, 2003 WI App 105, 264 Wis.2d 751, 663 N.W.2d 390, where the court of appeals noted the potentially broad application of the statute before the changes made by Act 274 and concluded that it did not make the statute unconstitutional or ambiguous. See the discussion in the Comment, Wis JI-Criminal 2139.

Subsection (3)(d) of § 948.095 provides that evidence that a person engages in any of several listed occupations or positions is "prima facie evidence that the occupation or position requires him or her to work or interact directly with children . . ." The instruction does not address this provision. See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for a general model for instructing on "prima facie cases."

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2101A and 2101B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each instruction for sexual assault offenses. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

1. The statute requires that the victim be "a child who has attained the age of 16 years." "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years." Thus, the victim must have attained the age of 16 but not 18. Sexual contact or intercourse with a child under the age of 16 is made criminal by § 948.02.

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense, and the Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

2140 EXPOSING GENITALS, PUBIC AREA, OR INTIMATE PARTS TO A CHILD — § 948.10

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.10 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is violated by one who exposes genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to a child for the purpose of sexual arousal or sexual gratification.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [three] [four][1] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant exposed (genitals) (pubic area) (name intimate part)[2] to (name of child).

   "Expose" means to exhibit to the view of another person.

2. The defendant exposed (genitals) (pubic area) (name intimate part) for the purpose of the defendant's sexual arousal or sexual gratification.[3]

3. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[4] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[5]

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF THE FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED.[6]

[4. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years when the alleged offense occurred.[7]]

[4. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years but not the age of 19 years at the time of the alleged offense and was more than 4 years older[8] than (name of child) .]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all [three] [four] elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2140 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1998, 2007, and 2011. The 2011 revision modified the instruction to reflect the penalty structure created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 202. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it modified the instruction to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.10, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. The offense is similar to the crime defined in § 944.20(2): lewd and lascivious behavior by publicly and indecently exposing a sex organ. (See Wis JI-Criminal 1544.)

Section 948.10 was amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 202 to create a new penalty structure. [Effective date: May 6, 2010.] Violations are Class I felonies unless conditions specified in sub. (1)(b)1. or 2. are present, in which case violations are Class A misdemeanors. The Committee concluded that the facts determining which penalty applies are best addressed by adding a fourth element for cases where felony violations are charged.

2013 Wisconsin Act 362 amended § 948.10 to add "intimate parts" to the title and the offense definition [effective date: April 25, 2014.]

There are two different offenses under § 948.10: exposing genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts to a child (this instruction); and, causing a child to expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts (see Wis JI-Criminal 2141).

Subsection (2) of § 948.10 provides that "Subsection (1) does not apply under any of the following circumstances:

(a) The child is the defendant's spouse.
(b) A mother's breast-feeding of her child."

The breast-feeding exclusion was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 165. [Effective date: April 6, 1996.].

1. Use three elements if the misdemeanor offense is charged; use four elements if the felony offense is charged.

2. 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 amended § 948.10 to add "intimate parts" to the title and the offense definition [effective date: April 25, 2014.] "Intimate part" is defined in § 939.22(19): "'Intimate parts' means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being." The Committee suggests naming the specific intimate part involved.

3. Section 948.10 avoids one of the problems with traditional indecent exposure statutes in that it does not use words like "indecently" or "lewd." Rather, the "purpose of sexual arousal or sexual gratification" is required. This is the phrase used in the definition of "sexual contact" in §§ 940.225(5)(b) and 948.01(5).

4. Section 939.23(6).

5. Section 939.43(2).

6. Section 948.10(1)(a) provides that the penalty for violations of § 948.10 is a Class I felony, "except as provided in par. (b)." Paragraph (b) provides that the penalty is a Class A misdemeanor "if any of the following applies:

1. The actor is a child when the violation occurs.
2. At the time of the violation, the actor had not attained the age of 19 years and was not more than 4 years older than the child."

The Committee concluded that the preferred way to deal with this penalty structure was to treat the absence of the penalty-reducing facts in sub. (b)1. and 2. as elements of the felony offense. Thus, the instruction provides two alternatives for element 4: that the defendant was not a child (i.e, that the defendant had not attained the age of 17 years); or, that the defendant had attained the age of 17 but not 19 years and was more than 4 years older than the child.

7. For the purposes of prosecuting a person for violating provisions of Chapter 948, the person is a "child" if under the age of 17. Section 948.01(1) provides:

> "Child" means a person who has not attained the age of 18 years, except that for purposes of prosecuting a person who is alleged to have violated a state or federal criminal law, "child" does not include a person who has attained the aged of 17 years.

8. A similar four-year age gap is included in § 301.45(1m), the sex offender registration law. In State v. Parmley, 2010 WI App 79, 325 Wis.2d 769, 785 N.W.2d 655, the court held that determining whether the actor is "'not more than 4 years older,' is determined by calculating the time between the birthday of the actor and the birthday of the victim. . . [I]t was error . . . to only compare calendar year ages." ¶28.

2141 CAUSING A CHILD TO EXPOSE GENITALS, PUBIC AREA, OR INTIMATE PARTS — § 948.10

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.10 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who causes a child to expose genitals, pubic area, or intimate parts for the purpose of sexual arousal or sexual gratification.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [three] [four][1] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused (name of child) to expose (genitals) (pubic area) (name intimate part).[2]

   "Expose" means to exhibit to the view of another person.

2. The defendant caused (name of child) to expose (genitals) (pubic area) (name intimate part) for the purpose of the defendant's sexual arousal or sexual gratification.[3]

3. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged offense.

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[4] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[5] That the defendant had attained the age of 18 at the time of the alleged incident.]

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF THE FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED.[6]

[4. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years when the alleged offense occurred.[7]]

[4. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years but not the age of 19 years at the time of the alleged offense and was more than 4 years older[8] than (name of child) .]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all [three] [four] elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2141 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1998, 2007, and 2011. The 2011 revision modified the instruction to reflect the penalty structure created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 202. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it modified the instruction to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.10, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

Section 948.10 was amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 202 to create a new penalty structure. [Effective date: May 6, 2010.] Violations are Class I felonies unless conditions specified in sub. (1)(b)1. or 2. are present, in which case violations are Class A misdemeanors. The Committee concluded that the facts determining which penalty applies are best addressed by adding a fourth element for cases where felony violations are charged.

2013 Wisconsin Act 362 amended § 948.10 to add "intimate parts" to the title and the offense definition [effective date: April 25, 2014.]

There are two different offenses under § 948.10: exposing genitals or pubic area to a child (see Wis JI-Criminal 2141); and, causing a child to expose genitals or pubic area (this instruction).

Subsection (2) of § 948.10 provides that "Subsection (1) does not apply under any of the following circumstances:

(a) The child is the defendant's spouse.
(b) A mother's breast-feeding of her child."

The breast-feeding exclusion was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 165. [Effective date: April 6, 1996.]

1. Use three elements if the misdemeanor offense is charged; use four elements if the felony offense is charged.

2. 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 amended § 948.10 to add "intimate parts" to the title and the offense definition [effective date: April 25, 2014.] "Intimate part" is defined in § 939.22(19): "'Intimate parts' means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being." The Committee suggests naming the specific intimate part involved.

3. Section 948.10 avoids one of the problems with traditional indecent exposure statutes in that it does not use words like "indecently" or "lewd." Rather, the "purpose of sexual arousal or sexual gratification" is required. This is the phrase used in the definition of "sexual contact" in §§ 940.225(5)(b) and 948.01(5).

4. Section 939.23(6).

5. Section 939.43(2).

6. Section 948.10(1)(a) provides that the penalty for violations of § 948.10 is a Class I felony, "except as provided in par. (b)." Paragraph (b) provides that the penalty is a Class A misdemeanor "if any of the following applies:

1. The actor is a child when the violation occurs.
2. At the time of the violation, the actor had not attained the age of 19 years and was not more than 4 years older than the child."

The Committee concluded that the preferred way to deal with this penalty structure was to treat the absence of the penalty-reducing facts in sub. (b)1. and 2. as elements of the felony offense. Thus, the instruction provides two alternatives for element 4: that the defendant was not a child (i.e, that the defendant had not attained the age of 17 years); or, that the defendant had attained the age of 17 but not 19 years and was more than 4 years older than the child.

7. For the purposes of prosecuting a person for violating provisions of Chapter 948, the person is a "child" if under the age of 17. Section 948.01(1) provides:

> "Child" means a person who has not attained the age of 18 years, except that for purposes of prosecuting a person who is alleged to have violated a state or federal criminal law, "child" does not include a person who has attained the aged of 17 years.

8. A similar four-year age gap is included in § 301.45(1m), the sex offender registration law. In State v. Parmley, 2010 WI App 79, 325 Wis.2d 769, 785 N.W.2d 655, the court held that determining whether the actor is "'not more than 4 years older,' is determined by calculating the time between the birthday of the actor and the birthday of the victim. . . [I]t was error . . . to only compare calendar year ages." ¶28.

2142 EXPOSING A CHILD TO HARMFUL MATERIAL — § 948.11(2)(a)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.11(2)(c).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Exposing a child to harmful material, as defined in § 948.11(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with knowledge of the character and content of the material, knowingly sells, rents, exhibits, plays, distributes, or loans to a child any harmful material, with or without monetary consideration and [knows or reasonably should know that the child has not attained the age of 18 years] [has face-to-face contact with the child before or during the sale, rental, exhibit, playing, distribution, or loan].[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly (sold) (rented) (exhibited) (played) (distributed) (loaned) harmful material to (name of child).[3]

   This does not require that the defendant received any monetary consideration.[4]

"Harmful material"[5] means (identify the type of material)[6] of a person or portion of the human body that depicts nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality, and that is harmful to children.

"Harmful to children"[7] means that quality of any description, narrative account, or representation of nudity,[8] sexually explicit conduct,[9] sexual excitement,[10] sadomasochistic abuse,[11] physical torture, or brutality when it

(1) predominantly appeals to the prurient,[12] shameful or morbid interest of children; and

(2) is patently offensive to prevailing standards in the adult community of Wisconsin[13] as a whole with respect to what is suitable material for children; and

(3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value for children of the age of (name of child),[14] when taken as a whole.

2. The defendant had knowledge of the character and content of the material.[15]

This requires that the defendant knew that the material contained a description, narrative account, or representation of nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sexual excitement, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality.

3. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[16]

4. The defendant [knew or reasonably should have known that the child was under the age of 18 years] [had face-to-face contact with the child before or during the (sale) (rental) (exhibit) (playing) (distribution) (loan)].[17]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2142 was originally published in 1992 and revised in 1997, 1999, 2000, 2003, 2006, 2007, 2009, and 2011. The 2011 revision added "knowingly" to the definition of the crime and to the first element. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2018; it added the comment in regard to § 948.11(2)(am).

Section 948.11 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. A similar offense was defined by § 944.25 under prior law. That statute was repealed and replaced by § 948.11. There was no uniform instruction for violations of § 944.25.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.11(2)(a), which prohibits providing a child with harmful material and is punished as a Class E felony. Subsection (2)(am) prohibits verbally communicating a harmful description or narrative to a child and sub. (2)(b) applies to possession of harmful material with intent to transfer and is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. See uniform instruction 2143 for violations of sub. (2)(am). There are no uniform instructions for violations of sub. (2)(b).

Section 948.11 has been described as a "variable obscenity statute" – "a law which prohibits a person from exhibiting to children materials determined to be obscene to children, though not obscene to adults." State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 185, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997).

In State v. Thiel, 183 Wis.2d 505, 515 N.W.2d 847 (1994), the court held that § 948.11 was not unconstitutionally overbroad.

In State v. Weidner, 2000 WI 52, ¶1, 235 Wis.2d 306, 611 N.W.2d 684, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "§ 948.11(2) is unconstitutional in the context of the internet and other situations that do not involve face-to-face contact between the minor and the accused." The defect was that the statute eliminated a mental state regarding the age of the child while imposing a burden on the defendant to establish lack of knowledge as an affirmative defense. The defense would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to establish in a case that does not involve face-to-face confrontation. Apparently the statute remained constitutional for situations that do involve face-to-face contact between the defendant and the child. See State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997), upholding the constitutionality of the statute where there was face-to-face interaction.

The statute was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 to remedy the defect identified in Weidner by adding the requirement reflected in the new fourth element of the instruction: that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known that the child was under the age of 18 years or had face-to-face contact with the child before or during the sale, rental, exhibit, playing, distribution, or loan.

In State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, the court affirmed a court of appeals decision denying withdrawal of a no contest plea and upholding the constitutionality of § 948.11(2). The defendant gave nude pictures of himself to a 17 year old female clerk at a convenience store, along with letters saying his pictures had been accepted for publication in Playgirl magazine. He sought to withdraw his plea on the ground that he did not understand the "harmful to children" element of the crime. The court found his understanding was adequately demonstrated by the plea form and the plea colloquy. His constitutional claim was also rejected: prior decisions (Thiel and Kevin L.C.) have established that § 948.11(2) is constitutional as applied to situations involving face-to-face interaction. The "personal contact between the perpetrator and the child-victim is what allows the State to impose on the defendant the risk that the victim is a minor." 2002 WI 56, ¶39.

1. This instruction is intended to be used for all cases involving violations of § 948.11(2)(a)1. and for cases involving violations of § 948.11(2)(a)2. where there is not evidence of the defense provided in § 948.11(2)(c). As amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, the defense applies to violations of subsec. (2)(a)2. – those involving violations face-to-face contact – if the defendant "had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years" and the child presented documentary evidence of age. The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

For cases involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2142A.

2. The statement of the offense reflects changes in § 948.11(2)(a) made by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16: substituting knowledge of the "character and content" of the material for knowledge of the "nature" of the material; adding "rents," "plays," and "distributes" to the list of prohibited acts and striking "transfers" from that list; and, adding the requirement that the defendant either know or have reason to know the child's age or have face-to-face contact with the child. As to the latter, see State v. Gonzalez, 2011 WI 63, 335 Wis.2d 270, 802 N.W.2d 454, where the court found that selecting the wrong alternative was reversible error.

3. In State v. Thiel, 183 Wis.2d 505, 515 N.W.2d 847 (1994), the court construed "exhibit" to mean "to offer or present for inspection," emphasizing that, like the other terms in the statute, it "represents a knowing and affirmative act."

In State v. Gonzalez, 2011 WI 63, 335 Wis.2d 270, 802 N.W.2d 454, the court addressed whether "knowingly" must be added to the jury instruction for this offense. Three justices concluded that the word "knowingly" should simply be added to the instruction. Two justices agreed that this would effectively address the problem, but noted that "knowingly" does not appear in the statute and had not been added to the uniform jury instruction. They would not resolve the issue in this case. Two other justices concluded that "knowingly" should not be added because it does not appear in the statute. They hold that the verbs used in the statute all contemplate a "knowing and affirmative act" but apparently conclude that the jury will understand this without a specific instruction.

The Committee concluded that in light of the fact that there is agreement that the statute does require a "knowing and affirmative act," the simplest and clearest way to assure that the jury accurately understands what the statute requires is to add "knowingly" to the instruction.

4. The statutory definition of this offense provides that it applies to transfers of material, "with or without monetary consideration." § 948.11(2)(a). The Committee interprets this provision as one that makes proof of consideration unnecessary, as opposed to one that creates alternative means of proving a required fact. Thus, the instruction recommends telling the jury that proof of consideration is not required. No further mention of consideration is made.

5. This is the definition provided in § 948.11(1)(ar)1. Subsection (1)(ar)2. provides a similar definition applicable to books, other printed matter, recordings, verbal descriptions, and narrative accounts.

6. Here identify the type of material involved: picture, photograph, drawing, sculpture, motion picture film, or similar visual representation or image. See sub. (1)(ar)1. of § 948.11. Subdivision 2. of that subsection extends coverage to "any book, pamphlet, magazine, printed matter or recording that contains any matter enumerated in subd. 1."

7. This is the definition provided in § 948.11(1)(b).

In State v. Booker, 2005 WI App 182, 286 Wis.2d 747, 704 N.W.2d 336, the court of appeals reversed a conviction under § 948.11(2) because it found that the evidence was not sufficient to establish that the material was "harmful to children." The material was on a videotape that the jury did not view. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed, concluding that "testimony that depicted the content of the video scenes shown to the children was sufficient to support the jury's verdict." State v. Booker, 2006 WI 79, ¶1, 292 Wis.2d 43, 717 N.W.2d 676.

8. "Nudity" is defined in § 948.11(1)(d).

9. "Sexually explicit conduct" is defined in § 948.01(7).

10. "Sexual excitement" is defined in § 948.11(1)(f).

11. "Sadomasochistic abuse" is defined in § 948.01(4).

12. The definition of "harmful to children" is based in part on the three-part test used to define obscenity. One part of that definition refers to "prurient interest." Jury instructions defining "prurient interest" in a proceeding under § 944.21, Obscene material or performance, were reviewed in County of Kenosha v. C&S Management, 223 Wis.2d 373, 588 N.W.2d 236 (1999). The court held that the following instruction complied with the constitutional test based on Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973):

> 'Appealing to the prurient interest' does not encompass normal healthy sexual desires but means the material appeals generally to a shameful, unhealthy, unwholesome, degrading or morbid interest in sex, nudity, or excretion.

A second part of the definition refers to "prevailing standards in the adult community as a whole." In State v. Tee & Bee, Inc., 229 Wis.2d 446, 600 N.W.2d 230 (Ct. App. 1999), the court found three errors in a jury instruction under § 944.21. Two of those errors related to the relevant "community standard" used to determine whether material is obscene: contemporary community standards must be applied by juries in accordance with their own understanding of the tolerance of the average person in their community (229 Wis.2d 446, 452); and, statewide community standards must be used, not standards of a smaller geographic area (229 Wis.2d 446, 454).

In Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union, 535 U.S. 564 (2002), the court held that reliance on "community standards" to determine whether material is "harmful to minors" under the federal Child Online Protection Act does not by itself make that statute unconstitutionally overbroad. The court did find the statute unconstitutionally overbroad on other grounds.

13. The reference to the "adult community of Wisconsin" was added in 2009 in response to an unpublished decision of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals that suggested the failure to include that reference "invites error." See, State v. McCoy, 2008 AP 1512-CR, December 23, 2008.

14. See State v. Thiel, 183 Wis.2d 505, 536, 515 N.W.2d 847 (1994) and State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, ¶32, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, which hold that whether the material is "harmful to children" is to be judged by reference to a reasonable minor "of like age" with the child in the case, at least as to the issue of literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value under § 948.11(1)(b)3.

15. This knowledge element is stated in these terms by § 948.11(2)(a) as revised by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16. Before that change, the statute referred to knowledge of the "nature" of the material and defined that as knowledge of the "character and content" of the material.

The Committee concluded that "knowledge of the character and content" of the material refers to knowledge that the material contains "any description or representation of nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sexual excitement, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality." The quoted material is from the first part of the definition of "harmful to children" in § 948.11(1)(b). The balance of that definition describes the attributes of the material that makes it the equivalent of "obscene." As is the case with criminal prohibition of obscenity, knowledge of those attributes, which are essentially legal issues, is not required. See Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 121, 123 (1974):

> . . . . It is constitutionally sufficient that the prosecution show that a defendant had knowledge of the contents of the materials he distributed, and that he knew the character and nature of the materials. To require proof of a defendant's knowledge of the legal status of the materials would permit the defendant to avoid prosecution by simply claiming that he had not brushed up on the law.

16. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years." Section 948.11 does not require the state to prove that a defendant knew the person to whom the harmful materials are transfered is a child. State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 185, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997). This does not make the statute unconstitutional, because it criminalizes acts in which the defendant confronts the underage victim personally and therefore may reasonably be required to ascertain the victim's age. Id. at 187.

17. The alternative supported by the evidence should be selected. This element was added in response to changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16. If the second alternative is used – face-to-face contact – and there is evidence of the affirmative defense defined in sub. (2)(c), Wis JI-Criminal 2142A should be used. As to the latter, see State v. Gonzalez, 2011 WI 63, 335 Wis.2d 270, 802 N.W.2d 454, where the court found that selecting the wrong alternative was reversible error.

2142A EXPOSING A CHILD TO HARMFUL MATERIAL: FACE-TO-FACE CONTACT AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE — § 948.11(2)(a)2. and (c)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION FOR VIOLATIONS OF § 948.11(2)(a)2. IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.11(2)(c).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Exposing a child to harmful material, as defined in § 948.11(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with knowledge of the character and content of the material, sells, rents, exhibits, transfers, or loans to a child any harmful material, with or without monetary consideration and has face-to-face contact with the child before or during the sale, rental, exhibit, playing, distribution, or loan].[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (sold) (rented) (exhibited)[3] (played) (distributed) (loaned) harmful material to (name of child) .

   This does not require that the defendant received any monetary consideration.[4]

   "Harmful material"[5] means (identify the type of material) [6] of a person or portion of the human body that depicts nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality, and that is harmful to children.

"Harmful to children"[7] means that quality of any description, narrative account, or representation of nudity,[8] sexually explicit conduct,[9] sexual excitement,[10] sadomasochistic abuse,[11] physical torture, or brutality when it

(1) predominantly appeals to the prurient,[12] shameful or morbid interest of children; and

(2) is patently offensive to prevailing standards in the adult community of Wisconsin[13] as a whole with respect to what is suitable material for children; and

(3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value for children of the age of (name of child),[14] when taken as a whole.

2. The defendant had knowledge of the character and content of the material.[15]

This requires that the defendant knew that the material contained a description, narrative account, or representation of nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sexual excitement, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality.

3. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[16]

4. The defendant had face-to-face contact with the child before or during the (sale) (rental) (exhibit) (playing) (distribution) (loan).[17]

Consider Whether The Defense Is Proved

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that (name of child) had attained the age of 18 years and that (name of child) exhibited to the defendant (a draft card) (a driver's license) (a birth certificate) (an official or apparently official document) purporting to establish that (name of child) had attained the age of 18 years.[18]

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is established.[19]

Evidence has greater weight when it has more convincing power than the evidence opposed to it. Credible evidence is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.[20]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[21]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2142A was originally published in 2001 and revised in 2003 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2009.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.11(2)(a) involving face-to-face contact and where there is evidence of the defense provided in sub. (2)(c) of the same statute. See Wis JI-Criminal 2142 for the instruction intended to be used where there is no evidence of the affirmative defense. See the Comment to that instruction for general information about the statute.

Where the offense involves material on a videotape, producing evidence sufficient to establish that the material is "harmful to children" is likely to require that the jury view the videotape. See State v. Booker, 2005 WI App 182, 286 Wis.2d 747, 704 N.W.2d 336, discussed in note 7, below.

Section 948.11 has been described as a "variable obscenity statute" – "a law which prohibits a person from exhibiting to children materials determined to be obscene to children, though not obscene to adults." State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 185, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997).

In State v. Weidner, 2000 WI 52, ¶1, 235 Wis.2d 306, 611 N.W.2d 684, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "§ 948.11(2) is unconstitutional in the context of the internet and other situations that do not involve face-to-face contact between the minor and the accused." The defect was that the statute eliminated a mental state regarding the age of the child while imposing a burden on the defendant to establish lack of knowledge as an affirmative defense. The defense would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to establish in a case that does not involve face-to-face confrontation. Apparently the statute remained constitutional for situations that do involve face-to-face contact between the defendant and the child. See State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997), upholding the constitutionality of the statute where there was face-to-face interaction.

The statute was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 to remedy the defect identified in Weidner by adding the requirement reflected in the new fourth element of the instruction: that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known that the child was under the age of 18 years or had face-to-face contact with the child before or during the sale, rental, exhibit, playing, distribution, or loan.

In State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, the court affirmed a court of appeals decision denying withdrawal of a no contest plea and upholding the constitutionality of § 948.11(2). The defendant gave nude pictures of himself to a 17 year old female clerk at a convenience store, along with letters saying his pictures had been accepted for publication in Playgirl magazine. He sought to withdraw his plea on the ground that he did not understand the "harmful to children" element of the crime. The court found his understanding was adequately demonstrated by the plea form and the plea colloquy. His constitutional claim was also rejected: prior decisions (Thiel and Kevin L.C.) have established that § 948.11(2) is constitutional as applied to situations involving face-to-face interaction. The "personal contact between the perpetrator and the child-victim is what allows the State to impose on the defendant the risk that the victim is a minor." 2002 WI 56, ¶39.

1. This instruction is intended to be used for cases involving violations of § 948.11(2)(a)2. where there is evidence of the defense provided in § 948.11(2)(c). The defense applies to cases where there has been face-to-face contact if the defendant "had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years" and the child has exhibited documentary evidence purporting to establish that age. The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

2. The statement of the offense reflects changes in § 948.11(2)(a) made by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16: substituting knowledge of the "character and content" of the material for knowledge of the "nature" of the material; adding "rents," "plays," and "distributes" to the list of prohibited acts and striking "transfers" from that list; and, adding the requirement that the defendant have face-to-face contact with the child.

4. See note 4, Wis JI-Criminal 2142.

5. See note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 2142.

6. Here identify the type of material involved: picture, photograph, drawing, sculpture, motion picture film, or similar visual representation or image. See sub. (1)(ar)1. of § 948.11. Subdivision 2. of that subsection extends coverage to "any book, pamphlet, magazine, printed matter or recording that contains any matter enumerated in subd. 1."

Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, ¶32, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, which hold that whether the material is "harmful to children" is to be judged by reference to a reasonable minor "of like age" with the child in the case, at least as to the issue of literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value under § 948.11(1)(b)3.

15. See note 14, Wis JI-Criminal 2142.

16. See note 15, Wis JI-Criminal 2142.

17. This element was added in response to changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, specifically, adding subsec. (2)(a)2.

18. This is the full statement of the defense found in sub. (2)(c).

19. The statute provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence." The statement used in the instruction is the description typically used to explain the civil burden of persuasion.

20. This is a slight revision of the standard description of the civil burden of proof, intended to improve its understandability. No change in meaning is intended.

21. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements are not proven [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and,

2) not guilty even though the elements are proven, because the defense has been established.

2143 EXPOSING A CHILD TO HARMFUL MATERIAL: VERBALLY COMMUNICATING A HARMFUL DESCRIPTION OR NARRATIVE ACCOUNT — § 948.11(2)(am)

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.11(2)(c).][1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Exposing a child to harmful material, as defined in § 948.11(2)(am) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who has attained the age of 17 and who, with knowledge of the character and content of the material, verbally communicates, by any means, a harmful description or narrative account to a child, with or without monetary consideration and [knows or reasonably should know that the child has not attained the age of 18 years] [has face-to-face contact with the child before or during the communication].[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had attained the age of 17 at the time of the alleged offense.
2. The defendant verbally communicated,[3] by any means, a harmful description or narrative account to (name of child).

[This does not require that the defendant received any monetary consideration.][4]

"Harmful description or narrative account" means any explicit and detailed description or narrative account of sexual excitement, sexually explicit conduct, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality that, taken as a whole, is harmful to children.[5]

"Harmful to children"[6] means that quality of any description, narrative account, or representation of nudity,[7] sexually explicit conduct,[8] sexual excitement,[9] sadomasochistic abuse,[10] physical torture, or brutality when it

(1) predominantly appeals to the prurient, shameful, or morbid interest of children; and

(2) is patently offensive to prevailing standards in the adult community of Wisconsin[11] as a whole with respect to what is suitable material for children; and

(3) lacks serious literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value for children of the age of (name of child),[12] when taken as a whole.[13]

3. The defendant had knowledge of the character and content of the material.[14]

This requires that the defendant knew that the material contained a description, narrative account, or representation of nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sexual excitement, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality.

4. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[15]

5. The defendant [knew or reasonably should have known that (name of child) was under the age of 18 years] [had face-to-face contact with (name of child) before or during the communication].[16]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2143 was originally published in 2008 and revised in 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2018.

Section 948.11 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. A similar offense was defined by § 944.25 under prior law. That statute was repealed and replaced by § 948.11. There was no uniform instruction for violations of § 944.25.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.11(2)(am), which prohibits verbally communicating a harmful description or narrative to a child.

In State v. Thiel, 183 Wis.2d 505, 515 N.W.2d 847 (1994), the court held that § 948.11 was not unconstitutionally overbroad.

In State v. Weidner, 2000 WI 52, ¶1, 235 Wis.2d 306, 611 N.W.2d 684, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "§ 948.11(2) is unconstitutional in the context of the internet and other situations that do not involve face-to-face contact between the minor and the accused." The defect was that the statute eliminated a mental state regarding the age of the child while imposing a burden on the defendant to establish lack of knowledge as an affirmative defense. The defense would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to establish in a case that does not involve face-to-face confrontation. Apparently the statute remained constitutional for situations that do involve face-to-face contact between the defendant and the child. See State v. Kevin L.C., 216 Wis.2d 166, 576 N.W.2d 62 (Ct. App. 1997), upholding the constitutionality of the statute where there was face-to-face interaction.

The statute was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 to remedy the defect identified in Weidner by adding the requirement reflected in the new fifth element of the instruction: that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known that the child was under the age of 18 years or had face-to-face contact with the child before or during the communication.

In State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, the court affirmed a court of appeals decision denying withdrawal of a no contest plea and upholding the constitutionality of § 948.11(2). The defendant gave nude pictures of himself to a 17 year old female clerk at a convenience store, along with letters saying his pictures had been accepted for publication in Playgirl magazine. He sought to withdraw his plea on the ground that he did not understand the "harmful to children" element of the crime. The court found his understanding was adequately demonstrated by the plea form and the plea colloquy. His constitutional claim was also rejected: prior decisions (Thiel and Kevin L.C.) have established that § 948.11(2) is constitutional as applied to situations involving face-to-face interaction. The "personal contact between the perpetrator and the child-victim is what allows the State to impose on the defendant the risk that the victim is a minor." 2002 WI 56, ¶39.

1. This instruction is intended to be used for all cases involving violations of § 948.11(2)(am)1. and for cases involving violations of § 948.11(2)(am)2. where there is not evidence of the defense provided in § 948.11(2)(c). As amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, the defense applies to violations of subsec. (2)(am)2. – those involving violations face-to-face contact – if the defendant "had reasonable cause to believe that the child had attained the age of 18 years" and the child presented documentary evidence of age. The statute further provides that the defendant "has the burden of proving this defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

For cases involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2142A, which can be used as model for adapting this instruction.

2. Choose the applicable alternative. See, § 948.11(2)(am)1. and 2.

3. In State v. Ebersold, 2007 WI App 232, ¶14, 306 Wis.2d 371, 742 N.W.2d 876, the court held that "'verbally' is most reasonably read here as proscribing communication to children of harmful matter in words, whether oral or written, and to distinguish § 948.22(2)(am) from § 948.22(2)(a), which primarily proscribes visual representations." Thus, the court held that the statute applied to Ebersold's message sent via an Internet chat room.

4. The statutory definition of this offense provides that it applies to transfers of material, "with or without monetary consideration." § 948.11(2)(am). The Committee interprets this provision as one that makes proof of consideration unnecessary, as opposed to one that creates alternative means of proving a required fact. The Committee recommends telling the jury that proof of consideration is not required if the issue has been raised in the case. No further mention of consideration is made.

5. This is the definition provided in § 948.11(1)(ag).

6. This is the definition provided in § 948.11(1)(b).

7. "Nudity" is defined in § 948.11(1)(d).

8. "Sexually explicit conduct" is defined in § 948.01(7).

9. "Sexual excitement" is defined in § 948.11(1)(f).

10. "Sadomasochistic abuse" is defined in § 948.01(4).

11. The reference to the "adult community of Wisconsin" was added in 2009 in response to an unpublished decision of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals that suggested the failure to include that reference "invites error." See, State v. McCoy, 2008 AP 1512-CR, December 23, 2008.

12. See State v. Thiel, 183 Wis.2d 505, 536, 515 N.W.2d 847 (1994) and State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, ¶32, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891, which hold that whether the material is "harmful to children" is to be judged by reference to a reasonable minor "of like age" with the child in the case, at least as to the issue of literary, artistic, political, scientific, or educational value under § 948.11(1)(b)3.

13. The definition of "harmful to children" is based in part on the three-part test used to define obscenity. One part of that definition refers to "prurient interest." Jury instructions defining "prurient interest" in a proceeding under § 944.21, Obscene material or performance, were reviewed in County of Kenosha v. C&S Management, 223 Wis.2d 373, 588 N.W.2d 236 (1999). The court held that the following instruction complied with the constitutional test based on Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15 (1973):

> 'Appealing to the prurient interest' does not encompass normal healthy sexual desires but means the material appeals generally to a shameful, unhealthy, unwholesome, degrading or morbid interest in sex, nudity, or excretion.

A second part of the definition refers to "prevailing standards in the adult community as a whole." In State v. Tee & Bee, Inc., 229 Wis.2d 446, 600 N.W.2d 230 (Ct. App. 1999), the court found three errors in a jury instruction under § 944.21. Two of those errors related to the relevant "community standard" used to determine whether material is obscene: contemporary community standards must be applied by juries in accordance with their own understanding of the tolerance of the average person in their community (229 Wis.2d 446, 452); and, statewide community standards must be used, not standards of a smaller geographic area (229 Wis.2d 446, 454).

In Ashcroft v. American Civil Liberties Union, 535 U.S. 564 (2002), the court held that reliance on "community standards" to determine whether material is "harmful to minors" under the federal Child Online Protection Act does not by itself make that statute unconstitutionally overbroad. The court did find the statute unconstitutionally overbroad on other grounds.

14. This knowledge element is stated in these terms by § 948.11(2)(am).

The Committee concluded that "knowledge of the character and content" of the material refers to knowledge that the material contains "any description or representation of nudity, sexually explicit conduct, sexual excitement, sadomasochistic abuse, physical torture, or brutality." The quoted material is from the first part of the definition of "harmful to children" in § 948.11(1)(b). The balance of that definition describes the attributes of the material that makes it the equivalent of "obscene." As is the case with criminal prohibition of obscenity, knowledge of those attributes, which are essentially legal issues, is not required. See Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 121, 123 (1974):

> . . . . It is constitutionally sufficient that the prosecution show that a defendant had knowledge of the contents of the materials he distributed, and that he knew the character and nature of the materials. To require proof of a defendant's knowledge of the legal status of the materials would permit the defendant to avoid prosecution by simply claiming that he had not brushed up on the law.

15. "Child" is defined in § 948.01(1) as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

16. The alternative supported by the evidence should be selected. If the second alternative is used – face-to-face contact – and there is evidence of the affirmative defense defined in sub. (2)(c), see Wis JI-Criminal 2142A for a model incorporating the affirmative defense.

2146 POSSESSION OF CHILD PORNOGRAPHY — § 948.12(1m)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2146 was originally published in 1994 and withdrawn in 2002 when it was divided into two versions: Wis JI-Criminal 2146A Child Pornography: Possession Of A Recording, and Wis JI-Criminal 2146B Child Pornography: Exhibiting Or Displaying A Recording.

[This page is intentionally left blank]

2146A CHILD PORNOGRAPHY: POSSESSION OF OR ACCESSING A RECORDING — § 948.12(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of child pornography, as defined in § 948.12(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly possesses[1] or accesses in any way with intent to view any undeveloped film, photographic negative, photograph, motion picture, videotape, or other recording of a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct, knows or reasonably should know that the recording contained depictions of sexually explicit conduct, and knows or reasonably should know that the child depicted in the material has not attained the age of 18 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly (possessed a recording) (accessed a recording in any way with intent to view it).[2]

   ["Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[3] had actual physical control of the recording.][4]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS IN POSSESSION CASES WHEN THEY ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[A recording is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the recording.]

[It is not required that a person own a recording in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the recording.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over a recording, the recording is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

"Recording" means a reproduction of an image or a sound or the storage of data representing an image or a sound.[5]

2. The recording showed a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

A child is a person who is under the age of 18 years.[6]

"Sexually explicit conduct" means[7] actual or simulated [sexual intercourse] [bestiality] [masturbation] [sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse] [lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)].[8]

3. The defendant knew or reasonably should have known that the recording contained depictions of a person engaged in actual or simulated _____.[9]

4. The defendant knew or reasonably should have known[10] that the person [shown in the recording] [depicted in the material] engaged in sexually explicit conduct was under the age of 18 years.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS D FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[11]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2146 in 1992 and revised in 1998, 2002, 2003, 2006, 2007, 2011, and 2012. The 2002 revision involved renumbering as Wis JI-Criminal 2146A, adopting a new format, and updating the instruction to reflect changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16. The 2006 revision added a definition of "possession" to element 1. The February 2007 revision involved adding a special question at the end of the instruction and updating the Comment. The 2011 revision added to footnote 4. The 2012 revision reflected changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Acts 271 and 272. The 2019 revision amended the comment based on 2019 Wisconsin Act 16. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; it updated case law citations in the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.12(1m), as amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 271, effective date: April 24, 2012. For a violation of § 948.12(2m), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, see Wis JI-Criminal 2146B.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a New York statute prohibiting persons from distributing child pornography in New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982). The statute before the court differed from § 948.12, but some of the decision's discussion of constitutional issues implicated by prohibiting child pornography may be relevant to questions arising under the Wisconsin statute.

In State v. Whistleman, 2001 WI App 189, 247 Wis.2d 337, 633 N.W.2d 249, the court held that "pictorial reproductions" as used in § 948.12, 1999-2000 Wis. Stats., included computer disks that store images of child pornography. 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 amended § 948.12 by replacing "pictorial reproduction" with "recording," defining the latter in § 948.01(3r) to include "storage of data representing an image. . ."

In State v. Multaler, 2002 WI 35, 252 Wis.2d 54, 643 N.W.2d 437, the court held that charging a separate count under § 948.12, 1997-98 Wis. Stats., for each of 28 files containing pornographic images on two computer diskettes did not violate the rule prohibiting multiplicitous charges. Also see State v. Schaefer, 2003 WI App 164, 266 Wis.2d 719, 668 N.W.2d 760.

Section 948.12 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class D felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class I felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class D felony is charged. If the Class I felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a minimum sentence of 3 years for violations of § 948.12. Section 939.617 was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 24, 2012] to limit the exception to the minimum sentence for violations of § 948.12 to those where the defendant "is no more than 48 months older than the child who engaged in the sexually explicit conduct." See § 939.617(2)(b).

1. Section 948.12(1m)(a) requires that "the person knows that he or she possesses the material." Rather than state this as a separate element, the Committee concluded it was clearer to use the phrase "knowing possession."

2. Section 948.12(1m) was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 271 [effective date: April 24, 2012] to add "or accesses in any way with intent to view" as an alternative to possession. This change may address some of the difficulties presented by trying to apply "possession" to certain fact situations. See footnote 4 below and State v. Mercer, cited therein.

The statute prohibits possession or accessing of undeveloped film, a photographic negative, a photograph, a motion picture, a videotape, or a recording. The statute was revised by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: September 1, 2001] to delete reference to "pictorial reproduction" and "audio recording" and replace them with "recording." "Recording" is defined in § 948.01(3r) as follows: "'Recording' includes the creation of a reproduction of an image or a sound or the storage of data representing an image or a sound." The Committee concluded that the new term "recording" is defined to include all the specific items listed in the statute. That is, undeveloped film, or a photographic negative, or a photograph, etc., is a "recording" as that term is defined in § 948.01(3r). The Committee further concluded that it is permissible to instruct the jury that, for example, "A photographic negative is a recording." This applies only to items listed in the statute; whether other items qualify as a "recording" is a factual issue for the jury to resolve.

3. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414-18, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 493, 508-09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

4. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the item is arguably under the defendant's control but not directly in the physical possession of the defendant.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

Questions about "knowing possession" and "control" of a recording arise in cases involving images on a computer hard drive. In State v. Lindgren, 2004 WI App 159, 275 Wis.2d 851, N.W.2d, the court of appeals found that the evidence was sufficient to show "possession" where images were "cached" on the hard drive and there was evidence that the defendant knew that would happen when he accessed pornographic material. Lindgren adopted the rationale of U.S. v. Tucker, 305 F.3d. 1193 (10th Cir. 2002).

In State v. Mercer, 2010 WI App 47, 324 Wis.2d 506, 782 N.W.2d 125, the court held that possession of images of child pornography in violation of § 948.12(1m) can be proved by evidence from computer monitoring software showing that the defendant searched for and obtained access to web sites and viewed the images. It is not required that the defendant retained control of the images after viewing them by, for example, storing them on the computer or allowing them to remain in the computer's cache. The court's conclusion:

> . . . an individual knowingly possesses child pornography when he or she affirmatively pulls up images of child pornography on the Internet and views those images knowing that they contain child pornography. Whether the proof is hard drive evidence or something else, such as the monitoring software here, should not matter because both capture a "videotape" of the same behavior. And images in either place can be controlled by taking actions like printing or copying the images. ¶31.

The trial court in the Mercer case had added to the standard definition of "possession" in the instruction, giving examples of what could constitute possession:

> [p]ossessed means that the defendant knowingly had actual physical control of the recording, or that the recording is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the recording.
> In cases involving digital images, if you are satisfied that the defendant intentionally visited child pornography websites when [sic] contained child pornography images; and (a) acted on or manipulated the child pornography image; or (b) viewed the child pornography image knowing that his web browser automatically saved the image in the temporary Internet cache file; you may find knowing possession of such images.
> It is not required that a person own a recording in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the recording. Recording means a reproduction of an image or a sound or the storage of data representing an image or a sound, including a digital image.

The court of appeals commented that this instruction "actually inured to Mercer's benefit because it gave an example fitting his theory of defense, a defense to which he was not entitled." ¶36.

Howard, Don't Cache Out Your Case: Prosecuting Child Pornography Possession Laws Based on Images Located in Temporary Internet Files, 19 Berkeley Tech. 5. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. See note 2, supra. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "includes the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

6. Section 948.01(1) defines "child" as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

7. Section 948.01(7) defines "sexually explicit conduct" as follows:

"Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

8. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

"Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

9. The statement of the third element reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 271 [effective date: April 24, 2012]. The change added "or reasonably should know" as an alternative to "know." It also deleted the reference to "the character and content" of the conduct and replaced it with "material that contains depictions of" sexually explicit conduct. The Committee concluded that the best way to describe this requirement to the jury is to insert the name of the type of conduct used in the preceding element.

10. The "knew or reasonably should have known" requirement is set forth in § 948.12(1m)c. This is contrary to the general rule in the Criminal Code that knowledge of the age of a minor victim is not required and mistake about age is not a defense. See §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). This element satisfies the requirement that pornography statutes include "scienter." State v. Schaefer, 2003 WI App 164, ¶36, 266 Wis.2d 719, 668 N.W.2d 760.

11. Section 948.12 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class D felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class I felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class D felony is charged. If the Class I felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of child pornography: possession of a recording, under sec. 948.12(1m), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2146B CHILD PORNOGRAPHY: EXHIBITING OR PLAYING A RECORDING — § 948.12(2m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.12(2m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is violated by one who knowingly exhibits or plays a recording of a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct, knows the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct in the material, and knows or reasonably should know that the child has not attained the age of 18 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly (exhibited)[1] (played) a recording.[2]

   "Recording" means a reproduction of an image or a sound or the storage of data representing an image or a sound.[3]

2. The recording showed a child engaged in sexually explicit conduct.

   A child is a person who is under the age of 18 years.[4]

   "Sexually explicit conduct" means[5] actual or simulated [sexual intercourse] [bestiality] [masturbation] [sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse] [lewd exhibition of (name intimate part)].[6]

3. The defendant knew that the recording showed a person engaged in actual or simulated _____.[7]

4. The defendant knew or reasonably should have known[8] that the person shown in the recording engaged in sexually explicit conduct was under the age of 18 years.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS D FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT WAS 18 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[9]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2146B was originally published in 2002 and revised in 2004 and 2007. The 2007 revision involved adding a special question at the end of the instruction and updating the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2019 and reflects changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019].

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.12(2m), as created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. For a violation of § 948.12(1m), as amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, see Wis JI-Criminal 2146A, Possession of Child Pornography.

The United States Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of a New York statute prohibiting persons from distributing child pornography in New York v. Ferber, 458 U.S. 747 (1982). The statute before the court differed from § 948.12, but some of the decision's discussion of constitutional issues implicated by prohibiting child pornography may be relevant to questions arising under the Wisconsin statute.

Section 948.12 was also amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class D felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class I felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class D felony is charged. If the Class I felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

NOTE: 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. It provides for a presumptive minimum sentence of 3 years for violations of § 948.12.

1. 2001 Wisconsin Act 16 created § 948.01(1d), which reads as follows:

(1d) "Exhibit," with respect to a recording of an image that is not viewable in its recorded form, means to convert the recording of the image into a form in which the image may be viewed.

2. Section 948.12(2m)(a) requires that "the person knows that he or she has exhibited or played the recording." Rather than state this as a separate element, the Committee concluded it was clearer to use the phrase "knowingly (exhibited) (played) a recording."

3. This is based on the definition provided in § 948.01(3r), created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. "Means" was substituted for the phrase "include the creation of" used in the statutory definition. No change in substance was intended.

4. Section 948.01(1) defines "child" as "a person who has not attained the age of 18 years."

5. Section 948.01(7) defines "sexually explicit conduct" as follows:

"Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:
(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

6. The definition of "sexually explicit conduct" was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 67, which substituted "intimate parts" for "the genitals or pubic area" in sub. (7)(e). Effective date: Dec. 2, 1995. "Intimate parts" is defined as follows in § 939.22(19):

"Intimate parts" means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being.

The definition of "lewd exhibition of intimate part" was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16 [effective date: July 12, 2019], which states: "'Lewd exhibition of intimate parts' means the display of less than fully and opaquely covered intimate parts of a person who is posed as a sex object or in a way that places an unnatural or unusual focus on the intimate parts." Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t).

In State v. Petrone, 161 Wis.2d 530, 468 N.W.2d 676 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed a trial court's instruction defining "lewd" in a case prosecuted under § 940.203, 1987 Wis. Stats. The court concluded that "[t]hree concepts are generally included in defining 'lewd' and sexually explicit. . . [M]ere nudity is not enough – the pictures must display the child's genital area . . . the photographs must be sexually suggestive; and . . . the jurors may use common sense to determine whether the photographs were lewd." 161 Wis.2d 530, 561.

7. Insert the name of the type of conduct used in the preceding element. Section 948.12(2) requires that "the person know the character and content of the sexually explicit conduct shown in the material." (Emphasis added.) The Committee concluded that stating this requirement as, for example, "knowing that the photograph showed actual or simulated sexual intercourse" adequately covers the "character and content" aspect.

8. The "knew or reasonably should have known" requirement is explicitly set forth in § 948.12(2m)(c). This is contrary to the general rule in the Criminal Code that knowledge of the age of a minor victim is not required and mistake about age is not a defense. See §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). The same element in sub. (1m) was held to satisfy the requirement that pornography statutes include "scienter." State v. Schaefer, 2003 WI App 164, ¶36, 266 Wis.2d 719, 668 N.W.2d 760.

9. Section 948.12 was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433, effective date: June 6, 2006. Act 433 changed the penalty structure: the offense is a Class D felony if the defendant was over the age of 18 years at the time of the offense; it is a Class I felony if the defendant was under the age of 18. The instruction reflects this change by adding a special question to be used where the Class D felony is charged. If the Class I felony is charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes this issue is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of child pornography: exhibiting or playing a recording, under sec. 948.12(2m), at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."
>
> "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

2147 CHILD SEX OFFENDER WORKING WITH CHILDREN — § 948.13

[IF THE UNDERLYING CONVICTION IS FOR VIOLATING § 948.02(2) OR § 948.025, EXCEPTIONS MAY APPLY – SEE § 948.13(2)(b) AND (c)]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.13 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who has been convicted of a serious child sex offense and who subsequently engages in an occupation or participates in a volunteer position that requires the person to work or interact primarily and directly with children under 16 years of age.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had been convicted of a serious child sex offense. [Identify the serious child sex offense listed in § 948.13(1)(a)] [1] is a serious child sex offense.
2. After being convicted of a serious child sex offense, the defendant [engaged in an occupation] [participated in a volunteer position] that required the defendant (to work) (to interact) primarily and directly with children under 16 years of age.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2147 was originally published in 1996 and the Comment was revised in 1999 and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2006 and involved updating footnote 1 to reflect changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.13, which was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 265. Act 265 provides that "[t]his act first applies to offenses committed on the effective date of this subsection", which is May 6, 1996. It further provides that this "does not preclude the counting of other offenses as prior serious child sex offenses for determining whether a person is subject to section 948.13(2) . . ."

2001 Wisconsin Act 97 [effective date: May 3, 2002] amended § 948.13 so that (2)(a) begins as follows: "Except as provided in pars. (b) and (c) . . . ." The referenced exceptions relate to defendants who were convicted under § 948.02(2) before the effective date of Act 97 [sub. (b)] or § 948.025 [sub. (c)]. In both situations, the defendant must have been under age 19 at the time of the offense and other criteria specified in sub. (2m) must be satisfied. The Committee concluded that the existence of the exceptions are likely to be determined before trial and are not likely to become issues for a jury to determine.

1999 Wisconsin Act 265 also created § 973.034 which requires that when a person is sentenced for an offense that qualifies as a "serious child sex offense" under § 948.13(1)((a), "the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under s. 948.13." The Committee concluded that failure to so inform the defendant would not affect the validity of a criminal charge for violating § 948.13. [See, State v. Phillips, 172 Wis.2d 391, 451 N.W.2d 238 (Ct. App. 1989), reaching the same conclusion with respect to a similar requirement for informing a convicted felon that the felon may not possess a firearm.].

1. Section 948.13(1)(a) lists specific statutes that are "serious child sex offenses" for the purposes of § 948.13. The instruction provides for the insertion of the name of these specifically identified offenses, which are:

- sexual exploitation by therapist under § 940.22, if the victim was under the age of 18;
- second degree sexual assault under § 940.225(2)(c) (victim suffers from a mental illness or deficiency), if the victim was under the age of 18;
- first degree sexual assault of a child under § 948.02(1) (victim has not attained the age of 13 years);
- second degree sexual assault of a child under § 948.02(2) (victim has not attained the age of 16 years);
- repeated acts of sexual assault of the same child under § 948.025(1);
- sexual exploitation of a child under § 948.05(1);
- incest under § 948.06;
- child enticement under subsections (1), (2), (3), and (4) of § 948.07. (Note: subsection (5) and (6) of § 948.07 are not included.);
- use of a computer to facilitate a child sex crime under § 948.075; and,

- sexual assault of a child placed in substitute care under § 948.085.

Note: Reference to sexual assault of a child placed in substitute care under § 948.085 was added to § 948.13(1)(a) by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277.

In addition to these specifically identified offenses, § 948.13((1)(b) also provides that "[a] crime under federal law or the law of any other state or, prior to the effective date of this paragraph, under the law of this state that is comparable to a crime specified in par. (a)" is a "serious child sex offense." The instruction must be modified if one of these alternatives is used.

2. Subsection (3) of § 948.13 provides as follows:

> Evidence that a person engages in an occupation or participates in a volunteer position relating to any of the following is prima facie evidence that the occupation or position requires him or her to work or interact primarily and directly with children under 16 years of age: teaching children, child care, youth counseling, youth organization, coaching children, parks or playground recreation or school bus driving.

If it is believed to be helpful or necessary to instruct on this prima facie evidence provision, see Wis JI-Criminal 225, which provides a model for instructing the jury on "presumed facts" and "prima facie cases."

2148 ABANDONMENT OF A CHILD — § 948.20)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abandonment of a child, as defined in § 948.20 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who, with intent to abandon the child, leaves any child in a place where the child may suffer because of neglect.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[1]

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[3]

2. The defendant left (name of child) in a place where the child may have suffered because of neglect.

   "Neglect" means to seriously endanger the health or safety of a child by failing to provide necessary care, food, clothing, medical or dental care, or shelter.[4]

This does not require that (name of child) actually suffered because of neglect, but it requires only that (name of child) was left in a place where the child may have suffered because of neglect.

3. The defendant left (name of child) with intent to abandon (name of child).

Meaning of "With Intent To Abandon"

The term "with intent to abandon" requires that the defendant had the purpose to abandon or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2148 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2003, and involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the Comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.20, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

Section 948.20 replaced § 940.28, 1985-86 Wis. Stats. The only substantive change was to make the statute applicable to all children (persons under the age of 18). Section 940.28 had applied only to children under age 6.

Section 48.195(4) provides "immunity from prosecution under s. 948.20 for abandonment of a child" where a parent relinquishes custody of a child under § 48.195(1). The instruction does not address this provision.

1. Under prior law, the offense of abandoning a child applied only to children under the age of 6 years. See § 940.28, 1985-86 Wis. Stats. That statute was described as covering "a very special type of conduct – the abandonment of children who are so young that they are unable to care for themselves. It covers cases such as the abandonment of a baby on a doorstep." Comment to § 340.23, 1953 Legislative Council Report on the Criminal Code. The note to new § 948.20 indicates a different conclusion: "The special committee determined that there is no substantial reason for distinguishing between children under the age of 6 and other children for purposes of this offense. Legislative Council note to § 948.20, 1987 Senate Bill 203.

While there may be no reason to make such age distinctions, applying the statute to older children may give more importance to the "intent to abandon" element.

2. This is the rule provided in § 939.23(6).

3. This is the rule provided in § 939.43(2).

4. "Neglect" is not defined in Chapter 948 or elsewhere in the Criminal Code. In the Children's Code, the term "neglected child" has been replaced with a broad category of "children alleged to be in need of protection or services" set forth in § 48.13. That section lists twelve different situations which indicate that a child is in need of protection or services. The definition used in the instruction was adapted from the type of neglect described in § 48.13(10).

5. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 932A and 923B.

2150 NEGLECTING A CHILD — § 948.21(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Neglecting a child, as defined in Section 948.21(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is committed by any person who is responsible for a child's welfare who, through his or her action or failure to take action, for reasons other than poverty, negligently fails to provide any of the following, so as to seriously endanger the physical, mental, or emotional health of the child: necessary care, necessary food, necessary clothing, necessary medical care, necessary shelter, education in compliance with section 118.15, protection from exposure to the distribution or manufacture of controlled substances, as defined in section 961.01(4), or controlled substance analogs, as defined in section 961.01(4m), or to drug abuse, as defined in section 46.973(1)(b).[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][2]

2. The defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of (name of child).

A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)).[3]

3. The defendant, through action or failure to take action, and for reasons other than poverty, failed to provide[4]

[necessary (care)[5] (food) (clothing) (medical care) (shelter).]

[education in compliance with section 118.15.]

[protection from exposure (to the distribution or manufacture of controlled substances, as defined in section 961.01(4), or controlled substance analogs, as defined in section 961.01(4m)) (or) (to drug abuse, as defined in section 46.973(1)(b))].[6]

4. The failure to provide seriously endangered the physical, mental, or emotional health of the child.

To "seriously endanger" means to create a serious risk of harm or injury.[7]

5. The failure to provide was negligent.

"Negligent" means acting, or failing to act, in such a way that a reasonable person would know or should know seriously endangers the physical, mental, or emotional health of a child.[8]

6. [(Name of child)

(suffered death as a consequence).[9]

(suffered great bodily harm as a consequence).[10]

(became a victim of a child sex offense as a consequence).[11]

(suffered emotional damage as a consequence).[12]

(suffered bodily harm as a consequence).[13]

(had not attained the age of 6 years and the natural and probable consequences of the neglect would be identify a harm specified in § 948.21(3)(a), (b), (c) or (d) although the harm did not actually occur).[14]

(had a physical, cognitive, or developmental disability that was known or should have been known by the defendant and the natural and probable consequences of the neglect would be identify a harm specified in § 948.21(3)(a), (b), (c) or (d) although the harm did not actually occur).[15]]

[The natural and probable consequences of the neglect would be identify a harm specified in § 948.21(3)(a), (b), (c) or (d) although the harm did not actually occur.[16]]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2150 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1995, 2001, and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018.

This is a complete rewrite of the former instruction to reflect the repeal and recreation of § 948.21 by 2017 Wisconsin Act 283 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The new statute provides penalties for eight types of violations – seven felonies and one misdemeanor. The instruction attempts to deal with them by including all options in element 6. Some of the penalties bear a lesser included offense-like relationship to one another. See Wis JI-Criminal 2150A which illustrates how multiple penalties might be addressed.

1. This paragraph is the offense definition provided in § 948.21(2) without change. The Committee recommends striking parts of the definition that do not apply. Element 3 illustrates how the alternatives may be broken down.

2. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

3. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authority relating to "person responsible for the welfare of a child."

4. The Committee recommends submitting only the alternatives supported by the evidence; more than one alternative may be submitted.

5. Section § 948.21(1)(c) defines "necessary care" as follows: "care that is vital to the needs of a child's physical, emotional, or mental health based on all of the facts and circumstances bearing on the child's need for care, including the child's age; the child's physical, mental, or emotional condition; and any special needs of the child."

6. Reference to other uniform instructions may be helpful in further defining this element. Distribution of a controlled substance is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6020 Delivery Of A Controlled Substance; see Wis JI-Criminal 6020A for delivery of a controlled substance analog. Manufacture of a controlled substance is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6021 Manufacture Of A Controlled Substance. Section 46.973(1)(b) defines "drug abuse" as "the use of a drug in such a manner as to endanger the public health, safety or welfare."

7. The definition of "seriously endanger" is adapted from Wis JI-Children 250.

8. This is based on the definition of "negligently" provided in § 948.21(1)(d). The definition of "criminal negligence" in § 939.25, which ordinarily applies when the word "negligently" is used in the Criminal Code, does not apply here. See § 939.25(3).

9. This makes the offense a Class D felony; see § 948.21(3)(a).

10. This makes the offense a Class F felony; see § 948.21(3)(b)1.

11. This makes the offense a Class F felony; see § 948.21(3)(b)2. "Child sex offenses" are specified in § 948.21(1)(a): an offense under s. 948.02, 948.025, 948.05, 948.051, 948.055, 948.06, 948.07, 948.08, 948.10, 948.11, or 948.12. Refer to the uniform instructions for the elements and definitions applicable to any "child sex offense" that is alleged.

2150A NEGLECTING A CHILD: DEATH, GREAT BODILY HARM, OR BODILY HARM AS A CONSEQUENCE — § 948.21(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Neglecting a child, as defined in Section 948.21(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is committed by any person who is responsible for a child's welfare who, through his or her action or failure to take action, for reasons other than poverty, negligently fails to provide any of the following, so as to seriously endanger the physical, mental, or emotional health of the child: necessary care, necessary food, necessary clothing, necessary medical care, necessary shelter, education in compliance with section 118.15, protection from exposure to the distribution or manufacture of controlled substances, as defined in section 961.01 (4), or controlled substance analogs, as defined in section 961.01 (4m), or to drug abuse, as defined in section 46.973 (1) (b).[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

   [Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.][2]

2. The defendant was a person responsible for the welfare of (name of child).

A "person responsible for the welfare of a child" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3).[3]

3. The defendant, through action or failure to take action, and for reasons other than poverty, failed to provide[4]

[necessary (care)[5] (food) (clothing) (medical care) (shelter).]

[education in compliance with section 118.15.]

[protection from exposure to (the distribution or manufacture of controlled substances, as defined in section 961.01(4), or controlled substance analogs, as defined in section 961.01(4m)) (or) (drug abuse, as defined in section 46.973 (1) (b))].[6]

4. The failure to provide seriously endangered the physical, mental, or emotional health of the child.

To "seriously endanger" means to create a serious risk of harm or injury.[7]

5. The failure to provide was negligent.

"Negligent" means acting, or failing to act, in such a way that a reasonable person would know or should know seriously endangers the physical, mental, or emotional health of a child.[8]

6. (Name of child)

(suffered death as a consequence).[9]

(suffered great bodily harm as a consequence).[10]

(suffered bodily harm as a consequence).[11]

This requires that the defendant's action or failure to take action caused (the death of) (great bodily harm to) (bodily harm to) (name of child).

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm).[12]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.)[13]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][14]

IF MORE THAN ONE PENALTY-DETERMINING FACT IS SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE, ADD ONE OR BOTH OF THE FOLLOWING AS APPROPRIATE.[15]

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's action or failure to take action caused the death of (name of child), you should consider whether the defendant's action or failure to take action caused great bodily harm to (name of child).

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant's action or failure to take action caused great bodily harm to (name of child), you should consider whether the defendant's action or failure to take action caused bodily harm to (name of child).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2150A was approved by the Committee in December 2018.

This is a sample instruction for what may be a common situation under § 948.21 – where more than one penalty option may be submitted. It is based on JI 2150, which is a complete rewrite of the former instruction to reflect the repeal and recreation of § 948.21 by 2017 Wisconsin Act 283 [effective date: April 18, 2018].

The recreated statute provides penalties for eight types of violations – seven felonies and one misdemeanor. This instruction attempts to deal with three situations: where death, great bodily harm, or bodily harm is caused. Because the penalties for these violations bear a lesser included offense-like relationship to one another, the instruction may be used for submitting lesser penalties if the evidence supports it. Transitional text is provided in element 6.

1. This paragraph is the offense definition provided in § 948.21(20 without change. The Committee recommends striking parts of the definition that do not apply. Element 3 illustrates how the alternatives may be broken down.

2. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

3. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authority relating to "person responsible for the welfare of a child."

4. The Committee recommends submitting only the alternatives supported by the evidence; more than one alternative may be submitted.

5. Section § 948.21(1)(c) defines "necessary care" as follows: "care that is vital to the needs of a child's physical, emotional, or mental health based on all of the facts and circumstances bearing on the child's need for care, including the child's age; the child's physical, mental, or emotional condition; and any special needs of the child."

6. Reference to other uniform instructions may be helpful in further defining this element. Distribution of a controlled substance is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6020 Delivery Of A Controlled Substance; see Wis JI-Criminal 6020A for delivery of a controlled substance analog. Manufacture of a controlled substance is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6021 Manufacture Of A Controlled Substance. Section 46.973(1)(b) defines "drug abuse" as "the use of a drug in such a manner as to endanger the public health, safety or welfare."

7. The definition of "seriously endanger" is adapted from Wis JI-Children 250.

8. This is based on the definition of "negligently" provided in § 948.21(1)(d). The definition of "criminal negligence" in § 939.25, which ordinarily applies when the word "negligently" is used in the Criminal Code, does not apply here. See § 939.25(3).

9. This makes the offense a Class D felony; see § 948.21(3)(a).

10. This makes the offense a Class F felony; see § 948.21(3)(b)1.

11. This makes the offense a Class H felony; see § 948.21(3)(d).

12. The Committee has concluded that the statutory phrase "suffered . . . as a consequence" is equivalent to requiring "cause" as used in most criminal statutes. Wisconsin courts have reached this conclusion with statutes that use the phrases "as a result" or "results in." See State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), and State v. Wille, 2007 WI App 27, 2999 Wis.2d 531, 798 N.W.2d 343.

The Committee has also concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of (death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm). The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

13. This is the definition of "great bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(14) should apply. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete discussion of issues relating to "great bodily harm."

14. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

15. The penalties for violations of § 948.21 causing death, great bodily harm, or bodily harm bear a lesser included offense-like relationship to one another and the Committee concluded that more than one penalty-determining fact could be submitted if the regular lesser included offense evidentiary test is satisfied. The question is, whether the evidence is such that a reasonable jury could find that the fact supporting the higher penalty is not proved beyond a reasonable doubt but could find that the fact supporting the lesser penalty is.

2151 CHRONIC NEGLECT OF A CHILD; REPEATED ACTS OF NEGLECT — § 948.215

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.215 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who commits three or more violations of Section 948.21(2) within a specified period of time involving the same child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed three or more violations of Section 948.21(2) involving the same child.

   Section 948.21(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person who is responsible for a child's welfare who, through his or her action or failure to take action, for reasons other than poverty, negligently fails to provide any of the following, so as to seriously endanger the physical, mental, or emotional health of the child: necessary care, necessary food, necessary clothing, necessary medical care, necessary shelter, education in compliance with section 118.15, protection from exposure to the distribution or manufacture of controlled substances, as defined in section 961.01(4), or controlled substance analogs, as defined in section 961.01(4m), or to drug abuse, as defined in section 46.973(1)(b).[1]

SPECIFY THE ELEMENTS OF THREE VIOLATIONS OF § 948.21(2) – SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2150. ADD DEFINITIONS AS NECESSARY.

2. At least three violations of Section 948.21(2) involving the same child took place within a specified period of time. The specified period of time is from (beginning date of specified period) through (ending date of specified period).[2]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF MORE THAN THREE ACTS HAVE BEEN ALLEGED.

[More Than Three Acts Alleged]

[Before you may find the defendant guilty you must unanimously agree that at least three violations of Section 948.21 involving the same child occurred between (beginning date of specified period) and (ending date of specified period), but you need not agree on which acts constitute the required three.][3]

3. [(Name of child)

(suffered death as a consequence).[4]

(suffered great bodily harm as a consequence).[5]

(became a victim of a child sex offense as a consequence).[6]

(suffered emotional damage as a consequence).[7]

(suffered bodily harm as a consequence).][8]

[The natural and probable consequences of the neglect would be ((identify a harm specified in § 948.215(2)(a), (b), (c), or (d))) although the harm did not actually occur).[9]]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2151 was approved by the Committee in December 2018.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.215, created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 283 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The statute provides penalties for six types of violations – ranging from Class B to Class H felonies. The instruction attempts to deal with them by including all options in element 3.

In requiring repeated criminal acts as the basis for a violation, this offense is similar to those defined in § 948.025, Repeated acts of sexual assault of a child, and § 948.03(5), Repeated acts of physical abuse of a child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2107 and 2114A, respectively.

1. This paragraph is the offense definition provided in § 948.21(2) without change. The Committee recommends striking parts of the definition that do not apply. Element 3 of Wis JI-Criminal 2150 illustrates how the alternatives may be broken down.

2. Here identify the beginning and ending dates of the period specified by the prosecution. For example: "The specified period of time is from June 1, 2018 through September 16, 2018." NOTE: "Specified period of time" also appears in § 948.025, Repeated Acts Of Sexual Assault Of A Child. See note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 2107.

3. This statement is based on § 948.215(3).

4. This makes the offense a Class B felony; see § 948.215(2)(a).

5. This makes the offense a Class D felony; see § 948.215(2)(b)1.

6. This makes the offense a Class D felony; see § 948.215(2)(b)2. "Child sex offenses" are specified in § 948.21(1)(a): an offense under s. 948.02, 948.025, 948.05, 948.051, 948.055, 948.06, 948.07, 948.08, 948.10, 948.11, or 948.12. Refer to the uniform instructions for the elements and definitions applicable to any "child sex offense" that is alleged.

7. This makes the offense a Class F felony; see § 948.215(2)(c). § 948.21(1)(b) provides: "'Emotional damage' has the meaning given in § 48.02(5j)."

8. This makes the offense a Class F felony; see § 948.215(2)(d).

9. This makes the offense a Class H felony; see § 948.215(2)(e).

2152 FAILURE TO SUPPORT — § 948.22[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to support, as defined in § 948.22 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally fails for 120 or more consecutive days[2] to provide spousal or child support[3] which the person knows or reasonably should know the person is legally obligated to provide.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally failed to provide (spousal) (child) support.[4]

"Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to fail to pay support or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[5]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT FAILED TO PAY SUPPORT REQUIRED UNDER A COURT ORDER,[6] ADD THE FOLLOWING:[7]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant failed to pay support payments required by a court order.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known that (he) (she) was required to pay support under a court order and failed to pay support payments as required, you may find that the failure to provide support was intentional, but you are not required to do so. You must not find that the failure to support was intentional unless you are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[It is not a defense that support was provided wholly or partially by any other person.][8]

2. The failure to provide support continued for 120 or more consecutive days.[9]
3. The defendant (knew) (reasonably should have known) that (he) (she) was legally obligated to provide the (spousal) (child) support.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2152 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1993 and 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2005 and involved updating footnotes 4 and 6.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.22 that do not involve evidence of the affirmative defense provided by sub. (6). For offenses involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2152A.

". . . [U]nder § 948.22, Stats., it does not matter that the support owed is an arrearage, when that arrearage accrued or what the current age of the child is. The crime is the intentional failure to pay child support during a 120-day consecutive-day period. Child support is 'an amount which a person is ordered to pay for the support of a child,' and its character is not changed by the passage of time or the name it is given. The crime is complete after each 120-day period during which the defendant intentionally fails to pay child support and continues until he or she no longer intentionally fails to pay child support. The statute of limitations begins to run from the end of each 120-day period." State v. Monarch, 230 Wis.2d 542, 551, 602 N.W.2d 179 (Ct. App. 1999).

". . . § 948.22, Stats., criminalizes the failure to pay arrearages even after the child for whom support is ordered attains majority. . . . [I]f a defendant's tax refunds are intercepted and are allocated to a given period, the defendant cannot be said to have failed to provide support for that period." State v. Lenz, 230 Wis.2d 529, 541, 602 N.W.2d 172 (Ct. App. 1999).

1. Failure to support under § 948.22 is a Class E felony if the failure continues for 120 or more consecutive days. (§ 948.22(2).) If the failure is for less than 120 consecutive days, the offense is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. (§ 948.22(3).) Wis JI-Criminal 2152 is drafted for the felony offense. It can be modified for a misdemeanor charge simply by dropping the phrase "for 120 or more consecutive days" wherever it appears and reducing the elements from three to two.

Subsection 948.22(2) has been interpreted to permit "a prosecutor to charge one count of felony nonsupport for each 120-day term a person fails to pay child support, even if that person failed to pay over one continuous period." State v. Grayson, 172 Wis.2d 156, 158 493 N.W.2d 23 (1992). Thus, "if a person fails to pay child support for 360 consecutive days, a prosecutor could charge him with three counts of felony nonsupport." Ibid., at note 1.

2. If the misdemeanor offense is charged, delete the phrase "for 120 or more consecutive days" from this paragraph and in the other places it appears. See discussion in note 1.

3. 1985 Wisconsin Act 56 added "grandchild support" to the statute. "'Grandchild support' means an amount which a person is legally obligated to provide under s. 49.90(1)(a)2 and (11)." Subsec. 948.22(1)(b). In a case involving a grandparent's failure to support, the suggested instruction needs to be modified by substituting "grandchild support" throughout the instruction.

4. The statute uses the terms "spousal" or "child" support and defines them by reference to other statutes using the terms. See subsecs. (1)(a) and (c) of § 948.22. For the purposes of instructing the jury, the Committee concluded that definition of "support" would rarely be necessary in the usual case. Should the facts present an issue, the statutes referenced in subs. (1)(a) and (c) may offer some guidance. But see State v. Smith, 2005 WI 104, 283 Wis.2d 57, 699 N.W.2d 508, quoted in note 6, below. Also see note 3, regarding the revision of the statute to include "grandchild support."

5. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23. The "aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause that result" alternative was added by the 1987 revision of the homicide statutes. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of the definition of "intentionally." The unusual composition of § 948.22 makes unclear the mental state that is required. With offenses involving the failure to do something, "intentionally" is usually interpreted to require a showing that the defendant be able to do what is required: a failure to do X cannot be "intentionally" done unless the person knew he was supposed to do X and had the ability to do it.

Two provisions of § 948.22 are inconsistent with this definition of "intentionally." Subsec. (4) provides that failure to pay the amount required by court order or an amount equal to that derived from the AFDC standards (§ 49.19(11)(a)1) is "prima facie" evidence of intentional failure to provide support. The Committee concluded that the "prima facie" case should be implemented as described in note 6, below.

The second problematical subsection is subsec. (6) which provides that ". . . affirmative defenses include but are not limited to inability to provide child or spousal support." As explained above, the usual definition of "intentionally" requires that there be ability to do that which is required. For a case involving the "affirmative defense," use Wis JI-Criminal 2152A.

6. In State v. Smith, 2005 WI 104, ¶34, 283 Wis.2d 57, 699 N.W.2d 508, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "whether a court of competent jurisdiction issued the child support underlying a prosecution for the crime of failure to pay child support is not an element of that crime."

7. Subsection (4) of § 948.22 recognizes two facts as "prima facie evidence" of intentional failure to provide support: failure to make payments required by court order, when the person knows or reasonably should have known that he or she is required to pay support under an order; or, in a situation where there is no court order, failure to pay an amount equal to the AFDC level set forth in § 49.19(11)(a)1, when the person knows or reasonably should have known that he or she has a dependent. The "knows or reasonably should have known" requirements were added to the statute by 1989 Wisconsin Act 212. (The instruction suggests an addition for a case involving a court order. For a case involving the AFDC formula, a similar addition would be necessary.)

The suggested paragraphs attempt to instruct on the effect of a prima facie case in the way required by § 903.03: if the jury finds that the basic fact (failure to pay as required by a court order) exists, it may find that the presumed fact (intentional failure to provide support) exists, but it is not required to do so. Before finding the defendant guilty, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence, that the failure to support was intentional. See Wis JI-Criminal 225.

An instruction in these terms was approved in State v. Schleusner, 154 Wis.2d 821, 825, 454 N.W.2d 51 (Ct. App. 1990).

8. See § 948.22(5). A comparable provision in the previous version of this statute, § 940.27(6), was discussed in State v. Schleusner, note 7, supra.

Support payments made as a result of the state's interception of tax refunds count as support payments. See State v. Lenz, cited in the Comment preceding note 1, supra.

9. The basic offense is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to that of a Class E felony if a person fails to provide support "for 120 or more consecutive days." In State v. Duprey, 149 Wis.2d 655, 439 N.W.2d 837 (Ct. App. 1989), the court of appeals interpreted this part of the statute as it applies to an order requiring payment of 25% of income as child support. The court held that the state is not required to prove that the defendant in fact had income for 120 consecutive days where the amount of the support obligation is determined on a percentage basis.

2152A FAILURE TO SUPPORT: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE — § 948.22[1]

[USE THIS INSTRUCTION IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE UNDER § 948.22(6).][2]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to support, as defined in § 948.22 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally fails for 120 or more consecutive days[3] to provide spousal or child support[4] which the person knows or reasonably should know the person is legally obligated to provide.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally failed to provide (spousal) (child) support.[5]

"Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to fail to pay support or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[6]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT FAILED TO PAY SUPPORT REQUIRED UNDER A COURT ORDER, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[7]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant failed to pay support payments required by a court order.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known that he was required to pay support under a court order and failed to pay support payments as required, you may find that the failure to provide support was intentional, but you are not required to do so. You must not find that the failure to support was intentional unless you are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[It is not a defense that support was provided wholly or partially by any other person.][8]

2. The failure to provide support continued for 120 or more consecutive days.[9]

3. The defendant (knew) (reasonably should have known) that (he) (she) was legally obligated to provide the (spousal) (child) support.

Consider Whether the Defense is Proved

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant was unable to provide support. The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that (he) (she) was unable to provide support.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[A person may not demonstrate inability to provide support if the person is employable but, without reasonable excuse, either fails to diligently seek employment, terminates employment, or reduces his earnings or assets.][10]

Evidence has greater weight when it has more convincing power than the evidence opposed to it. Credible evidence is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.[11]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[12]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2152A was approved by the Committee in May 2000.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.22 involving evidence of the affirmative defense provided by sub. (6). For offenses not involving the affirmative defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2152.

1. Failure to support under § 948.22 is a Class E felony if the failure continues for 120 or more consecutive days. (§ 948.22(2).) If the failure is for less than 120 consecutive days, the offense is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. (§ 948.22(3).) Wis JI-Criminal 2152 is drafted for the felony offense. It can be modified for a misdemeanor charge simply by dropping the phrase "for 120 or more consecutive days" wherever it appears and reducing the elements from three to two.

Subsection 948.22(2) has been interpreted to permit "a prosecutor to charge one count of felony nonsupport for each 120-day term a person fails to pay child support, even if that person failed to pay over one continuous period." State v. Grayson, 172 Wis.2d 156, 158 493 N.W.2d 23 (1992). Thus, "if a person fails to pay child support for 360 consecutive days, a prosecutor could charge him with three counts of felony nonsupport." Ibid., at footnote 1.

2. Subsection (6) of § 948.22 provides as follows:

> 948.22(6) Under this section, affirmative defenses include but are not limited to inability to provide child, grandchild or spousal support. A person may not demonstrate inability to provide child, grandchild or spousal support if the person is employable but, without reasonable excuse, either fails to diligently seek employment, terminates employment or reduces his or her earnings or assets. A person who raises an affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

The Committee's decision on how to implement this provision can best be explained by a brief review of affirmative defenses generally, followed by an analysis of the nonsupport statute.

Consideration of affirmative defenses, presumptions (their close relatives), and burdens of production and persuasion can be complicated. But the general rule can be stated quite simply: The legislature has the power to define the conduct that is subject to criminal penalty and in doing so may specify whatever facts it wishes as those necessary to constitute the crime. The burden of persuasion is always on the state to prove these facts beyond a reasonable doubt. If the legislature wishes to identify defenses which are not inconsistent with the facts necessary to constitute the crime, it may do so. On such defenses, the state may impose the burden of persuasion on the defendant.

These statements are the distillation of several decisions of the United States Supreme Court. Specifically, In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 (1970), is the source of the requirement that the burden is on the prosecution to prove all facts necessary to constitute the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. In Mullaney v. Wilbur, 421 U.S. 684 (1975), the Court elaborated on Winship, holding that it is a denial of due process to relieve the state of its burden to prove such facts, or shift the burden to the defendant, by presumptions or similar evidentiary devices.

The Winship/Mullaney principles were refined by a later decision in Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977), which held that those principles extended only to the elements included in the definition of the offense. The state is not required to prove the absence of an affirmative defense, so long as the defense is not inconsistent with the statutory elements of the crime. And it is up to the legislature to determine which facts will be elements and which will be defenses. (The court noted that there are some limits beyond which the legislature may not go but did not identify what those limits are.)

The Patterson decision and its limits on the application of Mullaney and Winship have been followed in subsequent cases. See McMillan v. Pennsylvania, 477 U.S. 79 (1986) – possession of a firearm is a sentencing factor, not an element, and Martin v. Ohio, 480 U.S. 228 (1987) – a defendant charged with murder can be required to prove the affirmative defense of self-defense because it is not inconsistent with any of the elements of the crime.

[Note the importance of the change from the broad concept – facts necessary to constitute the crime – used in Winship and, to a lesser degree, in Mullaney to the narrower concept – statutory elements – adopted in Patterson.]

It is now well established that the constitutional principles set forth in Mullaney and Patterson allow the state legislatures to recognize affirmative defenses and to require the defendant to carry the burden of persuasion on such defenses. Wisconsin has generally chosen to stay with a Mullaney type of procedure for most defenses: when there is evidence of a defense in the case, the state must prove its absence to justify a finding of guilt. To put it in Winship terms, the absence of the defense becomes a fact necessary to constitute the crime (though it is not, in Patterson terms, a statutory element). There are exceptions to this approach, however, the most notable being the affirmative defense recognized in § 940.09, Homicide by Intoxicated Use of Vehicle or Firearm. The constitutionality of this affirmative defense has been upheld. State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 1188.

Subsection 948.22(2) makes it a crime to "intentionally" fail to provide support. Subsection 948.22(6) recognizes an affirmative defense – inability to provide support – and provides that the defendant has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence. This drafting style creates a question – is the defense of inability to provide support something that can coexist with the element of intentional failure to pay? If it can, making it an affirmative defense and imposing the burden on the defendant is all right under Patterson. If it cannot, doing so violates the principle of Mullaney.

The former nonsupport statute, § 940.27 (1985-86 Wis. Stats.) also recognized inability to provide support as an affirmative defense but did not explicitly place the burden of persuasion on the defendant. [The suggested uniform jury instruction treated it as imposing only a burden of production on the defendant – once there was evidence of inability to pay support, the state had to prove the defendant did have the ability to pay. See Wis JI-Criminal 1264 8 1986.] The former statute was reviewed in State v. Duprey, 149 Wis.2d 655, 439 N.W.2d 837 (Ct. App. 1989). The court assumed that the defendant did have the burden of persuasion and upheld the constitutionality of the statutory scheme. The court held that because inability to pay does not negate any element of the crime, requiring the defendant to prove it does not unconstitutionally shift any burden to him.

Statutes like new § 948.22 have been reviewed by the U.S. Supreme Court and the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit. In Hicks v. Feiock, 108 S.Ct. 1423 (1988), the U.S. Supreme Court reviewed a California statute that treated failure to pay support as a contempt offense. It was like Wisconsin's statute in that it required intentional failure to pay support but made inability to pay an affirmative defense. The issue before the Court was whether the statute imposed a civil or a criminal penalty. A standard for resolving that question was set forth, and the case was remanded for application of that standard. Not directly addressed was the question whether, if the statute did impose a criminal penalty, it violated due process to require the defendant to prove inability to pay where the intentional failure to pay was an affirmative defense. The state court held that ability to comply was an element of the crime, not an affirmative defense, and that the attempt to make the defendant prove the defense was a due process violation. The Supreme Court concluded it was bound by the state court's determination of this issue and did not analyze it.

The Indiana nonsupport statute was reviewed by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit in Davis v. Barber, 853 F.2d 1418 (7th Cir. 1988). Section 35-46-1-5 of the Indiana Code defines criminal nonsupport as "knowingly or intentionally fails to provide support" and provides that "it is a defense that the accused person was unable to provide support." The Seventh Circuit noted that Hicks set the standard to be used in analyzing the statutory scheme: one looks to state law to determine what the elements of the crime are. The court concluded that under Indiana law, ability to pay is not an element. That being the case, due process principles do not prevent making inability to pay an affirmative defense. Further, the court specifically rejected several of the defendant's arguments. First, inability to pay is not the negative side of the requirement that the failure to pay be "intentional" or "knowing." As Indiana law defines those terms, either "conscious objective" or "awareness of a high probability" is sufficient. Inability to pay is not inconsistent with awareness of a high probability that he is failing to provide support. (NOTE: In this respect, the recent change in the definition of "intentionally" under Wisconsin law may save the Wisconsin nonsupport statute – it now includes "mental purpose" and "aware(ness) that the conduct is practically certain to cause the result.") Second, the court rejected the defendant's argument that general principles of criminal liability require that acts be voluntary. Assuming this general rule applies to omissions, the seventh circuit concludes that the general rule is not applicable where a specific statute defines the offense in a contradictory manner.

If one can say that intentional failure to provide support does not require ability to pay, making inability to pay an affirmative defense with the burden of persuasion on the defendant does not violate the due process clause of the U.S. Constitution. Given the decisions in Duprey and in Davis v. Barber, the Committee concluded that the Wisconsin statute is likely to be interpreted as a constitutional definition of the crime of failure to support.

3. If the misdemeanor offense is charged, delete the phrase "for 120 or more consecutive days" from this paragraph and in the other places it appears. See discussion in note 1, supra.

4. 1985 Wisconsin Act 56 added "grandchild support" to the statute. "'Grandchild support' means an amount which a person is legally obligated to provide under s. 49.90(1)(a)2 and (11)." Subsec. 948.22(1)(b). In a case involving a grandparent's failure to support, the suggested instruction needs to be modified by substituting "grandchild support" throughout the instruction.

5. The statute uses the terms "spousal" or "child" support and defines them by reference to other statutes using the terms. See subsecs. (1)(a) and (c) of § 948.22. For the purposes of instructing the jury, the Committee concluded that definition of "support" would rarely be necessary in the usual case. Should the facts present an issue, the statutes referenced in subs. (1)(a) and (c) may offer some guidance. See note 3, supra, regarding the revision of the statute to include "grandchild support."

6. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23. The "aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause that result" alternative was added by the 1987 revision of the homicide statutes. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of the definition of "intentionally." The unusual composition of § 948.22 makes unclear the mental state that is required. With offenses involving the failure to do something, "intentionally" is usually interpreted to require a showing that the defendant be able to do what is required: a failure to do X cannot be "intentionally" done unless the person knew he was supposed to do X and had the ability to do it.

Two provisions of § 948.22 are inconsistent with this definition of "intentionally." Subsec. (4) provides that failure to pay the amount required by court order or an amount equal to that derived from the AFDC standards (§ 49.19(11)(a)1) is "prima facie" evidence of intentional failure to provide support. The Committee concluded that the "prima facie" case should be implemented as described in note 7, below.

The second problematical subsection is subsec. (6) which provides that ". . . affirmative defenses include but are not limited to inability to provide child or spousal support." As explained above, the usual definition of "intentionally" requires that there be ability to that which is required.

7. Subsection (4) of § 948.22 recognizes two facts as "prima facie evidence" of intentional failure to provide support: failure to make payments required by court order, when the person knows or reasonably should have known that he or she is required to pay support under an order; or, in a situation where there is no court order, failure to pay an amount equal to the AFDC level set forth in § 49.19(11)(a)1, when the person knows or reasonably should have known that he or she has a dependent. The "knows or reasonably should have known" requirements were added to the statute by 1989 Wisconsin Act 212. (The instruction suggests an addition for a case involving a court order. For a case involving the AFDC formula, a similar addition would be necessary.)

The suggested paragraphs attempt to instruct on the effect of a prima facie case in the way required by § 903.03: if the jury finds that the basic fact (failure to pay as required by a court order) exists, it may find that the presumed fact (intentional failure to provide support) exists, but it is not required to do so. Before finding the defendant guilty, the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt, from all the evidence, that the failure to support was intentional. See Wis JI-Criminal 225.

An instruction in these terms was approved in State v. Schleusner, 154 Wis.2d 821, 825, 454 N.W.2d 51 (Ct. App. 1990).

8. See § 948.22(5). A comparable provision in the previous version of this statute, § 940.27(6), 1985-86 Wis. Stats. was discussed in State v. Schleusner, note 6, supra.

Support payments made as a result of the state's interception of tax refunds count as support payments. See State v. Lenz, cited in the Comment preceding note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 2152.

9. The basic offense is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to that of a Class E felony if a person fails to provide support "for 120 or more consecutive days." In State v. Duprey, 149 Wis.2d 655, 439 N.W.2d 837 (Ct. App. 1989), the court of appeals interpreted this part of the statute as it applies to an order requiring payment of 25% of income as child support. The court held that the state is not required to prove that the defendant in fact had income for 120 consecutive days where the amount of the support obligation is determined on a percentage basis.

10. This statement is taken directly from subsec. (6) of § 948.22.

A defendant's "lack of financial resources alone is insufficient to demonstrate inability to pay. If a defendant has the capacity to become gainfully employed and realize earnings it is no valid defense to felony nonsupport." State v. Clutter, 230 Wis.2d 472, 479, 602 N.W.2d 324 (Ct. App. 1999).

Evidence of "incarceration is relevant to a defense of inability because, depending on the circumstances of incarceration, incarceration may prevent a person from being employed and therefore may prevent a person from having earnings with which to pay child support. Whether a person commits a crime in order to avoid paying child support is a question of fact for the jury." State v. Stutesman, 221 Wis.2d 178, 184, 585 N.W.2d 181 (Ct. App. 1998).

11. This is a slight revision of the standard description of the civil burden of proof, intended to improve its understandability. No change in meaning is intended.

12. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

(1) not guilty because the elements are not proven [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

(2) not guilty even though the elements are proven, because the defense has been established.

2154 CONCEALING THE DEATH OF CHILD — § 948.23(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Concealing the death of a child, as defined in § 948.23(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who conceals the corpse of any issue of a woman's body with intent to prevent a determination of whether it was born dead or alive.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant concealed the corpse of any issue of a woman's body.
2. The defendant concealed the corpse with intent to prevent a determination of whether it was born dead or alive.

"With intent to" means that the defendant had the purpose to prevent a determination of whether the corpse was born dead or alive or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[1]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2154 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2012; the comment was updated to reflect 2011 Wisconsin Act 268.

Section 948.23 was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 268 [effective date: April 24, 2012]. The offense addressed by this instruction is now found in § 948.23(1)(a). The statute was expanded to cover three new types of conduct: failing to report the death of a child – § 948.23(1)(b); hiding or burying the corpse of a child without authorization – § 948.23(2); and, failure by a parent or guardian to report a child as missing – § 948.23(3). Uniform instructions have not been drafted for these offenses.

Section 948.23 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1810 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 946.63, 1985-6 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332. The revision made one substantive change in what is now sub. (1)(a): it is no longer limited to a woman who conceals the corpse of any issue of her own body. The statute now applies to any person who conceals the corpse of any issue of any woman's body.

1. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version had "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that charged from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

2160 ABDUCTION OF ANOTHER'S CHILD: TAKING FROM HOME OR CUSTODY — § 948.30(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abduction of another's child, as defined in § 948.30(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who for any unlawful purpose takes any child who is not his or her own by birth or adoption [from the child's home] [from the custody of the child's (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant took (name of victim) from [(his) (her) home)] [the custody of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

   [A child is in custody when the child is in the actual physical custody of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian), or, if not in the actual physical custody of a (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian), when the (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian) continues to have control of the child.][1]

2. At the time of the alleged taking, (name of victim) was a child under the age of 18 years who was not the defendant's child by birth or adoption.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not material[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. The defendant took the child for an unlawful purpose.

The defendant need not know that (his) (her) purpose was unlawful; it is sufficient if, in fact, the purpose was an unlawful one.[4]

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to commit the crime of (name of crime). (Name of crime) is committed by one who

LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE ALLEGED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION AS NECESSARY.[5]

Deciding About Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose. Purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2160 was originally published in 1989 and was revised in 2010. The 2010 revision involved adoption of a new format and changes in how the first and third elements are defined. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.30(1)(a), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

Section 948.30 replaced former § 940.32 with a two-level offense applying only to the taking or detaining of the child of another. The more serious offense requires use of threat or force. See Wis JI-Criminal 2162 and 2163. The limitation to the child of another clears up a potential problem under the old statute, which could have been used against a parent. One of the offenses under the former statute – enticing from the home or custody – was not reenacted.

1. Section 948.30(3) provides:

(3) For purposes of subs. (1)(a) and (2)(a), a child is in the custody of his or her parent, guardian or legal custodian if:

(a) The child is in the actual physical custody of the parent, guardian or legal custodian; or
(b) The child is not in the actual physical custody of his or her parent, guardian or legal custodian, but the parent, guardian or legal custodian continues to have control of the child.

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. While the statute does not specifically refer to an intent on the part of the defendant, it does require an unlawful purpose for the act. This is the mental element of the crime and is limited to the requirement that there be an unlawful purpose for the taking.

5. The instruction is drafted for a case where the alleged "unlawful purpose" is a crime. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

If an unlawful purpose is alleged that is not a crime, the instruction would need to be changed, using a statement like the following:

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to (identify the alleged unlawful purpose).

2161 ABDUCTION OF ANOTHER'S CHILD: DETAINING AWAY FROM HOME — § 948.30(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abduction of another's child, as defined in § 948.30(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who for any unlawful purpose detains any child who is not his or her own by birth or adoption and who is away [from the child's home] [from the custody of the child's (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant detained (name of victim) who was away [from (his) (her) home] [from the actual physical custody[1] of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

2. At the time of the alleged detaining, (name of victim) was a child under the age of 18 years who was not the defendant's child by birth or adoption.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not material[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.

3. The defendant detained the child for an unlawful purpose.

The defendant need not know that (his) (her) purpose was unlawful; it is sufficient if, in fact, the purpose was an unlawful one.[3]

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to commit the crime of (name of crime). (Name of crime) is committed by one who

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.30(1)(b), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2160 for an explanation of how the offenses relates to "abduction" under former § 940.32.

1. In place of a definition of "custody," the instruction refers to detaining a child who is away from the "actual physical custody" of the parent, guardian, or custodian. The broader definition of "custody" provided in § 948.30(3) applies only "for purposes of subs. (1)(a) and (2)(a)."

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. While the statute does not specifically refer to an intent on the part of the defendant, it does require an unlawful purpose for the act. This is the mental element of the crime and is limited to the requirement that there be an unlawful purpose for the taking.

4. The instruction is drafted for a case where the alleged "unlawful purpose" is a crime. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. 2162 ABDUCTION OF ANOTHER'S CHILD: TAKING BY FORCE OR THREAT OF FORCE — § 948.30(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abduction of another's child, as defined in § 948.30(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who for any unlawful purpose, and by force or threat of imminent force, takes any child who is not his or her own by birth or adoption [from the child's home] [from the custody of the child's (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant took (name of victim) from [(his) (her) home] [the custody of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

   [A child is in custody when the child is in the actual physical custody of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian), or, if not in the actual physical custody of a (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian), when the (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian) continues to have control of the child.][1]

2. At the time of the alleged taking, (name of victim) was a child under the age of 18 years who was not the defendant's child by birth or adoption.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not material[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. The defendant took the child by force or threat of imminent force.

The term "imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[4]

4. The defendant took (name of victim) for an unlawful purpose.

The defendant need not know that (his) (her) purpose is unlawful; it is sufficient if, in fact, the purpose is an unlawful one.[5]

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to commit the crime of (name of crime). (Name of crime) is committed by one who

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2162 was originally published in 1989 and was revised in 2010. The 2010 revision involved adoption of a new format and changes in how the first and fourth elements are defined. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.30(2)(a), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989.

Section 948.30 replaces former § 940.32 with a two-level offense applying only to the taking or detaining of the child of another. The more serious offense requires use of threat of force. The limitation to the child of another clears up a potential problem under the old statute, which could have been used against a parent. One of the offenses under the former statute – enticing from the home or custody – is not reenacted. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1285 which applied to violations of § 940.32(1) 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

1. Section 948.30(3) provides:

> (3) For purposes of subs. (1)(a) and (2)(a), a child is in the custody of his or her parent, guardian or legal custodian if:
> (a) The child is in the actual physical custody of the parent, guardian or legal custodian; or
> (b) The child is not in the actual physical custody of his or her parent, guardian or legal custodian, but the parent, guardian or legal custodian continues to have control of the child.

The Note to this section in 1987 Senate Bill 203, enacted as 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, indicates that this was intended to codify the definition of "custody" in Wis JI-Criminal 1285 and 1286 (© 1986). The same definition has been used in this instruction.

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. The definition is the one used in the instruction for armed robbery [Wis JI Criminal 1480]; it was originally adapted from the one used in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th ed. 1951).

5. While the statute does not specifically refer to an intent on the part of the defendant, it does require an unlawful purpose for the act. This is the mental element of the crime and is limited to the requirement that there be an unlawful purpose for the taking.

6. The instruction is drafted for a case where the alleged "unlawful purpose" is a crime. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App.

1991)].

If an unlawful purpose is alleged that is not a crime, the instruction would need to be changed, using a statement like the following:

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to (identify the alleged unlawful purpose).

2163 ABDUCTION OF ANOTHER'S CHILD: DETAINING BY FORCE OR THREAT OF FORCE — § 948.30(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abduction of another's child, as defined in § 948.30(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who for any unlawful purpose, and by force or threat of imminent force, detains any child who is not his or her own by birth or adoption and who is away [from the child's home] [from the custody of the child's (parent) (guardian) (legal custodian)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant detained (name of victim) who was away [from (his) (her) home] [from the actual physical custody[1] of (his) (her) (parent) (guardian) legal custodian)].

2. At the time of the alleged detention, (name of victim) was a child under the age of 18 years who was not the defendant's child by birth or adoption.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not material[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. The defendant detained (name of victim) by force or threat of imminent force.

The term "imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[4]

4. The defendant detained (name of victim) for an unlawful purpose.

The defendant need not know that (his) (her) purpose is unlawful; it is sufficient if, in fact, the purpose is an unlawful one.[5]

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to commit the crime of (name of crime). (Name of crime) is committed by one who

> LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE ALLEGED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION AS NECESSARY.[6]

Deciding About Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose. Purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2163 was originally published in 1989 and was revised in 2010. The 2010 revision involved adoption of a new format and changes in how the first and fourth elements are defined. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.30(2)(b), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. It replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1287 which applied to violations of § 940.32(3) 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2162 for an explanation of how this offense relates to "abduction" under former § 940.32.

1. In place of a definition of "custody," the instruction refers to detaining a child who is away from the "actual physical custody" of the parent, guardian, or custodian. The broader definition of "custody" provided in § 948.30(3) applies only "for purposes of subs. (1)(a) and (2)(a)."

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. The definition is the one used in the instruction for armed robbery [Wis JI-Criminal 1480]; it was originally adapted from the one used in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th ed. 1951).

5. While the statute does not specifically refer to an intent on the part of the defendant, it does require an unlawful purpose for the act. This is the mental element of the crime and is limited to the requirement that there be an unlawful purpose for the taking.

6. The instruction is drafted for a case where the alleged "unlawful purpose" is a crime. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

If an unlawful purpose is alleged that is not a crime, the instruction would need to be changed, using a statement like the following:

The State alleges that the defendant's unlawful purpose was to (identify the alleged unlawful purpose).

2166 INTERFERENCE WITH CUSTODY OF A CHILD — § 948.31(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Interference with the custody of a child, as defined in § 948.31(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally (causes a child to leave) (takes a child away) (withholds a child for more than 12 hours beyond the court-approved period of physical placement or visitation period)[1] from a legal custodian with intent to deprive the custodian of custody rights without the consent of the custodian.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. On (date of alleged offense), (name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.[3]
2. (Name of custodian) had legal custody[4] of (name of child) under a (court order)[5] (judgment) in an action for (specify the type of action).[6]
3. The defendant (caused (name of child) to leave) (took (name of child) away) (withheld (name of child) for more than 12 hours beyond the court-approved period of physical placement or visitation period) from (name of custodian) without the consent of (name of custodian).[7]

"Without consent" means no consent in fact.[8]

The act need not be accompanied by force or violence.

4. The defendant acted intentionally.

"Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause (name of child) to leave) (take (name of child) away) (withhold (name of child) for more than 12 hours beyond the court-approved period of physical placement or visitation period).

"Intentionally" also requires that the defendant knew that (name of custodian) had legal custody of (name of child) under a (court order) (judgment)[9] and knew that (name of custodian) did not give consent to (cause (name of child) to leave) (take (name of child) away) (withhold (name of child)).

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2166 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1994, 1997 and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it revised the Comment and footnotes.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.31(1)(b), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1834 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 946.71(3), 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Section 948.31(1)(b), and this instruction, apply to situations where a person interferes with the rights of a child's legal custodian. The Committee concluded that the statute does not apply to a situation where a legal custodian allegedly interferes with rights that a non-legal custodian may have.

Affirmative defenses are recognized by subsection (4) of § 948.31. The burden of persuasion is placed on the defendant to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence. See the discussion of the affirmative defense provision in Wis JI-Criminal 2169.

Section 948.31(1)(b) begins with the statement: "Except as provided under chs. 48 and 938. . ." A similar statement preceded the definition of substantive offenses in § 946.71, 1985-86 Wis. Stats. That exclusion is believed to be intended to make it clear that legally authorized placements and interventions under chapters 48 and 938 are not to be considered to be violations of § 948.31(1)(b).

1. Section 948.31(1)(b) reads in part as follows: ". . . causes a child to leave, takes a child away or withholds a child for more than 12 hours beyond the court-approved period of physical placement or visitation period. . ." The Committee interprets this statute as prohibiting any causing to leave, any taking away, and the withholding for more than 12 hours beyond the court-approved period. That is, the "for more than 12 hours" applies only to the "withholding" alternative, not to the causing to leave or taking.

The 2009 revision added all the statutory alternatives, in parentheses, to the text of the instruction. This was done to avoid the problem that arose in State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), where the trial court may have inadvertently failed to completely revise the standard instruction for a "withholding" case. The error was not prejudicial because the court of appeals found the evidence was sufficient to support conviction for "taking away." See note 8, below.

"A defendant causes a child to leave a parent if the defendant is responsible for or brings about an abandoning, departing or going away from the parent. 'Causes to leave' suggests the defendant engages in some sort of mental, rather than physical, manipulation by doing things to persuade the child to leave the parent. Force or violence is unnecessary and the conduct need not be intentional." State v. Bowden, 2007 WI App 234, ¶16, 306 Wis.2d 393, 742 N.W.2d 332. Also see, State v. Samuel, 2001 WI App 25, 240 Wis.2d 756, 623 N.W.2d 565.

Section 948.31(1)(b) was amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31, section 2836ym, to apply to a "period of physical placement" as well as to visitation periods. The same Act (at section 2836ap) created § 948.01(3m) to provide: "'Physical placement' has the meaning given in § 767.001(5)."

2. The statutory definition of this offense includes the statement: "This paragraph is not applicable if the court has entered an order authorizing the person to so take or withhold the child." The Committee assumes that court consent is usually a matter of record and can be clearly resolved. In a case where court consent is a factual issue, the Committee concluded that the matter should be treated in the same manner as other statutory exceptions. That is, the matter of court consent need not be included in the criminal complaint and only becomes an issue when it is raised by the evidence. If the issue is raised by the evidence, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no consent by the court. The phrase "or consent of the court" could simply be added at this point and to the third element.

Section 948.31(1)(b) was amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31 section 2836ym, to provide a new concluding sentence: "The fact that joint legal custody has been awarded to both parents by a court does not preclude a court from finding that one parent has committed a violation of this paragraph." The same Act (at section 2836ag) created § 948.01(1g) to provide: "'Joint legal custody' has the meaning given in § 767.001(1)."

3. The statute applies to interfering with the custody of any "child," defined in § 948.01(1) as "any person who has not attained the age of 18 years." This is a change from the counterpart offense under prior law, which applied only to children under the age of 14. See § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats.

4. "Legal custodian" is defined as follows in § 948.31(1)(a) (as amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31, section 2836(1m):

(a) In this subsection, "legal custodian of a child" means:

1. A parent or other person having legal custody of the child under an order or judgment in an action for divorce, legal separation, annulment, child custody, paternity, guardianship or habeas corpus.

2. The department of children and families or the department of corrections or any person, county department under s. 46.215, 46.22 or 46.23 or licensed child welfare agency, if custody or supervision of the child has been transferred under ch. 48 or 938 to that department, person or agency.

Under former § 946.71, interference with custody transferred under chapter 48 was defined as a separate offense. Section 946.71(1), 1985-86 Wis. Stats.

Wis JI-Criminal 2166 is drafted for a case involving a legal custodian under subsec. (1)(a)1. of the above definition. The Committee interprets that definition as applying to a parent or other person having legal custody under a court order or judgment in one of the specified types of actions. That is, both the "parent" and the "other person" must have custody as a result of court order or judgment.

1989 Wisconsin Act 31, section 2836am, created § 948.01(1r) to provide: "'Legal custody' has the meaning given in § 767.001(2)."

5. In State v. Campbell, 2006 WI 99, 294 Wis.2d 100, 718N.W.2d 649, the court rejected the defendant's claim that the trial court erred when it prevented him from collaterally attacking the custody order on the ground that his wife obtained the order by fraud. The supreme court concluded that "a court may permit a collateral attack on a judgment or order procured by fraud if the fraud is jurisdictional, making the judgment or order void, thereby negating an element of a crime, or if the fraud raises an affirmative defense to the crime. Because Campbell's allegations of fraud do not tend to negate any element of a crime and do not constitute an affirmative defense, the circuit court properly excluded evidence of the alleged fraud and prevented Campbell from collaterally attacking the custody order." 2006 WI 99, ¶4.

6. Section 948.31(1) applies to orders resulting from several types of legal proceedings: divorce, legal separation, annulment, custody, paternity, guardianship, or habeas corpus. The applicable term should be specified in the blank provided.

7. Add "or consent of the court" if court consent is raised by the evidence. See discussion in note 2, supra.

8. See § 939.22(48). Where the custodial parent consents to the taking of the child based on the defendant's misrepresentation about the nature of the taking, "public policy calls for treatment of the consent . . . as a nullity." State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 773, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), citing § 939.48(22)(c).

9. The source of the knowledge requirement is § 939.23(3), which provides that whenever the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'."

In State v. Britzke, 108 Wis.2d 675, 683, 324 N.W.2d 289 (Ct. App. 1982), the court of appeals interpreted the prior version of the statute defining this offense. The court held that knowledge of the existence of the court order is sufficient; it is not necessary to prove that the defendant knew the order had the effect of granting "legal custody." [Affirmed on other grounds, 110 Wis. 728, 329 N.W.2d 207 (1983), per curiam.]

The Committee concluded that this means that knowledge of what "legal custody" means is not required. The intent element is satisfied if the defendant knew that the court order existed and knew that it had the effect of transferring the custody of the child. This is consistent with the court's definition of "legal custody" as any custody transferred under a court order (even if that order affects only the "physical custody" of the child).

2167 INTERFERENCE WITH CUSTODY OF A CHILD — § 948.31(2)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Interference with the custody of a child, as defined in § 948.31(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (causes a child to leave) (takes a child away) (withholds a child for more than 12 hours)[2] from the parents[3] of the child without the consent[4] of the parents.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. On (date of alleged offense), (name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.[5]
2. (Name of parents) were the parents[6] of (name of child).
3. The defendant (caused (name of child) to leave) (took (name of child) away) (withheld (name of child) for more than 12 hours)[7] from (name of parents) without their consent.[8]

   "Without consent" means no consent in fact.[9]

   The act need not be accompanied by force or violence.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2167 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2009; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.31(2), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1835 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Affirmative defenses are recognized by subsection (4) of § 948.31. The burden of persuasion is placed on the defendant to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence. See the discussion of the affirmative defense provision in Wis JI-Criminal 2169.

1. Wis JI-Criminal 2167 is drafted for a violation of § 948.31(2) which involves taking a child from the parents. For a case involving a taking from the mother of a nonmarital child, see Wis JI-Criminal 2167A.

2. Section 948.31(2) reads in part as follows: ". . . causes a child to leave, takes a child away or withholds a child for more than 12 hours . . ." The Committee interprets this statute as prohibiting any causing to leave, any taking away, and the withholding for more than 12 hours. That is, the "for more than 12 hours" applies only to the "withholding" alternative, not to the causing to leave or taking. [Note: the "withholding" alternative under this statute does not include a reference to "beyond the court-approved period" that is included in sub. (1)(b) of § 948.31).]

The 2009 revision added all the statutory alternatives, in parentheses, to the text of the instruction. This was done to avoid the problem that arose in State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), where the trial court may have inadvertently failed to completely revise the standard instruction for a "withholding" case under § 948.31(1)(b). The error was not prejudicial because the court of appeals found the evidence was sufficient to support conviction for "taking away." See note 9, below.

"A defendant causes a child to leave a parent if the defendant is responsible for or brings about an abandoning, departing or going away from the parent. 'Causes to leave' suggests the defendant engages in some sort of mental , rather than physical, manipulation by doing things to persuade the child to leave the parent. Force or violence is unnecessary and the conduct need not be intentional." State v. Bowden, 2007 WI App 234, ¶16, 306 Wis.2d 393, 742 N.W.2d 332. Also see, State v. Samuel, 2001 WI App 25, 240 Wis.2d 756, 623 N.W.2d 565.

3. Although the statute uses the plural, "parents," it also applies to taking from one parent. See § 990.001(1): "The singular includes the plural, and the plural includes the singular."

4. Section 948.31(2) (as amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31, section 2836ym) concludes with the statement: "This subsection is not applicable if legal custody has been granted by court order to the person taking or withholding the child." The Committee assumes that court consent is usually a matter of record and can be clearly resolved. In a case where court consent is a factual issue, the Committee concluded that the matter should be treated in the same manner as other statutory exceptions. That is, the matter of court consent need not be included in the criminal complaint and only becomes an issue when it is raised by the evidence. If the issue is raised by the evidence, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no consent by the court. The phrase "or consent of the court" could simply be added at this point and to the third element.

5. The statute applies to interfering with the custody of any "child," defined in § 948.01(1) as "any person who has not attained the age of 18 years." This is a change from the counterpart offense under prior law, which applied only to children under the age of 14. See § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats.

6. See note 3, supra.

7. Section 948.31(2) does not require that the acts be done "intentionally." (Compare § 948.31(1)(b) and § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats., which do include "intentionally.") The Committee assumed this was not an inadvertent omission and neither "intentionally" nor any knowledge requirement is included in the instruction. (Compare Wis JI-Criminal 2166 for violations of § 948.31(1)(b).)

8. Add "or consent of the court" if court consent is raised by the evidence. See note 4, supra.

9. See § 939.22(48). Where a parent consents to the taking of the child based on the defendant's misrepresentation about the nature of the taking, "public policy calls for treatment of the consent . . . as a nullity." State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 773, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), citing § 939.48(22)(c).

2167A INTERFERENCE WITH CUSTODY OF A NONMARITAL CHILD — § 948.31(2)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Interference with the custody of a child, as defined in § 948.31(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (causes a child to leave) (takes a child away) (withholds a child for more than 12 hours)[2] from the (mother of the child) (father of the child, if he has been granted legal custody) without the consent[3] of the (mother) (father) where the child is a nonmarital child whose parents have not intermarried.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. On (date of alleged offense), (name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.[4]

2. (Name of parent) was the (mother) (father who had been granted legal custody) of (name of child).

3. (Name of child) is a nonmarital child.

   A nonmarital child is one who is neither conceived nor born while his or her parents are lawfully married to each other and whose parents have not subsequently married each other.[5]

4. The defendant (caused (name of child) to leave) (took (name of child) away) (withheld (name of child) for more than 12 hours)[6] from (name of parent) without(his) (her) consent.[7]

"Without consent" means no consent in fact.[8]

The act need not be accompanied by force or violence.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2167A was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.31(2), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1835A which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Affirmative defenses are recognized by subsection (4) of § 948.31. The burden of persuasion is placed on the defendant to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence. See the discussion of the affirmative defense provision in Wis JI-Criminal 2169.

1. Wis JI-Criminal 2167A is drafted for a violation of § 948.31(2) which involves taking a child from the mother of a nonmarital child or from the father of the child, if he has been granted legal custody. For a case involving a taking of a marital child from the parents, see Wis JI-Criminal 2167.

In State v. Hill, 91 Wis.2d 446, 283 N.W.2d 451 (Ct. App. 1979), the court held that the then-existing version of the statute replaced by § 948.31(1) did not deny equal protection of the laws or due process to fathers of nonmarital children.

2. Section 948.31(2) reads in part as follows: ". . . causes a child to leave, takes a child away or withholds a child for more than 12 hours . . ." The Committee interprets this statute as prohibiting any causing to leave, any taking away, and the withholding for more than 12 hours. That is, the "for more than 12 hours" applies only to the "withholding" alternative, not to the causing to leave or taking. [Note: the "withholding" alternative under this statute does not include a reference to "beyond the court-approved period" that is included in sub. (1)(b) of § 948.31).]

The 2009 revision added all the statutory alternatives, in parentheses, to the text of the instruction. This was done to avoid the problem that arose in State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), where the trial court may have inadvertently failed to completely revise the standard instruction for a "withholding" case under § 948.31(1)(b). The error was not prejudicial because the court of appeals found the evidence was sufficient to support conviction for "taking away." See note 8, below.

"A defendant causes a child to leave a parent if the defendant is responsible for or brings about an abandoning, departing or going away from the parent. 'Causes to leave' suggests the defendant engages in some sort of mental, rather than physical, manipulation by doing things to persuade the child to leave the parent. Force or violence is unnecessary and the conduct need not be intentional." State v. Bowden, 2007 WI App 234, ¶16, 306 Wis.2d 393, 742 N.W.2d 332. Also see, State v. Samuel, 2001 WI App 25, 240 Wis.2d 756, 623 N.W.2d 565.

3. Section 948.31(2) (as amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31, section 2836ym) concludes with the statement: "This subsection is not applicable if legal custody has been granted by court order to the person taking or withholding the child." The Committee assumes that court consent is usually a matter of record and can be clearly resolved. In a case where court consent is a factual issue, the Committee concluded that the matter should be treated in the same manner as other statutory exceptions. That is, the matter of court consent need not be included in the criminal complaint and only becomes an issue when it is raised by the evidence. If the issue is raised by the evidence, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was no consent by the court. The phrase "or consent of the court" could simply be added at this point and to the third element.

4. The statute applies to interfering with the custody of any "child," defined in § 948.01(1) as "any person who has not attained the age of 18 years." This is a change from the counterpart offense under prior law, which applied only to children under the age of 14. See § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats.

5. This definition of "nonmarital child" is based on the one provided in § 990.01(23m). Both the § 990.01(23m) definition and the statement of this offense in § 948.31(2) include the reference: "where parents do not intermarry under s. 767.60." Section 767.60 provides that a nonmarital child becomes a marital child "[i]n any case where the father and mother of any nonmarital child shall enter into a lawful marriage." Since the section apparently applies to any subsequent marriage of the parents of a nonmarital child, there appeared to be no reason to include it in the instruction.

6. Section 948.31(2) does not require that the acts be done "intentionally." (Compare § 948.31(1)(b) and § 946.71(4), 1985-86 Wis. Stats., which do include "intentionally.") The Committee assumed this was not an inadvertent omission and neither "intentionally" nor any knowledge requirement is included in the instruction. (Compare Wis JI-Criminal 2166 for violations of § 948.31(1)(b).)

7. Add "or consent of the court" if there is evidence of court consent in the case. See note 3, supra.

8. See § 939.22(48). Where a parent consents to the taking of the child based on the defendant's misrepresentation about the nature of the taking, "public policy calls for treatment of the consent . . . as a nullity." State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 773, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999), citing § 939.48(22)(c).

2168 INTERFERENCE WITH THE CUSTODY OF A CHILD BY A PARENT OR PERSON ACTING PURSUANT TO THE DIRECTION OF A PARENT: CONCEALING A CHILD[1] — § 948.31(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Interference with the custody of a child by a parent, as defined in § 948.31(3)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by (a parent) (any person acting pursuant to directions from a parent) who intentionally conceals a child from the child's other parent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. On (date of alleged offense), (name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.[2]
2. (Name of defendant) was (a parent)[3] (acting pursuant to directions from a parent) of (name of child).
3. (Name of defendant) concealed (name of child) from the other parent.

   "Conceal" means to hide the child or do something else which prevents or makes more difficult the discovery of the child by the other parent.[4]
4. The defendant intentionally concealed (name of child).

This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose[5] to conceal (name of child) from the other parent and to interfere with that parent's custody rights.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2168 was originally published in 1989. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2009; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.31(3), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1838 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 946.715, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Affirmative defenses are recognized by subsection (4) of § 948.31. The burden of persuasion is placed on the defendant to establish them by a preponderance of the evidence. See the discussion of the affirmative defense provision in Wis JI-Criminal 2169.

The prior version of this statute, § 946.715, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., is discussed in State v. McCoy, 143 Wis.2d 274, 420 N.W.2d 107 (1988), affirming 139 Wis.2d 291, 407 N.W.2d 319 (Ct. App. 1987).

1. This instruction is drafted for offenses under subsection (3)(a) of § 948.31 whereby one parent intentionally conceals a minor child from the child's other parent. Additional offenses are defined by subsections (3)(b) and (c), for which there are no suggested uniform instructions.

2. See § 948.01(1).

3. The only statutory definition of "parent" is found in § 48.02(13), which reads:

> "Parent" means either a biological parent, a husband who has consented to the artificial insemination of his wife under s. 891.40, or a parent by adoption. If the child is a nonmarital child who is not adopted or whose parents do not subsequently intermarry under s. 767.803, "parent" includes a person acknowledged under s. 767.805 or a substantially similar law of another state or adjudicated to be the biological father. "Parent" does not include any person whose parental rights have been terminated.

4. The definition of "conceal" is adapted from the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1481, Receiving or Concealing Stolen Property.

5. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one part of the definition. It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

6. The Committee concluded that the essence of this offense, as indicated by the title of the statute, is concealing a child with the purpose of interfering with the custody rights of the other parent – specifically, the right to be with the child and know where the child is.

2169 INTERFERENCE WITH THE CUSTODY OF A CHILD: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES — § 948.31(4)

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF AN AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE RECOGNIZED IN § 948.31(4), SUBSTITUTE THE FOLLOWING FOR THE FINAL TWO PARAGRAPHS OF THE APPLICABLE INSTRUCTION:

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you must consider whether the action taken by the defendant (state the applicable defense as set forth in subsecs. (4)(a)1.-4.).[1]

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the person took the action (state the applicable defense).[2]

The burden is on the defendant to satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that (state the applicable defense).

By the greater weight of the evidence is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. Credible evidence is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that the defendant (state the applicable defense), you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that the defendant (state the applicable defense) and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2169 was approved by the Committee in August 1989; the comment was updated in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2009; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Subsection (4) of § 948.31 recognizes four affirmative defenses to the crime of interference with the custody of a child and imposes the burden of persuasion on the defendant to establish the defense. When there is evidence raising one of the defenses, the instruction for the offense charged must be modified. This instruction illustrates a general format for modifying the final two paragraphs of the instruction on the substantive offense.

Subsection (4) of § 948.31 provides as follows:

(4)(a) It is an affirmative defense to prosecution for violation of this section if the action:

1. Is taken by a parent or by a person authorized by a parent to protect his or her child in a situation in which the parent or authorized person reasonably believes that there is a threat of physical harm or sexual assault to the child;

2. Is taken by a parent fleeing in a situation in which the parent reasonably believes that there is a threat of physical harm or sexual assault to himself or herself;

3. Is consented to by the other parent or any other person or agency having legal custody of the child; or

4. Is otherwise authorized by law.

(b) A defendant who raises an affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

The defenses stated in sub. (4)(a).1 and 2. were changed by 1993 Wisconsin Act 302, effective date: April 29, 1994. Before the change, subsection (a)1. referred to actions taken to protect the child "from imminent physical harm or sexual assault"; sub. (a)2. referred to a parent fleeing "from imminent physical harm to himself or herself."

The defenses specified in subsecs. (4)(a)1. and 2. appear to be true "affirmative defenses." That is, they describe facts that are not inconsistent with the facts necessary to constitute the crime. However, the defenses specified in subsec. (4)(a)3. and 4. may, at least in some cases, be the same as the statutory elements of the crimes to which they might apply. For example, subsec. (4)(a)3. provides that the consent of the parent is a defense. If applied to the offense defined in § 948.31(2), it would make consent a defense to a crime which has "without consent" as a required element. It violates due process to relieve the state of its burden to prove all required elements beyond a reasonable doubt by use of affirmative defenses or presumptions. (See the more extensive discussion of these principles in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2152.) The Committee recommends that the consent defense not be the subject of a special jury instruction in cases involving charges under § 948.31(1)(b) and § 948.31(2) which have "without consent" as an element, at least where the consent issue relates to the consent of one individual. (It could be possible, one supposes, that the charge could be based on taking a child without the consent of the legal guardian and the defense could be raised that the parent consented. In such a case, the elements of the crime and the defense could coexist, avoiding constitutional problems.) The Committee perceives no problem in treating consent as an affirmative defense to charges under § 948.31(3) because "without consent" is not an element of that crime. Similar problems could arise with respect to the "otherwise authorized by law" defense specified in subsec. (4)(a)4. Care should be taken to assure that the defense does not duplicate, and shift the burden of persuasion on, a fact that is already identified by the statute as a fact necessary to constitute the crime.

The former version of one statute replaced by § 948.31 – § 946.715, 1985-86 Wis. Stats. – also recognized defenses that were similar to some of those at issue here. One of those provisions recognized a defense if the action was taken "to protect the child from imminent physical harm." (Compare subsec. (4)(a)1., above.) The constitutionality of that defense was extensively discussed in State v. McCoy, 143 Wis.2d 274, 420 N.W.2d 107 (1988), affirming 139 Wis.2d 291, 407 N.W.2d 319 (Ct. App. 1987). The court held that the phrase "imminent physical harm" was not unconstitutionally vague because "[i]t gives reasonable notice of proscribed conduct to persons bent on obedience of the law and to those who must apply it," 143 Wis.2d 274, 288.

In McCoy, supra, the Wisconsin Supreme Court also held that the legislature intended that a "reasonable person" standard apply to the defense:

> While recognizing that § 946.715, Stats., does not expressly articulate the level of objective or subjective belief a person must hold before the privilege to conceal arises, an analysis of this statute supports a finding that a reasonable person standard was intended. Subsection (1) of the statute evidences the legislature's broad concern for deterrence of parental child snatching, regardless of the marital status of the parents, creating a remedy for the other parent by imposing felony sanctions. Subsection (2) expressly exempts a person from liability when providing protection for minor children who are in danger of imminent physical harm. We conclude that both provisions can only be harmonized by imposing a reasonableness standard on action taken to protect a child from imminent harm.
> The language of this statute encourages the maintenance of parental rights against unlawful interruption. A test, as proposed by the defendant, based strictly on subjective belief would vitiate this purpose, permitting a child to be concealed any time harm seemed imminent to a parent, no matter how irrational the belief. This court has determined that an interpretation which fulfills the objectives of a statute is to be favored over an interpretation which would defeat legislative objectives. Belleville State Bank v. Steele, 117 Wis.2d 563, 570, 345 N.W.2d 405, 409 (1984). A subjective standard would not serve the objectives of this statute.

143 Wis.2d 274, 290-91.

Thus, the court concluded that "[l]anguage requiring the defendant's actions to be 'reasonably necessary' . . . properly reflected the treatment of this privilege as a statutory defense." 143 Wis.2d 274, 291.

For a discussion of the evidence required to raise the affirmative defense, see State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999).

1. Here summarize the applicable defense from subsec. (4)(a)1.-4. For example, for the defense set forth in (4)(a)1., the statement might be completed as follows: ". . . that the parent took the action to protect the child in a situation in which the parent reasonably believed that there was a threat of physical harm to the child."

2. See note 1, supra.

2170 CONTRIBUTING TO THE DELINQUENCY OF A CHILD — § 948.40(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Contributing to the delinquency of a child, as defined in § 948.40(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who intentionally encourages or contributes to the delinquency of a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[1]

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[3]

2. The defendant intentionally encouraged or contributed to the delinquency of (name of child).

Meaning of "Intentionally Encourage or Contribute"

The term "intentionally encourages or contributes" means that the defendant either had a purpose to encourage or contribute to delinquency or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Meaning of "Delinquency"

Delinquency is any violation of state criminal law by a child.[5]

Committing (name crime) violates state criminal law.

The crime of (name crime) is committed by one who

> LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE INTENDED CRIME AS DEFINED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTIONS AS NECESSARY.[6]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[It is not required that the child actually commit a delinquent act. A defendant's conduct contributes to the delinquency of a child if the natural and probable consequences of that conduct would be to cause the child to commit a delinquent act.][7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2170 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1997, 2001, 2009, and 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.40, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989, and replaces the delinquency portion of Wis JI-Criminal 1960 which has been withdrawn.

Section 948.40 addresses the delinquency portion of the crime covered by former sec. 947.15, Contributing To The Delinquency Or Neglect Of A Child. The neglect portion is addressed by a separate statute, sec. 948.20.

The basic penalty is that of a Class A misdemeanor. "If the child's act which is encouraged or contributed to is a violation of a state or federal criminal law which is punishable as a felony, the person is guilty of a Class H felony." Section 948.40(4)(b). If death is a consequence, the penalty is that of a Class D felony. Section 948.40(4)(a). See Wis JI-Criminal 2170A.

This instruction is for an offense under subsection (1) of § 948.40, where the defendant may be any person. Subsection (2) applies where a person responsible for the welfare of a child is alleged to have contributed to the delinquency of a child by disregard of the welfare of the child. See Wis JI Criminal 2171.

1. A seventeen-year-old is a "child" for purposes of this offense, even though a person of that age would not be a juvenile for purposes of prosecuting the child. State v. Patterson, 2010 WI 130, 329 Wis.2d 599, 790 N.W.2d 909, 790 N.W.2d 909, affirming, 2009 WI 161, 321 Wis.2d 752, 776 N.W.2d 602.

2. This is the rule provided in § 939.23(6).

3. This is the rule provided in § 939.43(2).

4. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23. The "aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result" alternative was added by the 1987 revision of the homicide statutes. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of the definition of "intentionally."

5. Section 948.40(1) formerly referred to § 48.02(3m) for the definition of delinquency. That reference was eliminated by 1995 Wisconsin Act 77. "Delinquent" is defined in § 938.02(3m):

> 938.02(3m) "Delinquent" means a juvenile who is 10 years of age or older who has violated any state or federal criminal law. . .

The instruction is drafted for what is expected to be the most common case: where the basis for delinquency is a violation of Wisconsin criminal law.

Only children over the age of 10 can be considered delinquent if they violate a criminal law. However, it is an offense under § 948.40 if a person intentionally encourages or contributes to an act by a child under the age of 10 if that act would be a delinquent act if committed by a child over the age of 10 (§ 948.40(1)). Therefore, the simple definition of "delinquent" in the instruction should be accurate for purposes of this offense.

6. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

The Committee concluded that the jury need not be instructed that they must reach unanimous agreement as to what delinquent act was encouraged, if evidence has been introduced that tends to show more than one. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals reached the same conclusion in a similar situation, holding that unanimity is not required as to which felony was intended in a prosecution for burglary with intent to commit a felony. State v. Hammer, 216 Wis.2d 213, 576 N.W.2d 285 (Ct. App. 1997). See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 517, collecting cases addressing jury unanimity.

Violations of § 948.40 are punished as a Class A misdemeanor unless either death results [see Wis JI Criminal 2170A] or the child's act encouraged or contributed to is punishable as a felony. The Committee concluded that a jury determination on the felony issue is required because that fact increases the maximum sentence for the crime. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). By specifying a crime in the definition of "delinquency," the instruction assures that a jury verdict of guilty will include a finding that the crime was the felony or misdemeanor specified.

It could be possible that reasonable views of the evidence could differ as to the felony status of the delinquent act. For example, a case could involve a dispute over the value of stolen property; giving the standard theft instruction, including the special question regarding value, would allow the jury to make the required finding. See Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

7. This is the rule stated in subsection (3) of § 948.40, which includes reference to "failure to take action." The instruction's reference to "the defendant's conduct" is intended to cover affirmative acts and failure to act.

2170A CONTRIBUTING TO THE DELINQUENCY OF A CHILD: DEATH AS A CONSEQUENCE — § 948.40(1), (4)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Contributing to the delinquency of a child, as defined in § 948.40(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who intentionally encourages or contributes to the delinquency of a child where death is a consequence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[1]

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[3]

2. The defendant intentionally encouraged or contributed to the delinquency of (name of child).

3. Death of (name of child)[4] was a consequence of intentionally encouraging or contributing to the delinquency of (name of child).

   This requires that the defendant's contributing to the delinquency of (name of child) was a substantial factor in producing the death of (name of child).[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Meaning of "Intentionally Encourage or Contribute"

The term "intentionally encourages or contributes" means that the defendant either had a purpose to encourage or contribute to delinquency or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[6]

Meaning of "Delinquency"

Delinquency is any violation of state criminal law by a child.[7]

Committing (name crime) violates state criminal law.

The crime of (name crime) is committed by one who

> LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE INTENDED CRIME AS DEFINED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTIONS AS NECESSARY.[8]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[It is not required that the child actually commit a delinquent act. A defendant's conduct contributes to the delinquency of a child if the natural and probable consequences of that conduct would be to cause the child to commit a delinquent act.][9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1989 and was revised in 1997, 2001, 2009, 2010, and 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.40, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989, and replaces the delinquency portion of Wis JI-Criminal 1960 which has been withdrawn.

Section 948.40 addresses the delinquency portion of the crime covered by former sec. 947.15, Contributing To The Delinquency Or Neglect Of A Child. The neglect portion is addressed by a separate statute, sec. 948.20.

The basic penalty is that of a Class A misdemeanor. "If the child's act which is encouraged or contributed to is a violation of a state or federal criminal law which is punishable as a felony, the person is guilty of a Class H felony." Section 948.40(4)(b). If death is a consequence, the penalty is that of a Class D felony. Section 948.40(4)(a).

This instruction is for an offense based on subsection (1) of § 948.40, where the defendant may be any person. Subsection (2) applies where a person responsible for the welfare of a child is alleged to have contributed to the delinquency of a child by disregard of the welfare of the child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2171.

Charging a defendant with violating § 948.40(4)(a) and with first degree reckless homicide under § 940.02(2) is not multiplicitous. The offenses each require proof of a fact that the other does not and there is no evidence that the legislature did not intend multiple punishments. Further, a violation of § 948.40(4)(a) is not "a less serious type of criminal homicide" under § 939.66(2) and thus is not a lesser included offense of first degree reckless homicide. State v. Patterson, 2010 WI 130, 329 Wis.2d 599, 790 N.W.2d 909.

1. A seventeen-year-old is a "child" for purposes of this offense, even though a person of that age would not be a juvenile for purposes of prosecuting the child. State v. Patterson, 2010 WI 130, 329 Wis.2d 599, 790 N.W.2d 909.

2. This is the rule provided in § 939.23(6).

3. This is the rule provided in § 939.43(2).

4. Section 948.40(4)(a) provides that the penalty for contributing to the delinquency of a child increases to that of a Class D felony "if death was a consequence." The same phrase was used in prior law, see § 947.15(1), 1985 86 Wis. Stats. The statutory language does not indicate whether the death must be of the child to whose delinquency the defendant contributes or whether it extends to other persons who are harmed by the child's conduct.

5. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Section 948.40 does not use the word "cause" but rather refers to death being "a consequence." In this respect, it is like several other criminal statutes using "results in" or "as a result" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "as a result" or "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court held that § 346.17(3) was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that he defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

6. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23. The "aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result" alternative was added by the 1987 revision of the homicide statutes. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of the definition of "intentionally."

7. Section 948.40(1) formerly referred to § 48.02(3m) for the definition of delinquency. That reference was eliminated by 1995 Wisconsin Act 77. "Delinquent" is defined in § 938.02(3m):

> 938.02(3m) "Delinquent" means a juvenile who is 10 years of age or older who has violated any state or federal criminal law. . .

The instruction is drafted for what is expected to be the most common case: where the basis for delinquency is a violation of Wisconsin criminal law.

Only children over the age of 10 can be considered delinquent if they violate a criminal law. However, it is an offense under § 948.40 if a person intentionally encourages or contributes to an act by a child under the age of 10 if that act would be a delinquent act if committed by a child over the age of 10 (§ 948.40(1)). Therefore, the simple definition of "delinquent" in the instruction should be accurate for purposes of this offense.

8. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App.

The Committee concluded that the jury need not be instructed that they must reach unanimous agreement as to what delinquent act was encouraged, if evidence has been introduced that tends to show more than one. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals reached the same conclusion in a similar situation, holding that unanimity is not required as to which felony was intended in a prosecution for burglary with intent to commit a felony. State v. Hammer, 216 Wis.2d 213, 576 N.W.2d 285 (Ct. App. 1997). See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 517, collecting cases addressing jury unanimity.

9. This is the rule stated in subsection (3) of § 948.40, which includes reference to "failure to take action." The instruction's reference to "the defendant's conduct" is intended to cover affirmative acts and failure to act.

2171 CONTRIBUTING TO THE DELINQUENCY OF A CHILD BY A PERSON RESPONSIBLE FOR THE CHILD'S WELFARE — § 948.40(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Contributing to the delinquency of a child, as defined in § 948.40(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who is responsible for the child's welfare and who contributes to the delinquency of a child by disregard of the welfare of the child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[1]

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[3]

2. The defendant was responsible for the welfare of (name of child).

   A "person responsible for the child's welfare" includes (use the appropriate term from § 948.01(3)).[4]

3. The defendant contributed to the delinquency of (name of child) by disregard of the child's welfare.

Meaning of "Delinquency"

Delinquency is any violation of state criminal law by a child.[5]

Committing (name crime) violates state criminal law.

The crime of (name crime) is committed by one who

> LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE ALLEGED CRIME AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION AS NECESSARY.[6]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[It is not required that the child actually commit a delinquent act. A defendant's conduct contributes to the delinquency of a child if the natural and probable consequences of that conduct would be to cause the child to commit a delinquent act.][7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2171 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1997, 2001, 2009, 2010 and 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it removed a reporter's note from the comment concerning "embedded crimes."

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.40, created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989, and replaces the delinquency portion of Wis JI-Criminal 1960 which has been withdrawn.

Section 948.40 addresses the delinquency portion of the crime covered by former sec. 947.15, Contributing To The Delinquency Or Neglect Of A Child. The neglect portion is addressed by a separate statute, sec. 948.20.

The basic penalty is that of a Class A misdemeanor. "If the child's act which is encouraged or contributed to is a violation of a state or federal criminal law which is punishable as a felony, the person is guilty of a Class H felony." Section 948.40(4)(b). If death is a consequence, the penalty is that of a Class D felony. Section 948.40(4)(a). See Wis JI-Criminal 2170A.

This instruction is for an offense under subsection (2) of § 948.40, where the defendant must be a person responsible for the welfare of a child. Subsection (1) applies to any person. See Wis JI-Criminal 2170. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1961 which has been withdrawn.

1. A seventeen-year-old is a "child" for purposes of this offense, even though a person of that age would not be a juvenile for purposes of prosecuting the child. State v. Patterson, 2010 WI 130, 329 Wis.2d 599, 790 N.W.2d 909.

2. This is the rule provided in § 939.23(6).

3. This is the rule provided in § 939.43(2).

4. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term from § 948.01(3), which defines "person responsible for the child's welfare" to include the following: the child's parent; stepparent; guardian; foster parent; treatment foster parent; an employee of a public or private residential home, institution or agency; other person legally responsible for the child's welfare in a residential setting; or a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2106A for discussion of authorities relating to "person responsible for the child's welfare."

5. Section 948.40(1) formerly referred to § 48.02(3m) for the definition of delinquency. That reference was eliminated by 1995 Wisconsin Act 77. "Delinquent" is defined in § 938.02(3m):

938.02(3m) "Delinquent" means a juvenile who is 10 years of age or older who has violated any state or federal criminal law . . .

Only children over the age of 10 can be considered delinquent if they violate a criminal law. However, it is an offense under § 948.40 if a person intentionally encourages or contributes to an act by a child under the age of 10 if that act would be a delinquent act if committed by a child over the age of 10 (‘ 948.40(1)). Therefore, the simple definition of "delinquent" in the instruction should be accurate for purposes of this offense.

6. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "embedded crime" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)].

The Committee concluded that the jury need not be instructed that they must reach unanimous agreement as to what delinquent act was encouraged, if evidence has been introduced that tends to show more than one. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals reached the same conclusion in a similar situation, holding that unanimity is not required as to which felony was intended in a prosecution for burglary with intent to commit a felony. State v. Hammer, 216 Wis.2d 213, 576 N.W.2d 285 (Ct. App. 1997). See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 517, collecting cases addressing jury unanimity. However, the jury must unanimously agree that the child's act was a felony if the felony violation of § 948.40 is charged.

Violations of § 948.40 are punished as a Class A misdemeanor unless either death results [see Wis JI-Criminal 2170A] or the child's act encouraged or contributed to is punishable as a felony. The Committee concluded that a jury determination on the felony issue is required because that fact increases the maximum sentence for the crime. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000). By specifying a crime in the definition of "delinquency," the instruction assures that a jury verdict of guilty will include a finding that the crime was the felony or misdemeanor specified.

It could be possible that reasonable views of the evidence could differ as to the felony status of the delinquent act. For example, a case could involve a dispute over the value of stolen property; giving the standard theft instruction, including the special question regarding value, would allow the jury to make the required finding. See Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

7. This is the rule stated in subsection (3) of § 948.40, which includes reference to "failure to take action." The instruction's reference to "the defendant's conduct" is intended to cover affirmative acts and failure to act.

2173 CONTRIBUTING TO TRUANCY — § 948.45

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.45 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by any person 17 years of age or older who, by any act or omission, knowingly encourages or contributes to the truancy of a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years.
2. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years.[1]

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding of (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[2]
3. (Name of child) was truant.

   "Truant" means being absent from school for part or all of one or more days during which the school attendance officer, principal, or teacher has not been notified of the legal cause of the absence.[3]
4. The defendant, by any act or omission, knowingly encouraged or contributed[4] to the truancy of (name of child).

"Knowingly" requires that the defendant knew or believed that the defendant's act or omission would contribute to truancy.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2173 was originally published in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2005.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 948.45(1). Subsection (2) provides: "Subsection (1) does not apply to a person who has under his or her control a child who has been sanctioned under s. 49.26(1)(h)." That reference is to sanctions under the "learnfare" program.

A related offense is defined in § 188.15, Compulsory school attendance. See Wis JI-Criminal 2174.

1. This is the definition of "child" provided in § 948.01(1).

2. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

3. This definition is based on the definition of "truancy" in provided in § 118.16(1)(c), which is expressly cross-referenced in § 948.45(1).

4. Section 948.45(3) provides: "An act or omission contributes to the truancy of a child, whether or not the child is adjudged to be in need of protection or services, if the natural and probable consequences of that actor or omission would be to cause the child to be truant."

5. "'Know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified fact exists." § 939.23(2).

2174 COMPULSORY SCHOOL ATTENDANCE — § 118.15(1) and (5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 118.15 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who has under (his) (her) control a child between the ages of 6 and 18 years and fails to cause the child to attend school regularly during the full period and hours that the school is in session until the end of the school term, quarter or semester of school year in which the child becomes 18 years of age.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had a child who was between the ages of 6 and 18 years under (his)(her) control.

   This requires that the defendant was a person who had the legal right and duty to control the child, that is, the child's parent or guardian.[1]

2. The defendant failed to cause the child to attend school regularly during the full period and hours that the school is in session until the end of the school term, quarter or semester of school year in which the child becomes 18 years of age.

   "Regularly" means "constantly and uniformly."[2]

USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE "DISOBEDIENCE" DEFENSE RECOGNIZED IN §118.15(5)(b)2.[3]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE "DISOBEDIENCE" DEFENSE RECOGNIZED IN §118.15(5)(b)2.[4]

Consider Whether The Defense Is Proved

Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant was unable to comply with the law because of the disobedience of the child.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is established.[5]

Evidence has greater weight when it has more convincing power that the evidence opposed to it. Credible evidence is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied that both elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[7]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2174 was approved by the Committee in August 2005.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 118.15, Compulsory school attendance. The offense is defined primarily in sub. (1)(a); the penalty is set forth in sub. (5). Extensive exceptions are set forth in subs. (1)(b) to (d) and (4) which are not addressed in the instruction.

A related offense is defined in § 948.70, Contributing to truancy. See Wis JI-Criminal 2173.

In State v. White, 180 Wis.2d 203, 509 N.W.2d 434 (Ct. App. 1993), the court of appeals held that § 118.15 was not unconstitutionally vague.

1. State v. McGee, 2005 WI App 97, _14, 281 Wis.2d 756, 698 N.W.2d 850.

2. State v. White, 180 Wis.2d 203, 215, 509 N.W.2d 434 (Ct. App. 1993).

3. Section 118.15(5)(b)2. provides that "if the defendant proves that he or she is unable to comply with the law because of the disobedience of the child, the action shall be dismissed." If there is evidence of this defense, use the alternative closing provided.

4. Section 118.15(5)(b)2. provides that "if the defendant proves that he or she is unable to comply with the law because of the disobedience of the child, the action shall be dismissed." In State v. McGee, 2005 WI App 97, 281 Wis.2d 756, 698 N.W.2d 850, the court held that "the disobedience exception . . . is an affirmative defense to the charge here and thus should be presented to the fact-finder during the trial for resolution." ¶12. Where there is evidence of this defense in the case, the alternative set of closing paragraphs should be used.

5. Section 118.15(5)(b)2. expressly places the burden of persuasion on the defendant but does not state what that burden is. The Committee concluded that the civil burden of persuasion should apply, as is the case under other criminal statutes that require the defendant to prove a defense.

6. This is a slight revision of the standard description of the civil burden of proof, intended to improve its understandability. No change in meaning is intended.

7. Three concluding paragraphs are used to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements are not proven [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and,

2) not guilty even though the elements are proven, because the defense has been established.

2175 CHILD UNATTENDED IN A CHILD CARE VEHICLE — § 948.53

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.53 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person responsible for a child's welfare while the child is being transported in a child care vehicle who leaves the child unattended at any time from the time the child is placed in the care of that person to the time the child is placed in the care of another person responsible for the child's welfare.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) was placed in the care of the defendant.
2. (Name of child) was being transported in a child care vehicle.

"Child care vehicle" means a vehicle that is owned or leased by a child care provider or a contractor of the child care provider and that is used to transport children to and from the child care provider.[1]

"Child care provider" means [a child care center that is licensed under section 48.65(1)] [a child care provider that is certified under section 48.651] [a child care program that is established or contracted for under section 120.13(14)].[2]

3. The defendant was a person responsible for (name of child)'s welfare[3] while (name of child) was being transported in a child care vehicle.

4. The defendant left (name of child) unattended before (name of child) was placed in the care of another person responsible for the child's welfare.

5. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years.

[Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[4]]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH A FELONY OFFENSE.[5]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must consider the following question:

"Was (bodily harm) (great bodily harm) (death) a consequence of leaving (name of child) unattended?"

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[6]]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[7]]

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (bodily harm) (great bodily harm) (death) was a consequence of leaving (name of child) unattended?

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2175 was approved by the Committee in July 2012.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.53. A simple violation is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a Class I felony if bodily harm is a consequence; to a Class H felony if great bodily harm is a consequence; and to a Class G felony if death is a consequence. § 948.53(2)(b). If a felony violation is charged, the Committee recommends adding a special question if the evidence would support a finding that the penalty-increasing fact is established.

1. This is the definition provided in § 948.53(1)(b).

2. This is the definition provided in § 948.53(1)(a).

3. The term "person responsible for the child's welfare" is defined in § 948.01(3). It lists categories of persons that the term "includes," the last of which may be most likely to apply to this offense: "a person employed by one legally responsible for the child's welfare to exercise temporary control or care for the child."

4. See §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2).

5. A simple violation of § 948.53 is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a Class I felony if bodily harm is a consequence; to a Class H felony if great bodily harm is a consequence; and to a Class G felony if death is a consequence. § 948.53(2)(b). If a felony violation is charged, the Committee recommends adding a special question if the evidence would support a finding that the penalty-increasing fact is established. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of leaving a child unattended in a child care vehicle under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Was (bodily harm) (great bodily harm) (death) a consequence of leaving (name of child) unattended in a child care vehicle?"

6. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

7. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(14). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

2176 POSSESSION OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON BY A CHILD[1] — § 948.60(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of a dangerous weapon by a child, as defined in § 948.60(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any child who possesses or goes armed with a dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an object.[2]

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had the object under (his) (her) actual physical control.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge[4]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

2. The object was a dangerous weapon.

A _____ is a dangerous weapon.[5]

3. The defendant had not attained the age of 18 years[6] at the time (he) (she) allegedly possessed a dangerous weapon.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2176 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991, 1992, 1998, 2009, and 2011. The 2011 revision corrected a statutory cross-reference in footnote 4 to reflect a change made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.60(2)(a). Section 948.60 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1325 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 941.22, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Section 948.60 was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Act 18 (see note 4, below) and by 1991 Wisconsin Act 139. The latter divided what was formerly sub. (2) into sub (2)(a) and (b). For violations of § 948.60(2)(b) involving selling a dangerous weapon to a child, see Wis JI-Criminal 2177.

The statute provides an exception for possession by a child in a course of instruction in the traditional and proper use of the weapon under adult supervision. See § 948.60(3)(a). Additional exceptions are recognized in subsections (3)(b) and (c); they were added by 1991 Wisconsin Act 18, effective date: June 8, 1991. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

1. This instruction is for the offense defined by § 948.60(2)(a) that can be committed only by a child. Section 948.60(2)(d) provides: "A person under 17 years of age who has violated this subsection is subject to the provisions of Ch. 938 unless jurisdiction is waived under s. 938.18 or the person is subject to the jurisdiction of a court of criminal jurisdiction under s. 938.183."

2. The statute applies to any child "who possesses or goes armed with" a dangerous weapon. (Former § 941.22 referred only to "goes armed with.") By adding the alternative of simple possession, the revision appears to make "goes armed with" superfluous. To the extent the two terms have a different meaning, "possess" is the more inclusive one. See the discussion of "goes armed with" in Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

3. The definition of "possession" is based on the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. That instruction also includes optional explanations for cases where an object is arguably under the defendant's control but not in his physical possession. The approach taken in Wis JI-Criminal 920 was cited with approval in State v. Allbaugh, 148 Wis.2d 807, 436 N.W.2d 898 (Ct. App. 1989).

"Knowingly" is used because inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 6000, Note on the Knowledge Requirement in Controlled Substances Cases.

4. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 3, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 948.60(2)(a) does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing the dangerous weapon. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

5. "Dangerous weapon" is specially defined for purposes of this offense; the definition in § 939.22(10) does not apply. Section 948.60(1) provides:

> In this section, "dangerous weapon" means any firearm loaded or unloaded; any electric weapon, as defined in s. 941.295(1c)(a); metallic knuckles or knuckles of any substance which could be put to the same use with the same or similar effect as metallic knuckles; a nunchaku or any similar weapon consisting of 2 sticks of wood, plastic or metal connected at one end by a length of rope, chain, wire or leather; a cestus or similar material weighted with metal or other substance and worn on the hand; a shuriken or any similar pointed star-like object intended to injure a person when thrown; or a manrikigusari or similar length of chain having weighted ends.

This definition is essentially a list of seven objects that constitute a dangerous weapon for purposes of this offense. The Committee recommends inserting the name of the object into the instruction rather than reading the complete statutory definition. Note that many items that would qualify as dangerous weapons under § 939.22(10) do not fall within this definition.

The definition was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Act 18 (effective date: June 8, 1991) to substitute "loaded or unloaded" for "having a barrel less than 12 inches long" immediately after the word "firearm" in the first line of the definition.

6. "Child" is defined in this way in § 948.01(1).

2177 SALE, LOAN, OR GIFT OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON TO A CHILD — § 948.60(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.60(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person who intentionally sells, loans, or gives a dangerous weapon to a child.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (sold) (loaned) (gave) an object to (name of child).

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant had the purpose to (sell) (loan) (give) an object to (name of child).[1]

2. The object was a dangerous weapon.

   A _____ is a dangerous weapon.[2]

3. The defendant knew that the object was a dangerous weapon.[3]

4. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years[4] at the time the defendant allegedly (sold) (loaned) (gave) (him) (her) a dangerous weapon.

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age is not required[5] and mistake regarding age is not a defense.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2177 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991, 1992 and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2011; it corrected a statutory cross-reference in footnote 2 to reflect a change made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.60(2)(b). Section 948.60 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It applies to offenses committed on or after July 1, 1989. This instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1326 which applied to what was essentially the same offense under § 941.22, 1985-86 Wis. Stats., a statute repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332.

Section 948.60 was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Act 18 (see note 2, below) and by 1991 Wisconsin Act 139. The latter divided what was formerly sub. (2) into sub. (2)(a) and (2)(b). For violations of § 948.60(2)(a), involving possession of a dangerous weapon by a child, see Wis JI-Criminal 2176.

1991 Wisconsin Act 139 also created sub. (2)(c), which provides that violations of sub. (2)(b) become Class H felonies "if the child under par. (b) discharges the firearm and the discharge causes death to himself, herself, or another." See Wis JI-Criminal 2177A for a suggested instruction for the Class H felony offense.

The statute provides several exceptions. See § 948.60(3) and the discussion preceding note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 2176.

1. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changed from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

2. "Dangerous weapon" is specially defined for purposes of this offense; the definition in § 939.22(10) does not apply. Section 948.60(1) provides:

> In this section, "dangerous weapon" means any firearm loaded or unloaded; any electric weapon, as defined in s. 941.295(1c)(a); metallic knuckles or knuckles of any substance which could be put to the same use with the same or similar effect as metallic knuckles; a nunchaku or any similar weapon consisting of 2 sticks of wood, plastic or metal connected at one end by a length of rope, chain, wire or leather; a cestus or similar material weighted with metal or other substance and worn on the hand; a shuriken or any similar pointed star-like object intended to injure a person when thrown; or a manrikigusari or similar length of chain having weighted ends.

This definition is essentially a list of seven objects that constitute a dangerous weapon for purposes of this offense. The Committee recommends inserting the name of the object into the instruction rather than reading the complete statutory definition. Note that many items that would qualify as dangerous weapons under § 939.22(10) do not fall within this definition.

The definition was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Act 18 (effective date: June 8, 1991), to substitute "loaded or unloaded" for "having a barrel less than 12 inches long" immediately after the word "firearm" in the first line of the definition.

3. Section 939.23(3) provides that "intentionally" requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and appearing after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

4. "Child" is defined this way in § 948.01(1).

5. Section 939.23(6).

6. Section 939.43(2).

2177A SALE, LOAN, OR GIFT OF A FIREARM TO A CHILD: DEATH CAUSED — § 948.60(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.60(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person who intentionally sells, loans, or gives a firearm[1] to a child if the child discharges the firearm and causes death to that child or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (sold) (loaned) (gave) a loaded or unloaded firearm to (name of child) .

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant had the purpose to (sell) (loan) (give) a firearm to (name of child) .[2]

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[3]

2. (Name of child) had not attained the age of 18 years[4] at the time the defendant allegedly (sold) (loaned) (gave) (him) (her) a firearm.

   Knowledge of (name of child) 's age is not required[5] and mistake regarding age is not a defense.[6]

3. (Name of child) discharged the firearm and had not attained the age of 18 years at the time.

To "discharge a firearm" simply means to shoot a gun.[7]

4. The discharge of the firearm caused the death of [(name of child)] [another person].

"Cause" means that the discharging of the firearm was a substantial factor in producing the death.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2177Awas originally published in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 948.60 was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Acts 18 and 139. The latter change created a new felony offense which is addressed by this instruction and applies to offenses committed on or after April 16, 1992. Subsections (2)(b) and (c) provide the penalties:

> (2)(b) Except as provided in par. (c), any person who intentionally sells, loans or gives a dangerous weapon to a child is guilty of a Class I felony.
> (c) Whoever violates par. (b) is guilty of a Class H felony if the child under par. (b) discharges the firearm and the discharge causes death to himself, herself or another.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2177 for an instruction for the Class I felony offense under (2)(b).

1. "Dangerous weapon" is specially defined for purposes of violations of § 948.60. See § 948.60(1). But because violations of sub. (2)(c) require discharge of a firearm, none of the other alternatives provided in sub. (1) could apply. Thus, the instruction simply refers to "firearm" throughout.

2. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changed from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense. Implicit in this element's requirement of purpose is knowledge that the object was a firearm. Section 939.23(3) provides that "intentionally" requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and appearing after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

4. "Child" is defined in this way in § 948.01(1).

5. Section 939.23(6).

6. Section 939.43(2).

7. This definition is used in instructions for other offenses requiring "discharge" of a firearm. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1322.

8. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2178A POSSESSION OF A FIREARM IN A SCHOOL ZONE — § 948.605(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of a firearm on school grounds, as defined in § 948.605(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who knowingly possesses a firearm at a place that the person knows, or has reasonable cause to believe, is in or on the grounds of a school.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly possessed a firearm.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had a firearm under (his) (her) actual physical control.[1]

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[2]

2. The defendant possessed a firearm in or on the grounds of a school.[3]

   ["School" means a public, parochial, or private school or a tribal school which provides an education program for one or more grades between grades 1 and 12 and which is commonly known as an elementary school, middle school, junior high school, senior high school, or high school.][4]

3. The defendant knew or had reasonable cause to believe that (he) (she) possessed a firearm in or on the grounds of a school.

"Reasonable cause to believe" means that a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have believed that the place where the firearm was possessed was in or on the grounds of a school.

Deciding About Knowledge Or Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2178Awas originally published in 1991 and revised in 2009. It was amended in 2012 to reflect changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2015; it revised the Comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.605(2), created by 1991 Wisconsin Act 17. The statute had an effective date of September 1, 1991 and is a Class I felony. Subsection (3) of § 948.605 makes it a Class G felony to discharge a firearm in a school zone. See Wis JI-Criminal 2178B.

Related offenses are addressed by the following statutes: § 948.61, Dangerous weapons other than firearms on school premises (see Wis JI-Criminal 2179); § 941.20, Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon (see Wis JI-Criminal 1305 and 1321-1324); and § 941.23, Carrying a concealed weapon (see Wis JI-Criminal 1335).

Subsection (2)(b) of § 948.605 sets forth eight situations where the prohibition of sub. (2)(a) does not apply. The exceptions in sub. (2)(b)2d., 2f., and 2h. were created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 23 [effective date: June 26, 2015]. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 250 N.W.2d 38 (1951). Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, the are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

1. The definition of "possession" is based on the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. That instruction also includes optional explanations for cases where an object is arguably under the defendant's control but not in his physical possession. The approach taken in Wis JI-Criminal 920 was cited with approval in State v. Allbaugh, 148 Wis.2d 807, 436 N.W.2d 898 (Ct. App. 1989).

The statutes expressly refers to "knowingly possesses." Even without such reference, "knowingly" would be required because inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 6000, Note on the Knowledge Requirement in Controlled Substances Cases.

2. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

3. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 amended § 948.605(2) to limit the criminal offense to possession of a firearm "in or on the grounds of a school." Offenses "within 1,000 feet of the grounds of a school" are no longer criminal – they are Class B forfeitures (for those without a concealed carry license).

4. This is the definition of "school" provided in § 948.61(1)(b); § 948.605(1)(b) states that it applies to this offense.

2178B DISCHARGE OF A FIREARM IN A SCHOOL ZONE — § 948.605(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Discharge of a firearm in a school zone, as defined in § 948.605(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who knowingly[1] discharges[2] a firearm at a place that the person knows is a school zone.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly[3] discharged a firearm.

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[4]

   To "discharge a firearm" simply means to shoot a gun.[5]

2. The defendant discharged a firearm in a school zone.

   "School zone" means in or on the grounds of a school (or within 1,000 feet from the grounds of a school).[6]

   ["School" means a public, parochial, or private school which provides an education program for one or more grades between grades 1 and 12 and which is commonly known as an elementary school, middle school, junior high school, senior high school, or high school.][7]

3. The defendant knew that (he) (she) was in a school zone when (he) (she) discharged a firearm.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2178B was originally published in 1991 and revised in 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2015; it revised the Comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.605(3), created by 1991 Wisconsin Act 17. The statute had an effective date of September 1, 1991, and is punished as a Class G felony. Subsection (2) of § 948.605 makes it a Class I felony to possess a firearm in a school zone. See Wis JI-Criminal 2178A.

Related offenses are addressed by the following statutes: § 948.61, Dangerous weapons other than firearms on school premises (see Wis JI-Criminal 2179); § 941.20, Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon (see Wis JI-Criminal 1305 and 1321-1324); and § 941.23, Carrying a concealed weapon (see Wis JI-Criminal 1335).

Subsection (3)(b) of § 948.605 sets forth seven situations where the prohibition of sub. (3)(a) does not apply. The exceptions in sub. (3)(b)5., 6., and 7. were created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 23 [effective date: June 26, 2015]. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 250 N.W.2d 38 (1951). Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, the are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

1. The instruction deals only with "knowingly" discharging a firearm. But note that the statute reads in the disjunctive: ". . . knowingly, or with reckless disregard for the safety of another." Since the statute is written in the alternative, the Committee assumed that proof of either alternative is sufficient and that proof of "reckless disregard" is not required in all cases. If that is the case, it seems that the "reckless disregard" alternative would require substantially greater proof than the "knowingly" alternative requires. "Recklessness" under the Criminal Code requires that the actor create a substantial and unreasonable risk of death or great bodily harm and that the actor be aware of that risk. See § 939.24. The "knowingly" alternative apparently requires only that the defendant know that he discharged a firearm; no additional risk to others or awareness of such a risk is necessary. That being the case, the Committee expects that all cases would be charged and prosecuted under the "knowingly" alternative.

2. The statute also prohibits "attempts to discharge" a firearm. If an attempt is involved, the instruction would have to be modified accordingly. See Wis JI-Criminal 580 for the general definition of "attempt," which may be useful in developing an instruction for the attempt variety of this offense (which is, of course, punished the same as the completed crime in this instance).

3. See note 1, supra.

4. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

5. This definition is used in Wis JI-Criminal 1322.

6. This is the definition of "school zone" provided in § 948.605(1)(b).

7. This is the definition of "school" provided in § 948.61(1)(b); § 948.605(1)(b) states that it applies to this offense.

2179 DANGEROUS WEAPONS OTHER THAN FIREARMS ON SCHOOL PREMISES — § 948.61

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.61 is violated by a person who knowingly possesses or goes armed with a dangerous weapon on school premises.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an object.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had the object under (his) (her) actual physical control.[1]

2. The object was a dangerous weapon.

   A "dangerous weapon" is (any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm) (any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm).[2]

3. The defendant possessed a dangerous weapon on school premises.

"School premises" means any school building, grounds, recreation area or athletic field, or any other property owned, used, or operated for school administration.[3]

["School" means a public, parochial, or private school which provides an education program for one or more grades between grades 1 and 12 and which is commonly known as an elementary school, middle school, junior high school, senior high school, or high school.][4]

4. The defendant knew that (he) (she) possessed a dangerous weapon and knew that (he) (she) was on school premises.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2179 was originally published in 1991 and revised in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2009; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 948.61, which is punished as a Class A misdemeanor if a first offense but as a Class E felony "if the violation is the person's 2nd or subsequent violation of this section within a 5-year period, as measured from the dates the violations occurred." § 948.61(2)(b). This instruction may be used for either the misdemeanor felony offenses. As to the latter, the Committee concluded that the fact of prior conviction need not be submitted to the jury. "Other than the fact of prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) [emphasis added.]

Section 948.61 was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 as part of the revision of the criminal statutes relating to crimes against children. It was amended by 1991 Wisconsin Act 17, effective date: September 1, 1991. The amendment limited this statute to dangerous weapons other than firearms. The same Act created § 948.605 which prohibits possession of a firearm in a school zone. See Wis JI-Criminal 2178A.

1. The definition of "possession" is based on the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. That instruction also includes optional explanations for cases where an object is arguably under the defendant's control but not in his physical possession. The approach taken in Wis JI-Criminal 920 was cited with approval in State v. Allbaugh, 148 Wis.2d 807, 436 N.W.2d 898 (Ct. App. 1989).

The statute expressly refers to "knowingly possesses." Even without such reference, "knowingly" would be required because inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

The evidence was found to be sufficient to establish "knowingly possessed" in a prosecution under § 948.61 in In Interest of Michelle A.D., 181 Wis.2d 917, 512 N.W.2d 248 (Ct. App. 1994).

2. Section 948.61(1)(a) provides that "'dangerous weapon' has the meaning specified in § 939.22(10), except 'dangerous weapon' does not include any firearm." The Committee suggests using the part of the statutory definition that applies to the facts of the case. The definition in the instruction does not include all the alternatives provided in § 939.22(10), which, as amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 127 and excluding "firearm," provides as follows:

> "Dangerous weapon" means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded; any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm; any ligature or other instrumentality used on the throat, neck, nose, or mouth of another person to impede partially or completely, breathing or circulation of blood; any electric weapon as defined in § 941.295(4); or any other device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

A "BB" air pistol is a "dangerous weapon" under §§ 948.61 and 939.22(10). In Interest of Michelle A.D., 181 Wis.2d 917, 512 N.W.2d 248 (Ct. App. 1994).

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for discussion of substantive issues relating to "dangerous weapon."

3. This is the definition of "school premises" provided in § 948.61(1)(c).

4. This is the definition of "school" provided in § 948.61(1)(b).

2180 RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY FROM A CHILD — § 948.62

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Receiving stolen property from a child, as defined in § 948.62 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally receives stolen property from a person who has not attained the age of 18 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally received (describe property) from (name of child).

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to receive the property.[1]

   "To receive" means to acquire possession or control over the property.

2. (Name of child) was under the age of 18 years at the time the property was received.

   Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age is not required[2] and mistake regarding (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[3]

3. The (describe property) was stolen property.[4]

Property is stolen property when it has intentionally been taken from the owner without consent and with the intent to deprive the owner of its possession permanently.[5]

4. When the property was received, the defendant knew that it was stolen property.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED BASED ON THE PROPERTY BEING A FIREARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING.[8]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Was the property a firearm?"

A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[9]

Answer: "yes" or "no."]

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, BASED ON THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A

FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[10]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the property more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[11] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2180 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 2003. The 2003 revision adopted a new format and reflected changes in the penalties made by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2012; it reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 99 [effective date: December 21, 2011].

Section 948.62 ostensibly prohibits two different kinds of conduct: receiving stolen property from a child and concealing stolen property received from a child. This instruction addresses only the receiving offense but should be sufficient to cover all situations. Because the concealing offense requires that the property has been received from a child, proof of the same basic facts (plus concealing) would seem to be required.

2011 Wisconsin Act 99 [effective date: December 21, 2011] amended § 948.62(1)(bm) to apply the Class H felony penalty to receiving a stolen firearm as well as to property whose value exceeds $2,500.

1. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). It includes not only "mental purpose" but also being "aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

2. Section 939.23(6).

3. Section 939.43(2).

4. The instruction for receiving stolen property in violation of § 943.34 explains this requirement as follows:

> A prior theft or other misappropriation in violation of the Criminal Code is an essential element of the crime. Accordingly, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was stolen property. State v. Godsey, 272 Wis. 406, 75 N.W.2d 572 (1956). The term "stolen" is not defined in the Criminal Code. Necessarily, the term includes all forms of theft covered by § 943.20(1) of the Criminal Code.
> Wis JI-Criminal 1481, n. 6.

5. The definition of "stolen property" provided in the instruction is appropriate for the usual case where the property was obtained by theft under § 943.20(1)(a). The standard instruction must be modified if the property was obtained by fraudulent representation or other type of criminal misappropriation.

6. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make the conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." Also see, State v. Godsey, 272 Wis. 406, 75 N.W.2d 572 (1956); Oosterwyk v. State, 242 Wis. 398, 8 N.W.2d 346 (1943); Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1956); Meath v. State, 174 Wis. 80, 82, 83, 182 N.W. 334 (1921).

7. Evidence that the defendant was in "unexplained possession of recently stolen property" will often be offered as evidence tending to prove knowledge that the property was stolen. Caution should be exercised in instructing the jury on this issue, see Wis JI-Criminal 173, Circumstantial Evidence – Unexplained Possession of Recently Stolen Property, and the Comment to that instruction.

8. 2011 Wisconsin Act 99 [effective date December 21, 2011] amended § 948.62(1)(bm) to provide that a violation of the statute is a Class H felony "if the property is a firearm." Formerly, the Class H felony penalty applied only if the value of the property exceeded $2,500. The Committee has concluded that addressing these penalty-increasing facts by submitting a special question is the most efficient approach.

9. Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

10. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. The revised penalties are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $500 but not $2,500, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

11. This is based on the definition provided in § 943.20(2)(d). See note 9, Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

2185 RECKLESSLY STORING A FIREARM — § 948.55(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.55(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person who recklessly stores or leaves a loaded firearm within the reach or easy access of a child and the child obtains the firearm without the lawful permission of his or her parent or guardian or the person having charge of the child and the child discharges the firearm and the discharge causes bodily harm or death to himself, herself, or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant recklessly stored or left a loaded firearm within the reach or easy access of a child.

   "Child" means a person who has not attained the age of 14 years.[1]

   A "firearm" is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[2]

   "Recklessly" means that the defendant's storing or leaving of the firearm created an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being and the defendant was aware of that risk.[3]

2. A child obtained the firearm without the lawful permission of his or her parent or guardian or the person having charge of the child.

3. The child discharged the firearm and the discharge caused (bodily harm) (death) to (the child) (another person).[4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2185 was approved by the Committee in December 2012.

This instruction is for a violation of subsec. (2) of § 948.55, which is punished as a Class A misdemeanor. Subsection 948.55 was created by 1991 Wisconsin Act 139, effective date: April 16, 1992.

Subsections (4)(a) through (h) set forth exceptions to the applicability of § 948.55(2). Also see note 4, below. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1961).

1. Section 948.55(1).

2. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1882). This definition excludes airguns.

3. This is the definition of "criminal recklessness" provided in § 939.24(1). "If criminal recklessness is an element of a crime in Chs. 939 to 951, the recklessness is indicated by the term 'reckless' or 'recklessly.'" Section 939.24(2). Section 948.55(2) uses the term "recklessly."

4. Section 948.55(5) provides that "[s]ubsection (2) does not apply if the bodily harm or death resulted from an accident that occurs while the child is using the firearm in accordance with § 29.304 or 948.60(3)." Section 29.304 relates to parental supervision and hunter education and firearm safety programs for persons under 16 years of age; § 948.60(3) refers to target practice and instruction in proper use of weapons under the supervision of adults. See the Comment preceding note 1, supra, relating to the recommended treatment of such statutory exceptions.

2196 REGISTERED SEX OFFENDER AND PHOTOGRAPHING MINORS — § 948.14

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 948.14 is violated by a person who is required to register under section 301.45 who intentionally captures a representation of any minor without the written consent of the minor's parent, legal custodian, or guardian.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person who was required to register under § 301.45.

   A person who (describe the applicable criterion set forth in subs. (1g) of § 301.45 [1] is required to register.

2. The defendant captured a representation[2] of a minor.

   A minor is an individual who is under 17 years of age.[3]

   "Captures a representation" means takes a photograph, makes a motion picture, videotape, or other visual representation, or records or stores in any medium data that represents a visual image.[4]

3. The defendant captured the representation of the minor without the written consent of the minor's (parent) (legal custodian) (guardian).

[The written consent must state the person seeking consent is required to register under § 301.45.][5]

4. The defendant captured the representation intentionally.

This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to capture the representation of the minor and knew that the minor's parent did not provide written consent.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2196 was approved by the Committee in August 2007.

This instruction is for violations of § 948.14, created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 432. [Effective date: June 6, 2006.]

1. Specify the subsection of § 301.45(1g) that allegedly required the defendant to register as a sex offender.

2. Section 948.14(1)(c) provides that "'representation' has the meaning given in s. 942.09(1)(c)." That definition states: "'Representation' means a photograph, exposed film, motion picture, videotape, other visual representation, or data that represents a visual image." "Representation" is not separately defined here; the Committee concluded that it is adequately covered by the definition of "captures a representation" in element 2.

3. See § 948.14(1)(b).

4. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(a), without change. Section 948.14(1)(a) provides that it applies to this offense.

5. Include the sentence in brackets if the case involved evidence of a written consent.

6. The use of "intentionally" requires "a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified . . . [and] knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute. See § 939.23(3). In this statute, that appears to require purpose to capture the representation – as distinguished, for example, from accidentally having a minor in the background of a photo intended to be of something or someone else. And it requires knowledge of "without parent's consent," a fact necessary to make the conduct criminal.

2198 FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH SEX OFFENDER REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS — § 301.45

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 301.45 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who knowingly fails to comply with a requirement to provide information under that statute.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person who was required to provide information under section 301.45.

   A person who (describe the applicable criterion set forth in subs. (1g) of § 301.45) [1] is required to provide information under section 301.45.

2. The defendant failed to provide information as required.

   Section 301.45____ provides that persons required to provide information under section 301.45 must (describe the requirement set forth in subs. (2)-(4) of § 301.45) .[2]

3. The defendant knowingly failed to provide the required information.

   This requires that the defendant knew that (he) (she) was required to provide the information.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2198 was approved by the Committee in December 2004 and revised in 2012. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2021; it updated the Comment.

This instruction provides a very general model for violations of § 301.45, Sex offender registration. The statute imposes a very detailed and complex set of requirements for persons who have been adjudicated for a sex offense. The key provisions are as follows:

- Those who are covered by the registration requirement are identified in sub. (1g) of § 301.45.
- The requirements for registration and providing information are set forth in subs. (2) to (4) of § 301.45.
- Subsection (6)(a) specifies criminal penalties for "whoever knowingly fails to comply with any requirement to provide information under subs. (2) to (4) . . ."
- Subsection (6)(ag) specifies criminal penalties for "whoever intentionally violates sub. (4r) . . ."
- Subsection (4r) restricts establishing or changing residence without complying with applicable requirements.

The instruction provides a model for violations based on sub. (6)(a): knowingly failing to comply with requirements in subs. (2) to (4). The basis for the defendant's being required to register should be described in element 1; the information that was not provided as required should be described in element 2.

2009 Wisconsin Act 131 [effective date: March 4, 2010] created § 301.45(2)(a)6m. to add email accounts, internet addresses for web sites, etc., to the information that must be provided by those required to register.

The sex offender registration law is not unconstitutional as applied to a defendant convicted of the non-sexual false imprisonment of a minor. False imprisonment in violation of § 940.30 is considered a "sex offense" under § 301.45(1d)(b) if the victim was a minor and the defendant was not the victim's parent.

Requiring registration in this type of case "is rationally related to a legitimate governmental interest." State v. Smith, 2010 WI 16, ¶40, 323 Wis.2d 377, 780 N.W.2d 90.

In State v. Dinkins, 2012 WI 24, 339 Wis.2d 78, 810 N.W.2d 787, the conviction of a homeless sex offender for failing to provide the address at which he will be residing as required by § 301.45(6) was reversed. The court held:

> . . . we conclude that a registrant cannot be convicted of violating Wis. Stat. § 301.45(6) for failing to report the address at which he will be residing when he is unable to provide this information. We determine that a registrant is unable to provide the required information when that information does not exist, despite the registrant's reasonable attempt to provide it. ¶5.

In reaching this conclusion, the court relied on the "unable to provide" language found in Wis. Stat. § 301.45(2)(d) which provides in relevant part:

> A person subject to [the registration requirements] who is not under the supervision of the [DOC] or the [DHS] shall provide the information specified in par. (a) to the [DOC] in accordance with the rules under sub. (8). If the person is unable to provide an item of information specified in par. (a), the [DOC] may request assistance from a circuit court or the [DHS] in obtaining that item of information.

In State v. Savage, 2020 WI 93, 935 Wis.2d 1, 951 N.W.2d 838, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reexamined Dinkins and its application to homeless registrants under the supervision of the Department of Corrections. The court held that "Dinkins does not conclude that homeless sex offenders are exempt from registration requirements." See id., ¶46. Instead, Dinkins merely answered the narrow question of whether a registrant, who is not under supervision, can be convicted under § 301.45(6) for failing to notify the Department of Corrections of the address at which they will be residing upon release from prison.

In contrast, registrants under the supervision of the Department of Corrections are subject to a different paragraph than the defendant in Dinkins. Specifically, the information requirements of such registrants are controlled by § 301.45(2)(b), which does not contain a provision for a person unable to provide information as provided in § 301.45(2)(d). Therefore, as the court in Savage provided, "Any hypothetical defenses formulated based upon the 'unable to provide' holding in Dinkins cannot be imputed to a case dealing with a defendant who is under DOC supervision pursuant to §301.45(2)(b)." See Savage, supra, 935 Wis.2d 1, ¶46.

In State v. Triebold, 2021 WI App 13, 396 Wis.2d 176, ¶13, 955 N.W.2d 415, the court held that the registrant's failure to update the Wisconsin Department of Corrections of a change of address that occurred exclusively within the jurisdiction of Minnesota had "the consequence of depriving Wisconsin authorities of information concerning the location of his residence." The court concluded that Wis. Stat expressly prohibits such a consequence. § 301.45.

The Triebold court also determined that double jeopardy principles did not preclude the registrant's dual convictions in Minnesota and Wisconsin under Wis. Stat. § 939.71 or Blockburger v. United States, 284 U.S. 299, 304 (1932) because the two offenses required proof of different facts. Triebold, supra, at ¶24-25.

In State v. Freland, 2011 WI App 80, 344 Wis.2d 722, 800 N.W.2d 18, the court of appeals ruled that the defendant was entitled to withdraw his plea of guilty to a felony charge of failing to provide sex offender information as required by § 301.45(2)(e). The plea was not knowing, voluntary, or intelligent because he was not aware that the out-of-state conviction on which the registration requirement was based was eligible to be treated as a misdemeanor under § 301.45(6).

1. Subsection (1g) lists the categories of persons who are subject to the requirements of § 301.45. The applicable category should be used in the blank in element 1. For example, "A person who was convicted for a sex offense after December 25, 1993, is required to provide information under section 301.45." Offenses that are "sex offenses" are listed in § 301.45(1d)(b).

2. Specify the subsection of § 301.45 that is involved in the case and describe the requirement that was allegedly violated.

2199 SEX OFFENDER NAME CHANGE — § 301.47(2)(a)-(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 301.47(2)(a) and (b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who is subject to the requirements of section 301.45, and who intentionally changes his or her name or identifies by a name not identified with the Wisconsin Department of Corrections.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a sex offender[1] subject to the reporting requirements of section 301.45.
2. Before being released from the reporting requirements of section 301.45, the defendant intentionally [changed (his) (her) name][2] [identified (himself) (herself) by a name other than one by which (he) (she) is identified with the Wisconsin Department of Corrections].

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to [change (his) (her) name] [identify (himself) (herself) by a name other than one by which (he) (she) is identified with the Wisconsin Department of Corrections].[3]

[It is not a defense to prosecution under this section that the department failed to (attempt to) notify the defendant of the prohibition (against using a name by which he or she is not identified with the department).][4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all two elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2199 was approved by the Committee in 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2022; it updated the comment.

This instruction is for violations of § 301.47(2)(a) and (b), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 53 [effective date: September 5, 2003]. Section 301.47(3) provides: "Except as provided in par. (b), the person is guilty of a Class H felony."

1. Wis. Stat. § 301.47(1) provides "In this section, 'sex offender' means a person who is subject to s. 301.45 (1g) but does not include a person who, as a result of a proceeding under s. 301.45 (1m), is not required to comply with the reporting requirements of s. 301.45."

2. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has clarified that when read together, Wis. Stat. § 301.47(2)(a) and § 301.47(2)(a)1. do not prohibit a registrant from using an alias, provided the registrant notifies the Department of Corrections of their intent to do so in advance. State v. C.G., 2022 WI 60, ¶56, 403 Wis.2d 229, 976 N.W.2d 318. Wis. Stat. § 301.47(2)(a) does, however, prohibit a registrant from petitioning the circuit court for a legal name change under § 786.36. Id.

3. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. This instruction should be given when warranted by the evidence. § 301.47(4).

2300 INQUEST: PRELIMINARY INSTRUCTION

You have been summoned to serve as jurors at the inquest into the death of (name of deceased) to determine when, in what manner, and by what means (name of deceased) died.[1]

The district attorney will make a brief opening statement to acquaint you with the circumstances of (name of deceased) 's death. After the district attorney's statement, you will hear the testimony of sworn witnesses and examine various courtroom exhibits.

It is your duty to scrutinize and to weigh the testimony of witnesses and to determine the effect of the evidence as a whole. You are the sole judges of the credibility of the witnesses and of the weight and credit to be given to their testimony.

In weighing the evidence, you may take into account matters of your common knowledge and your observations and experience in the affairs of life.[2]

You may find that the testimony of one witness is entitled to greater weight than that of another witness, or even of several other witnesses, and you may give it such weight in considering your verdict.[3]

In determining the weight and credit you should give to the testimony of each witness, you should consider interest or lack of interest in the result of this inquest, conduct, appearance, and demeanor on the witness stand, bias or prejudice, if any has been shown, the clearness or lack of clearness of recollections, the opportunity for observing and knowing the matters and things testified to by the witness and the reasonableness of the testimony.

You should also take into consideration the apparent intelligence of each witness, the possible motives for falsifying, and all other facts and circumstances which tend either to support or to discredit the testimony, and then give to the testimony of each witness such weight and credit as you believe its is fairly entitled to receive.[4]

After all the evidence is presented, you will be asked to answer a series of questions and return your verdict as to when, in what manner, and by what means (name of deceased) died.

Your verdict must be based only on the evidence presented and the law given to you by the court. Do not let any personal feelings of bias or prejudice about such things as race, religion, national origin, sex, or age affect your deliberations. Consider the testimony and the exhibits, and listen to the court's instructions concerning the law to be applied to facts of the case. Your verdict will be considered by the district attorney in determining whether criminal charges should be filed.

Do not begin your deliberations and discussion of the case until all the evidence is presented and I have instructed you on the law. Do not discuss this case among yourselves or with anyone else until you deliberate in the jury room. If you come in contact with the district attorney, witnesses, or relatives of the deceased, do not speak with them. Do not listen to any conversations about this case.[5]

[ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 55, NOTETAKING PERMITTED, OR WIS JI-CRIMINAL 56, NOTETAKING NOT ALLOWED.]

[ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 57 IF THE JURORS WILL BE ALLOWED TO ASK QUESTIONS.]

You will not have a copy of the written transcript of the inquest testimony available for use during your deliberations. [You may ask to have specific portions of the testimony read to you.] You should pay careful attention to all the testimony because you must rely primarily on your memory of the evidence and testimony introduced at the inquest.[6].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2300 was originally published in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2009. It adopted a new format and did not make any substantive changes.

This instruction is recommended for use before the presentation of evidence begins at an inquest and is intended to give the jurors a general idea of their duties and how the inquest will proceed.

Any other standard instructions may be added that may appear to be helpful or appropriate. Any that are added should be reviewed to assure that they do not contain a reference to "trial" or "beyond a reasonable doubt."

Final instructions and suggested verdict forms are provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2302.

1. This phrase is adopted from the juror's oath provided in § 979.05(4):

> You do solemnly swear (affirm) that you will diligently inquire and determine on behalf of the state when, and in what manner and by what means, the person known as . . . . . who is now dead came to his or her death and that you will return a true verdict thereon according to your knowledge, according to the evidence presented and according to the instructions given to you by the . . . . (judge) (court commissioner).

2. This is based on Wis JI-Criminal 195, Juror's Knowledge.

3. This is based on Wis JI-Criminal 190, Weight of Evidence.

4. The preceding three paragraphs are based on Wis JI-Criminal 300, Credibility of Witnesses.

5. Portions of the preceding two paragraphs are based on Wis JI-Criminal 50, Preliminary Instruction on Jurors' Conduct, modified for use in the context of an inquest jury.

6. This paragraph is the text of Wis JI-Criminal 58, Transcript Not Available for Deliberations; Reading Back Testimony. Its purpose is to correct any misimpressions jurors may have about the immediate availability of written transcripts of the inquest testimony. The second sentence is in brackets to emphasize that it is not intended to encourage jury requests for reading back testimony and to indicate that its use is within the court's discretion.

2302 INQUEST: FINAL INSTRUCTIONS: EXPLANATION OF VERDICTS

Members of the jury, this case will now be submitted to you in the form of a special verdict consisting of _____ questions. Your duty is to answer those questions which, according to the evidence and my instructions, it becomes necessary for you to answer to arrive at a completed verdict.[1]

Question 1 asks: Is there probable cause to believe that the death of (name of deceased) was caused under circumstances constituting (name of offense submitted to the jury), contrary to section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes?[2]

If you answer question 1 "yes," answer question 2. Question 2 asks: Is there probable cause to believe that (name person) committed the offense of (name of offense submitted to the jury), contrary to section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, in causing the death of (name of deceased)?[3]

If you answer question 1 "no," answer question 3. Question 3 asks: Is there probable cause to believe that the death of (name of deceased) was a result of [natural causes] [an accident] [suicide] [an act privileged by law]?[4]

All three questions require you to apply the standard of "probable cause."

There is probable cause if the facts and circumstances would cause a cautious and prudent person to reasonably believe that a certain fact situation exists. Probable cause is more than mere suspicion, but the evidence necessary to support a finding of probable cause need not satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt.[5]

Question 1 asks you to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the death of (name of deceased) was caused under circumstances constituting (name of offense submitted to the jury) .[6]

DEFINE THE OFFENSE OR OFFENSES TO BE SUBMITTED TO THE JURY; WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1010 THROUGH 1191 ADDRESS HOMICIDE OFFENSES.

Question 3 asks you to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the death of (name of deceased) was a result of [natural causes] [an accident] [suicide] [an act privileged by law].

["Accident" means that the death was caused by other than criminal means. The possible criminal causes of death that apply to this case were defined in connection with question 1.][7]

["Suicide" means the voluntary and intentional taking of one's own life."][8]

["An act privileged by law" as it applies in this case requires you to consider the privilege of (identify applicable privilege) .][9]

[ADD INSTRUCTION ON THE APPLICABLE PRIVILEGE; SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 800 THROUGH 885.]

In answering the questions provided in the verdict, examine the evidence with care and caution. Act with judgment, reason, and prudence. You are to search for the truth.[10]

Your verdict will be advisory, which means that it will be a recommendation to the district attorney whether criminal charges should be filed against any person arising out of the circumstances of (name of deceased) 's death.

Before you may return a verdict which may legally be received, the verdict must be reached unanimously. All the jurors must agree.[11]

When you retire to the jury room, select one of your members to preside over your deliberations. His or her vote is entitled to no greater weight than the vote of any other juror.

When you have agreed upon your verdict, all of you must sign it and it should be dated by the person you have selected to preside.

Swear the officer.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2302 was originally published in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2009. It adopted a new format and did not make any substantive changes.

This is suggested as the final instruction to the inquest jury and is specifically keyed to the verdict questions the jury will be asked to answer. See Wis JI-Criminal 2302A for the suggested verdict questions. A preliminary instruction to the inquest jury is provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2300.

1. This statement is based on Wis JI-Civil 100, Opening.

2. Section 979.08(1) provides that "[t]he instructions shall include those criminal offenses for which the judge or court commissioner believes a reasonable jury might return a verdict based upon a finding of probable cause." Thus, if supported by the evidence, instructions on more than one offense may be required. If that is the case, the Committee recommends submitting additional questions in essentially the same form as question 1, specifying a different offense and including a definition of that offense.

3. The model is set up for the simple case where one person is being considered as the person who committed the crime. If more than one person is being considered, the Committee recommends adding a separate question for each person.

4. The model is drafted to provide for the selection of the one of the alternatives. If more than one of the alternatives is raised by the evidence, the Committee suggests adding questions for each one.

5. Section 979.08(2) provides that the inquest jury's verdict "shall be based upon a finding of probable cause."

6. Instructions on more than one offense may be necessary. See note 1, supra.

7. Section 979.08(3)(b) uses the term "accident" which has no formal meaning in the law of Wisconsin. The Committee concluded that it is best defined as a death resulting from other than criminal means. The criminal means that may apply to the case will have been defined for the jury in connection with question 1. If those criminal means do not apply, the jury should find that the death resulted from an "accident."

8. The definition of "suicide" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1195, Assisting Suicide.

9. The privileges most likely to apply are self-defense – see Wis JI-Criminal 800 through 820; defense of others – see Wis JI-Criminal 825 and 830; and the law enforcement officer's privilege to use deadly force – see Wis JI-Criminal 885. The applicable instruction should be adapted for use here.

10. This paragraph consists of the first and last sentences of Wis JI-Criminal 140, Burden of Proof and Presumption of Innocence.

11. Section 979.08(2) provides: "The jury's verdict shall be based upon a finding of probable cause and shall be unanimous." The instruction is based on Wis JI-Criminal 515, Unanimous Verdict and Selection of Presiding Juror.

2302A INQUEST: SUGGESTED VERDICTS

We, the undersigned jurors, find as follows:

1. Is there probable cause to believe that the death of (name of deceased) was caused under circumstances constituting (name of offense submitted to the jury), contrary to section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes?[1]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2302A was originally published in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2009. It adopted a new format and did not make any substantive changes.

This provides a suggested form for verdict questions submitted to the inquest jury. Instructions explaining the questions are provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2302.

Section 979.08(3) specifies the form of the verdict:

> . . . The verdict shall be in a form which permits the following findings:
> (a) Whether the deceased came to his or her death by criminal means and, if so, the specific crimes committed and the name of the person or persons, if known, having committed the crimes.
> (b) Whether the deceased came to his or her death by natural causes, accident, suicide or an act privileged by law.

1. Section 979.08(1) provides that "[t]he instructions shall include those criminal offenses for which the judge or court commissioner believes a reasonable jury might return a verdict based upon a finding of probable cause." Thus, if supported by the evidence, instructions on more than one offense may be required. If that is the case, the Committee recommends submitting additional questions in essentially the same form as question 1, specifying a different offense and including a definition of that offense.

2. The model is set up for the simple case where one person is being considered as the person who committed the crime. If more than one person is being considered, the Committee recommends adding a separate question for each person.

3. The model is drafted to provide for the selection of the one of the alternatives. If more than one of the alternatives is raised by the evidence, the Committee suggests adding questions for each one.

- - - - - - - - -

Following are the instructions that need to be modified for a Chapter 980 case.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2500 was originally published in 2011 and revised in 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2015; it reflected a change in the title of Wis JI-Criminal 180.

100 OPENING INSTRUCTIONS [modified]

Members of the jury:

The court will now instruct you upon the principles of law which you are to follow in considering the evidence and in reaching your verdict.

It is your duty to follow all of these instructions. Regardless of any opinion you may have about what the law is or ought to be, you must base your verdict on the law I give you in these instructions. Apply that law to the facts in the case which have been properly proven by the evidence. Consider only the evidence received during this trial and the law as given to you by these instructions and from these alone, guided by your soundest reason and best judgment, reach your verdict.

If any member of the jury has an impression of my opinion as to whether or not the respondent is a sexually violent person, disregard that impression entirely and decide the issues of fact solely as you view the evidence. You, the jury, are the sole judges of the facts, and the court is the judge of the law only.

162 AGREED FACTS [modified]

[IF THE AGREED FACTS GO TO AN ELEMENT OF THE CRIME, A PERSONAL WAIVER BY THE DEFENDANT IS REQUIRED.]

The parties have stipulated or agreed to the existence of certain facts, and you must accept these facts as conclusively proved. (In this case, the parties have stipulated to the following facts:)

[state the agreed facts]

180 STATEMENTS OF RESPONDENT

The State has introduced evidence of (a statement) (statements) which it claims (was) (were) made by the respondent. It is for you to determine how much weight, if any, to give to (the) (each) statement.

In evaluating (the) (each) statement, you must determine three things:

- whether the statement was actually made by the respondent. Only so much of a statement as was actually made by a person may be considered as evidence.
- whether the statement was accurately restated here at trial.
- whether the statement or any part of it ought to be believed.

You should consider the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of (the) (each) statement, along with all the other evidence in determining how much weight, if any, the statement deserves.

300 CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES

It is the duty of the jury to scrutinize and to weigh the testimony of witnesses and to determine the effect of the evidence as a whole. You are the sole judges of the credibility, that is, the believability, of the witnesses and of the weight to be given to their testimony.

In determining the credibility of each witness and the weight you give to the testimony of each witness, consider these factors:

- whether the witness has an interest or lack of interest in the result of this trial;
- the witness' conduct, appearance, and demeanor on the witness stand;
- the clearness or lack of clearness of the witness' recollections;
- the opportunity the witness had for observing and for knowing the matters the witness testified about;
- the reasonableness of the witness' testimony;
- the apparent intelligence of the witness;
- bias or prejudice, if any has been shown;
- possible motives for falsifying testimony; and
- all other facts and circumstances during the trial which tend either to support or to discredit the testimony.

Then give to the testimony of each witness the weight you believe it should receive.

[GIVE THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH ONLY WHEN THE RESPONDENT TESTIFIES.]

[The respondent has testified in this case, and you should not discredit the testimony just because the respondent is the subject of a petition for commitment. Use the same factors to determine the credibility and weight of the respondent's testimony that you use to evaluate the testimony of any other witness.]

There is no magic way for you to evaluate the testimony; instead, you should use your common sense and experience. In everyday life, you determine for yourselves the reliability of things people say to you. You should do the same thing here.

315 RESPONDENT ELECTS NOT TO TESTIFY

[TO BE GIVEN ONLY IF REQUESTED BY RESPONDENT.]

The respondent has the right not to testify in this proceeding.

The respondent's decision not to testify must not be considered by you in any way and must not influence your verdict in any manner.

460 CLOSING INSTRUCTION

Now, members of the jury, the duties of counsel and the court have been performed. The case has been argued by counsel. The court has instructed you regarding the rules of law which should govern you in your deliberations. The time has now come when the great burden of reaching a just, fair, and conscientious decision of this case is to be thrown wholly upon you, the jurors, selected for this important duty. You will not be swayed by sympathy, prejudice, or passion. You will be very careful and deliberate in weighing the evidence. I charge you to keep your duty steadfastly in mind and, as upright citizens, to render a just and true verdict.

You are to decide only whether or not the respondent is a sexually violent person. Any consequences of your verdict are matters for the court alone to decide and must not affect your deliberations.

[Give instructions on the verdicts submitted.]

515 UNANIMOUS VERDICT AND SELECTION OF PRESIDING JUROR

Before the jury may return a verdict which may legally be received, the verdict must be reached unanimously; all 12 jurors must agree in order to arrive at a verdict.

When you retire to the jury room, select one of your members to preside over your deliberations. That person's vote is entitled to no greater weight than the vote of any other juror.

If you need to communicate with the court while you are deliberating, send a note through a bailiff, signed by the presiding juror. To have a complete record of this trial, it is important that you communicate with the court only by a written note. If you have questions, the court will talk with the attorneys before answering so it may take some time. Your should continue your deliberations while you wait for an answer. The court will answer any questions in writing or orally here in open court.

When you have agreed upon your verdict, have it signed and dated by the person you have selected to preside.

After you have reached a verdict:

- The presiding juror will notify the bailiff that a verdict has been reached.
- Everyone will return to the courtroom.
- The verdict will be read into the record in open court.
- The court may ask each of you if you agree with the verdict.

Swear the officer.

2501 PRELIMINARY INSTRUCTION: COMMITMENT AS A SEXUALLY VIOLENT PERSON UNDER CHAPTER 980, WIS. STATS.

A petition has been filed alleging that (name) is a sexually violent person. A sexually violent person is one who has been convicted of a sexually violent offense and is dangerous to others because he or she currently has a mental disorder that makes it more likely than not that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence.

Wisconsin law requires that a jury determine whether or not a person is a sexually violent person. That is the purpose of this hearing.

You will now hear testimony. At the conclusion of the hearing, you will be asked to decide whether or not (name) is a sexually violent person.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2501 was approved by the Committee in October 1994 and was revised in 1999 and 2005. The 2005 revision reflected changes made in Chapter 980 by 2003 Wisconsin Act 187. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2011; it involved nonsubstantive changes in the text.

2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended the definition of "sexually violent person" in § 980.01(7) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence with "makes it likely" that the person will do so. The Act also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instructions use "makes it more likely than not" throughout.

2502 COMMITMENT AS A SEXUALLY VIOLENT PERSON UNDER CHAPTER 980, WIS. STATS.

BEGIN WITH THE OPENING INSTRUCTIONS THAT WOULD BE USED IN A CRIMINAL CASE. MOST CAN BE USED WITHOUT CHANGE. INCLUDED IMMEDIATELY BELOW IS WIS JI-CRIMINAL 145 AND INCLUDED AT THE END IS WIS JI CRIMINAL 140, BOTH OF WHICH ARE MODIFIED FOR USE HERE.

A petition has been filed alleging that (name) is a sexually violent person. A sexually violent person is one who has been convicted of a sexually violent offense and is dangerous to others because he or she currently has a mental disorder that makes it more likely than not[1] that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence.

You will now be asked to decide whether or not (name) is a sexually violent person.

The Petition

A petition is nothing more than a written, formal allegation that a person is a sexually violent person. You are not to consider it as evidence against (name) in any way.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find that (name) is a sexually violent person, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements are established.[2]

The Elements That Must be Proved

1. That (name) has been convicted of[3] a sexually violent offense.

ELECT ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEPENDING ON WHAT IS ALLEGED IN THE PETITION.

[(Name crime specified in § 980.01(6)(a)) is a sexually violent offense.][4]

[(Name crime specified in § 980.01(6)(b)) may be a sexually violent offense if it is sexually motivated.[5] "Sexually motivated" means that one of the purposes for the offense was the actor's sexual arousal or gratification or the sexual humiliation or degradation of the victim.[6]]

2. That (name) currently has a mental disorder.

"Mental disorder" as used here, means a condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity that predisposes a person to engage in acts of sexual violence[7] and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior.[8]

The term "mental disorder" is also used in a more general way by the mental health profession to diagnose and describe mental health-related symptoms and disabilities. Only those mental disorders that predispose a person to engage in acts of sexual violence and cause serious difficulty in controlling behavior are sufficient for purposes of commitment as a sexually violent person.[9]

You are not bound by medical opinions given by witnesses, or by labels or definitions used by witnesses, relating to what is or is not a mental disorder.[10]

3. That (name) is dangerous[11] to others because (he) (she) has a mental disorder which makes it more likely than not[12] that (he) (she) will engage in one or more[13] future acts of sexual violence.

Meaning of "Acts of Sexual Violence"

"Acts of sexual violence" means acts which would constitute "sexually violent offenses."[14]

ELECT ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEPENDING ON WHAT IS ALLEGED IN THE PETITION.[15]

[(Name crime or crimes specified in § 980.01(6)(a)) is a sexually violent offense.][16]

[(Name crime or crimes specified in § 980.01(6)(b)) may be a sexually violent offense if it is sexually motivated.[17] "Sexually motivated" means that one of the purposes for the offense was the actor's sexual arousal or gratification or the sexual humiliation or degradation of the victim.[18]]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF EVIDENCE OF OTHER SEXUALLY VIOLENT OFFENSES HAS BEEN ADMITTED.

Evidence of Other Offenses

[Evidence has been submitted that (name) committed other sexually violent offenses before committing (identify offense on which the petition is based) . This evidence alone is not sufficient to establish that (name) has a mental disorder. Before you may find that (name) has a mental disorder, you must be so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case.[19]]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the state has proved all three elements, you should find that (name) is a sexually violent person.

If you are not so satisfied, you must not find that (name) is a sexually violent person.

State's Burden of Proof

In reaching your verdict, examine the evidence with care and caution. Act with judgment, reason, and prudence.

The law presumes that (name) is not a sexually violent person. Furthermore, (name) does not have to prove anything. The burden is on the State to convince you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name) is a sexually violent person.

If you can reconcile the evidence upon any reasonable hypothesis consistent with (name) not being a sexually violent person, you should do so and find that (name) is not a sexually violent person.

The term "reasonable doubt" means a doubt based upon reason and common sense. It is a doubt for which a reason can be given, arising from a fair and rational consideration of the evidence or lack of evidence. It means such a doubt as would cause a person of ordinary prudence to pause or hesitate when called upon to act in the most important affairs of life.

A reasonable doubt is not a doubt which is based on mere guesswork, speculation, sympathy, or fear. A reasonable doubt is not a doubt such as may be used to escape the responsibility of a decision.

While it is your duty to give (name) the benefit of every reasonable doubt, you are not to search for doubt. You are to search for the truth.[20]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2502 was originally published in 1995 and was revised in 1996, 1997, 1999, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004, 2006, 2007, 2011, 2012, 2016, and 2021. The 2011 revision changed the definition of

"mental disorder" – see footnote 9. The 2016 revision added new footnote 20. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it added new footnote 14.

The 2007 revision of this instruction reflected changes made in Chapter 980 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434, [effective date: August 1, 2006]. A significant change is the reduction from four elements to three. Former element 2 was deleted; it required that the jury find that the petition was filed within 90 days of the person's release from custody. The source of this requirement was State v. Thiel, 2000 WI 67, 235 Wis.2d 823, 612 N.W.2d 94, where the court held that this was a fact for the jury. See footnote 2, below. Thiel was based on the plain meaning of the statutes:

- § 980.05(3)(a) then required that the state prove "the allegations in the petition beyond a reasonable doubt"; and,
- § 980.02(2)(ag) identified the 90-day requirement as something that must be alleged in the petition.

Act 434 amended § 980.05(3)(a) as follows:

(3)(a) At a trial on a petition under this chapter, the petitioner has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the person who is the subject of the petition is a sexually violent person.

Act 434 also repealed § 980.02(2)(ag).

Since Thiel was based on the plain meaning of the statutes, and since the statutes have been changed, the second element of Wis JI-Criminal 2502 has been deleted and the number of elements reduced from four to three.

Other significant changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 were:

- changes in the lists of "sexually violent offenses" in § 980.01(6)(a) and (b);
- creation of § 980.05(2m)(c), which allows trial by a jury less than 12 if the parties agree and the court approves;
- repeal of § 980.05(1m), which provided that "all constitutional rights available to a defendant in a criminal proceeding are available" to a person facing a Chapter 980 commitment; and,
- creation of §§ 980.031 - 980.038, which specify the procedures for the commitment hearing.

Before 2005 Wisconsin Act 434, significant changes in Chapter 980 had been made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 187. It amended § 980.02(2)(c) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" with "makes it likely." Act 187 also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instruction uses "more likely than not" throughout. The effective date of Act 187 is April 22, 2004. Section 8 of the Act, Initial applicability, reads as follows:

The treatment of section 980.01(1m) and (7) of the statutes, the renumbering and amendment of section 980.08(4) of the statutes, and the creation of section 980.08(4)(b)2. of the statutes first apply to hearings, trials, and proceedings that are commenced on the effective date of this subsection.

The changes made by Act 187 apply to all proceedings conducted on or after its effective date, including hearings held for individuals originally committed under Chapter 980 before the effective date.

State v. Tabor, 2005 WI 107, 282 Wis.2d 768, 699 N.W.2d 663.

This instruction is for the original commitment as a "sexually violent person" under chapter 980. Subsection 980.05(2) provides that "[t]he person who is the subject of the petition, the person's attorney, or the petitioner may request that a trial under this section be to a jury of 12." Subsection 980.03(3) provides that "[n]otwithstanding s. 980.05(2), if the person, the person's attorney, or the petitioner does not request a jury trial, the court may on its own motion require that the trial be to a jury." A verdict must be unanimous. § 980.03(3).

The 1995 version of this instruction was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Matek, 223 Wis.2d 611, 589 N.W.2d 441 (Ct. App. 1998). The court rejected the defendant's argument that the following statement should have been added to the instruction:

"Commitment must be based on a current diagnosis of a present disorder that specifically causes the person to be prone to sexually violent acts in the future."

The Committee believes the substance of the statement is included in the current version of the instruction, which was amended in 1999 to add the word "currently" to the statement of element 2. and to add the word "future" to the statement of element 3.

A Chapter 980 petition may be pursued against a person whose crime did not qualify as a Chapter 980 predicate offense at the time of conviction but did qualify at the time he neared the end of his sentence. State ex rel. Washington v. State, 2012 WI App 74, 343 Wis.2d 434, 819 N.W.2d 305.

In State v. Spaeth, 2014 WI 71, 355 Wis.2d 761, 850 N.W.2d 93, a petition for a Chapter 980 commitment was filed based on a conviction that was reversed while the petition was pending. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed the trial court's dismissal of the petition, holding that "the sufficiency of a Chapter 980 petition should be assessed as of the time of filing." 355 Wis.2d 761, ¶3. The court noted: "The fact that Spaeth's conviction was later overturned unquestionably impacts the strength of the State's case for his commitment, but this does not negate the validity of the State's petition at the time of the filing." 355 Wis.2d 761, ¶34.

Section 980.063(1) requires that if a person is found to be sexually violent person, the court shall require the person to provide a biological specimen for DNA analysis. 2013 Wisconsin Act 20 amended the statute to further require that "[t]he court shall inform the person that he or she may request expungement under s. 165.77(4)." The expungement referred to relates to inclusion in the DNA data bank.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2503 for a recommended verdict form. State v. Madison, 2004 WI App 46, 271 Wis.2d 218, 678 N.W.2d 607, rejected the argument that a special verdict was required in Chap. 980 cases either by § 805.12(1) or principles of equal protection. The court noted: ". . . our holding should not be read to conclude a respondent in a Wis. Stat. ch. 980 commitment proceeding should never have a special verdict." 271 Wis.2d 218, ¶10.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2505 and 2506 for instructions for the decision on discharge from a commitment under chapter 980.

The constitutionality of Wisconsin's Chapter 980 has been consistently upheld. To summarize, the challenges involve two types of claims. First, claims that the statutes violate protections against ex post facto laws and double jeopardy have been rejected on the basis that the statutes have a civil (treatment) purpose, not a criminal (punitive) one. State v. Carpenter, 197 Wis.2d 252, 541 N.W.2d 105 (1995). The United States Supreme Court reached the same conclusion with respect to the Kansas law, which closely resembles Chapter 980. Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346 (1997). Second, claims based on due process and equal protection have been rejected on the basis that the statutes provide a sufficient definition of the "mental disorder" that is the predicate for a commitment. State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995); State v. Laxton, 2002 WI 82, 646 Wis.2d 185, 646 N.W.2d 784. Also see, Kansas v. Hendricks, supra, and Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407 (2002).

In State v. Rachels, 2002 WI 81, 646 Wis.2d 334, 646 N.W.2d 784, the court reaffirmed the constitutionality of Chapter 980 despite statutory changes made by 1999 Wisconsin Act 9. Those changes provided for automatic commitment to an institution and put limits on re examinations.

In State v. Bush, 2005 WI 103, 283 Wis.2d 90, 699 N.W.2d 80, the court rejected a due process challenge, summarizing its conclusion as follows:

> ¶40 . . . due process does not require proof of a recent overt act in evaluating the dangerousness of the offender when there has been a break in the offender's incarceration and the offender is reincarcerated for nonsexual behavior. Substantive due process allows for a chapter 980 commitment when there is sufficient evidence of current dangerousness. We decline to adopt any bright-line rule that requires current dangerousness to be proven by a particular type of evidence.

Equal protection principles do not require proof of a recent overt act for Chapter 980 commitments. See State v. Post, supra, and State v. Feldmann, 2007 WI App 35, 300 Wis.2d 474, 730 N.W.2d 440.

The State is not required to present expert testimony to prove element three—that a person is dangerous because his or her mental disorder makes it more likely than not that he or she will reoffend in a sexually violent manner. State v. Stephenson, 2020 WI 92, ¶¶19-29, 394 Wis. 2d 703, 951 N.W.2d 819. In Stephenson, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that this element – regarding the likelihood the respondent will engage in future acts of sexual violence – is well within the province of the lay factfinder. Therefore, though expert testimony on the third element may inform the factfinder's decision, such testimony is not necessary to prove the element. While Stephenson involves a discharge proceeding rather than an original commitment, it also discusses more generally whether expert opinion testimony on dangerousness is required. In view of the Court's discussion, and given that the State must prove the same three elements in both original commitment and discharge proceedings, the Committee concluded Stephenson's holding also applies to original commitment proceedings.

In State v. Franklin, 2004 WI 38, 270 Wis.2d 271, 677 N.W.2d 276, the court held that "during a commitment proceeding under ch. 980, § 904.04(2) does not apply to evidence offered to prove that the respondent has a mental disorder that makes it substantially probable that the respondent will commit acts of sexual violence in the future." ¶1. The "other acts" evidence must, however, be relevant and not unfairly prejudicial. Franklin, supra, ¶16.

In State v. Sugden, 2010 WI App 166, ¶3, 330 Wis.2d 628, 795 N.W.2d 456, the court held that "the rule of completeness" did not require that an excluded part of the expert's report be put before the jury – that part stated that, if Sugden were released, his risk of reoffending was diminished by the fact that he would be supervised on parole for 22 years – until he was 74 years old.

Regarding appointments of experts under § 980.08(3) [for the court] and § 980.08(4) [for the person facing commitment], see State v. Thiel, 2004 WI App 225, 277 Wis.2d 698, 691 N.W.2d 388.

In State v. Parrish, 2002 WI App 263, 258 Wis.2d 521, 654 N.W.2d 273, the court held that "claim preclusion" does not bar a Chapter 980 petition following revocation of parole where a pre parole revocation petition under Chapter 980 had been unsuccessful.

Several state appellate court decisions have addressed procedural matters relating to chapter 980 proceedings. In State v. Byers, 2003 WI 186, 263 Wis.2d 113, 665 N.W.2d 729, the court held that a district attorney may file Chapter 980 petition only if the Department of Corrections requests it and the Department of Justice decides not to file. A chapter 980 petition is timely if filed within 90 days of release from confinement based in any part on a sexually violent offense. State v. Keith, 216 Wis.2d 61, 573 N.W.2d 888 (Ct. App. 1997). Chapter 980 applies to crimes committed on the Lac Du Flambeau reservation. State v. Burgess, 2002 WI App 264, 258 Wis.2d 548, 654 N.W.2d 81. The general guarantee of criminal-related constitutional rights in 980.05(1m) does not overrule the alternate provisions for venue in 980.02(4) and (5). State v. Tainter, 2002 WI App 296, 259 Wis.2d 387, 655 N.W.2d 538. If there is a finding that a person is an appropriate candidate for supervised release, it is an erroneous exercise of discretion to commit that person to a secure facility rather than developing a workable plan for supervised release. State v. Keding, 214 Wis.2d 362, 571 N.W.2d 450 (Ct. App. 1997). Because a sexual predator commitment is civil, the time limits for civil appeal, not a criminal appeal, apply. State v. Brunette, 212 Wis.2d 139, 567 N.W.2d 647 (Ct. App. 1997). In State v. Zanelli, 212 Wis.2d 358, 569 N.W.2d 301 (Ct. App. 1997), the court addressed a variety of issues relating to sexual predator commitment proceedings: timely filing of petition; filing did not breach the earlier plea agreement that did not mention chapter 980; "sworn" petition is not required; reference at the hearing to silence when interviewed was improper; chapter 980 hearings are within the exception to patient-psychologist privilege; the use of a previously-prepared presentence report is within the court's discretion; and the evidence is found to be sufficient to support the commitment. In State v. Treadway, 2002 WI App 195, 257 Wis.2d 467, 651 N.W.2d 334, the court addressed: the time for filing the petition; the number of peremptory challenges allowed; admissibility of a probation officer's opinion regarding the likelihood the individual would reoffend; and, the sufficiency of the evidence to establish that the individual was "a sexually violent person."

The rights and procedures in § 51.61 regarding court authorization of involuntary medication for committed persons not competent to refuse medication apply to persons committed under chapter 980. State v. Anthony D.B., 2000 WI 94, 237 Wis.2d 1, 614 N.W.2d 435.

1. 2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended § 980.02(2)(c) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" with "makes it likely." Act 187 also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instruction uses "more likely than not" throughout.

2. 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 amended § 980.05(3)(a) to provide that "the petitioner has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the person who is the subject of the petition is a sexually violent person." Before the amendment, that statute required that the petitioner prove "the allegations in the petition" and § 980.02(2)(ag) required that the petition allege that it was filed within 90 days of the person's release from custody. State v. Thiel, 2000 WI 67, 235 Wis.2d 823, 612 N.W.2d 94, held that this was a fact for the jury. Thiel was based on the plain meaning of the statutes but those statutes were changed by Act 434. Since the statutes have been changed, the former second element of Wis JI-Criminal 2502 has been deleted and the number of elements reduced from four to three.

3. The instruction is drafted for a case alleging that the person has been "convicted of" a sexually violent offense. But persons may also be committed under chapter 980 if they have been "found delinquent for a sexually violent offense" or "found not guilty of a sexually violent offense by reason of mental disease or defect." § 980.02(2)(a)2. and 3. If either of these other options is present, the appropriate term must be substituted for "convicted of" throughout the instruction.

4. Subsection 980.01(6)(a), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434, provides that the following crimes are "sexually violent offenses":

- § 940.225(1) First Degree Sexual Assault
- § 940.225(2) Second Degree Sexual Assault
- § 948.225(3) Third Degree Sexual Assault
- § 948.02(1) First Degree Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.02(2) Second Degree Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.025 Repeated Acts Of Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.06 Incest With A Child
- § 948.07 Child Enticement
- § 948.085 Sexual Assault Of A Child Placed In Substitute Care

2005 Wisconsin Act 434 also created subsection (6)(am) to include as a sexually violent offense: "An offense that, prior to June 2, 1994, was a crime under the law of this state and that is comparable to any crime specified in par. (a)." This is consistent with the conclusion reached in State v. Irish, 210 Wis.2d 107, 565 N.W.2d 161 (Ct. App. 1997), where the court held that a conviction for child enticement under former § 944.12 can be the predicate for a sexual predator commitment. A conviction under § 944.11(3), 1973 74 Wis. Stats., can be a "sexually violent offense" because the conduct remains prohibited under § 948.02(1), a statute listed in § 948.01(6). "The legislature clearly intended to include, within the definition of 'sexually violent offense,' the conduct prohibited under a previous version of a statute enumerated in Wis. Stat. § 980.01(6), as long as the conduct prohibited under the predecessor statutes remains prohibited under the current enumerated statute." State v. Pharm, 2000 WI App 167, ¶19, 238 Wis.2d 97, 617 N.W.2d 163.

5. Section 980.01(6)(b), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434, provides that the following crimes are "sexually violent offenses" if they were sexually motivated:

- § 940.01 First Degree Intentional Homicide
- § 940.02 First Degree Reckless Homicide
- § 940.03 Felony murder
- § 940.05 Second Degree Intentional Homicide
- § 940.06 Second Degree Reckless Homicide
- § 940.19(2) Battery [Substantial Battery With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(4) Battery [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(5) Battery [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(6) Battery [Substantial Risk Of Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.195(4) Battery To An Unborn Child (Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.195(5) Battery To An Unborn Child [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.30 False Imprisonment

- § 940.305 Taking Hostages
- § 940.31 Kidnapping
- § 941.32 Administering A Dangerous Or Stupefying Drug
- § 943.10 Burglary
- § 943.32 Robbery
- § 948.03 Physical Abuse Of A Child

2005 Wisconsin Act 434 also created subsection (6)(bm) to read:

(6)(bm) An offense that, prior to June 2, 1994, was a crime under the law of this state and that is comparable to any crime specified in par. (b) and that is determined, in a proceeding under s. 980.05(3)(b), to have been sexually motivated.

Subsection 980.05(3)(b) provides that if the petition alleges one of these crimes, "the state is required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the alleged sexually violent act was sexually motivated."

6. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(5), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434. Act 434 amended the statute to include reference to "for the sexual humiliation or degradation of the victim."

7. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(2). The Wisconsin Supreme Court found the definition "satisfies the mental condition component required by substantive due process for involuntary mental commitment." State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 303, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995).

The Wisconsin definition of "mental disorder" is almost identical to the definition used in the state of Washington's Community Protection Act of 1990, which allows the commitment of "sexually violent predators." The Washington law uses the term "mental abnormality" where Wisconsin uses "mental disorder," but defines it as follows: "a congenital or acquired condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity which predisposes the person to the commission of criminal sexual acts." RCW 71.09.020(2). The Washington Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the predator provisions in In re Young, 857 P.2d 989 (Wash. 1993). A federal court in Washington found the definition to be inadequate because it created "an unacceptable tautology." Young v. Weston, 898 F. Supp. 744, 750 (D.C. Wash. 1995).

The Kansas Supreme Court has held that a similar definition of "mental abnormality" found in the Kansas Sexually Violent Predator Act failed to satisfy constitutional standards. In re Hendricks, 912 P.2d 129 (Kan. 1996). The United States Supreme Court reversed the state court decision. See Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346 (1997).

8. The phrase "and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior" was added in February 2002 in response to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407 (2002). Crane vacated a decision of the Kansas Supreme Court that held the Kansas "sexually violent predator" statute was unconstitutional because it did not require a finding that the individual could not control his dangerous behavior. The Kansas court concluded that Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346 (1997), required that finding. Crane held that Hendricks did not set forth a requirement of total or complete lack of control. "It is enough to say that there must be proof of serious difficulty in controlling behavior." Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 413. The provisions of Wisconsin's Chapter 980 are similar to, though not identical with, the Kansas statutes reviewed in Crane. The Committee concluded that adding reference to "serious difficulty in controlling behavior" to the definition of "mental disorder" was an appropriate response to Crane.

On July 1, 2002, the Wisconsin Supreme Court decided State v. Laxton, 2002 WI 82, 254 Wis.2d 185, 646 N.W.2d 784. The court reaffirmed that Wisconsin's Chapter 980 is constitutional, held that a separate finding on difficulty in controlling behavior is not required, and held that a jury instruction without reference to "difficulty . . ." was not error: "In summary, we have concluded that civil commitment under Wis. Stat. ch. 980 does not require a separate factual finding that an individual's mental disorder involves serious difficulty for such person in controlling his or her behavior. The requisite proof of lack of control is established by proving the nexus between the person's mental disorder and dangerousness." 2002 WI 82, ¶30.

The Laxton court acknowledged the February 2002 revision of Wis JI Criminal 2502 in a footnote:

> 14. We recognize that after Crane, Wisconsin Jury Instruction Criminal 2502 was revised to add language linking the mental disorder to the person's difficulty in controlling behavior. The revised jury instruction reads, in part:
> > "Mental disorder" means a condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity that predisposes a person to engage in acts of sexual violence and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior. . . . Not all persons with a mental disorder are predisposed to commit sexually violent offenses or have serious difficulty in controlling behavior. Wis JI-Criminal 2502 (Special Release 2/2002) (footnotes omitted).
> The revised language was not used in Laxton's trial. Thus, we do not discuss the impact of the revised language, nor do we comment with either approval or disapproval of the revised language.
> 2002 WI 82, ¶24, footnote 14.

The Committee originally interpreted Crane as requiring that the "serious difficulty in controlling behavior" issue be communicated to the jury. Laxton clearly states that it need not be, because it is implicit in the other standards for a Chapter 980 commitment. Despite the decision in Laxton, the Committee decided to keep the Crane addition in Wis JI-Criminal 2502, concluding, in short, that it is prudent to make explicit what is implicit in the statutory standard.

The evidence was found to be sufficient in a post Laxton case in State v. Burgess, 2002 WI App 264, 258 Wis.2d 548, 654 N.W.2d 81. Also see State v. Tainter, 2002 WI App 296, 259 Wis.2d 389, 655 N.W.2d 538.

9. The 2011 revision changed the definition of "mental disorder" to make it more understandable to the jury and to address an inconsistency in the previously published version. In an unpublished decision, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals noted that the 2007 version of the instruction was "internally inconsistent" in its definition of "mental disorder," but concluded that the instruction as a whole properly conveyed the required elements. State v. Williams, No. 2010AP781, decided Nov. 18, 2010.

The source of the difficulty is that "mental disorder" is used as a term of art in Chapter 980 and has a specific definition – see § 980.01(2) – that is essential to the constitutionality of the sexually violent persons law. See State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 306, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995). However, "mental disorder" is also the term used in a broader sense by mental health professionals to describe and categorize mental health-related symptoms. [See Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 4th Edition, American Psychiatric Association (1994).] And, the term is one that lay persons, including jurors, may also use in a non-technical sense. The revised instruction acknowledges that the term "mental disorder" may have these other meanings in other contexts but emphasizes that "as used here" for purposes of Chapter 980 commitment, it must be given its specific Chapter 980 meaning.

In State v. Adams, 223 Wis.2d 60, 588 N.W.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1998), the court found the evidence sufficient to establish "mental disorder" and held that an antisocial personality disorder can qualify as a "mental disorder" if it predisposes the specific defendant to sexual violence. In State v. Zanelli, 223 Wis.2d 545, 589 N.W.2d 687 (Ct. App. 1998), the court found that the evidence was sufficient to show "mental disorder" based on pedophilia and held that proof is not limited to literal compliance with the DSM IV criteria for pedophilia – the ultimate issue is whether a "mental disorder" is established.

"[T]he jury must unanimously agree that [the person] suffers from a 'mental disorder' that predisposes him to commit acts of sexual violence . . . [U]nanimity requirements are satisfied, even if jurors disagree as to which mental disease predisposes the defendant to recidivism." State v. Pletz, 2000 WI App 221, ¶19, 239 Wis.2d 49, 619 N.W.2d 97.

10. This statement is based on the one included in Wis JI-Criminal 605, Instruction on the Issue of the Defendant's Criminal Responsibility (Mental Disease). A slightly different version of this statement was cited in Post as an "apt analogy illustrating the need for separation between legal and medical definitions" when "descriptions designed for clinical use are transplanted into the forensic setting." State v. Post, supra, 197 Wis.2d 279, 305.

11. In State v. Bush, 2005 WI 103, 283 Wis.2d 90, 699 N.W.2d 80, the court made several general comments about proof of the "dangerousness" requirement: due process does not require proof of a recent overt act while on parole [¶29]; ". . . chapter 980 is reserved for only the most dangerous offenders" [¶32]; "predicting an offender's dangerousness under chapter 980 is a complex evaluation" [¶33]; an offender's behavior while incarcerated can be relevant to a determination of current dangerousness [¶37]; and, ". . . the sexually violent offense for which Bush is incarcerated may be relevant evidence of current dangerousness." [¶38].

In State v. Sorenson, 2002 WI 78, 254 Wis.2d 54, 646 N.W.2d 354, the defendant contended it was error for the trial court to preclude him from introducing evidence relating to a prior conviction for a sexual offense in his Chapter 980 commitment trial. He sought to present evidence that the victim had recanted as part of a challenge to the claim that he suffered from a mental disorder and was dangerous. The Wisconsin Supreme Court remanded the case for a determination whether the recantation evidence "meets the test for newly discovered evidence sufficient to warrant a new trial." 2002 WI 78, ¶2. If it does, "any application of issue preclusion to exclude this evidence from Sorenson's ch. 980 trial would be fundamentally unfair. . ." 2002 WI 78, ¶25. [Note: Sorenson did not challenge the validity of the prior conviction. He sought to challenge its probative value as to the "mental disorder" and "dangerous to others" requirements.]

In State v. Olson, 2006 WI App 32, 290 Wis.2d 202, 712 N.W.2d 61, the court of appeals rejected a claim that the Chapter 980 definition "is unconstitutional because its definition of 'dangerousness' lacks a 'temporal context' limited to 'imminent danger.' . . . It is the propensity for sexual violence, not the precise point at which it may manifest itself, that makes the individual particularly threatening to society." ¶1.

Evidence of possible conditions of supervision is properly excluded from a commitment proceeding because it is not relevant to determining whether the person is a sexually violent person. State v. Mark, 2006 WI 78, ¶41, 292 Wis.2d 1, 718 N.W.2d 90.

12. 2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended 980.02(2)(c) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" with "makes it likely." Act 187 also created 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instruction uses "more likely than not" throughout. See the Comment preceding note 1, supra, discussing the effective date of the change. In State v. Nelson, 2007 WI App 2, 298 Wis.2d 453, 727 N.W.2d 364, the court of appeals held that the change from "substantially probable" to "likely" did not violate the person's rights to due process or equal protection.

A preceding version of this instruction defined "substantial probability" as "much more likely than not." See State v. Curiel, 227 Wis.2d 389, 597 N.W.2d 697 (1999). For cases finding the evidence sufficient to satisfy the "substantial probability" standard, see State v. Marberry, 231 Wis.2d 581, 605 N.W.2d 612 (Ct. App. 1999) and State v. Brown, 2002 WI App 260, 258 Wis.2d 237, 655 N.W.2d 157.

In State v. Smalley, 2007 WI App 219, 305 Wis.2d 709, 741 N.W.2d 286, the court of appeals concluded that it was error for an expert to testify that his understanding of "more likely than not" meant "more than zero." However, the court determined that this "isolated misstep did not prevent the real controversy from being tried." ¶2. The court elaborated on the meaning of "more likely than not":

> ¶12 "More likely than not" is not an obscure or specialized term of art, but a commonly used expression. It is hard to think of a clearer definition of the term than the term itself; though perhaps its expansion to "more likely to happen than not to happen" is more explicit. We find it difficult to imagine that any juror was without an understanding of the phrase's meaning before, during or after the trial, or that any juror thought the phrase meant something other than "more likely to happen than not to happen."

13. The 2007 revision added the reference to "one or more" acts. 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 amended the definition of "sexually dangerous person" in sub. (7) of § 980.01 as follows: ". . . and who is dangerous because he or she suffers from a mental disorder that makes it likely that the person will engage in one or more acts of sexual violence." While the instruction does not directly use this definition, element 3. expresses the same concept, using the statement in § 980.02(2)(c): "The person is dangerous to others because the person's mental disorder makes it likely that he or she will engage in acts of sexual violence." Act 434 did not amend sub. (2)(c) to add the reference to "one or more." However, Act 434 amended § 980.05(3)(a) to read:

(3)(a) At a trial on a petition under this chapter, the petitioner has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the person who is the subject of the petition is a sexually violent person.

The Committee concluded that this was a sufficient basis for adding the reference to "one or more" to the definition in the instruction.

14. This was originally the Committee's conclusion; it was not directly stated in the statutes. However, 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 created § 980.01(1b) to read as follows: "'Act of sexual violence' means conduct that constitutes the commission of a sexually violent offense." This is virtually the same definition adopted in the instruction.

This interpretation results in having "sexually violent offense" as a part of each of three parts of the jury's determination. First, the person must have had a prior conviction for a "sexually violent offense." Second, the person's mental disorder must predispose the person to engage in acts of sexual violence, defined as "sexually violent offenses." Third, the person must be dangerous because he has mental disorder which makes it more likely than not that he will engage in acts of sexual violence, again defined as "sexually violent offenses."

15. The Committee assumes that most cases will involve reference to the same "acts of sexual violence" for the purposes of both the second and third factual determinations. See note 16. If they differ, or if it is believed necessary to describe the offenses specifically, the instruction should be tailored to refer to the different offenses that apply in each situation.

16. See note 4, supra, for the offenses specified in § 980.01(6)(a). Since "mental disorder" is defined as a condition that predisposes a person to engage in "acts of sexual violence," it is apparently required that the predisposition go to one or more of the specific offenses that fit the statutory definition of "sexually violent offense." Thus, it may be necessary in some cases to refer to the elements of the offense.

17. See note 5, supra, for the offenses specified in § 980.01(6)(b). Since "mental disorder" is defined as a condition that predisposes a person to engage in "acts of sexual violence," it is apparently required that the predisposition go to one or more of the specific offenses that fit the statutory definition of "sexually violent offense." Thus, it may be necessary in some cases to refer to the elements of the offense.

18. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(5), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434. Act 434 amended the statute to include reference to "for the sexual humiliation or degradation of the victim."

19. The first sentence of the material in brackets is based on § 980.05(4) which provides that "[e]vidence that the person . . . was convicted for or committed sexually violent offenses before committing the offense or act on which the petition is based is not sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the person has a mental disorder."

20. The explanation of the state's burden of proof is based on the standard instruction for criminal cases, Wis JI-Criminal 140 Burden Of Proof And Presumption Of Innocence. The concluding sentence of that instruction, which also appears here, was reviewed by the Committee in 2016. The Committee's conclusions, which also apply here, are described as follows in footnote 5, Wis JI-Criminal 140:

> In 2016, the Committee received several inquiries about the phrase "you are to search for the truth," some based on a recent law review article. Cecchini and White, "Truth Or Doubt? An Empirical Test Of Criminal Jury Instructions," 50 U. Richmond Law Review 1139 (2016). After careful consideration, the Committee decided not to change the text of the instruction. Challenges to including "search for the truth" in the reasonable doubt instruction have been rejected by Wisconsin appellate courts. State v. Avila, 192 Wis.2d 870, 890, 532 N.W.2d 423 (1995) (overruled on other grounds in State v. Gordon, 2003 WI 69, ¶40, 262 Wis.2d 380, 663 N.W.2d 765): "In the context of the entire instruction, we conclude that [JI 140] did not dilute the State's burden of proving guilt beyond a reasonable doubt." Also see, Manna v. State, 179 Wis. 384, 399 340, 192 N.W. 160 (1923).
> If an addition to the text is desired, the Committee recommends the following, which is modeled on the 1962 version of Wis JI Criminal 140:
> You are to search for the truth and give the defendant the benefit of any reasonable doubt that remains after carefully considering all the evidence in the case.

2503 VERDICT: COMMITMENT AS A SEXUALLY VIOLENT PERSON UNDER CHAPTER 980, WIS. STATS.

The following two forms of verdict will be submitted to you for your consideration.

One reading: "We, the jury, find that (name) is a sexually violent person as alleged in the petition."

And the other reading: "We, the jury, do not find that (name) is a sexually violent person."

It is for you to determine which one of the forms of verdict submitted you will bring in as your verdict.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2503 was approved by the Committee October 1994. It was republished without change in 1997, 2000, and 2011.

2505 PRELIMINARY INSTRUCTION: HEARING ON DISCHARGE OF A SEXUALLY VIOLENT PERSON UNDER CHAPTER 980, WIS. STATS.

Wisconsin law provides that a person may be committed to the custody of the Department of Health and Family Services if the person is found to be a sexually violent person. (Name of petitioner) was committed under this law.

A sexually violent person is one who has been convicted of a sexually violent offense and is dangerous to others because he or she currently has a mental disorder that makes it more likely than not that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence.

Wisconsin law provides that a person committed may petition for discharge. (Name of petitioner) has filed a petition for discharge and Wisconsin law also provides that a jury determine whether the petition for discharge should be granted. The burden of proof is on the State to satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear and convincing that (name of petitioner) is still a sexually violent person.

At the conclusion of the hearing you will be asked to decide whether (name of petitioner) is still a sexually violent person.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2505 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 1999, 2005 and 2012. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2014; it updated the Comment.

This instruction is intended to be used as a preliminary instruction at the beginning of a hearing on a petition for discharge of a person committed as a "sexually violent person" under Chapter 980. See §§ 980.09 and 980.095. Section 980.09, as originally enacted, provided that the discharge hearing "shall be to the court." The Wisconsin Supreme Court held in State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995), that equal protection requires that the person be afforded the right to a jury at the discharge hearing. The Post decision compared Chapter 980 proceedings with those applicable to civil mental commitments under Chapter 51, and held that a 6-person jury and the "clear and convincing" burden of proof applied. Based on the comparison with Chapter 51, the Committee concluded that a five-sixths verdict should apply. See § 51.20(11)(b), providing for a five-sixths verdict for civil commitment reexaminations.

2005 Wisconsin Act 434 [effective date: August 1, 2006] repealed and recreated § 980.09 and created § 980.095. Both sections were also amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 84 [effective date: December 14, 2013]. Section 980.09(3) provides for a trial before the court or a jury at which "the state has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the person meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person." Section 980.095 provides as follows with regard to the trial:

- the district attorney or the department of justice, whichever filed the original petition, or the person who filed the petition for discharge may request that the trial be held before a jury of 6. [§ 980.095(1)(a)].

- a jury is deemed waived unless it is demanded within 10 days of the determination by the court that a court or jury would likely conclude under s. 980.09(1) that the person's condition has sufficiently changed. [§ 980.095(1)(a)].

- jury selection procedures are set forth in § 980.095(1)(b).

- the verdict must be agreed to by at least 5 jurors. [§ 980.095(1)(c)]

2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended the definition of "sexually violent person" in § 980.01(7) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence with "makes it likely" that the person will do so. The Act also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instructions use "makes it more likely than not" throughout.

Wis JI-Criminal 2506 is the instruction to be given at the end of the hearing.

2506 DISCHARGE OF A SEXUALLY VIOLENT PERSON UNDER CHAPTER 980, WIS. STATS.

You will now be asked to decide whether (name) is still a sexually violent person.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find that (name) is still a sexually violent person, the state must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear and convincing that the following three facts are established.[2]

The Facts That Must Be Established

1. That (name) has been convicted of[3] a sexually violent offense.

   ELECT ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEPENDING ON THE BASIS FOR THE COMMITMENT.

   [(Name crime specified in § 980.01(6)(a)) is a sexually violent offense.][4]

   [(Name crime specified in § 980.01(6)(b)) may be a sexually violent offense if it is sexually motivated.[5] "Sexually motivated" means that one of the purposes for the offense was the actor's sexual arousal or gratification.][6]

2. That (name) currently has a mental disorder.

   "Mental disorder" as used here, means a condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity that predisposes a person to engage in acts of sexual violence[7] and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior.[8]

   The term "mental disorder" is also used in a more general way by the mental health profession to diagnose and describe mental health-related symptoms and disabilities. Only those mental disorders that predispose a person to engage in acts of sexual violence and cause serious difficulty in controlling behavior are sufficient for purposes of commitment as a sexually violent person.[9]

You are not bound by medical opinions given by witnesses, or by labels or definitions used by witnesses, relating to what is or is not a mental disorder.[10]

3. That (name) is dangerous[11] to others because (he) (she) has a mental disorder which makes it more likely than not[12] that (he) (she) will engage in one or more[13] future acts of sexual violence.

Meaning of "Acts of Sexual Violence"

"Acts of sexual violence" means acts which would constitute "sexually violent offenses."[14]

ELECT ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEPENDING ON THE BASIS FOR THE COMMITMENT.[15]

[(Name crime or crimes specified in § 980.01(6)(a)) is a sexually violent offense.][16]

[(Name crime or crimes specified in § 980.01(6)(b)) may be a sexually violent offense if it is sexually motivated.[17] "Sexually motivated" means that one of the purposes for the offense was the actor's sexual arousal or gratification.][18]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF EVIDENCE OF OTHER SEXUALLY VIOLENT OFFENSES HAS BEEN ADMITTED.

Evidence of Other Offenses

[Evidence has been submitted that (name) committed other sexually violent offenses before committing (identify offense on which the commitment is based). This evidence alone is not sufficient to establish that (name) has a mental disorder.[19] Before you may find that (name) has a mental disorder, you must be so satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear and convincing.]

Jury's Decision

The following verdict will be submitted to you for your consideration:

"Is (name) still a sexually violent person?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear and convincing that (name) has been convicted of a sexually violent offense, that (he) (she) has a mental disorder, and that (he) (she) is dangerous to others because the mental disorder makes it more likely than not that (he) (she) will engage in one or more future acts of sexual violence.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

In reaching your verdict, examine the evidence with care and caution. Act with judgment, reason, and prudence.

The burden is on the State to satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence that is clear and convincing that (name) is still a sexually violent person.

"Clear and convincing evidence" means evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, clearly has more convincing power.

"Reasonable certainty" means that you are persuaded based upon a rational consideration of the evidence. Absolute certainty is not required, but a guess is not enough to meet the burden of proof.[20]

The law provides that any verdict returned by the jury shall be agreed to by at least five of the jurors. I ask you to try to be unanimous if you can.[21]

Closing

When you retire to the jury room select one of your members to preside over your deliberations. His or her vote is entitled to no greater weight than the vote of any other juror.

When you have agreed upon your verdict, have it signed and dated by the person you have selected to preside. At the foot of the verdict, you will find a place provided where a dissenting juror, if there is one, will sign his or her name. Either the blank line or the space below it may be used for that purpose.

Swear the officer.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2506 was originally published in 1996 and was revised in 1997, 1999, 2005, 2012, 2015, 2017, and 2021. The 2012 revision changed the definition of "mental disorder" – see footnote 9 – and revised and updated the Comment. The 2015 revision added a definition of the burden of persuasion and updated the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it added to the Comment.

This instruction is for the finding at a hearing on a petition for discharge of a person committed as a "sexually violent person" under Chapter 980. See §§ 980.09 and 980.095. Section 980.09, as originally enacted, provided that the discharge hearing "shall be to the court." The Wisconsin Supreme Court held in State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995), that equal protection requires that the person be afforded the right to a jury at the discharge hearing. The Post decision compared Chapter 980 proceedings with those applicable to civil mental commitments under Chapter 51, and held that a 6 person jury and the "clear and consuming" burden of proof applied. Based on the comparison with Chapter 51, the Committee concluded that a five sixths verdict should apply. See § 51.20(11)(b), providing for a five sixths verdict for civil commitment reexaminations.

2005 Wisconsin Act 434 [effective date: August 1, 2006] repealed and recreated § 980.09 and created § 980.095. Both sections were also amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 84 [effective date: December 14,

2013]. Section 980.09(3) provides for a trial before the court or a jury at which "the state has the burden to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the person meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person." Section 980.095 provides as follows with regard to the trial:

- the district attorney or the department of justice, whichever filed the original petition, or the person who filed the petition for discharge may request that the trial be held before a jury of 6. [§ 980.095(1)(a)].

- a jury is deemed waived unless it is demanded within 10 days of the determination by the court that a court or jury would likely conclude under s. 980.09(1) that the person's condition has sufficiently changed. [§ 980.095(1)(a)].

- jury selection procedures are set forth in § 980.095(1)(b).

- the verdict must be agreed to by at least 5 jurors. [§ 980.095(1)(c)]

2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended the definition of "sexually violent person" in § 980.01(7) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence with "makes it likely" that the person will do so. The Act also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instructions use "makes it more likely than not" throughout.

Wis JI Criminal 2505 provides a preliminary instruction to be given at the beginning of the hearing.

There is no case law or statutory requirement that the jury at a Chapter 980 discharge hearing be advised of the consequence of a decision to discharge; whether to grant a person's request for an instruction telling the jury that he would be under supervision is within the trial court's discretion. State v. Lombard, 2004 WI App 52, 271 Wis.2d 529, 678 N.W.2d 338.

In State v. Richard, 2011 WI App 66, 333 Wis.2d 708, 799 N.W.2d 509, the court specified the procedure to be followed when a petition for discharge is filed:

> ¶11. . . . The circuit court must then engage in a two-step review process to determine if the offender is entitled to a discharge hearing. First, the court must conduct a "paper review" of the offender's petition and its attachments to see if there are any alleged facts "from which the court or jury may conclude the person's condition has changed since the date of his or her initial commitment order so that the person does not meet the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person." State v. Arends, 2010 WI 46, ¶¶25 26, 325 Wis.2d 1, 784 N.W.2d 513 (quoting § 980.09(1)). The purpose of the paper review "is to weed out meritless and unsupported petitions." Arends, 325 Wis.2d 1, ¶28. If there are no facts alleged from which a trier of fact could conclude that the offender is no longer a sexually violent person, the circuit court must deny the petition. Id., ¶30.
> ¶12 If the offender passes the initial screen, the circuit court shall proceed to the second step of the review process. Id.; Wis. Stat. § 980.09(2). Under the second step of this process, the court must consider: (1) any current and past reexamination reports or treatment progress reports filed under Wis. Stat. § 980.07; (2) relevant facts in the petition and in the State's written response; (3) arguments of counsel; and (4) any supporting documentation provided by the person or the State.

> Arends, 325 Wis.2d 1, ¶32. If, after this second step in the review process, the circuit court determines that a fact finder could conclude that an offender no longer meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person, the offender is entitled to a discharge hearing. Id., ¶43. If not, the offender's discharge petition must be denied.

The requirement in § 980.09(1) that a petition for a discharge from a Chapter 980 commitment allege facts from which the court or jury may conclude the person's condition has changed "includes not only a change in the person himself or herself, but also a change in the professional knowledge and research used to evaluate a person'\'s mental disorder or dangerousness, if the change is such that a fact-finder could conclude the person does not meet the criteria for a sexually violent person." State v. Ermers, 2011 WI App 113, ¶1, 336 Wis.2d 451, 802 N.W.2d 540.

Section 980.09(1) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 84 [effective date: December 14, 2013] to slightly change the wording that was quoted in the Richard and Ermers cases. The amended statute provides that:

> . . . The court shall deny the petition . . . without a hearing unless the petition alleges facts from which the court or jury would likely conclude the person's condition has changed since the most recent order denying a petition for discharge after a hearing on the merits, or since the date of his or her initial commitment if the person has never received a hearing on the merits of a discharge petition, so that the person no longer meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person.

In State v. Richard, 2014 WI App 28, 353 Wis.2d 219, 844 N.W.2d 370, the issue was whether a person committed under Chapter 980 was entitled to a discharge hearing when the petition was "based on amendments to an actuarial instrument used at trial that, in an evaluating expert's opinion, reduced the petitioner's risk to reoffend below the legal threshold of 'more likely than not.'" The court of appeals concluded "that when a petitioner alleges that he or she is no longer a sexually violent person, and supports his or her petition with a recent psychological evaluation applying new professional research to conclude that the petitioner is no longer likely to commit acts of sexual violence, the petitioner is entitled to a discharge hearing . . ." Richard, ¶1.

Summary judgment is not available to the respondent in a Chapter 980 proceeding. State v. Allison, 2010 WI App 103, 329 Wis.2d 129, 789 N.W.2d 120. In Allison, the experts who examined the committed person in connection with discharge proceedings concluded he was no longer dangerous. This led him to file a motion for summary judgment on the ground the state could not prove he was still a sexually violent person. Id., ¶¶6-9. The court of appeals held that, under the language of § 980.09, a court handling a discharge petition has two options: deny the petition without a hearing or hold a hearing. Thus, summary judgment was not available. Id., ¶¶13-25.

In State v. Stephenson, 2020 WI 92, 394 Wis. 2d 703, 951 N.W.2d 819, the Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed an issue not directly raised in Allison: whether the state is required to present expert testimony to prove that a person is dangerous because their mental disorder makes it more likely than not that they will reoffend in a sexually violent manner. The Court held that this element – regarding the likelihood the respondent will engage in future acts of sexual violence – is well within the province of the lay factfinder. Therefore, though expert testimony on the third element may inform the factfinder's decision, such testimony is not necessary to prove the element.

In State v. Alger, 2015 WI 3, 360 Wis.2d 193, 858 N.W.2d 346, the court addressed the applicability of the Daubert standard for expert testimony to a discharge proceeding in a Chapter 980 case. The Daubert standard, as adopted in § 907.02(1), applies to "actions" or "special proceedings" commenced on or after February 1, 2011. In Alger (and in Knipfer, a companion case consolidated for appeal) the commitment proceedings took place before that effective date but the discharge proceedings began after the date. The court concluded that ". . . although Alger's and Knipfer's petitions seek relief from those original commitments, those filings do not constitute the 'commencement' of an 'action' or a 'special proceeding.'" ¶4. Therefore, the standard in § 907.02(1) does not apply.

1. Section 980.09(3) provides that at the hearing, the "state has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that the petitioner meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person."

2. In State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 328 29, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "equal protection demands that a right to a jury trial be made available at this important stage," referring to the discharge hearing. A jury of six is sufficient [§ 980.095(1)] and "the state has the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that the person meets the criteria for commitment as a sexually violent person." See § 980.09(3). The required aspects of a "sexually violent person" finding are set forth in § 980.02(2):

(a) the person has been convicted of a sexually violent offense [or found delinquent for, or found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect of such an offense];

(b) has a mental disorder;

(c) is dangerous to others because the person's mental disorder makes it more likely than not that he or she will engage in acts of sexual violence.

These three facts are defined in the instruction in the same manner as in the instruction for the original commitment. See Wis JI-Criminal 2502.

The clear and convincing evidence standard satisfies due process at a discharge proceeding. State v. Talley, 2015 WI App 4, 359 Wis.2d 521, 859 N.W.2d 155.

3. The instruction is drafted for a case alleging that the person has been "convicted of" a sexually violent offense. But persons may also be committed under Chapter 980 if they have been "found delinquent for a sexually violent offense" or "found not guilty of a sexually violent offense by reason of mental disease or defect." § 980.02(2)(a)2. and 3. If either of these other options is present, the appropriate term must be substituted for "convicted of" throughout the instruction.

4. Section 980.01(6)(a) provides that the following crimes are "sexually violent offenses":

- § 940.225(1) First Degree Sexual Assault
- § 940.225(2) Second Degree Sexual Assault
- § 948.225(3) Third Degree Sexual Assault
- § 948.02(1) First Degree Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.02(2) Second Degree Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.025 Repeated Acts Of Sexual Assault Of A Child
- § 948.06 Incest With A Child
- § 948.07 Child Enticement

- § 948.085 Sexual Assault Of A Child Placed In Substitute Care

In State v. Irish, 210 Wis.2d 107, 565 N.W.2d 161 (Ct. App. 1997), the court held that a conviction for child enticement under former § 944.12 can be the predicate for a sexual predator commitment. See note 4, Wis JI-Criminal 2502.

5. Section 980.01(6)(b), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434, provides that the following crimes are "sexually violent offenses" if they were sexually motivated:

- § 940.01 First Degree Intentional Homicide
- § 940.02 First Degree Reckless Homicide
- § 940.03 Felony murder
- § 940.05 Second Degree Intentional Homicide
- § 940.06 Second Degree Reckless Homicide
- § 940.19(2) Battery [Substantial Battery With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(4) Battery [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(5) Battery [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.19(6) Battery [Substantial Risk Of Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.195(4) Battery To An Unborn Child (Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Bodily Harm]
- § 940.195(5) Battery To An Unborn Child [Causing Great Bodily Harm With Intent To Cause Great Bodily Harm]
- § 940.30 False Imprisonment
- § 940.305 Taking Hostages
- § 940.31 Kidnapping
- § 941.32 Administering A Dangerous Or Stupefying Drug
- § 943.10 Burglary
- § 943.32 Robbery
- § 948.03 Physical Abuse Of A Child

2005 Wisconsin Act 434 also created subsection (6)(bm) to read:

> (6)(bm) An offense that, prior to June 2, 1994, was a crime under the law of this state and that is comparable to any crime specified in par. (b) and that is determined, in a proceeding under s. 980.05(3)(b), to have been sexually motivated.

Subsection 980.05(3)(b) provides that if the petition alleges one of these crimes, "the state is required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the alleged sexually violent act was sexually motivated."

6. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(5).

7. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(2). The Wisconsin Supreme Court found the definition "satisfies the mental condition component required by substantive due process for involuntary mental commitment." State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 303, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995).

The Wisconsin definition of "mental disorder" is almost identical to the definition used in the state of Washington's Community Protection Act of 1990, which allows the commitment of "sexually violent predators." The Washington law uses the term "mental abnormality" where Wisconsin uses "mental disorder," but defines it as follows: "a congenital or acquired condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity which predisposes the person to the commission of criminal sexual acts." RCW 71.09.020(2). The Washington Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the predator provisions in In re Young, 857 P.2d 989 (Wash. 1993). A federal court in Washington found the definition to be inadequate because it created "an unacceptable tautology." Young v. Weston, 898 F. Supp. 744, 750 (D.C. Wash. 1995).

The Kansas Supreme Court has held that a similar definition of "mental abnormality" found in the Kansas Sexually Violent Predator Act failed to satisfy constitutional standards. In re Hendricks, 912 P.2d 129 (Kan. 1996). The United States Supreme Court reversed the state court decision. See Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346 (1997).

8. The phrase "and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior" was added in February 2002 in response to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407 (2002). Crane vacated a decision of the Kansas Supreme Court that held the Kansas "sexually violent predator" statute was unconstitutional because it did not require a finding that the individual could not control his dangerous behavior. The Kansas court concluded that Kansas v. Hendricks, 521 U.S. 346 (1997), required that finding. Crane held that Hendricks did not set forth a requirement of total or complete lack of control. "It is enough to say that there must be proof of serious difficulty in controlling behavior." Kansas v. Crane, 534 U.S. 407, 413. The provisions of Wisconsin's Chapter 980 are similar to, though not identical with, the Kansas statutes reviewed in Crane. The Committee concluded that adding reference to "serious difficulty in controlling behavior" to the definition of "mental disorder" was an appropriate response to Crane.

On July 1, 2002, the Wisconsin Supreme Court decided State v. Laxton, 2002 WI 82, 254 Wis.2d 185, 646 N.W.2d 784. The court reaffirmed that Wisconsin's Chapter 980 is constitutional, held that a separate finding on difficulty in controlling behavior is not required, and held that a jury instruction without reference to "difficulty . . ." was not error: "In summary, we have concluded that civil commitment under Wis. Stat. ch. 980 does not require a separate factual finding that an individual's mental disorder involves serious difficulty for such person in controlling his or her behavior. The requisite proof of lack of control is established by proving the nexus between the person's mental disorder and dangerousness." 2002 WI 82, ¶30.

The Laxton court acknowledged the February 2002 revision of Wis JI-Criminal 2502 in a footnote:

> 14. We recognize that after Crane, Wisconsin Jury Instruction Criminal 2502 was revised to add language linking the mental disorder to the person's difficulty in controlling behavior. The revised jury instruction reads, in part:
> > "Mental disorder" means a condition affecting the emotional or volitional capacity that predisposes a person to engage in acts of sexual violence and causes serious difficulty in controlling behavior. . . . Not all persons with a mental disorder are predisposed to commit sexually violent offenses or have serious difficulty in controlling behavior. Wis JI-Criminal 2502 (Special Release 2/2002) (footnotes omitted).
> The revised language was not used in Laxton's trial. Thus, we do not discuss the impact of the revised language, nor do we comment with either approval or disapproval of the revised language.

2002 WI 82, ¶24, footnote 14.

The Committee originally interpreted Crane as requiring that the "serious difficulty in controlling behavior" issue be communicated to the jury. Laxton clearly states that it need not be, because it is implicit in the other standards for a Chapter 980 commitment. Despite the decision in Laxton, the Committee decided to keep the Crane addition in Wis JI-Criminal 2502, concluding, in short, that it is prudent to make explicit what is implicit in the statutory standard.

The evidence was found to be sufficient in a post Laxton case in State v. Burgess, 2002 WI App 264, 258 Wis.2d 548, 654 N.W.2d 81. Also see State v. Tainter, 2002 WI App 296, 259 Wis.2d 389, 655 N.W.2d 538.

9. The 2011 revision changed the definition of "mental disorder" to make it more understandable to the jury and to address an inconsistency in the previously published version. In an unpublished decision, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals noted that the 2007 version of the instruction was "internally inconsistent" in its definition of "mental disorder," but concluded that the instruction as a whole properly conveyed the required elements. State v. Williams, No. 2010AP781, decided Nov. 18, 2010.

The source of the difficulty is that "mental disorder" is used as a term of art in Chapter 980 and has a specific definition – see § 980.01(2) – that is essential to the constitutionality of the sexually violent persons law. See State v. Post, 197 Wis.2d 279, 306, 541 N.W.2d 115 (1995). However, "mental disorder" is also the term used in a broader sense by mental health professionals to describe and categorize mental health-related symptoms. [See Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, 5th Edition, American Psychiatric Association (2013).] And, the term is one that lay persons, including jurors, may also use in a non-technical sense. The revised instruction acknowledges that the term "mental disorder" may have these other meanings in other contexts but emphasizes that "as used here" for purposes of Chapter 980 commitment, it must be given its specific Chapter 980 meaning.

In State v. Adams, 223 Wis.2d 60, 588 N.W.2d 336 (Ct. App. 1998), the court found the evidence sufficient to establish "mental disorder" and held that an antisocial personality disorder can qualify as a "mental disorder" if it predisposes the specific defendant to sexual violence. In State v. Zanelli, 223 Wis.2d 545, 589 N.W.2d 687 (Ct. App. 1998), the court found that the evidence was sufficient to show "mental disorder" based on pedophilia and held that proof is not limited to literal compliance with the DSM IV criteria for pedophilia – the ultimate issue is whether a "mental disorder" is established.

"[T]he jury must unanimously agree that [the person] suffers from a 'mental disorder' that predisposes him to commit acts of sexual violence . . . [U]nanimity requirements are satisfied, even if jurors disagree as to which mental disease predisposes the defendant to recidivism." State v. Pletz, 2000 WI App 221, ¶19, 239 Wis.2d 49, 619 N.W.2d 97.

10. This statement is based on the one included in Wis JI-Criminal 605, Instruction on the Issue of the Defendant's Criminal Responsibility (Mental Disease). A slightly different version of this statement was cited in Post as an "apt analogy illustrating the need for separation between legal and medical definitions" when "descriptions designed for clinical use are transplanted into the forensic setting." State v. Post, supra, 197 Wis.2d 279, 305.

11. In State v. Bush, 2005 WI 103, 283 Wis.2d 90, 699 N.W.2d 80, the court made several general comments about proof of the "dangerousness" requirement: due process does not require proof of a recent overt act while on parole [¶29]; ". . . chapter 980 is reserved for only the most dangerous offenders" [¶32];

"predicting an offender's dangerousness under chapter 980 is a complex evaluation" [¶33]; an offender's behavior while incarcerated can be relevant to a determination of current dangerousness [¶37]; and, ". . . the sexually violent offense for which Bush is incarcerated may be relevant evidence of current dangerousness." [¶38].

In State v. Sorenson, 2002 WI 78, 254 Wis.2d 54, 646 N.W.2d 354, the defendant contended it was error for the trial court to preclude him from introducing evidence relating to a prior conviction for a sexual offense in his Chapter 980 commitment trial. He sought to present evidence that the victim had recanted as part of a challenge to the claim that he suffered from a mental disorder and was dangerous. The Wisconsin Supreme Court remanded the case for a determination whether the recantation evidence "meets the test for newly discovered evidence sufficient to warrant a new trial." 2002 WI 78, ¶2. If it does, "any application of issue preclusion to exclude this evidence from Sorenson's ch. 980 trial would be fundamentally unfair. . ." 2002 WI 78, ¶25. [Note: Sorenson did not challenge the validity of the prior conviction. He sought to challenge its probative value as to the "mental disorder" and "dangerous to others" requirements.]

In State v. Olson, 2006 WI App 32, 290 Wis.2d 202, 712 N.W.2d 61, the court of appeals rejected a claim that the Chapter 980 definition "is unconstitutional because its definition of 'dangerousness' lacks a 'temporal context' limited to 'imminent danger.' . . . It is the propensity for sexual violence, not the precise point at which it may manifest itself, that makes the individual particularly threatening to society." ¶1.

Evidence of possible conditions of supervision is properly excluded from a commitment proceeding because it is not relevant to determining whether the person is a sexually violent person. State v. Mark, 2006 WI 78, ¶41, 292 Wis.2d 1, 718 N.W.2d 90.

12. 2003 Wisconsin Act 187 amended the definition of "sexually violent person" in § 980.01(7) by replacing "creates a substantial probability" that the person will engage in future acts of sexual violence with "makes it likely" that the person will do so. The Act also created § 980.01(1m), which defines "likely" as "more likely than not." Rather than use "likely" and define it, the instructions use "makes it more likely than not" throughout.

In State v. Smalley, 2007 WI App 219, 305 Wis.2d 709, 741 N.W.2d 286, the court of appeals concluded that it was error for an expert to testify at a Chapter 980 commitment hearing that his understanding of "more likely than not" meant "more than zero." However, the court determined that this "isolated misstep did not prevent the real controversy from being tried." ¶2. The court elaborated on the meaning of "more likely than not":

> ¶12. "More likely than not" is not an obscure or specialized term of art, but a commonly-used expression. It is hard to think of a clearer definition of the term than the term itself; though perhaps its expansion to "more likely to happen than not to happen" is more explicit. We find it difficult to imagine that any juror was without an understanding of the phrase's meaning before, during or after the trial, or that any juror thought the phrase meant something other than "more likely to happen than not to happen."

13. The 2007 revision added the reference to "one or more" acts. 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 amended the definition of "sexually dangerous person" in sub. (7) of § 980.01 as follows: ". . . and who is dangerous because he or she suffers from a mental disorder that makes it likely that the person will engage in one or more acts of sexual violence." While the instruction does not directly use this definition, element 3. expresses the same concept, using the statement in § 980.02(2)(c): "The person is dangerous to others because the person's mental disorder makes it likely that he or she will engage in acts of sexual violence." Act 434 did not amend sub. (2)(c) to add the reference to "one or more." However, Act 434 amended § 980.05(3)(a) to read:

> (3)(a) At a trial on a petition under this chapter, the petitioner has the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt that the person who is the subject of the petition is a sexually violent person.

The Committee concluded that this was a sufficient basis for adding the reference to "one or more" to the definition in the instruction.

14. This is the Committee's conclusion; it is not directly stated in the statutes. However, another provision of Chapter 980, which requires notice to victims, provides as follows: "'Act of sexual violence' means an act or attempted act that is a basis for an allegation made in a petition under s. 980.02(2)(a)." See § 980.11(1)(a). The acts alleged in the petition are those that qualify as "sexually violent offenses."

This interpretation results in having "sexually violent offense" as a part of each of three parts of the jury's determination. First, the person must have had a prior conviction for a "sexually violent offense." Second, the person's mental disorder must predispose the person to engage in acts of sexual violence, defined as "sexually violent offenses." Third, the person must be dangerous because he has mental disorder which creates a substantial probability that he will engage in acts of sexual violence, again defined as "sexually violent offenses."

15. The Committee assumes that most cases will involve reference to the same "acts of sexual violence" for the purposes of both the second and third factual determinations. See note 12, supra. If they differ, or if it is believed necessary to describe the offenses specifically, the instruction should be tailored to refer to the different offenses that apply in each situation.

16. See note 4, supra, for the offenses specified in § 980.01(6)(a). Since "mental disorder" is defined as a condition that predisposes a person to engage in "acts of sexual violence," it is apparently required that the predisposition go to one or more of the specific offenses that fit the statutory definition of "sexually violent offense." Thus, it may be necessary in some cases to refer to the elements of the offense.

17. See note 5, supra, for the offenses specified in § 980.01(6)(b). Since "mental disorder" is defined as a condition that predisposes a person to engage in "acts of sexual violence," it is apparently required that the predisposition go to one or more of the specific offenses that fit the statutory definition of "sexually violent offense." Thus, it may be necessary in some cases to refer to the elements of the offense.

18. This is the definition provided in § 980.01(5).

19. This sentence is based on § 980.05(4) which provides for the purposes of the original commitment, that "[e]vidence that the person . . . was convicted for or committed sexually violent offenses before committing the offense or act on which the petition is based is not sufficient to establish beyond a reasonable doubt that the person has a mental disorder."

20. The paragraphs defining the burden of persuasion were added to the instruction in 2014. They are adapted from Wis JI-Criminal 140A Burden Of Proof: Forfeiture Actions.

21. Section 980.095(3) provides for a five sixths verdict.

2590 MAKING A FALSE STATEMENT IN AN APPLICATION FOR A CERTIFICATE OF TITLE — § 342.06

Section 342.06(2) of the Wisconsin Statues is violated by one who knowingly makes a false statement in an application for certificate of title.

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

The first element requires that the defendant made a false statement in an application for a certificate of title.[1]

The second element requires that the defendant made the false statement knowingly. This requires that the defendant knew the statement was false.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knowingly made a false statement in an application for a certificate of title, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2600 in 1993. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 2590 in 2004.

This instruction is for a violation of § 342.06(2), which provides as follows:

Any person who knowingly makes a false statement in an application for a certificate of title is guilty of a Class H felony.

1. The person who makes the false statement need not be the one who submits the application to the Department of Transportation. The statute applies to a person who makes a false statement in the "Dealer's Statement of Sale" portion of the application form. State v. Williams, 156 Wis.2d 296, 299, 456 N.W.2d 864 (Ct. App. 1990).

2600 OPERATING WHILE INTOXICATED: INTRODUCTORY COMMENT

CONTENTS

Scope

Material describing issues relating to "drunk driving" offenses was first published as Wis JI-Criminal 2660-2665 Introductory Comment in 1982. It outlined the major changes in Wisconsin law made by Chapters 20 and 184, Laws of 1981. The most significant of those changes was the creation of offenses based on the alcohol concentration of the driver. The material was significantly revised in 1993 to emphasize the changes made by 1991 Wisconsin Act 277. The most significant of those changes, at least in terms of its effect on the jury instructions, was the creation of "0.08" as the level of prohibited alcohol concentration for offenders with two or more prior offenses.

In 2004, this material was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 2600 and substantially expanded to collect all explanatory material relating to "operating while intoxicated offenses" – those in the Motor Vehicle Code and in the Criminal Code. "Operating while intoxicated" is used as the general term to cover operating "while under the influence" and "with a prohibited alcohol concentration." Footnotes to instructions for specific offenses refer to material contained here.

I. Motor Vehicle Code Offenses Apply "On a highway."

Section 346.61 provides that statutes defining reckless driving and operating while intoxicated – §§ 346.62 to 346.64 – apply to "highways" and to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles, whether such premises are publicly or privately owned and whether or not a fee is charged for the use thereof." Section 346.66 makes the same provision for violations relating to accidents and accident reporting – §§ 346.67 to 346.70. There is no similar restriction for Criminal Code offenses.

A. "Highway."

"Highway" is defined by sec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in s. 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

Section 346.01(1m), as created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 129, provides:

> In this chapter, in addition to the meaning given in s. 340.01(22), "highway" includes a private road or driveway that is subject to an agreement for traffic regulation enforcement under s. 349.03(5).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983). That a vehicle was operated "on a highway" may be proved circumstantially. State v. Mertes, 2008 WI App 179, 315 Wis.2d 756, 762 N.W.2d 813.

B. "Premises held out for the public . . ."

The Committee Notes to the 1957 revision of the Motor Vehicle Code provide as follows with respect to § 346.61:

> Legislative Council Note, 1957: Most provisions of this chapter are applicable only upon highways. This section gives the sections relating to reckless and drunken driving somewhat broader applicability. They will apply in such areas as parking lots, filling stations and loading platforms. This is a change in the law, for the attorney general has ruled that the present law relating to drunken driving applies only to driving on highways. 38 Atty. Gen. 184 (1949). Broader applicability, however, is in the interest of public safety and also is consistent with § 11-101 of the UVC. [Bill 99-S]

The phrase "held out to the public" has been interpreted in three Wisconsin appellate decisions. In City of Kenosha v. Phillips, 142 Wis.2d 549, 419 N.W.2d 236 (1988), the supreme court held that the privately-owned American Motors parking lot was not "held out to the public" because it is the intent of the owner that governs. The owner's intent was to hold the lot open to its employees, but not to the general public. The statute was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127 to specifically include employee parking lots.

In City of LaCrosse v. Richling, 178 Wis.2d 856, 505 N.W.2d 448 (Ct. App. 1993), the court held that the parking lot of a bar and restaurant was "held out to the public" because potential customers are part of "the public." "We believe the appropriate test is whether, on any given day, potentially any resident of the community with a driver's license and access to a motor vehicle could use the parking lot in an authorized manner." 178 Wis.2d 856, 860. The Richling test was applied in State v. Carter, 229 Wis.2d 200,

598 N.W.2d 619 (Ct. App. 1999), to hold that a parking lot of a closed gas station was also "held out to the public."

"The roadways of the Geneva National Community [a gated community] were 'held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles' because on any given day any licensed driver could enter the community unchallenged. . ." State v. Tecza, 2008 WI App 79, ¶22, 312 Wis.2d 395, 751 N.W.2d 896.

C. Instructing the jury.

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway or on "premises held out to the public . . ." is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for finding this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element.

In a case where the "highway" issue is contested, or if a case involves operating on "premises held out to the public . . .," the instruction should be modified to provide additional information to the jury. See Wis JI-Criminal 2605, PREMISES OTHER THAN HIGHWAYS, which is drafted for use with the following offenses:

- reckless driving in violation of § 346.62 [Wis JI-Criminal 2650-2654].
- operating under the influence in violation of § 346.63 [Wis JI-Criminal 2660-2669].
- failure to stop and render aid in violation of § 346.67 [Wis JI-Criminal 2670].

D. Criminal Code offenses are not limited to "highways."

Criminal Code offenses are not limited to incidents that occur on highways or any other designated premises.

II. "Motor Vehicle" and "Vehicle."

Motor Vehicle Code statutes refer to both "motor vehicles" and "vehicles" while the Criminal Code refers only to "vehicles." The definitions of the terms are slightly different.

A. Motor Vehicle Code offenses.

Most, but not all, Motor Vehicle Code offenses apply to the driving or operation of a "motor vehicle." The exceptions are offenses under § 346.63(2) involving causing injury. Those offenses apply to offenses committed by driving or operating a "vehicle." The Committee assumed that this difference was intentional on the part of the legislature, justified by the fact that offenses involving injury are considered to be more serious than simple operating offenses, thus leading to the inclusion of a broader category of conduct – namely, the operation of devices which do not fall within the definition of "motor vehicle." As to the use of "vehicle," this rationale was cited with approval in State v. Smits, 2001 WI App 45, ¶16, 241 Wis.2d 374, 626 N.W.2d 42.

There are differences in how the two terms are defined; compare the following.

Section 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle" as follows:

> "Motor vehicle" means a vehicle, including a combination of 2 or more vehicles or an articulated vehicle, which is self-propelled, except a vehicle operated exclusively on a rail. "Motor vehicle" includes, without limitation, a commercial motor vehicle or a vehicle which is propelled by electric power obtained from overhead trolley wires but not operated on rails. A snowmobile and an all-terrain vehicle shall only be considered motor vehicles for purposes made specifically applicable by statute.

Section 340.01(74) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon, or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes made specifically applicable by statute.

B. Criminal Code offenses apply to "vehicles."

All Criminal Code offenses apply to operating a "vehicle." Section 939.22(44) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

This definition "clearly includes a tractor for purposes of . . . § 940.09." State v. Sohn, 193 Wis.2d 346, 360, 535 N.W.2d 1 (Ct. App. 1995).

III. "Drive" and "Operate."

Motor Vehicle Code statutes generally apply to persons who "drive or operate" while the Criminal Code generally refers to "operation or handling."

A. Motor Vehicle Code.

Most, but not all, Motor Vehicle Code offenses are defined to apply to any person who "drives" or "operates." The exceptions are offenses under § 346.63(2) involving causing injury. Those offenses apply to offenses committed by "operating."

Section 346.63(3)(a) defines "drive" as follows:

> "Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.

Section 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows:

> "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.

The statutory definition of "operate" was originally based on case law. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955). The definition in § 346.63(3)(b) has been interpreted in Milwaukee County v. Proegler, 95 Wis.2d 614, 291 N.W.2d 608 (Ct. App. 1980); Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977); and, State v. Modory, 204 Wis.2d 538, 555 N.W.2d 399 (1996). "Operating" may be proved by circumstantial evidence – the presence of the vehicle at the gas station, the person's presence behind the wheel, his responses during questioning, the unlikelihood of the passenger's ability to operate due to his incoherent condition and the absence of any evidence the passenger was the driver. State v. Mertes, 2008 WI App 179, ¶17, 315 Wis.2d 756, 762 N.W.2d 813.

In Village of Cross Plains v. Haanstad, 2006 WI 16, ¶23, 288 Wis.2d 579, 709 N.W.2d 447, the court concluded that the defendant did not "operate" a vehicle where ". . . Haanstad was merely sitting in the driver's seat of a parked vehicle. Although the engine was running, the uncontested evidence shows that Haanstad was not the person who left the engine running. She never physically manipulated or activated the controls necessary to put the vehicle in motion."

Also see "What Constitutes Driving, Operating, Or Being In Control Of Motor Vehicle For Purposes Of Driving While Intoxicated Statute Or Ordinance," 93 A.L.R.3d 7 (1979).

B. Criminal Code.

Criminal Code offense definitions also contain an anomaly. Section 940.09, Homicide by intoxicated use of vehicle or firearm, defines the offense to apply to causing death by "the operation or handling" of a vehicle or firearm. Section 940.25, Injury by intoxicated use of a vehicle, defines the offense to apply to causing great bodily harm by "the operation" of a vehicle. The instructions for all violations of §§ 940.09 and 940.25 involving vehicles use "operate" and use the definition provided in § 346.63(3)(b), because the Criminal Code does not include a definition of the term. The instructions for violations of § 940.09 involving firearms use "handling" because the Committee concluded that it is the term that fits best with types of instrumentalities involved with those offenses.

IV. Overview: The Significance of Prior Offenses.

A. "Prior offenses" defined.

"Prior offenses" is used here as a short reference to the full statement used in the statutes: "prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1)." This includes convictions for operating while intoxicated and suspensions or revocations for refusal to submit to a chemical test for alcohol. Prior offenses from other jurisdictions are counted if the statutes are "substantially similar" or "in conformity with" Wisconsin law. For example, § 343.307(1)(a) refers to violations of a local ordinance "in conformity with" § 346.63(1). Section 343.307(1)(d) refers to convictions under the law of another jurisdiction that prohibits, for example, use of a motor vehicle while intoxicated "as those or substantially similar terms are used in that jurisdiction's laws."

In State v. List, 2004 WI App 230, 277 Wis.2d 836, 691 N.W.2d 366, the defendant argued that a prior adjudication in Illinois should not count as a "conviction" under § 343.307(1)(d). His Illinois case resulted in placement on supervision which, if successfully completed, "shall be deemed without adjudication of guilt and shall not be termed a conviction for purposes of disqualification or disabilities imposed by law upon conviction of a crime." The court of appeals disagreed, holding that § 343.307(1)(d) applies to "convictions under the law of another jurisdiction that prohibits . . . use of a motor vehicle while intoxicated . . ." ¶7. It is not concerned with how the disposition is treated under the laws of that other jurisdiction. It is a conviction under the Wisconsin definition of that term: ". . . a determination that a person has violated . . . the law . . . regardless of whether or not the penalty is rebated, suspended, or probated, in this state or any other jurisdiction. Wis. Stat. § 340.01(9r)." ¶10. However, an administrative suspension following an OWI arrest (in Missouri) does not constitute a prior offense under § 343.307. State v. Machgan, 2007 WI App 263, 306 Wis.2d 752, 743 N.W.2d 832. Also see, State v. Puchacz, 2010 WI App 30, 323 Wis.2d 741, 780 N.W.2d 736. [Michigan convictions for operating while visibly impaired are priors under § 343.307.]

In State v. Carter, 2010 WI 132, 330 Wis.2d 1, ___ N.W.2d ___, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that suspensions of a driver's operating privilege under the Illinois "zero tolerance" law are convictions under § 343.307(1)(d).

B. Motor Vehicle Code offenses: The civil-criminal distinction.

The first offense for operating while intoxicated under the Motor Vehicle Code is punished as a civil forfeiture. The same conduct is punished as a crime "if the number of convictions under ss. 940.09(1) and 940.25 in the person's lifetime, plus the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under s. 343.307(1) within a 10-year period equals 2 . . ." Section 346.65(2)(b). The ten-year period is "measured from the dates of the refusals or violations that resulted in the revocation or convictions." Section 346.65(2c).

Case law has resolved most of the issues raised by this penalty scheme. The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). A second offense must be charged as a crime; it may not be charged as a forfeiture offense. County of Walworth v. Rohner, 108 Wis.2d 713, 324 N.W.2d 682 (1982). An uncounseled first offense may be used as the basis for making the second offense a crime because there is no right to counsel in a forfeiture proceeding. State v. Novak, 107 Wis.2d 31, 318 N.W.2d 364 (1981).

C. As the basis for a reduced prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC].

The so-called per se offense of operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration was created by Chapter 20, Laws of 1981. After being referred to by several terms, including "blood alcohol concentration" or "breath alcohol concentration," the term presently used in the statutes is "prohibited alcohol concentration" [PAC]. See §§ 340.01(1v) and 340.01(46m).

The prohibited level was originally set at "0.10 or more" for all offenders. In 1993, the level was changed to 0.08 for persons with two or more prior offenses. 1991 Wisconsin Act 277. 1999 Wisconsin Act 109 revised the level again, reducing it to 0.02 for persons with three or more prior offenses. 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003] reduced the generally applicable level to 0.08, retaining the 0.02 level for persons with three or more prior offenses.

The existence of the prior offenses is presented as an element of the crime for offenses involving the 0.02 level. See the discussion at Section VI, below.

It is the number of priors that the person had at the time he or she drove or operated the vehicle that determines the applicable PAC level. State v. Sowatzke, 2010 WI App 81, 326 Wis.2d 227, 784 N.W.2d 700.

D. As the basis for increased penalties.

Penalties for violations of § 346.63 increase with the number of prior offenses. See § 346.65(2). Felony penalties apply as follows:

- a fourth offense is a Class H felony if the person has a prior offense within the 5-year period preceding the current offense – § 346.65(2)(am)4m.
- a fifth or sixth offense is a Class H felony – § 346.65(2)(am)5.
- a seventh, eighth, or ninth offense is a Class G felony; the confinement portion of bifurcated sentence shall be not less than three years – § 346.65(2)(am)6.
- a tenth or subsequent offense is a Class F felony; the confinement portion of bifurcated sentence shall be not less than four years – § 346.65(2)(am)7.

Penalties for violations of § 940.09 increase if the person has a prior offense. See § 940.09(1)(c). A first offense is a Class D felony. If the person has a prior, the offense is a Class C felony.

In State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981), the court held that enhanced penalties apply when the required number of convictions have accumulated within the period specified "regardless of the order in which the offenses were committed and the convictions were entered." This standard was applied in State v. Matke, 2005 WI App 4,278 Wis.2d 403, 692 N.W.2d 265, where the court held that Matke was properly sentenced for 6th offense OWI even though he had only three priors at the time he committed that offense. He was convicted of two additional OWI offenses before being sentenced on what is properly treated as a 6th offense. The court acknowledged that language in a prior decision, State v. Skibinski, 2001 WI App. 109, 244 Wis.2d 229, 629 N.W.2d 12, is arguably inconsistent with this conclusion. But the court held it was not bound by that language because it " was plainly not necessary to our disposition . . . and, indeed, was contrary to the result we reached. Moreover, because [it] . . . is inconsistent with controlling supreme court precedent, we are not obligated to apply it here." ¶16.

Although the number of priors is a fact that determines the applicable penalty level, it is not an issue that is presented to the jury. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

E. Collateral attack on prior convictions.

Convictions used to provide the basis for the penalty for third and subsequent offenses are subject to collateral attack in the prosecution for the current offense. See, State v. Foust, 214 Wis.2d 567, 570 N.W.2d 605 (Ct. App. 1997). The same should be true for convictions used to support the application of the 0.02 level of alcohol concentration. The only defect that may be raised is denial of the right to counsel at the time of a prior criminal conviction. See SM-16, COLLATERAL ATTACK ON PRIOR CONVICTIONS.

V. Operating With a Prohibited Alcohol Concentration.

A. Changes in the prohibited level.

The so-called per se offense of operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] was created by Chapter 20, Laws of 1981. After being referred to by several terms, including "blood alcohol concentration" or "breath alcohol concentration," the term presently used in the statutes is "prohibited alcohol concentration."

The level was originally set at 0.10 or more. In 1993, the level was changed to 0.08 for persons with two or more prior convictions, refusals, etc. 1991 Wisconsin Act 277. 1999 Wisconsin Act 109 revised the level again, reducing it to 0.02 for persons with three or more priors. 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003] reduced the generally applicable level to 0.08, retaining 0.02 for the person with three or more priors.

B. "Prohibited alcohol concentration" defined.

Section 340.01(46m), as amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30, reads as follows:

(46m) "Prohibited alcohol concentration" means one of the following:

(a) If the person has 2 or fewer prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, as counted under s. 343.307(1), an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more.

[(b) – repealed]

(c) If the person is subject to an order under § 343.301 or if the person has 3 or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, as counted under s. 343.307(1), an alcohol concentration of more than 0.02.

The reference to a person "subject to an order under § 343.301" was added by 2009 Wisconsin Act 100. [Effective date: July 1, 2010.] It means that persons required to install an ignition interlock device under § 343.301 are subject to the reduced PAC level of 0.02.

Section 340.01(1v) defines "alcohol concentration" as follows:

(1v) "Alcohol concentration" means any of the following:
(a) The number of grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of a person's blood.
(b) The number of grams of alcohol per 210 liters of a persons's breath.

C. The constitutionality of the "per se" offense.

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having an alcohol concentration of 0.10% or more was upheld in State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984):

> . . . . [a] person of common intelligence can, with a fair degree of definiteness, believe himself or herself to be in jeopardy of violating the statute if a significant quantity of alcohol has been consumed. . . . That is the point at which they are on notice – they have "clear warning" that if they drive, they do so at their own risk. 118 Wis.2d 502, 508-09.

In State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989), the court held that § 346.63(1) defines a per se breath alcohol offense and is constitutional in doing so. Individuals are not free to litigate the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level.

D. PAC level and penalties for third and subsequent offenses.

Section 346.65(2)(g) provides for increased fines for OWI offenders with three, four, five, or six priors. The level of increase depends on the alcohol concentration level:

- 0.17 to 0.199 minimum and maximum fines are doubled.
- 0.20 to 0.249 minimum and maximum fines are tripled.
- 0.25 or more minimum and maximum fines are quadrupled.

Because the alcohol concentration level increases the maximum fine, which is part of the criminal penalty for the offense, the Committee concluded that it is a fact which must be submitted to the jury. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000).

The Committee recommends handling the penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the instruction on the operating under the influence or operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration offense is given. See Wis JI-Criminal 2663C ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION LEVEL.

VI. Prior Offenses/Being Subject To An Ignition Interlock Order as an Element of the 0.02 Offense.

Until the generally applicable PAC level was changed from 0.10 to 0.08, the level was reduced to 0.08 for those offenders with two or more priors. 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003] reduced the generally applicable level to 0.08 and retained 0.02 for the person with three or more priors. See § 340.01(46m)(c). Because priors reduce the applicable PAC level, the same issues arise under current law with respect to offenses involving the 0.02 level that applied under prior law to 0.08 offenses.

The most difficult issue originally posed to the Committee by the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" was whether the fact of prior offenses was a fact that must be submitted to the jury. The Committee concluded that it was a fact for the jury but recognized that this may create practical problems.

The Committee's conclusion was confirmed by the decision in State v. Ludeking, 195 Wis.2d 132, 138, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995), which held that the fact of prior convictions was an element of the "0.08" offense:

> The plain language of § 340.01(46m)(b), defines 'prohibited alcohol concentration' to include two separate components: (1) percentage of blood alcohol concentration . . . , and (2) number of prior convictions [or suspensions or revocations]. (Emphasis in original.)

The court also acknowledged the potential for prejudice that exists when the defendant's prior record is presented to the jury but pointed to the cautionary paragraph included in the standard instruction as a way to offset that prejudicial impact. See Section VI., C., below.

The Committee reached the same decision with respect to the person being subject to an ignition interlock order. See Wis JI-Criminal 2660D, where being subject to an order under § 343.301 is included as a bracketed third element. It is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits being subject to the order.

A. State v. Alexander: Stipulation to the "status element."

The potential for prejudice was addressed, and eliminated in many cases, by the Wisconsin Supreme Court's decision in State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 627, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997). In Alexander, the court referred to the prior offenses element as a "status element" and held that if the defendant admits having two or more prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations, the "admission dispenses with the need for proof of the status element, either to a jury or to a judge." 214 Wis.2d 627, 645. When there is an admission of the status element, "admitting any evidence of the defendant's prior convictions, suspensions or revocations and submitting the status element to the jury . . . [is] an erroneous exercise of discretion." 214 Wis.2d 627, 650. The court's rationale for removing an element in this situation was that the status element involves facts "entirely outside the gravamen of the offense" and "adds nothing to the State's evidentiary depth or descriptive narrative." 214 Wis.2d 627, 648-49.

The court gave explicit direction to the trial courts as to how to handle this situation:

> When a circuit court is faced with the circumstances presented in this case, the circuit court should simply instruct the jury that they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that: 1) the defendant was driving or operating a motor vehicle on a highway; and 2) the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time . . . The "prohibited alcohol concentration" means 0.08 . . .
> 214 Wis.2d 627, 650-51.

The Committee originally implemented the approach approved in Alexander by placing the "status element" in brackets in the instructions for 0.08 offenses. If the defendant admitted the "status element," the instruction was to be given with two elements: driving or operating a motor vehicle; and having an alcohol concentration of more than 0.08. If the defendant did not admit the "status element," the instruction was to be given with a third element: having two or more prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations as counted under § 343.307(1).

The same approach is now recommended in the instructions for the 0.02 offenses. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

Regarding stipulations, see Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations.

B. Defining the priors for the jury.

The jury instructions adopted the language of the statute by wording the applicable elements as follows:

> 3. The defendant had three or more convictions, suspensions, or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1).
> [See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.]

The reference to "as counted under § 343.307(1)" is not completely satisfactory, but the Committee could not develop a better alternative. Section 343.307(1) contains six subsections detailing the kind of prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations that are to be counted. Some of these subsections have their own cross-references to other statutes. Generally, what counts are prior convictions for operating while intoxicated and prior suspensions or revocations for refusal to take a chemical test for alcohol. Offenses in other jurisdictions may count if the laws of the jurisdiction are "substantially similar to" or "in conformity with" Wisconsin law. See Section IV.,A., above.

All of this is too technical to submit to the jury. The Committee concluded that a simple reference to § 343.307(1) was the best way to proceed. It is assumed that evidence will be presented that the person's driving record shows the requisite number of prior offenses "as counted under § 343.307(1)" and thus the reference to the statute will be familiar to the jury.

C. Minimizing prejudice to the defendant.

If the prior offenses are submitted to the jury, there is a risk of unfair prejudice to the defendant. The instructions suggest that at the defendant's request, a cautionary instruction be given that limits the jury's use of the potentially prejudicial evidence to its proper purpose. (See § 901.06 which requires that a cautionary instruction be given upon request whenever evidence is admitted for a limited purpose.) The suggested instruction is modeled after those used in similar situations and provides as follows:

> Evidence has been received that the defendant had prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations. This evidence was received as relevant to the status of the defendant's driving record, which is an issue in this case. It must not be used for any other purpose and, particularly, you should bear in mind that conviction, suspension, or revocation at some previous time is not proof that the defendant operated a motor vehicle with a prohibited alcohol concentration on this occasion.
> Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

Of course, there are doubts about the efficacy of cautionary instructions like this. Defendants may prefer to keep the evidence from being admitted altogether. That option is now possible if there is an admission of the "status element" per the Alexander decision. See the discussion in VI.,A., above.

D. Being Subject To An Ignition Interlock Order

Like having three or more prior offenses, being subject to an ignition interlock order under § 343.301 reduces the PAC level to "more than 0.02." The Committee concluded that the fact of being subject to an order under § 343.301 should be handled in the same way as the facts of having three or more prior offenses. See Wis JI-Criminal 2660D.

VII. Alcohol Test Results; Evidence of Test Refusal.

A. Admissibility.

The basis for admissibility of alcohol test results is § 885.235(1g), which reads in part as follows:

> (1g) In any action or proceeding in which it is material to prove that a person was under the influence of an intoxicant or had a prohibited alcohol concentration or a specified alcohol concentration while operating or driving a > motor vehicle . . . evidence of the amount of alcohol in the person's blood at the time in question, as shown by chemical analysis of a sample of the person's blood or urine or evidence of the amount of alcohol in the person's breath, is admissible on the issue of whether he or she was under the influence of an intoxicant or had a prohibited alcohol concentration or a specified alcohol concentration if the sample was taken within 3 hours after the event to be proved. The chemical analysis shall be given effect as follows without requiring any expert testimony as to its effect: . . .

The instructions contain the following statement, intended to address the admissibility issue:

> The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).
> [See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663.]

Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235.

Test results from a test taken more than three hours after operating may be admissible and may be accorded evidentiary significance if there is sufficient support from expert testimony. State v. Fonte, 2005 WI 77, 281 Wis.2d 654, 698 N.W.2d 594.

B. Instructing on evidentiary significance.

Section 885.235 provides the statutory authority for according evidentiary significance to alcohol test results. The subsection generally applicable to operating while intoxicated offenses is § 885.235(1g)(c), which reads as follows:

> The fact that the analysis shows that the person had an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more is prima facie evidence that he or she was under the influence of an intoxicant and is prima facie evidence that he or she had an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more.

There is a gap in the authority provided by the statute: it does not address the prima facie effect of test results of 0.02 or more, which would be relevant for offenders with three or more priors, or who are subject to an ignition interlock order, who are charged with the "more than 0.02" offense.

The instructions for more than 0.08 and under the influence offenses advise the jury that a test result showing a prohibited alcohol concentration is sufficient evidence upon which to base a finding that the person was under the influence or had that alcohol concentration at the time of the driving. But the jury is also advised that they are not required to make that finding and that they may do so only if they are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case. In the Committee's judgment, this is the type of instruction required by Wis. Stat. § 903.03, which governs jury instructions on "presumptions" and "prima facie evidence."

Instructions for 0.02 offenses contain only the general reference to test results being admissible because § 885.235 does not accord test results showing more than 0.02 any prima facie effect.

C. The blood-alcohol curve.

The presence of a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of operation is the significant issue. The relevance of a test result showing a prohibited alcohol concentration at some time after operation will vary, depending on many factors, including the person's physical condition, what the person had to eat, what the person drank, the length of time over which the drinks were consumed, etc. The problem of the so-called blood-alcohol curve is discussed in State v. Vick, 104 Wis.2d 678, 312 N.W.2d 489 (1981).

Vick presented a situation where the defendant claimed his blood was absorbing alcohol at the time he was arrested and that therefore the blood alcohol concentration had not reached the prohibited level at the time of driving but only reached that level later at the time of the test. If the evidence in a case presents this problem, the instruction on the prima facie effect of test results may not be appropriate since there may be no "rational connection" between the alcohol concentration at the time of the test and a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of driving. (See Ulster Co. v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979), for a discussion of the "rational connection" requirement when instructing the jury on statutory presumptions.)

The Committee concluded that where there is a problem with the "blood-alcohol curve," it is preferable to treat the test result as relevant evidence rather than instruct the jury to give it "prima facie effect." The following is recommended:

> Evidence has been received that, within three hours after the defendant's alleged (driving) (operating) of a motor vehicle, a sample of the defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) was taken. An analysis of the sample has also been received.

> This is relevant evidence that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating). Evidence has also been received as to how the body absorbs and eliminates alcohol. You may consider the evidence regarding the analysis of the (breath) (blood) (urine) sample and the evidence of how the body absorbs and eliminates alcohol along with all the other evidence in the case, giving it just such weight as you determine it is entitled to receive.
> Wis JI-Criminal 234, BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE.

In State v. Fischer, 2010 WI 6, 322 Wis.2d 265, 778 N.W.2d 629, the defendant sought to introduce an expert's opinion testimony, based in part on the results of a preliminary breath test, to support a blood alcohol curve argument. The court held that the testimony was properly excluded:

> Wisconsin Stat. § 343.303 expressly bars PBT results in OWI cases, and to allow Wis. Stat. § 907.03 to trump that prohibition would simply nullify that provision and would consequently present a variety of needless obstacles to the investigation, prosecution, and defense of drunk driving cases. ¶4.

The court held that exclusion does not violate the defendant's constitutional right to present a defense because, even assuming the evidence is relevant and necessary, ". . . in an OWI prosecution, even if a defendant establishes a constitutional right to present an expert opinion that is based in part on PBT results, the right to do so is outweighed by the State's compelling interest to exclude that evidence." ¶5.

Fischer was granted relief as a result of his petition for habeas corpus relief in federal court. Fischer v. Ozaukee County Circuit Court, 10-C-553, E.D. Wis. Sept. 29, 2010. The federal magistrate judge concluded that "the Wisconsin Supreme Court's decision affirming the exclusion of Fischer's expert's testimony involved an unreasonable application of federal law." Slip opinion, page 18. The state's motion to alter or amend that judgment was denied. Fischer v. Van Hollen, 10-C-553, E.D. Wis. Jan. 7, 2011.

D. Reliability of testing devices.

The instructions include the following paragraph regarding the reliability of the standard devices used to test breath or blood samples for alcohol concentration:

> The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.

[See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663.]

The intent of the paragraph is to advise the jury that the state need not prove the reliability of the underlying principles upon which the breath test is based. The reliability of those principles has been satisfactorily established so that evidence of test results is admissible without a preliminary establishment in every case that those principles are valid. The testing device involved must be one whose reliability has been established. See Chapter Trans. 311, Wis. Admin. Code.

This concept is sometimes referred to as a "prima facie presumption of reliability (or accuracy)," see, for example, City of Madison v. Bardwell, 83 Wis.2d 891, 900, 266 N.W.2d 618 (1978); State v. Trailer Service, Inc., 61 Wis.2d 400, 407, 212 N.W.2d 683 (1973); and State v. Neitzel, 95 Wis.2d 191, 203, 289 N.W.2d 828 (1980). The Committee concluded that the jury should not be instructed in terms of a "presumption" but should simply be advised that the validity of the underlying scientific principles need not be established. However, the jury must be satisfied that the test procedure was proper and that the operator was qualified, and the defendant may challenge the test results on those grounds. West Allis v. Rainey, 36 Wis.2d 489, 496, 153 N.W.2d 514 (1967).

The presumption of accuracy also applies to the test results of the "Intoximeter 3000." State v. Dwinnell, 119 Wis.2d 305, 349 N.W.2d 739 (Ct. App. 1984).

The state is not required affirmatively to prove compliance with the procedures spelled out in the Wisconsin Administrative Code (Trans. 311.05 - 311.09) as a foundation for the admission of breathalyzer test results. City of New Berlin v. Wertz, 105 Wis.2d 670, 314 N.W.2d 911 (Ct. App. 1981). However, the jury should be afforded the opportunity to weigh alleged failures to conform with standards and regulations in determining the weight to accord the breathalyzer results. Wertz, at 677. The required procedures for test device certification are discussed in County of Dane v. Winsand, 2004 WI App 86, 271 Wis.2d 786, 679 N.W.2d 885.

E. The alcohol concentration chart.

Challenges to the accuracy of test results sometimes involve reliance on the DOT-published chart estimating blood alcohol concentration by reference to the number of drinks consumed, adjusted for body weight and time. The chart is admissible in drunk driving cases. State v. Hinz, 121 Wis.2d 282, 360 N.W.2d 56 (Ct. App. 1984). For an instruction on the use of the chart, see Wis JI-Criminal 237, ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION CHART.

F. Evidence of test refusal.

In State v. Albright, 98 Wis.2d 663, 298 N.W.2d 196 (Ct. App. 1980), the court of appeals reaffirmed that evidence of a defendant's refusal to take a chemical test was relevant and constitutionally admissible in a drunk driving prosecution. "A reasonable inference from refusal to take a mandatory breathalyzer test is consciousness of guilt. The person is confronted with a choice of the penalty for refusing a test, or taking a test which constitutes evidence of his sobriety or intoxication. Perhaps the most plausible reason for refusing the test is consciousness of guilt, especially in view of the option to taking an alternative test." 98 Wis.2d 663, 668-69. The evidence being relevant and there being no right to refuse to take a test, the court held there was no rationale for prohibiting comment on the refusal.

Previous decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court had reached the same conclusion, see State v. Draize, 88 Wis.2d 445, 276 N.W.2d 784 (1974); City of Waukesha v. Godfrey, 41 Wis.2d 401, 164 N.W.2d 314 (1969); State v. Kroening, 274 Wis. 266, 79 N.W.2d 810 (1956); and City of Barron v. Covey, 271 Wis. 10, 72 N.W.2d 387 (1955).

The defendant's explanation for the refusal is also admissible. Since the relevance of the refusal is that it tends to indicate a consciousness of guilt, > [t]he corollary of that rule is that any evidence that tends to rebut or diminish the force of that permissible inference is also relevant, for it tends to make less probable the fact of intoxication – a fact of consequence in this action, and, therefore, equally admissible. Thus, evidence that would tend to show that the refusal was for reasons unrelated to a consciousness of guilt or the fear that the test would reveal the intoxication, tends to abrogate, or at least diminish, the reasonableness of the inference to be drawn from an unexplained refusal to take the alcohol test.

State v. Bolstad, 124 Wis.2d 576, 585-86, 370 N.W.2d 576 (1985).

In State v. Mallick, 210 Wis.2d 427, 565 N.W.2d 245 (Ct. App. 1997), the court held that evidence of refusal to perform field sobriety tests was admissible.

In South Dakota v. Neville, 459 U.S. 553 (1983), the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the admissibility of evidence of test refusal. The Court did not base its decision on the distinction that refusal is a physical, rather than a testimonial, act. Instead, the Court held that admissibility does not violate the 5th Amendment privilege against self-incrimination because no impermissible coercion is involved: ". . . a refusal to take a blood-alcohol test, after a police officer has lawfully requested it, is not an act coerced by the officer, and this is not protected by the privilege against self-incrimination." 459 U.S. 553, 564. The defendant in Neville also argued that the due process clause prohibited reference to the refusal because he was not specifically warned that his refusal could be used against him at trial. The Court rejected this argument as well, holding that the "failure to warn was not the sort of implicit promise to forego use of evidence that would unfairly 'trick' respondent if the evidence were later offered against him at trial," 459 U.S. 553, 566.

See Wis JI-Criminal 235, REFUSAL OF DEFENDANT TO FURNISH SAMPLE FOR ALCOHOL TEST.

VIII. Defining "Under the Influence."

A. Definition for Motor Vehicle Code offenses.

The presently published instructions for Motor Vehicle Code offenses use the following definition of "under the influence":

> "Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.
>
> Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.
>
> It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.
> Wis JI-Criminal 2663.

Modifications of this definition are routinely requested and tend to focus on three related issues:

- adding the phrase ". . . to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving";
- adding "materially" to modify the word "impaired"; and,
- restoring a longer, two-paragraph, explication of "under the influence" which is generally attributed to Fond du Lac v. Hernandez, a 1969 decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

B. "Incapable of safely driving."

There is undeniably a reasonable basis for the argument that "incapable of safely driving" is an appropriate addition to the definition. It is seemingly supported by the statutory language as it now appears in § 346.63(1)(a) and by case law that quotes or restates the statute.

§ 346.63(1)(a) reads as follows:

(1) No person may drive or operate a motor vehicle while:
(a) Under the influence of an intoxicant, a controlled substance, a controlled substance analog or any combination of an intoxicant, a controlled substance and a controlled substance analog, under the influence of any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving, or under the combined influence of an intoxicant and any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving; or . . .

Despite this apparent textual basis, the Committee has concluded that "incapable of safely driving" does not apply to cases involving operating under the influence of "an intoxicant, a controlled substance, a controlled substance analog or any combination of an intoxicant, a controlled substance and a controlled substance analog."

The Committee has interpreted the statute as presenting three options, each represented by a clause in the statute that begins with "under the influence." The three separate options are:

- under the influence of an intoxicant, a controlled substance, a controlled substance analog or any combination of an intoxicant, a controlled substance and a controlled substance analog;

- under the influence of any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving;

- under the combined influence of an intoxicant and any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving.

Under this reading of the statute, the "incapable of safely driving" phrase applies only to offenses involving the second two options – those involving the influence of a drug or the combined influence of an intoxicant and a drug.

The Committee's grammatical construction is supported by the legislative history. The references to "incapable of safely driving" were added to § 346.63(1)(a) by 1983 Wisconsin Act 459. Before the 1983 revision, Wisconsin had a relatively simple statute:

> 346.63 Operating under influence of intoxicant. (1) No person may drive or operate a motor vehicle while:
> (a) Under the influence of an intoxicant or a controlled substance or a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance; or
> (b) The person has blood alcohol concentration of .10% or more . . . . Section 346.63, 1981-82 Wis. Stats.

The amendment made to sub. (1)(a) by 1983 Wisconsin Act 459 is shown below, with the new language underscored:

> (a) Under the influence of an intoxicant or a controlled substance or a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, under the influence of any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving, or under the combined influence of an intoxicant and any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving; or . . .

The Committee considered this to be strong support for its grammatical construction of the statute and reflected its conclusion in the published instructions by omitting "incapable of safely driving" from the regular under the influence instructions but including it in Wis JI-Criminal 2666, which is drafted for under the influence of a drug offenses. The conclusion was explained in a footnote to Wis JI-Criminal 2666, but was not referred to in the other instructions.

At least two appellate decisions have quoted the statute or paraphrased it in a way that suggests that "incapable of safely driving" applies to "under the influence of an intoxicant" cases. See, State v. Waalen, 130 Wis.2d 18, 27,386 N.W.2d 47 (1986); and, County of Jefferson v. Renz, 222 Wis.2d 424, 444, 588 N.W.2d 267 (Ct. App. 1998), reversed on other grounds, 231 Wis.2d 293, 603 N.W.2d 541 (1999). In neither of these cases was the specific statutory interpretation issue considered on its merits or necessary to the decision. The Committee concluded that these two references were not a sufficient basis for changing the interpretation described above.

The Committee's conclusion that "incapable of safely driving" does not apply to the regular definition of "under the influence" was adopted in State v. Hubbard, 2008 WI 92, ¶52, 313 Wis.2d 1, 752 N.W.2d 389: "The phrase 'to a degree which renders him incapable of safely driving' does not affect the definition of 'under the influence' in the Criminal Code."

C. "Materially" impaired.

The presently published instructions present a seeming inconsistency. Those for Motor Vehicle Code offenses define "under the influence" by stating that "the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired . . ." Those for Criminal Code offenses define "under the influence" by stating that "the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was materially impaired . . ." [Emphasis added]. This state of affairs has a long history; the basic steps are set forth below.

"Under the influence" is not defined in the Motor Vehicle Code, but is defined in the Criminal Code as "materially impaired". See § 939.22(42). Before 1978, the instructions for Motor Vehicle Code offenses used a definition based on case law from other states. [This definition was implicitly approved in Fond du Lac v. Hernandez. See Section VIII., D., below.] At that time, there was only one Criminal Code drunk driving crime (Homicide By Intoxicated Use . . .) and it used the § 939.22(42) definition.

In 1978, the Motor Vehicle Code instructions were revised, the Criminal Code instruction was revised, and a new Criminal Code instruction was added, for Injury [Great Bodily Harm] By Intoxicated Use . . . in violation of § 940.25. All the instructions used the same, case-law-based, definition previously used only in the Motor Vehicle Code instructions.

In 1982, a question was raised about the propriety of using the case law definition for Criminal Code offenses because it could be interpreted as stating a less demanding test than that required by the "materially impaired" standard set forth in § 939.22(42). This led the Committee to conclude that there was no reason to have different definitions for Motor Vehicle Code and Criminal Code offenses because crimes were defined in both Codes in identical language. The Committee decided that because "under the influence" was defined in the Criminal Code, that definition should also be used for Motor Vehicle Code offenses. [The Committee was aware that a Criminal Code definition does not automatically apply outside the Criminal Code, but thought it was sensible to use it in this situation.]

So the Committee adopted a new definition of "under the influence" in 1982 applicable to all drunk driving offenses and including "materially impaired." In an attempt to provide some guidance to the jury on the meaning of that phrase, the new instruction included the following:

> It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be materially, that is substantially, impaired.
> Wis JI-Criminal 2663, c. 1982.

The 1982 revision was not universally acclaimed. Several judges contacted the Committee to express dissatisfaction with it, but the Committee was not convinced that it should be changed. The issue reached the Wisconsin appellate courts when a trial judge declined to use the definition in the published instruction for a Motor Vehicle Code case, using instead the pre-1982 definition. The defendant appealed, claiming that it was error to fail to include "materially impaired." The Wisconsin Court of Appeals affirmed, holding that the definition used by the trial court correctly stated the law and that the Criminal Code definition did not apply to Motor Vehicle Code offenses. State v. Waalen, 125 Wis.2d 272, 371 N.W.2d 401 (Ct. App. 1985). The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed on slightly different grounds, holding that the definition for Motor Vehicle Code offenses is equivalent to the Criminal Code definition but that the Committee erred in equating "materially" with "substantially":

> Requiring "substantial impairment" of an individual's ability to operate a vehicle before that person could be found "under the influence" would be inconsistent with the expressed legislative intent because it would not provide maximum safety for all users of state highways. Rather, "material impairment" under sec. 939.22(42), Stats., exists when a person is incapable of driving safely, or "is without proper control of all those faculties . . . necessary to avoid danger to others."
> State v. Waalen, 130 Wis.2d 18, 27, 386 N.W.2d 47 (1986) (citations omitted)

In response to Waalen, the Committee revised the Motor Vehicle Code instructions to delete reference to "materially," with a footnote indicating that the decision appeared to approve the use of that term for Motor Vehicle Code offenses. The Committee concluded that use of "materially" invited definition but that it could not be helpfully defined without running afoul of the legislative intent recognized in Waalen. The Criminal Code instructions continued to use "materially" because it is part of the Criminal Code definition of "under the influence," but deleted reference to "substantially."

In State v. Hubbard, 2008 WI 92, 313 Wis.2d 1, 752 N.W.2d 839, the court concluded that the trial court did not err in responding to a jury question about the meaning of "materially impaired." The trial court told the jury to give the words their plain and ordinary meaning and declined to respond with language from Waalen to which the prosecution had objected. The supreme court affirmed: ". . . Hubbard's argument that 'the Waalen language' defined 'materially impaired' to give the term a 'technical' or 'peculiar' meaning in the context of criminal law is untenable." 2008 WI 92, ¶54.

D. Fond du Lac v. Hernandez: Case law definition.

The third issue relates to two paragraphs that are attributed to Fond du Lac v. Hernandez, 42 Wis.2d 473, 167 N.W.2d 408 (1969). In fact, equivalent material appeared in the uniform instructions from 1966 until 1982 and it was that definition that was used in the Hernandez case. It read as follows:

> The expression "under the influence of an intoxicant" covers not only all the well-known and easily recognized conditions and degrees of intoxication, but any abnormal mental or physical condition which is the result of indulging in any degree in intoxicating liquors (including beer) and which tends to deprive him of that clearness of intellect and control of himself which he would otherwise possess.
> A person who is even to the slightest extent under the influence of an intoxicant in the common and well-understood acceptation of the term is – to some degree at least – less able either mentally or physically, or both, to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle as powerful and dangerous a mechanism as a modern motor vehicle with safety to himself and the public. Not every man who has consumed alcoholic beverages falls within the ban of the (statute) (ordinance). If that consumption of alcoholic beverages does not cause him to be influenced in the ordinary and well-understood meaning of the term, he is not under the influence of an intoxicant within the meaning of the statute.
> Wis JI-Criminal 2663, c. 1966.

The instruction given by the trial court in the Waalen case was based on these two paragraphs, omitting only the first sentence of the second paragraph. In reviewing that instruction, the supreme court quoted the full Hernandez version and stated that in Hernandez, "[w]e rejected Hernandez's challenge to the instruction, implicitly affirming the validity of the language of the instruction." State v. Waalen, 130 Wis.2d 18, 26, 386 N.W.2d 47 (1986).

[NOTE: At the risk of providing more detail than anyone needs, the apparent original source of the two paragraphs is Hasten v. State, 35 Ariz. 427, 280 Pac. 670 (1929), where they are part of a longer discussion of the meaning of "under the influence." Hasten was referred to on another issue in Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955), and was extensively quoted in the state's brief in that case.]

As mentioned above, the Committee made major changes in these two paragraphs in the 1982 version of the instruction at the same time that "materially" was added. The two changes influenced one another: the two paragraphs were believed to communicate a less stringent standard than that required by "materially impaired." They were edited and reorganized to yield the two paragraphs that are in the current instructions:

> Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.
>
> It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.
> Wis JI-Criminal 2663, c. 1993.

The Criminal Code instructions use these paragraphs, but add "materially" before "impaired" in the last sentence.

IX. Operating With a Detectable Amount of a Restricted Controlled Substance.

2003 Wisconsin Act 97 created or amended nine statutes to provide that no person may drive or operate a motor vehicle while "[t]he person has a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood." The statute applies to offenses committed on or after the Act's effective date: December 19, 2003.

A. Statutes affected.

The new or amended statutes are:

- § 346.63(1)(am): driving or operating
- § 346.63(2)(a)3.: causing injury
- § 940.09(1)(am): causing death
- § 940.09(1)(cm): causing death of an unborn child
- § 940.09(1g)(am): causing death by handling a firearm
- § 940.09(1g)(cm): causing death of an unborn child by handling a firearm
- § 940.25(1)(am): causing great bodily harm
- § 940.25(1)(cm): causing great bodily harm to an unborn child
- § 941.20(1)(bm): operating or going armed with a firearm

There are three published instructions for "detectable amount" cases:

- Wis JI-Criminal 2664B for violations of § 346.63(1)(am);
- Wis JI-Criminal 1266 for violations of § 940.25(1)(am); and,
- Wis JI-Criminal 1187 for violations of § 940.09(1)(am).

B. "Restricted controlled substance" defined.

"Restricted controlled substance" is defined as follows in § 340.01:

(50m) 'Restricted controlled substance' means any of the following:
(a) A controlled substance included in schedule I other than tetrahydrocannabinol.
(b) A controlled substance analog, as defined in s. 961.01(4m), of a controlled substance described in par. (a).
(c) Cocaine or any of its metabolites.
(d) Methamphetamine.
(e) Delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol.

[The same definition is found in several other statutes. See, for example, § 939.22(33).

C. Valid prescription defense.

All the statutes recognizing the "detectable amount . . ." offense also recognize a defense for cases involving "a detectable amount of methamphetamine, gamma-hydroxybutyric acid, or delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol" that applies if the person proves, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he or she had a valid prescription for the substance. See, for example, § 346.63(1)(d).

D. Constitutionality.

Two decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have upheld the constitutionality of the "detectable amount" statutes.

In State v. Smet, 2005 WI App 263, 288 Wis.2d 525, 709 N.W.2d 474, the court held that § 346.63(1)(am) does not overstep the state's police power by not requiring any showing of impairment. The "legislature reasonably and rationally could have determined that, as a class, those who drive with unprescribed illegal chemicals in their blood represent a threat to public safety." ¶16. Further, the statute is not fundamentally unfair and does not offend principles of equal protection.

In State v. Gardner, 2006 WI App 92, 292 Wis.2d 682, 715 N.W.2d 720, the court held that § 940.25(1)(am) is constitutional. It does not create a "presumption of guilt" or create a "status offense." The court noted that "cases across the country challenging this same issue are repeatedly resolved in favor of upholding the legislative action. . . . We join those jurisdictions in concluding that our legislature acted reasonably when it created an offense prohibiting operation of a vehicle with any amount of a controlled substance in one's system." ¶20.

X. Offenses Involving Injury or Death: The Affirmative Defense.

Both the Motor Vehicle Code and the Criminal Code define offenses involving causing harm by operating while intoxicated. See § 346.63(2), causing injury, § 940.09, causing death, and § 940.25, causing great bodily harm. Each of the statutes also provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the [harm] would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she had not been under the influence . . . or did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." The defense is addressed in the instructions by providing an alternative ending for use in cases where there is "some evidence" of the defense.

The 2004 revision of the instructions incorporated the defense into the offense instructions. It had formerly been addressed in separate instructions: Wis JI-Criminal 2662 for Motor Vehicle Code offenses and Wis JI-Criminal 1188 for Criminal Code offenses. Those instructions have been withdrawn.

A. Constitutionality.

The affirmative defense was added to the statutes by Chapter 20, Laws of 1981, which eliminated the requirement that "causal negligence" be established in addition to operating while under the influence. See, §§ 346.63(2), 940.09, and 940.25, 1979 Wis. Stats. The Committee concluded at that time that the intent of the legislature was to remove any required causal connection between the harm and any negligence by the defendant or the defendant's being under the influence. Thus, the instructions tried to make it clear that only simple operation must be causal, not operation under the influence, and not negligent operation. Trying to explain this concept to the jury without creating confusion is difficult. The following paragraph was included in the body of earlier versions of the instructions. Because some found the statement confusing, it was moved to the footnotes, to be used by those who believe it adds clarity.

> It is not required that the [harm] was caused by any drinking of alcohol or by any negligent or improper operation of the vehicle. What is required is that the [harm] was caused by the defendant's operation of the vehicle.

The constitutionality of eliminating causal negligence as an element and providing the affirmative defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). [The U.S. District Court for the Western District of Wisconsin reached the same conclusion, using a slightly different analysis; see, Caibaiosai v. Barrington, 643 F.Supp. 1007 (W.D. Wis. 1986).] Caibaiosai involved § 940.09, but the other offenses are defined in an identical manner.

The defense is closely related to the cause element of these offenses but, in the Committee's judgment, deals with a different issue and may apply even if the defendant's operation was the cause of harm. If the defendant's operation caused the harm, the defense allows the defendant to avoid liability if it is established that the harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence and had been exercising due care. This distinction is essential to the conclusion that the affirmative defense is constitutional: the defense must relate to an issue that is not covered by the offense definition. See, Caibaiosai, supra, and Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977).

The phrase "had been exercising due care" was added to the defense by 1989 Wisconsin Act 275.

B. The substance of the defense.

The Caibaiosai decision held that the defense provided in § 940.09(2) "is meant to provide a defense for the situation where there is an intervening cause between the intoxicated operation of the automobile and the death of an individual." 122 Wis.2d 587, 596. A footnote to the quoted material cited the Black's Law Dictionary definition of "intervening cause": "In criminal law, a cause which comes between an antecedent and a consequence; it may be either independent or dependent, but in either case it is sufficient to negate criminal responsibility." 122 Wis.2d 587, 596, n. 4.

A different definition of "intervening cause," based on State v. Nester, 336 S.E.2d 187, 189 (W.Va. 1985), was adopted by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. Turk, 154 Wis.2d 294, 296, 453 N.W.2d 163 (Ct. App.):

> An intervening cause is a new and independent force which breaks the causal connection between the original act or omission and the injury, and itself becomes the direct and immediate cause of the injury. The fact that the victim did not take precautionary steps which may have prevented his eventual demise is not an intervening cause.

In the Turk case, a defendant charged with causing great bodily harm by operating a vehicle while under the influence of an intoxicant under § 940.25 claimed that the injury was caused by the victim's failure to wear seat belts. Turk upheld the trial court's determination that the failure to wear seat belts was irrelevant to the defense, relying on the above rule.

C. Burden of persuasion.

The statutes expressly place the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instructions describe the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

D. Conduct of the victim.

The instructions recognize that evidence of the conduct of the victim may be relevant to the affirmative defense and provide the following for use in that kind of case:

Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant. Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the [harm] would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence and had been exercising due care.

[See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1185.]

This was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to relate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense, to the affirmative defense. Although Lohmeier dealt with a Criminal Code case, the Committee concluded that its holding would also apply to Motor Vehicle Code offenses under § 346.63(2), so all offenses involving the causing of harm address the defense the same way.

The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 940.09(2). The third sentence in the paragraph is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted.

XI. Two-Charge Cases.

Both Motor Vehicle Code and Criminal Code offenses apply to operating under the influence and with a prohibited alcohol concentration. In each instance, there is statutory authority for charging two counts based on the same incident and submitting those counts to the jury. For example, § 346.63(1)(c) provides:

> A person may be charged with and a prosecutor may proceed upon a complaint based upon a violation of any combination of par. (a), (am), or (b) for acts arising out of the same incident or occurrence. If the person is charged with violating any combination of par. (a), (am), or (b), the offenses shall be joined. If the person is found guilty of any combination of par. (a), (am), or (b) for acts arising out of the same incident or occurrence, there shall be a single conviction for purposes of sentencing and for purposes of counting convictions under §§ 343.30(1q) and 343.305. Paragraphs (a), (am), and (b) each require proof of a fact for conviction which the others do not require.

The constitutionality of this two-charge procedure was upheld in State v. Bohacheff, 114 Wis.2d 402, 338 N.W.2d 446 (1983). The court held that the Double Jeopardy Clause is not offended because of the express limitation that there be only one conviction. Also see, State v. Raddeman, 2000 WI App 190, 238 Wis.2d 628, 618 N.W.2d 258.

Bohacheff dealt with a challenge to the criminal complaint, so it did not address the problems presented at a trial where both charges are submitted to the jury. The Committee concluded that § 346.63(1)(c) clearly suggests that both charges should be submitted and that the jury should make a finding as to each charge. If the jury returns a guilty verdict on both, judgment of conviction should be entered on the count on which the prosecutor moves for judgment. The remaining count should be dismissed.

Wis JI-Criminal 2668 is intended to serve as a model for forfeiture cases where two charges based on the same incident are submitted to the jury: one alleging operating under the influence in violation of § 346.63(1)(a); the other alleging operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration in violation of § 346.63(1)(b). It is a combination of Wis JI-Criminal 2660A and Wis JI-Criminal 2663A and attempts to streamline the instructions in a two-charge case by avoiding the reading of the complete instruction for each charge. Wis JI-Criminal 2669 provides a similar model for criminal charges under § 346.63.

A model is also published for violations of § 940.09 involving two charges. See Wis JI-Criminal 1189, which can be adapted for use for violations of § 940.25.

COMMENT

This Introductory Comment was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2660-2665 in 1982 and revised in 1986, 1993, 1998, and 2004. The 2004 revision renumbered it as Wis JI-Criminal 2600. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2011.

This Introductory Comment was first published in 1982 to outline the major changes in Wisconsin's drunk driving law made by Chapters 20 and 184, Laws of 1981, and was revised periodically to outline additional statutory changes. The 2004 revision changed its approach, setting it up as a collection of all explanatory material relating to "operating while intoxicated offenses" – those in the Motor Vehicle Code and in the Criminal Code. Footnotes to instructions for specific offenses refer to material contained here.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2605 was originally published in 1996 and amended in 2004. This revision updated the Comment and was approved by the Committee in February 2011.

This instruction is intended to address alternatives to "operation on a highway" for the following offenses:

- reckless driving in violation of § 346.62 [Wis JI-Criminal 2650-2654];
- operating under the influence in violation of § 346.63 [Wis JI-Criminal 2660-2669]; and,
- failure to stop and render aid in violation of § 346.67 [Wis JI-Criminal 2670].

The premises on which those offenses may be committed are specified in §§ 346.61 and 346.66, both of which were amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127. [Effective date: January 6, 1996]. The "on highway requirement" is also discussed in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I.

Section 346.01(1m), as created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 129, provides:

In this chapter, in addition to the meaning given in s. 340.01(22), "highway" includes a private road or driveway that is subject to an agreement for traffic regulation enforcement under s. 349.03(5).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983). That a vehicle was operated "on a highway" may be proved circumstantially. State v. Mertes, 2008 WI App 179, 315 Wis.2d 756, 762 N.W.2d 813.

1. Sections 346.61 and 346.66 define the applicability of sections relating to reckless and drunken driving [§§ 346.62 to 346.64] and relating to accidents and accident reporting [§§ 346.67 to 346.70]. The first element of instructions for those offenses typically includes the requirement that the operation take place "on a highway." This instruction provides alternatives for cases where the operation takes place on premises other than highways as defined in §§ 346.61 and 346.66. Care should be taken that the restatement of the first element includes any additional facts that may be in that element.

2. The phrase "held out to the public" has been interpreted in three Wisconsin appellate decisions. In City of Kenosha v. Phillips, 142 Wis.2d 549, 419 N.W.2d 236 (1988), the supreme court held that the privately-owned American Motors parking lot was not "held out to the public" because it is the intent of the owner that governs. The owner's intent was to hold the lot open to its employees, but not to the general public. The statute was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127 to specifically include employee parking lots. See note 3, below.

In City of LaCrosse v. Richling, 178 Wis.2d 856, 505 N.W.2d 448 (Ct. App. 1993), the court held that the parking lot of a bar and restaurant was "held out to the public" because potential customers are part of "the public." "We believe the appropriate test is whether, on any given day, potentially any resident of the community with a driver's license and access to a motor vehicle could use the parking lot in an authorized manner." 178 Wis.2d 856, 860. The Richling test was applied in State v. Carter, 229 Wis.2d 200, 598 N.W.2d 619 (Ct. App. 1999), to hold that a parking lot of a closed gas station was also "held out to the public."

"The roadways of the Geneva National Community [a gated community] were 'held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles' because on any given day any licensed driver could enter the community unchallenged. . ." State v. Tecza, 2008 WI App 79, ¶22, 312 Wis.2d 395, 751 N.W.2d 896.

The Committee Notes to the 1957 revision of the Motor Vehicle Code provide as follows with respect to § 346.61:

> Legislative Council Note, 1957: Most provisions of this chapter are applicable only upon highways. This section gives the sections relating to reckless and drunken driving somewhat broader applicability. They will apply in such areas as parking lots, filling stations and loading platforms. This is a change in the law, for the attorney general has ruled that the present law relating to drunken driving applies only to driving on highways. 38 Att'y Gen. 184 (1949). Broader applicability, however, is in the interest of public safety and also is consistent with § 11-101 of the UVC. [Bill 99-S]

3. This alternative was added to both § 346.61 and § 346.66 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127.

4. This alternative was added to both § 346.61 and § 346.66 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127.

5. The Committee suggests adding this statement only in the case where there is a factual dispute about the area where the operating took place and evidence supports a finding that a private parking area was involved. The statement was added to both § 346.61 and § 346.66 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 127.

2610 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITHOUT A VALID OPERATOR'S LICENSE — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 343.05(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.05(3)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by any person who operates a motor vehicle[1] upon a highway of this state when that person does not hold a valid operator's license.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[2] upon a highway.[3]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[4]

2. The defendant did not hold a valid operator's license at the time the defendant operated the motor vehicle.

   [(A cancelled) (An expired) license is not a valid license. It makes no difference whether the defendant knew the license (had been cancelled) (had expired).][5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2610 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1986, 1995, and 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2012; it made minor changes in the text and updated the Comment.

This instruction is for second or subsequent violations of § 343.05(3)(a), which are crimes. See § 343.05(5)(b)1. As with operating under the influence offenses, the fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal offense. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

This instruction applies only to operating without a valid license. Subsection (6) of § 343.05 provides that § 343.44 applies to any person operating a motor vehicle upon a highway when the person's license has been revoked or suspended. See Wis JI-Criminal 2620 through 2623. Felony penalties apply to violations of § 343.05 causing great bodily harm or death. See Wis JI-Criminal 2612. The felony penalties were created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012]. Act 113 did not affect the penalties for this offense.

A first offense under § 343.05 is a civil forfeiture. To use this instruction for the forfeiture offense, modify the instruction by substituting "to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing" for "beyond a reasonable doubt." It may also be necessary to change the reference from "the state" to the unit of government that is prosecuting the case. See Wis JI-Criminal 2680 for a model.

Operating a motorcycle without a motorcycle endorsement or operating a moped or motor bicycle without a license is always a forfeiture. Neither ever becomes a criminal violation. See § 343.05(3)(b) and (5)(c).

Section 343.05(4) provides for a number of exemptions to the licensing requirements of Chapter 343.

1. Section 343.05(3)(a) applies to a person who operates "a motor vehicle which is not a commercial motor vehicle." The exclusion for non-commercial vehicles is not included in the instruction because the Committee concluded that the vehicle's status would rarely be an issue in the case. Offenses involving commercial motor vehicles are covered by sub. (2) of § 343.05.

2. Section 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

3. Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

4. For the purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. III.

5. Use material in brackets only when the issue of a cancelled or expired license is in the case.

2612 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITHOUT A VALID OPERATOR'S LICENSE: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM OR DEATH — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 343.05(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.05(3)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by any person who operates a motor vehicle[1] upon a highway of this state when that person knows that (he) (she) does not hold a valid operator's license and causes (great bodily harm) (death).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[2] upon a highway.[3]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[4]

2. The defendant knew that (he) (she) did not hold a valid operator's license at the time the defendant operated the motor vehicle.[5]

   [(A cancelled) (An expired) license is not a valid license.][6]

3. The defendant's operation of the vehicle caused (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (great bodily harm) (death).[7]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.][8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2612 was originally published in 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2012; it updated the Comment to reflect changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113.

This instruction is for violations of §343.05(3)(a) causing great bodily harm or death, which are punished as felonies. See Wis JI-Criminal 2610 for violations of § 343.05 that are criminal because they are second or subsequent violations. The felony penalties were created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012]. Causing great bodily harm is a Class I felony; causing death is a Class H felony. See § 343.05(5)(b)4. and 5. Both offenses require that the "person knows at the time of operation that he or she does not possess a valid operator's license." If the person does not have the required knowledge, the offenses are punished as forfeitures.

Subsection (6) of § 343.05 provides that § 343.44 applies to any person operating a motor vehicle upon a highway when the person's license has been revoked or suspended. See Wis JI-Criminal 2620 through 2623.

1. Section 343.05(3)(a) applies to a person who operates "a motor vehicle which is not a commercial motor vehicle." The exclusion for non-commercial vehicles is not included in the instruction because the Committee concluded that the vehicle's status would rarely be an issue in the case. Offenses involving commercial motor vehicles are covered by sub. (2) of § 343.05.

2. Section 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

3. Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

4. For the purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. III.

5. Knowledge that the person does not possess a valid license is required by § 343.05(5)(b)4. and 5. In the absence of the required knowledge, the violations are punished as forfeitures.

6. Use material in brackets only when the issue of a cancelled or expired license is in the case.

7. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

8. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED BEFORE JANUARY 1, 2010.

2620 OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE: BASED ON PRIOR CONVICTION — § 343.44(1)(b)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who knowingly operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[4]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[5] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][6]

3. The defendant knew (his) (her) operating privilege had been revoked.[7]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT A NOTICE OF REVOCATION WAS PROPERLY MAILED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[8]

[(Refusal to accept) (Failure to receive) an order of revocation is not, by itself, a defense, but it is relevant to whether the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked. The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked regardless of whether the defendant received written notice of revocation.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2620 was originally published in 1978 and was revised in 1981, 1982, 1994, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009.

This instruction applies to one type of criminal violation of § 343.44(1)(b) as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25 [effective date: July 27, 2005]. Under Act 25, operating while revoked was a crime under two circumstances: when there was a prior conviction for operating while revoked, the offense addressed by this instruction; and, when the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)," [see Wis JI-Criminal 2621]. Section 343.44(1)(b) was amended again by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 to eliminate the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations. The effective date of the change is January 1, 2010. So this instruction is not to be used for offenses committed after that date. Those offenses will be forfeitures; see Wis JI-Criminal 2621A.

The fact of the prior conviction is not an "element" of this offense. That falls under the exception to the general rule that all facts that increase the statutory maximum penalty are for the jury. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000).

1. This instruction applies to operating while revoked offenses that were criminal because the defendant has a prior conviction for that offense. Second offenses were criminal violations until changes made by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 took effect on January 1, 2010. From May 1, 2002, to July 26, 2005, all operating while revoked offenses were criminal, including first offenses. Under § 343.44(1)(b), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25, operating while revoked offenses were criminal if they were second offenses or if the revocation resulted from an OWI-related offense. [See Wis JI-Criminal 2621.] The effective date of Act 25 was July 27, 2005. 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 eliminated the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations.

2. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see § 340.01(35) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

3. "Highway" is defined by subsec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in § 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

4. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

5. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

6. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

7. The requirement that the person "knowingly operate" while revoked was added to § 343.44 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84. This appears to codify the more demanding of two alternative mental elements established for operating while revoked offenses by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Collova, 79 Wis.2d 473, 255 N.W.2d 581 (1977). Collova held that the offense required either that the person "knew" or "had cause to believe" that operating privileges had been revoked. The statute, as amended, codifies the more demanding requirement of actual knowledge of revocation, apparently eliminating "had cause to believe" as an alternative.

8. While the amendment of § 343.44 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84 added "knowingly" to the definition of the offense, see note 7, supra, the act did not affect the provision regarding failure to receive mailed notice of revocation. Subsection (3) of § 343.44 continues to provide that "[r]efusal to accept or failure to receive an order of revocation . . . mailed by 1st class mail to such person's last-known address shall not be a defense to the charge of driving after revocation. . . ." The Committee concluded that the proper way to address the mailed notice issue is to advise the jury that failure to receive a properly mailed notice is not by itself a defense, but that the state must prove, by whatever evidence is relevant to the issue, that the defendant did knowingly operate while revoked. This may be accomplished by showing any source of actual knowledge, such as notice given by a judge, receipt of a mailed notice, etc.

2620A OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE[1]: REVOCATION RESULTED FROM AN OWI-RELATED OFFENSE — § 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (two) (three)[2] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[5]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[6] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][7]

NOTE: THE DEFENDANT'S ADMISSION THAT THE REVOCATION WAS BASED ON AN OWI-RELATED OFFENSE DISPENSES WITH THE NEED FOR PROOF OF THE FOLLOWING ELEMENT. IF THERE IS AN ADMISSION, DO NOT INSTRUCT ON THE THIRD ELEMENT.[8]

[3. The revocation resulted from an offense that may be counted under section 343.307(2).][9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (both) (all three) elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2620A was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it reflects changes to § 343.44(1)(b) made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 127. [Note: A previously-published instruction also numbered Wis JI-Criminal 2620A was withdrawn in 2006.]

This instruction is to be used for offenses committed on or after December 10, 2017. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 127, which deleted the knowledge requirement from § 343.44(1)(b). For offenses committed before that date see Wis JI-Criminal 2621.

Under section 343.44(1)(b) as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25 [effective date: July 27, 2005], operating while revoked was a crime under two circumstances: when there was a prior conviction for operating while revoked [see Wis JI-Criminal 2620]; and, when the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)," the offense addressed by this instruction. [The captions in the instruction and the Comment refer to this as revocation "for an OWI-related offense."] Section 343.44(1)(b) was amended again by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 to eliminate the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations. The effective date of the change is January 1, 2010.

The Committee concluded that the fact that the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" is a fact that must be decided by the jury. It is the sole fact that makes this offense criminal and thus is subject to the general rule that it must go to the jury. The only exception is the fact of a prior conviction. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

This requirement is reflected in the third element of the instruction. That element is in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits that the revocation is OWI-related. The Committee concluded that a defendant may wish to admit this fact to avoid possible prejudice if the fact is elicited before the jury. This is the procedure used for OWI offenses involved the .02 level of prohibited alcohol concentration, which applies where the defendant has three or more priors. See, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IX.

1. This instruction applies to operating while revoked offenses that are criminal because the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)." The Committee has concluded that this is a fact for the jury, unless admitted by the defendant. See note 8, below. From May 1, 2002, to July 26, 2005, all operating while revoked offenses were criminal, including first offenses. Under § 343.44(1)(b), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25, operating while revoked offenses were criminal if the revocation resulted from an OWI-related offense, addressed by this instruction, or if they were second offenses. [See Wis JI-Criminal 2620.] The effective date of Act 25 was July 27, 2005. Section 343.44(1)(b) was amended again by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 to eliminate the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations. The effective date of the change is January 1, 2010.

2. The instruction is drafted to allow for use with either two or three elements, depending on whether the third element, relating to the cause of the revocation, is submitted to the jury. See note 8, below.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," § 340.01(35) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. "Highway" is defined by subsec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in § 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

5. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such > person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

7. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

8. The third element has been placed in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits that the revocation is OWI-related. The Committee concluded that the fact that the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" is a fact that must be decided by the jury. It is the sole fact that makes this offense criminal and thus is subject to the general rule that it must go to the jury. The only exception is the fact of a prior conviction. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

The element is in brackets because the Committee concluded that a defendant may wish to admit this fact to avoid possible prejudice if the fact is elicited before the jury. This is the procedure used for OWI offenses involved the .02 level of prohibited alcohol concentration, which applies where the defendant has three or more priors. See, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C, and State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997).

9. This element is not to be included if the defendant admits that the revocation was OWI-related. See note 8, supra.

The text of the third element is based on the text of s. 343.44(2)(ar)2. The types of convictions, suspensions, and revocations that are counted under s. 343.307(2) are convictions for operating while intoxicated or suspensions or revocations for refusal to submit to chemical tests for alcohol. The priors may include offenses in other jurisdictions.

The Committee concluded that the instruction should use the statutory language "may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" because evidence of the cause of the revocation will usually be submitted with testimony that the cause is one that is counted under that statute.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2620A, -B, and -C were most recently published in 1994. Their withdrawal was approved by the Committee in February 2006.

These instructions addressed Operating After Revocation offenses under §343.44 as it existed before being revised by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84. The instructions applied to offenses committed before August 1, 2000.

Section 343.44 was revised again by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25, which had an effective date of July 27, 2005. For instructions for violations of §343.44 committed on or after that date, see Wis JI-Criminal 2620-2622:

THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED AFTER JANUARY 1, 2010 AND BEFORE DECEMBER 10, 2017.

2621 OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE[1]: REVOCATION RESULTED FROM AN OWI-RELATED OFFENSE — § 343.44(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who knowingly operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (three) (four)[2] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[5]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[6] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][7]

3. The defendant knew (his) (her) operating privilege had been revoked.[8]

NOTE: THE DEFENDANT'S ADMISSION THAT THE REVOCATION WAS BASED ON AN OWI-RELATED OFFENSE DISPENSES WITH THE NEED FOR PROOF OF THE FOLLOWING ELEMENT. IF THERE IS AN ADMISSION, DO NOT INSTRUCT ON THE FOURTH ELEMENT AND PROCEED TO THE PARAGRAPH CAPTIONED "DECIDING ABOUT KNOWLEDGE."[9]

[4. The revocation resulted from an offense that may be counted under section 343.307(2).][10]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT A NOTICE OF REVOCATION WAS PROPERLY MAILED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[11]

[(Refusal to accept) (Failure to receive) an order of revocation is not, by itself, a defense, but it is relevant to whether the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked. The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked regardless of whether the defendant received written notice of revocation.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all (three) (four) elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2621 was originally published in 2001 and revised in 2006, 2010, and 2013. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018.

The 2018 revision added the caution at the top of page one to make it clear that this instruction should only be used for offenses committed before December 10, 2017. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 127, which deleted the knowledge requirement from § 343.44(1)(b). For offenses committed on or after that date see Wis JI-Criminal 2620A.

This instruction is drafted for a criminal violation of § 343.44(1)(b) as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25 [effective date: July 27, 2005]. Under Act 25, operating while revoked was a crime under two circumstances: when there was a prior conviction for operating while revoked [see Wis JI-Criminal 2620]; and, when the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)," the offense addressed by this instruction. [The captions in the instruction and the Comment refer to this as revocation "for an OWI-related offense."] Section 343.44(1)(b) was amended again by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 to eliminate the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations. The effective date of the change is January 1, 2010.

The Committee concluded that the fact that the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" is a fact that must be decided by the jury. It is the sole fact that makes this offense criminal and thus is subject to the general rule that it must go to the jury. The only exception is the fact of a prior conviction. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

This requirement is reflected in the fourth element of the instruction. That element is in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits that the revocation is OWI-related. The Committee concluded that a defendant may wish to admit this fact to avoid possible prejudice if the fact is elicited before the jury. This is the procedure used for OWI offenses involved the .02 level of prohibited alcohol concentration, which applies where the defendant has three or more priors. See, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IX.

1. This instruction applies to operating while revoked offenses that are criminal because the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)." The Committee has concluded that this is a fact for the jury, unless admitted by the defendant. See note 9, below. From May 1, 2002, to July 26, 2005, all operating while revoked offenses were criminal, including first offenses. Under § 343.44(1)(b), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 25, operating while revoked offenses were criminal if the revocation resulted from an OWI-related offense, addressed by this instruction, or if they were second offenses. [See Wis JI-Criminal 2620.] The effective date of Act 25 was July 27, 2005. Section 343.44(1)(b) was amended again by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28 to eliminate the criminal penalty for second and subsequent OAR violations. The effective date of the change is January 1, 2010.

2. The instruction is drafted to allow for use with either three or four elements, depending on whether the fourth element, relating to the cause of the revocation, is submitted to the jury. See note 9, below.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," § 340.01(35) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. "Highway" is defined by subsec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in § 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

5. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

7. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

8. The requirement that the person "knowingly operate" while revoked was added to § 343.44 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84. This appears to codify the more demanding of two alternative mental elements established for operating while revoked offenses by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Collova, 79 Wis.2d 473, 255 N.W.2d 581 (1977). Collova held that the offense required either that the person "knew" or "had cause to believe" that operating privileges had been revoked. The statute, as amended, codifies the more demanding requirement of actual knowledge of revocation, apparently eliminating "had cause to believe" as an alternative.

9. The fourth element has been placed in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits that the revocation is OWI-related. The Committee concluded that the fact that the revocation "resulted from an offense that may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" is a fact that must be decided by the jury. It is the sole fact that makes this offense criminal and thus is subject to the general rule that it must go to the jury. The only exception is the fact of a prior conviction. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

The element is in brackets because the Committee concluded that a defendant may wish to admit this fact to avoid possible prejudice if the fact is elicited before the jury. This is the procedure used for OWI offenses involved the .02 level of prohibited alcohol concentration, which applies where the defendant has three or more priors. See, Wis JI-Criminal 2660C, and State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997).

10. This element is not to be included if the defendant admits that the revocation was OWI-related. See note 9, supra.

The text of the fourth element is based on the text of s. 343.44(2)(ar)2. The types of convictions, suspensions, and revocations that are counted under s. 343.307(2) are convictions for operating while intoxicated or suspensions or revocations for refusal to submit to chemical tests for alcohol. The priors may include offenses in other jurisdictions.

The Committee concluded that the instruction should use the statutory language "may be counted under s. 343.307(2)" because evidence of the cause of the revocation will usually be submitted with testimony that the cause is one that is counted under that statute.

11. While the amendment of § 343.44 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84 added "knowingly" to the definition of the offense, see note 8, supra, the act did not affect the provision regarding failure to receive mailed notice of revocation. Subsection (3) of § 343.44 continues to provide that "[r]efusal to accept or failure to receive an order of revocation . . . mailed by 1st class mail to such person's last-known address shall not be a defense to the charge of driving after revocation. . . ." The Committee concluded that the proper way to address the mailed notice issue is to advise the jury that failure to receive a properly mailed notice is not by itself a defense, but that the state must prove, by whatever evidence is relevant to the issue, that the defendant did knowingly operate while revoked. This may be accomplished by showing any source of actual knowledge, such as notice given by a judge, receipt of a mailed notice, etc.

2621A OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CIVIL FORFEITURE[1] — § 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[2] must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[5]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[6] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2621A was originally published in 2001 and revised in 2006 and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018.

The 2018 revision modified the instruction to be used for offenses committed on or after December 10, 2017. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 127, which deleted the knowledge requirement from § 343.44(1)(b).

1. This instruction applies to first offense operating while revoked offenses committed after July 27, 2005, if the revocation was not based on an operating while intoxicated-related offense.

2. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see § 340.01(35) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. "Highway" is defined by subsec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in § 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

5. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. Section 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

7. Section 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

2622 OPERATING WHILE SUSPENDED: CIVIL FORFEITURE — § 343.44(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly suspended.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency) [1] must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[4]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[5] was duly suspended at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains suspended until it is reinstated.][6]

Proof that the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privilege had been suspended is not required.[7]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT A NOTICE OF SUSPENSION WAS PROPERLY MAILED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[8]

[Refusal to accept) (Failure to receive) an order of suspension is not a defense.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM OR DEATH[9]

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Did the defendant's operation of the vehicle cause (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) ?

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (great bodily harm) (death).[10]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.][11]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory and convincing that the answer is "yes."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2622 was originally published in 2001 and revised in 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2012; it was revised to reflect changes in penalties made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113.

The 2001 version of this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 2620A for violations of § 343.44(1)(a) committed after August 1, 2000, when changes made by 1997 Wisconsin Act 84 took effect. After that date, all operating after suspension violations were punished as forfeitures.

The 2012 revision added a special question for offenses resulting in great bodily harm or death. 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012] created new forfeitures for those offenses: $5,000 to $7,500 forfeiture if great bodily harm is caused; $7,500 to $10,000 forfeiture if death is caused. See § 343.44(2)(ag)2. and 3. If the actor knew his or her operating privilege was suspended, the offenses are punished as felonies. See Wis JI-Criminal 2623A.

1. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

2. Subsection 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

3. Subsection 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

4. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see "What Constitutes Driving, Operating, Or Being In Control Of Motor Vehicle For Purposes Of Driving While Intoxicated Statute Or Ordinance," 93 A.L.R.3d 7 (1979).

5. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

6. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

7. Subsection (1)(a) of § 343.44 includes the following:

> A person's knowledge that his or her operating privilege is suspended is not an element of the offense under this paragraph.

8. See § 343.44(3). Because the offense definition does not require that the person "knowingly" operate while suspended, the jury may be told that failure to receive a mailed notice is not a defense. Compare note 8, Wis JI-Criminal 2621, discussing this issue with respect to operating while revoked offenses, which do have "knowingly" as an element.

9. 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012] created new forfeitures for offenses resulting in great bodily harm or death: $5,000 to $7,500 forfeiture if great bodily harm is caused; $7,500 to $10,000 forfeiture if death is caused. See § 343.44(2)(ag)2. and 3. The Committee recommends submitting the degree of harm caused as a special question. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "Did the defendant's operation of the vehicle cause (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) ?

10. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

11. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

2623A OPERATING WHILE SUSPENDED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM OR DEATH — § 343.44(1)(a) and (2)(ag)2. and 3.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who knowingly operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly suspended and causes (great bodily harm) (death).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[1] on a highway.[2]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[3]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[4] was duly suspended at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains suspended until it is reinstated.][5]

3. The defendant knew (his) (her) operating privilege had been suspended.[6]

4. The defendant's operation of the vehicle caused (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) .

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (great bodily harm) (death).[7]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.][8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT A NOTICE OF SUSPENSION WAS PROPERLY MAILED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[9]

[(Refusal to accept) (Failure to receive) an order of suspension is not, by itself, a defense, but it is relevant to whether the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been suspended. The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been suspended regardless of whether the defendant received written notice of suspension.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2623 was originally published in 2007. It was separated into two instructions in 2012: this instruction for operating while suspended offenses and Wis JI-Criminal 2623B for operating while revoked offenses. This instruction was approved by the Committee in June 2012; the Comment was also updated to reflect changes in penalties made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113.

This instruction is for violations of § 343.44(1)(a) – operating while suspended – where great bodily harm or death is caused. These violations are punished as felonies pursuant to provisions created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012] if the person knew at the time of operation that his or her operating privilege had been suspended. Causing great bodily harm is a Class I felony; causing death is a Class H felony. See §343.44(2)(ag)2. and 3. for the penalties for operating while suspended offenses.

1. Subsection 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

2. Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

3. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see "What Constitutes Driving, Operating, Or Being In Control Of Motor Vehicle For Purposes Of Driving While Intoxicated Statute Or Ordinance," 93 A.L.R.3d 7 (1979).

4. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

5. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license > issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

6. Knowledge that the person's operating privilege has been suspended is required by the penalty provisions in § 343.44(2)(ag)2. and 3. If the knowledge element is lacking, offenses resulting in death or great bodily harm are forfeitures.

7. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

8. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

9. While the statutes require knowledge that privileges had been suspended, see note 6, supra, there has been no change in the provision regarding failure to receive mailed notice of suspension or revocation. Subsection (3) of § 343.44 continues to provide that "[r]efusal to accept or failure to receive an order of revocation, suspension or disqualification mailed by 1st class mail to such person's last-known address shall not be a defense to the charge of driving after revocation, suspension or disqualification." The Committee concluded that the proper way to address the mailed notice issue is to advise the jury that failure to receive a properly mailed notice is not by itself a defense, but that the state must prove, by whatever evidence is relevant to the issue, that the defendant did knowingly operate while suspended. This may be accomplished by showing any source of actual knowledge, such as notice given by a judge, receipt of a mailed notice, etc.

THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED BEFORE DECEMBER 10, 2017.

2623B OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM OR DEATH — § 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)3. and 4.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who knowingly operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked and causes (great bodily harm) (death).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[1] on a highway. [2]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion. [3]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[4] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.] [5]

3. The defendant knew (his) (her) operating privilege had been revoked. [6]

4. The defendant's operation of the vehicle caused (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) .

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (great bodily harm) (death). [7]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.] [8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT A NOTICE OF REVOCATION WAS PROPERLY MAILED, ADD THE FOLLOWING: [9]

[(Refusal to accept) (Failure to receive) an order of revocation is not, by itself, a defense, but it is relevant to whether the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked. The State must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew (his) (her) operating privileges had been revoked regardless of whether the defendant received written notice of revocation suspension.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2623 was originally published in 2007. It was separated into two instructions in 2012: this instruction for operating while revoked offenses and JI 2623A for operating while suspended offenses. The Comment was updated in 2013 to reflect changes in penalties made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113. The 2017 revision was approved by the Committee in August 2017; it added the reference to State v. Villamil, 2017 WI 74 to the Comment.

The 2018 revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it added the caution at the top of page one to make it clear that this instruction should only be used for offenses committed before December 10, 2017. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 127, which deleted the knowledge requirement from § 343.44(1)(b). For offenses committed on or after that date see Wis JI-Criminal 2623C.

This instruction is for violations of § 343.44(1)(b) – operating while revoked – where great bodily harm or death is caused. These violations may be punished as either misdemeanors or felonies pursuant to provisions created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 113 [effective date: March 1, 2012]. See § 343.44(2)(ar)3. and 4. This penalty anomaly apparently resulted from inadvertence.

The anomaly is that the penalty provisions purport to increase the penalty from a misdemeanor to a felony based on the fact that the defendant knew his or her operating privilege was revoked. However, the offense definition already requires that the defendant "knowingly operated"; the Committee has concluded that "knowingly operated" can only mean "knowledge that the privilege was revoked." Thus, subsections § 343.44(2)(ar)3. and 4. provide for both a misdemeanor and a felony penalty for offenses that have the same elements. The United States and Wisconsin supreme courts have held that there is no constitutional violation where crimes have the same elements but different penalties. In State v. Cissell, 127 Wis.2d 205, 378 N.W.2d 691 (1985), the court dealt with two 1983 statutes relating to nonsupport, one with a misdemeanor penalty and one with a felony penalty. The trial court dismissed felony charges against Cissell, concluding that the crimes had identical elements and that charging the defendant with a felony deprived him of his rights to due process and equal protection. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed, agreeing that the two crimes had identical elements, but concluding that ". . . identical element crimes with different penalties do not violate due process or equal protection." 127 Wis.2d 205, 215. The court relied on United States v. Batchelder, 442 U.S. 114 (1979), which addressed two federal statutes prohibiting felons from receiving firearms. One statute had a five year maximum penalty and the other a two year maximum. The court held that there was no constitutional violation: the statutes were clear and thus gave notice; a prosecutor's choice under these statutes is no different from the regular choice exercised in deciding what to charge; being influenced by the penalties does not give rise to a constitutional issue. Prosecutors can choose to prosecute under either statute as long as there is no discrimination against any class of defendants as prohibited by selective enforcement principles.

The situation under the current operating while revoked penalty provisions appears to the Committee to be indistinguishable from the situations addressed in the Cissell and Batchelder cases.

The Committee's conclusion is consistent with the decision reached in State v. Villamil, 2017 WI 74, 371 Wis.2d 519, 885 N.W.2d 381:

> ¶49 Whether there is one criminal statute or two, both this case and Cissell involve criminal statutes with substantially identical elements where prosecutors have discretion to decide whether they will charge a defendant with a misdemeanor or a felony. Although a defendant could be charged with a misdemeanor instead of a felony for a knowing violation of OAR-causing death, the public is on notice that this offense may be punished as a Class H felony pursuant to Wis. Stat. §§ 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)4. Because Villamil knew he was operating after his license was revoked, the statutes provide sufficient notice that this violation could be charged as a felony.

1. Subsection 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

2. Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

3. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see "What Constitutes Driving, Operating, Or Being In Control Of Motor Vehicle For Purposes Of Driving While Intoxicated Statute Or Ordinance," 93 A.L.R.3d 7 (1979).

4. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

5. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

6. Knowledge that the person's operating privilege has been revoked is part of the offense definition in § 343.44(1)(b), which requires that the person "knowingly operate." The knowledge requirement is also part of the penalty provisions for operating while revoked offenses in § 343.44(2)(ar)3. and 4. The Committee concluded that this redundancy is inadvertent. See discussion in the Comment preceding footnote 1.

7. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

8. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

9. While the statutes require knowledge that privileges had been revoked, see note 6, supra, there has been no change in the provision regarding failure to receive mailed notice of suspension or revocation. Subsection (3) of § 343.44 continues to provide that "[r]efusal to accept or failure to receive an order of revocation, suspension or disqualification mailed by 1st class mail to such person's last-known address shall not be a defense to the charge of driving after revocation, suspension or disqualification." The Committee concluded that the proper way to address the mailed notice issue is to advise the jury that failure to receive a properly mailed notice is not by itself a defense, but that the state must prove, by whatever evidence is relevant to the issue, that the defendant did knowingly operate while revoked. This may be accomplished by showing any source of actual knowledge, such as notice given by a judge, receipt of a mailed notice, etc.

2623C OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM OR DEATH — § 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)3. and 4.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is duly revoked and causes (great bodily harm) (death).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[1] on a highway.[2]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[3]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[4] was duly revoked at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][5]

3. The defendant's operation of the vehicle caused (great bodily harm) (death) to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (great bodily harm) (death).[6]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.][7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS I OR H FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE PENALTY-INCREASING FACT IS PRESENT.[8]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Did the defendant know at the time of the violation that (his) (her) operating privilege was revoked?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2623C was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it reflects changes to § 343.44(1)(b) made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 127.

This instruction is for violations of § 343.44(1)(b) – operating while revoked – where great bodily harm or death is caused. It is to be used for offenses committed on or after December 10, 2017. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 127, which deleted the knowledge requirement from § 343.44(1)(b). For offenses committed before that date see Wis JI-Criminal 2623B.

While Act 127 deleted the knowledge requirement from the offense definition, it retained it in the penalty section. An offense resulting in great bodily harm is punishable by a fine and up to a year in the county jail unless the defendant knows his or her privilege was revoked – then it is a Class I felony. See § 343.44(2)(ar)3. An offense resulting in death is punishable by a fine and up to a year in the county jail unless the defendant knows his or her privilege was revoked – then it is a Class H felony. See § 343.44(2)(ar)4. This instruction may be used for either misdemeanor or felony charges; it includes a special question for felonies regarding the knowledge requirement.

Note: Deleting the knowledge requirement from the offense definition eliminated the penalty anomaly under prior law whereby misdemeanor and felony violations had the same elements. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2663B.

1. Subsection 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

2. Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

3. This instruction has always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see "What Constitutes Driving, Operating, Or Being In Control Of Motor Vehicle For Purposes Of Driving While Intoxicated Statute Or Ordinance," 93 A.L.R.3d 7 (1979).

4. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

5. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license > issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

6. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

7. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

8. The special question addresses the penalty-increasing facts in § 353.44(2)(ar)3. and 4. A violation of § 343.44(1)(b) resulting in great bodily harm is punishable by a fine and up to a year in the county jail unless the defendant knows his or her privilege was revoked – then it is a Class I felony. See § 343.44(2)(ar)3. An offense resulting in death is punishable by a fine and up to a year in the county jail unless the defendant knows his or her privilege was revoked – then it is a Class H felony. See § 343.44(2)(ar)4.

2626 OPERATING WHILE REVOKED: CRIMINAL OFFENSE: PERMANENT REVOCATION — § 343.44(1)(b) and (2)(ar)2m.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 343.44 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motor vehicle upon any highway in this state while that person's operating privilege is permanently revoked.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle[1] on a highway.[2]

   A motor vehicle is operated when it is set in motion.[3]

2. The defendant's operating privilege[4] was permanently revoked[5] at the time the defendant operated a motor vehicle.

   [A person's operating privilege remains revoked until it is reinstated.][6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2626 was approved by the Committee in July 2018.

This instruction is to be used for offenses committed on or after December 1, 2018. That date is the effective date for 2017 Wisconsin Act 172, which created the crime of operating after permanent revocation. It applies only where the person has a previous conviction for this offense. The penalty is a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year or both. § 343.44(2)(ar)2m.

The instruction refers to "permanent revocation" in place of the statutory reference to a revocation "under s. 343.31(1m)." That statute identifies "qualifying convictions" and other facts that provide the basis for the department of transportation to revoke the person's operating privilege permanently.

The Committee concluded that the fact that the revocation was permanent is a fact that must be decided by the jury. It is the sole fact that makes this offense criminal and thus is subject to the general rule that it must go to the jury. The only exception is the fact of a prior conviction. See, Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D. The fact that the defendant has a prior conviction for the offense need not be submitted to the jury. See Apprendi..

1. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," § 340.01(35) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

2. "Highway" is defined by subsec. 340.01(22):

> (22) "Highway" means all public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools, as defined in § 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

3. Instructions for operating after revocation have always used "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This is the same definition that was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because § 346.63(3)(b) definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," it can be argued that it applies only to under the influence cases. The Committee reached no conclusion on this issue but left the definition of "operate" unchanged in this instruction.

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

4. Subsection 340.01(40) defines "operating privilege" as follows:

> "Operating privilege" means, in the case of a person who is licensed under ch. 343, the license, including every endorsement and authorization to operate vehicles of specific vehicle classes or types, instruction permit, and temporary, restricted or occupational license granted to such person; in the case of a resident of this state who is not so licensed, it means the privilege to secure a license under ch. 343; in the case of a nonresident, it means the operating privilege granted by § 343.05(2)(a)2 or (4)(b)1.

5. The instruction refers to "permanent revocation" in place of the statutory reference to a revocation "under s. 343.31(1m)." That statute identifies bases for the department of transportation to revoke the person's operating privilege permanently. The Committee concluded that the jury must find that the privilege was permanently revoked but that it need not make a finding of the basis for that permanent revocation.

6. Subsection 343.44(1g) provides:

> Notwithstanding any specified term of suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification, the period of any suspension, revocation, cancellation or disqualification of an operator's license issued under this chapter or of an operating privilege continues until the operator's license or operating privilege is reinstated.

Sections 343.38 and 343.39 provide the requirements for reinstatement. Also see Best v. State, 99 Wis.2d 495, 299 N.W.2d 604 (Ct. App. 1980), regarding the department's duty to promulgate rules relating to determining the length of suspension periods.

Despite the revocation being "permanent," a person is eligible to apply for reinstatement after 10 years have elapsed." § 343.31(1m)(b) and (c).

2630 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE TO FLEE OR IN AN ATTEMPT TO ELUDE AN OFFICER — § 346.04(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.04(3) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who operates a motor vehicle[1] on a highway[2] after receiving a visual or audible signal from a (traffic officer) (federal law enforcement officer) (marked police vehicle) (unmarked police vehicle that the person knows or reasonably should know is being operated by a law enforcement officer) and knowingly (flees) (attempts to elude) any officer.

CHOOSE THE ALTERNATIVE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE. IF MORE THAN ONE ALTERNATIVE IS SUBMITTED, CONNECT THEM WITH "OR" AND SEE WIS-JI CRIMINAL 517, JURY AGREEMENT...[3]

[by willful[4] disregard of such signal so as to interfere with or endanger (the operation of the police vehicle) (the traffic officer) (other vehicles) (pedestrians)].

[by increasing the speed of the vehicle (in an attempt to elude) (to flee)].

[by extinguishing the lights of the vehicle (in an attempt to elude) (to flee)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle on a highway[5] after receiving a (visual) (audible) signal from a (traffic officer) (federal law enforcement officer) (marked police vehicle) (unmarked police vehicle that the person knows or reasonably should know is being operated by a law enforcement officer).[6]

("Traffic officer" means every officer authorized by law to direct or regulate traffic or to make arrests for violation of traffic regulations.)[7]

2. The defendant knowingly[8] (fled) (attempted to elude) an officer[9]

[by willful[10] disregard of the visual or audible signal so as to (interfere with) (endanger) (the operation of the police vehicle) (the traffic officer) (other vehicles) (pedestrians)].

[by increasing the speed of the vehicle (in an attempt to elude) (to flee)].

[by extinguishing the lights of the vehicle (in an attempt to elude) (to flee)].

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. What a person knows or has reason to know must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF ONE OF THE MORE SERIOUS OFFENSES IDENTIFIED IN SEC. 346.17(3)(b), (c), OR (d) IS CHARGED AND THE

EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACT INCREASING THE PENALTY WAS PRESENT:[11]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

["Did the defendant's operating a vehicle (to flee) (in an attempt to elude) an officer result in[12] (bodily harm to[13]) (damage to the property of[14]) another?"

("Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.)]

["Did the defendant's operating a vehicle (to flee) (in an attempt to elude) an officer result in[15] great bodily harm[16] to another?"

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

["Did the defendant's operating a vehicle (to flee) (in an attempt to elude) an officer result in[17] death to another?"]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2630 was originally published in 1979 and revised in 1986, 1989, 1995, 1997, 2003, 2012, and 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it revised the instruction to reflect changes in the statute made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 347.

2017 Wisconsin Act 347 [effective date: April 18, 2018, revised § 346.04(3) to add reference to "federal law enforcement officer" and further revised the offense definition to refer to "marked or unmarked police vehicle that the operator knows or reasonably should know is being operated by a law enforcement officer."

For violations of § 346.04(2t), a misdemeanor offense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2632.

The penalties for violation of § 346.04(3) are found in § 346.17(3) and read as follows as amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109:

346.17(3)(a) Except as provided in par. (b), (c) or (d), any person violating s. 346.04(3) is guilty of a Class I felony.

(b) If the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22(4), to another, or causes damage to the property of another, as defined in s. 939.22(28), the person is guilty of a Class H felony.

(c) If the violation results in great bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22(14), to another, the person is guilty of a Class F felony.

(d) If the violation results in the death of another, the person is guilty of a Class E felony.

Wis JI-Criminal 2630 is designed to be used for offenses involving any of the penalties. The fact increasing the penalty is to be handled as an extra question to be submitted to the jury. See text of the instruction at note 11. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of operating a motor vehicle to flee or in an attempt to elude an officer under Wis. Stat. § 346.04, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

[Add the appropriate question.]"

1. Section 346.04(3) applies to all vehicles and is not restricted to "motor" vehicles. ["Vehicle" is defined in § 340.01(74); "motor vehicle" is defined in § 340.01(35).] Since the majority of cases will involve motor vehicles, the instruction has been drafted for those cases. "Motor" should be omitted where a motor vehicle is not involved.

2. Offenses defined in chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. Sec. 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in secs. 346.62 and 346.63; sec. 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element.

3. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. Any one of the alternatives is sufficient to establish the second element – that the defendant knowingly fled or attempted to elude the officers. See State v. Beamon, 2013 WI 47, ¶35, 347 Wis.2d 559, 830 N.W.2d 681, discussed in footnote 9, below. Make the same choice in defining the second element.

If more than one alternative is submitted, connect them with "or" and consider giving an instruction on jury agreement. See Wis JI-Criminal 517 JURY AGREEMENT: EVIDENCE OF MORE THAN ONE ACT INTRODUCED TO PROVE ONE CHARGE.

4. Section 346.04(3) reads "willful or wanton" (emphasis added). The Committee omitted "or wanton," concluding that the phrase does not add anything substantial to the offense. If it appears that "or wanton" is appropriate to a given case, it should be added.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court discussed the meaning of "willful" in State v. Hanson, 2012 WI 4, 338 Wis.2d 243, 808 N.W.2d 390. Hanson claimed that he fled from the scene of a traffic stop because he feared for his safety. He argued that "willful" should be interpreted to require an evil intent. The court disagreed:

> . . . we decline to read Wis. Stat. § 346.04(3) as providing a good faith exception to compliance. The statute requires: a subjective understanding by the defendant that a person known by the defendant to be a traffic officer has directed the defendant to take a particular action, and with that understanding, the defendant chose to act in contravention of the officer's direction. This requirement does not include a showing that the defendant had an evil or scornful state of mind. 2012 WI 4, ¶27.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. The phrase "marked police vehicle" is not defined by statute or in case law. Where there is a dispute as to a vehicle's status as "marked," it is a factual question for the jury to determine under all the circumstances of the case.

In State v. Opperman, 156 N.W.2d 241, 456 N.W.2d 625 (Ct. App. 1990), the court held that facts showing a vehicle was equipped with red lights and siren were not sufficient by themselves to prove that a vehicle is a "marked vehicle."

The question of whether a person may be charged under § 346.04(3) for fleeing or attempting to elude an unmarked police vehicle was considered in a 1976 opinion of the attorney general, which follows.

> You state that a person in a motor vehicle attempted to elude an unmarked police car equipped with a red light on the dashboard or within the grillwork and a siren under the hood. The police car was driven by a traffic officer who turned on both the red light and the siren. You ask whether this violates sec. 346.04(3), Stats.,
> . . . (statute omitted)

> The intention of the legislature to exclude signals received from vehicles which are not marked as police vehicles is apparent. Many automobiles, some privately owned, which are not police vehicles, qualify as authorized emergency vehicles under the definition in sec. 340.01(3), Stats., and operators of other vehicles can hardly be expected to know whether the operators of such authorized emergency vehicles are traffic officers or not. The statute here involved requires that the offense be knowingly committed. It is, therefore, my opinion that sec. 346.04(3), Stats., was not violated under the circumstances you have presented unless the eluder knew that the signal from the unmarked vehicle was given by a traffic officer. This, of course, is a matter of proof.
> However, Sec. 346.19, Stats., requires that upon the approach of an authorized emergency vehicle giving audible signal by siren, the operator of a motor vehicle shall yield the right of way, drive to the right and stop. I conclude that this is the proper statute to invoke in the case of a driver who flees from an unmarked police vehicle.

65 Op. Att'y Gen. 27 (1976)..

7. This is the definition provided in § 340.01(70).

8. The "knowingly" element was discussed in State v. Sterzinger, 2002 WI App 171, 256 Wis.2d 925, 649 N.W.2d 677. The court concluded that "the scienter requirement of Wis. Stat. § 346.04(3) applies only to the first element of the offense, that a driver 'knowingly flee or attempt to elude' an officer. We also conclude that the statute does not require the operator of a fleeing vehicle to actually interfere with or endanger identifiable vehicles or persons; he or she need only drive in a manner that creates a risk or likelihood of that occurring." 2002 WI App 171, ¶2. The court stated that this interpretation is consistent with Wis JI-Criminal 2630, but the instruction does not actually make the clear distinction articulated in the decision.

9. "[T]he second element of Wis Stat. § 346.04(3) – that the defendant knowingly fled or attempted to elude an officer – may be demonstrated in one of three ways: (1) willful disregard of the signal so as to interfere with or endanger the officer, vehicles, or pedestrians; (2) increasing the speed of the vehicle; or (3) extinguishing the lights of the vehicle." State v. Beamon, 2013 WI 47, ¶35, 347 Wis.2d 559, 830 N.W.2d 681. (Citing State v. Sterzinger, 2002 WI App 171, 256 Wis.2d 925, ¶9, 649 N.W.2d 677.).

10. See note 4, supra.

11. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 (effective date: February 1, 2003) revised § 346.17, which identifies the penalty for a violation of § 346.04(3). See the Comment preceding note 1, supra. The Committee concluded that the best way to handle the facts which increase the penalty is to submit a special question to the jury, asking whether the fact has been established beyond a reasonable doubt. This is the same way the question of value is handled in a theft case. See Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

12. Section 346.17(3) does not use the word "cause" but rather uses "results in." In State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), the court held that § 346.17(3) was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

If definition of the causal requirement is necessary, something like the following might be added:

This requires that the defendant's operation of the vehicle (to flee) (in an attempt to elude) an officer was a substantial factor in producing (specify the harm that occurred).

13. Section 346.17(3)(b) provides that the definition of "bodily harm" in § 939.22(4) applies. That is the definition used in the instruction.

14. Section 346.17(3)(b) provides that the definition of "property of another" in § 939.22(28) applies: "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the actor has a legal interest which the actor has no right to defeat or impair, even though the actor may also have a legal interest in the property."

15. See note 12, supra.

16. Section 346.17(3)(c) provides that the definition of "great bodily harm" in § 939.22(14) applies. The Committee recommends defining the term in the manner used in the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete discussion of issues relating to "great bodily harm."

17. See note 12, supra.

2632 RESISTING A TRAFFIC OFFICER BY FAILING TO STOP — § 346.04(2t)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.04(2t) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who operates a motor vehicle[1] on a highway,[2] and after receiving a visual or audible signal to stop his or her vehicle from a (traffic officer) (federal law enforcement officer) (marked police vehicle) (unmarked police vehicle that the person knows or reasonably should know is being operated by a law enforcement officer), knowingly resists the officer by failing to stop his or her vehicle as promptly as safety reasonably permits.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motor vehicle on a highway.[3]
2. The defendant received a visual or audible signal to stop (his) (her) vehicle from a (traffic officer) (federal law enforcement officer) (marked police vehicle) (unmarked police vehicle that the defendant knew or reasonably should have known was being operated by a law enforcement officer).

   ("Traffic officer" means every officer authorized by law to direct or regulate traffic or to make arrests for violation of traffic regulations.)[4]

3. The defendant knowingly resisted an officer by failing to stop (his) (her) vehicle as promptly as safety reasonably permits.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. What a person knows or has reason to know must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2632 was originally published in 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it revised the instruction to reflect changes in the statute made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 347.

2017 Wisconsin Act 347 [effective date: April 18, 2018, revised § 346.04(2t) to add reference to "federal law enforcement officer" and further revised the offense definition to refer to "marked or unmarked police vehicle that the operator knows or reasonably should know is being operated by a law enforcement officer."

Section 346.04(2t) was created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 which changed the penalties and created a misdemeanor offense. For offenses under § 346.04(3), see Wis JI-Criminal 2630.

This offense was created by the legislation that implemented the recommendations of the Criminal Penalties Study Committee. That Committee recommended that a misdemeanor fleeing offense be restored "for use in those cases when the defendant's behavior is appropriately addressed with a conviction other than at the felony level." Criminal Penalties Study Committee Final Report, p. 57 (Wisconsin Department of Administration, August 31, 1999.) [This report is available online at http://www.doa.state.wi.us/secy/index.asp.]

Section 346.04(4) provides: "Subsection (2t) is not an included offense of sub. (3), but a person may not be convicted of violating both subs. (2t) and (3) for acts arising out of the same incident or occurrence."

1. Section 346.04 applies to all vehicles and is not restricted to "motor" vehicles. ["Vehicle" is defined in § 340.01(74); "motor vehicle" is defined in § 340.01(35).] Since the majority of cases will involve motor vehicles, the instruction has been drafted for those cases. "Motor" should be omitted where a motor vehicle is not involved.

2. Offenses defined in chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. Sec. 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in secs. 346.62 and 346.63; sec. 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

"Highway" is defined in sec. 340.01(22) as:

> All public ways and thoroughfares and bridges on the same. It includes the entire width between the boundary lines of every way open to the use of the public as a matter of right for the purposes of vehicular travel. It includes those roads or driveways in the state, county or municipal parks and in state forests which have been opened to the use of the public for the purpose of vehicular travel and roads or driveways upon the grounds of public schools as defined in s. 115.01(1), and institutions under the jurisdiction of the county board of supervisors, but does not include private roads or driveways as defined in sub. (46).

This definition of "highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right-of-way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 334 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element

3. See note 2, supra.

4. This is the definition provided in § 340.01(70).

2650 RECKLESS DRIVING: ENDANGERING SAFETY (CRIMINAL OFFENSE) — § 346.62(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Reckless driving, as defined in § 346.62(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who endangers the safety of any person or property by the negligent operation of a vehicle on a highway.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[2] a vehicle[3] on a highway[4].
2. The defendant operated a vehicle in a manner constituting criminal negligence.[5]

   "Criminal negligence" means:[6]

   - the defendant's operation of a vehicle created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
   - the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
   - the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation of a vehicle created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

   IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY, SEE WIS JI CRIMINAL 925.[7]

IF EVIDENCE OF VIOLATION OF A SAFETY STATUTE HAS BEEN RECEIVED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[8]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant violated section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, which provides that (summarize the statute). Violating this statute does not necessarily constitute criminal negligence. You may consider this along with all the other evidence in determining whether the defendant's conduct constituted criminal negligence.]

3. The defendant's criminal negligence endangered the safety of any person or property.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following questions "yes" or "no":[9]

Did the violation result in bodily harm to another?

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[10]

Did the violation occur in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic?

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][11]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][12]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][13]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2650 was originally published in 1967 and revised in 1978, 1985, 1988, 1995, 2010, and 2023. The 2023 revision added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021]. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it reflects changes made by 2023 Wisconsin Act 9 [effective date: May 12, 2023].

Section 346.62(2) was modified by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. It was affected by the homicide revision because the same definition of "criminal negligence" is used for this offense as for homicide under the revision. The effective date of the change is January 1, 1989, and this instruction is to be used in place of Wis JI-Criminal 2650 (1986) for offenses committed on or after that date. The revised statute reads as follows:

> (2) No person may endanger the safety of any person or property by the negligent operation of a vehicle.

The Judicial Council explained the change as follows:

> The revisions contained in subs. (2) and (3) are intended as editorial, not substantive, as is the substitution of a cross-reference to s. 939.25(2), stats., for the prior definition of a high degree of negligence. New sub. (4) carries forward the crime created by 1985 Wisconsin Act 293.

Judicial Council Note to § 346.62, 1987 Senate Bill 181.

The first offense under § 346.62(2) is punishable only by forfeiture of not less than $50 nor more than $400 [see § 346.65(1)(a)]; therefore, the burden of proof is to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is "clear, satisfactory, and convincing," (see § 345.45). The second and subsequent violations are punishable as crimes: a fine of $100 to $1,000 or one year in the county jail or both [see § 346.65(1)(b)]. Therefore, for second and subsequent offenses, the burden of proof must be beyond a reasonable doubt.

The instruction is drafted for the criminal offense. To adapt it for a forfeiture case, substitute "satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing" for "prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt." If the "clear, satisfactory, and convincing" standard of proof applies, an instruction for a 5/6 verdict should also be given. See Wis JI-Criminal 2055, Five-Sixths Verdict: Forfeiture Actions.

Section 346.62(5m)(a) provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

> Except as provided in par. (b), if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.62 (2) to (4) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture or fine specified in sub. (1), (3), (4m), or (5) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 346.65(5m)(b) was created pursuant to 2021 Wisconsin Act 115. This section further increases penalties for violations of § 346.62(2) to (3) that occur in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area where workers are at risk from traffic, and bodily harm occurs. Upon conviction, a driver is subject to a fine of up to $10,000 or imprisonment of up to nine months, or both, an order to perform between 100 and 200 hours of community service work, and an order to attend traffic safety school.

A similar offense is defined in § 941.01, which prohibits "endangering another's safety by a high degree of negligence in the operation of a vehicle, not upon a highway." (Emphasis added.) See Wis JI-Criminal 1300.

1. Section 346.61 provides that § 346.62 applies to "highways" and to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles, whether such premises are publicly or privately owned and whether or not a fee is charged for the use thereof." The instruction is drafted for a case involving operating on a highway. If a case involves operating on "premises held out to the public. . . ," the instruction must be modified. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. For the purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

3. The definition of "vehicle" provided in § 939.22(44), applies to violations of § 346.62. See § 346.62(1)(d). It provides:

> "Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

4. If a case involves operating on "premises held out for the public" rather than on a "highway," see discussion in note 2 above. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I. and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. Section 346.62(1) provides: "'Negligent' has the meaning designated in s. 939.25(2)." This is a reference to the Criminal Code definition of "criminal negligence."

6. The definition of "criminal negligence" is the one provided in § 939.25, which applies to this offense. See § 346.62(1)(c).

7. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

8. The suggested instruction on the effect of violation of a safety statute is intended to comply with the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Dyess, 124 Wis.2d 525, 370 N.W.2d 222 (1985). See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1170.

9. The Committee determined that facts that increase the range of penalties be submitted to the jury in the form of two questions concerning whether the violation resulted in bodily harm to another and whether the violation occurred in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area where workers are at risk from traffic.

10. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

11. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

12. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

13. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

2652 RECKLESS DRIVING: CAUSING BODILY HARM — § 346.62(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Reckless driving, as defined in § 346.62(3) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who causes bodily harm to another by the negligent operation of a vehicle on a highway.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[2] a vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]
2. The defendant operated a vehicle in a manner constituting criminal negligence.[5]

   "Criminal negligence" means:[6]

   - the defendant's operation of a vehicle created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
   - the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
   - the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation of a vehicle created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

   IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI CRIMINAL 925.[7]

IF EVIDENCE OF VIOLATION OF A SAFETY STATUTE HAS BEEN RECEIVED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[8]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant violated section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, which provides that (summarize the statute). Violating this statute does not necessarily constitute criminal negligence. You may consider this along with all the other evidence in determining whether the defendant's conduct constituted criminal negligence.]

3. The defendant's criminal negligence caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[9]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no".[11]

Did the violation occur in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic?

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][12]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][13]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][14]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2652 was originally published in 1967 and revised in 1978, 1985, 1988, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

Section 346.62(3) was modified by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. It was affected by the homicide revision because the same definition of "criminal negligence" is used for this offense as for homicide under the revision. The effective date of the change is January 1, 1989, and this instruction is to be used in place of Wis JI-Criminal 2652 (© 1986) for offenses committed on or after that date. The revised statute reads as follows:

(2) No person may cause bodily harm to another by the negligent operation of a vehicle.

The Judicial Council explanation of the change is provided in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2650.

A violation of § 346.62(3) is a crime, punishable by a fine of not less than $300 nor more than $2,000 or imprisonment of not less than 30 days or more than one year in the county jail. § 346.65(3).

Section 346.62(5m)(a) provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

> Except as provided in par. (b), if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.62 (2) to (4) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture or fine specified in sub. (1), (3), (4m), or (5) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 346.65 (5m)(b) was created pursuant to 2021 Wisconsin Act 115. This section further increases penalties for violations of § 346.62 (2) to (3) that occur in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area where workers are at risk from traffic, and bodily harm occurs. Upon conviction, a driver is subject to a fine of up to $10,000 or imprisonment of up to nine months, or both, an order to perform between 100 and 200 hours of community service work, and an order to attend traffic safety school.

1. Section 346.61 provides that § 346.62 applies to "highways" and to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles, whether such premises are publicly or privately owned and whether or not a fee is charged for the use thereof." The instruction is drafted for a case involving operating on a highway. If a case involves operating on "premises held out to the public. . . ," the instruction must be modified. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. For the purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

3. The definition of "vehicle" provided in § 939.22(44), applies to violations of § 346.62. See § 346.62(1)(d). It provides:

> "Vehicle" means any self propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water or in the air.

4. If a case involves operating on "premises held out for the public" rather than on a "highway," see discussion in note 1, above. Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I. and Wis JI Criminal 2605.

5. Section 346.62(1) provides: "'Negligent' has the meaning designated in s. 939.25(2)." This is a reference to the Criminal Code definition of "criminal negligence."

6. The definition of "criminal negligence" is the one provided in § 939.25, which applies to this offense. See § 346.62(1)(c).

7. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

8. The suggested instruction on the effect of violation of a safety statute is intended to comply with the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Dyess, 124 Wis.2d 525, 370 N.W.2d 222 (1985). See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1170.

9. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient in most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

10. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided by § 939.22(4), which applies to reckless driving offenses. § 346.62(1)(a).

11. The Committee determined that facts which increase the range of penalties be submitted to the jury in the form of a question concerning whether the violation occurred in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area where workers are at risk from traffic.

12. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

13. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

14. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

2654 RECKLESS DRIVING: CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM — § 346.62(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Reckless driving, as defined in § 346.62(4) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who causes great bodily harm to another by the negligent operation of a vehicle on a highway.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[2] a vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]
2. The defendant operated a vehicle in a manner constituting criminal negligence.[5]

"Criminal negligence" means:[6]

- the defendant's operation of a vehicle created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation of a vehicle created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO

BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI CRIMINAL 925.[7]

IF EVIDENCE OF VIOLATION OF A SAFETY STATUTE HAS BEEN RECEIVED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[8]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant violated section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, which provides that (summarize the statute). Violating this statute does not necessarily constitute criminal negligence. You may consider this along with all the other evidence in determining whether the defendant's conduct constituted criminal negligence.]

3. The defendant's criminal negligence caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.[9]

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2654 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995, 2009, and 2018. The 2009 revision involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

Section 346.62(4) was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. It is former § 940.25, moved to line up with the closely related offenses defined in § 346.62(2) and (3). The effective date of the change is January 1, 1989, and this instruction is to be used in place of Wis JI Criminal 1261 (© 1986) for offenses committed on or after that date. The revised statute reads as follows:

(4) No person may cause great bodily harm to another by the negligent operation of a vehicle.

The Judicial Council explanation of the change is provided in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2650.

A violation of § 346.62(4) is a Class I felony. § 346.65(5).

Section 346.62(5m)(a) provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

> If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.62 (2) to (4) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture or fine specified in sub. (1), (3), (4m), or (5) for the violation shall be doubled.

The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

The definition of "Sanitation worker" is the one provided in § 340.01(55u), which applies to this offense.

1. Section 346.61 provides that § 346.62 applies to "highways" and to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles, whether such premises are publicly or privately owned and whether or not a fee is charged for the use thereof." The instruction is drafted for a case involving operating on a highway. If a case involves operating on "premises held out to the public. . . ," the instruction must be modified. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. For the purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

3. The definition of "vehicle" provided in § 939.22(44), applies to violations of § 346.62. See § 346.62(1)(d). It provides:

> "Vehicle" means any self propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water or in the air.

4. If a case involves operating on "premises held out for the public" rather than on a "highway," see discussion in note 1, above. Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I. and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. Section 346.62(1) provides: "'Negligent' has the meaning designated in s. 939.25(2)." This is a reference to the Criminal Code definition of "criminal negligence."

6. The definition of "criminal negligence" is the one provided in § 939.25, which applies to this offense. See § 346.62(1)(c).

7. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

8. The suggested instruction on the effect of violation of a safety statute is intended to comply with the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Dyess, 124 Wis.2d 525, 370 N.W.2d 222 (1985). See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1170.

9. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient in most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of great bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

10. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976).

Section 346.62(1)b) provides: "'Great bodily harm' has the meaning designated in s. 93.22(14)."

2660 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — § 346.63(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][5]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][6]

2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[7]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[8]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[9] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[10] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[11]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2660 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1985, 1993, 2004, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2020; it added to the Comment.

The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with two or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

The 2020 revision of the Comment reflected changes to the felony classes of fourth and subsequent offenses made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 371 [effective date: April 27, 2016]. The revision also reflected changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 106 [effective date: March 1, 2020] to the penalty provision of § 346.65(2)(am)5. This amendment increased the mandatory minimum confinement period of fifth and sixth offenses to not less than eighteen months, unless the court finds that a lesser term of confinement would be in the best interests of the community.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

The prohibited alcohol concentration is 0.02 for persons who have three or more prior convictions, suspension or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1). See § 340.01(46m)(c) and Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(1)(b), which applies if "the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under § 343.307(1) within in a 10-year period, equals two . . ." Section 346.65(2)(b). The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). The time period is measured from the date of the refusals or violations. § 346.65(2c).

The penalty for criminal violations of § 346.63(1) increases with the number of prior convictions the defendant has. See § 346.65(2).). Fourth offenses are Class H felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)4. Fifth and sixth offenses are Class G felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)5. Seventh, eighth, and ninth offenses are Class F felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)6. Tenth and subsequent offenses are Class E felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)7. This instruction may be used without change for all criminal violations. Although the number of priors is a fact that determines the applicable penalty level, it is not an issue that is presented to the jury. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

The maximum penalty for these offenses is doubled if there was a child under the age of 16 years in the defendant's vehicle. See § 346.65(2)(f) and Wis JI-Criminal 999.

First violations of the statute are forfeitures, see Wis JI-Criminal 2660A. For instructions for cases where both "under the influence" and "prohibited alcohol concentration" charges are submitted based on a single act of driving, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668 [forfeitures] and Wis JI-Criminal 2669 [criminal charges].

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having a prohibited level of alcohol concentration has been upheld. State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984); State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989). Defendants may not litigate the validity of the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 123.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V., regarding the amendment of the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003].

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the second element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the second element. For cases involving the 0.02 level, see Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

8. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. However, the rest of that statute does not accord test results of defendants with 3 or more priors any prima facie effect. So there is no statutory authority for the typical statement that discusses the evidentiary value of test results.

9. Regarding instructions on test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

10. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

11. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2660-2665 INTRODUCTORY COMMENT

[WITHDRAWN AND REPLACED BY WIS JI CRIMINAL 2600]

COMMENT

Material describing issues relating to "drunk driving" offenses was first published as Wis JI Criminal 2660-2665 Introductory Comment in 1982. It outlined the major changes in Wisconsin law made by Chapters 20 and 184, Laws of 1981. The most significant of those changes was the creation of offenses based on the alcohol concentration of the driver. The material was significantly revised in 1993 to emphasize the changes made by 1991 Wisconsin Act 277. The most significant of those changes, at least in terms of its effect on the jury instructions, was the creation of "0.08" as the level of prohibited alcohol concentration for offenders with two or more prior offenders.

In 2004, this material was withdrawn and replaced by Wis JI Criminal 2600. The discussion was substantially expanded to collect all explanatory material relating to "operating while intoxicated offenses" – those in the Motor Vehicle Code and in the Criminal Code.

2660A OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — CIVIL FORFEITURE — 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — § 346.63(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[2]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[8]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[9] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[10] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating). If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[11]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The (identify prosecuting agency is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the (identify prosecuting agency is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2660A was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1985, 1993, 2004, 2006, and 2014. The 2014 revision added to the Comment to refer to the finding required for installation of an ignition interlock device. The 2015 revision made a nonsubstantive correction in the Comment.

The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2006 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

This instruction is for a first offense under § 346.63(1)(b), which is punished as a forfeiture. For criminal violations, see Wis JI-Criminal 2660. For instructions for cases where both "under the influence" and "prohibited alcohol concentration" charges are submitted based on a single act of driving, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668 [forfeitures] and Wis JI-Criminal 2669 [criminal charges].

For first offenses under § 346.63(1) where the defendant has a prohibited alcohol concentration of 0.15 or more, "[a] court shall order a person's operating privilege . . . be restricted to operating vehicles that are equipped with an ignition interlock device and . . . shall order that each motor vehicle for which the person's name appears on the vehicle's certificate of title or registration be equipped with an ignition interlock device . . . "See § 343.301(1g) intro. and (b)1. The Committee concluded that whether the alcohol concentration was 0.15 or more is not an issue that must be submitted to the jury. Installation of the device is not a penalty and thus is not subject to the rule of Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000), which requires that all facts that increase the penalty for a crime be submitted to the jury. Thus, the judge makes the necessary finding when it is alleged that the 0.15 level is an issue.

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having a prohibited level of alcohol concentration has been upheld. State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984); State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989). Defendants may not litigate the validity of the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 123.

In City of Omro v. Brooks, 104 Wis.2d 352, 311 N.W.2d 620 (1981), the Wisconsin Supreme Court discussed the propriety of directing a verdict against the defendant in a forfeiture action for operating under the influence. The court held that the trial court erred not directing a verdict of guilty on the facts of that case. Brooks dealt with a charge of operating under the influence under a municipal ordinance in conformity with the state statutes, which at that time did not include a prohibited alcohol concentration offense. And, the evidence showing that the defendant in Brooks was under the influence was completely uncontradicted – the defendant testified and admitted the fact.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V., regarding the amendment of the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003].

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the second element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the second element.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2660B OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — CIVIL FORFEITURE — 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — § 346.63(1)(b)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2660B was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 2660.1 in 1992. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 2660B in 1995 and revised in 1998. It was withdrawn in 2003 when the generally applicable prohibited alcohol concentration was reduced from 0.10 to 0.08. Offenses involving the 0.08 level are now covered by Wis JI-Criminal 2660.

2660C OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — MORE THAN 0.02 GRAMS — § 346.63(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [two] [three][3] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

Definition of "Drive" or "Operate"

["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[8]

[more than .02 grams of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[more than .02 grams of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

NOTE: THE DEFENDANT'S ADMISSION OF THREE OR MORE PRIOR CONVICTIONS DISPENSES WITH THE NEED FOR PROOF OF THE FOLLOWING ELEMENT. IF THERE IS AN ADMISSION, DO NOT INSTRUCT ON THIS ELEMENT AND PROCEED TO THE PARAGRAPH CAPTIONED "HOW TO USE THE TEST RESULT EVIDENCE."[9]

[3. The defendant had three or more convictions, suspensions, or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1).][10]

IF THE THIRD ELEMENT IS INCLUDED AND IF REQUESTED BY THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:[11]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant had prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations. This evidence was received as relevant to the status of the defendant's driving record, which is an issue in this case. It must not be used for any other purpose and, particularly, you should bear in mind that conviction, suspension, or revocation at some previous time is not proof that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle with a prohibited alcohol concentration on this occasion.]

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[12]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2660C was originally published in 2002 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007; it corrected the reference to the prohibited alcohol concentration.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving a prohibited alcohol concentration level [PAC] of more than .02, which applies to persons with three or more priors. See § 340.01(46m)(c), created by 1999 Wisconsin Act 109. [Effective date: January 1, 2001.]

Note that § 340.01(46m)(c) defines the prohibited alcohol concentration for persons with three or more priors as "more than 0.02." This differs from the generally applicable level, referred to as "an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more." See § 340.01(46m)(a).

The fact of having three or more priors is included as a bracketed third element in this instruction. It is an element because the existence of priors changes the substantive definition of the crime from an alcohol concentration of .08 or more to one of more than .02. It is in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits having the priors. See footnotes 3 and 9, below. When priors change the offense from a forfeiture to a crime or increase the criminal penalty, they need not be submitted to the jury. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having a prohibited level of alcohol concentration has been upheld. State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984); State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989). Defendants may not litigate the validity of the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 123.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V., regarding the amendment of the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003].

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the second element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the second element. For cases involving the 0.08 level, see Wis JI-Criminal 2660.

3. The instruction is drafted to allow for use with either two or three elements, depending on whether the third element, relating to the defendant having three or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, is submitted to the jury. See discussion at note 9, below.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

7. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

8. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

9. The third element has been placed in brackets because the Committee concluded that the "status element" of this offense must be addressed in the same manner as for .08 offenses under the version of the law addressed in State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997). In Alexander, the Wisconsin Supreme Court referred to this element as a "status element" and held that if the defendant admits having two or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations [the relevant number under prior law], the "admission dispenses with the need for proof of the status element, either to a jury or to a judge." 214 Wis.2d 628, 646. When there is an admission of the status element, "admitting any evidence of the defendant's prior convictions, suspensions or revocations and submitting the status element to the jury . . . [is] an erroneous exercise of discretion." 214 Wis.2d 628, 651. The court's rationale for removing an element in this situation was that the status element involves facts "entirely outside the gravamen of the offense" and "adds nothing to the State's evidentiary depth or descriptive narrative." 214 Wis.2d 628, 649-50.

The court gave explicit direction to the trial courts as to how to handle this situation:

> "When a circuit court is faced with the circumstances presented in this case, the circuit court should simply instruct the jury that they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that: 1) the defendant was driving or operating a motor vehicle on a highway; and 2) the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time . . . The 'prohibited alcohol concentration' means 0.08 . . ."
> 214 Wis.2d 628, 651-52.

By placing the "status element" in brackets, the Committee intends to implement the approach approved in Alexander. If the defendant admits the "status element," the instruction should be given with two elements: causing death, by operating a vehicle, and, having an alcohol concentration of more than .02. If the defendant does not admit the "status element," the instruction should be given with a third element: having three or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations as counted under § 343.307(1).

Because the defendant's admission removes an element from the jury's consideration, the record should reflect the defendant's acknowledgment that a jury determination is, in effect, being waived on the "status element."

10. This element is not to be included if the defendant admits the priors. See note 9, supra.

The text of the third element is based on the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" in § 340.01(46m)(b). The types of convictions, suspensions, and revocations that are counted under § 343.307(1) are convictions for operating while intoxicated or suspensions or revocations for refusal to submit to chemical tests for alcohol. The priors may include offenses in other jurisdictions. The text of § 343.307(1) is provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment.

The Committee concluded that the instruction should use the statutory language "as counted under § 343.307(1)" because evidence of the defendant's driving record will usually be submitted with testimony that the prior offenses are those that are counted under the statute.

11. Making the fact of prior convictions, etc., an issue for the jury creates the possibility that a jury may make improper use of the evidence relating to the defendant's driving record. Therefore, upon request, an instruction should be given on the limited use to be made of the driving record evidence. In State v. Ludeking, 195 Wis.2d 132, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995), the court pointed to this cautionary paragraph as a way to offset the inevitable prejudicial impact of presenting this evidence to the jury.

12. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. However, the rest of that statute does not accord test results of .02 or more any prima facie effect. So there is no statutory authority for the typical statement that discusses test results like the ones included in the instructions for .08 offenses. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2660D OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — MORE THAN 0.02 GRAMS — SUBJECT TO AN IGNITION INTERLOCK ORDER — § 346.63(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [two] [three][3] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

Definition of "Drive" or "Operate"

["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[8]

[more than .02 grams of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[more than .02 grams of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

NOTE: THE DEFENDANT'S ADMISSION THAT HE OR SHE IS SUBJECT TO AN ORDER UNDER § 343.301 DISPENSES WITH THE NEED FOR PROOF OF THE FOLLOWING ELEMENT. IF THERE IS AN ADMISSION, DO NOT INSTRUCT ON THIS ELEMENT AND PROCEED TO THE PARAGRAPH CAPTIONED "HOW TO USE THE TEST RESULT EVIDENCE."[9]

[3. The defendant was subject to a court order under § 343.301 requiring the installation of an ignition interlock device.][10]

IF THE THIRD ELEMENT IS INCLUDED AND IF REQUESTED BY THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:[11]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant was subject to a court order requiring the installation of an ignition interlock device. This evidence was received as relevant to this element only. It must not be used for any other purpose and, particularly, it is not proof that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle with a prohibited alcohol concentration on this occasion.]

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[12]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2660D was approved by the Committee in December 2010.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving a prohibited alcohol concentration level [PAC] of more than 0.02, which applies to persons subject to an order under § 343.301 requiring the installation of an ignition interlock device. See § 340.01(46m)(c), as amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 100. [Effective date: July 1, 2010.]

Note that § 340.01(46m)(c) defines the prohibited alcohol concentration as "more than 0.02." This differs from the generally applicable level, referred to as "an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more." See § 340.01(46m)(a).

The "more than 0.02" PAC level also applies to persons who have 3 or more prior convictions, suspensions, or refusals as counted under § 343.307(1)." See Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

The fact of being subject to an order under § 343.301 is included as a bracketed third element in this instruction. It is an element because the existence of that fact changes the substantive definition of the crime from an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more to one of more than 0.02. It is in brackets because, by analogy to the case where prior offenses reduce the level to 0.02, it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits being subject to the order. See footnotes 3 and 9, below. When priors change the offense from a forfeiture to a crime or increase the criminal penalty, they need not be submitted to the jury. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having a prohibited level of alcohol concentration has been upheld. State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984); State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989). Defendants may not litigate the validity of the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 123.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V., regarding the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration."

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the second element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the second element.

3. The instruction is drafted to allow for use with either two or three elements, depending on whether the third element, relating to the defendant being subject to an order under § 343.301, is submitted to the jury. See discussion at note 9, below.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

7. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

8. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

9. The third element has been placed in brackets because the Committee concluded that the "status element" of this offense must be addressed in the same manner as for 0.02 offenses involving prior convictions. See Wis JI-Criminal 2660C. State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997) addressed an earlier version of the OWI law which reduced the PAC level to 0.08 if the defendant had prior convictions. In Alexander, the Wisconsin Supreme Court referred to this element as a "status element" and held that if the defendant admits having two or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations [the relevant number under prior law], the "admission dispenses with the need for proof of the status element, either to a jury or to a judge." 214 Wis.2d 628, 646. When there is an admission of the status element, "admitting any evidence of the defendant's prior convictions, suspensions or revocations and submitting the status element to the jury . . . [is] an erroneous exercise of discretion." 214 Wis.2d 628, 651. The court's rationale for removing an element in this situation was that the status element involves facts "entirely outside the gravamen of the offense" and "adds nothing to the State's evidentiary depth or descriptive narrative." 214 Wis.2d 628, 649-50.

The court gave explicit direction to the trial courts as to how to handle this situation:

> "When a circuit court is faced with the circumstances presented in this case, the circuit court should simply instruct the jury that they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that: 1) the defendant was driving or operating a motor vehicle on a highway; and 2) the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time . . . The 'prohibited alcohol concentration' means 0.08 . . ."
> 214 Wis.2d 628, 651-52.

By placing the "status element" in brackets, the Committee intends to implement the approach approved in Alexander. The existence of an ignition interlock order implies the existence of a prior OWI offense, creating the same risk of unfair prejudice that concerned the court in Alexander. If the defendant admits the "status element," the instruction should be given with two elements: by operating a vehicle, and, having an alcohol concentration of more than 0.02. If the defendant does not admit the "status element," the instruction should be given with a third element: being subject to an order under § 343.301.

Because the defendant's admission removes an element from the jury's consideration, the record should reflect the defendant's acknowledgment that a jury determination is, in effect, being waived on the "status element." See Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations.

10. This element is not to be included if the defendant admits being subject to the order. See note 9, supra.

11. Making the fact of being subject to an order under § 343.301 an issue for the jury creates the possibility that a jury may make improper use of the evidence relating to the defendant's driving record. Therefore, upon request, an instruction should be given on the limited use to be made of the driving record evidence. In State v. Ludeking, 195 Wis.2d 132, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995), the court pointed to this cautionary paragraph as a way to offset the inevitable prejudicial impact of presenting this evidence to the jury.

12. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. However, the rest of that statute does not accord test results of .02 or more any prima facie effect. So there is no statutory authority for the typical statement that discusses test results like the ones included in the instructions for 0.08 offenses. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2661 OPERATING A VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION AND CAUSING INJURY — 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — § 346.63(2)(a)2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(2)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who causes injury to another by the operation of a vehicle[1] on a highway[2] while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[6]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused injury[7] to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[8] in producing the injury.

3. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[9]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[10]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[11] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[12] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device.

However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 346.63(2)(b), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[14]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 346.63(2)(b), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[15]

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[16] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[17]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[18] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[19] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration and had been exercising due care.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[20]].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2661 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1985, 2004, 2006, and 2015. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2017; it added footnote 7.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.63(2)(a)2. involving a prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] of .08 or more. The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003. For persons with three or more priors, the PAC level is .02.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2665 for the related offense of causing injury while operating under the influence, as defined in § 346.63(2)(a)1. For cases involving two charges – operating under the influence and with a PAC – Wis JI-Criminal 1189 can be used as a model.

Section 346.65(2)(b) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 15 and following. The defense was formerly addressed in a separate instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 2662, which has been withdrawn. The constitutionality of the defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

The penalty for violations of § 346.62(2)(a) doubles if a child was in the vehicle at the time of the offense. See § 346.65(3m) and Wis JI-Criminal 999. A similar provision in the Criminal Code was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 and recreated as a sentencing factor, but § 346.65(3m) was not affected.

In State v. Smits, 2001 WI App 45, 241 Wis.2d 374, 626 N.W.2d 42, the court held that operating while intoxicated offenses are not lesser included offenses of the "causing injury" offenses defined in § 346.63(2).

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Note that § 346.63(2)(a) uses the phrase "operation of a vehicle." This differs in two respects from the way other offenses under § 346.63 are defined. First, it refers to "operate," not "drive or operate." Second, it refers to "vehicle" not "motor vehicle." The Committee assumed that these differences were intentional on the part of the legislature. The use of "vehicle" may be justified by the fact that offenses involving injury are considered to be more serious than simple operating offenses, thus leading to the inclusion of a broader category of conduct – namely, the operation of devices which do not fall within the definition of "motor vehicle." As to the use of "vehicle," this rationale was cited with approval in State v. Smits, 2001 WI App 45, ¶16, 241 Wis.2d 374, 626 N.W.2d 42.

2. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V., regarding the amendment of the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003].

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the second element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the second element. For cases involving the 0.02 level, see Wis JI-Criminal 2660C.

4. See note 1, supra. Section 340.01(74) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon, or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes made specifically applicable by statute.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. "Injury" was undefined by statute until 2013 Wisconsin Act 224 [effective date: April 10, 2014] created § 346.63(2)(c) to define it as "substantial bodily harm," cross-referencing the definition of that term in § 939.22(38). Section 346.63(2)(c) was repealed by 2015 Wisconsin Act 371 [effective date: April 27, 2016], again leaving "injury" undefined. The version of this instruction published before the 2014 statutory change did not define injury, but included the footnote that follows. There have been no directly applicable developments since then.

> The instruction does not define "injury" because it is not defined in the statutes or by a published court decision. While the Criminal Code uses the closely related term "bodily harm," caution should be used in equating the two because unpublished decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached conflicting results, regarding whether "pain" is sufficient to constitute "injury." In a prosecution under § 346.63(2)(a), the court held that the word "injury" encompasses physical pain. State v. Maddox, No. 03-0227-CR, July 8, 2003. [Ordered not published, August 27, 2003.] However, in a prosecution under § 940.225(2)(b), where "injury" is also used, the court held that the trial court erred in defining "injury" using the Criminal Code definition of "bodily harm" [see § 939.22(4)] because "injury" does not include "pain." State v. Gonzalez, No. 2006AP2977-CR, March 20, 2008. [Ordered not published, April 30, 2008.] Neither of these decisions may be cited as authority because they were not published. See § 809.23(3). But they indicate the need for caution in equating "injury" with "bodily harm." [Originally published as footnote 8, Wis JI-Criminal 2661 © 2006.]

8. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of injury. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

The statute does provide the defendant with an affirmative defense in certain situations, see footnote 14, below. The defense is closely related to the cause element but, in the Committee's judgment, deals with a different issue and may apply even if the defendant's operation was the cause of injury as required by the second element. If the defendant's operation caused the injury, the defense allows the defendant to avoid liability if it is established that the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence and had been exercising due care. The constitutionality of eliminating causal negligence as an element of § 940.09 and providing the affirmative defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

9. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

10. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. However, the rest of that statute does not accord test results of defendants with 3 or more priors any prima facie effect. So there is no statutory authority for the typical statement that discusses the evidentiary value of test results.

11. Regarding instructions on test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

12. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2690 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

14. Section 346.63(2)(b) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

15. See note 14, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

16. Section 346.65(2)(b) expressly places the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction describes the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

17. The material that follows was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to articulate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

18. The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

19. The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 346.63(2). The third sentence in the bracketed material is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted. See note 17, supra, and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

20. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements have not been proved [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

2662 OPERATING A VEHICLE WHILE INTOXICATED AND CAUSING INJURY: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE UNDER § 346.65(2)(b)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2662 was originally published in 1993 and revised in 1997, and 1998. It was withdrawn in 2004.

This instruction provided material describing the affirmative defense that applies to violations of § 346.63(2)(a). The material was to be added to the instructions to the instructions for the applicable offenses. In 2004, the instructions for violations of § 346.63(2)(a) were revised to incorporate instruction on the defense. See Wis JI Criminal 2661 and 2665.

2663 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of an intoxicant.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][5]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][6]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[7]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[8]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[9]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[10] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[11] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[12]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2663 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1978, 1981, 1982, 1986, 1993, 2004, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2020; it added to the Comment.

The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with two or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. For persons with two or fewer priors, a test showing 0.08 grams or more is prima facie evidence of being "under the influence of an intoxicant." § 885.235(1)(c). The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

The 2020 revision to the Comment reflected changes to the felony classes of fourth and subsequent offenses made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 371 [effective date: April 27, 2016]. The revision also reflected changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 106 [effective date: March 1, 2020] to the penalty provision of § 346.65(2)(am)5. This amendment increased the mandatory minimum confinement period of fifth and sixth offenses to not less than eighteen months, unless the court finds that a lesser term of confinement would be in the best interests of the community.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(1)(a), which applies if "the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under § 343.307(1) within in a 10-year period, equals two . . ." Section 346.65(2)(b). The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). The time period is measured from the date of the refusals or violations. § 346.65(2c).

The penalty for criminal violations of § 346.63(1) increases with the number of prior convictions the defendant has. See § 346.65(2). Fourth offenses are Class H felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)4. Fifth and sixth offenses are Class G felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)5. Seventh, eighth, and ninth offenses are Class F felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)6. Tenth and subsequent offenses are Class E felonies. § 346.65(2)(am)7. This instruction may be used without change for all criminal violations. Although the number of priors is a fact that determines the applicable penalty level, it is not an issue that is presented to the jury. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

The maximum penalty for these offenses is doubled if there was a child under the age of 16 years in the defendant's vehicle. See § 346.65(2)(f) and Wis JI-Criminal 999.

First violations of the statute are forfeitures, see Wis JI-Criminal 2663A. For instructions for cases where both "under the influence" and "prohibited alcohol concentration" charges are submitted based on a single act of driving, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668 [forfeitures] and Wis JI-Criminal 2669 [criminal charges].

For offenses involving operating under the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664.

For offenses involving operating under the influence of "any other drugs," see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

For offenses involving operating under the influence of "any combination of an intoxicant and any other drug," see Wis JI-Criminal 2666A.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For a model tailored to the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For a model tailored to the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664A. For a model tailored to the influence of a drug, see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. See note 2, supra. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

8. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

9. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

10. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

11. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal JI 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

12. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2663A OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT — CIVIL FORFEITURE — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of an intoxicant.[2]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency) [3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[8]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[9]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[10] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[11] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[12]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The (identify prosecuting agency is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the (identify prosecuting agency is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2663A was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1982, 1986, 1992, and 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2005.

The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

This instruction is for a first offense under § 346.63(1)(a), which is punished as a forfeiture. For criminal violations, see Wis JI-Criminal 2663. For instructions for cases where both "under the influence" and "prohibited alcohol concentration" charges are submitted based on a single act of driving, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668 [forfeitures] and Wis JI-Criminal 2669 [criminal charges].

In City of Omro v. Brooks, 104 Wis.2d 352, 311 N.W.2d 620 (1981), the Wisconsin Supreme Court discussed the propriety of directing a verdict against the defendant in a forfeiture action for operating under the influence. The court held that the trial court erred not directing a verdict of guilty on the facts of that case. Brooks dealt with a charge of operating under the influence under a municipal ordinance in conformity with the state statutes, which at that time did not include a prohibited alcohol concentration offense. And, the evidence showing that the defendant in Brooks was under the influence was completely uncontradicted – the defendant testified and admitted the fact.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

7. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

8. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. See note 2, supra. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

9. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

10. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2663B OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT — CIVIL FORFEITURE — NO ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION TEST — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of an intoxicant.[2]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[8]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A TEST REFUSAL, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[9]

[Testimony has been received that the defendant refused to furnish a (breath) (urine) sample for chemical analysis. You should consider this evidence along with all the other evidence in the case, giving to it the weight you decide it is entitled to receive.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2663B was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1992, 2004, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2018; it removed reference to "blood" in the paragraph relating to test refusal. See footnote 9.

This instruction is an adaptation of Wis JI-Criminal 2663A for a case where no evidence of an alcohol concentration test has been admitted. In place of the paragraphs relating to evidence of test results, the text of Wis JI-Criminal 235, dealing with a test refusal, is substituted, based on the assumption that in most "no-test" cases, the defendant has refused to take one.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For a model tailored to the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For a model tailored to the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664A. For a model tailored to the influence of a drug, see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

7. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

8. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. See note 2, supra. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

9. The material in brackets is the text of Wis JI-Criminal 235. The leading case affirming the admissibility of test refusal evidence is State v. Albright, 98 Wis.2d 663, 298 N.W.2d 196 (Ct. App. 1980). The defendant's explanation for the refusal is also admissible. State v. Bolstad, 124 Wis.2d 576, 370 N.W.2d 576 (Ct. App. 1985).

The 2018 revision removed reference to a blood test in light of recent decisions from the United States and Wisconsin Supreme Courts. In Birchfield v. North Dakota, 579 U.S. —, 136 S.Ct. 2160 (2016), the court held that it is unconstitutional to make it a crime to refuse a warrantless blood test after being lawfully arrested for OWI – where exigent circumstances were not shown. However, the court also stated:

> "Our prior opinions have referred approvingly to the general concept of implied-consent laws that impose civil penalties and evidentiary consequences on motorists who refuse to comply.

> Petitioners do not question the constitutionality of those laws and nothing we say here should be read to cast doubt on them." 136 S.Ct. 2160, 2185-86.

In State v. Dalton, 2018 WI 85, 383 Wis.2d 147, 914 N.W.2d 120, the defendant was subjected to a warrantless blood draw that was justified by exigent circumstances. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a trial court erred by expressly relying on the defendant's refusal to consent to the blood draw to increase his sentence within the allowed statutory range:

> Dalton was criminally punished for exercising his constitutional right. Established case law indicates that this is impermissible. ¶61.
> . . . the circuit court violated Birchfield by explicitly subjecting Dalton to a more severe criminal penalty because he refused to provide a blood sample absent a warrant. ¶67.

Neither Birchfield nor Dalton holds that commenting on a blood test refusal is improper, but the Committee decided to remove reference to a blood test from the text of the instruction to avoid possible issues as this area of the law continues to develop.

NOTE: In State v. Hawley, 2014 AP 1113-CR, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals certified the case to the Wisconsin Supreme Court for a "final resolution" whether implied consent applies to blood draws of unconscious individuals. The certification is being held in abeyance pending the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Mitchell v. Wisconsin, U.S. Case No. 18-6210, where the issue presented is "whether a statute authorizing a blood draw from an unconscious motorist provides an exception to the 4th Amendment warrant requirement." Oral argument in Mitchell was held April 23, 2019.

For a more complete discussion of the case law, see the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 235.

2663C ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION LEVEL — § 346.65(2)(g)

[ADD ONE OR MORE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE OFFENSE CHARGED.][1]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question[2] "yes" or "no":

["Did the defendant have an alcohol concentration of 0.25 or above?"]

[Answer the following question only if you answer the above question "no."]

["Did the defendant have an alcohol concentration of 0.20 or above?"]

[Answer the following question only if you answer the above question "no."]

["Did the defendant have an alcohol concentration of 0.17 or above?"]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the alcohol concentration stated in the question was proved.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2663C was originally published in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2003.

1999 Wisconsin Act 109 created § 346.65(2)(g) which provides for increased fines for OWI offenders with three, four, or five or more priors. The increases will apply to offenses committed after the effective date: January 1, 2001. [Subsection (2)(g) was not affected by the changes made in laws relating to operating while intoxicated by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30.] The level of increase depends on the alcohol concentration level:

- 0.17 to 0.199 minimum and maximum fines are doubled
- 0.20 to 0.249 minimum and maximum fines are tripled
- 0.25 or more minimum and maximum fines are quadrupled

Because the alcohol concentration level increases the maximum fine, which is part of the criminal penalty for the offense, the Committee concluded that it is a fact which must be submitted to the jury.

"Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000)

The Committee recommends handling the penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the instruction on the operating under the influence or operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration offense is given.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of (describe offense), as defined in § 346.63___, Wis. Stats., at the time and place charged in the complaint.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question(s) "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant have an alcohol concentration of ____ or above?

[ADD QUESTIONS FOR ADDITIONAL LEVELS AS REQUIRED.]

1. The Committee recommends submitting the question in the form indicated, without the upper limit of the range in the second and third questions. For example, in place of the statute's "0.17 to 0.199," the third question uses "0.17 or above." The criminal charge should indicate the level of alcohol concentration involved and it should be sufficient to ask the jury whether the applicable level is exceeded.

2. The instruction is drafted to allow for submitting one, two, or all three of the questions regarding the level of alcohol concentration. More than one question would be appropriate when reasonable, though conflicting, views of the evidence would support findings of different alcohol concentration levels.

2663D OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT WITH A CHILD UNDER 16 YEARS OF AGE IN THE MOTOR VEHICLE — § 346.63(1)(a) and § 346.65(2)(f)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of an intoxicant while there is a minor passenger under 16 years of age in the vehicle.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][5]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][6]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

3. There was a minor passenger under 16 years of age in the vehicle.

Knowledge of the passenger's age is not required and mistake regarding the passenger's age is not a defense.[7]

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[8]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[9]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[10]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[11] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[12] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2663D was approved by the Committee in June 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2022; it updated the comment.

This instruction is drafted for first offense OWI violations that are criminal because there was a minor passenger under 16 years of age in the vehicle. See § 346.65(2)(f)1., created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 100. Because the presence of the minor passenger makes conduct criminal that would otherwise be a forfeiture, the Committee concluded that it becomes an element of the crime. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals agreed in State v. Gahart, --Wis.2d--, --N.W.2d-- (Ct. App. 2022). In that decision, the court cited the Committee's conclusion with approval and observed that "the Legislature explicitly and unambiguously recognized the presence of a minor passenger as an element of operating while intoxicated."

This instruction is based on a violation for operating under the influence. For violations involving a prohibited alcohol concentration, combine Wis JI-Criminal 2660 with this instruction. For violations involving a controlled substance, combine Wis JI-Criminal 2664 with this instruction. For offenses involving drugs, combine Wis JI-Criminal 2666 with this instruction. For offenses involving the combination of alcohol and a controlled substance, combine Wis JI-Criminal 2664A with this instruction. For offenses involving a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance, combine Wis JI-Criminal 2664B with this instruction.

7. This statement is typically included in all instructions involving offenses against children; it states the general rules set forth in §§ 939.22(6) and 939.43(2).

8. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. See note 2, supra. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

9. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

10. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." 2664 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

Definition of "Drive" or "Operate"

["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][4]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][5]

2. The defendant was under the influence of (name controlled substance)[6] at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

[(Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance.][7]

The Definition of "Under the Influence"

"Under the influence" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of a controlled substance.[8]

[Not every person who has consumed (name controlled substance) is "under the influence" as that term is used here.][9] What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of (name controlled substance) to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2664 was originally published in 1979 and revised in 1982, 1986, 1993, and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2020; it added to the Comment. See footnotes 6 and 7 below.

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(1)(a), which applies if "the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under § 343.307(1) within in a 10-year period, equals two . . ." Section 346.65(2)(b). The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). The time period is measured from the date of the refusals or violations. § 346.65(2c).

First violations of the statute are forfeitures. See Wis JI-Criminal 2664A for an instruction for a forfeiture offense involving operating while under the influence of a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance.

For offenses involving operating under the influence of "any other drugs," see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes of individual instructions. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

3. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

4. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

5. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. To avoid confusion, the Committee strongly suggests that only the name of the statutorily listed controlled substance be used throughout the instruction, even if the specific substance alleged to have been in the defendant's blood is not listed in Chapter 961. For example, if the substance is heroin, "heroin," should be used throughout. Conversely, if the substance is a synthetic cannabinoid not listed by name in Section 961.14(4)(tb), "synthetic cannabinoid" should be used throughout the instruction, not the specific variation alleged to have been in the defendant's blood. Section 340.01(9m) provides that for purpose of the Vehicle Code, "controlled substance" has the meaning specified in § 961.01(4), which provides: "'Controlled substance' means a drug, substance or immediate precursor included in schedules I to V of sub. II." The schedules are found in §§ 961.14, 961.16, 961.18, 961.20, and 961.22.

7. It is helpful to instruct the jury that any statutorily listed controlled substance is a "controlled substance," as defined in § 961.01(4). The court should not, however, instruct the jury that a substance not specifically named in Chapter 961 is a controlled substance.

For example, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for cocaine, the jury should be instructed: "Cocaine is a controlled substance."

In contrast, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for "5F-AMQRZ," a non-statutorily listed synthetic cannabinoid, the jury should be instructed: "A synthetic cannabinoid is a controlled substance," not that "5F-AMQRZ" is a controlled substance. The burden is on the State to prove that 5F-AMQRZ is a synthetic cannabinoid.

8. This definition of "under the influence" is adapted from the one used for offenses involving alcoholic beverages. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

9. The sentence in brackets is appropriate for cases involving the consumption of substances which are roughly similar in their effect on a person as alcohol. That is, a person could use some substances in a limited degree and, like the person who consumes a limited amount of alcohol, not be "under the influence" as that term is used here.

Some controlled substances, however, have such extreme effects that the sentence in brackets should not be used.

2664A OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF A COMBINATION OF AN INTOXICANT AND A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — CIVIL FORFEITURE — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[2] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][5]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][6]

2. The defendant was under the influence of a combination of an intoxicant and (name controlled substance)[7] at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

   [(Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance.][8]

The Definition of "Under the Influence"

"Under the influence" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of a combination of an alcoholic beverage and a controlled substance.[9]

[Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages and controlled substances is "under the influence" as that term is used here.][10] What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol or of a controlled substance or both to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, ADD THE FOLLOWING.[11]

[The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating). An analysis showing that there was [.04 grams or more but less than .08 grams of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.04 grams or more but less than .08 grams of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken may be considered by you in determining whether the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating). However, by itself it is not a sufficient basis for finding that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating).

Therefore, you may consider this evidence regarding an alcohol concentration test along with all of the other credible evidence in the case, giving to it the weight you believe it is entitled to receive.]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[12] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[13] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[14]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2664A was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1993, 2004, 2005, and 2020. This 2020 revision added to the Comment. See footnotes 7 and 8 below. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added suggested language concerning test results showing 0.08 grams or more in the defendant's blood.

This instruction is for a first offense under § 346.63(1)(a), involving the combined influence of an intoxicant a controlled substance. For offenses involving operating under the influence of a controlled substance alone, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For offenses involving operating under the influence of "any other drugs," see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

Wisconsin case law interpreted earlier versions of the drunk driving statutes in a way that would seem to cover situations involving the combined influence of alcohol and controlled substances or drug. Waukesha v. Godfrey, 41 Wis.2d 401, 406, 164 N.W.2d 314 (1960), cited with approval a Pennsylvania case holding that:

If liquor shares its influence with another influence and is still the activating cause of the condition which the statute denounces it can be truthfully said that the driver was under the influence of liquor. Commonwealth v. Rex (1951), 168 Pa. Super. 628, 632, 82 Atl.2d 315.

The Godfrey rule also applies to situations where an intoxicant combines its influence with medication or where a person's poor health or physical condition reduces tolerance to alcohol. 41 Wis.2d 401, 407.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes of individual instructions. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. To avoid confusion, the Committee strongly suggests that only the name of the statutorily listed controlled substance be used throughout the instruction, even if the specific substance alleged to have been in the defendant's blood is not listed in Chapter 961. For example, if the substance is heroin, "heroin," should be used throughout. Conversely, if the substance is a synthetic cannabinoid not listed by name in Section 961.14(4)(tb), "synthetic cannabinoid" should be used throughout the instruction, not the specific variation alleged to have been in the defendant's blood. Section 340.01(9m) provides that for purpose of the Vehicle Code, "controlled substance" has the meaning specified in § 961.01(4), which provides: "'Controlled substance' means a drug, substance or immediate precursor included in schedules I to V of sub. II." The schedules are found in §§ 961.14, 961.16, 961.18, 961.20, and 961.22.

8. It is helpful to instruct the jury that any statutorily listed controlled substance is a "controlled substance," as defined in § 961.01(4). The court should not, however, instruct the jury that a substance not specifically named in Chapter 961 is a controlled substance.

For example, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for cocaine, the jury should be instructed: "Cocaine is a controlled substance."

In contrast, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for "5F-AMQRZ," a non-statutorily listed synthetic cannabinoid, the jury should be instructed: "A synthetic cannabinoid is a controlled substance," not that "5F-AMQRZ" is a controlled substance. The burden is on the State to prove that 5F-AMQRZ is a synthetic cannabinoid.

9. This definition of "under the influence" is adapted from the one used for offenses involving alcoholic beverages. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

10. The sentence in brackets is appropriate for cases involving the consumption of substances which are roughly similar in their effect on a person as alcohol. That is, a person could use some substances in a limited degree and, like the person who consumes a limited amount of alcohol, not be "under the influence" as that term is used here.

Some controlled substances, however, have such extreme effects that the sentence in brackets should not be used.

11. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect."

12. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII., C.

14. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2664B OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A DETECTABLE AMOUNT OF A RESTRICTED CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 346.63(1)(am)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(am) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while the person has a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the [(identify prosecuting agency) [2]] [State] must prove by evidence which satisfies you [to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing] [beyond a reasonable doubt][3] that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][7]

2. The defendant had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

   [(Name restricted controlled substance) is a restricted controlled substance.][8]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING IF DELTA-9-TETRAHYDROCANNABINOL IS THE ALLEGED RESTRICTED CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.

[Delta 9 tetrahydrocannabinol is considered a restricted controlled substance if it is at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood.]

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that a chemical analysis showing a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in a defendant's blood sample is evidence of the presence of a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in a defendant's blood at the time of the (driving) (operating).[9]

USE THE FOLLOWING IF APPROPRIATE:

[If you are satisfied (to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing) (beyond a reasonable doubt) that there was a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in the defendant's blood at the time the sample was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in (his) (her) blood at the time of the (driving) (operating) but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in (his) (her) blood at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating) unless you are satisfied of that fact (to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing) (beyond a reasonable doubt).]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied [to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing] [beyond a reasonable doubt] that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2664B was originally published in 2004 and revised in 2005, 2006, 2007 and 2010. This revision was approve by the Committee in August 2020; it added an alternative element to the instruction and to footnotes 8 and 9 based on 2019 Wisconsin Act 68.

This instruction is for a violation of § 346.63(1)(am), which was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 97. Subsection (1)(am) provides that no person may drive or operate a motor vehicle while "[t]he person has a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood." The statute applies to offenses committed on or after the Act's effective date: December 19, 2003. For a general discussion of Act 97, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. IX.

The penalties for this offense are the same as those for operating under the influence offenses: a first offense is a civil forfeiture; second and subsequent violations are criminal. The instruction is drafted for both types of cases with the different burdens of proof in brackets; the applicable alternative should be selected.

Section 346.63(1)(d) recognizes a defense for cases involving "a detectable amount of methamphetamine, gamma-hydroxybutyric acid, or delta 9 tetrahydrocannabinol" that applies if the person proves that he or she had a valid prescription for the substance.

This instruction can also be used as a model for violations of other statutes that have been amended to prohibit operating with a "detectable amount . . ." See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. IX.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has found the "detectable amount" provision to be constitutional. See State v. Smet, 2005 WI App 263, 288 Wis.2d 525, 709 N.W.2d 474; and, State v. Gardner, 2006 WI App 92, 292 Wis.2d 682, 715 N.W.2d 720. Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. IX.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2664 and 2664A for instructions involving operating while under the influence of a controlled substance and a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance. For offenses involving operating under the influence of "any other drugs," see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. They are cross-referenced by section number in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I.

2. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

3. This instruction is drafted to be used for both civil forfeiture and criminal offenses. Use the first bracketed phrase for civil forfeitures and the second for crimes.

4. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

5. Regarding the definition of "highway," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

7. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

8. The Committee concluded that it adds clarity to tell the jury that the alleged substance does qualify as a restricted controlled substance under the statute. Whether the defendant actually had a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood remains a jury question. Section 340.01(50m) defines "restricted controlled substance" as follows:

(50m) 'Restricted controlled substance' means any of the following:

(a) A controlled substance included in schedule I other than tetrahydrocannabinol.
(b) A controlled substance analog, as defined in s. 961.01(4m), of a controlled substance described in par. (a).
(c) Cocaine or any of its metabolites.
(d) Methamphetamine.
(e) Delta 9 tetrahydrocannabinol, excluding its precursors or metabolites, at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood.

2019 Act 68 amended the definition of delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol to require that delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol be at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood. Prior to Act 68, the statute required only a detectable amount of delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol.

9. This statement is similar to the one used for the results of properly conducted alcohol tests. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663. [The Committee's general approach to instructing on test results is discussed in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.] The Committee concluded that it is proper for tests in "restricted controlled substance" cases as well.

Whether additional instruction on the evidentiary significance of the test should be given is not clear, however, because the statute created for "detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance" cases is not phrased in the same way that the alcohol test statutes are. Section 885.235(1k), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 97, reads as follows:

> 885.235(1k) In any action or proceeding in which it is material to prove that a person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood while operating or driving a motor vehicle . . . if a chemical analysis of a sample of the person's blood shows that the person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood, the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence on the issue of the person having a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood without requiring any expert testimony as to its effect.

As for the admissibility of evidence concerning the concentration of delta-9- tetrahydrocannabinol in a person's blood, sec. 885.235(5), created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 68, reads as follows:

> [t]he only form of chemical analysis of a sample of human biological material that is admissible as evidence bearing on the question of whether or not the person had delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of the person's blood is a chemical analysis of a sample of the person's blood.

Comparing this statute to § 885.235(1g), the statute addressing alcohol tests, reveals several differences:

- sub. (1k) does not require that the test be taken within 3 hours of driving;
- sub. (1k) does not directly provide for admissibility of test results; and,
- sub. (1k) does not explicitly connect having a detectable amount in the blood at the time of the test with having a detectable amount at the time of driving.

As to the second difference – admissibility – the Committee concluded that the statement "the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence" strongly implies that the analysis is admissible. As to the third difference – connection with the time of driving – the Committee concluded that the statement "the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence on the issue of the person having . . ." may express a legislative intent that the analysis be admissible to prove the material issue "that a person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood while operating or driving a motor vehicle . . ." as stated at the beginning of sub. (1k). For that reason, the instruction includes a paragraph that addresses the "prima facie" effect of the chemical analysis. The paragraph is in brackets to suggest that trial courts make an independent determination about whether its use is appropriate. To be admissible, the analysis must be found to be relevant to the issue which it is offered to prove.

2665 OPERATING A VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT AND CAUSING INJURY — § 346.63(2)(a)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(2)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who causes injury to another by the operation of a vehicle[1] on a highway[2] while under the influence of an intoxicant.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[6]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused injury[7] to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[8] in producing the injury.

3. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[9]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[10]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[11]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[12] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[13] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[14]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 346.63(2)(b), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[15]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 346.63(2)(b), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[16]

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not been under the influence of an intoxicant.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[17] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[18]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[19] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[20] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence of an intoxicant.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[21]]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2665 was originally published in 1978 and revised in 1980, 1982, 1986, 1993, 2004, 2006, 2009, and 2015. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2017; it added footnote 7.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.63(2)(a)1., which prohibits causing injury by the operation of a vehicle while under the influence. The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. For persons with two or fewer priors, a test showing 0.08 grams or more is prima facie evidence of being "under the influence of an intoxicant." § 885.235(1)(c). The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2661 for the related offense of causing injury while having a prohibited alcohol concentration, as defined in § 346.63(2)(a)2. For cases involving two charges – operating under the influence and with a PAC – Wis JI-Criminal 1189 can be used as a model.

Section 346.63(2)(b) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . had not been under the influence . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 16 and following. The defense was formerly addressed in a separate instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 2662, which has been withdrawn. The constitutionality of the defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

The penalty for violations of § 346.62(2)(a) doubles if a child was in the vehicle at the time of the offense. See § 346.65(3m) and Wis JI-Criminal 999. A similar provision in the Criminal Code was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 and recreated as a sentencing factor, but § 346.65(3m) was not affected.

In State v. Smits, 2001 WI App 45, 241 Wis.2d 374, 626 N.W.2d 42, the court held that operating while intoxicated offenses are not lesser included offenses of the "causing injury" offenses defined in § 346.63(2).

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Note that § 346.63(2)(a) uses the phrase "operation of a vehicle." This differs in two respects from the way other offenses under § 346.63 are defined. First, it refers to "operate," not "drive or operate." Second, it refers to "vehicle" not "motor vehicle." The Committee assumed that these differences were intentional on the part of the legislature. The use of "vehicle" may be justified by the fact that offenses involving injury are considered to be more serious than simple operating offenses, thus leading to the inclusion of a broader category of conduct – namely, the operation of devices which do not fall within the definition of "motor vehicle." As to the use of "vehicle," this rationale was cited with approval in State v. Smits, 2001 WI App 45, ¶16, 241 Wis.2d 374, 626 N.W.2d 42.

2. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For a model tailored to the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For a model tailored to the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664A. For a model tailored to the influence of a drug, see Wis JI-Criminal 2666.

4. See note 1, supra. Section 340.01(74) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon, or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes made specifically applicable by statute.

5. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see § 346.63(3)(b) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. "Injury" was undefined by statute until 2013 Wisconsin Act 224 [effective date: April 10, 2014] created § 346.63(2)(c) to define it as "substantial bodily harm," cross-referencing the definition of that term in § 939.22(38). Section 346.63(2)(c) was repealed by 2015 Wisconsin Act 371 [effective date:

April 27, 2016], again leaving "injury" undefined. The version of this instruction published before the 2014 statutory change did not define injury, but included the footnote that follows. There have been no directly applicable developments since then.

> The instruction does not define "injury" because it is not defined in the statutes or by a published court decision. While the Criminal Code uses the closely related term "bodily harm," caution should be used in equating the two because unpublished decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached conflicting results, regarding whether "pain" is sufficient to constitute "injury." In a prosecution under § 346.63(2)(a), the court held that the word "injury" encompasses physical pain. State v. Maddox, No. 03-0227-CR, July 8, 2003. [Ordered not published, August 27, 2003.] However, in a prosecution under § 940.225(2)(b), where "injury" is also used, the court held that the trial court erred in defining "injury" using the Criminal Code definition of "bodily harm" [see § 939.22(4)] because "injury" does not include "pain." State v. Gonzalez, No. 2006AP2977-CR, March 20, 2008. [Ordered not published, April 30, 2008.] Neither of these decisions may be cited as authority because they were not published. See § 809.23(3). But they indicate the need for caution in equating "injury" with "bodily harm." [Originally published as footnote 8, Wis JI-Criminal 2665 © 2009.

8. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of injury. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

The statute does provide the defendant with an affirmative defense in certain situations, see footnote 15, below. The defense is closely related to the cause element but, in the Committee's judgment, deals with a different issue and may apply even if the defendant's operation was the cause of injury as required by the second element. If the defendant's operation caused the injury, the defense allows the defendant to avoid liability if it is established that the injury would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence and had been exercising due care. The constitutionality of eliminating causal negligence as an element of § 940.09 and providing the affirmative defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

9. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. See note 3, supra. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

10. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

11. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(2)(a)1. where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

12. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

14. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

15. Section 346.63(2)(b) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the injury would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she had not been under the influence of an intoxicant . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

16. See note 15, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

17. Section 346.65(2)(b) expressly places the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction describes the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

18. The material that follows was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to articulate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

19. The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

20. The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 346.63(2). The third sentence in the bracketed material is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted. See note 18, supra, and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

21. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements have not been proved [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

2666 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF A DRUG — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of a drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

Definition of "Drive" or "Operate"

["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][4]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][5]

2. The defendant was under the influence of (name drug)[6] to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2666 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1993. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2003.

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(1)(a), which applies if "the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under § 343.307(1) within in a 10-year period, equals 2 . . ." Section 346.65(2)(b). The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). The time period is measured from the date of the refusals or violations. § 346.65(2c).

First violations of the statute are forfeitures. There is no uniform instruction for the forfeiture violation of this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2664A for an instruction for a forfeiture offense involving operating while under the influence of a combination of an intoxicant and a controlled substance. See Wis JI-Criminal 2664 for an instruction for a criminal offense involving operating while under the influence of a controlled substance.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of JI 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes of individual instructions. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

3. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

4. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

5. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. This instruction assumes that the identity of the drug is known. If the identity of the drug is not known, proving that a drug is involved may be extremely difficult in light of the statutory definition of "drug" that applies. Section 340.01(15mm) provides that the applicable definition is the one found in

§ 450.01(10), which reads as follows:

> "Drug" means:
> (a) Any substance recognized as a drug in the official U.S. pharmacopoeia and national formulary or official homeopathic pharmacopoeia of the United States or any supplement to either of them;
> (b) Any substance intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment or prevention of disease or other conditions in persons or other animals;
> (c) Any substance other than a device or food intended to affect the structure or any function of the body of persons or other animals; or
> (d) Any substance intended for use as a component of any article specified in pars. (a) to (c) but does not include gases or devices or articles intended for use or consumption in or for mechanical, industrial, manufacturing or scientific applications or purposes.

Some of the difficulty of incorporating the "drug" definition into an instruction might be avoided by charging the case as one involving "under the influence of an intoxicant." If the intoxicant shares its influence with another substance, the person may still be considered to be "under the influence of an intoxicant." Waukesha v. Godfrey, 41 Wis. 2d 401, 406, 164 N.W.2d 314 (1965).

7. The statute requires not only operating while "under the influence" but also that the defendant be under the influence "to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving." The "incapable of safely driving" requirement appears to be more restrictive than the "ability to operate is impaired" standard that is part of the uniform definition of "under the influence." See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663. Since this requirement of the statute supersedes the usual "under the influence" definition, no definition is included in the instruction.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

2666A OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF ANY COMBINATION OF AN INTOXICANT AND ANY OTHER DRUG TO A DEGREE THAT RENDERS HIM OR HER INCAPABLE OF SAFELY DRIVING – § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the combined influence of an intoxicant and any other drug to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][4]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][5]

2. The defendant was under the combined influence of an intoxicant and (name of drug) to a degree which rendered (him) (her) incapable of safely driving at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.[7]

[(Name of drug) is a drug.][8]

Definition of "Under the Influence"

"Under the influence" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of a combination of an alcoholic beverage and any other drug.[9]

[Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages and any other drug is "under the influence" as that term is used here.][10] What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol or of any other drug or both to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, ADD THE FOLLOWING.[11]

[The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating). An analysis showing that there was [.04 grams or more but less than .08 grams of alcohol in 100

milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.04 grams or more but less than .08 grams of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken may be considered by you in determining whether the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating). However, by itself it is not a sufficient basis for finding that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating).

Therefore, you may consider this evidence regarding an alcohol concertation test along with all of the other credible evidence in the case, giving to it the weight you believe it is entitled to receive.]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[12] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[13] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[14]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2666A was approved by the Committee in 2019 and revised in 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2023; it amended the "Jury's Decision" paragraph to accurately reflect the burden of proof as "beyond a reasonable doubt."

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(1)(a), involving the combined influence of an intoxicant and any other drug. For offenses involving operating under the influence of a drug alone, see Wis JI-Criminal 2666. For offenses involving operating under the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664.

Wisconsin case law interpreted earlier versions of the drunk driving statutes in a way that would seem to cover situations involving the combined influence of alcohol and a controlled substance or drug. Waukesha v. Godfrey, 41 Wis.2d 401, 406, 164 N.W.2d 314 (1960), cited with approval a Pennsylvania case holding that:

> If liquor shares the influence with another influence and is still the activating cause of the condition which the statute denounces it can be truthfully said that the driver was under the influence of liquor. Commonwealth v. Rex (1951), 168 Pa. Super. 628, 632, 82 Atl.2d 315.

The Godfrey rule also applies to situations where the intoxicant combines its influence with medication or where a person's poor health or physical condition reduces tolerance to alcohol. 41 Wis.2d 401, 407.

Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes of individual instructions. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

3. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

4. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

5. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. The Committee suggests that the name of the drug, if known, be used throughout the instruction. Section 340.01(15mm) provides that for the purpose of the Vehicle Code, "drug" has the meaning specific in § 450.01(10).

This instruction assumes that the identity of the drug is known. If the identity of the drug is not known, proving that a drug is involved may be extremely difficult in light of the statutory definition of "drug" that applies. Section 340.01(15mm) provides that the applicable definition is the one found in § 450.01(10), which reads as follows:

"Drug" means:

(a) Any substance recognized as a drug in the official U.S. pharmacopoeia and national formulary or official homeopathic pharmacopoeia of the United States or any supplement to either of them;
(b) Any substance intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment or prevention of disease or other conditions in persons or animals;
(c) Any substance other than a device or food intended to affect the structure or any function of the body or persons or other animals; or
(d) Any substance intended for use as a component if any article specified in pars. (a) to (c) but does not include gases or devices or articles intended for use or consumption in or for mechanical, industrial, manufacturing or scientific applications or purposes.

7. The statute requires not only operating while "under the influence" but also that the defendant be under the influence "to a degree which renders him or her incapable of safely driving." The "incapable of safely driving" requirement appears to be more restrictive than the "ability to operate is impaired" standard that is part of the uniform definition of "under the influence." See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663. Since this requirement of the statute supersedes the usual "under the influence" definition, no definition is included in the instruction.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

8. The Committee concluded that it adds clarity to refer to the name of the alleged drug, if known. See note 6, supra. Whether the defendant was actually under the combined influence of an intoxicant and the drug named remains a jury question.

9. This definition of "under the influence" is adapted from the one used for offenses involving alcoholic beverages. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

10. The sentence in brackets is appropriate for cases involving the consumption of a drugs which are roughly similar in their effect on a person as alcohol. That is, a person could use some drug in a limited degree and, like the person who consumes a limited amount of alcohol, not be "under the influence" as that term is used here.

Some drugs, however, have such extreme effects that the sentence in brackets should not be used.

11. It may be that cases will be charged under § 346.63(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect."

12. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII., C.

14. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2667 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT: HAZARDOUS INHALANT — § 346.63(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway[1] while under the influence of a hazardous inhalant.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[3] on a highway.[4]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][5]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][6]

2. The defendant was under the influence of a hazardous inhalant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Hazardous Inhalant"

"Hazardous inhalant" means a substance that is ingested, inhaled, or otherwise introduced into the human body in a manner that is not intended by the manufacturer of the substance, and that is intended to induce intoxication or elation.[7]

Definition of "Under the Influence of a Hazardous Inhalant"

"Under the influence of a hazardous inhalant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because the defendant ingested, inhaled, or otherwise introduced a hazardous inhalant into (his) (her) body.[8]

Not every person who has introduced a hazardous inhalant into (his) (her) body[9] is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has introduced a sufficient amount of a hazardous inhalant into (his) (her) body to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2667 was approved by the Committee in June 2014.

This instruction is drafted for a criminal operating under the influence offense where the intoxicant involved is a hazardous inhalant. 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 [effective date: Dec. 14, 2013] created § 340.01(25d), which provides: "'Intoxicant' includes a hazardous inhalant." Act 83 also created § 340.01(20r), which defines "hazardous inhalant."

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant, where the intoxicant is a hazardous inhalant. The basic offense definition in § 346.63(1)(a) refers to "operating under the influence of an intoxicant." 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 [effective date: Dec. 14, 2013] created § 340.01(25d), which provides: "'Intoxicant' includes a hazardous inhalant."

Act 83 also created § 340.01(20r), which defines "hazardous inhalant" as follows:

> "Hazardous inhalant" means a substance that is ingested, inhaled, or otherwise introduced into the human body in a manner that does not comply with any cautionary labeling that is required for the substance under s. 100.37 or under federal law, or in a manner that is not intended by the manufacturer of the substance, and that is intended to induce intoxication or elation, to stupefy the central nervous system, or to change the human audio, visual, or mental processes.

3. Regarding the definition of "motor vehicle," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. II.

4. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

6. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

7. This is based on the definition of "hazardous inhalant" provided in § 340.01(20r). The Committee concluded that the phrase "in a manner not intended by the manufacturer" would be likely to apply to most cases. If the facts require, substitute "in a manner that does not comply with any cautionary labeling that is required for the substance under s. 100.37 or under federal law." The Committee also concluded that the phrase "is intended to induce intoxication or elation" would be sufficient to cover most cases. If the facts require, substitute "intended to stupefy the central nervous system" or "intended to change the human audio, visual, or mental processes."

8. This sentence adapts the standard definition of "under the influence" of an alcohol beverage for use in "hazardous inhalant" cases. For a discussion of issues relating to defining "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

9. The instructions uses the phrase "introduced . . . into the body" as a simpler statement than the full statutory phrase: "ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce . . ." "Introduce" includes "ingest" and "inhale."

2668 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT / OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION OF 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — CIVIL FORFEITURE — §§ 346.63(1)(a) and 346.63(1)(b)

Description of the Charges

The first citation in this case charges that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant in violation of § 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

The second citation in this case charges that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle on a highway while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration in violation of § 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

To these charges, the defendant has entered pleas of not guilty which means the (identify prosecuting agency [1] must prove every element of each offense charged to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.[2]

It is for you to determine whether the defendant is guilty of one, both, or neither of the offenses charged. You must make a finding of guilty or not guilty for each offense charged.[3]

Each citation charges a separate offense, and you must consider each one separately.

Definition of Citation 1 – Operating Under The Influence

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant.[4]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Citation 1 – Operating Under The Influence

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[5] on a highway.[6]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][7]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][8]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[9]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

Definition of Citation 2 – Operating With A Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway with a prohibited alcohol concentration.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Citation 2 – Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway.
2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[10]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[11] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE

DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[12] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating). If you are satisfied that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating) or that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), or both, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The (identify prosecuting agency is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the (identify prosecuting agency is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant, you should find the defendant guilty of the offense charged in Citation 1.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of the offense charged in Citation 1.

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration, you should find the defendant guilty of the offense charged in Citation 2.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of the offense charged in Citation 2.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2668 was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1993, 2003 and 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2014; it deleted material relating to finding that the alcohol concentration was more than 0.10, a fact that formerly made a difference in applicable fees and costs.

The 2003 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

This instruction is drafted for the case where two counts based on the same incident are submitted to the jury: one alleging operating while under the influence in violation of 346.63(1)(a); and, one alleging operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more. It is a combination of Wis JI-Criminal 2660A and 2663A and is intended to implement the procedure set forth in § 346.63(1)(c). It attempts to streamline the instructions in a two-charge case by avoiding the reading of the complete instruction for each charge. This instruction is for a first offense under § 346.63(1)(a) and (b), which are punished as forfeitures. For a combined instruction for criminal violations, see Wis JI-Criminal 2669.

The constitutionality of the two-charge procedure was upheld in State v. Bohacheff, 114 Wis.2d 402, 338 N.W.2d 446 (1983). The court held that the Double Jeopardy Clause is not offended because of the express limitation in § 346.63(1)(c) that there be only one conviction. Bohacheff dealt with a challenge to the criminal complaint, so it did not address the problems presented at a trial where both charges are submitted to the jury. The Committee concluded that § 346.63(1)(c) clearly suggests that both charges should be submitted and that the jury should make a finding as to each charge. If the jury returns a guilty verdict on both, judgment of conviction should be entered on the count on which the prosecutor moves for judgment. The remaining count should be dismissed. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

2. This statement is the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 115, One Defendant: Two Counts, adapted for a forfeiture case. If the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 115 is also given, the statement need not be repeated here.

2669 OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT / OPERATING A MOTOR VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION OF 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — CRIMINAL CHARGE — §§ 346.63(1)(a) and 346.63(1)(b)

NOT RECOMMENDED FOR USE FOR CASES INVOLVING A CHARGE OF A PAC OF MORE THAN 0.02[1]

Description of the Charges

The first count in the criminal complaint charges that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant in violation of § 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

The second count in the criminal complaint charges that the defendant drove or operated a motor vehicle on a highway while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration in violation of § 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

To these charges, the defendant has entered pleas of not guilty which means the State must prove every element of each offense charged beyond a reasonable doubt.[2]

It is for you to determine whether the defendant is guilty of one, both, or neither of the offenses charged. You must make a finding of guilty or not guilty for each offense charged.[3]

Each count charges a separate offense, and you must consider each one separately.

Definition of Count 1 – Operating Under The Influence

Section 346.63(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant.[4]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Count 1 – Operating Under The Influence

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle[5] on a highway.[6]

   ["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][7]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][8]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[9]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be impaired.

Definition of Count 2 – Operating With A Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

Section 346.63(1)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a motor vehicle on a highway with a prohibited alcohol concentration.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Count 2 – Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway.
2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle.

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[10]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating).[11]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[12] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[13] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating) or that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), or both, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide these questions on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating) or that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), or both, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[14]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway while under the influence of an intoxicant, you should find the defendant guilty of Count 1.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of Count 1.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant (drove) (operated) a motor vehicle on a highway while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration, you should find the defendant guilty of Count 2.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of Count 2.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2669 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1992, 1995, 2004, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2014; it added a recommendation for cases involving a PAC of more than 0.02.

The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. For persons with two or fewer priors, a test showing 0.08 grams or more is prima facie evidence of being "under the influence of an intoxicant." § 885.235(1)(c). The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

This instruction is drafted for the case where two counts based on the same incident are submitted to the jury: one alleging operating while under the influence in violation of 346.63(1)(a); and, one alleging operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more. It is a combination of Wis JI-Criminal 2660 and 2663 and is intended to implement the procedure set forth in § 346.63(1)(c). It attempts to streamline the instructions in a two-charge case by avoiding the reading of the complete instruction for each charge. This instruction is drafted for criminal charges; for two civil forfeiture offenses, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668.

The constitutionality of the two-charge procedure was upheld in State v. Bohacheff, 114 Wis.2d 402, 338 N.W.2d 446 (1983). The court held that the Double Jeopardy Clause is not offended because of the express limitation in § 346.63(1)(c) that there be only one conviction. Bohacheff dealt with a challenge to the criminal complaint, so it did not address the problems presented at a trial where both charges are submitted to the jury. The Committee concluded that § 346.63(1)(c) clearly suggests that both charges should be submitted and that the jury should make a finding as to each charge. If the jury returns a guilty verdict on both, judgment of conviction should be entered on the count on which the prosecutor moves for judgment. The remaining count should be dismissed. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. A two-count case could involve the combination of an under-the-influence charge with a charge of operating with a PAC of more than 0.02. The Committee recommends that a combined instruction not be given for that kind of case, because the standard paragraphs on the evidentiary effect of test results could be confusing. Rather, Wis JI-Criminal 2663 Operating Under The Influence should be used for the under-the-influence count; Wis JI-Criminal 2660C Operating With A Prohibited Alcohol Concentration – More Than 0.02 Grams should be used for the 0.02 count. Those instructions will have references to the test results that are appropriate for each offense. The instructions should identify the charges as "Count One" and "Count Two" as reflected in the charging document.

2. This statement is the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 115, One Defendant: Two Counts. If Wis JI-Criminal is also given, the statement need not be repeated here.

3. This statement is the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 484, . . . One Defendant: Two Counts . . . If Wis JI-Criminal 484 is also given, the statement need not be repeated here.

2670 FAILURE TO GIVE INFORMATION OR RENDER AID FOLLOWING AN ACCIDENT — § 346.67

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.67 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated when the operator of any vehicle involved in an accident on a highway[1] fails to reasonably investigate what was struck and if the operator knows or has reason to know that the accident resulted in (injury to a person) (death of a person) (damage to a vehicle driven or attended by a person) fails to stop the vehicle he or she is operating as close to the scene of the accident as possible and remain at the scene of the accident until the operator has given information (and rendered reasonable assistance to any person injured in the accident).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a vehicle involved in an accident[2] on a highway.[3]

   A vehicle[4] is operated when it is set in motion.[5]

2. The defendant knew that the vehicle (he) (she) operated was involved in an accident on a highway.[6]

3. The defendant violated a duty after being involved in an accident. A driver who is involved in an accident has two duties.[7]

The State is required to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant violated at least one of the two duties but you are not required to agree as to which duty was violated.

The first duty is to reasonably investigate what was struck.

The second duty is that a driver involved in an accident involving a person or an attended vehicle must stop and provide information and render aid. To prove a violation of this duty, the State must prove the following beyond a reasonable doubt:

- that the defendant knew or had reason to know that the vehicle (he) (she) was operating was involved in an accident involving (a person) (an attended vehicle) and that the accident resulted in (injury[8] to a person) (death of a person) (damage to a vehicle driven or attended by a person); and,
- that the defendant did not immediately stop (his) (her) vehicle as close to the scene of the accident as possible and remain at the scene until (he) (she) had done all the following:

  (a) Gave (his) (her) name, address, and the registration number of the vehicle (he) (she) was driving to (the person struck) (the operator or occupant of or person attending any vehicle collided with);[9] and

(b) If it was requested and was available, exhibited (his) (her) operator's license to (the person struck) (the operator or occupant of or person attending any vehicle collided with)[; and[10]

(c) Rendered reasonable assistance to any person[11] injured in the accident including the transporting or making arrangements to transport the person to a physician, surgeon, or hospital for medical or surgical treatment if it is apparent that medical or surgical treatment is necessary or is requested by the injured person].

4. The defendant was physically capable of complying with these requirements.[12]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. What a person knows or has reason to know must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF ONE OF THE MORE SERIOUS OFFENSES IDENTIFIED IN SEC. 346.74(5)(b),(c), OR (d) IS CHARGED AND THE

EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACT INCREASING THE PENALTY WAS PRESENT:[13]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

("Did the accident involve injury to a person?")[14]

(Did the accident involve injury to a person and did the person suffer great bodily harm?"

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.)[15]

("Did the accident involve death to a person?")[16]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2670 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1979, 1980, 1982, 1983, 1985, 1993, 1994, 2003, 2004, 2008, 2009, and 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it reflects changes made to § 346.67 by 2015 Wisconsin Act 319 [effective date: April 1, 2016].

The Committee concluded that § 346.67, as amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 319, defines two ways to violate the statute. First, the offense is committed by one who is involved in an accident and fails to reasonably investigate. Second, the offense is committed by one who may have reasonably investigated but failed to fulfill other duties imposed by the statute. The instruction addresses this by requiring in the third element that the "defendant violated a duty" and specifying the nature of the two duties that may be involved.

Section 346.74(5), which provides the penalties for violations of § 346.67, was amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 74 to read as follows:

346.74(5) Any person violating any provision of s. 346.67(1):

(a) Shall be fined not less than $300 nor more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 6 months or both if the accident did not involve death or injury to a person.

(b) May be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months or both if the accident involved injury to a person but the person did not suffer great bodily harm.

(c) Is guilty of a Class E felony if the accident involved injury to a person and the person suffered great bodily harm.

(d) Is guilty of a Class D felony if the accident involved death to a person.

(e) Is guilty of a felony if the accident involved death or injury to a person.

Act 74 increased the penalties in subs. (c) and (d); the effective date is November 27, 2003.

Wis JI-Criminal 2670 is designed to be used for offenses involving any of the penalties. If the base penalty under sub. (5)(a) is involved, no additional questions need be asked. The facts specified in subs. (5)(b)-(d) that increase the penalty are to be handled by submitting extra questions to the jury. See the text of the instruction at note 13. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of failure to stop and give information or render aid at the scene of an accident under Wis. Stat. § 346.04, at the time and place charged in the [complaint] [information].

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question 'yes' or 'no.'"

[Add the appropriate question.]"

The nature of this offense is discussed in two decisions which focused on the sufficiency of the charging document. See State v. Lloyd, 104 Wis.2d 49, 310 N.W.2d 617 (Ct. App. 1981), and State v. Mann, 123 Wis.2d 375, 367 N.W.2d 209 (1985) [reversing 120 Wis.2d 629, 357 N.W.2d 9 (Ct. App. 1984)]. Also see State v. Mann, 135 Wis.2d 420, 400 N.W.2d 489 (Ct. App. 1986), which discusses the meaning of "attended" and finds that the term "reasonable assistance" is not impermissibly vague.

In State v. Hartnek, 146 Wis.2d 188, 430 N.W.2d 361 (Ct. App. 1988), the court held that a single event of failing to stop and render aid following an accident may give rise to multiple charges under § 346.67 when there are multiple victims. The supreme court declined the defendant's request to overrule Hartnek in State v. Pal, 2017 WI 44, 374 Wis.2d 759, 893 N.W.2d 848, concluding that "the legislature authorized the State to charge multiple counts of the offense of hit and run resulting in death in cases involving multiple victims." ¶28.

The reporting requirement of § 346.67 does not infringe a person's Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. State v. Harmon, 2006 WI App 214 ¶29, 296 Wis.2d 861, 723 N.W.2d 732. Also see, California v. Byers, 420 U.S. 426 (1971).

1. Section 346.66 provides that § 346.67 applies to "highways" and to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles, all premises provided by employers to employees for the use of their motor vehicles and all premises provided to tenants of rental housing in buildings of 4 or more units for the use of their motor vehicles, whether such premises are publicly or privately owned and whether or not a fee is charged for the use thereof." The instruction is drafted for a case involving operating on a highway. If a case involves operating on "premises held out to the public . . . ," the instruction must be modified.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Operating While Intoxicated Introductory Comment Sec. I, for discussion of the "on a highway" element.

2. "'Accident' in § 346.67(1) means 'an unexpected, undesirable event' and may encompass intentional conduct." State v. Harmon, 2006 WI App 214 ¶1, 296 Wis.2d 861, 723 N.W.2d 732. Thus, the statute applies to a case where one view of the facts was that the defendant intentionally ran over the victim.

3. The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element.

"Highway" is defined by § 340.01(22). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment Sec. I, for discussion of the "on a highway" element.

The statute applies to a case where the defendant lost control of the vehicle and crashed into a house. "Because Dartez's loss of control of the vehicle occurred on the highway, even though the resulting collision occurred off the highway, we conclude she was 'involved in an accident' 'upon a highway' within the meaning of § 346.67(1). . ." State v. Dartez, 2007 WI App 126 ¶2, 301 Wis.2d 499, 731 N.W.2d 340.

2009 Wisconsin Act 62 [effective date: March 1, 2010] created § 346.66(2) to read as follows:

> Sections 346.67, 346.68, and 346.69 apply to the operator of a vehicle that, whether by operator intention or lack of control, departs a highway or premises described in sub. (1)(a) immediately prior to an accident if the accident does not occur on real property owned or leased by the operator.

4. Section 340.01(74) defines "vehicle."

Section 346.66 provides that § 346.67 does "not apply to accidents involving only snowmobiles, all terrain vehicles, or vehicles propelled by human power or drawn by animals."

5. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

For purposes of cases involving operating under the influence, § 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion."

See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Operating While Intoxicated Introductory Comment Sec. III, for discussion of the "operating" element.

6. Wis JI-Criminal 2670 was originally published in 1969 and had an element requiring that "the defendant knew that he had been involved in accident which resulted in (injury to) (death of) any person" or "damage to a vehicle . . ." The element was reviewed many times and eventually revised to require that the "defendant knew that the vehicle he was operating was involved in an accident ..." Two published court of appeals decisions supported the conclusion. In State v. Hartnek, 146 Wis.2d 188, 195, 430 N.W.2d 361 (Ct. App. 1988), the court stated:

> . . . Hartnek argues that sec. 346.67 does not require proof of scienter; therefore, it should be strictly construed so as not to authorize severe criminal penalties under [Collova]. However, as the state correctly notes, the standard jury instruction requires a finding that the defendant knew he or she had struck a person or an attended vehicle. Wis JI-Criminal 2670, approved in State v. Mann, 135 Wis.2d 420, 426, 400 N.W.2d 489, 491-92 (Ct. App. 1986). We therefore do not find Hartnek's argument particularly persuasive in this regard.

State v. Mann did state that "[t]he instruction [JI 2670] fairly and adequately informs the jury of the elements of the offense" but it did not focus on any particular part of the instruction or element of the crime.

The knowledge requirement was changed again in 2014 to read: "This requires that the defendant knew the accident involved (a person) (an attended vehicle) before (he) (she) left the scene of the accident." The second sentence was added after the Committee reviewed State v. Sperber, an unpublished Court of Appeals decision [No. 2013AP358-CR, Oct. 15, 2013]. Sperber involved a driver who struck a person in a wheelchair and drove off without stopping. The driver claimed he did not know he struck a person; he thought it was a garbage can. At trial, the jury asked about when the defendant's knowledge must exist: ". . . does the defendant have to be aware that he hit a person at the time of the accident or in the days following the incident in order to fulfill the requirements of the second item?" The trial judge referred the jury to the instruction and did not directly answer the question. Three hours later, the jury asked a similar question and was told to "Read 2670 in its entirety." Sperber was convicted and alleged on appeal that defense counsel was ineffective for failing to request that the jury be instructed that knowledge was to be considered as of the time he departed the accident scene. The court of appeals agreed and, also concluding that the real controversy was not fully tried, reversed the conviction. The Committee found Sperber persuasive and decided that a specific statement should be added to the instruction to clarify that knowledge that the accident involved a person or attended vehicle must exist before the defendant left the scene.

The changes in § 367.67 made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 319 are believed to be in reaction to the Sperber decision, with the focus being on eliminating the requirement of knowledge that the accident involved a person or attended vehicle. See sec. 346.67(3) which provides: "A prosecutor is not required to allege or prove that an operator knew that he or she collided with a person or a vehicle driven or attended by a person in a prosecution under this section." {Emphasis added.} The Committee concluded that only a limited knowledge requirement remains – knowledge that the person was involved in an accident. This is consistent with one of the basic requirements of omission liability: knowledge of facts giving rise to the duty. See Wis JI-Criminal 905 Liability For Failure To Act: Criminal Omissions.

Liability for violating § 367.67 is in essence liability for an omission – failure to fulfill a legal duty imposed as a result of being involved in an accident.

7. The third element reflects the Committee's conclusion that § 346.67, as amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 319, creates two duties, violation of either of which can be the basis for a conviction. First, the offense is committed by one who is involved in an accident and fails to reasonably investigate. Second, the offense is committed by one who may have reasonably investigated but failed to fulfill other duties imposed by the statute. The instruction addresses this by requiring in the third element that the "defendant violated a duty" and specifying the nature of the two duties that may be involved.

8. The instruction does not define "injury" because it is not defined in the statutes or by a published court decision. While the Criminal Code uses the closely related term "bodily harm," caution should be used in equating the two because unpublished decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached conflicting results, focusing on whether "pain" is sufficient to constitute "injury." In a prosecution under § 346.63(2)(a), the court held that the word "injury" encompasses physical pain. State v. Maddox, No. 03-0227-CR, July 8, 2003. [Ordered not published, August 27, 2003.] However, in a prosecution under § 940.225(2)(b), where "injury" is also used, the court held that the trial court erred in defining "injury" using the Criminal Code definition of "bodily harm" [see § 939.22(4)] because "injury" does not include "pain." State v. Gonzalez, No. 2006AP2977-CR, March 20, 2008. [Ordered not published, April 30, 2008.] Neither of these decisions may cited as authority because they were not published. See § 809.23(3). But they indicate the need for caution in equating "injury" with "bodily harm."

9. "§ 346.67(1) requires an operator of a vehicle to identify him or herself as the operator of the vehicle." State v. Wuteska, 2007 WI App 157 ¶1, 303 Wis.2d 646, 795 N.W.2d 574. Wuteska involved a driver who provided the information required but did not identify herself as the driver of the vehicle. The court of appeals reversed the dismissal of the complaint. In a Wuteska-type situation, element 3. should be modified to address the issue directly.

10. The paragraph in brackets, preceded by "(c)," should be given when there is evidence that a person was injured in the accident. The statute does cover cases where there has been no personal injury – those involving "damage to a vehicle which is driven or attended by any person." § 346.67(1).

11. The duty to stop and render aid applies even though the only other "person injured" in the accident died at the scene. State v. Swatek, 178 Wis.2d 1, 7-8, 502 N.W.2d 909 (Ct. App. 1993): "Thus, the duty under sec. 346.67(1)(c), Stats., does not turn on whether a person's injuries are immediately fatal, but on whether the operator rendered that amount of assistance which an ordinary, reasonable person would render under the same or similar circumstances. We also conclude that whether an operator has fulfilled this duty will, in most instances, present a question for the jury."

The reference to "any person" was discussed in State v. Lloyd, 104 Wis.2d 49, 310 N.W.2d 617 (Ct. App. 1981). The defendant in Lloyd argued that the reference meant he had fulfilled his duty under the statute by rendering aid to one of several persons injured in the accident. The court rejected this interpretation, holding that "any" does not mean "at least one." (The court's discussion suggests that what is meant by "any" is really "any and all" persons injured.) 104 Wis.2d 49, 62-63.

The extent of the duty to render aid was discussed in State v. Mann, 120 Wis.2d 629, 357 N.W.2d 9 (Ct. App. 1984). However, this decision was reversed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in a decision that focused on the sufficiency of the complaint rather than the requirements of the statute. State v. Mann, 123 Wis.2d 375, 367 N.W.2d 209 (1985).

12. Section 346.67 expressly bases criminal liability on the person's omission or failure to act. The physical ability to perform the required act is a basic requirement of omission liability. See Wis JI-Criminal 905 Liability For Failure To Act: Criminal Omissions. Also see LaFave and Scott, Substantive Criminal Law, § 3.3(c) (West 1986), an earlier version of which was cited with approval in State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 251, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986).

13. 2003 Wisconsin Act 74 (effective date: November 27, 2003) revised § 346.74, which identifies the penalties for violations of § 346.67. See the Comment preceding note 1, supra. The Committee concluded that the best way to handle the facts which increase the penalty is to submit a special question to the jury, asking whether the fact has been established beyond a reasonable doubt. This is the same way the question of value is handled in a theft case. See Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

14. This question need not be added to the instruction if the "injury to any person" alternative was selected in element 3.

15. Section 346.74 does not provide a definition of "great bodily harm" but the Committee concluded that the definition in § 939.22(14) should apply. The Committee recommends defining the term in the manner used in the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a more complete discussion of issues relating to "great bodily harm."

16. This question need not be added to the instruction if the "death of any person" alternative was selected in element 3.

2672 SPEEDING: EXCEEDING A REASONABLE AND PRUDENT SPEED UNDER § 346.57(2) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(2)] [Ordinance _____, adopting § 346.57(2)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[2] at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent under the circumstances.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed[6] greater than was reasonable and prudent under the conditions, taking into consideration the actual and potential hazards then existing.

   [This element requires that the speed of the vehicle be controlled as necessary to avoid colliding with any (object) (person) (vehicle) (other conveyance) on or entering the highway in compliance with legal requirements and using due care.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985, 1987, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(2) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(2) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2672A.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance _____, adopting section 346.57(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

2672A LAW NOTE: THE "JUSTIFICATION" DEFENSE

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has recognized that the defense of "justification" is available to excuse what would otherwise be a speeding violation. In State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982), the defendant was convicted of the civil forfeiture offense of speeding under § 346.57(4)(h). He claimed the trial court erred when it refused to submit an instruction on the defendant's claim of legal justification, that is, that his conduct was excusable on the grounds of self-defense, necessity, coercion, or entrapment. The supreme court held "that where a violation of § 346.57(4)(h) occurs, the actor may claim the defense of legal justification if the conduct of a law enforcement officer causes the actor reasonably to believe that violating the law is the only means of preventing bodily harm to the actor or another and causes the actor to violate the law." 107 Wis.2d at 56.

The court noted that the defense of justification is available even though speeding is considered to be a "strict liability" offense in the sense that a culpable state of mind is not an element of the offense. In deciding whether to extend defenses to strict liability traffic offenses, the court said it must weigh the public interest in efficient enforcement of the traffic law against other public interests which are protected by the possible defenses. The court found that "[w]here the violation of the speeding law is caused by the state itself through the actions of a law enforcement officer, . . . the public interest in allowing the violator to claim a defense outweighs the public interest in ease of prosecution." 107 Wis.2d 44 at 55.

The court made specific note that it was not deciding whether the defense of justification might be available to a defendant in a case where the alleged causative force is someone or something other than a law enforcement officer. In Brown, the defendant's testimony was that the traffic officer operated his own vehicle in such an erratic and harassing manner that the defendant felt compelled to increase his own speed in order to get away from the officer.

2672B SPEEDING: EXCEEDING A REASONABLE AND PRUDENT SPEED – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(2); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[1] at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent under the circumstances in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed[4] greater than was reasonable and prudent under the conditions, taking into consideration the actual and potential hazards then existing.

   [This element requires that the speed of the vehicle be controlled as necessary to avoid colliding with any (object) (person) (vehicle) (other conveyance) on or entering the highway in compliance with legal requirements and using due care.]
3. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][5]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][6]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][7]

4. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[8]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672B was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(2) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(2) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2672.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

5. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

6. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

7. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

8. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(2) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using "results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

9. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

2674 SPEEDING: DRIVING TOO FAST FOR CONDITIONS UNDER § 346.57(3) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(3)] [Ordinance _____, adopting § 346.57(3)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, provides that no person shall drive a vehicle on a highway[2] at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent under the circumstances and that a person shall drive at an appropriate reduced speed when

[approaching and crossing (an intersection) (a railway grade crossing).]

[approaching and going around a curve.]

[approaching a hillcrest.]

[traveling upon any narrow or winding roadway.]

[passing (school children) (highway construction or maintenance workers) (pedestrians).]

[special hazard exists with regard to other traffic or by reason of highway or weather conditions.]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed[6] greater than was reasonable and prudent under the conditions, taking into consideration the actual and potential hazards then existing.

[This element requires that the speed of the vehicle be controlled as necessary to avoid colliding with any (object) (person) (vehicle) (other conveyance) on or entering the highway in compliance with legal requirements and using due care.]

3. The defendant failed to drive at an appropriate reduced speed when

[approaching and crossing (an intersection) (a railway grade crossing).]

[approaching and going around a curve.]

[approaching a hillcrest.]

[traveling upon any narrow or winding roadway.]

[passing (school children) (highway construction or maintenance workers) (pedestrians).]

[special hazard exists with regard to other traffic or by reason of highway or weather conditions.][7]

Appropriate reduced speed is a relative term and means less than the otherwise lawful speed. An appropriate reduced speed is that speed at which a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would drive under the same or similar circumstances.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2674 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985, 1987, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(3) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(3) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2674A.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(3) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance _____, adopting section 346.57(3) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

7. See Wis. Stat. § 346.57(3).

8. See Wis JI-Civil 1285.

2674A SPEEDING: DRIVING TOO FAST FOR CONDITIONS – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(3)); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, provides that no person shall drive a vehicle on a highway[1] at a speed greater than is reasonable and prudent under the circumstances in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another, and that a person shall drive at an appropriate reduced speed when

[approaching and crossing (an intersection) (a railway grade crossing).]

[approaching and going around a curve.]

[approaching a hillcrest.]

[traveling upon any narrow or winding roadway.]

[passing (school children) (highway construction or maintenance workers) (pedestrians).]

[special hazard exists with regard to other traffic or by reason of highway or weather conditions.]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed[4] greater than was reasonable and prudent under the conditions, taking into consideration the actual and potential hazards then existing.

[This element requires that the speed of the vehicle be controlled as necessary to avoid colliding with any (object) (person) (vehicle) (other conveyance) on or entering the highway in compliance with legal requirements and using due care.]

3. The defendant failed to drive at an appropriate reduced speed when

[approaching and crossing (an intersection) (a railway grade crossing).]

[approaching and going around a curve.]

[approaching a hillcrest.]

[traveling upon any narrow or winding roadway.]

[passing (school children) (highway construction or maintenance workers) (pedestrians).]

[special hazard exists with regard to other traffic or by reason of highway or weather conditions.][5]

Appropriate reduced speed is a relative term and means less than the otherwise lawful speed. An appropriate reduced speed is that speed at which a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would drive under the same or similar circumstances.[6]

4. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][7]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][8]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][9]

5. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[10]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[11]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672A was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(3) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(3) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2674.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

5. See Wis. Stat. § 346.57(3).

6. See Wis JI-Civil 1285.

7. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

8. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

9. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

10. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(3) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using "results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

11. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

2676 SPEEDING: EXCEEDING FIXED LIMITS UNDER § 346.57(4)(e) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(4)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(4)(e)] [_____, adopting § 346.57(4)(e)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle at a speed in excess of 25 miles per hour on any highway[2] within the corporate limits of a city or village, provided that no different limit was indicated by an official traffic sign.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must satisfy you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle.[4]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle on a highway[5] located within the (city) (village) limits of (name city or village).

   [This element further requires that the highway was not located in an outlying district of (name city or village). "Outlying district" means the territory contiguous to and including any highway within the corporate limits of a city or village where on each side of the highway within any 1,000 feet along such highway the buildings in use for business, industrial, or residential purposes fronting thereon average more than 200 feet apart.][6]

3. The defendant drove a vehicle at a speed in excess of 25 miles per hour.[7]

4. No speed limit different than 25 miles per hour was indicated by an official traffic sign.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict.][8]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2676 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985, 1987, 1988, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(e) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(4)(e) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2676C.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(4)(e) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance _____, adopting section 346.57(4)(e) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

"Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. See § 346.57(1)(ar). The bracketed material need be included only when the location of the highway in an "outlying district" is raised by the evidence.

7. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and Comment.

8. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). Also see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677 for further discussion of the required finding on speed.

2676A SPEEDING: EXCEEDING 65 MILES PER HOUR UNDER § 346.57(4)(gm) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(4)(gm)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(4)(gm)] [Ordinance _____, adopting § 346.57(4)(gm)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle at a speed in excess of 65 miles per hour on any freeway or expressway for which a limit of 65 miles per hour is indicated by an official traffic sign.[2]

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[4] on a freeway or expressway.[5]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed in excess of 65 miles per hour.[6]
3. A speed limit of 65 miles per hour was indicated by an official traffic sign.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict.][8]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2676A was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995 and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(gm) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(4)(gm) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2676B.

Section 346.57(4)(gm), provides for the speed limit of 65 miles per hour "on any freeway or expressway."

Section 346.57(6)(b) provides:

> The limit specified under sub. (4)(gm) is not effective unless official signs giving notice of the limit have been erected by the department.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities C county, city, town, etc. C the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(4)(gm) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance _____, adopting section 346.57(4)(gm) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. The phrase "indicated by an official traffic sign" is added to the definition of the offense because § 346.57(6)(b) provides that the 65 miles per hour limit "is not effective" unless official signs give notice. (See text of subsec. (6)(b) preceding note 1, supra. The Committee concluded that while it could be argued that proof of the posting of signs is not a fact the prosecution is required to prove, it was more efficient to add this fact to the instruction in all cases rather than use a more complicated approach that would try to treat it as an "affirmative defense."

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. "Freeway" is defined in § 346.57(1)(am); "expressway" is defined in § 346.57(1)(ag).

6. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and comment.

7. See note 2, supra.

8. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). Also see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677 for further discussion of the required finding on speed.

2676B SPEEDING: EXCEEDING 65 MILES PER HOUR – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(4)(gm); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle at a speed in excess of 65 miles per hour, on any freeway or expressway for which a limit of 65 miles per hour is indicated by an official traffic sign,[1] in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[2] on a freeway or expressway.[3]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed in excess of 65 miles per hour.[4]
3. A speed limit of 65 miles per hour was indicated by an official traffic sign.[5]
4. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][6]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][7]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][8]

5. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[9]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict.][11]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672B was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(gm) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(4)(m) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2676A.

Section 346.57(4)(gm), provides for the speed limit of 65 miles per hour "on any freeway or expressway."

Section 346.57(6)(b) provides:

> The limit specified under sub. (4)(gm) is not effective unless official signs giving notice of the limit have been erected by the department.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

> If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. The phrase "indicated by an official traffic sign" is added to the definition of the offense because § 346.57(6)(b) provides that the 65 miles per hour limit "is not effective" unless official signs give notice. (See text of subsec. (6)(b) preceding note 1, supra. The Committee concluded that while it could be argued that proof of the posting of signs is not a fact the prosecution is required to prove, it was more efficient to add this fact to the instruction in all cases rather than use a more complicated approach that would try to treat it as an "affirmative defense."

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. "Freeway" is defined in § 346.57(1)(am); "expressway" is defined in § 346.57(1)(ag).

4. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and comment.

5. See note 1, supra.

6. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

7. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

8. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

9. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(4)(gm) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using

"results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

10. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

11. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). Also see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677 for further discussion of the required finding on speed.

2676C SPEEDING: EXCEEDING FIXED LIMITS – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(4)(e); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle at a speed in excess of 25 miles per hour on any highway[1] within the corporate limits of a city or village, provided that no different limit was indicated by an official traffic sign, in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle.[2]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle on a highway[3] located within the (city) (village) limits of (name city or village).

   [This element further requires that the highway was not located in an outlying district of (name city or village). "Outlying district" means the territory contiguous to and including any highway within the corporate limits of a city or village where on each side of the highway within any 1,000 feet along such highway the buildings in use for business, industrial, or residential purposes fronting thereon average more than 200 feet apart.][4]

3. The defendant drove a vehicle at a speed in excess of 25 miles per hour.[5]

4. No speed limit different than 25 miles per hour was indicated by an official traffic sign.

5. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][6]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][7]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][8]

6. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[9]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict.][11]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672A was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(e) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(4)(e) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2676.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. See § 346.57(1)(ar). The bracketed material need be included only when the location of the highway in an "outlying district" is raised by the evidence.

5. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and Comment.

6. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

7. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

8. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

9. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(4)(e) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using "results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

> The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. 10. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

11. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). Also see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677 for further discussion of the required finding on speed.

2677 SPEEDING: EXCEEDING 55 MILES PER HOUR IN THE ABSENCE OF POSTED LIMITS UNDER § 346.57(4)(h) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(4)(h)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(4)(h)] [Ordinance _____, adopting § 346.57(4)(h)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[2] in excess of 55 miles per hour in the absence of any other posted limit.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]

2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed which exceeded 55 miles per hour.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict].[7]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2677 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1988, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(h) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(4)(h) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2677A.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(4)(h) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance _____, adopting section 346.57(4)(h) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and comment.

7. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). A jury finding of the actual speed should also be made when suspension of operating privileges is sought under § 343.30(1n), which requires suspension for 15 days when the person has been convicted under § 346.57(4)(h) (as opposed to city or county ordinance adopting § 346.57(4)(h)) for exceeding the posted speed limit by 25 or more miles per hour.

In State v. Zick, 44 Wis.2d 546, 550, 171 N.W.2d 430 (1969), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held:

> Under this section [§ 346.57(5)] we hold the state may charge a defendant with speeding and also state the excess rate of speed and such charge maybe sustained by proof of any speed in excess of the maximum permissible speed. Although the exact rate of speed found need not conform to the rate of speed stated in the ticket it is important in determining the punishment and points and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

(Although the Zick case identifies the burden of proof as "beyond a reasonable doubt," where the penalty for the offense is only a forfeiture, the proper burden is "to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.")

The Zick decision approved the use of a verdict which provided in part:

We, the Jury, find the defendant, ((name of defendant)), guilty of speeding at the time and place charged in the Complaint and find the speed at which he drove was _____ miles per hour.

(Although the approved verdict in the Zick case referred to "the complaint," the proper reference would usually be to the "citation.")

2677A SPEEDING: EXCEEDING 55 MILES PER HOUR IN THE ABSENCE OF POSTED LIMITS – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(4)(h); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[1] in excess of 55 miles per hour in the absence of any other posted limit in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed which exceeded 55 miles per hour.[4]
3. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

   ["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][5]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][6]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][7]

4. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[8]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict].[10]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2677A was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(4)(h) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(4)(h) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2677.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

> "Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. A witness' personal estimate of vehicle speed is admissible if the witness was in a position to judge the speed and the length of the observation period was not too short. The estimate must be definite and objective (e.g., "in excess of 50 miles per hour"), as opposed to indefinite and subjective (e.g., "too fast"). If there is a reasonable basis for the estimate, the weight it is to be given is up to the jury. See Milwaukee v. Berry, 44 Wis.2d 321, 171 N.W.2d 305 (1969), and cases cited therein.

For discussion of radar speed measurement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2679 and comment.

5. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

6. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

7. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

8. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(4)(h) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using "results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

> The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

9. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

10. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See § 343.32(2)(b). A jury finding of the actual speed should also be made when suspension of operating privileges is sought under § 343.30(1n), which requires suspension for 15 days when the person has been convicted under § 346.57(4)(h) (as opposed to city or county ordinance adopting § 346.57(4)(h)) for exceeding the posted speed limit by 25 or more miles per hour.

In State v. Zick, 44 Wis.2d 546, 550, 171 N.W.2d 430 (1969), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held:

Under this section [§ 346.57(5)] we hold the state may charge a defendant with speeding and also state the excess rate of speed and such charge maybe sustained by proof of any speed in excess of the maximum permissible speed. Although the exact rate of speed found need not conform to the rate of speed stated in the ticket it is important in determining the punishment and points and must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

(Although the Zick case identifies the burden of proof as "beyond a reasonable doubt," where the penalty for the offense is only a forfeiture, the proper burden is "to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.")

The Zick decision approved the use of a verdict which provided in part:

We, the Jury, find the defendant, ((name of defendant)), guilty of speeding at the time and place charged in the Complaint and find the speed at which he drove was _____ miles per hour.

(Although the approved verdict in the Zick case referred to "the complaint," the proper reference would usually be to the "citation.")

2678 SPEEDING: EXCEEDING POSTED LIMITS UNDER § 346.57(5) OR AN ORDINANCE ADOPTING § 346.57(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

[Section 346.57(5)] [Ordinance_____, adopting § 346.57(5)][1] of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[2] in excess of any speed limit established pursuant to law by state or local authorities and indicated by official signs.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the (identify prosecuting agency)[3] must prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[4] on a highway.[5]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed which exceeded the speed limit established by law.[6]
3. The established speed limit was indicated by official signs.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict].[7]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2678 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985, 1987, 1988, 1995, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it added to the comment to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021].

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(5) where the penalty of forfeiture or fine applies. For violations of § 346.57(5) where criminal penalties may apply, see Wis JI-Criminal 2678A.

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

Section 346.60 (3m) (a) 1. provides for doubling the forfeiture or fine for certain violations:

Except as provided in subd. 2., if an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 340.01(22e) provides that "Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(73m) provides that "Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.

Section 340.01(15pu) provides that "Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).

1. The use of brackets is intended to allow use of this instruction for cases charged either as violations of the state statutes or as violations of local ordinances in conformity with the statutes. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

If a statutory violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Section 346.57(5) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated . . ."

If an ordinance violation was charged, the instruction would begin: "Ordinance____, adopting section 346.57(5) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated . . ."

2. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

3. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

4. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

"Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

7. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677, for further discussion of the required finding of speed and a suggested form of verdict.

2678A SPEEDING: EXCEEDING POSTED LIMITS – CRIMINAL OFFENSE – § 346.57(5); § 346.60 (3m)(a)2

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section § 346.60 (3m)(a)2 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is violated by one who drives a vehicle on a highway[1] in excess of any speed limit established pursuant to law by state or local authorities and indicated by official signs in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) which results in bodily harm to another.

Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Offense That Must Be Proved

1. The defendant drove a vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]
2. The defendant drove the vehicle at a speed which exceeded the speed limit established by law.[4]
3. The established speed limit was indicated by official signs.
4. The defendant drove in (a highway maintenance or construction area) (a utility work area) (an emergency or roadside response area) where workers are at risk from traffic.

["Highway maintenance or construction area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of highway maintenance or construction work and an "END ROAD WORK" or "END CONSTRUCTION" sign or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in the maintenance or construction work, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][5]

["Utility work area" means the entire section of roadway between the first advance warning sign of work on a utility facility, as defined in s. 30.40 (19), or on a high-voltage transmission line, as defined in s. 30.40 (3r), and an "END UTILITY WORK" sign, where the signs are placed according to rules of the department, or, in the case of a moving vehicle engaged in work on such a utility facility or high-voltage transmission line, that section of roadway where traffic may return to its normal flow without impeding such work.][6]

["Emergency or roadside response area" means the section of roadway within 500 feet of an authorized emergency vehicle giving a visible signal or a tow truck displaying flashing red lamps, as required by s. 347.26 (6) (b).][7]

5. The defendant's driving resulted in bodily harm to another.

This requires that the defendant's driving was a substantial factor in causing bodily harm to another.[8]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and you should also find the speed the defendant's vehicle was traveling and insert the same into the verdict.][10]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2672A was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 346.57(5) where criminal penalties may apply. For violations of § 346.57(5) that concern forfeiture or fine, see Wis JI-Criminal 2678.

§ 346.60(3m)(a)2, created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 115 [effective date: December 8, 2021], which provides the following:

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic and the violation results in bodily harm, as defined in s. 939.22 (4), to another, the operator may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months, or both. In addition to the penalties specified under this subdivision, a court may also order a person convicted under this subdivision to perform not fewer than 100 nor more than 200 hours of community service work and attend traffic safety school, as provided under s. 345.60.

If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2), (3), (4) (d) to (h), or (5) where persons engaged in work in a highway maintenance or construction area, utility work area, or emergency or roadside response area are at risk from traffic or where sanitation workers are at risk from traffic and the operator knows or should know that sanitation workers are present, any applicable minimum and maximum forfeiture specified in sub. (2) or (3) for the violation shall be doubled.

Section 346.60(3m)(a)2 provides for doubling the forfeiture "If an operator of a vehicle violates s. 346.57 (2) to (5) when children are present in a zone designated by 'school' warning signs as provided in s. 118.08 (1).

With respect to the "justification" defense to speeding, see State v. Brown, 107 Wis.2d 44, 318 N.W.2d 370 (1982). Brown is summarized in Wis JI-Criminal 2672A Law Note: Justification Defense.

1. Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. § 346.02(1). (An express provision does exist for reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; § 346.61 provides that those statutes are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element of the crime. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "vehicle" is required, see Wis. Stat. § 340.01(74) which provides as follows:

"Vehicle" means every device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be transported or drawn upon a highway, except railroad trains. A snowmobile or electric personal assistive mobility device shall not be considered a vehicle except for purposes specifically applicable by statute.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. Regarding the measurement and estimation of speed, see note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2676, and Wis JI-Criminal 2679, Radar Speed Measurement.

5. The definition of "Highway maintenance or construction area" is the one provided in § 340.01(22e), which applies to this offense.

6. The definition of "Utility work area" is the one provided in § 340.01(73m), which applies to this offense.

7. The definition of "Emergency or roadside response area" is the one provided in § 340.01(15pu), which applies to this offense.

8. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for a more complete discussion of "cause."

Section 346.60 (3m)(a)2 states the causal requirement differently. It requires that the defendant's violation of s. 346.57(5)) "results in bodily harm." The statute is one of several criminal statutes using "results in" to establish the causal connection between the actor's conduct and the prohibited result. The Committee has concluded that "results in" should be interpreted to mean "cause," traditionally defined in terms of "substantial factor." This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3).

> The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

9. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

10. The jury should be instructed to find the speed whenever the defendant is charged with exceeding the speed limit by 10 or more miles per hour. Such violations carry an increased penalty in terms of loss of points. See note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 2677, for further discussion of the required finding of speed and a suggested form of verdict.

2679 RADAR SPEED MEASUREMENT)

This court recognizes that the speed measurement device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the speed of motor vehicles. The (identify prosecuting agency) [1] is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the measurement device.

The (identify prosecuting agency) is required to prove that the device was in proper working order and that it was properly operated by a qualified person.[2]

The weight to be given to the speed measurement in this case is for you, the jury, to determine.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2679 was originally published in 1986. The comment was revised in 1987 and 1988 and republished without change in 1995 and 2010.

This instruction may be used in cases involving both moving and stationary radar. Regarding stationary radar see note 1, below.

The reliability of speed measurement by moving radar devices was considered by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Hanson, 85 Wis.2d 233, 270 N.W.2d 212 (1978). The court held that courts "may take judicial notice of the reliability of the underlying principles of speed radar detection that employs the Doppler effect as a means of determining the speed of moving objects. To this end, expert testimony is not needed to determine the initial admissibility of speed radar readings. The radar reading may be introduced by the operating law enforcement official, if he is qualified in its use and operation." 85 Wis.2d 233, 244-45. The court emphasized that the accuracy of a given speed reading is another matter – it depends on the particular conditions surrounding the reading.

A moving radar speed reading is admissible upon testimony of a competent, operating police officer that:

1. the officer operating the device had adequate training and experience in its operations;

2. the device was in proper working condition at the time of the alleged offense;

3. the road conditions at the site of the alleged offense were such that there was a minimum possibility of distortion;

4. the input speed of the patrol car was verified;

5. the patrol car's speed meter was expertly tested within a reasonable time following the arrest by means which did not rely on the radar device's own internal calibrations.

Regarding the verification of the speed of the patrol car, see Washington County v. Luedtke, 135 Wis.2d 131, 399 N.W.2d 906 (1987):

> We hold that the fourth criterion of Hanson/Kramer is met by testimony that verification has been accomplished by a visual comparison of the speedometer with the radar read-out. It is unnecessary, indeed irrelevant to the prosecution's proof, to establish that the patrol car's speedometer has been separately checked and certified to be correct.

135 Wis.2d 131, 141-42.

The Hanson criteria, particularly those relating to testing the radar device, are discussed in State v. Kramer, 99 Wis.2d 700, 299 N.W.2d 882 (1981).

The VASCAR method of radar speed detection is also entitled to "a prima facie presumption of accuracy." Expert testimony is not required to establish a foundation for its admissibility. State v. Frankenthal, 113 Wis.2d 269, 335 N.W.2d 890 (Ct. App. 1983).

1. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

2. This sentence is not necessary in stationary radar cases. "Whether the test was properly conducted or the instruments used were in good working order is a matter of defense." City of Wauwatosa v. Collett, 99 Wis.2d 522, 299 N.W.2d 620 (Ct. App. 1980).

Collett held that the Hanson criteria apply only to moving radar devices and stationary radar devices are entitled to a presumption of accuracy without Hanson-type testimony.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing that _____ elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2680 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1994 and 2010. This revision involved a nonsubstantive correction to a caption in the text.

This instruction is intended to serve as a model for the many noncriminal traffic violations that may occasionally be tried to a jury but which arise too infrequently to warrant the publication of a separate uniform instruction.

There are two general instructions for forfeiture actions: Wis JI-Criminal 140.1, Burden of Proof: Forfeiture Actions; and Wis JI-Criminal 515.1, Five-Sixths Verdict and Selection of Presiding Juror: Forfeiture Actions.

There are uniform criminal instructions for some of the common noncriminal violations, see 2620A Operating After Revocation (Forfeiture), 2650 Reckless Driving, 2660A Operating With 10% Or More BAC (Forfeiture), 2663A Operating Under The Influence (Forfeiture), and 2672-78 Speeding.

For some violations, there are uniform civil jury instructions which may be helpfully incorporated into the model.

	Offense	Wis JI-Civil
346.13(1)	Deviating In Traffic	1355
346.14(1)	Distance Between Vehicles (Tailgating)	1112
346.37(1)	Vehicle Passing Through Red Or Yellow Signal	1192, 1193
346.46(1)	Stopping At Stop Signs	1325, 1325A
346.59	Minimum Speed Regulations	1300, 1305

Offenses defined in Chapter 346 apply exclusively to operation upon "highways" unless otherwise expressly provided. Sec. 346.02(1). (There are two such provisions: § 346.61 which applies to reckless driving and operating under the influence offenses defined in §§ 346.62 and 346.63; and § 346.66 which applies to offenses defined in §§ 346.67 to 346.70. Both § 346.61 and § 346.66 provide that those statutes listed are applicable to "all premises held out to the public for use of their motor vehicles.")

The fact that the driving or operating took place on a highway is one that must be established before the defendant may be found guilty of a motor vehicle offense. However, the Committee concluded that in the typical case, it is not necessary to provide for the finding of this fact as a separate element. Rather, it is sufficient to combine it with the "drove or operated" element. However, in a case where the "highway" issue is contested, it may help clarify the issue for the jury if the instruction is modified to treat that fact as a separate element. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

1. Since ordinances may be adopted by a variety of governmental entities – county, city, town, etc. – the instruction refers only to "ordinance." Identifying the type of ordinance as, for example, a city ordinance may be helpful to the jury.

2. The instruction has been revised to include a blank where the identity of the prosecuting agency can be provided: the State, the county, the municipality, etc.

2682A TAMPERING WITH AN IGNITION INTERLOCK DEVICE — § 347.413

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 347.413(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who removes, disconnects, tampers with, or otherwise circumvents the operation of an ignition interlock device installed on a motor vehicle in response to a court order and that motor vehicle is operated on or occupies a highway.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was subject to a court order under § 343.301 requiring the installation of an ignition interlock device on a motor vehicle.[1]
2. The defendant (removed) (disconnected) (tampered with) (or) (otherwise circumvented the operation of) the ignition interlock device installed in response to the court order.
3. The motor vehicle (was operated on) (occupied) a highway.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2682A was originally published in 2010 and revised in 2012. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2014; it amended the third element.

This instruction is drafted for one of the two types of criminal violations under § 347.413, Ignition interlock device tampering; failure to install. This instruction addresses removing, disconnecting, tampering with, or otherwise circumventing the operation of an ignition interlock device installed in response to the court order under § 346.65(6), 1999 stats., or § 343.301(1), 2007 stats., or § 343.301(1g). Penalties are set forth in § 347.50.

See Wis JI-Criminal 2682B for the other type of violation: failing to have the ignition interlock device installed as ordered by the court.

1. Section 347.413 applies to ignition interlock installation ordered under three different statutes. Section 343.301 (1g) is the authority under current [2009-10] statutes. Also covered are orders issued under § 346.65(6), 1999 stats., and § 343.301(1), 2007 stats. The statute under which the order was issued should be accurately identified in the instruction. The Committee concluded that a reference to "§ 343.301" is sufficient for orders under current statutes and the 2007 statutes; for the other option, the reference should be to "§ 346.65 of the 1999 Wisconsin Statutes."

Section 340.01(35) defines "motor vehicle." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. II.

2. This element was added to the instruction as part of the 2012 based on § 347.02(2) which provides: "No provision of this chapter requiring or prohibiting certain types of equipment on a vehicle is applicable when such vehicle is not operated upon or occupying a highway." As originally published, the element required that "the defendant operated that motor vehicle on a highway." The 2014 revision changed the element to require that the vehicle must be operated on or occupy the highway. The Committee concluded that the defendant need not be the individual who operated it.

Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

2682B FAILING TO INSTALL AN IGNITION INTERLOCK DEVICE OR VIOLATING A COURT ORDER RESTRICTING OPERATING PRIVILEGE — § 347.413

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 347.413(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who (fails to install an ignition interlock device on a motor vehicle as ordered by a court) (violates a court order restricting their operating privilege by operating a motor vehicle not equipped with an ignition interlock device)[1] and that motor vehicle is operated on or occupies a highway.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was subject to (a court order under § 343.301 requiring the installation of an ignition interlock device on a motor vehicle) (a court order under § 343.301(1g)[2] restricting their operating privilege).[3]
2. The defendant (failed to install the ignition interlock device as ordered) (violated a court order restricting their operating privilege).[4]
3. The motor vehicle (was operated on) (occupied) a highway.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 2682B was originally published in 2010 and revised in 2012 and 2014. The 2014 revision amended the third element. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2021; it amended the first element to reflect changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 98.

This instruction is drafted for one of the two types of criminal violations under § 347.413, Ignition interlock device tampering; failure to install. This instruction addresses failing to have the ignition interlock device installed as ordered by the court under § 346.65 (6), 1999 stats., or § 343.301(1), 2007 stats., or § 343.301(1g), and violating a court order under § 343.301 (1g) restricting the person's operating privilege. Penalties are set forth in § 347.50.

See Wis JI Criminal 2682A for the other type of violation: removing, disconnecting, tampering with, or otherwise circumventing the operation of an ignition interlock device installed in response to the court order.

2017 Wisconsin Act 98 [effective date: December 10, 2017] amended § 347.413(1) to include individuals who "violate a court order under § 343.301 (1g) restricting the person's operating privilege."

Note: The violation addressed by this instruction only applies to vehicles registered in the convicted person's name. This is because the authority to issue an order under § 343.301(1g) applies only to "each motor vehicle for which the person's name appears on the vehicle's certificate of title or registration." If, for example, a person subject to an order is found operating a vehicle registered to his girlfriend and no interlock device has been installed on that vehicle, there is no violation of § 347.413.

1. Section 343.30(1g)(am) provides that "A court shall order one or more of the following:

> 1. That the person's operating privilege for the operation of "Class D" vehicles be restricted to operating vehicles that are equipped with an ignition interlock device and, except as provided in sub. (1m), shall order that each motor vehicle for which the person's name appears on the vehicle's certificate of title or registration be equipped with an ignition interlock device.
> 2. That the person participate in a program described in s. 165.957 or that meets the definition of a 24-7 sobriety program under 23 USC 405 (d) (7) (A) and regulations adopted thereunder. If the court enters an order under this subdivision, when the person completes or otherwise does not participate in the program, the court shall order that the person's operating privilege for the operation of "Class D" vehicles be restricted to operating vehicles > that are equipped with an ignition interlock device, shall specify the duration of the order, shall, except as provided in sub. (1m), order that each motor vehicle for which the person's name appears on the vehicle's certificate of title or registration be equipped with an ignition interlock device, and shall notify the department of such order."

2. Wis. Stat § 343.301(1g)(am)1. requires a court to order that a person's operating privilege be restricted to operating motor vehicles that are equipped with an ignition interlock device if that person commits particular operating while intoxicated offenses. The court may specify the date by which the device must be installed, and the operating privilege restriction takes effect immediately upon the issuance of the order. The operating privilege restriction remains in place for not less than one year after the Department of Transportation issues an operator's license nor more than the maximum operating privilege revocation period after the Department issues an operator's license.

3. Section 347.413 applies to ignition interlock installation ordered under three different statutes. Section 343.301 (1g) is the authority under current [2019-20] statutes. Also covered are orders issued under § 346.65(6), 1999 stats., and § 343.301(1), 2007 stats. The statute under which the order was issued should be accurately identified in the instruction. The Committee concluded that a reference to "§ 343.301" is sufficient for orders under current statutes and the 2007 statutes; for the other option, the reference should be to "§ 346.65 of the 1999 Wisconsin Statutes."

4. The Committee did not include a mental element in the instruction – such as "intentionally" or "knowingly" failed to install the device – because the statute defining the offense does not expressly provide for a mental element. The Committee's approach, for both Criminal Code offense and offenses found outside the Criminal Code, is to include a mental element only where the statute uses one of the intent-indicating words as set forth in sec. 939.23(1). Wisconsin courts generally follow the same rule, with one notable exception. See State v. Collova, 79 Wis.2d 473, 255 N.W.2d 581 (1977), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court added a mental element for operating after revocation offenses where the statute did not include it. [Note: The statute has since been amended to add "knowingly" to the offense definition. See 1997 Wisconsin Act 84.]

5. This element was added to the instruction as part of the 2012 based on § 347.02(2) which provides: "No provision of this chapter requiring or prohibiting certain types of equipment on a vehicle is applicable when such vehicle is not operated upon or occupying a highway." As originally published, the element required that "the defendant operated that motor vehicle on a highway." The 2014 revision changed the element to require that the vehicle must be operated on or occupy the highway. The Committee concluded that the defendant need not be the individual who operated it.

Section 340.01(22) defines "highway." Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

2690 OPERATING A COMMERCIAL MOTOR VEHICLE WITH AN ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION OF 0.04 GRAMS OR MORE BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS — CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 346.63(5)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 346.63(5)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who drives or operates a commercial motor vehicle on a highway[1] while that person has an alcohol concentration of .04 or more but less than .08.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (drove) (operated) a commercial motor vehicle[2] on a highway.[3]

Definition of "Drive" or "Operate"

["Drive" means the exercise of physical control over the speed and direction of a motor vehicle while it is in motion.][4]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion.][5]

2. The defendant had an alcohol concentration of .04 or more but less than .08[6] at the time the defendant (drove) (operated) a commercial motor vehicle.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.04 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[7] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[8] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of (driving) (operating) a motor vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the (driving) (operating). If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.04 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.04 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had an alcohol concentration of .04 or more at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had an alcohol concentration of .04 or more at the time of the alleged (driving) (operating), unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[9]

device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2690 was originally published in 1993. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2003.

This revision reflects the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for this offense from "more than 0.04 but less than 0.10" to "more than 0.04 but less than 0.08" made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment. The applicable sections of Wis JI-Criminal 2600 are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

This instruction is for a criminal offense under § 346.63(5)(a), which applies if "the total number of suspensions, revocations and convictions counted under § 343.307(1) within in a 10-year period, equals 2 . . ." Section 346.65(2j). The fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal charge. State v. McCallister, 107 Wis.2d 532, 319 N.W.2d 865 (1982). The penalty provisions apply "regardless of the sequence of offenses." State v. Banks, 105 Wis.2d 32, 48, 313 N.W.2d 67 (1981). The time period is measured from the date of the refusals or violations. § 346.65(2c).

First violations of the statute are forfeitures. There is not a uniform instruction for the forfeiture offense, but see Wis JI-Criminal 2660A for an instruction for a forfeiture offense involving a non-commercial motor vehicle.

The maximum penalty for this offense is doubled if there was a child under the age of 16 years in the defendant's vehicle. See § 346.65(2j)(d) and Wis JI-Criminal 999.

The constitutionality of penalizing the "status" of having a prohibited level of alcohol concentration has been upheld. State v. Muehlenberg, 118 Wis.2d 502, 347 N.W.2d 914 (Ct. App. 1984); State v. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 447 N.W.2d 654 (1989). Defendants may not litigate the validity of the "partition ratio" that is used to calculate the prohibited breath alcohol level. McManus, 152 Wis.2d 113, 123.

Note that § 346.63(7)(a) imposes an absolute sobriety requirement on commercial motor vehicle operators during on duty time. Violations are punished by a forfeiture of $10; any refusal to take a chemical test is a separate violation. § 346.65(2u).

The implied consent law requires that notice of commercial motor vehicle license sanctions be included in the implied consent warnings given to suspects. See § 343.305(4)(b) and (c). These warnings must be given to drivers whenever the officer knows that the suspect holds a commercial motor vehicle license. State v. Geraldson, 176 Wis.2d 487, 500 N.W.2d 415 (Ct. App. 1993). The commercial motor vehicle warnings need not to be given to suspects who are not licensed as a commercial motor vehicle operator. State v. Piskula, 168 Wis.2d 135, 483 N.W.2d 250 (Ct. App. 1992).

1. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I, and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

2. If definition of "commercial motor vehicle" is necessary, see § 340.01(8), which provides as follows:

> (8) "Commercial motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle designed or used to transport passengers or property and having one or more of the following characteristics:
> (a) The vehicle is a single vehicle with a gross vehicle weight rating of 26,001 or more pounds or the vehicle's registered weight or actual gross weight is more than 26,000 pounds.
> (b) The vehicle is a combination vehicle with a gross combination weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of 26,001 or more pounds inclusive of a towed unit with a gross vehicle weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of more than 10,000 pounds.
> (c) The vehicle is designed to transport or is actually transporting the driver and 15 or more passengers. If the vehicle is equipped with bench type seats intended to seat more than one person, the passenger carrying capacity shall be determined under s. 340.01(31) or, if the vehicle is a school buss, by dividing the total seating space measured in inches by 13.
> (d) The vehicle is transporting hazardous materials requiring placarding.

3. Regarding the "on a highway" requirement, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. I., and Wis JI-Criminal 2605.

4. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 346.63(3)(a).

5. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. Section 340.01(1v) provides that "alcohol concentration" means the number of grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of a person's blood or the number of grams of alcohol per 210 liters of a person's breath. For this offense the prohibited range is more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams.

7. Section 885.235(1)(d) provides that test results in this range are "prima facie evidence" of an alcohol concentration of .04 or more at the time of the driving.

This instruction, therefore, advises the jury that a test result showing an alcohol concentration of .04 or more is sufficient evidence upon which to base a finding that the person had such a concentration at the time of the driving. But the jury is also advised that they are not required to make such a finding and that they may only find that the defendant had an alcohol concentration of .04 or more at the time of the driving if they are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case. In the Committee's judgment, this is the type of instruction required by Wis. Stat. § 903.03.

8. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

9. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2695 OPERATING A MOTORBOAT WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT: CRIMINAL OFFENSE — § 30.681(1)(a) and § 30.80(6)(a)2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 30.681(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motorboat while under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which renders that person incapable of safe motorboat operation.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a motorboat.

   "Operate" means to control the speed or direction of a motorboat.[1]

   "Motorboat" means any boat equipped with propulsion machinery, whether or not the machinery is the principal source of propulsion.[2]

2. At the time the defendant operated a motorboat, the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which rendered (him) (her) incapable of safe motorboat operation.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a motorboat was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motorboat.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe operation. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the motorboat be impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a motorboat is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[3]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[4]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[5] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[6] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210

liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[7]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2695 was approved by the Committee in March 2012.

This instruction is drafted for second or subsequent violations of § 30.681(1)(a), which are crimes. See § 30.80(6)(a)2. As with regular operating under the influence offenses, the fact of a prior conviction is not an element of the criminal offense. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

A first offense under § 30.681(1) is a civil forfeiture. To use this instruction for the forfeiture offense, modify the instruction by substituting "to a reasonable certainty by evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing" for "beyond a reasonable doubt." It may also be necessary to change the reference from "the state" to the unit of government that is prosecuting the case. See Wis JI-Criminal 2680 for a model.

This instruction is based on a violation for operating under the influence. For violations involving a prohibited alcohol concentration under § 30.681(1)(b)1., see Wis JI-Criminal 2660 for a model. For cases where both "under the influence" and "prohibited alcohol concentration" charges are submitted based on a single act of operation, see Wis JI-Criminal 2696. For violations involving a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance under § 30.681(1)(b)1m., Wis JI-Criminal 2664B for a model.

1. This is based on the definition provided in § 30.50(8g): "'Operation of a motorboat' means controlling the speed or direction of a motorboat, except a sailboat operating under sail alone."

2. This is the definition of "motorboat" provided in § 30.50(6). Also see § 30.50(9d) which defines "personal watercraft" as a "motorboat."

3. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. The statute specifically includes offenses involving operation of a motorboat. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

4. It may be that cases will be charged under § 30.681(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

5. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

6. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

7. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2696 OPERATING A MOTORBOAT WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT / OPERATING A MOTORBOAT WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION OF 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — CRIMINAL CHARGE — §§ 30.681(1)(a) and 30.681(1)(b)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The first count in the criminal complaint charges that the defendant operated a motorboat while under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which renders that person incapable of safe motorboat operation in violation of § 30.681(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

The second count in the criminal complaint charges that the defendant operated a motorboat while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration in violation of § 30.681(1)(b)1. of the Wisconsin Statutes.

To these charges, the defendant has entered pleas of not guilty which means the State must prove every element of each offense charged beyond a reasonable doubt.[1]

It is for you to determine whether the defendant is guilty of one, both, or neither of the offenses charged. You must make a finding of guilty or not guilty for each offense charged.[2]

Each count charges a separate offense, and you must consider each one separately.

Definition of Count 1 – Operating Under The Influence

Section 30.681(1)(a) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motorboat while under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which renders that person incapable of safe motorboat operation.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Count 1 – Operating Under The Influence

1. The defendant operated a motorboat.

   "Operate" means to control the speed or direction of a motorboat.[3]

   "Motorboat" means any boat equipped with propulsion machinery, whether or not the machinery is the principal source of propulsion.[4]

2. At the time the defendant operated a motorboat, the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which rendered (him) (her) incapable of safe motorboat operation.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a motorboat was impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[5]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motorboat.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe operation. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the motorboat be impaired.

Definition of Count 2 – Operating With A Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

Section 30.681(1)(b)1. of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who operates a motorboat with a prohibited alcohol concentration.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of Count 2 – Prohibited Alcohol Concentration

1. The defendant operated a motorboat.
2. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant operated a motorboat.

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[6]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a motorboat is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[7]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[8]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[9] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[10] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating or that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, or both, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide these questions on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating or that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, or both, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[11]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant operated a motorboat while under the influence of an intoxicant, you should find the defendant guilty of Count 1.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of Count 1.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant operated a motorboat while the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration, you should find the defendant guilty of Count 2.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of Count 2.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2696 was approved by the Committee in June 2012.

This instruction is drafted for the case where two counts based on the same incident are submitted to the jury: one alleging operating while under the influence in violation of § 30.681(1)(a); and, one alleging operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more in violation of § 30.681(1)(b)1. It is based on Wis JI-Criminal 2669 and is intended to implement the procedure set forth in § 30.681(1)(c). It attempts to streamline the instructions in a two-charge case by avoiding the reading of the complete instruction for each charge. This instruction is drafted for criminal charges; for two civil forfeiture offenses, see Wis JI-Criminal 2668 for a model.

The constitutionality of the two-charge procedure for operating a motor vehicle under the influence was upheld in State v. Bohacheff, 114 Wis.2d 402, 338 N.W.2d 446 (1983). The court held that the Double Jeopardy Clause is not offended because of the express limitation in § 346.63(1)(c) that there be only one conviction. Bohacheff dealt with a challenge to the criminal complaint, so it did not address the problems presented at a trial where both charges are submitted to the jury. The Committee concluded that § 346.63(1)(c) clearly suggests that both charges should be submitted and that the jury should make a finding as to each charge. If the jury returns a guilty verdict on both, judgment of conviction should be entered on the count on which the prosecutor moves for judgment. The remaining count should be dismissed. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

1. This statement is the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 115, One Defendant: Two Counts. If Wis JI-Criminal 115 is also given, the statement need not be repeated here.

2. This statement is the equivalent of Wis JI-Criminal 484, . . . One Defendant: Two Counts . . . If Wis JI-Criminal 484 is also given, the statement need not be repeated here.

3. This is based on the definition provided in § 30.50(8g): "'Operation of a motorboat' means controlling the speed or direction of a motorboat, except a sailboat operating under sail alone."

4. This is the definition of "motorboat" provided in § 30.50(6). Also see § 30.50(9d) which defines "personal watercraft" as a "motorboat."

5. The instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

6. The definitions are those provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V. Section 30.50(1g) provides that "alcohol concentration" has the meaning given in s. 340.01(1v).

7. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

8. It may be that cases will be charged under § 30.681(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

9. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

10. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

2902 OFFERING OR SELLING AN UNREGISTERED SECURITY — §§ 551.301 and 551.508

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 551.301 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who willfully offers or sells any security in this state unless the security is registered or the security or transaction is exempt from registration.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The item [offered] [sold] was a security as defined by Wisconsin law.

   A [insert applicable term from § 551.102(28)] is a security.[1]

2. The defendant [offered] [sold] the security in this state.[2]

   ["Offered" includes every attempt or offer to sell or dispose of a security or interest in a security for value.][3]

   ["Sold" includes every sale, disposition or exchange, and every contract of sale of, or contract to sell, a security or interest in a security for value.][4]

3. The item [offered] [sold] was not registered under the Wisconsin Uniform Securities Law and was not exempt from registration.

If no order of registration was issued by the Commissioner of Securities for the State of Wisconsin, the security has not been registered under the Wisconsin Uniform Securities Law.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE TENDING SHOW THE BASIS FOR AN EXEMPTION FROM REGISTRATION, THE INSTRUCTION SHOULD DEFINE THE APPLICABLE EXEMPTION – SEE §§ 551.201, 551.202, AND 551.203.[5]

4. The defendant [offered] [sold] the unregistered and non-exempt security willfully.

"Willfully" requires that the defendant knowingly committed the acts charged.

"Willfully" also requires that the defendant knew that (describe the security) was a security and knew that it was not registered and not exempt from registration.[6] Proof of intent to violate the law or knowledge that the law was being violated is not required.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[7] IF THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 551.508(1m): THE VICTIM WAS AT LEAST 65 YEARS OF AGE WHEN THE CRIME WAS COMMITTED:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must consider the following question:

Was (name of victim) at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed?

Before you may answer the question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2902 was originally published in 1998 and revised in 2004, 2009, and 2010. The 2009 revision reflected changes made in Chapter 551 by 2007 Wisconsin Act 196. The 2010 revision added the special question for cases involving victims over 65 years of age. The 2014 revision made a correction in footnote 1.

This instruction is for violations of § 551.301. Section 551.508 provides that persons who willfully violate the provisions of Chapter 551 are guilty of a Class H felony. 2009 Wisconsin Act 196 created § 551.508(1m) which provides for a penalty increase if the crime is committed against a person who is at least 65 years of age when the crime is committed. A special question has been added for cases where the penalty increase applies.

1. Section 551.102(28) provides an extensive definition of "security." If the item involved in the case is alleged to be an item specified in that definition, the Committee recommends that the jury simply be told, for example, that "common stock is a security." It is for the jury to determine whether the item involved in the case is in fact common stock.

Until the 2014 revision, this footnote referred to a definition of "investment contract" in the Wisconsin Administrative Code – DCF 1.02(6)(a). That definition was deleted from the Administrative Code when the securities law statutes were revised effective January 1, 2009, but the revision incorporated the equivalent of the former Code definition into the statutory definition of "security" – see § 551.102(208). This process is explained in State v. Hudson, 2013 WI App 120, 351 Wis.2d 73, 839 N.W.2d 147, ¶¶ 14 and 15.

In State v. Johnson, 2002 WI App 224, 257 Wis.2d 736, 652 N.W.2d 642, the court held that offers involving promises to repay loans at above market rates were offers to sell "securities." The court adopted the "family resemblance" test articulated in Reves v. Ernst & Young, 494 U.S. (1990), previously applied in State v. Mueller, 201 Wis.2d 121, 549 N.W.2d 455 (Ct. App. 1996).

In State v. LaCount, 2008 WI 59, 310 Wis.2d 85, 750 N.W.2d 780, the court held that it was not error to allow a lawyer to testify as an expert regarding what an "investment contract" is. Further, the evidence was sufficient to establish that the investment in this case was a security.

A promissory note issued to a sold investor is "security" under the securities fraud statute. State v. McGuire, 2007 WI App 139, 302 Wis.2d 688, 735 N.W.2d 555.

2. Section 551.613 describes situations that are covered by the "in this state" requirement but where not all of the aspects of the transactions or the participants are present in Wisconsin. If a particular situation raises a factual issue in the case, it may be necessary to provide instruction on that situation.

3. The definition of "offer" is based on the one provided in § 551.102(26).

"[B]y its plain terms, Wis. Stat. § 551.21(1) [now 551.301] is violated through an offer to sell an unregistered security, even if no sale actually occurs. Therefore, the issuance of a promissory note, debenture or other evidence of indebtedness containing the terms agreed upon when the loan was made is not a necessary element . . ." State v. Johnson, 2002 WI App 224, ¶11, 257 Wis.2d 736, 652 N.W.2d 642.

4. The definition of "sold" is based on the one provided in § 551.102(26).

5. Section 551.301(2) provides: "It is unlawful to offer or sell any security in state unless it is registered . . . or the security or transaction, or offer is exempted under this chapter." Section 551.201 provides an extensive list of exempt securities; section 551.202 provides an extensive list of exempt transactions, and section 551.203 refers to "additional exemptions and waivers."

Because the reference to exemption is contained in the definition of the offense, the Committee concluded that it is a fact the State must prove to support a finding of guilt. However, consistent with the general rule that is applied to exceptions in criminal statutes, proof of the absence of specific exemptions is not required until the basis therefor is raised by the evidence. See, for example, State v. Williamson, 58 Wis.2d 514, 206 N.W.2d 613 (1973), addressing § 941.23 which prohibits carrying a concealed weapon by persons other than a peace officer. Williamson has been interpreted to mean that the state need not prove that the defendant is not one of the many officials who qualify as "peace officers" until there is evidence in the case that the defendant may be one of those officials. See Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

6. The Committee carefully reconsidered the "willfully" element in 2003. The origin of the "willfully" requirement is § 551.508(1), which provides that "a person who willfully violates any provision of this chapter . . . is guilty of a Class H felony." The Committee concluded that "willfully" as applied to violations of § 551.301 required knowledge that the item was a security and knowledge that it was not registered and not exempt. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that "willfully" has the same meaning as "intentionally." State v. Cissell, 127 Wis.2d 205, 211-12, 378 N.W.2d 691 (1985). Section 939.23(3) provides that, when used in the Criminal Code, "intentionally" has the following meaning:

> 'Intentionally' means that the actor either has purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. In addition, except as provided in sub. (6), the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'

In State v. Williams, 179 Wis.2d 80, 88-89, 505 N.W.2d 468 (Ct. App. 1993), the court cited Cissell with approval in connection with the offense of willfully making a false statement on an application for a medical assistance benefit or payment, though the court fell short of completely applying the § 939.23(3) definition to the elements of the crime.

Applying the Criminal Code definition of "intentionally" to the offense defined in § 551.301 yields the requirement that the defendant know that the item was a security and know that it was not registered and not exempt. This results in a more demanding mental state than other states require under statutes based on the same model act as Wisconsin's. While § 551.615 requires that the Wisconsin securities statutes be construed to be uniform with the law of other states that have adopted the Uniform Securities Act, the Committee concluded that in the absence of direct Wisconsin authority, the Cissell holding that "willfully" has the same meaning as "intentionally" could not be ignored.

Two Wisconsin appellate decisions have addressed the mental element required for securities fraud offenses. In State v. Ross, 2003 WI App 27, ¶27, 260 Wis.2d 291, 659 N.W.2d 122, the court of appeals affirmed a conviction based on violations of § 551.21 [now § 551.301]. The court upheld the trial court's denial of a requested instruction on the "advice of counsel" defense, holding that "Ross's specific state of mind was not relevant to any of the elements of the crimes with which he had been charged." However, the defense request was apparently not targeted to a specific knowledge requirement, since the court began the discussion with the statement that "under neither the securities fraud statutes nor WOCCA is the State required to prove that the accused acted with intent to defraud or with knowledge that the law was violated." 2003 WI App 27, ¶27.

As to violations of § 551.501, Wisconsin courts have also held that "willfully" does not require proof of intent to defraud or knowledge that the law was violated; it is sufficient that the defendant "knowingly committed the act charged." State v. Mueller, 201 Wis.2d 121, 549 N.W.2d 455 (Ct. App. 1996). See Wis JI-Criminal 2904, which is drafted for violations of § 551.501. The Committee concluded that the result in Mueller does not require a more limited mental state for violations of § 551.301. Under the Mueller decision, violations of § 551.501 still require a culpable mental state: knowingly making an untrue statement or knowingly omitting a material fact necessary to make statements made not misleading. Under § 551.301 no culpable mental state would remain if "willfully" was limited to knowingly offering or selling an item.

The 2003 revision added the sentence: "Proof of intent to violate the law or knowledge that the law was being violated is not required." This is not inconsistent with requiring knowledge that the item was an unregistered security. Under the standard in the instruction, the defendant must know that the item was a security and that it was not registered or exempt from registration. The defendant need not intend to violate the securities law or know that it is against the law to sell or offer an unregistered security.

7. Section 551.508(1m) provides that if a securities fraud offense "is committed against another person who is at least 65 years of age when the crime is committed, . . . the maximum fine . . . may be increased by not more than $5000 and the maximum term of imprisonment . . . may be increased by not more than 5 years." Where the offense involving the penalty increase is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if the jury finds the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was (name of victim) at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed?

2904 SECURITIES FRAUD: MAKING AN UNTRUE STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACT IN CONNECTION WITH THE SALE OF A SECURITY — §§ 551.501(2) and 551.508

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 551.501(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who willfully makes an untrue statement of material fact, or omits to state a material fact necessary to make the statements made not misleading, in connection with the offer, sale or purchase of any security in this state.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The item [offered] [sold] was a security as defined by Wisconsin law.

   A [insert applicable term from § 551.102(28)] is a security.[1]

2. The defendant [made an untrue statement of material fact] [omitted to state a material fact necessary to make the statements made not misleading] in connection with the offer, sale or purchase of a security in this state.[2]

   ["Offered" includes every attempt or offer to sell or dispose of a security or interest in a security for value.][3]

["Sold" includes every sale, disposition or exchange, and every contract of sale of, or contract to sell, a security or interest in a security for value.][4]

A fact is a "material fact" if it could be expected to influence a reasonable investor in making a decision whether to purchase an investment.[5]

[A fact is also a "material fact" if the maker of the representation knows that the investor regards the matter as important in making a decision whether to purchase an investment, even though a reasonable investor would not regard it as important.][6]

3. The defendant acted willfully.

"Wilfully" requires that the defendant knowingly [made an untrue statement of material fact] [omitted to state a material fact necessary to make the statements made not misleading] in connection with the offer, sale or purchase of a security. Proof of intent to violate the law or knowledge that the law was being violated is not required.[7]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[8] IF THE DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 551.508(1m): THE VICTIM WAS AT LEAST 65 YEARS OF AGE WHEN THE CRIME WAS COMMITTED:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must consider the following question:

Was (name of victim) at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed?

Before you may answer the question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 2904 was originally published in 1998 and revised in 2004, 2009 and 2010. The 2010 revision added the special question for cases involving victims over 65 years of age. The 2014 revision made a correction in footnote 1.

This instruction is for violations of § 551.501(2). Section 551.508 provides that persons who violate the provisions of Chapter 551 are guilty of a Class H felony. 2009 Wisconsin Act 196 created § 551.508(1m) which provides for a penalty increase if the crime is committed against a person who is at least 65 years of age when the crime is committed. A special question has been added for cases where the penalty increase applies.

1. Section 551.102(28) provides an extensive definition of "security." If the item involved in the case is alleged to be an item specified in that definition, the Committee recommends that the jury simply be told, for example, that "common stock is a security." It is for the jury to determine whether the item involved in the case is in fact common stock.

Until the 2014 revision, this footnote referred to a definition of "investment contract" in the Wisconsin Administrative Code – DCF 1.02(6)(a). That definition was deleted from the Administrative Code when the securities law statutes were revised effective January 1, 2009, but the revision incorporated the equivalent of the former Code definition into the statutory definition of "security" – see § 551.102(208). This process is explained in State v. Hudson, 2013 WI App 120, 351 Wis.2d 73, 839 N.W.2d 147, ¶¶14 and 15.

In State v. Johnson, 2002 WI App 224, 257 Wis.2d 736, 652 N.W.2d 642, the court held that offers involving promises to repay loans at above market rates were offers to sell "securities." The court adopted the "family resemblance" test articulated in Reves v. Ernst & Young, 494 U.S. (1990), previously applied in State v. Mueller, 201 Wis.2d 121, 549 N.W.2d 455 (Ct. App. 1996).

In State v. LaCount, 2008 WI 59, 310 Wis.2d 85, 750 N.W.2d 780, the court held that it was not error to allow a lawyer to testify as an expert regarding what an "investment contract" is. Further, the evidence was sufficient to establish that the investment in this case was a security.

A promissory note issued to a sold investor is "security" under the securities fraud statute. State v. McGuire, 2007 WI App 139, 302 Wis.2d 688, 735 N.W.2d 555.

2. Section 551.613 describes situations that are covered by the "in this state" requirement but where not all of the aspects of the transactions or the participants are present in Wisconsin. If a particular situation raises a factual issue in the case, it may be necessary to provide instruction on that situation.

3. The definition of "offer" is based on the one provided in § 551.102(26).

4. The definition of "sale" is based on the definition of "offer to sell" provided in § 551.102(26).

5. The definition of "material fact" is based on the definition used in 23.06 Materiality, Federal Criminal Jury Instructions, Potuto, Saltzburg and Perlman (2d edition) Michie 1993. The Comment to that instruction indicates that the definition is taken from the test in SEC v. Texas Gulf Sulphur, 401 F.2d 833, 849 (2d Cir. 1968), cert. denied, 394 U.S. 976 (1969). The Texas Gulf Sulphur test is based on § 538(2)(a), Restatement of Torts 2d. The test is an objective one, asking whether a reasonable person would attach importance to a particular fact. The actual importance accorded a fact by the investor in any particular case is not determinative if the hypothetical reasonable investor would have considered the fact to be material.

This definition is consistent with the standard adopted in State v. Johnson, 2002 WI App 224, ¶21, 257 Wis.2d 736, 652 N.W.2d 642: ". . . an objective standard, wherein the fact finder assesses whether the omitted or misrepresented fact would have made a difference to a reasonable investor's decision to invest. See Ollerman v. O'Rourke Co., 94 Wis.2d 17, 42, 288 N.W.2d 95 (1980); TSC Indus., Inc. v. Northway, Inc., 426 U.S. 438, 445 (1976)."

6. This is based on § 538 (2)(b) of the Restatement of Torts, 2d. The full text of that provision reads as follows:

(2) The matter is material if

(b) the maker of the representation knows or has reason to know that its recipient regards or is likely to regard the matter as important in determining his choice of action, although a reasonable man would not so regard it.

The Committee concluded this should be included in brackets in the instruction, for use in a case where it is supported by the facts.

7. The origin of the "willfully" requirement is § 551.508(1), which provides that "[a]ny person who willfully violates any provision of this chapter . . . may be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years or both." Wisconsin courts have held that for violations of § 551.4 [now 551.501], "willfully" does not require proof of intent to defraud or knowledge that the law was violated; it is sufficient that the defendant "knowingly committed the act charged." State v. Mueller, 201 Wis.2d 121, 549 N.W.2d 455 (Ct. App. 1996).

8. Section 551.508(1m) provides that if a securities fraud offense "is committed against another person who is at least 65 years of age when the crime is committed, . . . the maximum fine . . . may be increased by not more than $5000 and the maximum term of imprisonment . . . may be increased by not more than 5 years." Where the offense involving the penalty increase is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if the jury finds the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was (name of victim) at least 65 years of age when the crime was committed?

5000 POSSESSION OF UNTAGGED DEER — § 29.40(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of untagged deer, as defined in § 29.347(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who possesses, controls, stores, or transports a deer carcass that is not tagged as required by law.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a deer carcass.[1]

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had actual physical control of a carcass.[2]

2. The deer carcass was not tagged as required by law.

   Wisconsin law requires that any person who kills a deer shall immediately attach to the ear or antler of the deer a current validated deer carcass tag which is authorized for use on the type of deer killed.[3]

   "Validated" means marked with specified information in the manner required by the department.[4]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5000 was originally published in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2002 and involved adoption of a new format.

Violations of § 29.347 are punished "by a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $2,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months or both." § 29.971(11). If a fine is imposed, "the court shall impose a natural resources assessment equal to 75% of the amount of the fine. . ." § 29.987(1)(a).

1. Section 29.001(18) provides the following definition of "carcass":

> "Carcass" means the dead body of any wild animal, including any part of the wild animal or the eggs of the wild animal.

2. This is the basic definition of "possession" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. See that instruction for optional paragraphs for possible use where an item is not in "the actual physical control" of the person or where possession is shared with another.

The statute applies not only to "possesses" but also to "controls, stores, or transports." The instruction does not include the other alternatives because the Committee concluded that they are covered by the more general term.

3. This standard is found in the first sentence of § 29.347(2). Exceptions to the tagging requirement are specifically set forth in the statute: "car kills" under § 29.347(5); and group hunting permits under § 29.324(3) where someone other than the killer of the deer may attach the tag.

4. This is the definition provided in § 29.347(1)(b).

5010 FAILURE TO FILE AN INDIVIDUAL[1] INCOME TAX RETURN — § 71.83(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to file an income tax return, as defined by § 71.83(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who is required by law to file[2] a return and who willfully fails to file a return at the time required by law.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person required by law to file a return of (his) (her) income for the taxable year ending _____.

   A person is required to file a state income tax return for any calendar year in which the person has a gross income of _____.[3]

   The term "gross income" means all income derived from any source and in any form, whether in money, property, or services. The term "gross income" includes compensation for services, including salaries, wages and fees, commissions, and similar items.[4]

   A person is required to file a return whether or not a tax is due.

2. The defendant failed to file the return at the time required by law, which was on or before April 15, _____.[5]

Individual income tax returns are required to be filed on or before April 15 following the year of the earning of the gross income and must be filed [by mailing them to the Department of Revenue in Madison, Dane County, Wisconsin.] [in the manner specified by the Department of Revenue.[6]]

3. The defendant's failure to file the return was willful.

The failure to file a timely return is willful if the defendant knew (he) (she) was required to file and deliberately did not file a return.[7]

This does not require the State to prove that the defendant had a purpose to evade a tax or to defraud the State of Wisconsin.[8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5010 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for the misdemeanor offenses of willfully failing to file an income tax return as defined in § 71.83(2)(a)1. See the text of the statute in note 1, below.

Wis JI-Criminal 5012 is drafted for the felony offense of filing a false or fraudulent return under § 71.83(2)(b).

1. This instruction is drafted for the failure to file an individual return, which is prohibited by § 71.83(2)(a)1. The statute also covers returns other than individual returns:

> (2) Criminal (a) Misdemeanor. 1. 'All persons.' If any person, including an officer of a corporation or a manager of a limited liability company required by law to make, render, sign or verify any return, willfully fails or refuses to make a return at the time required in § 71.03, 71.24, or 71.44, or willfully fails or refuses to make deposits or payments as required by § 71.65(3) or willfully renders a false or fraudulent statement required by § 71.65(1) and (2) or deposit report or withholding report required by § 71.65(3), such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not to exceed 9 months or both, together with the cost of prosecution.

2. Section 71.83(2)(a)1 (see note 1, above) uses the phrase "make, render, sign, or verify" a return. The Committee concluded that simply using the word "file" throughout the instruction would be easier to understand and would be legally correct – it is the failure to file when required to do so that is the essence of this offense.

3. Here specify the requirement that applies in the case. Section 71.03(2) provides:

> (2) PERSONS REQUIRED TO FILE; OTHER REQUIREMENTS. The following shall report in accordance with this section:
> (a) Natural persons. Except as provided in sub. (6)(b):
> 1. Every individual domiciled in this state during the entire taxable year who has a gross income at or above a threshold amount which shall be determined annually by the department of revenue. The threshold amounts shall be determined for categories of individuals based on filing status and age, and shall include categories for single individuals; individuals who file as a head of household; married couples who file jointly; and married persons who file separately. . .

4. This definition is adapted from the lengthy one found in § 71.03(1).

5. The usual time limit for filing an individual return will be April 15 of the year following the earning of the income which is the subject of the return – § 71.03(6)(a). However, a different limit may occasionally apply, as where an extension of time has been granted. In those cases, the correct date should be included in the instruction.

6. See s. TAX 2.08(3), Wisconsin Administrative Code.

7. This definition of "willful" was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Olexa, 136 Wis.2d 475, 402 N.W.2d 733 (Ct. App. 1987). The definition was developed in part by relying on United States v. Pomponio, 429 U.S. 10 (1976), where the United States Supreme Court held that under the Internal Revenue Code, "willful" was to be defined as a "voluntary, intentional violation of a known legal duty." The Pomponio definition was reapproved in United States v. Cheek, 111 S.Ct. 604 (1990).

Both Olexa and Cheek reviewed the "willful" requirement in light of "tax protester" defenses. In Olexa, the court rejected the defendant's claims that she was not required to file tax returns because she was exempt from the filing requirements, that she was not a "person," and that federal reserve notes were not income. These claims were characterized as legal interpretations "not recognized by the mistake statute as valid defenses." 136 Wis.2d 475, 485.

In Cheek, the United States Supreme Court held that it was error for the trial court to instruct the jury that in order for a good-faith belief that one is not violating the law to negate willfulness, it must be objectively reasonable. Rather, it was for the jury to decide > . . . whether, based on all the evidence, the Government has proved that the defendant was aware of the duty at issue, which cannot be true if the jury credits a good-faith misunderstanding and belief submission, whether or not the claimed belief or misunderstanding is objectively reasonable.

> In this case, if Cheek asserted that he truly believed that the Internal Revenue Code did not purport to treat wages as income, and the jury believed him, the Government would not have carried its burden to prove willfulness, however unreasonable a court might deem such a belief.

Cheek rejected the claim that a good faith belief that the income tax is unconstitutional constitutes a defense. The court held that such claims are not inconsistent with the "willfulness" requirement:

> Rather, they reveal full knowledge of the provisions at issue. . . .
> We thus hold that in a case like this, a defendant's views about the validity of the tax statutes are irrelevant to the issue of willfulness, need not be heard by the jury, and if they are, an instruction to disregard them would be proper.

In Olexa, the court held that "willful" was the equivalent of "intentionally" as defined in § 939.23(3). The court said that one of Olexa's defenses was essentially one of mistake: an honest error negativing the state of mind essential to the crime. § 939.43(1). The mistake defense does not apply to mistaken legal interpretations, such as Olexa's claim that she was not a "person" under the tax statutes.

The results in Olexa and Cheek are very close to being inconsistent – at the heart of both cases is the defendant's claimed belief that he or she was not required to file returns under the tax statutes and therefore lacked the mental element required. To the extent that the decisions are inconsistent, the rule in Olexa governs in Wisconsin. Cheek was not based on constitutional grounds; it was only interpretation of a federal statute.

For a discussion of "willful" in the context of Department of Transportation rules, see Department of Transportation v. Transportation Comm'n, 111 Wis.2d 80, 330 N.W.2d 159 (1983).

8. Intent to defraud is not an element of this offense. It is the willful failure to file that is punished, thus intent to file and pay all taxes due at some future time is not a defense.

5012 FILING A FALSE OR FRAUDULENT RETURN — § 71.83(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Filing a false or fraudulent income tax return, as defined in § 71.83(2)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by a person who files[1] a false[2] income tax return with intent to evade[3] payment of any tax required to be paid by the law.[4]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant filed an income tax return.
2. The return filed by the defendant was false.

   False means that one or more statements in the tax return were materially untrue. The state alleges that _____.[5]
3. The defendant filed a false income tax return with intent to evade payment of income taxes.

   The term "intent to evade payment of income taxes" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to evade[6] the payment of income taxes which were due.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5012 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for the felony offense of filing a false or fraudulent income tax return as defined in § 71.83(2)(b)1. See the text of the statute below.

Wis JI-Criminal 5010 is drafted for the misdemeanor offense of failing to file a return under § 71.83(1)(b).

Section 71.83(2)(b)1. reads as follows:

> (b) Felony 1. 'False Income Tax Return; Fraud.' Any person, other than a corporation or limited liability company, who renders a false or fraudulent income tax return with intent to defeat or evade any assessment required by this chapter is guilty of a Class H felony and may be assessed the cost of prosecution. . . .

The statutory statement of the offense is substantially paraphrased in the first paragraph of the instruction. See notes 1 through 4, below.

1. Although § 71.83(2)(b)1. uses "renders" a return, the Committee concluded it was more clear to use "files" rather than "renders." The words have the same meaning in this context and "files" ought to be substantially less confusing to the jury.

2. The Committee concluded it was less confusing and more accurate to use "false" rather than the statutory phrase "false or fraudulent." The return must contain false statements; if it did not, it could not be "fraudulent." A false return made with intent to evade payment of taxes is a "fraudulent" return.

3. Section 71.83(2)(b)1. uses "intent to evade or defeat" while the instruction uses only "evade." The meaning of "defeat" and the sufficiency of the evidence to show "intent to defeat" is discussed in the context of civil tax "doomage" penalties in State v. Van Sustern, 154 Wis.2d 595, 453 N.W.2d 889 (1990). Also see McKinnon v. Dept. of Taxation, 261 Wis. 564, 53 N.W.2d 169 (1952).

4. The Committee believes the phrase "any tax required to be paid by the law" is the equivalent of "any assessment required by this chapter" used in § 71.83(2)(b)1.

5. Here specify the way in which the return was alleged to be false. The most common problem will be showing less gross income than was actually received. Other problems could include claiming excessive deductions, claiming tax credits to which the person was not entitled, etc.

6. See note 3, supra.

5024 THEFT OF ANHYDROUS AMMONIA — § 101.10(3)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 101.10(3)(e) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who intentionally (takes) (carries away) (uses) (conceals) (retains possession of)[1] anhydrous ammonia or anhydrous ammonia equipment belonging to another, without consent and with intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the anhydrous ammonia or anhydrous ammonia equipment.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took (anhydrous ammonia) (anhydrous ammonia equipment) belonging to another.

   The term "intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to take property.[2]

   ["Anhydrous ammonia equipment" means any equipment that is used in the application of anhydrous ammonia for an agricultural purpose or that is used to store, hold, transport or transfer anhydrous ammonia.][3]

2. The owner of the (anhydrous ammonia) (anhydrous ammonia equipment) did not consent[4] to the taking.

3. The defendant knew that the owner did not consent.[5]

4. The defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of the possession of the (anhydrous ammonia) (anhydrous ammonia equipment).

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5024 was approved by the Committee in October 2002.

This instruction is for violations of § 101.10(3)(e), which was created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 3, effective date: April 18, 2001.

1. One of the five alternatives in parentheses should be selected. The rest of the instruction is drafted for a case where the act is alleged to be "takes," which, in the Committee's judgment, is the most commonly charged alternative. Note that unlike theft under § 943.20, this statute establishes separate alternatives for "takes" and "carries." Theft has "takes and carries away" as one alternative.

Selection of an alternative is base on State v. Genova, 77 Wis.2d 141, 252 N.W.2d 380 (1977), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court approved a similar construction of the theft statute. A theft charge under § 943.20 had been dismissed on the basis that the complaint charged only that the defendant had transferred property and not that he had taken the property and transferred it. The supreme court held that the complaint had been sufficient in charging only "transfer." The statute should be read as though the following "ors" appeared in it: takes and carries away, or uses, or transfers, or conceals, or retains. A violation of the statute need not include a taking from the owner.

2. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

3. This is the definition provided in § 101.10(1)(b). "Agricultural activity" is defined in § 101.10(1)(a).

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. Knowledge that the taking was without consent is required because the definition of this offense begins with the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute.

6. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

5030 SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS TO A MINOR BY A TAVERN KEEPER — § 176.01(2) 1965 WIS. STATS.

5040 SALE TO OR PROCUREMENT FOR ANY MINOR OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS BY ANY PERSON — § 176.01(2) 1965 WIS. STATS.

[INSTRUCTIONS WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5030 and 5040 were originally published in 1967. The withdrawal of the instructions was approved by the Committee in 1984. The withdrawal note was republished without change in 2009.

Wis JI-Criminal 5030 and 5040 are withdrawn because the statutes defining the offenses covered by the instructions were repealed. Chapter 79, Laws of 1981, repealed Chapter 176 of the Statutes and consolidated most alcohol beverage offenses in a new chapter of the Wisconsin Statutes, Chapter 125.

5035 SELLING FERMENTED MALT BEVERAGE WITHOUT A LICENSE — §125.04(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 125.04(1) of the Wisconsin Statutes makes it a crime for a person to sell a fermented malt beverage without holding the appropriate license.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Charged Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant sold[1] a fermented malt beverage containing 0.5% or more of alcohol by volume.[2]
2. The defendant did not hold an appropriate license for the sale of fermented malt beverage.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5035 was originally published in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2005 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 125.04(1), which provides as follows:

> General licensing requirements. (1) License or permit; when required. No person may sell, manufacture, rectify, brew or engage in any other activity for which this chapter provides a license, permit, or other type of authorization without holding the appropriate license, permit or authorization issued under this chapter.
> . . .

Subsection (13) provides the penalty: "Any person who violates sub. (1) may be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 9 months or both."

1. "Sell" is defined in § 125.02(20) as "any transfer of alcohol beverages with consideration" and as "any transfer without consideration if knowingly made for purposes of evading the law relating to the sale of alcohol beverages. . ." The Committee concluded that a jury would be likely to understand "sell" without including the statutory definition in the instruction.

Because "sell" is broadly defined to include transfers without consideration if made with intent to evade the laws, a variety of situations could be presented that would not be adequately addressed by the instruction as drafted. Common schemes to avoid restrictions on selling beer – selling the cup, for example – would appear to be covered by broader definition of "sale." The instruction should be modified to include the statutory definition or its equivalent in such cases.

2. "Fermented malt beverage" is defined as follows in § 125.02(6):

> "Fermented malt beverages" means any beverage made by the alcohol fermentation of an infusion in potable water of barley malt and hops, with or without unmalted grains of decorticated and degerminated grains or sugar containing 0.5% or more of alcohol by volume.

The Committee concluded that defining the first element to require selling a fermented malt beverage containing 0.5% or more alcohol captured the significant aspects of the statutory definition.

5050 CAUSING INJURY OR DEATH TO AN UNDERAGE PERSON BY PROVIDING ALCOHOL BEVERAGES — § 125.075

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 125.075 of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by a person who provides alcohol beverages to a person under 18 years of age and knows or should know that the person was under the legal drinking age, where the underage person (dies) (suffers great bodily harm)[1] as a result of consuming the alcohol beverages provided.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Charged Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant provided alcohol beverages to (name of victim) .

   "Provided," as used here, means selling, dispensing, or giving away alcohol beverages.[2]

   "Alcohol beverages" means fermented malt beverages and intoxicating liquor.[3]

2. The defendant provided alcohol beverages to (name of victim) at a time when (name of victim) was under 18 years of age and was not accompanied by a parent.[4]

3. The defendant knew or should have known that (name of victim) was under the legal drinking age.

The legal drinking age is 21 years of age.[5]

In deciding whether the defendant knew or should have known that (name of victim) was under the legal drinking age, you should consider all the circumstances relating to the alleged providing of alcohol beverages, including any representations about age made by (name of victim).[6]

4. (Name of victim) (died) (suffered great bodily harm) as a result of consuming alcohol beverages provided by the defendant.

This requires that the consumption of such alcohol beverages was a substantial factor[7] in causing (death) (great bodily harm) to (name of victim).

("Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.)[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5050 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1995 and 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2007.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 125.075, which was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 335 (effective date: April 28, 1988).

1. Section 125.075(2) provides that the penalty for a violation of this statute varies depending on the harm suffered by the underage person:

- if the underage person suffers great bodily harm, the defendant is guilty of a Class H felony.

- if the underage person dies, the defendant is guilty of a Class G felony.

2. The actual words used in statute are: "procures for . . . or sells, dispenses or gives away to. . . ." § 125.075(1). The instruction uses the broader term "provides," which is used in the title of the statute, and then defines it by reference to the statutory language.

3. This is the definition of "alcohol beverage" provided in § 125.02(1).

"Fermented malt beverage" is defined in § 125.02(6) as follows:

"Fermented malt beverages" means any beverage made by the alcohol fermentation of an infusion in potable water of barley malt and hops, with or without unmalted grains or decorticated and degerminated grains or sugar containing 0.5% or more of alcohol by volume.

"Intoxicating liquor" is defined in § 125.02(8) as follows:

"Intoxicating liquor" means all ardent, spirituous, distilled or vinous liquors, liquids or compounds, whether medicated, proprietary, patented or not, and by whatever name called, containing 0.5% or more alcohol by volume, which are beverages, but does not include "fermented malt beverages."

4. Section 125.075 prohibits providing alcohol beverages "to a person under 18 years of age in violation of s. 125.07(1)(a) 1 or 2. . . ." The statutory cross-reference is to provisions prohibiting the dispensing of alcohol beverages to an "underaged person not accompanied by his or her parent, guardian or spouse who has attained the legal drinking age." Thus, it is the source of the requirement in the second element that the underaged person was not accompanied by a parent. The complete statement would be as set forth in the quotation above.

In State v. Wille, 2007 WI App 27, ___ Wis.2d ___, ___ N.W.2d ___ [No. 2005AP2839-CR, publication recommended], the court rejected the defendant's contention that § 125.075(1) applies "only when a defendant has had direct contact with a particular victim or otherwise knows of the specific victim for whom alcohol beverages are procured." ¶9. The court concluded that "a violation of § 125.075(1) is proven when a defendant is shown to have 'procure[d] alcohol beverages for . . . [one or more persons who are] under 18 years of age,' if the defendant 'knew or should have known that the underage person[s were] under the legal drinking age' and an 'underage person [who was under eighteen when provided the beverages] dies . . . as a result.'" ¶15.

5. Section 125.02(8m) provides that "'legal drinking age' means 21 years of age."

6. With respect to the "knew or should have known" requirement, § 125.075(1m) provides as follows:

> (1m) In determining under sub. (l)(a) whether a person knew or should have known that the underage person was under the legal drinking age, all relevant circumstances surrounding the procuring, selling, dispensing or giving away of the alcohol beverages may be considered, including any circumstance under pars. (a) to (d). In addition, a person has a defense to criminal liability under sub. (1) if all of the following occur:
> (a) The underage person falsely represents that he or she has attained the legal drinking age.
> (b) The underage person supports the representation under par. (a) with documentation that he or she has attained the legal drinking age.
> (c) The alcohol beverages are provided in good faith reliance on the underage person's representation that he or she has attained the legal drinking age.
> (d) The appearance of the underage person is such that an ordinary and prudent person would believe that he or she had attained the legal drinking age.

The instruction suggests a statement that calls the jury's attention to the general caveat of subsection (1m) and to the specific concern to which subsections (a) through (d) relateCrepresentations as to age made by the underage person. Because the definition of the crime includes a "knew or should have known" element, any evidence tending to show the absence of that element must be considered by the jury. In addition, a more specific defense is provided by subsections (a) through (d). If the defendant presents evidence of each of the matters set forth in subsection (a) through (d), the Committee recommends that the jury be instructed that the state must prove that the defense does not apply. This can be done by proving that any one of the four matters is not present. See City of Oshkosh v. Abitz, 187 Wis.2d 202, 522 N.W.2d 258 (Ct. App. 1994), holding that a similar provision found in § 125.07 provided "two lines of defense": introducing any evidence believed relevant to challenging the element of the offense; and, providing evidence of all four aspects of the specific defense.

7. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

The Committee has treated this offense as one involving the traditional "substantial factor" causal relationship employed for criminal offenses. However, it should be noted that § 125.075 does not directly refer to the defendant's conduct causing the harm. Rather, the statute refers to the harm occurring "as a result of consuming the alcohol beverages provided" in violation of the statute § 125.075(1)(b). Since it is not clear whether this approach was intended to indicate a different causal requirement, the Committee concluded that the regular "substantial factor" test should be used.

This conclusion is supported by State v. Bartlett, 149 Wis.2d 557, 439 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court construed "results in" as used in § 346.17(3). The court held that the statute was not unconstitutionally vague because "results in" means "cause" and therefore defines the offense with reasonable certainty. The court further held that the evidence was sufficient to support the conviction because it showed that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in causing the death. The court noted that more than but-for cause is required: "The state must further establish that 'the harmful result in question be the natural and probable consequence of the accused's conduct,' i.e., a substantial factor." 149 Wis.2d 557, 566, citing State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984).

In State v. Wille, 2007 WI App 27, ___Wis.2d ___, ___ N.W.2d ___ [No. 2005AP2839-CR, publication recommended], the court concluded that the instruction was correct in adopting the "substantial factor" standard for the cause element. ¶26. The court also concluded that the trial court did not err in denying a request to add that the death must have been a "natural and probable consequence" of the defendant's conduct. "[I]t is not an erroneous exercise of discretion for a trial court to decline to provide jurors with alternative language that communicates the same concept as other language already included in the instruction." ¶27.

5200 STORING, TREATING, TRANSPORTING, OR DISPOSING OF HAZARDOUS WASTE WITHOUT A LICENSE — § 291.97(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 291.97(2)(b) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who willfully stores, treats, transports, or disposes of any hazardous waste without a license required under section 291.23 or 291.25.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (stored) (treated) (transported) (disposed of) hazardous waste.

   (Name of substance) is a hazardous waste.[2]

   ["Stored" means the containment of hazardous waste for a temporary period in a manner that does not constitute disposal.][3]

   ["Treated" means using any method, technique or process, including neutralization, which follows generation and which is designed to change the physical, chemical or biological character or composition of any hazardous waste so as to neutralize the hazardous waste or so as to render the waste nonhazardous, safer for transport, amenable for recovery, amenable for storage or reduced in volume. It includes incineration.][4]

["Transported" means moving hazardous wastes by air, rail, highway, water or other means (except for the movement of hazardous waste within the site at which the hazardous waste is generated or within a facility that is licensed)].[5]

["Disposed of" means the discharging, depositing, injecting, dumping, spilling, leaking or placing of any hazardous waste into or on any land or water in a manner which may permit the hazardous waste or any hazardous constituent to be emitted into the air, to be discharged into any waters of the state or otherwise to enter the environment. It does not include the generation, transportation, storage or treatment of hazardous waste.][6]

2. The defendant did not have a license[7] for the (storage) (treatment) (transportation) (disposal) of hazardous waste as required by section (291.23) (291.25).

[Storage of hazardous waste at the generation site by the generator of that waste for a period less than 90 days does not require a license.][8]

[Storage of hazardous waste for a period of less than 10 days in connection with the transporting or movement of the hazardous waste does not require a license.][9]

3. The defendant (stored) (treated) (transported) (disposed of) hazardous waste willfully.

"Willfully" requires that the defendant intentionally (stored) (treated) (transported) (disposed of) hazardous waste[10] and knew that the material had the potential to be harmful to others or to the environment.[11]

[USE ANY OF THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.]

["Willfully" does not require that the defendant (knew that a license was required to carry on those activities)[12] (or) (knew that (he) (she) was violating any particular law) (or) (knew that the material was defined by law to be a hazardous waste)].[13]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5200 was originally published in 1993. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 291.97(2)(b), which are Class H felonies and subject to a fine of not more than $100,000. For a second or subsequent violation, the penalty increases to that for a Class F felony and a fine of not more than $150,000. § 291.97(2)(c)2.

The maximum penalties double "[i]f a person commits a violation in connection with an enterprise, as defined under s. 948.82(2)." § 291.97(2)(e). The reference is to the definition of "enterprise" in the Wisconsin Organized Crime Control Act (the Wisconsin version of the federal "RICO" statute). Note that the § 946.82(2) definition does not require that there be any illegal purpose for the enterprise.

Each day of a continuing violation constitutes a separate offense. § 291.97(2)(d).

1. This instruction is drafted for one type of violation under § 291.97(b)2. That subsection applies not only to committing a prohibited act "without a license," but also to doing so "in violation of a rule promulgated or special order, plan approval or term or condition of a license or variance issued under s. 291.23, 291.25, 291.29, 291.31 or 291.87."

2. Section 291.01(7) provides that "'hazardous waste' or 'waste' means any solid waste identified by the department as hazardous under s. 291.05(1), (2), or (4)." Section 291.05(2) requires the Department of Natural Resources to promulgate by rule a list of hazardous wastes. The administrative rules relating to hazardous wastes are contained in Wis. Adm. Code sec. NR 661. Section 661.03 provides an extensive and highly detailed definition of "hazardous waste." To summarize, something is a "hazardous waste" if it is so labelled by the rules promulgated by the Department of Natural Resources. Further, whether a substance is a "hazardous waste" is a legal conclusion which the court may pass along to the jury. Whether the substance in the case actually was the substance defined by law as a "hazardous waste" is the factual issue that the jury must determine.

3. This is based on the definition of "storage" provided in § 291.01(18).

4. This is based on the definition of "treatment" provided in § 291.01(21).

5. This is based on the definition of "transport" provided in § 291.01(20).

6. This is based on the definition of "disposal" provided in § 291.01(3).

7. As described in note 1, supra, the instruction is drafted for the "without a license" violations covered by § 291.97(2)(b)2. Section 291.27(2)(b)2. refers to acts performed "without a license required under s. 291.23 or 291.25." Section 291.23 addresses licensing for the transportation of hazardous waste; § 291.25 addresses licensing for the treatment, storage or disposal of hazardous waste.

8. Section 291.25(1).

9. Section 291.25(1).

10. The mental element required for violations of § 291.97 [then § 144.72(2)(b)] was considered by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. Fettig, 172 Wis.2d 428, 493 N.W.2d 254 (Ct. App. 1992). The court concluded that the statute

> . . . does not require proof that one who wilfully stores or disposes of hazardous wastes also must know that a license is required to carry on those activities. We hold that the word 'wilfully' reaches only to '[s]tores, treats, transports or disposes of;' consequently, the state need prove only that any of those activities was done wilfully and that the person so acted without a license.

172 Wis.2d 428, 433.

11. This statement is based on the instruction used by the trial court in the Fettig case. See 172 Wis.2d 428, 435.

12. See State v. Fettig, note 10, supra.

13. The last two statements in brackets are based on the instruction used by the trial court in the Fettig case. See 172 Wis.2d 428, 435.

5301 ELECTION FRAUD — UNQUALIFIED ELECTOR — §§ 12.13(1)(a) and 12.60(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 12.13(1)(a) is violated by a person who intentionally votes at any election if the person does not have the necessary elector qualifications and residence requirements.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant voted at an election.
2. The defendant did not have the necessary (elector qualifications) (residency requirements).

   In this case, it is alleged that the defendant did not (identify the qualification or requirement that the defendant allegedly lacked) .[1]
3. The defendant acted intentionally.[2]

   This requires that the defendant knew (he) (she) did not have the necessary (elector qualifications) (residency requirements).

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 5301 was approved by the Committee in October 2008.

Election fraud offenses are defined in § 12.13. Penalties are set forth in § 12.60. Violations of § 12.13(1) are Class I felonies.

1. The following statutes provide general qualifications and requirements for electors: § 6.02 Qualifications, general; § 6.02 Disqualification of electors; and, § 6.10 Elector residence.

2. Sec. 12.02 Construction, provides: "In this chapter, criminal intent shall be construed in accordance with s. 939.23." As applied to this offense, the s. 939.23(3) definition of "intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to vote and knew that he or she lacked the necessary elector qualifications or residence requirements.

6000 NOTE ON THE KNOWLEDGE REQUIREMENT IN CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE CASES

The statutes defining controlled substance offenses typically do not contain a mental element. For example, § 961.41(1) provides simply that "it is unlawful for any person to manufacture, distribute or deliver a controlled substance . . ." In interpreting these statutes, courts have held that it must be proved that persons charged "knew or believed" that the substance they delivered, manufactured, or possessed was a controlled substance. This note discusses some of the issues that arise in trying to apply this knowledge requirement.

The Source of the Knowledge Requirement

The source of the knowledge requirement in Wisconsin is State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973). The court held that under § 161.30(12)(d) (1969 Wis. Stats.) [now § 961.30(12)(d)], "the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. The 1969 statute under which Christel was charged contained no specific knowledge requirement, but the court cited two authorities in a footnote to the phrase quoted above: Wis JI-Criminal 6030 (and cases cited therein); and a federal case, Wright v. Edwards, 470 F.2d 980 (5th Cir. 1972).

Wis JI-Criminal 6030, as it existed in 1973, required that the defendant "knew or believed that the substance he possessed was (name controlled substance)." The cited authorities for this conclusion were other instructions where "possession" was an element: Wis JI-Criminal 1481 Receiving Stolen Property; and Wis JI-Criminal 1417 Possession Of A Firebomb. Note 2 to Wis JI-Criminal 1417 is especially relevant: "[The offense] . . . appears to be strict liability, but 'possession' carries with it a connotation of 'knowing or conscious possession.'"

In Wright v. Edwards, cited above, the issue was whether a state statute simply prohibiting the "possession of marijuana" included an element of criminal intent or guilty knowledge. The court held that while intent in the traditional common law sense of a guilty mind is not a constitutional requisite under a statute of this type, due process demands that the State show a specific intent to possess the prohibited substance, that is, that the act was purposely, not accidentally done.

Wisconsin cases since Christel have reaffirmed the knowledge requirement without discussing it in detail. See, for example, Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978); Kabat v. State, 76 Wis.2d 224, 251 N.W.2d 38 (1977); State v. Smallwood, 97

Wis.2d 673, 294 N.W.2d 51 (Ct. App. 1980); and, State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 493, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

The Wisconsin Supreme Court revisited the issue in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis.2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 499 (1996). Sartin was a passenger in a car in which bags of cocaine and cocaine base were found. He admitted accepting money to transport the bags and knowing that what they contained was "probably illegal," but denied knowing they contained cocaine. He claimed that the trial court erred in not instructing the jury that the state must prove he knew the bags contained cocaine. The Wisconsin Supreme Court summarized the history of the knowledge requirement as described above and reaffirmed the rule expressed in the cited cases:

> . . . [t]he only knowledge that the State must prove . . . is the defendant's knowledge or belief that the substance was a controlled or prohibited substance. The State is not required to prove the defendant knew the exact nature or precise chemical name of the substance. . . The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. People v. James, 348 N.E.2d 295, 298 (Ill. App. 1976). We find that it would be unreasonable to assume that the legislature intended that the State prove that the accused knew the exact nature or chemical name of the controlled substance. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

The court in Sartin also addressed some of the potential problems that have been outlined in this note. See the discussion below.

Two Aspects To The Knowledge Requirement

The cases from Christel through Sartin suggest some of the potential problems that arise in trying to apply the knowledge requirement. The requirement appears to have two different aspects: 1) knowing, conscious possession as opposed to accidental, unknowing possession; and, 2) knowing the nature of the substance knowingly possessed or delivered. [This analysis, contained in an earlier version of this Note, was cited with apparent approval in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis.2d 47, 54 (at note 3), 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).]

1) Knowing, conscious, possession or delivery

This aspect of the problem appears to be straightforward and is most clearly raised in possession cases. It may arise where the amount of substance possessed is so small that there may be doubt whether the defendant knew it was in his possession at all. The Kabat case, cited above, is an illustration of this problem. Kabat's conviction for possession of marijuana rested on the presence of marijuana ash and residue in a pipe. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed the conviction on the ground that the presence of such a small amount of material was not a sufficient basis upon which to base a finding that the defendant was in "knowing possession."

[Note: Kabat does not require that there be a "usable amount" as a basis for a possession conviction. Possession of any amount is sufficient to support a conviction as long as that possession is "knowing." See Fletcher v. State, 68 Wis.2d 381, 228 N.W.2d 708 (1975), and State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965). Also see, Peasley v. State, 83 Wis.2d 224, 265 N.W.2d 506 (1978): possession of 1/3 gram of cocaine was sufficient, in light of all the evidence, to support a finding of possession with intent to deliver.]

Other examples which illustrate this aspect of the problem are the person with flakes of marijuana in a pants cuff; the person who has been set up by the concealment of narcotics in his or her clothing; or the person who has received an unsolicited and unexpected package or marijuana in the mail. It is the same issue addressed by the previously cited footnote to Wis JI-Criminal 1417: the use of the word "possession" carries with it a connotation of "knowing or conscious possession." [See Wis JI-Criminal 920 for discussion of cases reaffirming this interpretation.]

The same type of reasoning applies in delivery cases with even greater force – implicit in the word "delivery" is knowledge of the material being transferred. In the judgment of the Committee, "delivery" is used in the sense of "intentional transfer of knowing possession."

2) Knowledge of the nature of the substance (knowingly) possessed

The second aspect of the knowledge problem is more troublesome. When the defendant John Smith knows he has a substance in his pocket, what must he know about the identity of that substance? State v. Sartin, cited above, confirmed the basic rule of the Christel-Kabat-Lunde-Smallwood line of cases that defendants need not know the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they know the substance is a "controlled substance."

Unlike most definitions of terms used in the criminal law, the definition of "controlled substance" does not use general or descriptive terms. "Controlled substance" is defined in § 961.01(4) as ". . . a drug, substance or immediate precursor included in schedules I to V of subch. II." The definition simply says that a "controlled substance" is any substance listed in the statutory schedules. Literal application of the knowledge requirement to the statutory definition would seem to require knowledge that the substance was listed in the schedules, yet few people are likely to be familiar with the complicated chemical names that appear in those schedules. And the cases (see, for example, Lunde and Smallwood, cited above) hold that knowledge of the chemical name is not required.

In many cases, there will be no dispute about the defendant's knowledge of the nature of the substance, as in cases involving sales to an undercover officer where the defendant has offered to sell a particular substance to the officer. In other cases, the State may undertake to prove the defendant knew the precise nature of the substance. In such situations, the uniform instructions provide for using the name of the substance in the instructions.

In other cases, the facts may be unclear whether the defendant knew the nature of the substance possessed or delivered. One possible case is where the defendant believes he or she possesses one substance (for example, heroin) but actually possesses another (for example, morphine). In that case, the defendant may be found guilty since both substances are controlled.

If the defendant is honestly mistaken about the controlled or illegal nature of the substance, a different result may follow. For example, where the defendant honestly believes the substance to be caffeine, not a controlled substance, and it is actually heroin, the mistake can be a defense because it negatives the state of mind required for the crime – knowledge or belief that the person possessed a controlled substance.

Knowing a Substance by a "Street Name"

Another common situation is one where the defendant knows the substance by a slang or street name and does not know its proper or chemical name. The uniform instructions provide that knowledge of the street name is sufficient if there is proof that the substance was in fact a controlled substance, that the name known to the defendant was the street name for that substance, and that the defendant did know the substance by the street name.

Mistake about the Schedule in Which a Substance Is Listed

State v. Sartin, cited above, resolved a potential problem presented by the case where the defendant believes the substance is a controlled substance, but believes it is, for example, a substance listed in Schedule IV, but it is in fact listed in Schedule I. The schedule determines the penalty and there can be a substantial difference in the penalty between offenses involving Schedule I and Schedule IV substances. A decision of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals had suggested that where the difference in schedules results in different penalties, knowledge of the identity of the substance is required:

> Knowledge as to the exact nature or chemical name of the controlled substance is necessary only when the evidence points to substances of different schedules and penalties. State v, Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 678.

Sartin held that the quoted provision was dicta ("unnecessary to the resolution of the issue before [the court] and therefore is not binding in subsequent cases as legal precedent):

> We expressly overrule any language in Smallwood which suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

Proof of the Knowledge Element

Establishing the mental element in a controlled substance case, like proving intent in any criminal prosecution, can be difficult to accomplish without using circumstantial evidence. In cases where the mental element is disputed, all the circumstances surrounding the incident will be relevant. Section 961.41(1m) offers guidance as to the types of facts that may be present:

> Intent under this subsection [intent to manufacture, distribute or deliver] may be demonstrated by, without limitation because of enumeration, evidence of the quantity and monetary value of the substances possessed, the possession of manufacturing implements or paraphernalia, and the activities or statements of the person in possession of the controlled substance or a controlled substance analog prior to and after the alleged violation.

Facts of this type may be relevant in any case where the mental element is contested.

In State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 493, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990), the defendant was charged with possession of cocaine based on residue in the threads of the cap to a small glass vial. She maintained that she knew the vial had once contained cocaine, but thought it was empty at the time of the arrest. The court reaffirmed that the state must prove that the defendant knew she possessed a controlled substance and found that there was a reasonable basis in the evidence for such a finding by the jury:

> The jury could reasonably infer that the defendant looked at the vial when replacing its cap, saw the white powder residue on the threads holding the cap, and therefore, knew that there was cocaine residue on the vial at the time of her arrest. Alternatively, the jury could conclude that unless one takes extraordinary measures to remove the contents of a bottle after all usable amounts are gone, some of the contents will remain behind . . . [T]he jury could reasonably infer that the defendant knew that the vial contained residual amounts of cocaine at the time of her arrest. 153 Wis.2d 493, 509.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6000 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1996. This revision, which involved adopting a new format, was approved by the Committee in October 2009.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996.

6001 FINDING THE AMOUNT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE

ADD THE FOLLOWING TO INSTRUCTIONS FOR CASES INVOLVING THE MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION, OR DELIVERY OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE OR THE POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE WITH INTENT TO MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTE, OR DELIVER, WHERE THE EVIDENCE IS SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE AMOUNT POSSESSED EXCEEDED THE REQUIRED AMOUNT[1]:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s)[2] "yes" or "no":

Was the amount of (name controlled substance), including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it,[3] more than (state amount which determines the penalty)?

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount was more than (state amount).

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

IF THERE IS A REASONABLE BASIS IN THE EVIDENCE FOR FINDING THAT A LARGER AMOUNT WAS NOT ESTABLISHED AND THAT A SMALLER AMOUNT WAS, ADD THE FOLLOWING AND REPEAT IF NECESSARY.

If you answer the first question "no," you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was the amount of (name controlled substance), including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, more than (state amount which determines the penalty)?[4]

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount was more than (state amount).

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6001 was originally published in October 1986 and revised in 1989, 1991, 1992, 1996, 2010, and 2018. The 2010 revision adopted a new format and updated the Comment. The 2018 revision added a model for submitting more than one question regarding the amount involved. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2022; it added to the comment.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

This instruction provides for a jury finding of the amount of controlled substance involved in offenses under Chapter 961. It is modeled after the instruction for finding value in theft cases. See Wis-JI Criminal 1441A. See Wis JI-Criminal 6001A EXAMPLE for an adaptation of this instruction for methamphetamine cases.

The penalty-depending-upon-weight provision originally applied to cocaine offenses only but was expanded to cover other substances in 1989. (See 1987 Wisconsin Act 339.) The amounts vary depending on the kind of controlled substance. Because many variables are involved, the Committee decided to revise this instruction to provide a general framework into which the proper amounts must be inserted.

The following statutes provided for penalties based on the amount of controlled substance involved: § 961.41(1), subsections (cm) through (im), for manufacture, distribution, or delivery offenses; and § 961.41(1m), subsections (cm) through (im), for offenses involving possession with intent to manufacture, distribute, or deliver. Under each statute, the subsections deal with the same substances: (cm) cocaine and cocaine base; (d) heroin; (dm) fentanyl, a fentanyl analog; (e) phencyclidine, amphetamine, methamphetamine, et al.; (em) synthetic cannabinoids; (f) lysergic acid diethylamide; (g) psilocin or psilocybin; (h) tetrahydrocannabinols; (hm) certain other Schedule 1 controlled substances and ketamine; and, (im) flunitrazepam.

Sections 961.41(1)(h) and (1m)(h) include penalty grades based on the number of plants containing tetrahydrocannabinols possessed. In such cases, the reference in the question would have to be changed to refer to the number of plants rather than the "amount of" substance.

The Committee suggests the following as an addition to the guilty verdict form:

(Answer the following "yes" or "no"):

Was the amount of (name controlled substance), including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, more than (state amount which determines the penalty)?

1. The Committee concluded that it was preferable to state the question in terms of whether the required amount is present rather than to ask the jury to agree on a specific amount. Requiring agreement might cause a delay in reaching a verdict that is not related to any essential issue.

The Committee also concluded that it is not necessary to include the upper threshold – e.g., "but not more than 10 grams" – to avoid unnecessary jury debate about whether or not the upper threshold was exceeded.

2. It may be appropriate to submit more than one question if there is a reasonable basis for finding that a larger amount was not established and that a smaller amount was established (as in a lesser included offense situation).

3. With regard to determining the amount of the controlled substance, § 961.41(1r) provides as follows:

> 961.41(1r) In determining amounts under . . . subs. (1) and (1m), an amount includes the weight of the [controlled substance or controlled substance analog] . . . together with any compound, mixture, diluent, plant material, or other substance mixed or combined with the controlled substance or controlled substance analog.

In Chapman v. United States, 500 U.S. 453 (1991), the United States Supreme Court reviewed federal sentencing provisions that are similar to § 961.41(1r) in including the weight of material mixed or combined with the controlled substance. The Court held that the sentencing provisions were constitutional in the context of a case where the weight of the blotter paper containing LSD, not the weight of the pure LSD alone, was used to determine the amount for sentencing purposes.

"Stems or branches supporting the marijuana leaves or buds . . . are not excluded as 'mature stalks'" under the definition of "controlled substance" in § 961.01(14). State v. Martinez, 210 Wis.2d 396, 412 13, 563 N.W.2d 922 (Ct. App. 1997).

4. If the case involves possession with intent to manufacture or deliver, the Committee recommends restating this sentence as follows: "Was the amount of (name controlled substance), including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, possessed with intent to (manufacture) (deliver) more than _____?" The purpose is to avoid any argument that the necessary amount was simply possessed as opposed to being possessed with intent to deliver. Simple possession is not subject to the added penalties addressed by this instruction.

6001A EXAMPLE FINDING THE AMOUNT OF CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE IN A METHAMPHETAMINE CASE

ADD THE FOLLOWING TO INSTRUCTIONS FOR CASES INVOLVING THE MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTION, OR DELIVERY OF METHAMPHETAMINE OR THE POSSESSION OF METHAMPHETAMINE WITH INTENT TO MANUFACTURE, DISTRIBUTE, OR DELIVER,[1] WHERE THE EVIDENCE IS SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE AMOUNT POSSESSED EXCEEDED THE REQUIRED AMOUNT:

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was the amount of methamphetamine, including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, more than 50 grams?

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount was more than 50 grams.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

IF THERE IS A REASONABLE BASIS IN THE EVIDENCE FOR FINDING THAT THE LARGER AMOUNT WAS NOT ESTABLISHED AND THAT A SMALLER AMOUNT WAS, ADD THE FOLLOWING.

If you answer the first question "no," you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was the amount of methamphetamine, including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, more than 10 grams?

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount was more than 10 grams.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

IF THERE IS A REASONABLE BASIS IN THE EVIDENCE FOR FINDING THAT THE LARGER AMOUNT WAS NOT ESTABLISHED AND THAT A SMALLER AMOUNT WAS, ADD THE FOLLOWING.

If you answer the second question "no," you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Was the amount of methamphetamine, including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, more than 3 grams?

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount was more than 3 grams.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6001A was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it provides an example for how Wis JI-Criminal 6001 would be adapted for a methamphetamine case.

Penalties for manufacture, distribution, or delivery of methamphetamine are found in § 161.41(1)(e):

- three grams or less – Class F felony
- more than 3 grams but not more than 10 – Class E felony
- more than 10 grams but not more than 50 – Class D felony
- more than 50 grams – Class C felony

The questions in this instruction begin with the highest amount and then work down, in a lesser included offense type of approach. The Committee concluded that a question about the amount is not required for the "3 grams or less" case – the offense instruction will have required that some amount of methamphetamine was involved. The Committee also concluded that it is not necessary to include the upper threshold – e.g., "but not more than 10 grams" – to avoid unnecessary jury debate about whether or not the upper threshold was exceeded.

For commentary and footnotes relating to finding the amount in controlled substance cases, see Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

1. If the case involves possession with intent to manufacture or deliver, the Committee recommends restating this sentence as follows: "Was the amount of (name controlled substance), including the weight of any other substance or material mixed or combined with it, possessed with intent to (manufacture) (deliver) more than _____?" The purpose is to avoid any argument that the necessary amount was simply possessed as opposed to being possessed with intent to deliver or manufacture. Simple possession is not subject to the added penalties addressed by this instruction.

6002 DELIVERING A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE TO A MINOR — § 961.46

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE OFFENSE CHARGED.

The information alleges not only that the defendant delivered[1] (name controlled substance) [2] but also that the defendant was 17 years of age or over and delivered[3] (name controlled substance) to a person who was 17 years of age or under and who was three years younger than the defendant.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following three questions:[4]

"Was the defendant 17 years of age or over at the time of the delivery?"

"Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) to a person who was 17 years of age or under?"

"Was that person at least three years[5] younger than the defendant?"

Before you may answer a question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied as to any question, you must answer that question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6002 was originally published in 1991 and revised in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003 and involved adding reference to 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 to the comment.

Section 961.46 was revised by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective date: February 1, 2003. The penalty-increasing provision was simplified to provide for an increase in the applicable maximum term of imprisonment of not more than 5 years.

1. Section 961.46 provides increased penalties for "violations of § 961.41(1)" which involve delivering or distributing a controlled substance to a child. Section 961.41(1) prohibits delivering, distributing or manufacturing a controlled substance. The instruction is drafted for cases involving delivery. "Distributing" means "delivery", see note 3, below. "Manufacturing" alone is not enough; the penalty increase applies only where there is delivery or distribution.

2. The Committee suggests naming the controlled substance throughout the instruction. The jury will only be considering this special question if they have found the defendant guilty of an offense involving the named substance. It is the nature of the substance that determines the applicable penalty, and it is that penalty which is increased by the facts addressed by this instruction. Section 961.46 also applies to delivery of a "controlled substance analog." For cases involving "analogs," see Wis JI-Criminal 6005.

3. Section 961.46 refers to "distributing or delivering" a controlled substance to a child. The instruction uses "deliver" instead because the Committee concluded that most cases were likely to involve a delivery. Further, § 961.01(9) defines "distribute" as follows: "to deliver other than by administering or dispensing a controlled substance." "Administer" and "dispense" are defined in §§ 961.01(1) and (7), respectively, to refer to activities of "practitioners," further defined in § 961.01(19) as doctors, pharmacists, etc. Thus, "distribute" means "deliver."

4. The Committee recommends that facts which increase the range of penalties be submitted to the jury in the form of three questions. The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of _____, under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the information.
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following questions "yes" or "no":
> "Was the defendant 17 years of age or over at the time of the delivery?"
> "Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) to a person who was 17 years of age or under?"
> "Was that person at least three years younger than the defendant?"

5. The Committee concluded that "three years" refers to a period of 36 months.

6003 DELIVERING A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE TO A PRISONER — § 961.465

CAUTION: THIS INSTRUCTION IS TO BE USED ONLY FOR OFFENSES COMMITTED BEFORE FEBRUARY 1, 2003.

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE OFFENSE CHARGED.

The information alleges not only that the defendant delivered[1] (name controlled substance) [2] but also that the defendant delivered[3] (name controlled substance) to a prisoner.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:[4]

"Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) to a prisoner [within the precincts of a (prison) (jail) (house of correction)]?"[5]

ADD THE FOLLOWING ONLY IF "PRECINCTS" ARE INVOLVED:

["Precinct" means a place where any activity is conducted by a (prison) (jail) (house of correction).][6]

Before you may answer this question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant delivered (name controlled substance) to a prisoner[7] [within the precincts of a (prison) (jail) (house of correction)].

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6003 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003.

Section 961.465 was repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective February 1, 2003. Wis JI-Criminal 6003 is to be used only for charges based on conduct occurring before that date. The facts formerly addressed by § 961.465 have been recast as an aggravating factor to be considered in imposing a sentence. See § 973.017(8).

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

Section 961.465 provides for increased penalties for a "person who violates § 961.41(1) or (1m) by delivering or possessing with intent to deliver or distribute a controlled substance or controlled substance analog to a prisoner within the precincts of any prison, jail, or house of correction." § 961.465(1). Subsection (2) of § 961.465 doubles the "applicable minimum and maximum fines and minimum and maximum periods of imprisonment" for violations of § 961.41(1) or (1m) involving "cocaine, cocaine base, heroin, phencyclidine, lysergic acid diethylamide, psilocin, psilocybin, amphetamine, methamphetamine, methalinone, or any form of tetrahydrocannabinols." Subsection (1) applies the regular fine and doubles the possible maximum term of imprisonment for offenses involving any other controlled substance or analog not specified in subsection (2).

Both subsections apply to violations of § 961.41(1) and (1m). Section 961.41(1) applies to the manufacture, distribution, or delivery of a controlled substance. See Wis JI-Criminal 6020 and 6021. Section 961.41(1m) applies to possession of a controlled substance with intent to manufacture, distribute, or deliver. See Wis JI-Criminal 6035 and 6036. Both subsections of § 961.465 also apply to violations accomplished by delivering or distributing a controlled substance to a prisoner or by possessing a controlled substance with intent to deliver or distribute to a prisoner.

1. The underlying offense can be a violation of either § 961.41(1) – manufacture, distribution, or delivery of a controlled substance – or § 961.41(1m) – possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver, distribute, or manufacture. This instruction uses "delivery"; it would need to be changed if one of the other alternatives was the basis for the underlying charge.

2. The Committee suggests naming the controlled substance throughout the instruction. The jury will only be considering this special question if they have found the defendant guilty of an offense involving the named substance. It is the nature of the substance that determines the applicable penalty and it is that penalty which is increased by the facts addressed by this instruction.

3. This instruction is drafted for a case where there was an actual delivery of a controlled substance to a prisoner. The statute also applies, however, to possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver or distribute to a prisoner. See the comment preceding note 1, supra.

4. The Committee recommends that facts which increase the range of penalties be submitted to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of _____ , under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the (information) (complaint).

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) to a prisoner [within the precincts of a (prison) (jail) (house of correction)]?"

5. The Committee suggests including the reference to "precincts" only where the case involves an alleged delivery outside the prison or jail proper.

6. This is the definition of "precincts" provided by § 961.465(3). Also see State v. Cummings, 153 Wis.2d 603, 451 N.W.2d 463 (Ct. App. 1989), where the court invoked the precinct rationale in the case of a prisoner who was receiving medical treatment in a hospital outside the prison.

7. If a definition of "prisoner" is needed, the Committee suggests the following which is adapted from the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1222: "A prisoner is one who is confined to a (prison) (jail) (house of correction) as a result of a violation of law." It is based on the discussion in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957), cited with approval in In Interest of C.D.M., 125 Wis.2d 170, 370 N.W.2d 287 (Ct. App. 1985). Also see note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1222. The term "prisoner" is also defined in § 46.011(2) for purposes of chapters 46 to 51, 55, and 58, and in § 301.01(2) for purposes of chapters 301 to 304.

6004 DELIVERING A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ON OR NEAR CERTAIN PREMISES — § 961.49

[THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER THE INSTRUCTION ON THE OFFENSE CHARGED.]

The information alleges not only that the defendant delivered[1] (name controlled substance) [2] but also that the defendant delivered[3] (name controlled substance) while (on) (within 1,000 feet of) school premises.[4]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:[5]

"Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) while (on) (within 1,000 feet of) school premises?"

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant delivered (name controlled substance) while (on) (within 1,000 feet of) school premises.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6004 was originally published in December 1990 and revised in 1995, 1996, and 1999. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2002. It updated the Comment and made editorial changes in the text.

Section 961.49 was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, but its basic penalty-enhancing provision was retained.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

This instruction is for cases involving § 961.49, which provides for an increase of up to five years in the term of imprisonment for certain controlled substance offenses. It applies to violations of § 961.41(1) and (1m) committed "on or otherwise within 1,000 feet" of certain premises. Schools are the premises most commonly involved, but see note 4, below. Because the statute provides an enhanced penalty upon the finding of an additional fact, the Committee concluded that the additional fact is to be submitted to the jury. This is the same approach used for other penalty enhancers, see Wis JI-Criminal 990, Using a Dangerous Weapon, and Wis JI-Criminal 994, Concealing Identity.

Subsections (2) and (3) of § 961.49, which provided for sentences for "presumptive minimum" sentences were repealed by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

Section 961.495 applies to simple possession offenses committed within 1,000 feet of the same types of premises covered by § 961.49. It requires the sentencing court to impose 100 hours of community service work in addition to any other penalties imposed. This does not affect the penalty range and therefore does not present a factual issue for the jury.

In State v. Hermann, 164 Wis.2d 269, 474 N.W.2d 906 (Ct. App. 1991), the court refused to interpret the statute to include a mental element. That is, there is no requirement, express or implied, that the defendant know that the delivery is taking place within 1,000 feet of a school. The Hermann court also rejected a variety of constitutionally-based challenges to the statute.

The application of § 161.49 was discussed in State v. Rasmussen, 195 Wis.2d 109, 536 N.W.2d 106 (Ct. App. 1995). Rasmussen's vehicle was stopped for a traffic violation beyond the 1,000 foot zone, and a search disclosed 59 grams of cocaine in the defendant's purse. The trial court dismissed the enhancement provision, finding that the defendant was simply traveling between a tavern and her house when she passed within 1,000 feet of a school. The court of appeals reversed, holding that the evidence was sufficient to show that the defendant possessed cocaine with the intent to deliver and did so within the 1,000 foot zone; that is all that is required to support the application of § 161.49 (now §§ 961.49).

1. The underlying offense can be a violation of either § 961.41(1) – manufacture or delivery of a controlled substance – or § 961.41(1m) – possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver or manufacture. This instruction uses "delivery"; it would need to be changed if one of the other alternatives was the basis for the underlying charge.

2. The Committee suggests naming the controlled substance throughout the instruction. The jury will only be considering this special question if they have found the defendant guilty of an offense involving the named substance. It is the nature of the substance that determines the applicable penalty, and it is that penalty which is increased by the facts addressed by this instruction.

3. This instruction is drafted for a case where there was an actual delivery of a controlled substance within 1,000 feet of the designated premises. The statute also applies, however, to possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver. See the comment preceding note 1, supra.

4. The instruction is drafted for a case involving delivery "on or within 1,000 feet of school premises." This type of place is one of several covered by § 961.49. The list of premises in § 961.49(1) was amended by 1997 Wisconsin Act 327 [effective date: July 15, 1998] to read as follows:

(a) While the person is in or on the premises of a scattered-site public housing project.
(b) While the person is in or on or otherwise within 1,000 feet of a any of the following:

1. A state, county, city, village or town park.

2. A jail or correctional facility.
3. A multiunit public housing project.
4. A swimming pool open to members of the public.
5. A youth center or a community center.
6. Any private or public school premises.
7. A school bus, as defined in s. 340.01(56).

(c) While the person is in or on the premises of an approved treatment facility, as defined in s. 51.01(2), that provides alcohol and other drug abuse treatment.
(d) While the person is within 1,000 feet of the premises of an approved treatment facility, as defined in s. 51.01(2), that provides alcohol and other drug abuse treatment, if the person knows or should have known that he or she is within 1,000 feet of the premises of the facility or if the facility is readily recognizable as a facility that provides alcohol and other drug abuse treatment.

"School" is not specially defined for purposes of § 961.49. In State v. Andrews, 171 Wis.2d 217, 491 N.W.2d 504 (Ct. App. 1992), the court referred to § 115.01 for a definition of "public school" and to § 118.165(1) for a definition of "private school." The court held that "a University of Wisconsin campus, such as at Oshkosh, does not fit either definition." 171 Wis.2d 217, 223. The court noted that 21 U.S.C. § 860 apparently served as a model for § 961.49. While the federal statute explicitly refers to colleges and universities, the Wisconsin counterpart does not. The court "presume[d] the difference in language reflects a deliberate choice. . . ." 171 Wis.2d 217, 224.

In State v. Hall, 196 Wis.2d 850, 540 N.W.2d 219 (Ct. App. 1995), the court held that the use of the word "premises" in § 961.49 does not make the statute unconstitutionally vague. The court concluded "that the statute provides fair warning that the region contemplated by the statute begins at the property line." 196 Wis.2d 850, 872-73.

A "daycare center" is a type of "youth center" to which § 961.49 applies. State v. Van Riper, 222 Wis.2d 197, 198, 586 N.W.2d 198 (Ct. App. 1998).

5. The Committee recommends that facts which increase the range of penalties be submitted to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of _____, under Wis. Stat. § _____, at the time and place charged in the (information) (complaint).

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant deliver (name controlled substance) while (on) (within 1,000 feet of) school premises?"

6005 CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ANALOG — § 961.01(4m)

[INSERT THE FOLLOWING IN INSTRUCTIONS FOR VIOLATIONS OF CHAPTER 961 INVOLVING "CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ANALOGS."]

"Controlled substance analog" is a substance with a chemical structure substantially similar to[1] (name controlled substance included in Schedule I or II) [2] and

[which has a (stimulant), (depressant), (narcotic) (or) (hallucinogenic)[3] effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the effect[4] of (name controlled substance included in schedule I or II)];[5] [or]

[which the defendant[6] represents or intends to have a (stimulant), (depressant), (narcotic) (or) (hallucinogenic)[7] effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the effect of (name controlled substance included in schedule I or II)].[8]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6005 was originally published in 1996. This revision adopted a new format and was approved by the Committee in October 2009.

The definition provided here for "controlled substance analog" is based on the one provided in § 961.01(4m)(a). The statute was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448 [effective date: July 9, 1996] which also renumbered Chapter 161 to Chapter 961 and extended all controlled substance violations to include "controlled substance analogs."

See Wis JI-Criminal 6020A for an example instruction building in the definition of "controlled substance analog." Note that other changes were necessary in the text of the instruction.

The statutory definition of "controlled substance analog" requires that the analog have a substantially similar chemical structure and that the analog either have a substantially similar effect or that the defendant intend or represent that it have a substantially similar effect.

The complete definition of § 961.01(4m) reads as follows:

> (a) "Controlled substance analog" means a substance the chemical structure of which is substantially similar to the chemical structure of a controlled substance included in schedule I or II and:

1. Which has a stimulant, depressant, narcotic, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the stimulant, depressant, narcotic, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system of a controlled substance included in schedule I or II; or

2. With respect to a particular individual, which the individual represents or intends to have a stimulant, depressant, narcotic or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the stimulant, depressant, narcotic, or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system of a controlled substance included in schedule I or II.

(b) "Controlled substance analog" does not include:

1. A controlled substance.

2. A substance for which there is an approved new drug application;

3. A substance with respect to which an exemption is in effect for investigational use by a particular person under 21 USC 355 to the extent that conduct with respect to the substance is permitted by the exemption; or

4. Any substance to the extent not intended for human consumption before an exemption takes effect with respect to the substance.

The Committee concluded that it was necessary to try to simplify this lengthy definition. See notes 1-8, below.

1. The instruction substitutes ". . . is a substance with a chemical structure substantially similar to . . ." for the statute's ". . . means a substance the chemical structure of which is substantially similar to the chemical structure of . . ." No change of meaning is intended.

2. The Committee recommends using the name of the controlled substance which the analog resembles, assuring that the controlled substance appears in Schedule I or II. Schedule I is found in § 961.14; Schedule II is found in § 961.16. With a name inserted, the first part of the definition would read as follows: "Controlled substance analog" is a substance with a chemical structure substantially similar to cocaine."

3. The Committee recommends selecting the effect or effects supported by the evidence. More than one effect may apply, but it appeared to be unlikely that all alternative would be applicable to a single substance.

4. The instruction uses "similar to the effect of" in place of the statute's "similar to the stimulant, depressant, narcotic or hallucinogenic effect on the central nervous system of." No change of meaning is intended.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. The instruction substitutes the term "defendant" for the following phrase in the statute: "with respect to a particular individual, the individual . . ." The Committee reads the statutory definition as requiring either that the analog have a substantially similar effect or that the defendant represent or intend that the analog have a substantially similar effect. Some repetition in the statutory definition was also eliminated. See note 1, supra.

7. See note 3, supra.

8. See note 2, supra.

6009 POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE WITHOUT TAX STAMP — § 139.95(2)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6009 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1996 and 2009. It was withdrawn in 2018.

This instructions was withdrawn because Subchapter IV of chapter 139 was repealed – 2015 Wisconsin Act 193. The effective date of the repeal is March 2, 2016.

6020 DELIVERY OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 961.41(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to deliver[1] a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant delivered a substance.

   "Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[2]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance).[3] (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose delivery is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the delivery of which is prohibited by law.][4]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, INSERT THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

Deciding About Knowledge or Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6020 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1990, 1992, 1996, 1999, 2010, and 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

The penalty for offenses involving the delivery of a controlled substance depends on the amount involved. An instruction for a jury finding of the amount is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

The 1996 revision addressed changes made by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. [Effective date: July 9, 1996.] The primary changes were:

(1) renumbering the statute to § 961.41;
(2) adding "distributing" to the prohibited conduct; and
(3) extending the coverage of the statute to "controlled substance analogs."

The instruction continues to refer only to "deliver" because that term seems to include "distribute" as well. "Distribute" is defined in § 961.01(9) as "to deliver other than by administering or dispensing . . ." For offenses involving "manufacture" see Wis JI-Criminal 6021. For offenses involving a "controlled substance analog," see Wis JI-Criminal 6020A and 6005.

It might be assumed the possession of a controlled substance is a lesser included offense of delivery of a controlled substance, but this may not be the case. In State v. Clemons, 164 Wis.2d 506, 476 N.W.2d 283 (Ct. App. 1991), the court held that possession of a controlled substance is not a lesser included offense of reckless homicide as defined in § 940.02(2)(a). That homicide offense requires that the defendant "cause the death of another . . . by manufacture, distribution, or delivery of a controlled substance in violation of § 961.41. . . ." (Wis JI-Criminal 1021.) The Clemons court held that the strict statutory elements test for lesser included offenses was not satisfied because one can "deliver" without "possession," as where a doctor provides drugs to a person by writing an illegitimate prescription. 164 Wis.2d 506, 512. Apparently the same conclusion should apply to the delivery offense defined by this instruction.

1. Section 961.41(1) prohibits the delivery, distribution, or manufacture of a controlled substance. The instruction continues to refer only to "deliver" because that term seems to include "distribute" as well. "Distribute" is defined in § 961.01(9) as "to deliver other than by administering or dispensing . . ." For offenses involving "manufacture" see Wis JI-Criminal 6021. The penalty for the offense depends on the nature of the substance; see subsections (a)-(j) of § 961.41(1).

2. This definition was adapted from that found in § 961.01(6), which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery," unless the context otherwise requires, means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

3. The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance. The Committee concluded that it adds clarity to use the name of the alleged substance from this point on in the instruction. Whether the substance actually is the substance named and whether the defendant actually delivered the substance remain questions for the jury. The identity of a controlled substance may be proved without an expert, by circumstantial evidence. State v. Anderson, 176 Wis.2d 196, 500 N.W.2d 328 (Ct. App. 1993).

4. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject-matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance."This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

A more complete note on the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6020A DELIVERY OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE ANALOG — § 961.41(1); 961.01(4m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to deliver a controlled substance analog.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant delivered a substance.

   "Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[1]

2. The substance was a controlled substance analog.

   [USE THE PARTS OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITION THAT APPLY][2]

   "Controlled substance analog" is a substance with a chemical structure substantially similar to (name controlled substance included in Schedule I or II) [3] and

   [which has a (stimulant) (depressant) (narcotic) (or) (hallucinogenic) effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the effect of (name controlled substance included in schedule I or II)];[4] [or]

[which the defendant represents or intends to have a (stimulant) (depressant) (narcotic) (or) (hallucinogenic) effect on the central nervous system substantially similar to the effect of (name controlled substance included in schedule I or II)].[5]

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was a controlled substance analog.[6]

This requires two things: first, that the defendant knew or believed that the chemical structure of the substance was substantially similar to (name controlled substance) ; and, second that the defendant knew or believed that the (stimulant) (depressant) (narcotic) (or) (hallucinogenic) effect of the substance was substantially similar to the effect of (name controlled substance) .]

Deciding About Knowledge or Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6020A was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it added a cross reference to Wis JI-Criminal 6001 to the Comment.

The penalty for offenses involving the delivery of a controlled substance analog depends on the amount involved. An instruction for a jury finding of the amount is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

1995 Wisconsin Act 448 [effective date: July 9, 1996] extended all controlled substance violations to include "controlled substance analogs." [Act 448 also renumbered Chapter 161 to Chapter 961.]

A separate instruction defining "controlled substance analogs" is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6005. This instruction is a revision of Wis JI-Criminal 6020 to apply to an offense involving a controlled substance analog. Accomplishing this revision required more than a mechanical substitution of "controlled substance analog" for references to "a controlled substance," so the Committee concluded it was advisable to publish this as a model.

At least one important substantive question was raised: Since regular controlled substance offenses require knowledge that the substance is a controlled substance, does the analog offense require knowledge that the substance is a controlled substance analog? The Committee concluded that a knowledge element should be required and therefore is included as the third element.

1. This definition was adapted from that found in § 961.01(6), which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery," unless the context otherwise requires, means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

2. The text that follows is that of Wis JI-Criminal 6005. See that instruction for footnotes explaining the Committee's approach to the extensive statutory definition.

3. The Committee recommends using the name of the controlled substance which the analog resembles, assuring that the controlled substance appears in Schedule I or II. Schedule I is found in § 961.14; Schedule II is found in § 961.16. With a name inserted, the first part of the definition would read as follows: "Controlled substance analog" is a substance with a chemical structure substantially similar to cocaine."

4. See note 3, supra.

5. See note 3, supra.

6. The Committee concluded that since regular controlled substance offenses require a knowledge element, a similar element should be included here. See Wis JI-Criminal 6000 for a discussion of the knowledge element for regular controlled substance offenses. This instruction relates the knowledge element to one of the alternatives provided in the "controlled substance analog" definition: knowledge that the chemical structure is substantially similar and knowledge that the effect on the central nervous system is substantially similar. The former is always required; the latter can be replaced by the defendant representing or intending that the effect on the nervous system be substantially similar. If the latter alternative is used, no additional knowledge element appears to be required; it would be subsumed by the requirement that the defendant represent or intend that it have a similar effect on the central nervous system.

6021 MANUFACTURE OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 961.41(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to manufacture a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant manufactured a substance.[1]

   "Manufacture" means to produce[2] a substance.

2. The substance was (name controlled substance).[3] (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose manufacture is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][4]

   IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

   [This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

Deciding About Knowledge or Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge or belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6021 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1989, 1994, 1996, 2001 and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

The penalty for offenses involving the manufacture of a controlled substance depend on the amount of substance involved. An instruction for a jury finding of the amount is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

1. The instruction is drafted for what the Committee believes will be the most typical case – one that involves the manufacture of a substance. However, in State ex rel. Bell v. Columbia County, 82 Wis.2d 401, 263 N.W.2d 162 (1978), the supreme court held that it is the act of manufacturing that is prohibited; the state need not allege or prove that a controlled substance was actually manufactured or that the defendant possessed a manufactured controlled substance. Bell involved a challenge to the sufficiency of a complaint charging manufacture. The defendant possessed large quantities of everything needed to produce methamphetamine but none of the completed product was on the premises when the arrest took place. The defendant claimed the complaint was defective because it failed to allege that a controlled substance was actually produced. The supreme court rejected the claim.

For a case like Bell, the first element of the instruction should be modified to read as follows:

1. The defendant engaged in the act of manufacturing a substance. It is not required that a substance was actually produced.

2. Subsection 961.01(13) provides a lengthy definition of "manufacture" that lists many different alternatives. The Committee suggests selecting the type of manufacturing that is alleged to be involved in the case and specifying that type in the instruction. The instruction as drafted uses "produce" because the Committee concluded that it is likely to apply in the greatest number of cases. The complete definition in § 961.01(13) is as follows:

If there is a dispute about whether a particular action constitutes "manufacturing," a detailed definition is provided by § 961.01(13):

> "Manufacture" means the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of, or to produce, prepare, propagate, compound, convert or process, a controlled substance or controlled substance analog, directly or indirectly, by extraction from substances of natural origin, chemical synthesis or a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis, including to package or repackage or the packaging or repackaging of the substance, or to label or to relabel or the labeling or relabeling of its container. "Manufacture" does not mean to prepare, compound, package, repackage, label or relabel or the preparation, compounding, packaging, repackaging, labeling or relabeling of a controlled substance:
> (a) By a practitioner as an incident to the practitioner's administering or dispensing of a controlled substance in the course of the practitioner's professional practice; or
> (b) By a practitioner, or by the practitioner's authorized agent under the practitioner's supervision, for the purpose of or as an incident to, research, teaching or chemical analysis and not for sale.

Subsection 961.01(13) was repealed and recreated by 1993 Wisconsin Act 129, effective date: March 19, 1994. In addition to grammatical changes, one substantive revision was made: the exception for "the preparation or compounding of a controlled substance by an individual for his own use" was eliminated.

3. The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance because the Committee concluded that it adds clarity to use the name of the alleged substance throughout the instruction. Whether the substance actually is the substance named and whether the defendant actually manufactured the substance remain questions for the jury.

4. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject-matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance." This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

A more complete note on the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6030 POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 961.41(3g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess a controlled substance.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control of a substance.[3]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[A substance is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the substance.]

[It is not required that a person own a substance in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the substance.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over a substance, the substance is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

[It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][4]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance)[5]. (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][6]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

Deciding About Knowledge or Belief

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge or belief.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 6030 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1987, 1990, 1995, 1996, 1998, 2001, 2010, 2011, 2013, 2014, 2016, and 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the Comment.

A separate instruction addresses attempts to possess a controlled substance. See Wis JI-Criminal 6031.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

2011 Wisconsin Act 31 amended § 961.41(3g) by creating sub. (3g)(em) which prohibits possession of "a controlled substance specified in s. 961.14(4)(tb) to (ty)." Those substances are nonnarcotic, hallucinogenic substances commonly known as "synthetic cannabinoids." Act 31 classifies them as Schedule I substances. See footnote 1.

Possession of THC becomes a felony if the offender has a prior drug conviction. See § 961.48(2). The prior conviction is not an element of the felony possession offense and the state is not required to prove the prior offense beyond a reasonable doubt at trial. State v. Miles, 221 Wis.2d 56, 584 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1998). The court characterized this penalty enhancing provision as one that is not concerned with the factual circumstances surrounding the underlying crime and that does not change the substantive nature of the charged offense. Enhancers of that type do become an element subject to jury determination. Repeater provisions like the one involved in the Miles case are in a different group.

The definition of possession offenses provided in § 961.41(3g) provides that no person may possess a controlled substance or analog "unless the person obtains the substance or the analog directly from, or pursuant to a valid prescription . . ." The instruction does not include an element requiring that there be no prescription because the Committee concluded that this issue is properly handled in the same manner as other statutory exceptions. For example, the offense of carrying concealed weapon applies to "any person except a peace officer." § 941.23. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has concluded that whether the defendant is a peace officer, and thus exempted from the statute, is an issue that must be raised by the defendant as an affirmative defense. See State v. Williamson, 58 Wis.2d 514, 524, 206 N.W.2d 613 (1973), and the discussion in footnote 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

Factual disputes about the applicability of the exception for valid prescriptions would likely be determined by pretrial motion. If a factual dispute is raised at trial, the Committee concluded that it is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of the existence of a valid prescription. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the exception is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

2013 Wisconsin Act 194 [effective date: April 9, 2014] created § 961.443. Under § 961.443, a defendant is entitled to immunity from criminal prosecution for possession of a controlled substance or a controlled substance analog if the charge stems from the act of rendering aid to a person believed to be suffering from a drug overdose. Specifically, § 961.443(2) provides:

> An aider is immune from prosecution under s. 961.41(3g) for the possession of a controlled substance or a controlled substance analog . . . under the circumstances surrounding or leading to his or her commission of an act described in sub. (1).

The phrase "circumstances surrounding" means that the facts forming the basis for the possession of a controlled substance or a controlled substance analog charge must be closely connected to the events concerning the defendant rendering aid to an individual suffering from a drug overdose. State v. Lecker, 2020 WI App 65, 394 Wis.2d 285, 294, 950 N.W.2d 910.

> An "aider" means a person who does any of the following:
> (a) Brings another person to an emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility and makes contact with an individual who staffs the emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.
> (b) Summons and makes contact with a law enforcement officer, ambulance, emergency medical services practitioner, as defined in s. 356.01(5), or other health care provider, in order to assist another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.
> (c) Calls the telephone number "911" or, in an area in which the telephone number "911" is not available, the number for an emergency medical service provider, and makes contact with an individual answering the number with the intent to obtain assistance for another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog. Wis. Stat. § 961.443(1).

The legislature did not expressly provide in § 961.443 who should make the immunity decision and when that decision should be made. However, in State v. Williams, 2016 WI App 82, 372 Wis.2d. 365, 888 N.W.2d 1, the court held that the determination of immunity is to be made by the circuit court before trial, not by the fact finder at trial. The burden is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is entitled to immunity. Id. at ¶14.

1. The penalty for possession offenses varies with the type of substance possessed. The penalties are set forth in the following subsections of § 961.41(3g):

(3g)(am) – a controlled substance classified in Schedule I or II which is a narcotic drug
(3g)(b) – a controlled substance other than one classified in Schedule I or II which is a narcotic drug [except as provided in subs. (3g)(c) to (g))]
(3g)(c) – cocaine or cocaine base
(3g)(d) – lysergic acid diethylamide, phencyclidine, amphetamine, methcathinone, methylenedioxypyrovalerone, 4-methylmethcathinone, psilocin or psilocybin
(3g)(e) – tetrahydrocannabinols
(3g)(em) – synthetic cannabinoids
(3g)(f) – gamma-hydroxybutyric acid, gamma-butyrolactone, 1,4-butanediol, ketamine or flunitrazepam
(3g)(g) – methamphetamine

The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance. To avoid confusion, the Committee strongly suggests that only the name of the statutorily listed controlled substance be used throughout the instruction, even if the specific substance alleged to have been possessed by the defendant is not listed in Chapter 961. For example, if the substance is heroin, "heroin," should be used throughout. Conversely, if the substance is a synthetic cannabinoid not listed by name in Section 961.14(4)(tb), "synthetic cannabinoid" should be used throughout the instruction, not the specific variation alleged to have been possessed by the defendant. Whether the substance actually is the substance named and whether the defendant actually possessed the substance remain questions for the jury.

2011 Wisconsin Act 31 amended § 961.41(3g) by creating sub. (3g)(em) which prohibited possession of "a controlled substance specified in s. 961.14(4)(tb) to (ty)." Those substances are nonnarcotic, hallucinogenic substances commonly known as "synthetic cannabinoids." 2013 Wisconsin Act 351 amended § 961.41(3g)(em) to refer to "a controlled substance specified in s. 961.14(4)(tb)." Act 351 also repealed and recreated sub. (4)(tb) to include the entire list of substances considered to be "synthetic cannabinoids" and repealed subsecs. (4)(te) through (4)(ty). [Effective date: April 25, 2014.]

The term "synthetic cannabinoid" does not appear in the text of sub. (3g)(em) but is used as the title of that subsection. The Committee recommends that, if the parties agree, the term be used in the instruction where it calls for "(name controlled substance)." (see discussion in footnote 5). The actual names of the "synthetic cannabinoids" as they appear in § 961.14(4)(tb) would have no meaning to the jury and are generally unpronounceable.

The state will be required to prove that the substance in question was in fact one of the chemicals designated a "synthetic cannabinoid" under § 961.14(4)(tb).

All the possession offenses listed above prohibit both "possession" and "attempts to possess." Regarding attempts, see Wis JI-Criminal 6031.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414 18, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 493, 508-09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

"[T]he mere presence of drugs in a person's system is insufficient to prove that the drugs are knowingly possessed by the person or that the drugs were within the person's control. . . . [However] the presence of drugs is circumstantial evidence of prior possession." State v. Griffin, 220 Wis.2d 371, 381, 584 N.W.2d 127 (Ct. App. 1998). To support a finding of possession, there must be sufficient corroborating evidence. Id.

3. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another:

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so called constructive possession.

4. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

5. It is helpful to instruct the jury that any statutorily listed controlled substance is a "controlled substance," as defined in § 961.01(4). The court should not, however, instruct the jury that a substance not specifically named in Chapter 961 is a controlled substance.

For example, if the evidence shows that the substance possessed by the defendant tested positive for cocaine, the jury should be instructed: "Cocaine is a controlled substance."

In contrast, if the evidence shows that the substance possessed by the defendant tested positive for "5F-AMQRZ," a non-statutorily listed synthetic cannabinoid, the jury should be instructed: "A synthetic cannabinoid is a controlled substance," not that "5F-AMQRZ" is a controlled substance. The burden is on the State to prove that 5F-AMQRZ is a synthetic cannabinoid.

If the evidence shows that the substance tested positive for tetrahydrocannabinols, note that under sec. 961.14(4)(t), tetrahydrocannabinols does not include any of the following:

1. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in a cannabidiol product that is dispensed as provided in s. 961.38 (1n) (a) or that is possessed as provided in s. 961.32 (2m) (b).
2. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in fiber produced from the stalks, oil or cake made from the seeds of a Cannabis plant, any other compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture or preparation of the mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom), fiber, oil or cake or the sterilized seed of a Cannabis plant which is incapable of germination.
3. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in hemp, as defined in s. 94.55 (1).
4. A drug product in finished dosage formulation that has been approved by the United States food and drug administration that contains cannabidiol (2-[1R-3-methyl-6R-(1-methylethenyl)-2-cyclohexen-1-yl]-5-pentyl-1,3-benzenediol) derived from cannabis and no more than 0.1 percent (w/w) residual tetrahydrocannabinols.

6. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance." This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

A more complete note on the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6031 ATTEMPTED POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 961.41(3g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess or attempt to possess (name controlled substance)[1]. (Name controlled substance)[2] is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.][3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant attempted to possess a substance.

   Attempt requires that the defendant intended to possess (name controlled substance) and did acts which indicated unequivocally that the defendant intended to possess (name controlled substance) and would have done so except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.[4]

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[5] had actual physical control[6] of a substance.

   [It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][7]

2. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the delivery of which is prohibited by law.][8]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, INSERT THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6031 was originally published in 1995 and revised in 1996, 2010, 2014, 2015, and 2020. The 2020 revision reflected changes to the Comment made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 68. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

Section 961.41(3g) prohibits both "possession of" and "attempts to possess" controlled substances and the analogs of those substances. This instruction is drafted for a case involving a charge of attempted possession. It differs from the instruction for possession cases (see Wis JI-Criminal 6030) in that it has two elements instead of three. The second element of the possession offense – "that the substance was (name controlled substance)" – has been eliminated here. It is sufficient to constitute an attempt that the defendant intended to possess a controlled substance; it is not required that the substance in fact be a controlled substance. (See State v. Kordas, 191 Wis.2d 124, 528 N.W.2d 483 (Ct. App. 1995), holding that it constitutes an attempt to receive stolen property where the defendant intended to receive property that in fact was not "stolen," but which he believed to be stolen.)

1. The penalty for possession offenses varies with the type of substance possessed. The penalties are set forth in the following subsections of § 961.41(3g):

(3g)(am) — a controlled substance classified in Schedule I or II which is a narcotic drug
(3g)(b) — a controlled substance other than one classified in Schedule I or II which is a narcotic drug [except as provided in subs. (3g)(c) to (g))]
(3g)(c) — cocaine or cocaine base
(3g)(d) — lysergic acid diethylamide, phencyclidine, amphetamine, methcathinone, methylenedioxypyrovalerone, 4-methylmethcathinone, psilocin or psilocybin
(3g)(e) — tetrahydrocannabinols
(3g)(em) — synthetic cannabinoids
(3g)(f) — gamma-hydroxybutyric acid, gamma-butyrolactone, 1,4-butanediol, ketamine or flunitrazepam
(3g)(g) — methamphetamine

Note: All the penalty subsections except sub. (3g)(am) refer to "possesses or attempts to possess" – see the discussion preceding footnote 1.

2. It is helpful to instruct the jury that any statutorily listed controlled substance is a "controlled substance," as defined in § 961.01(4). The court should not, however, instruct the jury that a substance not specifically named in Chapter 961 is a controlled substance.

For example, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for cocaine, the jury should be instructed: "Cocaine is a controlled substance."

In contrast, if the evidence shows that the defendant's blood tested positive for "5F-AMQRZ," a non-statutorily listed synthetic cannabinoid, the jury should be instructed: "A synthetic cannabinoid is a controlled substance," not that "5F-AMQRZ" is a controlled substance. The burden is on the State to prove that 5F-AMQRZ is a synthetic cannabinoid.

If the evidence shows that the substance tested positive for tetrahydrocannabinols, note that under sec. 961.14(4)(t), tetrahydrocannabinols does not include any of the following:

> 1. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in a cannabidiol product that is dispensed as provided in s. 961.38 (1n) (a) or that is possessed as provided in s. 961.32 (2m) (b).
> 2. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in fiber produced from the stalks, oil or cake made > from the seeds of a Cannabis plant, any other compound, manufacture, salt, derivative, mixture or preparation of the mature stalks (except the resin extracted therefrom), fiber, oil or cake or the sterilized seed of a Cannabis plant which is incapable of germination.

> 3. Tetrahydrocannabinols contained in hemp, as defined in s. 94.55 (1).
> 4. A drug product in finished dosage formulation that has been approved by the United States food and drug administration that contains cannabidiol (2-[1R-3-methyl-6R-(1-methylethenyl)-2-cyclohexen-1-yl]-5-pentyl-1,3-benzenediol) derived from cannabis and no more than 0.1 percent (w/w) residual tetrahydrocannabinols.

3. The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance. To avoid confusion, the Committee strongly suggests that only the name of the statutorily listed controlled substance be used throughout the instruction, even if the specific substance alleged to have been possessed or attempted to be possessed by the defendant is not listed in Chapter 961. For example, if the substance is heroin, "heroin," should be used throughout. Conversely, if the substance is a synthetic cannabinoid not listed by name in Section 961.14(4)(tb), "synthetic cannabinoid" should be used throughout the instruction, not the specific variation alleged to have been possessed or attempted to be possessed by the defendant. Whether the defendant actually intended to possess the substance remains a question for the jury.

4. The definition of attempt provided here is adapted from the full definition in § 939.32. The definition in § 939.32 "applies to crimes throughout the statutes and is not limited to the Criminal Code." § 939.20. The briefer definition is believed to be sufficient for most cases. If more is desired, see Wis JI-Criminal 580, Attempt. Wis JI-Criminal 580 includes an extensive Comment, including a discussion of State v. Stewart, 143 Wis.2d 28, 420 N.W.2d 44 (1988), which held that proof of the existence of an "extraneous factor" is not required to establish a criminal attempt.

5. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 2, supra.

6. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so called constructive possession.

7. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651 52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

8. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance." This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

6035 POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE WITH INTENT TO DELIVER [§ 961.41(1m)] WITH LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE OF POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess a controlled substance with intent to deliver.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of Possession With Intent To Deliver That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control[2] of a substance.

   [It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][3]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][4]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, INSERT THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

4. The defendant intended to deliver (name controlled substance).

"Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer from one person to another.[5]

"Intended to deliver" means that the defendant had the purpose to deliver or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause delivery.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge. As a part of the circumstances, you may consider the quantity and monetary value of the substance.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of possession of a controlled substance with intent to deliver have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must not find the defendant guilty of possession with intent to deliver,[8] [CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IF THE LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE IS SUBMITTED] and you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of possession of (name controlled substance) in violation of section 961.41_____[9] of the Wisconsin Statutes.

Make Every Reasonable Effort to Agree

You should make every reasonable effort to agree unanimously on your verdict on the charge of possession with intent to deliver before considering the offense of possession. However, if after full and complete consideration of the evidence, you conclude that further deliberation would not result in unanimous agreement on the charge of possession with intent to deliver, you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of possession of (name controlled substance).

Elements of Possession Of A Controlled Substance That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.
2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.
3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty of possession of a controlled substance.

You are not, in any event, to find the defendant guilty of more than one of the foregoing offenses. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant possessed a controlled substance with intent to deliver, the offense charged in the information, you should find the defendant guilty of that offense, and you must not find the defendant guilty of the other lesser included offense I have submitted to you.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence in this case that the defendant committed either one of the offenses I have submitted to you, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6035 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1987, 1990, 1996, 2010, and 2018. The 2018 revision added a cross reference to Wis JI-Criminal 6001 to the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

The penalty for offenses involving possession with intent to deliver a controlled substance depends on the amount involved. An instruction for a jury finding of the amount is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

A person who holds drugs for another and intends to return the drugs to that person has the "intent to deliver" required for a violation of § 961.41(1m). State v. Pinkard, 2005 WI App 226, 287 Wis.2d 592, 706 N.W.2d 157. "Whether Pinkard had delivered the drugs to the original owner for distribution to buyers, or to a third party for distribution to buyers, the ultimate conduct would have been the same: delivering drugs for use by others, a crime the legislature intended to punish under Wis. Stat. § 961.41(1m)." Ibid, ¶12.

1. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 5.

2. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

3. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

4. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject-matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. 5. See section 961.01(6).

6. See section 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

7. Subsection 961.41(1m) provides as follows with respect to intent to manufacture or deliver:

> Intent under this subsection may be demonstrated by, without limitation because of enumeration, evidence of the quantity and monetary value of the substances possessed, the possession of manufacturing implements or paraphernalia, and the activities or statements of the person in possession of the controlled substance or a controlled substance analog prior to and after the alleged violation.

8. Wis JI-Criminal 6035 includes an instruction for a finding on the lesser included offense of simple possession. Of course, it is to be used only if a reasonable interpretation of the evidence supports the instruction. See SM-6, Instructing the Jury on Lesser Included Offenses, for a discussion of the evidentiary standard. The transitional material leading into the finding on the lesser included offense is adapted from Wis JI-Criminal 112A.

9. In the blank, insert the appropriate statutory subsection. It will vary depending on the nature of the substance possessed. See note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 6030.

6036 POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE WITH INTENT TO MANUFACTURE [§ 961.41(1m)] WITH LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE OF POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess a controlled substance with intent to manufacture.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of Possession With Intent To Manufacture That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control[2] of a substance.

   [It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][3]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][4]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, INSERT THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

4. The defendant intended to manufacture (name controlled substance).

"Intended to manufacture" means that the defendant had the purpose to manufacture.

"Manufacture" [means to (produce) (propagate) (compound) (convert) (process) a controlled substance] [directly or indirectly (by extraction from substances of natural origin) or (by chemical synthesis)] [includes packaging or repackaging of the substance or labeling or relabeling of its container].[5]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge. As a part of the circumstances, you may consider the quantity and monetary value of the substance.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of possession of a controlled substance with intent to manufacture have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must not find the defendant guilty of possession with intent to manufacture,[7] [CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IF THE LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE IS SUBMITTED] and you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of possession of (name controlled substance) in violation of section 961.41_____[8] of the Wisconsin Statutes.

Make Every Reasonable Effort to Agree

You should make every reasonable effort to agree unanimously on your verdict on the charge of possession with intent to manufacture before considering the offense of possession. However, if after full and complete consideration of the evidence, you conclude that further deliberation would not result in unanimous agreement on the charge of possession with intent to manufacture, you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of possession of (name controlled substance).

Elements of Possession Of A Controlled Substance That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.
2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is prohibited by law.][9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty of possession of a controlled substance.

You are not, in any event, to find the defendant guilty of more than one of the foregoing offenses. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant possessed a controlled substance with intent to manufacture, the offense charged in the information, you should find the defendant guilty of that offense, and you must not find the defendant guilty of the other lesser included offense I have submitted to you.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from the evidence in this case that the defendant committed either one of the offenses I have submitted to you, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6036 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1987, 1990, 1994, 1996, 2010, and 2018. The 2018 revision added a cross reference to Wis JI-Criminal 6001 to the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

The penalty for offenses involving possession with intent to manufacture a controlled substance depends on the amount involved. An instruction for a jury finding of the amount is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 6001.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

1. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 5.

2. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

3. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

4. A knowledge requirement for controlled substances cases was established by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973): "[In cases involving the possession of a controlled substance] . . . the prosecution must prove not only that the defendant is in possession of a dangerous drug but also that he knows or believes that he is." 61 Wis.2d 143, 159. Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). What is required is that the defendant either know the identity of the substance or, not knowing the precise identity, know that the substance is a substance which is controlled by law. A more complete discussion of the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject-matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance." This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

A more complete note on the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

5. The definition of "manufacture" is based on the one provided in § 961.01(13). See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 6021.

6. Subsection 961.41(1m) provides as follows with respect to intent to manufacture or deliver:

> Intent under this subsection may be demonstrated by, without limitation because of enumeration, evidence of the quantity and monetary value of the substances possessed, the possession of manufacturing implements or paraphernalia, and the activities or statements of the person in possession of the controlled substance or a controlled substance analog prior to and after the alleged violation.

7. Wis JI-Criminal 6035 includes an instruction for a finding on the lesser included offense of simple possession. Of course, it is to be used only if a reasonable interpretation of the evidence supports the instruction. See SM-6, Instructing the Jury on Lesser Included Offenses, for a discussion of the evidentiary standard. The transitional material leading into the finding on the lesser included offense is adapted from Wis JI-Criminal 112A.

8. In the blank, insert the appropriate statutory subsection. It will vary depending on the nature of the substance possessed. See note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 6030.

9. See note 4, supra.

6037A KEEPING OR MAINTAINING A PLACE RESORTED TO BY PERSONS USING CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES IN VIOLATION OF CHAPTER 961 FOR THE PURPOSE OF USING CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES — § 961.42[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 961.42 of the Wisconsin Statutes provides that it is unlawful for any person knowingly to keep or maintain any structure or place[2] which is resorted to by persons using controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961 for the purpose of using controlled substances.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant kept or maintained a structure or place.[3]

   To keep or maintain a place is to exercise management or control over the place.

   This element does not require that the defendant owned (name of place), but it does require that the defendant exercised management or control of the place in question.[4]

2. The place was resorted to by persons using controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961 for the purpose of using controlled substances.

(Name substance) is a controlled substance, the use of which violates Chapter 961.[5]

3. The defendant kept or maintained the place knowingly.

"Knowingly" requires that the defendant knew that the place was resorted to by persons using controlled substances for the purpose of using controlled substances.[6]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6037A was originally published in 1993 and revised in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996.

1. Section 961.42 applies to keeping or maintaining a structure or place for two different illicit purposes: for use by persons using controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961; and for manufacturing, keeping, or delivering controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961. The latter alternative is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6037B.

The penalty is a fine of not more than $25,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

2. The instruction refers to "structure or place," but § 961.42 provides a more extensive list: ". . . any store, shop, warehouse, dwelling, building, vehicle, boat, aircraft, or other structure or place." The rest of the instruction uses the general term, "place." If one of the more specific terms is identified by the charge or the evidence, it should be used in the instruction as well.

For a case involving a vehicle, see State v. Slagle, 2007 WI App 117, 300 Wis.2d 662, 731 N.W.2d 284, where the court found the evidence insufficient to establish that the use of a vehicle on a single occasion was for "keeping" cocaine. See Wis JI-Criminal 6037B.

3. See note 2, supra.

4. "Keep" is not defined in statutes or case law. The Committee concluded that it implies the exercise of management or control over the operation of the place. See Wis JI-Criminal 1570, Keeping a Place of Prostitution.

5. Section 961.42 refers to "using controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961." Literally speaking, Chapter 961 does not prohibit the "use" of controlled substances. Rather, it prohibits possession, delivery, manufacture, etc. As a practical matter, of course, any "use" of a controlled substance would inevitably involve at least possession and thus would be "in violation of Chapter 961."

6. Section 961.42(1) specifically requires that the violation be committed "knowingly." This requires knowledge that the place was used in connection with controlled substances. For a discussion of various issues relating to the knowledge requirement in controlled substance cases, see Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6037B KEEPING OR MAINTAINING A PLACE USED FOR MANUFACTURING, KEEPING, OR DELIVERING CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES — § 961.42[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 961.42 of the Wisconsin Statutes provides that it is unlawful for any person knowingly to keep or maintain any structure or place[2] which is used for manufacturing, keeping, or delivering controlled substances.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant kept or maintained a structure or place.[4]

   To keep or maintain a place is to exercise management or control over the place.

   This element does not require that the defendant owned (name of place), but it does require that the defendant exercised management or control of the place in question.[5]

2. The place was used for (manufacturing) (keeping) (delivering) (name controlled substance).[6] (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose (manufacture) (keeping) (delivery) is prohibited by law.

["Manufacturing" means the production, preparation, propagation, or processing of a controlled substance.][7]

["Keeping" requires that controlled substances be kept for the purpose of warehousing or storage for ultimate manufacture or delivery. It requires more than simple possession.][8]

["Delivering" means the transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.][9]

3. The defendant kept or maintained the place knowingly.

"Knowingly" requires that the defendant knew that the place was used for the (manufacture) (keeping) (delivery) of (name controlled substance) .[10]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6037B was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 6037 in 1989. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 6037B and revised in nonsubstantive ways in March 1993. It was revised in 1994 to change the definition of "manufacture." See footnote 7, below. It was revised in 1996 to add to the text at footnote 5 and in 2008 to adopt a new format. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2010 and involved nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996.

1. Section 961.42 applies to keeping or maintaining a structure or place for two different illicit purposes: for use by persons using controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961; and for manufacturing, keeping, or delivering controlled substances in violation of Chapter 961. The latter alternative is addressed by this instruction. The former is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 6037A.

2. The instruction refers to "structure or place," but § 961.42 provides a more extensive list: ". . . any store, shop, warehouse, dwelling, building, vehicle, boat, aircraft, or other structure or place." The rest of the instruction uses the general term, "place." If one of the more specific terms is identified by the charge or the evidence, it should be used in the instruction as well.

For a case involving a vehicle, see State v. Slagle, 2007 WI App 117, 300 Wis.2d 662, 731 N.W.2d 284, where the court found the evidence insufficient to establish that the use of a vehicle on a single occasion was for "keeping" cocaine. See note 8, below.

3. Section 961.42(1) defines this offense in terms of maintaining a place "which is used for manufacturing, keeping, or delivering [controlled substances] in violation of this chapter," (emphasis added). Generally, the underlined phrase would require adding to the instruction that the manufacture, keeping, or delivery be "in violation of Chapter 961." That addition was not made in this instruction, however, because the Committee concluded that the other elements of the offense, properly defined, will always establish that the manufacture, keeping, or delivery was in violation of Chapter 961.

The only exception would be where one of the exceptions to the penalties imposed by Chapter 961 applies, such as the possession and special use authorizations set forth in §§ 961.32 and 961.335, respectively. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925). These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as an "affirmative defense." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

4. See note 2, supra.

5. "Keep" is not defined in statutes or case law. The Committee concluded that it implies the exercise of management or control over the operation of the place. See Wis JI-Criminal 1570, Keeping a Place of Prostitution.

6. The instruction provides for inserting the name of the specific controlled substance, based on the Committee's conclusion that it adds clarity to do so. Whether the place was actually maintained for the manufacture, keeping, or delivery of the controlled substance is the factual issue for the jury to determine.

7. The definition of "manufacture" is based on the one provided in § 961.01(13), as revised by 1993 Wisconsin Act 129 (effective date: March 19, 1994). In addition to grammatical changes, the statutory revision made one substantive change: the exception for "the preparation or compounding of a controlled substance by an individual for his own use" was eliminated. The exceptions for practitioners remain. See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 6021.

8. In State v. Brooks, 124 Wis.2d 349, 369 N.W.2d 183 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that "keeping" had to be defined in a way that distinguished it from mere possession under § 961.41(3): "We read into the noun 'keeping' in sec. 961.42(1) the requirement that the controlled substance be kept for the purpose of warehousing or storage for ultimate manufacture or delivery." 124 Wis.2d 349, 354.

Brooks was applied to a case involving a vehicle in State v. Slagle, 2007 WI App 117, 300 Wis.2d 662, 731 N.W.2d 284. The court found the evidence insufficient to establish that the use of a vehicle on a single occasion was for "keeping" cocaine.

9. This definition was adapted from the one provided in § 961.01(6). See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 6020.

10. Section 961.42(1) specifically requires that the violation be committed "knowingly." This requires knowledge that the place was used in connection with controlled substances. For a discussion of various issues relating to the knowledge requirement in controlled substance cases, see Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6038 ACQUIRING POSSESSION OF A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE BY MISREPRESENTATION — § 961.43(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes[1] make it a crime to acquire possession of (name controlled substance)[2] by misrepresentation.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained possession of a substance.[3]

   "Possession" means that the defendant knowingly[4] had actual physical control of a substance.[5]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance).[6] (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is regulated by law.

3. The defendant believed that the substance was [(name controlled substance)] [a controlled substance. A controlled substance is a substance the possession of which is regulated by law.][7]

4. The defendant obtained possession of the substance by misrepresentation made with the intent to deceive another and with intent to induce that person to rely and act thereon.[8]

This element requires that the defendant intended to deceive (name person) and intended to induce (name person) to rely and act on the misrepresentation.

5. (Name person) was deceived by the misrepresentation.

This requires that (name person) must have been induced to and did in fact part with possession of the (name controlled substance) in reliance upon the misrepresentation.

Deciding About Belief and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find belief or intent. While belief and intent must be found as a fact before you can find the defendant guilty, they must be found, if found at all, from any acts, words, or statements bearing upon belief and intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6038 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1987, 1995, 1996, 2007, 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added to the comment.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996.

1. Section 961.43(1)(a) provides that it is unlawful for any person to "acquire or obtain possession of a controlled substance by misrepresentation, fraud, forgery, deception or subterfuge."

2. The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance as alleged in the information. The Committee has concluded that it adds clarity to use the name of the alleged substance throughout the instruction, although whether the defendant actually possessed the substance remains a question for the jury (see the second element).

3. Although it should rarely be in issue with respect to this offense, it is not required that a substantial amount of the substance be obtained – any amount is sufficient. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

4. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 6, supra.

5. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

6. The instruction has been drafted to provide for the insertion of the specific name of the substance. The Committee concluded that it adds clarity to use the name of the alleged substance from this point on in the instruction. Whether the substance actually is the substance named and whether the defendant actually delivered the substance remain questions for the jury. The identity of a controlled substance may be proved without an expert, by circumstantial evidence. State v. Anderson, 176 Wis.2d 196, 500 N.W.2d 328 (Ct. App. 1993).

7. The defendant must believe that the substance was a controlled substance. State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973). Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978).

While proof of knowledge is required for conviction, an information which charges the offense in the words of the statute (thereby omitting an allegation of knowledge) is sufficient to confer subject-matter jurisdiction, at least where there is no timely objection or showing of prejudice. State v. Nowakowski, 67 Wis.2d 545, 227 N.W.2d 497 (1975).

While the instruction suggests using the actual name of the substance for purposes of clarity, it is not necessary that the defendant know that name. Therefore, with respect to the third element, the name should be included only when there is no dispute about the defendant's knowledge or when the state is undertaking to prove that the defendant did know the identity of the substance. Otherwise, the more general alternative should be used: that the defendant knew the substance was a controlled substance.

The State need not prove the defendant knew the scientific name or the precise nature of the substance as long as they knew the substance was a "controlled substance." This rule, articulated in State v. Smallwood, 97 Wis.2d 673, 677-678, 294 N.W.2d 51 (1980), was confirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Sartin, 200 Wis. 2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

The court in Sartin also expressly overruled any language in Smallwood that suggests that a different rule might apply where the actual and perceived substances are placed in different schedules and wield dissimilar penalties. The proof of the nature of the controlled substance is, in the statutory scheme, only material to the determination of the penalty to be applied upon conviction. 200 Wis.2d 47, 61.

A more complete note on the knowledge requirement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

8. The explanation of the fourth element was adapted from the elements of theft by fraud set forth in § 943.20(1)(d).

6040 DELIVERY OF AN IMITATION CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE: FELONY[1] — § 961.41(4)(am)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to deliver[2] a substance to another person and represent to that person that the substance is a controlled substance, knowing that it is not a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant delivered[3] a substance[4] to (name recipient) .

   "Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[5]

2. The defendant represented to (name recipient) that the substance was (name controlled substance) .

   (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance.[6]

   This requires that the defendant indicated by words or conduct that the substance was (name controlled substance) .[7]

3. The substance was not a controlled substance.

It is not necessary for the State to establish what the substance was. It is sufficient if the substance was not a controlled substance.[8]

4. The defendant knew the substance was not a controlled substance.[9]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6040 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1992, 1996, and 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2006.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

This instruction is for a violation of subsec. (am)1.a. of § 961.41(4), which was created as § 161.41(4)(a) by Chapter 90, Laws of 1981, and reads as follows:

> (4) IMITATION CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES (am)1. No person may knowingly distribute or deliver, attempt to distribute or deliver or cause to be distributed or delivered a noncontrolled substance and expressly or impliedly represent any of the following to the recipient:
> a. That the substance is a controlled substance.
> b. That the substance is of a nature, appearance or effect that will allow the recipient to display, sell, distribute, deliver, or use the noncontrolled substance as a controlled substance, if the representation is made under circumstances in which the person has reasonable cause to believe that the noncontrolled substance will be used or distributed for use as a controlled substance.

Subsection (4)(am)2. identifies several circumstances that are considered to be "prima facie" evidence of a representation that a substance is controlled.

Note that a penalty is provided in subsec. (4)(am)3.; the penalty structure set forth in § 961.41(1) does not apply to this offense.

A very similar offense with a misdemeanor penalty is defined in § 961.41(4)(bm). See Wis JI-Criminal 6042.

1. If the title is to be included in the written copy of the instructions provided to the jury, "FELONY" should be deleted.

2. The instruction is drafted for offenses involving "delivery." The statute also applies to "distribution," which is defined essentially as a "delivery." See § 961.01(9). Thus, instructing as to "delivery" ought to be sufficient in either situation.

The statute also applies to attempts to deliver or distribute and "causing" delivery or distribution. For "causing to deliver" cases, the instruction should be modified. The instruction ought to be sufficient as drafted for attempted delivery cases. "Deliver" is defined in § 961.01(6) as an "actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another . . ." The instruction includes the substance of that definition in the first element. Also see note 4, below.

3. See note 2, supra.

4. The statute is phrased in terms of delivery "of a noncontrolled substance." "Noncontrolled substance" is not defined in the statutes and apparently has no special meaning. Therefore, the instruction is drafted in terms of "delivery of a substance," the conclusion of the Committee being that it is not necessary for the state to prove that the substance was "noncontrolled." However, it is necessary to establish that the substance was not what it was represented to be; see the third element.

5. This definition was adopted from that found in § 961.01(6) which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery" means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

6. Because all controlled substances are listed by name in the schedules in Chapter 961, the jury may be told that, for example, "cocaine is a controlled substance."

7. Subsection 961.41(4)(am)2. defines four types of conduct which are to be considered "prima facie evidence" of a representation that a substance is a controlled substance. The Committee concluded that the significance of these four matters should be that evidence tending to establish one of them is enough to justify sending the case to the jury. But the Committee also concluded that it was not appropriate to instruct the jury on the effect of the prima facie evidence.

8. See note 4, supra.

9. The knowledge element of the instruction is based on a plain language reading of the statute: "knowingly deliver a noncontrolled substance" means that the person must know that what he delivers is a noncontrolled substance. This is believed to be consistent with the rule for Criminal Code offenses, to which § 939.23(2) applies: "'Know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified fact exists." Here, the "specified fact" is that the substance is noncontrolled.

In 1992, the Committee reviewed this knowledge element in light of case law from other states. Most states have statutes similar to Wisconsin's, and there is extensive case law interpreting those statutes. A majority of the decisions conclude that knowledge of the noncontrolled nature of the substance is not required. See State v. Shiffbauer, 251 N.W.2d 359 (Neb. 1977); People v. Pfarr, 696 P.2d 235 (Colo. 1984); State v. Thomas, 428 So. 2d 327 (Fla. App. 1983); State v. Marsh, 684 P.2d 459 (Kan. App. 1984); State v. Lauterbach, 653 P.2d 1320 (Wash. App. 1982); State v. Freeman, 450 N.W.2d 826 (Iowa 1990); Jenkins v. State, 788 S.W.2d 677 (Tex. App. 1990); State v. Pierre, 500 So.2d 382 (La. 1987); and Annotation, Validity, Construction, and Effect of State Statutes Regulating Sales of Counterfeit or Imitation Controlled Substances, 84 A.L.R.4th 936 (1991).

For contrary conclusions, see State v. Duncan, 414 N.W.2d 91 (Iowa 1987), and State v. Mughni, 514 N.E.2d 870 (Ohio 1987).

For several reasons, the Committee did not find the authority from other states persuasive. First, the statutes are all slightly different. Some use "knowingly" and some do not. Those that use "knowingly" do not connect it with "noncontrolled" as Wisconsin's statute does. For example, the Kansas statute says: "no person shall knowingly deliver any substance which is not a controlled substance . . . under circumstances which would give a reasonable person reason to believe it is a controlled substance." Nebraska prohibits: "knowingly or intentionally delivering a substance that the person represents is a controlled substance but which in fact is not such a substance." Both the Kansas and Nebraska courts held that it is not necessary to prove that the defendant knew the substance was not controlled. But neither statute connects "knowingly" with "noncontrolled substances."

Further, the legislative history of the Wisconsin provision is relevant. In an early draft of the bill, the main subsection of the statute, which was (4)(a) at that time, did not have "knowingly" in it. It simply read: "It is unlawful for any person to deliver, attempt to deliver, or cause to be delivered a noncontrolled substance. . . ." "Knowingly" was written in after "person" in the above sentence and was included in the statute as enacted.

That same draft had a subsection (c) that was first revised, then deleted entirely, and not included in the statute as enacted. That subsection provided:

> In any prosecution for unlawful delivery of a noncontrolled substance it is no defense that the accused believed the noncontrolled substance to actually be a controlled substance.

It appears likely that the original draft of the statute, which did not include "knowingly" and did not include sub. (c), was patterned after a model or uniform act because it closely resembles some of the statutes involved in the cases cited above. It does not match exactly with the current versions of the various model acts. The biggest difference is the way "knowingly" is used.

Finally, Wisconsin has another statute that seems to apply to the same sort of conduct and which does not include "knowingly." See § 961.41(4)(bm), punished by a fine of up to $500 and imprisonment for up to six months or both. See Wis JI-Criminal 6042.

Given this background and the absence of any case law interpreting the Wisconsin statute [but see State v. Cooper, 127 Wis.2d 429, 380 N.W.2d 383 (Ct. App. 1985), dissent referring to what was then § 161.41(4)(a) but decided on other grounds], the Committee concluded that the plain language of the statute should prevail.

6042 DELIVERY OF AN IMITATION CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE: MISDEMEANOR[1] — § 961.41(4)(bm)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to offer to have any controlled substance unlawfully delivered to another person and then to deliver a substance which is not a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant offered to have a controlled substance unlawfully delivered to (name recipient) .

   "Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[2]

   (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance which is unlawful to deliver.[3]

   This element requires that the defendant indicated by words or conduct that the substance was (name controlled substance) .[4]

2. The defendant [delivered] [arranged to have delivered][5] a substance to (name recipient) that was not a name controlled substance.

It is not necessary for the State to establish what the substance was. It is sufficient if the substance was not a name controlled substance.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6042 was approved by the Committee in April 2006.

This instruction is for a violation of subsec. (4)(bm) of § 961.41. The statute originally appeared as § 161.41(2m) and was renumbered by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. It reads as follows:

> (4) IMITATION CONTROLLED SUBSTANCES . . . . (bm) It is unlawful for any person to agree, consent or offer to lawfully manufacture, deliver , distribute, or dispense any controlled substance to any person, or to offer, arrange or negotiate to have any controlled substance unlawfully manufactured, delivered, distributed or dispensed, and then manufacture, deliver, distribute, or dispense or offer, arrange or negotiate to have manufactured, delivered, distributed or dispensed to any such person a substance which is not a controlled substance.

The penalty is a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 6 months or both. A very similar offense with a felony penalty is defined in § 961.41(4)(am). See Wis JI-Criminal 6040. That offense requires that the defendant "knowingly" deliver, etc., which is not required for this offense.

1. If the title is to be included in the written copy of the instructions provided to the jury, "MISDEMEANOR" should be deleted.

2. This definition was adopted from that found in § 961.01(6) which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery" means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

3. This is the approach typically used in the controlled substance instructions. The statutes specifically list the substances that are "controlled substances"; except for certain statutory exceptions, delivery of any controlled substance is unlawful.

4. This statement is borrowed from Wis JI-Criminal 6040. In the context of this offense, to "offer" to deliver a controlled substance must require some representation that the substance is a "controlled substance."

5. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. The Committee concluded that the statute applies where the defendant delivers the substance personally or arranges for another person to deliver the substance.

6044 POSSESSION OF METHAMPHETAMINE WASTE — § 961.67(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to knowingly possess methamphetamine manufacturing waste.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly possessed a substance.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control of a substance.[2]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[A substance is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the substance.]

[It is not required that a person own a substance in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the substance.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over a substance, the substance is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

[It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][3]

2. The substance was methamphetamine manufacturing waste.

3. The defendant knew that the substance was methamphetamine manufacturing waste.[4]

Meaning of "Methamphetamine Manufacturing Waste"

"Methamphetamine manufacturing waste" means any solid, semisolid, liquid or contained gaseous material or article that results from or is produced by the manufacture of methamphetamine.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6044 was originally published in 2002. It was revised in 2009 to reflect the renumbering of the statute.

This instruction is for violations of § 961.67(2)(a): knowingly possessing methamphetamine manufacturing waste. The statute was created as § 961.437 by 1999 Wisconsin Act 129, effective date: May 24, 2000. It was renumbered § 961.67 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 14, effective date: June 22, 2005. Subsection (2)(b) prohibits intentionally disposing of methamphetamine manufacturing waste. A uniform instruction has not been drafted for that offense because the possession offense is likely to cover that conduct: one who disposes of material must have possessed it.

Subsection (3) creates an exception for persons who are handling the material in compliance with statutes dealing with solid and hazardous waste or who have notified law enforcement of the existence of the material.

1. Section 961.67(2)(a) specifically requires that the defendant "knowingly possess" methamphetamine manufacturing waste.

In addition, inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 394, 508-09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

2. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

3. This statement is included in instructions for possession of a controlled substance and the Committee concluded that it properly applies here, as well. Regarding possession of a controlled substance, see State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

4. This requirement is based on the statute's requirement that the defendant "knowingly possess" methamphetamine manufacturing waste.

5. See § 961.67(1)(c). The statutory definition includes reference to "a controlled substance analog of methamphetamine." The Committee concluded that prosecution for violation of this statute is unlikely to be based on manufacturing an "analog" and therefore did not include that reference in the instruction. And, the statutory definition concludes with: ". . . in violation of this chapter." The Committee also concluded that retaining that reference in the instruction was not necessary. If the facts of a case raise the issue of methamphetamine being manufactured in compliance with Chapter 961, the instruction must be modified.

6046 USING A CHILD TO DELIVER A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE[1] — § 961.455

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime for any person who has attained the age of 17 years to knowingly use a child[2] to deliver a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of child) delivered[3] a substance.

   "Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[4]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. (Name of child) was a child, that is, had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged delivery.

   Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.[5]

4. The defendant knowingly used[6] (name of child) to deliver (name controlled substance).

This requires that the defendant knew that (name of child) delivered a substance to another person and knew that the substance was (name controlled substance).[7]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT KNEW THE SUBSTANCE BY A STREET NAME, INSERT THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH:

[This element does not require that the defendant knew the precise chemical or scientific name of the substance. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (street name) is a street name for (name controlled substance) and that the defendant knew or believed the substance was (street name), you may find that the defendant knew or believed the substance was a controlled substance.]

5. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years at the time of the alleged delivery.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6046 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1996. This revision involved a nonsubstantive editorial correction and was approved by the Committee in February 2010.

This instruction is for a violation of § 961.455, created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 121 (effective date: January 31, 1990.)

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

1. The instruction uses "to deliver" in place of the words of the statute: "for the purpose of violating § 961.41(1)." Section 961.41(1) makes it unlawful for any person to manufacture, distribute, or deliver a controlled substance. The Committee concluded that offenses involving delivery are likely to be the most common and therefore drafted this instruction for delivery cases. For cases involving manufacture, Wis JI-Criminal 6021 may be helpful as a model.

Further, this instruction is drafted for the case where an actual delivery has taken place. But a delivery is apparently not required by the words of § 961.455 which refer to using a child "for the purpose of" violating § 161.41. The plain meaning of that phrase appears to be that it is sufficient if the defendant uses a child for the purpose of delivering a controlled substance, even if there is not an actual delivery. This conclusion is supported by subsection (4) of § 961.455 which provides: "If the conduct described under sub. (1) results in a violation under § 961.41(1), the actor is subject to prosecution and conviction under § 961.41(1) or this section or both." See Wis JI-Criminal 6047, which is drafted for a case where a delivery has not necessarily taken place.

2. The instruction uses "child" as the more understandable equivalent of the statute's reference to persons who "is 17 years of age or under." The third element defines "child" in the more common way – as one who "has not attained the age of 18 years."

3. See note 1, supra.

4. This definition was adapted from that found in § 961.01(6), which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery," unless the context otherwise requires, means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

5. See § 961.455(2).

6. "Uses" is one of the five verbs used in § 961.455: ". . . solicits, hires, directs, employs, or uses . . ." One of the other terms should be substituted if appropriate in a particular case. Wis JI-Criminal 6047 is drafted for a "soliciting" case where a delivery has not necessarily taken place.

7. For controlled substances cases generally, the defendant must know that the substance was a controlled substance. State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973). Knowledge of the precise chemical name is not required. Lunde v. State, 85 Wis.2d 80, 270 N.W.2d 180 (1978). See the discussion at Wis JI-Criminal 6020, note 3, and Wis JI-Criminal 6000.

6047 SOLICITING A CHILD FOR THE PURPOSE OF DELIVERING A CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE[1] — § 961.455

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime for a person who has attained the age of 17 years to knowingly solicit a child[2] for the purpose of delivering a controlled substance.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly solicited (name of child) for the purpose of[3] delivering[4] a substance.

"Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer something from one person to another.[5]

"Solicit" means to advise another person to commit a crime under circumstances that indicate, unequivocally, that the person intends that the crime be committed.[6]

"Unequivocally" means that no other inference or conclusion can reasonably and fairly be drawn from the defendant's conduct, under the circumstances.[7]

Before you may find the defendant guilty, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant advised (name of child) to deliver (name controlled substance) and intended that (name of child) deliver (name controlled substance). However, it is not required that any delivery actually took place. It is sufficient if the defendant solicited (name of child) for the purpose of delivering.[8]

2. The substance was (name controlled substance). (Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance whose possession is prohibited by law.

3. (Name of child) was a child, that is, had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the alleged delivery.

Knowledge of (name of child)'s age by the defendant is not required and mistake regarding (name of child)'s age is not a defense.

4. The defendant had attained the age of 17 years at the time of the alleged delivery.

Deciding About Knowledge and Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and purpose. Knowledge and purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6047 was originally published in 1990 and revised in 1996. This revision involved a nonsubstantive editorial correction and was approved by the Committee in February 2010.

This instruction is for a violation of § 961.455, created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 121 (effective date: January 31, 1990.)

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 and 6020A.

1. This instruction is for a violation of § 961.455 which involves soliciting a child for the purpose of delivering a controlled substance. There are several other variations of conduct that may violate this statute. Wis JI-Criminal 6046 is drafted for a case where a defendant uses a child to make an actual delivery. This instruction doe not require a delivery; the offense is committed if one solicits a child for the purpose of making a delivery. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 6046 for a discussion of § 161.455.

2. The instruction uses "child" as the more understandable equivalent of the statute's reference to persons who "is 17 years of age or under." The third element defines "child" in the more common way – as one who "has not attained the age of 18 years."

3. This instruction is drafted for a case where the defendant is charged with soliciting a child for the purpose of delivering a controlled substance and a delivery has not necessarily taken place. That this conduct is prohibited by § 961.455(1) is apparently clear from the plain meaning of the statute, which includes the "for the purpose of" language. The conclusion is supported by subsection (4) of § 961.455 which provides: "If the conduct described under sub. (1) results in a violation under § 961.41(1), the actor is subject to prosecution and conviction under § 961.41(1) or this section or both."

4. See note 1, supra.

5. This definition was adapted from that found in § 961.01(6), which reads as follows:

> "Deliver" or "delivery," unless the context otherwise requires, means the actual, constructive or attempted transfer from one person to another of a controlled substance, whether or not there is any agency relationship.

6. The definition of "solicit" is based on § 939.30, which defines the inchoate crime of solicitation as advising another to commit a felony under circumstances which indicate unequivocally that the person intends that such crime be committed. Subsection (3) of § 961.455 provides that "solicitation under sub. (1) occurs in the manner described under § 939.30. . . ." See Wis JI-Criminal 550, Solicitation As A Crime.

7. The definition of "unequivocally" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 580, Attempt.

8. See note 4, supra.

6050 POSSESSION OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA — § 961.573(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess drug paraphernalia with the primary intent to use the drug paraphernalia to ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce into the human body[1] a controlled substance, in violation of Chapter 961 of the Wisconsin Statutes.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an item.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[3] had actual physical control of an item.[4]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, the item is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The item in question was drug paraphernalia.

"Drug paraphernalia" means all equipment, products, and materials of any kind that are used, designed for use, or primarily intended for use to ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce into the human body a controlled substance.[5]

(Name controlled substance) is a controlled substance.[6]

3. The defendant possessed drug paraphernalia with the primary intent[7] to use it to ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce into the human body a controlled substance.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6050 was originally published in 1993 and revised in 1994, 1996, 2000, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2021; it added to the Comment.

This instruction is for the simple possession offense defined in § 961.573(1). It carries a penalty of a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 30 days or both. Section 961.573 was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 129 [effective date: May 24, 2000]. New sub. (3) was created; it prohibits possession of drug paraphernalia with "the primary intent" to use it in connection with methamphetamine. Violations of sub. (3) carry a maximum penalty of a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 5 years or both. See Wis JI-Criminal 6053.

Other drug paraphernalia offenses are defined in § 961.574, manufacture or delivery of drug paraphernalia; § 961.575, delivery of drug paraphernalia to a minor; and § 961.576, advertisement of drug paraphernalia.

Chapter 161 was renumbered Chapter 961 by 1995 Wisconsin Act 448. Effective date: July 9, 1996. Act 448 also extended the coverage of controlled substance offenses, including the offense addressed by this instruction, to include "controlled substance analogs." See Wis JI-Criminal 6005 for suggested changes for analog cases.

2013 Wisconsin Act 194 [effective date: April 9, 2014] created § 961.443. Under § 961.443, a defendant is entitled to immunity from criminal prosecution for possession of paraphernalia if the charge stems from the act of rendering aid to a person believed to be suffering from a drug overdose. Specifically, § 961.443(2) provides:

> An aider is immune from prosecution under s. 961.573 for the possession of drug paraphernalia . . . under the circumstances surrounding or leading to his or her commission of an act described in sub. (1).

The phrase "circumstances surrounding" means that the facts forming the basis for the possession of paraphernalia charge must be closely connected to the events concerning the defendant rendering aid to an individual suffering from a drug overdose. State v. Lecker, 2020 WI App 65, 394 Wis.2d 285, 294, 950 N.W.2d 910.

An "aider" means a person who does any of the following:

> (a) Brings another person to an emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility and makes contact with an individual who staffs the emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.
> (b) Summons and makes contact with a law enforcement officer, ambulance, emergency medical services practitioner, as defined in s. 356.01(5), or other health care provider, in order to assist another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.
> (c) Calls the telephone number "911" or, in an area in which the telephone number "911" is not available, the number for an emergency medical service provider, and makes contact with an individual answering the number with the intent to obtain assistance for another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog. Wis. Stat. § 961.443(1).

The legislature did not expressly provide in § 961.443 who should make the immunity decision and when that decision should be made. However, in State v. Williams, 2016 WI App 82, 372 Wis.2d. 365, 888 N.W.2d 1, the court held that the determination of immunity is to be made by the circuit court pretrial, not by the fact finder at trial. The burden is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is entitled to immunity. Id. at ¶14.

1. The phrase beginning with "to ingest" is selected from the following complete statement in § 961.573(1):

> . . . to plant, propagate, cultivate, grow, harvest, manufacture, compound, convert, produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, repack, store, contain, inject, ingest, inhale, or otherwise introduce into the human body.

The Committee drafted the instruction for what is believed to be the most common case. If other alternatives are presented by the evidence, the instruction must be modified accordingly.

2. The reference to "in violation of Chapter 961" is included in the statutory definition of the crime, so it is included here. It is not included in the instruction's statement of the elements of the crime because the Committee concluded that "in violation of Chapter 961" could be addressed in the same way that statutory exceptions are generally treated. (See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon.) If the facts raise an issue about being "in violation of Chapter 961" a statement should be added to the second and third elements that indicates the burden is on the State to prove that there was intent to ingest, inhale, etc., "in violation of Chapter 961."

3. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 394, 508 09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

"[T]he mere presence of drugs in a person's system is insufficient to prove that the drugs are knowingly possessed by the person or that the drugs were within the person's control. . . . [However] the presence of drugs is circumstantial evidence of prior possession." State v. Griffin, 220 Wis.2d 371, 381, 584 N.W.2d 127 (Ct. App. 1998). To support a finding of possession, there must be sufficient corroborating evidence. Id.

4. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so called constructive possession.

5. This definition is based on the extremely lengthy one provided in § 961.571(1)(a). The definition refers to "primarily intended for use." Subsec. 961.571(2) defines "primarily" as meaning "chiefly or mainly."

Subsection 961.571(1)(b) provides that "drug paraphernalia" excludes:

1. Hypodermic syringes, needles and other objects used or intended for use in parenterally injecting substances into the human body.
2. Any items, including pipes, papers and accessories, that are designed for use or primarily intended for use with tobacco products.

[Note: "Parenteral" means "taken into the body or administered in a manner other than through the digestive tract, as by intravenous or intramuscular injection." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, 3rd Edition.]

Section 961.572 sets forth a list of twelve factors that "a court or other authority shall consider in addition to all other legally relevant factors" in determining whether an object is drug paraphernalia. It may be helpful to the jury to add something like the following to the instruction:

In determining whether an object is drug paraphernalia, you may consider any of the following:

[list the factors in § 961.572(1) (a) through (L) that apply].

6. Whether a substance is a "controlled substance" is a legal conclusion which the court may pass along to the jury.

It is helpful to instruct the jury that any statutorily listed controlled substance is a "controlled substance," as defined in § 961.01(4). The court should not, however, instruct the jury that a substance not specifically named in Chapter 961 is a controlled substance.

For example, if the evidence shows that the paraphernalia was used in connection with cocaine, the jury should be instructed: "Cocaine is a controlled substance."

In contrast, if the evidence shows that the paraphernalia was used in connection with "5F-AMQRZ," a non-statutorily listed synthetic cannabinoid, the jury should be instructed: "A synthetic cannabinoid is a controlled substance," not that "5F-AMQRZ" is a controlled substance. The burden is on the State to prove that 5F-AMQRZ is a synthetic cannabinoid.

Whether the item of alleged paraphernalia was used in connection with a controlled substance is the factual issue that the jury must determine.

Note that offenses involving methamphetamine are separately defined in sub. (3) of § 961.573 and carry a higher penalty. See Comment preceding note 1, supra.

7. This mental element is specifically required by § 961.573.

The United States Supreme Court reviewed the mental element required by a federal statute relating to drug paraphernalia in Posters 'N' Things v. United States, 114 S.Ct. 1747 (May 23, 1994). The court focused on the definition of "drug paraphernalia" found in 21 U.S.C. § 857, which, like § 961.571(1)(a), refers to material "primarily intended" for use in ingesting, etc., drugs. The court held that the reference to "primarily intended" in the definition did not serve as the basis for a subjective mental requirement that would apply to the offense of selling drug paraphernalia. Rather, the Court held that all that is required for violations of § 857 is that the defendant "knew that the items at issue are likely to be used with illegal drugs."

The decision in Posters 'N' Things is not directly applicable to interpreting the Wisconsin statute addressed by this instruction. Here, the subjective mental element is stated in § 961.573, which defines the crime as possession of drug paraphernalia with the primary intent to ingest, etc., a controlled substance. This specifically requires a subjective mental element; one need not rely on the argument made by the Posters defendant that the reference to "primarily intended" in the definition of drug paraphernalia was the source of such an element.

6053 POSSESSION OF DRUG PARAPHERNALIA: METHAMPHETAMINE — § 961.573(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess drug paraphernalia with the primary intent to use the drug paraphernalia to manufacture[1] methamphetamine in violation of Chapter 961 of the Wisconsin Statutes.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an item.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[3] had actual physical control of an item.[4]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, the item is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The item in question was drug paraphernalia.

"Drug paraphernalia" means all equipment, products, and materials of any kind that are used, designed for use, or primarily intended for use to manufacture methamphetamine.[5]

3. The defendant possessed drug paraphernalia with the primary intent[6] to use it to manufacture methamphetamine.

"Intent to manufacture methamphetamine" means that the defendant had the purpose to manufacture methamphetamine.

"Manufacture methamphetamine"means to produce[7] methamphetamine.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS G FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT IT WAS COMMITTED IN THE PRESENCE OF A CHILD WHO WAS 14 YEARS OF AGE OR YOUNGER.[8]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

1. "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

If you answer question 1. "yes," you must answer question 2.

If you answer question 1. "no," do not answer question 2.

2. "Did the defendant commit this offense while in the presence of a child who was 14 years of age or younger?"

Before you may answer a question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6053 was originally published in 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2006; it reflects changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Act 263.

This instruction is for the offense defined in § 961.573(3), which prohibits possession of drug paraphernalia with "the primary intent" to use it in connection with methamphetamine. Subsection (3) was created by 1999 Wisconsin Act 129. [Effective date: May 24, 2000]. Basic violations are Class H felonies. The penalty increases to a Class G felony if the statute is violated in the presence of a child who is 14 years of age or younger. The latter was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 263. [Effective date: April 20, 2006.] Violations of § 961.573(1), the general prohibition on drug paraphernalia, carry a maximum penalty of a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 30 days or both.

Other drug paraphernalia offenses are defined in § 961.574, manufacture or delivery of drug paraphernalia; § 961.575, delivery of drug paraphernalia to a minor; and § 961.576, advertisement of drug paraphernalia. There are no uniform instructions for those offenses. Section 961.65 defines the offense of possessing certain substances with intent to manufacture methamphetamine. See Wis JI-Criminal 6065.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving "manufacture" because the Committee concluded that "manufacture" is likely to be the most inclusive term. However, the statute applies to "manufacture, compound, convert, produce, process, prepare, test, analyze, pack, repack or store methamphetamine . . . ." If use of one of the other terms is necessary, the instruction should be modified by substituting that term for "manufacture" throughout and modifying the third element.

2. The reference to "in violation of Chapter 961" is included in the statutory definition of the crime, so it is included here. It is not included in the instruction's statement of the elements of the crime because the Committee concluded that "in violation of Chapter 961" could be addressed in the same way that statutory exceptions are generally treated. (See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon.) If the facts raise an issue about being "in violation of Chapter 961" a statement should be added to the second and third elements that indicates the burden is on the State to prove that there was intent to manufacture methamphetamine "in violation of Chapter 961."

3. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 394, 508-09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

4. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

5. This definition is based on the extremely lengthy one provided in § 961.571(1)(a). The definition refers to "primarily intended for use." Subsec. 961.571(2) defines "primarily" as meaning "chiefly or mainly."

Subsection 961.571(1)(b) provides that "drug paraphernalia" excludes:

1. Hypodermic syringes, needles and other objects used or intended for use in parenterally injecting substances into the human body.
2. Any items, including pipes, papers and accessories, that are designed for use or primarily intended for use with tobacco products.

[Note: "Parenteral" means "taken into the body or administered in a manner other than through the digestive tract, as by intravenous or intramuscular injection." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, 3rd Edition.]

Section 961.572 sets forth a list of twelve factors that "a court or other authority shall consider in addition to all other legally relevant factors" in determining whether an object is drug paraphernalia. It may be helpful to the jury to add something like the following to the instruction:

In determining whether an object is drug paraphernalia, you may consider any of the following:

[list the factors in § 961.572(1) (a) through (L) that apply].

6. This mental element is specifically required by § 961.573(3).

The United States Supreme Court reviewed the mental element required by a federal statute relating to drug paraphernalia in Posters 'N' Things v. United States, 114 S.Ct. 1747 (May 23, 1994). The court focused on the definition of "drug paraphernalia" found in 21 U.S.C. § 857, which, like § 961.571(1)(a), refers to material "primarily intended" for use in ingesting, etc., drugs. The court held that the reference to "primarily intended" in the definition did not serve as the basis for a subjective mental requirement that would apply to the offense of selling drug paraphernalia. Rather, the Court held that all that is required for violations of § 857 is that the defendant "knew that the items at issue are likely to be used with illegal drugs."

The decision in Posters 'N' Things is not directly applicable to interpreting the Wisconsin statute addressed by this instruction. Here, the subjective mental element is stated in § 961.573(3), which defines the crime as possession of drug paraphernalia with the primary intent to manufacture, etc., methamphetamine. This specifically requires a subjective mental element; one need not rely on the argument made by the Posters defendant that the reference to "primarily intended" in the definition of drug paraphernalia was the source of such an element.

7. Subsection 961.01(13) provides a lengthy definition of "manufacture" that lists many different alternatives. The Committee suggests selecting the type of manufacturing that is alleged to be involved in the case and specifying that type in the instruction. The instruction as drafted uses "produce" because the Committee concluded that it is likely to apply in the greatest number of cases. If there is a dispute about whether a particular action constitutes "manufacturing," a detailed definition is provided by § 961.01(13):

> "Manufacture" means the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of, or to produce, prepare, propagate, compound, convert or process, a controlled substance or controlled substance analog, directly or indirectly, by extraction from substances of natural origin, chemical synthesis or a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis, including to package or repackage or the packaging or repackaging of the substance, or to label or to relabel or the labeling or relabeling of its container. "Manufacture" does not mean to prepare, compound, package, repackage, label or relabel or the preparation, compounding, packaging, repackaging, labeling or relabeling of a controlled substance:
> (a) By a practitioner as an incident to the practitioner's administering or dispensing of a controlled substance in the course of the practitioner's professional practice; or
> (b) By a practitioner, or by the practitioner's authorized agent under the practitioner's supervision, for the purpose of or as an incident to, research, teaching or chemical analysis and not for sale.

Subsection 961.01(13) was repealed and recreated by 1993 Wisconsin Act 129, effective date: March 19, 1994. In addition to grammatical changes, one substantive revision was made: the exception for "the preparation or compounding of a controlled substance by an individual for his own use" was eliminated.

8. This material reflects the change made in the penalty provisions of s. 161.573 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 263. [Effective date: April 20, 2006.] The basic penalty is a Class H felony. However, sub. (3)(b)2. provides: "Any person who is 18 years of age or older and who violates par. (a) while in the presence of a child who is 14 years of age or younger is guilty of a Class G felony."

The Committee concluded that this provision identifies two factual matters that must be submitted to the jury: that the defendant is "18 years of age or older"; and, that the offense was committed in the presence of "a child who is 14 years of age or younger."

As with similar penalty-increasing facts, the Committee believes these issues are best handled by submitting them to the jury as two special questions. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of possession of drug paraphernalia, under sec. 161.573(3), at the time an place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no."

1. "Had the defendant attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?"

If you answer question 1. "yes," you must answer question 2 "yes" or "no."

If you answer question 1. "no," do not answer question 2.

2. "Did the defendant commit this offense while in the presence of a child who was 14 years of age or younger?"

6065 POSSESSING MATERIALS FOR MANUFACTURING METHAMPHETAMINE — § 961.65

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess (insert name of substance) [1] with intent to manufacture methamphetamine.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance, (insert name of substance) .[2]

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[3] had actual physical control of that substance.[4]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[A substance is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the substance.]

[It is not required that a person own a substance in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the substance.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over a substance, the substance is in that person's possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

[It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][5]

2. The defendant possessed (insert name of substance) with intent to manufacture methamphetamine.

"Intent to manufacture methamphetamine" means that the defendant had the purpose to manufacture methamphetamine.

"Manufacture methamphetamine" means to produce[6] methamphetamine.

With respect to intent to manufacture methamphetamine, you cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all of the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent. As part of the circumstances, you may consider the quantity and monetary value of the substance possessed.

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF POSSESSION OF MORE THAN 9 GRAMS OF EPHEDRINE OR PSEUDOEPHEDRINE.][7]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant possessed more than 9 grams of (ephedrine) (pseudoephedrine).

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant possessed more than 9 grams of (ephedrine) (pseudoephedrine), you may find from this fact alone that the defendant intended to manufacture methamphetamine, but you are not required to do so. You are the sole judges of the facts, and you must not find that the defendant intended to manufacture methamphetamine unless you are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6065 was approved by the Committee in October 2005.

Wis JI-Criminal 6065 is drafted for a violation of § 961.65, an offense created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 14. The effective date is June 22, 2005.

1. Insert the name of the substance involved in the case. Those covered by § 961.65 are: "an ephedrine or pseudoephedrine product, red phosphorus, lithium metal, sodium metal, iodine, anhydrous ammonia, or pressurized ammonia. . . . '[E]phedrine' and 'pseudoephedrine' include any of their salts, isomers, and salts of isomers." § 961.65.

2. Insert the name of the substance involved in the case. Those covered by § 961.65 are: "an ephedrine or pseudoephedrine product, red phosphorus, lithium metal, sodium metal, iodine, anhydrous ammonia, or pressurized ammonia. . . . '[E]phedrine' and 'pseudoephedrine' include any of their salts, isomers, and salts of isomers." See § 961.65.

3. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414-18, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). For a case finding circumstantial evidence to be sufficient to show knowing possession, see State v. Poellinger, 153 Wis.2d 394, 508-09, 451 N.W.2d 752 (1990).

"[T]he mere presence of drugs in a person's system is insufficient to prove that the drugs are knowingly possessed by the person or that the drugs were within the person's control. . . . [However] the presence of drugs is circumstantial evidence of prior possession." State v. Griffin, 220 Wis.2d 371, 381, 584 N.W.2d 127 (Ct. App. 1998). To support a finding of possession, there must be sufficient corroborating evidence. Ibid.

4. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

5. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

6. Subsection 961.01(13) provides a lengthy definition of "manufacture" that lists many different alternatives. The Committee suggests selecting the type of manufacturing that is alleged to be involved in the case and specifying that type in the instruction. The instruction as drafted uses "produce" because the Committee concluded that it is likely to apply in the greatest number of cases. The complete definition in § 961.01(13) is as follows:

> "Manufacture" means the production, preparation, propagation, compounding, conversion or processing of, or to produce, prepare, propagate, compound, convert or process, a controlled substance or controlled substance analog, directly or indirectly, by extraction from substances of natural origin, chemical synthesis or a combination of extraction and chemical synthesis, including to package or repackage or the packaging or repackaging of the substance, or to label or to relabel or the labeling or relabeling of its container. "Manufacture" does not mean to prepare, compound, package, repackage, label or relabel or the preparation, compounding, packaging, repackaging, labeling or relabeling of a controlled substance:
> (a) By a practitioner as an incident to the practitioner's administering or dispensing of a controlled substance in the course of the practitioner's professional practice; or
> (b) By a practitioner, or by the practitioner's authorized agent under the practitioner's supervision, for the purpose of or as an incident to, research, teaching or chemical analysis and not for sale.

Subsection 961.01(13) was repealed and recreated by 1993 Wisconsin Act 129, effective date: March 19, 1994. In addition to grammatical changes, one substantive revision was made: the exception for "the preparation or compounding of a controlled substance by an individual for his own use" was eliminated.

7. The bracketed material implements the "rebuttable presumption of intent to manufacture," which is set forth in § 961.65 and stated as follows:

> Possession of more than 9 grams of ephedrine or pseudoephedrine, other than pseudoephedrine contained in a product to which s. 961.01(20c)(a) or (b) applies, creates a rebuttable presumption of intent to manufacture methamphetamine.

The approach used in the instruction is the one the Committee has adopted to deal with "rebuttable presumptions" and "prima facie cases" in other situations. See Wis JI-Criminal 225.

6070 USE OR POSSESSION OF A MASKING AGENT — § 961.69(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime for a person to use, or possess with the primary intent to use, a masking agent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [used] [possessed with the primary intent to use] a substance or device.

   ["Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control of a substance or device.[2]]

Deciding About Knowledge[3]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

2. The substance or device was a masking agent.

   A masking agent is any substance or device that is intended for use to defraud, circumvent, interfere with, or provide a substitute for a bodily fluid in conjunction with a lawfully administered drug test.[4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 6070 was originally published in 2016 and revised in 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

This instruction is for possession or use of a masking agent in violation of § 961.69(2), which was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 264, effective date: March 19, 2016. Subsection (3) of § 961.69 prohibits delivery, possession with intent deliver, or manufacturing with intent to deliver, a masking agent. Subsection (4) prohibits placing an advertisement to promote the sale of a masking agent. Uniform instructions have not been drafted for violations of subs. (3) and (4).

2013 Wisconsin Act 194 [effective date: April 9, 2014] created § 961.443. Under § 961.443, a defendant is entitled to immunity from criminal prosecution for possession of a masking agent if the charge stems from the act of rendering aid to a person believed to be suffering from a drug overdose. Specifically, § 961.443(2) provides:

> An aider is immune from prosecution under under s. 961.69(2) for possession of a masking agent under the circumstances surrounding or leading to his or her commission of an act described in sub. (1).

The phrase "circumstances surrounding" means that the facts forming the basis for the possession of a masking agent charge must be closely connected to the events concerning the defendant rendering aid to an individual suffering from a drug overdose. State v. Lecker, 2020 WI App 65, 394 Wis.2d 285, 294, 950 N.W.2d 910.

An "aider" means a person who does any of the following:

> (a) Brings another person to an emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility and makes contact with an individual who staffs the emergency room, hospital, fire station, or other health care facility if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.

(b) Summons and makes contact with a law enforcement officer, ambulance, emergency medical services practitioner, as defined in s. 356.01(5), or other health care provider, in order to assist another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog.

(c) Calls the telephone number "911" or, in an area in which the telephone number "911" is not available, the number for an emergency medical service provider, and makes contact with an individual answering the number with the intent to obtain assistance for another person if the other person is, or if a reasonable person would believe him or her to be, suffering from an overdose of, or other adverse reaction to, any controlled substance or controlled substance analog. Wis. Stat. § 961.443(1).

The legislature did not expressly provide in Wis. Stat. § 961.443 who should make the immunity decision and when that decision should be made. However, in State v. Williams, 2016 WI App 82, 372 Wis.2d. 365, 888 N.W.2d 1, the court held that the determination of immunity is to be made by the circuit court pretrial, not by the fact finder at trial. The burden is on the defendant to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is entitled to immunity. Id. at ¶14.

1. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

2. "Possess" is defined in Wis JI-Criminal 920 to require "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

3. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 1, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 961.69(2) does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing a masking agent. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

4. This is the definition of "masking agent" provided in § 961.69(1).

6100 OBTAINING A PRESCRIPTION DRUG BY FRAUD — § 450.11(7)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 450.11(7) of the Wisconsin Statutes is violated by one who obtains a prescription drug by willful misrepresentation.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained a prescription drug.

   A prescription drug is a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug.[2]

2. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was a prescription drug.[3]

3. The defendant obtained the prescription drug by a willful misrepresentation.

   This requires that the defendant intended to deceive (name person) and intended to induce (name person) to rely and act on the misrepresentation.

   This element also requires that (name person) was deceived by the misrepresentation. (Name person) must have been induced to and must have in fact parted with possession of the prescription drug in reliance upon the misrepresentation.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6100 was originally published in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved adoption of a new format and revisions in the Comment.

This instruction is for one type of violation defined in § 450.11(7)(a), which reads as follows:

> No person may obtain or attempt to obtain a prescription drug, or procure or attempt to procure the administration of a prescription drug, by fraud, deceit or willful misrepresentation or by forgery or alteration of a prescription order; or by willful concealment of a material fact; or by use of a false name or address.

A similar violation relating to controlled substances is defined in § 961.43(1)(a). See Wis JI-Criminal 6038.

Violations of § 450.11(7) are punishable by a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 6 months, or both. § 450.11(9)(a). Violations resulting in delivery, or possession with intent to manufacture or deliver, are punishable as a Class H felony. For an instruction on offenses involving possession with intent to deliver, adding the fourth element of Wis JI-Criminal 6035 to this instruction should provide a usable model.

1. This statement of the offense selects from the various alternatives presented by the statute. See the Comment preceding this footnote. The statute prohibits obtaining or attempting to obtain a prescription drug and procuring or attempting to procure the administration of a prescription drug by fraud, deceit, willful misrepresentation, forgery, alteration of a prescription order, concealment of a material fact, or use of a false name or address.

2. Section 450.01(20)(a) provides that "prescription drug" means "any drug, drug product or drug-containing preparation which is subject to 21 USC 353(b) or 21 CFR 201.105." Sub. (20)(b) of the same statute provides that for purposes of other subsections of § 450.11 certain controlled substances may be considered prescription drugs, but sub. (7) is not one of those subsections.

21 USC 353(b) reads as follows:

(1) A drug intended for use by man which C
(A) is a habit-forming drug to which 21 USC § 351(d) applies; or
(B) because of its toxicity or other potentiality for harmful effect, or the method of its use, or the collateral measures necessary to its use, is not safe for use except under the supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug; or
(C) is limited by an approved application under 21 USC § 355 to use under the professional supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug, shall be dispensed only (I) upon a written prescription of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug, or (ii) upon an oral prescription of such practitioner which is reduced promptly to writing and filed by the pharmacist, or (iii) by refilling any such a written or oral prescription if such refilling is authorized by the prescriber . . .

21 CFR 201.105 Veterinary Drugs, reads as follows:

A drug subject to the requirement of section 504(f)(l) of the act shall be exempt from section 502(f) of the act if all the following conditions are met:
(a) The drug is:
(1)(I) In the possession of a person (or his agents or employees) regularly and lawfully engaged in the manufacture, transportation, storage, or wholesale distribution of drugs that are to be used only by or on the prescription or other order of a licensed veterinarian; or . . .

In the Committee's judgment, these definitions boil down to the one suggested in the instruction: "a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug."

3. This element is based on Wis JI-Criminal 6038, Acquiring Possession Of A Controlled Substance By Misrepresentation. A knowledge element like this is added to all the controlled substance instructions because of case law. See, for example, State v. Sartin, 200 Wis.2d 47, 547 N.W.2d 449 (1996).

6110 POSSESSION OF A PRESCRIPTION DRUG WITH INTENT TO DELIVER — § 450.11(7)(g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime to possess a prescription drug with intent to deliver.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a substance.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control[2] of a substance.

   [It is not necessary that the quantity of the substance be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][3]

2. The substance was a prescription drug.

3. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was a prescription drug.[4]

   A prescription drug is a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug.[5]

4. The defendant intended to deliver a prescription drug.

"Deliver" means to transfer or attempt to transfer from one person to another.[6]

"Intended to deliver" means that the defendant had the purpose to deliver.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all of the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge. As a part of the circumstances, you may consider the quantity and monetary value of the substance.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6110 was approved by the Committee in April 2006.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 450.11(7)(g) and (9)(b). Subsection (9)(c) provides as follows:

> In any action or proceeding brought for the enforcement of this section, it shall not be necessary to negate any exception or exemption contained in this section, and the burden of proof of any such exception or exemption shall be upon the defendant.

The instruction does not address any "exceptions or exemptions."

1. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 5.

2. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
>
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
>
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called "constructive possession."

3. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

4. This knowledge element is included to be consistent with the other instruction for a "prescription drug" offense – see Wis JI-Criminal 6100, footnote 3.

5. Section 450.01(20)(a) provides that "prescription drug" means "any drug, drug product or drug-containing preparation which is subject to 21 USC 353(b) or 21 CFR 201.105." Sub. (20)(b) of the same statute provides that for purposes of other subsections of § 450.11 certain controlled substances may be considered prescription drugs, but sub. (7) is not one of those subsections.

21 USC 353(b) reads as follows:

> (1) A drug intended for use by man which –
> (A) is a habit-forming drug to which 21 USC § 351(d) applies; or
> (B) because of its toxicity or other potentiality for harmful effect, or the method of its use, or the collateral measures necessary to its use, is not safe for use except under the supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug; or
> (C) is limited by an approved application under 21 USC § 355 to use under the professional supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug, shall be dispensed only (I) upon a written prescription of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug, or (ii) upon an oral prescription of such practitioner which is reduced promptly to writing and filed by the pharmacist, or (iii) by refilling any such a written or oral prescription if such refilling is authorized by the prescriber . . .

21 CFR 201.105 Veterinary Drugs, reads as follows:

> A drug subject to the requirement of section 504(f)(l) of the act shall be exempt from section 502(f) of the act if all the following conditions are met:
> (a) The drug is:
> (1)(I) In the possession of a person (or his agents or employees) regularly and lawfully engaged in the manufacture, transportation, storage, or wholesale distribution of drugs that are to be used only by or on the prescription or other order of a licensed veterinarian; or . . .

In the Committee's judgment, these definitions boil down to the one suggested in the instruction: "a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug."

6. This is based on the definition of "delivery" in sec. 961.01(6).

7. "Intent" is defined in the Criminal Code to require either "mental purpose" or being "aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause" the result. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. But see, Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. This is based on section 450.11(7)(g), which applies to controlled substance violations and provides as follows with respect to intent to manufacture or deliver:

> . . . Intent under this paragraph may be demonstrated by, without limitation because of enumeration, evidence of the quantity and monetary value of the substances possessed, the possession of manufacturing implements or paraphernalia, and the activities or statements of the person in possession of the prescription drug prior to, during and after the alleged violation.

6112 POSSESSION OF A PRESCRIPTION DRUG WITHOUT A VALID PRESCRIPTION — § 450.11(7)(h)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

The Wisconsin Statutes make it a crime for a person to possess a prescription drug unless (he) (she) obtained it with a valid prescription.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a prescription drug.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control[3] of a prescription drug.

   [It is not necessary that the quantity be substantial. Any amount is sufficient.][4]

   A prescription drug is a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug.[5]

2. The defendant knew or believed that the substance was a prescription drug.[6]

3. The prescription drug was not dispensed[7] to the defendant upon a prescription order issued by a practitioner.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all of the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 6112 was approved by the Committee in July 2009. A non-substantive editorial correction was made in 2013.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 450.11(7)(h), which reads as follows: "No person may possess a prescription drug unless the prescription drug is obtained in compliance with this section." Section 450.11(1) provides that "[n]o person may dispense any prescribed drug or device except upon the prescription order of a practitioner." Reading these two sections together yields the offense addressed by this instruction: possessing a prescription drug without a valid prescription. The penalty for violations of § 450.11(7)(h) is set forth in sub. (9)(b).

Subsection (9)(c) of § 450.11 provides as follows:

> In any action or proceeding brought for the enforcement of this section, it shall not be necessary to negate any exception or exemption contained in this section, and the burden of proof of any such exception or exemption shall be upon the defendant.

The instruction does not address any "exceptions or exemptions."

1. This is a paraphrase of the definition of the offense in §450.11(7)(h), which reads as follows: "No person may possess a prescription drug unless the prescription drug is obtained in compliance with this section." Section 450.11(1) provides that "[n]o person may dispense any prescribed drug or device except upon the prescription order of a practitioner." Reading these two sections together yields the offense addressed by this instruction: possessing a prescription drug obtained without a valid prescription.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Also see note 5.

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

4. See State v. Dodd, 28 Wis.2d 643, 651-52, 137 N.W.2d 465 (1965).

5. Section 450.01(20)(a) provides that "prescription drug" means "a drug, drug product, or drug-containing preparation that is subject to 21 USC 353(b) or 21 CFR 201.105." Subsection (20)(b) of § 450.01 provides that for purposes of specified subsections of § 450.11 certain controlled substances may be considered prescription drugs, but sub. (7) is not one of those subsections.

21 USC 353(b) reads as follows:

> (1) A drug intended for use by man which –
> (A) because of its toxicity or other potentiality for harmful effect, or the method of its use, or the collateral measures necessary to its use, is not safe for use except under the supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug; or
> (B) is limited by an approved application under section 355 of this title to use under the professional supervision of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug; shall be dispensed only
> (i) upon a written prescription of a practitioner licensed by law to administer such drug, or
> (ii) upon an oral prescription of such practitioner which is reduced promptly to writing and filed by the pharmacist, or > (iii) by refilling any such written or oral prescription if such refilling is authorized by the prescriber either in the original prescription or by oral order which is reduced promptly to writing and filed by the pharmacist. The act of dispensing a drug contrary to the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed to be an act which results in the drug being misbranded while held for sale.

21 Sec. 201.105 Veterinary drugs, reads as follows:

A drug subject to the requirements of section 503(f)(1) of the act shall be exempt from section 502(f)(1) of the act if all the following conditions are met: (a) The drug is:

(1)(i) In the possession of a person (or his agents or employees) regularly and lawfully engaged in the manufacture, transportation, storage, or wholesale distribution of drugs that are to be used only by or on the prescription or other order of a licensed veterinarian; or (ii) In the possession of a retail, hospital, or clinic pharmacy, or other person authorized under State law to dispense veterinary prescription drugs, who is regularly and lawfully engaged in dispensing drugs that are to be used only by or on the prescription or other order of a licensed veterinarian; or (iii) In the possession of a licensed veterinarian for use in the course of his professional practice . . .

In the Committee's judgment, these definitions boil down to the one suggested in the instruction: "a drug intended for use by humans or animals that is available only on the prescription of a practitioner licensed to administer that drug."

6. This knowledge element is included by analogy to controlled substance offenses, where case law has added a knowledge requirement. See, State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973), and State v. Sartin, 200 Wis.2d 47, 546 N.W.2d 449 (1996), discussed in Wis JI-Criminal 6000, Note On The Knowledge Element In Controlled Substance Cases.

7. "Dispense" is defined in § 450.01(7).

SM-6 JURY INSTRUCTIONS ON LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSES

CONTENTS

Scope

This Special Material attempts to provide a framework for deciding when it is proper to instruct the jury on a lesser included offense. There are two tests to consider: first, whether an offense is a lesser included offense of the crime charged; and second, whether the evidence supports an instruction on the lesser included offense. If both tests are satisfied, an instruction must be given upon request of either party.

I. When is a crime a lesser included offense of the charged crime?

The authority for convicting a defendant of a lesser included offense and the standard for determining when an offense is "lesser included" are found in § 939.66 of the Wisconsin Statutes:

> Conviction of included crime permitted. Upon prosecution for a crime, the actor may be convicted of either the crime charged or an included crime but not both. An included crime may be any of the following:
> (1) A crime which does not require proof of any fact in addition to those which must be proved for the crime charged.
> (2) A crime which is a less serious type of criminal homicide than the one charged.
> (2m) A crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged.
> (2p) A crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged.
> (2r) A crime which is a less serious type of violation under s. 943.23 than the one charged.
> (3) A crime which is the same as the crime charged except that it requires recklessness or negligence while the crime charged requires a criminal intent.

(4) An attempt in violation of s. 939.32 to commit the crime charged.

(4m) A crime of failure to timely pay child support under s. 948.22(3) when the crime charged is failure to pay child support for more than 120 days under s. 948.22(2).

(5) The crime of attempted battery when the crime charged is sexual assault, sexual assault of a child, robbery, mayhem, or aggravated battery or an attempt to commit any of them.

(6) A crime specified in s. 940.285(2)(b)4. or 5. when the crime charged is specified in ss. 940.19(2) to (6), 940.225(1), (2), or (3), or 940.30.

(6c) A crime that is a less serious type of violation under s. 940.285 than the one charged.

(6e) A crime that is a less serious type of violation under s. 940.295 than the one charged.

(7) The crime specified in s. 940.11(2) when the crime charged is specified in s. 940.11(1).

The principle which allows conviction for a lesser included offense upon an information charging a greater offense is that the defendant has received adequate notice of the lesser offense since it does not require proof of any fact not required for the greater.[1]

In order to instruct the jury on a lesser included offense, the offense must qualify under one of the subsections of § 939.66. A trial court is not permitted to instruct or submit a verdict on a lesser crime which is not included in the charged crime.[2] The subsections of § 939.66 are an exhaustive list of the categories of lesser included offenses; if an offense does not fit within one of these categories, it is not "lesser included" and it may not be submitted to the jury.

The subsections of § 939.66 break down into two groups. One group states general principles relating to lesser included offenses that can apply across the range of criminal statutes. Consisting of subsections (1), (2), (3), and (4), this group has been part of the statute since it was originally enacted as part of the 1956 Criminal Code revision. The rest of the subsections constitute the second group which states special rules for specific statutes or groups of statutes. Only subsection (5) was part of § 939.66 as originally enacted. These special rules have become necessary for two reasons. First, the general lesser included offense rules are strictly interpreted to focus solely on the statutorily-defined elements rather than on the facts of the case. (See the discussion below.) Second, new criminal statutes tend to be drafted in a way that does not follow the principles of the 1956 Criminal Code revision. The result is that the general principles do not identify offenses that should logically be included offenses, making special rules necessary.

The discussion below considers each of the general rules and then the special rules as a group.

A. Section 939.66(1): "A crime which does not require proof of a fact in addition to those which must be proved for the crime charged."

The key to applying this subsection is understanding that it is concerned with the statutorily required elements of the crimes and not with the particular facts alleged or proved in the case at hand.[3] "When determining whether a crime is a lesser included offense under sec. 939.66(1), the determinative factor is the statutorily defined elements of the respective crimes."[4] Language in earlier decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court, especially State v. Melvin,[5] implicitly approving consideration of the peculiar facts of the case in determining lesser included offenses, has not been followed in subsequent cases,[6] and the strict "statutory elements" test now appears to be clearly established.

In properly applying § 939.66(1), one must compare the statutory definition of the charged crime with the statutory definition of the alleged lesser included crime. If the lesser crime includes any element not included in the definition of the charged crime, the lesser crime is not an "included" offense.

Thus, in Randolph v. State,[7] where the facts involved the shooting of the victim by the defendant, it was held that injury by conduct regardless of life and reckless use of a weapon were not included in the crime of attempted murder. Both the lesser offenses require proof of facts not required for attempted murder. Injury by conduct regardless of life requires proof of injury; reckless use of a weapon requires proof that a weapon was used. Attempted murder requires proof of neither injury nor use of a weapon, although both facts were part of the case against Randolph.

Other illustrations of the "statutory elements" test are found in the following cases:

- State v. Verhasselt[8] – injury by negligent use of a weapon is not included within injury by conduct regardless of life;
- State v. Smith[9] – pointing a weapon is not included within armed robbery;
- State v. Driscoll[10] – indecent liberties with a child is not included within sexual intercourse with a child;

- State v. Elbaum[11] – resisting an officer is not included within battery to a police officer.

- State v. Hagenkord[12] – injury by conduct regardless of life is not an included offense when the charge is first degree sexual assault.

- State v. Carrington[13] – reckless use of a weapon, in violation of § 941.20(1)(a) is not a lesser included offense of endangering safety while armed, in violation of § 941.30 and § 939.63(1).

- State v. Peck[14] – possession of a controlled substance is not a lesser included offense of manufacturing a controlled substance.

- State v. Martin[15] – battery is not a lesser included offense of second degree sexual assault [sexual contact] under § 940.225(2)(a).

- State v. Clemons[16] – possession of a controlled substance is not a lesser included offense of first degree reckless homicide under § 940.02(2)(a), causing death by the delivery of a controlled substance.

- State v. Rundle[17] – reckless child abuse causing great bodily harm under § 948.03(3)(a) is not a lesser included offense of intentional child abuse causing bodily harm under § 948.03(2)(b).

In many of these situations, it can be argued that the strict "statutory elements" test leads to an unfair, or at least excessively rigid, result. (Some of the rigidity is relieved by other subsections of § 939.66 which are discussed below.) This rigidity or unfairness is compounded by the fact that the lesser included offense test has also been adopted for the purposes of determining when multiple convictions are possible. See, for example, State v. Elbaum, 54 Wis.2d 213, 194 N.W.2d 660 (1971). Under this rule, multiple convictions are allowed whenever one offense is not "included" within the other under the definition of § 939.66.[18]

The "elements only" approach and alternative lesser included offense tests were thoroughly reviewed in State v. Carrington.[19] The Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the "elements only" test but acknowledged two qualifications. First, a "penalty enhancer" may be considered in determining what the statutory elements of the charged offense are. Thus, a charge of endangering safety by conduct regardless of life, with the addition of the penalty enhancer provided in § 939.63 – while possessing or using a dangerous weapon – includes an element of possessing or using a dangerous weapon which becomes part of the lesser included offense analysis. Second, the Carrington decision acknowledged that the charging document may be referred to in one situation: where a statute provides alternative elements, courts should look to the charging document to determine the greater crime to which the elements only test applies.[20]

Wisconsin is not alone in its commitment to the strict statutory elements test. In United States v. Schmuck, 840 F.2d 384 (7th Cir. 1988), the court, en banc, reversed a panel decision and reaffirmed that the strict "comparison-of-the-elements" test is the proper one to use in federal prosecutions in the 7th Circuit. The panel had adopted a more flexible, "inherent relationship" test, which allowed consideration of the facts alleged in the charge and the evidence presented. The en banc opinion held that the elements test is better for three reasons: 1) it is more consistent with the "necessarily included" standard in Rule 31(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure; 2) it avoids problems in giving notice to the defendant; and 3) it is consistent with the test used for double jeopardy purposes. The en banc decision was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court, with the Court emphasizing that the comparison-of-the-statutory-elements test is what is required by Rule 31(c). The court also found that the > elements test is far more certain and predictable in its application than the inherent relationship test . . . [it] permits both sides to know in advance what jury instructions will be available . . . [and] promotes judicial economy by providing a clearer rule of decision and by permitting appellate courts to decide whether jury instructions were wrongly refused without reviewing the entire evidentiary record for nuances of reference.

United States v. Schmuck, 489 U.S. 705, 720-21 (1989)

B. Section 939.66(2): "A crime which is a less serious type of criminal homicide than the one charged."

Section 939.66(2) provides a special standard for homicides: all less serious types of criminal homicide are considered to be included within all more serious types of homicide. The evidence must support the giving of the instruction on the lesser offense, but in the proper case, instruction on any homicide offense could be proper, even though the "statutory elements" test of § 939.66(1) is not satisfied.[21]

This rule can be applied without difficulty in most cases. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has compared the maximum penalties to determine if one homicide is less serious than another. State v. Davis, 144 Wis.2d 852, 425 N.W.2d 411 (1988). Thus, for any given homicide offense, all other homicides with lower maximum penalties are included crimes and should be submitted to the jury if the evidentiary standard is satisfied.

Determining when one homicide is "less serious" than another has become more complicated than one would expect it to be because some homicide offenses have the same penalty. For example, both second degree intentional homicide under § 940.05 and first degree reckless homicide under § 940.02(1) are Class B felonies; both second degree reckless homicide under § 940.06 and homicide by intoxicated use of a vehicle under § 940.09(1) are Class D felonies. In State v. Wolske, 143 Wis.2d 175, 420 N.W.2d 60 (Ct. App. 1988), convictions for a count of negligent homicide and a count of homicide by intoxicated use of a vehicle for each victim of the defendant's operation of a boat were upheld. The court held that the crimes have different elements and that since the penalties were the same, one was not "less serious" than the other. The specific situation addressed in Wolske will not recur because penalties have changed. But the same situation can arise with other statutes.

In State v. Patterson, 2010 WI 130, 329 Wis.2d 599, 790 N.W.2d 909, the defendant gave a controlled substance to a 17-year-old girl and she died as a result of using the substance. Patterson was convicted of 1st degree reckless homicide under § 940.02(2) and of contributing to the delinquency of a child with death as a consequence under § 948.40(4)(a). The court affirmed the two convictions, concluding the offenses are not "multiplicitous" because they require proof of different facts. Further, the court concluded that contributing to the delinquency of a child with death as a consequence is not a "less serious type of criminal homicide" for purposes of Wis. Stat. § 939.66(2). "Rather than being a homicide statute, Wis. Stat. § 948.40(4)(a) is more akin to other offenses spread throughout the statutes that proscribe certain conduct and impose a more serious punishment where death results. . . [T]he legislature did not intend contributing to the delinquency of a child with death as a consequence to be a type of criminal homicide." Patterson, ¶¶24, 25.

Non-homicide offenses may also be lesser included offenses of homicides but to so qualify, they must satisfy one of the other subsections of § 939.66.

C. Section 939.66(3): "A crime which is the same as the crime charged except that it requires recklessness or negligence while the crime charged requires a criminal intent."

The threshold requirement for application of § 939.66(3) is that the lesser crime be "the same as" the crime charged, except for the recklessness or intent element. This requirement has been interpreted to involve the same strict comparison of statutory elements that applies under § 939.66(1). Therefore, subsection (3) does not apply where the lesser offense involves any element not contained within the charged offense.[22] For example, first degree reckless injury, requiring "criminal recklessness" and "utter disregard for human life" is not the "same crime" as aggravated battery and does not meet the test under sub. (3).[23]

The second requirement for the application of subsection (3) is that the charged offense must require a showing of criminal intent. Under the Criminal Code, when criminal intent is an element of a crime it is indicated by the terms "intentionally," "with intent to," "with intent that," or by forms of the verbs "know" or "believe."[24] If none of these "intent words" appear in the statute defining the greater offense, subsection (3) does not apply.[25]

A third requirement for the application of subsection (3) is that the lesser offense require "recklessness or negligence." When recklessness is an element of a crime, it is indicated by the term "reckless" or "recklessly." See § 939.24(2). When criminal negligence is an element of a crime, it is indicated by the term "negligent." See § 939.25(2).

D. Section 939.66(4): "An attempt in violation of § 939.32 to commit the crime charged."

An attempt to commit the charged crime is always a lesser included offense under subsection (4). An implicit qualification on this rule is that the attempt must in fact be a crime. This qualification was recognized by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Melvin,[26] where the court held that a defendant was not entitled to an instruction on attempted homicide by reckless conduct because there was no such offense; one cannot attempt to commit a crime which only requires reckless conduct.[27]

Note that several crimes are defined to punish an attempt equally with the completed crime: § 161.41, Possession of a Controlled Substance; §§ 940.41-.49, Intimidation of Witnesses and Victims; § 948.07, Child Enticement; and § 948.605(3), Discharge of Firearm in a School Zone. In these situations, of course, the attempt is not lesser included with respect to the completed crime.

E. The crime-specific provisions.

Several subsections of § 939.66 declare specific offenses to be included crimes of other offenses. These have become necessary to preserve lesser included offenses where they are logically appropriate but where the statutory drafting style and the strict statutory elements test combine to eliminate them. The individual subsections are discussed briefly below.

1. Section 939.66(2m): "A crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged."

This provision was created in 1987, apparently in response to the decision in State v. Richards,[28] which applied the strict comparison-of-the-statutory-elements test to hold that simple battery was not a lesser included offense of aggravated battery. Since that time, § 940.19, the principal battery statute, has been extensively revised and numerous special battery statutes have been created. See §§ 940.20, 940.201, 940.203, 940.205, 940.207, and 940.208.

In determining whether one battery offense is "less serious" than another, the appropriate test is probably the same as that used for homicide offenses: comparing the maximum penalties. (See the discussion of § 939.66(2) in section I. B., above.) Note that unlike the similar provision for homicides in § 939.66(2), this subsection includes "equally serious" types of battery – that is, those with the same penalties.

2. Section 939.66(2p): "A crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of violation under s. 948.02 than the one charged."

This subsection relates to sexual assault of a child. As amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 80, § 948.02 defines five first degree offenses [one Class A felony and four Class B felonies], one second degree offense [Class C felony], and one offense involving failure to act by a person responsible for the welfare of a child [Class F felony].

3. Section 939.66(2r): "A crime which is a less serious type of violation under s. 943.23 than the one charged."

This subsection relates to offenses defined in the statute titled, "Operating a Vehicle Without the Owner's Consent." (Included are offenses referred to as "carjacking." See § 943.23(1g).) The maximum penalties are compared to determine whether an offense is "less serious."[29]

4. Section 939.66(4m): "A crime of failure to timely pay child support under s. 948.22(3) when the crime charged is failure to pay child support for more than 120 days under § 948.22(2)."

This subsection relates to the felony nonsupport offense prohibited by § 948.22(2) and the misdemeanor offense defined in sub. (3) of the same statute. The distinguishing feature is the duration of the failure to pay support: if it is 120 days or more, the offense is a felony; if less than 120 days, the offense is a misdemeanor.

5. Section 939.66(5): "The crime of attempted battery when the crime charged is sexual assault, sexual assault of a child, robbery, mayhem, or aggravated battery or an attempt to commit any of them."

Under this subsection, attempted battery is an included offense of sexual assault, sexual assault of a child, robbery, mayhem, and aggravated battery, and of an attempt to commit any of those offenses, even though attempted battery may require proof of elements not contained in the enumerated offenses. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that this subsection limits attempted battery as an included offense only of the offenses listed.[30] This may be an overstatement, since attempted battery may well be an included offense of crimes not enumerated in subsection (5) if other subsections of § 939.66 are satisfied. For example, it would be an included crime under subsection (4) where battery is charged.

6. Section 939.66(6): "A crime specified in s. 940.285(2)(b)4. or 5. when the crime charged is specified in ss. 940.19(2) to (6), 940.225(1), (2), or (3), or 940.30."

The "crime[s] specified in s. 940.285(2)(b)4. or 5." are misdemeanor offenses involving abuse of individuals at risk. This provision makes them included offenses of felony battery crimes [§ 940.19(2) to (6)], first, second, and third degree sexual assault [§ 940.225(1), (2), or (3)], and false imprisonment [§ 940.30].

7. Section 939.66(6c): "A crime that is a less serious type of violation under s. 940.285 than the one charged."

Section 940.285 defines several different offenses involving the abuse of individuals at risk. The maximum penalties are compared to determine whether an offense is "less serious."[31]

8. Section 939.66(6e): "A crime that is a less serious type of violation under s. 940.295 than the one charged."

Section 940.295 defines several different offenses involving the abuse and neglect of patients and residents of various facilities. The maximum penalties are compared to determine whether an offense is "less serious."[32]

9. Section 939.66(7): "The crime specified in s. 940.11(2) when the crime charged is specified in s. 940.11(1)."

"The crime specified in s. 940.11(2)" is hiding or burying a corpse; the "crime specified in s. 940.11(1)" is mutilating, disfiguring, or dismembering a corpse.

II. If an offense is "lesser included," when is it proper to submit an instruction on that offense?

Once it has been determined that a crime is a lesser included offense of the charged crime, the trial judge must decide whether the evidence warrants the giving of the instruction. The evidentiary standard is necessary because juries are not to be given the discretion to pick and choose the offense of which the defendant should be found guilty.[33] "Juries cannot rightly convict of the lesser merely from sympathy or for the purpose of reaching an agreement. They are bound by the evidence. . . ."[34]

A. The general rule.

The evidentiary standard for determining when the instruction on the lesser crime should be given was stated as follows in Zenou v. State:

> . . . . if the evidence, in one reasonable view, would suffice to prove guilt of the higher degree beyond a reasonable doubt, and if, under a different, but reasonable view, the evidence would suffice to prove guilt of the lower degree beyond a reasonable doubt, but leave a reasonable doubt as to some element included in the higher degree but not in the lower, the court should, if requested, submit the lower degree as well as the higher.[35]

The court in Zenou went on to describe why the lesser included offense instruction is proper when this test is met:

> . . . . Both the state and the defendant have a right to have the lower degree submitted so that the jury will not be subjected to the choice of either acquitting or convicting of the higher degree where it is really convinced of only the lower degree. Ordinarily, if a court is in doubt, it should submit both degrees upon request.[36]

The test has been upheld in the face of a challenge to its constitutionality. In Ross v. State,[37] the court rejected the defendant's contention that an instruction should be given whenever there is any evidence probative of the lesser offense.[38] The court held that the test did not deny the defendant due process by requiring that there be a reasonable basis in the evidence for the instruction on the lesser offense. To add instructions on offenses not supported by a reasonable basis would not be in the defendant's interest, said the court, since it would make compromise verdicts more likely in cases where acquittal would otherwise have been proper.

In State v. Bergenthal, the court elaborated on the application of the evidentiary standard:

> The key word in the rule is "reasonable." The rule does not suggest some near automatic inclusion of all lesser but included offenses as additional options to a jury. Only if "under a different, but reasonable view," the evidence is sufficient to establish guilt of the lower degree and also leave a reasonable doubt as to some particular element included in the higher degree but not the lower, should the lesser crime also be submitted to the jury. However, there is not to be read into the rule the requirement that "there are not reasonable grounds on the evidence to convict of the greater offense." That goes too far. Where the defendant is able to demonstrate that there is no reasonable view of the evidence that warrants conviction on the greater offense, and the trial court agrees, there remains no issue on such charge to go to the jury. The purpose of multiple verdicts is to cover situations where under different, but reasonable, views of the evidence there are grounds either for conviction of the greater or of the lesser offense. The lesser degree verdict is not to be submitted to the jury unless there exists reasonable grounds for conviction of the lesser offense and acquittal on the greater.[39]

There are, therefore, two requirements established by the evidentiary standard: 1) reasonable grounds for acquittal on the offense charged (and on other instructed offenses greater than that requested); 2) reasonable grounds for conviction on the lesser offense requested. In assessing the "reasonableness," the evidence should be viewed in the light most favorable to the defendant.[40]

In homicide cases, where all less serious types of homicide are included crimes under § 939.66(3), there must be reasonable grounds for acquittal on all degrees of homicide which are more serious than the offense on which an instruction is requested.[41] However, in at least one situation, full application of this test is not necessary: where the evidence supports instructing on the complete privilege of self defense, an instruction on "imperfect self defense" should always be submitted on request.[42] Thus, in a case where first degree intentional homicide is charged and the evidence supports submitting the complete privilege of self defense, an instruction on second degree intentional homicide under § 940.01(2)(b) (unnecessary defensive force) is always appropriate. A similar situation occurs where first degree intentional homicide is charged and the evidence supports an instruction on the defense of voluntary intoxication: it is error to refuse to instruct on first degree reckless homicide as a lesser included offense.[43]

B. A "reasonable view of the evidence" and inconsistent defenses.

Questions may arise in applying the general evidentiary rule in cases where submitting the lesser included offense appears to be inconsistent with defense testimony or the apparent defense theory of the case. For example, should a lesser offense involving recklessness be submitted where a defendant charged with an intentional crime claims to have acted in self defense? Or, should a lesser offense be submitted where the defense is entirely exculpatory?[44]

In the Committee's judgment, these questions are best resolved by applying the general test to all the evidence by deciding whether a reasonable view of the evidence supports any lesser included offense instruction that is requested. Trial courts "must recognize the fact that a jury could disbelieve the defendant's version of the facts."[45] Courts should look at all the evidence and the reasonable inferences it supports to determine what offenses are supported by different, but reasonable, views of that evidence.[46]

In State v. Thomas,[47] the Wisconsin Court of Appeals stated this rule in the following way:

> We hold that the defendant or the state may request and receive lesser included offense instructions, even when the defendant has given exculpatory testimony, if under a reasonable but different view of the record, the evidence and any testimony other than that part of the defendant's testimony which is exculpatory supports acquittal on the greater charge and conviction on the lesser charge.

III. The necessity of a request for a lesser included offense instruction; the trial judge's sua sponte authority or obligation to give such an instruction.

A. The general rules.

Wisconsin case law establishes three general rules relating to the trial judge's duty and authority to instruct on lesser included offenses. Assuming that an offense qualifies as "included" under § 939.66 and that the evidentiary test is satisfied, the following rules apply.

First, it is error not to submit the lesser included offense if requested by the state or the defendant.[48] Both the state and the defendant have the right to request that a lesser offense be submitted, "so that the jury will not be subjected to the choice of either acquitting or convicting of the higher degree where it is really convinced of only the lower degree."[49] If the state requests an instruction on a lesser included offense and the evidentiary test is met, an instruction is required, even if the defendant opposes it.[50]

Second, in the absence of a request by the state or the defendant, it is not error for the trial court to fail to instruct on a lesser included offense.[51] This is the general rule for all sua sponte instructions in Wisconsin[52] and contrasts with the duty of California trial judges, for example, who must instruct on all "general principles of law" even in the absence of a request.[53] In California this duty extends to lesser included offenses[54] and is apparently intended to protect the defendant from incompetent counsel.[55]

Third, if no request has been made, Wisconsin trial courts apparently have the authority, as opposed to the duty or obligation, to instruct on a lesser included offense. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that "(t)he determining of instructions is not entirely within the control of the defendant because the court may without any request instruct on the degrees of the offense the evidence will sustain. . . ."[56]

While these general rules sound clear, reconciling them with each other and with other principles raises some difficult issues.

B. No duty to instruct sua sponte versus "plain error."

The Wisconsin rule appears to eliminate the trial judge's obligation to give lesser included offense instructions sua sponte,[57] but this may not be the case in practice. This is because failure to instruct, even in the absence of a request, may be reviewed by an appellate court and may be grounds for reversal where it amounts to "plain error."[58] Further, instructions which "misstate the law" may also be reviewed in the absence of proper objection.[59] It is likely that the failure to instruct on a lesser included offense that is fairly raised by the evidence could be characterized as "affecting substantial rights" or that instructions which omit a fairly raised lesser included offense could be characterized as "misstating the law." Thus, although the Wisconsin trial judge is not specifically required to give an instruction on a lesser included offense in the absence of a request, it may be a good idea for the judge to explore the issue in a proper case. The possible problems with doing so are discussed below.

C. Sua sponte instructions versus trial strategy.

One of the primary reasons for the Wisconsin rule requiring a request for a lesser included offense instruction is the recognition that requesting or not requesting a lesser included offense instruction is largely a matter of trial strategy.[60] The theory is that the defendant may choose to test the state's evidence on the greater offense and take the chance that it will be found to be insufficient, requiring an acquittal. For the trial judge to instruct on an included crime where the defendant has chosen to go "all or nothing" on the charged crime alone may raise questions of unfair interference with trial strategy.

D. Anticipating problems at the instruction conference.

The Committee recommends that the possible problems regarding the submission of lesser included offenses be anticipated and dealt with at the instruction conference. The defendant must be present; the conference must be recorded and should raise all appropriate considerations. It is good practice to ask the state and the defendant if instructions on lesser included offenses are requested.[61] If requests are not made for offenses that the trial judge believes may be raised by the evidence, specific inquiry should be made regarding the defendant's strategic decision not to request submission of that offense. The Committee recommends that the defendant be addressed personally in this regard even though the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that a defendant is bound by counsel's decision not to request an instruction.[62] Given the potential importance of the decision[63] and the close relationship of the judge's sua sponte instruction authority[64] to the need to protect defendants from ineffective counsel, it may be significant to have the record indicate that the defendant fully participated in the decision.[65]

IV. Instructing the jury on the transition between the charged crime and a lesser included crime.

Wis JI-Criminal 112 and 122[66] offer suggested uniform instructions for the transition between the instruction on the charged crime and the instruction for a lesser included crime. The specific issue with which these instructions deal is what result must be reached with regard to the charged crime before moving on to the included crime. The objective is to advise the jury of its options without having any coercive effect on free deliberation.

Wis JI-Criminal 112 and 122 resolve the issue by advising the jury to make every reasonable effort to reach unanimous agreement on the charged crime before moving on to the lesser included crime. This advice is contained in the following paragraph:

> You should make every reasonable effort to agree unanimously on your verdict on the charge of (name charged crime) before considering the offense of (name lesser included crime). However, if after full and complete consideration of the evidence, you conclude that further deliberation would not result in unanimous agreement on the offense of (name charged crime), you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of (name lesser included crime).[67]

The basis for this instruction is the assumption that it would be error for the instruction to require the jury to be unanimous in finding the defendant not guilty of the charged crime before considering the lesser offense. This conclusion has not been explicitly adopted by the Wisconsin Supreme Court,[68] but is implicit in two earlier decisions[69] and has been adopted in other states.[70]

At the other extreme from requiring unanimity on the charged crime is to allow the jury to consider any of the submitted offenses without regard to sequence. This theory was rejected on the ground that it is reasonable to ask that the jury's attention first be focused on the charged crime.

V. Other issues.

A. Instructing on an offense for which the statute of limitations has run.

In State v. Muenter, 138 Wis.2d 374, 406 N.W.2d 415 (1987), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that an instruction should be given on a lesser included offense even if the statute of limitations has run on that crime. Muenter was charged with several felonies in violation of the State Banking Code. The jury was instructed on lesser included misdemeanor offenses on which the statute of limitations had run and found the defendant guilty of those misdemeanors. On appeal, the court held that "the running of the statute of limitations does not preclude the jury from reaching a verdict convicting the defendant of a crime; it rather precludes the trial court from entering a judgment of conviction on the finding of guilt."[71] The court concluded that this result does not "work a fraud upon the jury's verdict." The evidentiary support for submitting the lesser included offense must, of course, still exist.[72]

B. Attorney argument regarding lesser included offenses.

In State v. Neuser, 191 Wis.2d 131, 528 N.W.2d 49 (Ct. App. 1995), a conviction was reversed because the prosecutor engaged in improper argument regarding the court's submission of a lesser included offense. The following remarks were made: "As to the lesser included offense, the court did not submit that. The defense requested that and the court granted the request. It's not the court ordering that it be done." 191 Wis.2d 131, 137. The court of appeals held that this statement was improper for two reasons: it misstated the law, and it presumed to speak for the trial court. The court described the proper scope of argument:

> The question of whether a lesser included offense is to be submitted is a legal issue which is resolved between the court and counsel. It does not involve the jury, and the proceedings relative to the question are not played out before the jury. With the court having made that decision, it is not within the province of either counsel to opine to the jury why the court may have chosen to do so. Rather, the role of counsel is to argue whether the evidence supports the greater, the lesser or neither charge.

25. Under the pre-1989 homicide statutes, cases had held that if the charged offense contained the "conduct evincing a depraved mind" standard, subsection (3) does not apply, because that standard does not embody criminal intent. See, for example, State v. Verhasselt, cited in note 3, supra. The same result occurs under current law, where it is clear that first degree reckless offenses are crimes involving "criminal recklessness," which is clearly defined as requiring awareness of the risk, not criminal intent. See § 939.24.

The same result would occur under current statutes. But see State v. Holt, 128 Wis.2d 110, 382 N.W.2d 679 (Ct. App. 1985), holding that if there really was not sufficient evidence to support the intoxication instruction, the instruction on the less serious degree of homicide is not required.

60. Turner v. State, 64 Wis.2d 45, 218 N.W.2d 502 (1974).

61. Finalizing the instructions at the instruction conference may help to avoid the issue addressed in State v. Thurmond, 2004 WI App 49, 270 Wis.2d 477, 677 N.W.2d 655. Thurmond was tried before a jury on charges of first degree sexual assault, kidnapping, and attempted armed robbery. During deliberations that lasted for two days, the jury forwarded several questions to the judge; the judge reinstructed on reasonable doubt and later gave Wis JI-Criminal 520. After the jurors indicated they had reached agreement on one count, the state requested an additional instruction on second degree sexual assault and attempted "un-armed" robbery. The jury returned verdicts finding the defendant guilty of second degree sexual assault and kidnapping, and not guilty of attempted robbery. The court of appeals reversed the convictions, relying primarily on the likelihood that the jury may have believed that the trial court was recommending the finding of guilt to the lesser included offenses. And, the fact that the verdict came relatively quickly after the additional instructions were given suggests that the jury failed to thoughtfully consider the lesser included offenses. The court did not adopt a per se rule prohibiting giving lesser included offense instructions in this situation and noted it could find little guidance in Wisconsin law on this question.

62. Green v. State, 38 Wis.2d 361, 156 N.W.2d 477 (1968).

63. In homicide cases in particular, the lesser included offense issue may be almost as important as guilt or innocence. The difference between conviction on first degree intentional homicide (mandatory life imprisonment) and on second degree intentional homicide or reckless homicide is obviously great. It should be a matter of record that the defendant was fully aware of the consequences of not requesting a lesser included offense instruction in a homicide case.

Added support for the suggestion that the trial judge inquire on the record is offered by the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Beck v. Alabama, 447 U.S. 625 (1980). Beck reviewed the Alabama procedures for imposing the death penalty which included a statutory prohibition on submitting lesser, noncapital offenses to the jury. The Supreme Court held that the Alabama procedure violated the defendant's right to due process, "by introducing a level of uncertainty and unreliability into the fact-finding process that cannot be tolerated in a capital case." 447 U.S. 625, 643. While Beck is concerned with the death penalty, its reasoning should be equally applicable to noncapital cases, at least to the extent of assuring that the defendant has actively participated in and agreed with the decision not to request the submission of lesser included offenses supported by the evidence.

64. The problems discussed here were acknowledged by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Felton, 110 Wis.2d 485, 329 N.W.2d 161 (1983). Felton noted the following statement from Price v. State, 37 Wis.2d 117, 130, 154 N.W.2d 202 (1967):

> [T]he battle might be so unequal due to the disparity of the skill of counsel that justice would require, in the unusual case, that such instructions [referring to instructions offered sua sponte] be offered for counsel's consideration.

65. Wisconsin appellate courts have not held that the decision on requesting a lesser included offense instruction is solely for the defendant. Three court of appeals cases have dealt with the issue in the context of claims of ineffective assistance of counsel. In State v. Ambuehl, 145 Wis.2d 343, 425 N.W.2d 649 (Ct. App. 1988), the defendant sought to establish ineffective assistance of counsel on the ground that defense counsel did not adequately consult with her on the question of requesting an instruction on a lesser included offense. The court rejected the claim but apparently accepted the defendant's argument that the decision on requesting lesser included offense instructions is one for the defendant to make, not defense counsel. Two more recent decisions suggest that the decision is one of trial strategy for defense counsel to make. See State v. Eckert, 203 Wis.2d 497, 510, 553 N.W.2d 539 (Ct. App. 1996): ". . . a defendant does not receive ineffective assistance of counsel where defense counsel has discussed with the client the general theory of defense, and when based on that general theory, trial counsel makes a strategic decision not to request a lesser-included instruction because it would be inconsistent with, or harmful to, the general theory of defense." Also see, State v. Kimbrough, 2001 WI App 138, 246 Wis.2d 648, 630 N.W.2d 752.

A footnote to the previous version of this special material [c. 1995] cited the commentary to the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice, Standard 4-5.2, (2d ed. 1980), stating that the defendant should be the one to decide whether to seek submission to the jury of lesser included offenses. In the current third edition of the standards, the decision on lesser included offenses is not listed as one of those that is for the defendant personally and the comment quoted above has been deleted and replaced with the following: "It is also important in a jury trial for defense counsel to consult fully with the accused about any lesser included offenses the trial court may be willing to submit to the jury."

66. Wis JI-Criminal 112 is for cases where there is a single defendant; Wis JI-Criminal 122 is for cases with co-defendants.

68. The court of appeals discussed this issue in State v. McNeal, 95 Wis.2d 63, 288 N.W.2d 874 (Ct. App. 1980). The defendant challenged a transition instruction that told the jury to consider the lesser included offense only if they found the defendant not guilty of the charged crime. The court held that the defendant had waived the right to challenge the instruction, but then went on to say that the instruction correctly stated the law, citing Dillon v. State, 137 Wis. 655, 119 N.W. 352 (1909). The Committee reads Dillon as being concerned primarily with the order in which the offenses are considered and as being implicit support for the approach to transition recommended here. See the discussion in note 68, below.

69. In Payne v. State, 199 Wis. 615, 227 N.W. 258 (1929), the jury foreman specifically asked the trial court whether the jury had to reach unanimous agreement whether the defendant was guilty or not guilty of the charged crime before considering lesser included offenses. On appeal, the defendant claimed the trial judge's response was such that it told the jury unanimous agreement was required. The supreme court held that the trial judge's complete response would not give the jury that impression, implying that there was merit to the defendant's claim that it would have been error to require unanimous agreement before moving to the lesser included offenses.

In Dillon v. State, 137 Wis. 655, 119 N.W. 352 (1909), the instructions were described as telling the jury to consider the lesser included offense upon "its failure to find the defendant guilty of some higher degree of offense." In one view, the failure to agree unanimously on guilt on the charged crime is a "failure to find the defendant guilty."

SM-9 WHEN A JURY REQUESTS TO HEAR/SEE AUDIO/VISUAL EVIDENCE DURING DELIBERATIONS

This Special Material outlines the procedure that a trial judge should follow when an audio/visual recording has been received into evidence and played at trial and a jury requests to listen to or watch the recording during deliberations. Discussed below are the two Wisconsin cases that have addressed this issue.

Deciding whether to replay the recording

The decision to replay an audio/visual recording is within the trial court's discretion.[1] Factors the court should consider in deciding whether to replay the exhibit include:

- whether the recording will aid the jury in proper consideration of the case;
- whether a party will be unduly prejudiced by replaying the exhibit;
- whether the exhibit could be improperly used by the jury, and;
- whether granting a replay request will unfairly over emphasize a particular piece of evidence.[2]

Before responding to a jury request for a replay, the court shall advise the parties of the request and solicit comment, ideally with the defendant present.[3] Only the portions of the recording played during trial may be played during deliberations.[4] Allowing jurors to take notes during the replay is within the discretion of the trial judge.[5]

Recommended procedure for replaying a recording

If the court decides to replay the recording, the best practice is for the trial judge to bring the jury back to the courtroom and replay the recording with all parties present in open court. In Franklin v. State, the defendant's audio-recorded confession was played for the jury during trial. 74 Wis. 2d 717, 720, 247 N.W.2d 721 (1976). During deliberations, the jury requested to hear it again. Over defense counsel's objection, the trial judge sent the tape back into the jury room with a tape player. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held, "[w]e cannot approve of this practice which entails the risk of breakage or accidental erasure of the tape while it is beyond the trial court's supervision and which presents the danger of overemphasis of the confession relative to testimony given from the witness stand." Id. at 724. The Court held that the proper procedure was that the trial court retain control of the jury's exposure to confessions. Id. at 724-25. Thus, if the court decides to replay a recorded confession, the jury should return to the courtroom where the confession is replayed or reread. Id. at 725.

Thirty years after Franklin, the Court addressed this issue again in State v. Anderson, this time in the context of a video recorded forensic interview of a child victim. 2006 WI 77, 291 Wis. 2d 673, 717 N.W.2d 74.[6] The forensic interview was received into evidence and played in its entirety at trial. Id. ¶7. During deliberations, the jury requested that the "victim's videotaped interview, be sent to the jury room and that a television and VCR be provided so that the jurors could watch the victim's videotaped interview." Id. ¶10. The trial court granted the request over defense counsel's objection. Id. ¶11. The Court concluded that the circuit court properly exercised its discretion in allowing the jury to hear and see the victim's videotaped interview but failed to apply the correct legal standard when it allowed the jury to view the videotape in the jury room. Id. at ¶29. The trial court should have followed the procedure outlined in Franklin and brought the jury back into the courtroom to view the victim's interview in open court. Id. at ¶30. This procedure "minimizes the risk of breakage or erasure of the recording and, more importantly, allows a circuit court to guide the jury, with the assistance of all counsel, so that no part of the recording is overemphasized relative to the testimony given from the witness stand." Id.

While the case law only addresses recorded statements, the Committee has concluded that the above-described procedure applies to any recorded evidence. When only a portion of the recording was played during trial, the court must take special care to ensure that only that section is played during deliberations. The court or the parties should make a record of exactly what was played during deliberations by noting the beginning and end times from the exhibit.

SM-10 GRAND JURY PROCEEDINGS

The grand jury in Wisconsin is an institution created and controlled by §§ 968.40 through 968.53. The judge plays a limited role: the judge orders the creation of the grand jury; sees to it that a full grand jury is selected and sworn; instructs the grand jurors before they begin their work; presides over proceedings in which statutory immunity for witnesses is sought; accepts lists of all witnesses called by, progress reports from and indictments returned by the grand jury during its session; takes appropriate action when indictments are returned; and discharges the grand jury.

The procedural and legal aspects of a grand jury proceeding are outlined at CR-46, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook, Volume I, Criminal and Traffic. This Special Material provides scripted material that is not included in the Benchbook.

I. Swearing in the Grand Jurors

The judge shall administer the following oath[1] to grand jurors before they begin the performance of their duties:

> "You, as grand jurors for the county of _____, do solemnly swear or affirm that you will diligently inquire as to all matters and things which come before this grand jury; that you will keep all matters which come before this grand jury secret; that you will indict no person for envy, hatred or malice; that you will not leave any person unindicted for love, fear, favor, affection or hope of reward; and that you will indict truly, according to the best of your understanding."

II. Swearing in the Court Reporters

The judge must administer to each reporter and assistant the following oath:

"Do you solemnly swear that you will faithfully record and transcribe all the proceedings before the grand jury and keep secret the matter relative to such proceedings?"[2]

III. Charge to the Grand Jury

It is the duty of the court to instruct the grand jury.[3] The following is recommended.

"The function of the grand jury is not to determine guilt or innocence but rather to investigate possible violations of the criminal law and decide whether the person or persons about whom evidence is presented should be brought to trial. The only job of the grand jury is to return indictments and, if such is appropriate, to report its progress to the court.[4] These progress reports, if any, must be prepared and limited so as not to violate the secrecy rule, and unless so limited, they may not be received by the court.

"Your first duty is to select a presiding juror and a clerk. It shall be the duty of the clerk to preserve the minutes of the proceedings and all exhibits.[5]

"All 17 jurors must attend each session unless excused by the presiding juror for good and sufficient reason.[6]

"No business may be transacted by the grand jury unless at least 14 members are in attendance.[7]

"It is the duty of the district attorney of the county to attend your grand jury sessions whenever the jury so desires for the purpose of examining witnesses in your presence, giving you advice upon any legal matter, issuing subpoenas and other process to bring witnesses before you and helping to draw bills of indictment.[8]

"It is the duty of the presiding juror to return to the judge a list, signed by the presiding juror, of all witnesses who are sworn before the grand jury.[9]

"All witnesses brought before the grand jury shall be put under oath. The presiding juror, the district attorney, or other prosecuting officer shall have the authority to administer such oath.[10]

"Any witness subpoenaed to appear before you has the right to confer with and obtain the legal advice of an attorney.[11] Although the attorney is not entitled to be present during the questioning before the grand jury, the witness should be allowed to confer with the attorney outside the jury room whenever the witness so desires.[12] Any witness also has the privilege against self-incrimination granted by the Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution. Pursuant to that privilege, the witness may refuse to answer questions before the grand jury. It is the job of the district attorney and the court to decide whether the witness has properly invoked that privilege.

"Any witness should be advised by the prosecuting officer(s) that the witness has a privilege against self-incrimination and has the right to confer with counsel. Such advice should appear on the grand jury record.[13]

"All grand jury deliberations are to be secret, and no one is permitted to be present at your sessions except the jury, the official sworn reporter(s) and typist(s), the prosecuting officer(s), the witness under examination, and a duly sworn interpreter, if one is required.

"The primary duty of the grand jury is to weigh the evidence against the accused. If the evidence 'excites in your minds after careful consideration an honest reasonable belief that the accused committed the offense charged,'[14] you the grand jury may return an indictment of the accused for the offense charged. Only such evidence as is presented during the grand jury sessions shall be considered. You should not subject yourselves to the opinions or accounts of other persons, of the media, or of any other source regarding such evidence. No indictment shall be returned unless at least 12 grand jurors concur therein.[15]

"No grand juror shall be allowed to state or testify in court in what manner he or she or any other member of the jury voted on any question before you, or what opinion was expressed by any juror in relation to any question.[16]

"No grand juror or officer of the court shall disclose the fact that any indictment for a felony has been found against any person not in custody or under recognizance, otherwise than by issuing or executing process on such indictment, until the person has been arrested.[17]

"The grand jurors normally serve for a period of 31 consecutive days, unless more days are necessary to complete service. The court may discharge the grand jury at any time.[18]

"When the grand jury is discharged, all transcripts of testimony, minutes of proceedings, exhibits and other records of the grand jury shall be collected by the clerk of the grand jury and delivered, as the jury directs, either to the attorney general or to the district attorney, or, upon approval of the court, to the clerk of the court who shall impound them subject to further order or orders of the court."[19]

IV. Inquiry When a Witness Claims the Privilege Against Self-Incrimination; Grants of Immunity

The judge presides over proceedings relating to the assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination. See Special Material 55 for an outline of a suggested procedure.

COMMENT

SM-10 was originally published in 1974, withdrawn in 1993, and republished in 1995. This revision updated statutory references and was approved by the Committee in December 2003.

This Special Material was withdrawn in 1993 because procedures for grand juries are outlined at CR 46, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook, Volume I, Criminal and Traffic. It was restored because it provides scripted material that is not included in the Benchbook.

1. The oath is based on § 968.41, which specifies the content of the oath which must be administered.

2. Section 968.43(2) requires that "[b]efore assuming the duties prescribed in this section, each reporter shall make and file an oath faithfully to record and transcribe all the proceedings before the grand jury and to keep secret the matters relative to the proceedings." The oath recommended follows this statutory language. Violation of the oath is punishable as a Class H felony. § 968.43(3).

3. State v. Lawler, 221 Wis. 423, 427, 267 N.W. 65 (1936), states that ". . . it is the duty of the court to instruct the [grand] jury. . . ."

4. In re Grand Jury Report, 204 Wis. 409, 235 N.W. 789 (1931).

5. Section 968.42. These minutes and exhibits are not a matter of public record. Havenor v. State, 125 Wis. 444, 104 N.W. 116 (1905).

6. Section 968.48. There are to be at least 17 qualified jurors on the grand jury. Section 968.40(4).

7. Section 968.48.

8. Sections 968.47 and 978.05(4).

9. Section 968.44 refers to "witnesses who are sworn before the grand jury." It is sufficient that witnesses give an affirmation rather than an oath. § 906.03.

10. Section 968.44.

11. Section 968.45(1) provides in part as follows:

> Any witness appearing before a grand jury may have counsel present, but the counsel shall not be allowed to examine his or her client, cross-examine other witnesses or argue before the judge. Counsel may consult with his or her client while before a grand jury.

It is generally conceded that a witness has no constitutional right to the assistance of counsel at the grand jury proceeding. A plurality opinion in United States v. Mandujano, 425 U.S. 564 (1976), held that the right to counsel under the 6th Amendment does not apply at the grand jury because no criminal proceedings have been instituted. Federal courts of appeals have held that the right to counsel does not attach at grand jury proceedings. See, for example, United States v. Ramsey, 785 F.2d 184, 193 (7th Cir. 1986).

12. Section 968.45.

13. At this point, the former version of SM-10 provided special advice for "target witnesses." Special warnings are not required for "targets"; the general advice regarding the privilege against self-incrimination is sufficient. United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181 (1977). [Also see State v. Ryan, 79 Wis.2d 83, 255 N.W.2d 910 (1977): a John Doe witness is not entitled to a "target witness" warning.]

SM-12 JOHN DOE PROCEEDINGS

CONTENTS

Scope

The Wisconsin John Doe proceeding is a criminal investigatory inquiry provided for by § 968.26. Its purpose is to ascertain whether a crime has been committed and by whom. Only a judge may conduct a John Doe proceeding. The judge has the power to subpoena and examine witnesses and to determine the extent of the examination.

The procedural and legal aspects of a John Doe proceeding are outlined at CR-46, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook, Volume I, Criminal and Traffic. This Special Material provides scripted material that is not included in the Benchbook.

I. Instruction to a Witness[1]

After administering the oath or affirmation, the judge should address the witness as follows or direct the prosecutor to do so.[2]

A. Introduction

"You are advised that you are appearing in a John Doe proceeding before (me) (Judge _____) as Circuit Court Judge for _____ County.

"Under Wisconsin law, the circuit judge has the power to subpoena witnesses and compel testimony before this John Doe. You are directed to answer all questions put to you, remembering your oath or affirmation.

"If you believe that a truthful answer to any question asked of you would incriminate you, that is, subject you to criminal prosecution, you may refuse to answer the question on the grounds that it may incriminate you.[3] Do you understand that?

"Do you understand that your answers to questions put to you may be used against you by this John Doe or in another legal proceeding?

"Do you understand that if you testify falsely you may be criminally prosecuted for perjury or false swearing committed during your testimony before this John Doe proceeding?[4]

"Under Wisconsin law, several types of confidential communications are privileged. These include[5] communications between spouses, between a health care provider and patient, between attorney and client, and between a person and a member of the clergy. Do you understand that you may refuse to answer any question asked of you if it would require you to reveal conversations which are privileged by law?

"Do you understand that there are no other lawful grounds upon which you may refuse to answer questions before this John Doe?"

B. Right to Counsel[6]

"You are also advised that you have the right to have an attorney present with you during your testimony. Further, you may confer with your attorney during your testimony. However, your attorney will not be allowed to ask you questions, cross-examine other witnesses, or argue before the judge. Do you understand that?"

[IF THE WITNESS APPEARS WITH COUNSEL, READ THE "INSTRUCTION TO COUNSEL" PROVIDED BELOW AFTER COMPLETING THE INSTRUCTION TO THE WITNESS.]

[IF THE WITNESS APPEARS WITHOUT COUNSEL, ADD THE FOLLOWING.]

"You are appearing before this John Doe without an attorney. Do you understand that (here identify the prosecutors) represent the state of Wisconsin and may not and cannot act as your attorney? Do you understand that if you do not have an attorney but wish to consult with one about these proceedings or have an attorney appear with you, you will be required to return and testify at a future time? Do you wish to have an attorney present with you at this time? If not, has anyone made any threats or promises to get you to give up your right to consult with an attorney or have an attorney appear with you during this John Doe?"[7]

C. Conclusion

"Your testimony at this proceeding will be recorded word-for-word and will be transcribed. Do you understand that?

"I am giving you a copy of the instruction which I have just read to you. Do you acknowledge that you have received a copy of this instruction?"

II. Instruction to Attorney Representing a John Doe Witness

The following should be read to the attorney who appears with a witness subpoenaed before the John Doe.[8]

"(Name of witness) appears with Attorney _____. Attorney _____, you are advised that you are subject to the restrictions set forth in § 968.26(3)(c) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

"Section 968.26(3)(c) allows a witness subpoenaed before a John Doe proceeding to have counsel present at the examination. However, you may not examine your client, cross-examine other witnesses, or argue before the judge.

"If your client wishes to consult with you before answering any question, your client may do so off the record."

III. Order of Secrecy[9]

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IF A SECRET JOHN DOE PROCEEDING HAS BEEN AUTHORIZED.]

"Under Wisconsin law, a circuit judge may order that a John Doe proceeding be secret. That has been done in this case. You are ordered to maintain the secrecy of this John Doe proceeding and to inform no one of the questions asked, the answers given, or any other matters observed or heard during this proceeding. Violation of this secrecy order may be subject to a fine not to exceed $10,000 or imprisonment not to exceed 9 months, or both.[10]

"You are now being given a copy of the Order of Secrecy. Do you acknowledge receipt of this Order of Secrecy?"

IV. Inquiry When a Witness Claims the Privilege Against Self-Incrimination; Grants of Immunity

The judge presides over proceedings relating to the assertion of the privilege against self-incrimination. Section 968.26(3)(d) provides: "A court, on the motion of a district attorney, may compel a person to testify or produce evidence under s. 972.08(1). The person is immune from prosecution as provided in s. 972.08(1), subject to the restrictions under s. 972.085." Note that while a John Doe proceeding is conducted by a judge, the compelling of testimony and granting of immunity is undertaken by a court. See Special Material 55 for recommended procedures for compelling testimony, evaluating a claim of the privilege against self-incrimination, and the granting of immunity.

COMMENT

SM-12 was originally published in 1974, withdrawn in 1993, and republished in 1995. It was revised in 1999, 2007, 2009, 2010, and 2011. This revision reflects extensive changes to John Doe procedure made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 64 and was approved by the Committee in June 2019.

This Special Material was withdrawn in 1993 because procedures for John Doe proceedings are outlined at CR 46, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook, Volume I, Criminal and Traffic. It was restored after being revised to provide scripted material that is not included in the Benchbook.

2015 Wisconsin Act 64 [effective date: October 25, 2015] made extensive changes in the standards and procedures for John Doe investigations. Among the most significant:

- the crimes that may be investigated are limited to specified felonies
    - Class A, B, C, or D felony under chs. 940 to 948 or 961 – § 968.26(1b)(a)1.
    - violation of listed statutes if a Class E, F, G, H, or I felony penalty applies – § 968.26(1b)(a)2.
    - other offenses specified in § 968.26(1b)(a)3., 4., or 4m.
    - crimes committed by a law enforcement officer, corrections officer, or state probation, parole, or extended supervision officer if the individual was engaged in his or her official duties at the time – § 968.26(1b)(a)5.

- secrecy orders apply only to the judge, the district attorney or other prosecuting attorney who participates in the proceeding, law enforcement personnel admitted to the proceeding, an interpreter who participates in the proceeding, or a reporter who makes or transcribes a record of a proceeding. See footnote 7, below.

- the proceeding may not investigate a crime that was not part of the original request unless "a majority of judicial administrative district chief judges find good cause to add specified crimes and the identification of the vote of each judge is available to the public" – § 968.26(5)(b)

- there is a six-month time limit – § 968.26(5)(a) – which "may be extended only if a majority of judicial administrative district chief judges find good cause for the extension and identification of the vote of each judge is available to the public" – § 968.26(5)(a)2.

- reserve judges may not conduct the proceeding – § 968.26 (1b)(b)

- a judge may issue a search warrant relating to a John Doe proceeding only if the judge is not presiding over that proceeding – § 968.26(5)(c)

Section 968.26 was amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 24 to provide different procedures for John Doe requests made by district attorneys and requests made by other persons. If a district attorney makes a request, "the judge shall convene a hearing . . ." Section 968.26(1m). If a person other than a district attorney makes a request, "the judge shall refer the complaint to the district attorney . . ." Section 968.26(2)(am). The district attorney must decide within 90 days whether to issue charges or refuse to issue charges. If the district attorney refuses, he or she must forward the records and explanation of the refusal to the "judge in whose jurisdiction the crime was allegedly committed." Section 968.26(2)(b). The judge "shall convene a proceeding . . . if he or she determines that a proceeding is necessary to determine if a crime has been committed." Section 968.26(2)(b).

In State ex rel. Reimann v. Circuit Court, 214 Wis.2d 605, 622, 571 N.W.2d 385 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that:

> . . . § 968.26 imposes a threshold requirement on persons filing petitions for John Doe proceedings. Before a circuit court judge's obligation to conduct an examination . . . is > triggered, the John Doe complainant must establish that he or she has "reason to believe" that a crime has been committed

> . . . [A] John Doe complainant must do more than merely allege that a crime has been committed
> . . . [the] complainant . . . must allege objective, factual assertions sufficient to support a reasonable belief that a crime has been committed.

If the Riemann test is met, the John Doe judge does not have the authority to analyze the merits of the case. Even if the judge "applied his common sense and reasonably concluded that conducting a John Doe would be a waste of time," the John Doe must be held. The John Doe judge is not to assess credibility or choose between competing inferences. State ex rel. Williams v. Fiedler, 2005 WI App 91, ¶2, 282 Wis.2d 486, 698 N.W.2d 294.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals reviewed § 968.24 as amended by 2009 Wisconsin Act 24 in Naseer v. Miller, 2010 WI App 142, 329 Wis.2d 724, 793 N.W.2d 209:

> We therefore conclude that the same interpretation of the "reason to believe" language relating to the prior statute's examination duty should also apply to the amended statute's referral duty. That is, under the amended statute, a judge has a mandatory duty to refer a John Doe complaint to the district attorney only if the four corners of the complaint provide a sufficient factual basis to establish an objective reason to believe that a crime has been committed in the judge's jurisdiction. ¶11.

Suppression of testimony is not required by statute or constitutional principles where a witness was questioned at the John Doe proceeding by a law enforcement officer who was not licensed to practice law. State v. Noble, 2002 WI 64, 253 Wis.2d 206, 646 N.W.2d 38.

John Doe proceedings are sometimes used in an attempt to secure the issuance of charges where the district attorney has refused to charge. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has upheld the constitutionality of the use of the John Doe statute in that situation. See State v. Unnamed Defendant, 150 Wis.2d 352, 441 N.W.2d 696 (1989). Also see State v. Schober, 167 Wis.2d 371, 481 N.W.2d 689 (Ct. App. 1992), holding that a criminal complaint resulting from a John Doe is subject to the regular standard for deciding whether to grant a prosecution motion to dismiss – whether dismissal "is in the public interest."

In State ex rel. Hipp v. Murray, 2008 WI 67, 310 Wis.2d 342, 750 N.W.2d 873, the court held that a John Doe judge has exclusive authority to subpoena witnesses in a John Doe proceeding; the clerk's general authority to issue subpoenas under § 885.01(1) does not apply. The court also held that the subpoenas should have been issued in this case, but "saved for another day" the issue whether a John Doe judge is required to subpoena every witness that a John Doe petitioner requests. 2008 WI 67, ¶52. [A motion for reconsideration was denied at 2008 WI 118, 314 Wis.2d 67, 756 N.W.2d 34.]

The issue "saved for another day" in State ex rel. Hipp v. Murray, supra, was addressed in State ex rel. Robins v. Madden, 2009 WI 46, 317 Wis.2d 342, 766 N.W.2d 837:

> ¶2 The issue we address today is whether the judge in a John Doe hearing is required under Wis. Stat. § 968.26 to examine all the witnesses a complainant produces and to issue subpoenas to all the witnesses a complainant wishes to produce. We read the statute as extending judicial discretion in a John Doe hearing not only to the scope of a witness's examination, but also to whether a witness need testify at all. Accordingly, we hold that a judge is not required by § 968.26 to examine all the witnesses a complainant produces at a John Doe hearing, or to subpoena all the witnesses a complainant wishes to produce.

1. The 2010 version of SM-12 included a warning to a target witness:

> You are now advised that your testimony given here can be used against you in criminal proceedings and to support the issuance of a warrant for your arrest. You can claim the privilege against self-incrimination and you have the right to have counsel present during your testimony and to consult your counsel before answering.

Both federal and state courts have rejected the need to provide investigatory targets with special warnings. The advice given all witnesses adequately apprises them of the privilege against self-incrimination and other rights. United States v. Washington, 431 U.S. 181, 189 (1977); Ryan v. State, 79 Wis.2d 83, 96, 255 N.W.2d 910 (1977).

2. Practice apparently varies with respect to whether the judge reads the advice personally or allows the prosecutor to do so. The material has been drafted to be usable in either situation.

3. In State v. Hanson, 2019 WI 63, ¶35, 387 Wis.2d 233, 928 N.W.2d 607, the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that Miranda warnings are not required for a John Doe witness, but recommended that the advice contained here be given:

> A witness at a John Doe proceeding is not subject to custodial interrogation and therefore Miranda warnings are not required. Although we do not require Miranda warnings be given at John Doe proceedings, we recommend a John Doe judge address a witness in accordance with Special Materials 12.

The court noted that this is the case even if the witness happens to be in custody on charges unrelated to the John Doe.

4. Failure to give the witness this advice will not preclude a perjury prosecution. See United States v. Wong, 431 U.S. 174, 178 (1977). However, providing the advice may impress upon the witness the seriousness and importance of the John Doe and may reinforce the obligation to testify truthfully.

5. The list of privileges is not exhaustive. See, for example, § 905.045 Domestic violence or sexual assault advocate-victim privilege. Rather, it is intended to give the witness an idea of what types of communications may be privileged. If there is reason to believe that other privileges may apply, additional description should be given.

6. The right to counsel is provided in § 968.26(3)(c): "Any witness examined under this section may have counsel present at the examination but the counsel shall not be allowed to examine his or her client, cross-examine other witnesses or argue before the judge."

7. If it appears to be necessary to take a more formal waiver of counsel at this point, see Special Material 30 which provides a model for a full waiver.

"A John Doe judge has the authority to disqualify counsel for a witness in a John Doe proceeding but must ensure that there is a record of that decision for review." Unnamed Persons Numbers 1, 2, and 3 v. State, 2003 WI 30, 260 Wis.2d 653, 660 N.W.2d 260.

8. See note 5, supra.

9. The rules relating to secrecy orders were significantly changed by 2015 Wisconsin Act 64. The judge's general authority to order that the proceeding be secret was eliminated and replaced by § 968.26(4)(a) which provides:

- a secrecy order may be issued upon a showing of good cause by the district attorney
- a secrecy order applies only to:
  - the judge
  - the district attorney or other prosecuting attorney who participates in the proceeding
  - law enforcement personnel admitted to the proceeding
  - an interpreter who participates in the proceeding
  - a reporter who makes or transcribes a record of a proceeding
- the order may not apply to any other person

The scripted material formerly provided in SM-12 was clearly directed at a witness; it has been revised to reflect the Act 64 changes.

Any secrecy order shall be terminated if any person applies to the judge and establishes that good cause no longer exists – § 968.26(4)(b). If a complaint is filed following a proceeding in which a secrecy order was entered, the order is terminated at the initial appearance and § 971.23 governs disclosure of information from the proceeding – § 968.26(4)(c).

10. See § 968.26(4)(d), created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 64. Prior law provided that violation of the secrecy order was punished as contempt of court.

SM-16 COLLATERAL ATTACK ON PRIOR CONVICTIONS

CONTENTS

Scope

Under the current criminal statutes, many criminal offense definitions, penalty enhancers, and penalty schemes are based on the defendant having prior convictions. As these situations become more common, the propriety of a challenge to the validity of the priors in a prosecution for a new crime is an increasingly important issue. This is commonly referred to as "collateral attack" on the prior convictions. It is deemed "collateral" because the challenge comes not in a direct appeal of the original conviction but in the context of a later prosecution.

There are two issues that arise with respect to collateral attacks on prior convictions:

(1) What uses of prior convictions require allowing collateral attack?

(2) What types of defects in the prior conviction may be raised in a collateral attack?

I. Collateral Attack Must Be Allowed When Prior Convictions Are Used To Support Guilt Or Enhance Punishment

The standard for determining the uses of prior convictions that require allowing collateral attack may be summarized as follows:

- when priors are used to support guilt or enhance punishment, collateral attack must be allowed;

- when priors are used to "identify members of a potentially dangerous class," a defendant may not collaterally attack a prior.

This difficult distinction was articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Lewis v. United States, 445 U.S. 55 (1980). In Lewis, the court held that a federal defendant charged with being a felon in possession of a firearm was not entitled to collaterally attack the prior conviction relied on to establish his felon status. This was based on the distinction that the prior conviction in this situation was used in a way that focused "not on reliability, but on the mere fact of conviction. . . . Enforcement of that essentially civil disability through a criminal sanction does not 'support guilt or enhance punishment.'" 445 U.S. 55, 67.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals commented on the Lewis rule in State v. Foust, 214 Wis.2d 568, 573-4, 570 N.W.2d 905 (Ct. App. 1997), calling it an "elusive" distinction and "a conundrum." However, the court found it settled as a matter of state law that prior criminal convictions for operating under the influence used to establish the defendant's present status as, for example, a third-time offender, are used "primarily to enhance punishment." The court relied on State v. Baker, 169 Wis.2d 49, 485 N.W.2d 237 (1992), which allowed collateral attack on prior criminal convictions for operating after revocation [OAR]. The Baker decision reviewed Lewis and concluded that "the OAR statute uses prior OAR convictions primarily to enhance punishment, not to identify and classify a defendant or enforce a civil disability with a criminal sanction." 169 Wis.2d 49, 64.[1]

So, Baker and Foust make it clear that the use of prior convictions in the state's graduated penalty schemes for operating after revocation and operating under the influence is "primarily to enhance punishment" and thus appropriate for collateral attack. An example of the other category – use to identify the defendant as a member of a potentially dangerous class – may be offered by the criminal offense of violating a temporary restraining order or injunction in violation of § 813.12. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that a "defendant cannot collaterally attack the validity of a harassment injunction in a criminal prosecution for the violation of that injunction." State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992).

This could be characterized as fitting the Lewis "dangerous class" category, although the Bouzek decision does not make that explicit. The nature of Bouzek's challenge is identified only as the injunction being "overly broad" and "improperly issued." It probably did not involve a constitutionally-based challenge, thus failing to meet what is characterized here as the second part of the standard.

II. Collateral Attack Is Allowed Only For Claims That The Defendant Was Denied The Right To Counsel At The Time Of The Prior Conviction

Collateral attack is allowed only for claims that the defendant was denied the right to counsel at the time of the prior conviction.[2] Custis v. United States, 511 U.S. 485 (1994); State v. Hahn, 2000 WI 118, 238 Wis.2d 889, 618 N.W.2d 528. This includes a claim that the defendant did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waive his or her constitutional right to counsel. State v. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, 283 Wis.2d 300, 699 N.W.2d 92.

In Custis v. United States, 511 U.S. 485 (1994), the United States Supreme Court rejected a claim that the United States Constitution requires allowing collateral attack on the grounds of ineffective assistance of counsel and the absence of a knowing and intelligent guilty plea. The court recognized a "sole exception" to the rule prohibiting collateral attacks – convictions obtained in violation of the right to counsel: "failure to appoint counsel for an indigent defendant was a unique constitutional defect." 511 U.S. 485, 496.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court adopted the Custis rule in State v. Hahn, 2000 WI 118, 238 Wis.2d 889, 618 N.W.2d 528. Noting that Custis interpreted the federal constitution, the court adopted the same conclusion as a matter of state law:[3]

> Although these administrative considerations may weigh differently in different cases, we conclude that considerations of judicial administration favor a bright-line > rule that applies to all cases. We, therefore, hold that a circuit court may not determine the validity of a prior conviction during an enhanced sentence proceeding predicated on the prior conviction unless the offender alleges that a violation of the constitutional right to a lawyer occurred in the prior conviction. Instead, the offender may use whatever means available under state law to challenge the validity of a prior conviction on other grounds in a forum other than the enhanced sentence proceeding. If successful, the offender may seek to reopen the enhanced sentence. If the offender has no means available under state law to challenge the prior conviction on the merits because, for example, the courts never reached the merits of this challenge under State v. Escalona-Naranjo, 185 Wis.2d 168, 517 N.W.2d 157 (1994), or the offender is no longer in custody on the prior conviction, the offender may nevertheless seek to reopen the enhanced sentence. We do not address the appropriate disposition of any such application.[4]

State v. Hahn, 2000 WI 118, ¶28, as modified on reconsideration by 2001 WI 6, ¶2.

In State v. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, 283 Wis.2d 300, 699 N.W.2d 92, the court confirmed that the right to collateral attack extends to claims of invalid waiver of counsel. The standards for a valid counsel waiver are set forth in State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1977). The Klessig standards, though not mandated by the United States Constitution, are required by the Wisconsin Supreme Court as an exercise of its superintending power.[5]

Klessig identified four requirements for a valid waiver of counsel to be covered in a colloquy conducted by the court. The colloquy must ensure that the defendant:

1) made a deliberate choice to proceed without counsel;
2) was made aware of the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation;
3) was aware of the seriousness of the charge of charges against him; and,
4) was aware of the general range of penalties that could have been imposed on him.

Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 206. [Cited in Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶14.]

For a description of the Klessig requirements and discussion of related issues, see SM-30 Waiver and Forfeiture of Counsel; Self-Representation; Standby Counsel; "Hybrid Representation"; Court Appointment of Counsel.

III. Procedure

In State v. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, 283 Wis.2d 300, 699 N.W.2d 92, the court set forth the procedures to be used when a defendant challenges a prior conviction on a collateral attack. In State v. Clark, 2022 WI 21, 401 Wis. 2d 344, 972 N.W.2d 533, the court clarified that the procedure set forth in Ernst applies only in cases in which there is a transcript of the relevant proceedings from the prior case and the transcript shows a defect in the defendant's waiver of the right to counsel in the prior case. If a transcript is unavailable or does not show a defect in the waiver of the right to counsel, Clark mandates a different procedure. The two procedures are described below.

While Ernst and Clark were specifically concerned with an alleged deficiency in obtaining a waiver of counsel, the same general procedure would be suitable for a claim that counsel was denied.

A. When a transcript is available, and the transcript shows a defect in the waiver of counsel

If a transcript of the relevant proceedings from the prior case is available, the procedure set forth in Ernst applies. The procedure is modeled after that used for withdrawal of a plea of guilty. See State v. Bangert, 131 Wis.2d 246, 389 N.W.2d 12 (1986).

1. The burden is on the defendant to make a prima facie showing of a constitutional violation

The defendant must allege that the constitutional right to counsel was violated, either by denial of counsel or by failure to obtain a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary waiver of counsel. The allegation must point to specific facts that support the allegation:

> For there to be a valid collateral attack, we require the defendant to point to facts that demonstrate that he or she did not know or understand the information which should have been provided in the previous proceeding and, thus, did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waive his or her right to counsel. Any claim of a violation on a collateral attack that does not detail such facts will fail.

Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶25 (internal citations omitted). Clark clarified that, in pointing to facts to support the collateral attack, the defendant must identify in the transcript a defect in or failure to conduct the colloquy required by State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1997), when accepting a defendant's waiver of the right to counsel. The defendant cannot make a prima facie showing absent a defect in the colloquy, as evidenced by the transcript. Clark, 401 Wis.2d 344, ¶¶18, 20.

The Ernst decision also stated that "[a]n affidavit from the defendant setting forth such facts [facts that demonstrated that he or she did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waive counsel] would be necessary, in order to establish a prima facie case." Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶33. In other words, not only must the defendant identify a defect in or failure to conduct the Klessig colloquy, the defendant must also allege that he or she did not understand the information that should have been covered in the colloquy. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶26.

Applying this standard in the Ernst case, the court found that the defendant failed to meet it:

> Ernst made no mention of specific facts that show that his waiver was not a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary one. Instead, Ernst simply relied on the transcript and asserted that the court's colloquy was not sufficient to satisfy Klessig. . . . Since this was a collateral attack, the lack of specific facts resulted in a failure to establish a prima facie case that Ernst did not knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waive his right to counsel.

Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶26.

In State v. Bohlinger, 2013 WI App 39, 346 Wis.2d 549, 828 N.W.2d 900, decided before Clark, a conviction for 4th offense operating under the influence was reversed, and the case remanded for an evidentiary hearing on whether the defendant validly waived counsel during his prosecutions for the 2nd and 3rd offenses. The court held the defendant made a sufficient prima facie showing that because of cognitive disability, he did not have the mental capacity to understand the rights he was waiving. Note, however, that while transcripts from the prior cases were available in Bohlinger, the defendant did not allege the waiver colloquies were defective, and the court held he was not required to show a defect in the colloquy to make a prima facie showing. 345 Wis.2d 549, ¶¶17-20. That part of Bohlinger's holding is no longer valid in light of Clark.

Also see State v. Hammill, 2006 WI App 128, 293 Wis.2d 654, 718 N.W.2d 747, and State v. Verhagen, 2013 WI App 16, 346 Wis.2d 196, 827 N.W.2d 891, where the court of appeals concluded that the defendant failed to make a prima facie showing. Note that transcripts were not available in either of these cases; thus, after the decision in Clark, the defendants would not be entitled to the burden-shifting procedure set forth in Ernst but would bear the burden of showing a constitutional violation.

2. If a prima facie showing is made, an evidentiary hearing should be held, at which the burden shifts to the state

The burden is on the state to prove by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant was not denied the right to counsel or that the defendant's waiver of counsel was knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entered.[6] The "court should hold an evidentiary hearing to allow the State an opportunity to meet its burden." Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶27.

3. At the hearing, the state may call the defendant as a witness

Ernst concluded that the collateral attack situation was the same as that where withdrawal of a plea of guilty is sought. The defendant may be called as a witness to shed light on his or her understanding of matters relevant to entering a voluntary and intelligent plea or a voluntary waiver of counsel. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶31.

4. The defendant may not claim the privilege against self-incrimination

If called as a witness, the defendant may not validly claim the 5th Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Making a prima facie case will require an affidavit from the defendant alleging facts in support of the constitutional violation. Once a defendant successfully makes a prima facie showing, the defendant cannot avoid testifying about circumstances concerning that claim. By raising the issue, the defendant has waived the privilege. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶33. "Finally, if the defendant refuses to testify under these circumstances, a circuit court is free to draw the reasonable inference that the State has satisfied its burden, and that the waiver of counsel was a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary one." Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶35.

B. When a transcript is not available or does not show a defect in the waiver of counsel

If a defendant collaterally attacking a prior conviction cannot point to a defect in the relevant transcript, either because a transcript of the relevant proceeding is not available or because the colloquy in the transcript is facially valid, the burden-shifting procedure established in Ernst does not apply. Instead, the defendant carries the burden to demonstrate that his or her waiver of counsel in the prior proceeding was not knowing, intelligent, and voluntary. Clark, 401 Wis.2d 344, ¶20.

IV. Common Situations Where the Collateral Attack Issue May Arise

This section lists the situations where the collateral attack issue is addressed by case law or in the published jury instructions. The situations are divided into two categories: those where priors are used to support guilt or enhance punishment and where collateral attack must be allowed; those where priors are used to "identify members of a potentially dangerous class" and where a defendant may not collaterally attack the prior. Within the categories, the offenses are listed in the order in which they appear in the statutes. [Some of the examples do not involve prior convictions but rather are based on a prior court order or injunction. The Committee believes the same analysis would apply to the court order/injunction cases.]

A. Priors used to support guilt or enhance punishment – collateral attack must be allowed

1. Prior convictions for operating after revocation – § 343.44

State v. Baker, 169 Wis.2d 49, 485 N.W.2d 237 (1992), allowed collateral attack on prior criminal convictions for operating after revocation [OAR]. The Baker decision concluded that "the OAR statute uses prior OAR convictions primarily to enhance punishment, not to identify and classify a defendant or enforce a civil disability with a criminal sanction." 169 Wis.2d 49, 64.[7]

2. Prior convictions for operating under the influence – § 346.63

In State v. Foust, 214 Wis.2d 568, 570 N.W.2d 905 (Ct. App. 1997), the court found it settled as a matter of state law that prior criminal convictions for operating under the influence used to establish the defendant's present status as, for example, a third-time offender, are used "primarily to enhance punishment." The court relied on State v. Baker, supra. The same should be true for convictions used to support the application of the 0.02 level of alcohol concentration.

3. Prior convictions used under the "habitual criminality" statute ("repeater") – § 939.62

Although there is not a published decision directly on point in Wisconsin, the logic of the cases discussed above is that collateral attack would be allowed with respect to prior convictions used to support a repeater allegation under § 939.62. The United States Supreme Court recognized the propriety of collateral attack in that situation in Burgett v. Texas, 389 U.S. 109 (1967).

4. Prior convictions used under the "persistent repeater" statute ("three strikes") – § 939.62(2m)(b)1.

In State v. Hahn, 2000 WI 118, 238 Wis.2d 889, 618 N.W.2d 528, the court allowed collateral attack on a prior conviction used as the basis for a "persistent repeater" or "three strikes" determination under § 939.62(2m)(b)1.

5. Prior convictions used at sentencing

In United States v. Tucker, 404 U.S. 443 (1972), the United States Supreme Court held that convictions obtained in violation of the right to counsel could not be relied on as prior convictions at sentencing in a later prosecution.[8] That the priors were obtained in violation of the right to counsel had been established in a collateral attack in the state courts.

To be distinguished is State v. Orethun, 84 Wis.2d 487, 267 N.W.2d 318 (1978), a decision upholding an OAR conviction despite the fact that a speeding conviction upon which the revocation was based had been reversed. In terms of the categories outlined here, the prior conviction only identified the defendant as a member of a class – those whose privileges could be revoked – and did not support guilt or enhance punishment.

B. Priors used to identify members of a potentially dangerous class – collateral attack is not allowed

1. Contempt of court: punitive sanction – § 785.01

The Committee's conclusion is stated as follows in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2031, Contempt of Court: Punitive Sanction: "It apparently is not appropriate to challenge the validity of the order in the context of the criminal prosecution based on failure to obey that order." The basis for this conclusion was a civil case holding that regardless of the legality of an order, a party is bound to comply with it until it is set aside through regular appeal channels. Getka v. Lader, 71 Wis.2d 237, 238 N.W.2d 87 (1976). Of course, the fact that there was a court order and that the defendant violated a provision of that order are elements of the crime.

2. Violation of injunction or restraining order – §§ 813.12, 813.122, 813.123, 813.125

"A defendant cannot collaterally attack the validity of a harassment injunction in a criminal prosecution for the violation of that injunction." State v. Bouzek, 168 Wis.2d 642, 484 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1992). See the discussion in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 2040, Violating a Temporary Restraining Order or an Injunction.

3. Felon in possession of a firearm – § 941.29

In Lewis v. United States, 445 U.S. 55 (1980), the United States Supreme Court held that a defendant charged under the federal counterpart to § 941.29 was not allowed to collaterally attack the prior conviction relied on to establish his felony status. The conclusion in Lewis was based on the distinction that the prior conviction in this situation was used in a way that focused "not on reliability, but on the mere fact of conviction. . . Enforcement of that essentially civil disability through a criminal sanction does not 'support guilt or enhance punishment.'" 445 U.S. 55, 57.

4. Escape – § 946.42

The Committee's conclusion is stated as follows in footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1774, Jail or Prison Escape: "Although there apparently is no Wisconsin law on the subject, the Committee is of the opinion that the legality of the underlying conviction and sentence is not an issue where the charge is escape after conviction or sentence. Thus, it should be no defense that the defendant's underlying conviction is subject to challenge."

V. Effect of a Successful Collateral Attack on the Original Conviction

One of the Committee's assumptions when SM-16 was originally drafted was that a successful collateral attack affects only the use of the attacked prior conviction in the current proceeding. That is, the court in the current case has no authority to take any other action with respect to the prior; it remains a valid conviction for all other purposes unless additional action is taken in the court that entered the conviction.

In State v. Deilke, 2004 WI 104, 274 Wis.2d 595, 682 N.W.2d 945, a defendant in a 2001 prosecution for 5th offense operating under the influence moved to collaterally attack prior convictions from 1993, 1994, and 2000 on the ground that they were obtained in violation of his right to counsel. The state conceded that the record did not show a valid waiver of counsel, and the trial court granted Deilke's motion. The State then moved to reopen those priors, and the motion was granted in two of the three cases.[9] The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that Deilke's successful collateral attack violated a term of the plea agreements on which those convictions were based. This was a breach of the plea agreement, and the breach was material because it deprived the state of a benefit for which it had bargained – using those convictions as predicates for higher penalties for future violations. So, the state could seek to reopen the convictions and, when successful, could reissue those original charges and try, or negotiate with, Deilke again. The court's decision did not address the basis for the court's authority to reopen those final judgments.[10]

Deilke involved unique facts in that all the prior convictions and the current prosecution were in the same county. The decision allows options for the prosecution that are beyond the scope of this Special Material. It does not affect the substance of the analysis provided here, which focuses on the validity of the prior convictions in a new prosecution.

COMMENT

SM-16 was originally published in 2000 and revised in 2001, 2003, 2005, 2009, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2023; it updated the text and the comment.

1. When this SM was originally drafted, State v. Baker was one of the leading decisions relating to collateral attack. It was decided when OAR criminal penalties were determined by the number of prior OAR convictions. OAR penalties have changed several times since Baker was decided. Under the 2017-2018 Wisconsin Statutes, OAR is criminal only if the revocation is based on an OWI-related offense as set forth in § 343.307(2) or if death or great bodily harm is caused. The references to Baker in this SM were retained because the general rules it announced regarding collateral attack continue to apply.

2. For the right to counsel to apply, the prior offense must be a crime. For example, a refusal proceeding is a civil matter to which the right to counsel does not apply. State v. Krause, 2006 WI App 43, 289 Wis.2d 573, 712 N.W.2d 67.

3. Before Hahn, appellate decisions in Wisconsin allowed collateral attack based on at least two different defects in the prior prosecution:

(a) denial of the right to counsel; and,
(b) acceptance of a guilty plea that was not voluntarily and understandingly made.

In State v. Baker, 169 Wis.2d 49, 485 N.W.2d 237 (1992), the Wisconsin Supreme Court allowed collateral attack based on an allegation that the guilty plea in the prior case was not understandingly and voluntarily made. The court stated that collateral attack must be allowed whenever the alleged defect "undermines the reliability of the conviction." Baker relied on its interpretation of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court that had dealt with this issue – the primary one being Burgett v. Texas, 389 U.S. 109 (1967), which dealt with a challenge based on denial of counsel. Hahn limited Baker to the rule stated in Custis. 238 Wis 2d. 889, ¶17.

In State v. Foust, 214 Wis.2d 568, 570 N.W.2d 905 (Ct. App. 1997), the defendant was charged with operating under the influence as a third offense. The court of appeals held that the defendant could challenge the validity of one of the prior offenses in the new prosecution because he alleged that the earlier conviction was obtained as a result of a constitutionally defective plea colloquy. Though not referred to in Hahn, Foust is inconsistent with the Hahn decision and is implicitly overruled. [Also see State v. Dye, 215

Wis.2d 281, 572 N.W.2d 524 (Ct. App. 1997), suggesting that a collateral attack could be based on a contention that the earlier conviction was "constitutionally invalid because of an alleged Fourth Amendment violation: that it was the result of an illegal stop." 215 Wis.2d 281, 291. This possibility is clearly inconsistent with Hahn.].

4. In Hahn, the court stated that it was providing a bright line rule and repeated its holding three times – compare paragraphs 4, 28, and 29 – in essentially the same words. The second-to-last sentence of paragraph 28 did not appear in the other two statements of the new rule. This sentence was revised in response to the state's motion for reconsideration in the decision reported at 2001 WI 6.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court applied Hahn in State v. Peters, 2001 WI 74, 244 Wis.2d 470, 628 N.W.2d 797. The court held that the defendant could collaterally attack his second conviction for operating after revocation [OAR] in a prosecution for a fifth offense OAR because the challenge was based on the denial of the right to counsel.

The defendant in Peters had focused his argument "on the Sixth Amendment and due process implications of conducting a plea and sentencing hearing by closed-circuit television from jail." 2001 WI 74, ¶18. Because the court found that the challenge was actually based on denial of the right to counsel, it could resolve the case by a straightforward application of Hahn:

> Whether the defendant is entitled to mount this sort of constitutional challenge to a prior conviction collaterally rather than directly (or at all) depends upon an interpretation of the above-quoted language in Hahn [referring to the decision on rehearing, 2001 WI 6, ¶2], and the influence, if any, of the Supreme Court's recent opinions in Daniels and Lackawanna County. We do not address this issue, however, because the record reflects an arguable right-to-counsel violation, which is clearly established as an exception to the rule against collateral attacks on prior convictions. 2001 WI 74, ¶18.

[The United States Supreme Court cases referred to are Daniels v. United States, 532 U.S. 374, (2001) and Lackawanna County District Attorney's Office v. Coss, 532 U.S. 394, (2001). Their relevance to Wisconsin practice is unclear because they discuss the collateral attack in the context of the procedural limits on a federal motion to vacate a sentence under 28 USC § 2255 (Daniels) and federal habeas corpus review of a state conviction under 28 USC § 2254.].

5. "We conclude that the Klessig colloquy requirement was and is a valid use of the court's superintending and administrative authority, . . . and that such a rule does not conflict in any way with the United States Supreme Court's decision in Tovar . . ." State v. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, ¶21, 283 Wis.2d 300, 699 N.W.2d 92. The reference is to Iowa v. Tovar, 541 U.S. 77 (2004), where the court held that a valid waiver of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel did not require specific advice from the court that waiver of counsel might result in a viable defense being overlooked and losing the opportunity for an independent opinion on whether pleading guilty is a wise choice.

In State v. Gracia, 2013 WI 15, 345 Wis.2d 488, 826 N.W.2d 87, the court rejected a collateral attack on a prior operating under the influence conviction: "despite a technically deficient plea colloquy, Gracia knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waived his right to counsel before he pleaded no contest to his second OWI in 1998 . . . He understood the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation." ¶4.

6. To the extent that reconstructing the record relating to waiver of counsel appears to be necessary, see State v. DeFelippo, 2005 WI App 213, 287 Wis.2d 193, 704 N.W.2d 410. The decision outlines the standards for reconstructing the record where, on direct appeal, the defendant claimed absence of a voluntary waiver of counsel.

7. When this SM was originally drafted, State v. Baker was one of the leading decisions relating to collateral attack. It was decided when OAR criminal penalties were determined by the number of prior OAR convictions. OAR penalties have changed several times since Baker was decided. Under the 2017-2018 Wisconsin Statutes OAR is criminal only if the revocation is based on an OWI-related offense as set forth in § 343.307(2) or if death or great bodily harm is caused. The references to Baker in this SM were retained because the general rules it announced regarding collateral attack continue to apply.

8. The Committee believes that Tucker does not affect the general rule that allows considering other bad acts at sentencing even if they did not result in a criminal conviction. Tucker recognized that greater weight might be given to convictions believed to be valid and suggested the sentence might have been different if the trial judge had known that Tucker served 10 years on a conviction obtained in violation of the right to counsel.

9. State v. Deilke, 2004 WI 104, 274 Wis.2d 595, 682 N.W.2d 945, at footnote 4: "The State's motion regarding Deilke's 1993 and 2000 cases was granted by the circuit court for Eau Claire County, Judge Eric J. Wahl, presiding. The State's motion regarding Deilke's 1994 conviction was denied by a different judge in a different circuit court branch . . ." [Judge Wahl was the presiding judge in Deilke's new prosecution, in which he collaterally attacked the 1993, 1994, and 2000 convictions.].

10. The convictions affected were from 1993 and 2000. As to those convictions, Deilke had "served all of his time, paid all his fines, attended all required classes, endured his license revocations, and even forfeited his vehicle." 2004 WI 104, ¶51 [dissenting opinion of Justice Bradley].

SM-18 DEFENDANT'S CONSENT TO PROCEED BY VIDEOCONFERENCE – WAIVER OF RIGHT TO BE PRESENT UNDER § 971.04

The following is intended for use when a defendant with counsel wishes to waive the statutory right to be present in the same courtroom as the presiding judge at a proceeding. See § 971.04 and State v. Soto, 2012 WI 93, 343 Wis.2d 43, 817 N.W.2d 848. If the defendant is without counsel, it may be necessary to obtain or renew a waiver of counsel. See SM-30, Waiver and Forfeiture of Counsel.

1. The court should have the participants state their appearances and should identify where each participant is located.

2. The court should ascertain that the technology is working properly and ask questions like the following:[1]

   a. "Can you hear me?"

   b. "Can you see me?"

   c. "Do you understand that if at any time there is a problem with your ability to hear or see what is occurring in court today you are to immediately inform the court?"

   d. "Do you understand that if at any time you need to speak privately with your lawyer, you should inform the court and proper accommodations will be made?"

3. The court should identify for those appearing from a remote location any person in the courtroom who may not be visible to them. If the litigant or counsel wishes to physically see a particular individual, the court should accommodate that request if appropriate.

4. The court should engage in a colloquy with the defendant to ascertain whether the defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily consents to the use of videoconferencing:[2]

a. "Do you understand that you have the right to be physically present in the same courtroom[3] as the presiding judge during this proceeding?"

b. "Do you understand that you are not required to consent to having this proceeding conducted by videoconferencing?"

c. "Have you discussed this with your lawyer?"

d. "Has anyone made any promises or threats to you in connection with waiving your right to be present?"

e. "Do you wish to waive your right to be physically present in this courtroom at this proceeding?"

d. "Do you consent to conducting this proceeding by videoconferencing?"

5. The court should make a finding, on the record, that the defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily consents to the use of videoconferencing.

COMMENT

SM-18 was approved by the Committee in February 2014.

This Special Material provides a model for an inquiry that is to be conducted when a defendant wishes to consent to having a court appearance conducted by video-conferencing. It applies where the defendant has the right to be present at a proceeding under § 971.04. The decision in State v. Soto, 2012 WI 93, 343 Wis.2d 43, 817 N.W.2d 848, suggested that a colloquy be conducted in this situation.

See §§ 885.50 to 885.64, which address the "use of videoconferencing in the circuit courts." Section 885.60(2)(a) provides in part: "Except as may otherwise be provided by law, a defendant in a criminal case . . . is entitled to be physically present in the courtroom at all trials and sentencing or dispositional hearings." Soto held that the defendant's right to be physically present under § 885.60(2)(a) does not enlarge or diminish the statutory right under § 971.04. ¶31.

Section 971.04(1) provides that the defendant shall be present:

(a) At the arraignment;
(b) At trial;
(c) During voir dire of the trial jury;
(d) At any evidentiary hearing;
(e) At any view by the jury;
(f) When the jury returns its verdict;
(g) At the pronouncement of judgment and the imposition of sentence;
(h) At any other proceeding when ordered by the court.

Plea hearings are not listed in § 971.04; however, if the defendant is found guilty at the conclusion of a plea hearing, it qualifies as "pronouncement of judgment" under sub. (1)(g).

When the defendant in Soto entered his guilty plea, he, defense counsel, and the DA were present in the courtroom in Trempealeau County. The judge participated via videoconference from Jackson County. A complete plea colloquy was conducted. The court held:

> ¶2 We conclude that Wis. Stat. § 971.04(1)(g) provides a criminal defendant the statutory right to be in the same courtroom as the presiding judge when a plea hearing is held, if the court accepts the plea and pronounces judgment. However, we also conclude that this statutory right may be waived and that Soto waived it prior to pleading and the court's pronouncement of judgment. We so conclude because Soto appeared in a courtroom in the Trempealeau County courthouse; both his attorney and the prosecuting attorney also appeared in the same courtroom; through videoconferencing, the judge was able to see, speak to and hear Soto and Soto was able to see, speak to and hear the circuit court judge; the judge explained that videoconferencing would be used for the plea hearing if Soto chose to enter a plea that day; and Soto expressly consented to the use of videoconferencing for the plea hearing. Accordingly, we affirm the circuit court's order denying Soto's motion to withdraw his guilty plea.

The court also described the type of inquiry that should accompany the use of videoconferencing for a hearing at which "presence" is required:

> ¶46 When videoconferencing is proposed for a plea hearing at which it is anticipated that judgment will be pronounced, the judge should enter into a colloquy with the defendant that explores the effectiveness of the videoconferencing then being employed. In that regard, the judge shall ascertain whether the defendant and his attorney, if represented by counsel, are able to see, speak to and hear the judge and that the judge can see, speak to and hear the defendant and counsel. The judge shall also ascertain, either by personal colloquy or by some other means, whether the defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily consents to the use of videoconferencing. In so doing, questions should be asked to suggest to the defendant that he has the option of refusing to employ videoconferencing for a plea hearing at which judgment will be pronounced.

Note: Soto addressed the right to be present under § 971.04. The court did not address whether presence was required as a matter of due process, noting that Soto "abandoned his constitutional challenge in this court." ¶15, footnote 4.

This Special Material addresses waiver of the right to be present. However, the right may also be forfeited. State v. Vaughn, 2012 WI App 129, 344 Wis.2d 764, 823 N.W.2d 543, involved a defendant who, after being found competent to stand trial, was very difficult to deal with in the courtroom. The trial court warned him repeatedly, but ultimately had him removed from the courtroom. Trial proceeded with him absent and a jury found him guilty of attempted first degree intentional homicide. The court of appeals affirmed the conviction, finding that the record established that Vaughn forfeited his right to be present.

1. There are two aspects to the waiver inquiry: whether the technology is working properly and whether the defendant is waiving his or her right to present in the same courtroom as the judge. The questions in this section address the first aspect and are adopted from the "Video Conferencing Appearance Colloquy" distributed to trial judges.

2. The questions in this section address the second aspect of the waiver inquiry: whether the defendant is waiving his or her right to present in the same courtroom as the judge.

3. The Soto decision emphasized the importance of the courtroom setting:

> ¶23 We have required that the defendant be in a courtroom because the statute clearly speaks to the defendant's presence at the location of the proceeding. Requiring that the defendant be present in the courtroom is guided also by the belief that a courtroom is a setting epitomizing and guaranteeing "calmness and solemnity," see Cox v. Louisiana, 379 U.S. 536, 583 (1965) (Black, J., dissenting), so that a defendant may recognize that he has had access to the judicial process in a criminal proceeding. Finally, requiring the defendant to make his appearance in a courtroom avoids the potential or perceived problems that can occur when the defendant is located in another facility such as a jail, while the judge, prosecutor, and perhaps even defense counsel are in the courtroom. See generally Anne Bowen Poulin, Criminal Justice and Videoconferencing Technology: The Remote Defendant, 78 Tul. L. Rev. 1089 (2004).

SM-20 VOIR DIRE

CONTENTS

Scope

The manner in which voir dire is conducted lies within the discretion of the court and varies greatly among judges. This special material begins with a suggested script that covers introductory and other general matters. Then it identifies the topics on which voir dire questions are statutorily required and suggests additional topics that are often covered. In both instances, the actual form of the question is left to the judge. The current framework for analyzing potential juror bias is outlined. The Comment attempts to collect relevant case law.

I. Introduction

VOIR DIRE IS TO BE CONDUCTED IN OPEN COURT, ABSENT FORFEITURE OR WAIVER [1]

ASSURE THAT THE DEFENDANT AND DEFENSE COUNSEL ARE PRESENT.[2] AFTER THE CASE IS CALLED AND THE PANEL IS SWORN, PROCEED WITH THE FOLLOWING:

"All members of the jury panel, including those (back of the rail) (outside the jury box) should listen to all the questions that are directed to the panel until a jury of (12) (14) is selected."

"This is a criminal case, not a civil case, and I will read the allegations of the Information to you. An Information is nothing more than a written formal accusation against the defendant, charging the commission of one or more criminal acts. You are not to consider the Information as evidence against the defendant in any way. It does not raise any inference of guilt."

[READ OR SUMMARIZE THE INFORMATION.]

"The defendant (name) has entered a plea of not guilty to (the) (each) charge in the Information, which means the State must prove every element of the offense charged beyond a reasonable doubt."

[IDENTIFY THE PROSECUTOR, DEFENDANT, DEFENSE COUNSEL, AND ANY OTHERS AT COUNSEL TABLE. EACH PERSON SHOULD STAND WHEN INTRODUCED.]

"I will now ask you some general questions about your qualifications to sit as jurors in this case. Counsel should listen carefully to these general questions and not repeat them. Counsel may ask the jurors generally any proper questions and in addition ask proper questions of each juror as to matters specific to each juror."

"If your answer to any of my questions is 'yes,' raise your hand."

II. Juror Qualifications And Required Questions[3]

A. Juror Qualifications – § 756.02

Section 756.02[4] sets out the basic qualifications for being a juror. Although these requirements are usually covered by juror qualification forms, judges may wish to review them at the beginning of voir dire by asking the panel whether anyone:

- is not a United States citizen;
- is not currently a resident of _____ County;
- is under the age of 18;
- is unable to understand English;[5] and,
- has been convicted of a felony and has not had his or her civil rights restored.

B. Required Questions – § 805.08(1)

Subsection 805.08(1) requires that questions on certain topics be asked by the judge. An affirmative answer to questions on either of the following topics requires that the juror be excused on the basis of "statutory bias":[6]

- whether any juror is related by blood or marriage to the defendant[7] or to any attorney; and
- whether any juror has any financial interest in the case.

Because case law requires excusing jurors who are related to a state witness,[8] an additional question should be asked in every case:

- whether any juror is related to any witness for the state.

Subsection 805.08(1) also requires questions on the following topics; an affirmative answer does not require excusing the juror but does require additional inquiry:[9]

- whether any juror has expressed or formed any opinion; and
- whether any juror is aware of any bias or prejudice in the case.

C. Juror Qualification Forms; Supplemental Information; Case-Specific Questionnaires

There are several different forms containing juror information that are often referred to as "questionnaires." The Committee has concluded that there is value in using different terms to describe them because their functions are different.

1. Juror Qualification Forms – § 756.04(6)(am)

These are the forms sent out by the clerk when jurors are summoned for service. They cover the basic requirements for qualification for juror service. There is a standard form – Circuit Court Form GF-132 – available to judges through the clerk of court. Additional content varies by county.

2. Supplemental Information – § 756.04(6)(cm)

"The juror qualification form . . . may be supplemented to request other information that the court requires to manage the jury system in an efficient manner, including information that may be sought during voir dire examination." § 756.04(6)(cm)

3. Case-Specific Questionnaires

Additional questions may be submitted to potential jurors that relate to the specific case on which they might serve. Drafted by counsel, their use requires approval by the court and a cover letter explaining them. Their use is not feasible in counties where potential jurors are summoned without reference to a particular case.

Positive aspects to using questionnaires:

- they can be helpful in cases where there has been extensive pretrial publicity;
- where sensitive topics are involved, jurors may be more forthcoming than in open court;
- they can potentially save time in a case where extensive voir dire might be necessary on specific issues.

Negative aspects to using questionnaires:

- approving their use and content can take considerable court time;
- issues can be addressed more efficiently during voir dire.
- the questions may prompt jurors to try to research the case.

4. Confidentiality – § 756.04(11)(a)

All juror information forms "shall remain confidential." They shall be used only for trial and appeal; counsel and parties may not retain copies. § 756.04(11)(a).

III. Voir Dire Of An Individual Juror Out Of The Presence Of The Jury Panel

The court's discretion over the form and number of questions extends to whether prospective jurors should be questioned collectively or individually out of the presence of the other prospective jurors. State v. Koch, 144 Wis.2d 838, 847, 426 N.W.2d 586 (1988). Factors relevant to deciding whether to conduct a sequestered voir dire are:

> (1) whether the circuit court conducted a thorough initial questioning of the panel members; (2) whether the panel members were reluctant to state whether they had a preconceived notion of the defendant's guilt or innocence; and (3) whether the circuit court imposed any restrictions upon the extent of defense counsel's questioning of the panel members on voir dire.

144 Wis.2d 838, 849, citing State v. Dean, 67 Wis.2d 513, 528, 227 N.W.2d 712 (1975). Other cases dealing with requests for individual or sequestered voir dire include State v. Smith, 117 Wis.2d 399, 344 N.W.2d 711 (Ct. App. 1983); State v. Herrington, 41 Wis.2d 757, 165 N.W.2d 120 (1969).

Individual voir dire is most often used in cases involving sexual assault or significant pretrial publicity. While practice varies, an example of an explanation of the process and questions to the full panel in a sexual assault case follows. [If a different potentially sensitive crime or pretrial publicity is involved, the example must be modified.]

> Jurors, at this point the court is going to ask you some general questions. I ask that you raise your hand if "yes" would be your answer to any of these questions.
> In this case, the court is varying from its typical practice in that we will be conducting individual voir dire of persons depending on how these particular questions are answered. Listen carefully.
> Has any member of the panel or any member of their family, or any friends, relatives, or co-workers, been affected by unwanted sexual conduct, whether reported or not?
> [Note for the record the jurors – by name or number – who have raised their hands.]
> Referring to the entire panel again now, have you or any family member or close friend ever been investigated for, accused of, or charged with sexual assault?

[Note for the record the jurors – by name or number – who have raised their hands.]

[Add the following if the case has generated significant publicity.

Is there anyone among you who has read or heard anything about this case?]

[Note for the record the jurors – by name or number – who have raised their hands.]

At this point the court is going to conduct an individual voir dire of those persons who raised their hand in response to the questions. The process we will follow is that the prospective juror, the attorneys, the defendant, court personnel, and any members of the general public who wish to attend will go to [a jury room] [(designate other room)] where questions will be asked of the individual juror outside the presence of the other jurors.

This will take a few minutes. Please continue to be patient. The group of jurors whose names have been called must maintain their same seating order. While we are doing this you can stand up if you need to stretch or relax. If someone needs to use the restroom let the bailiff know and the bailiff will see that you are able to do that. But the group must maintain the same seating order that you are in.

The court, court reporter, clerk, security officer, the parties and their attorneys (and the alleged victim if requested) move to another room out of the presence of the rest of the panel. Those jurors who raised their hands are then invited in one at a time escorted by a bailiff. The court begins the questioning followed by questions by the prosecutor and the defense counsel. The court rules on whether or not a juror is to be excused. When everyone has returned to the courtroom the process may have to be repeated if additional jurors are called.

IV. Suggested Topics For Voir Dire Questions[10]

A. The Purpose Of Voir Dire

The Committee suggests that the court explain to the panel that the purpose of voir dire is to assure that persons chosen to serve will be fair and impartial jurors. An example follows.

Impartiality

I would like to tell you what I mean by the term fair and impartial juror. I want you to all assume that you have heard all the evidence in this case, listened to my instructions on the law, deliberated with the other jurors, and you are thinking that the State has not proved this case beyond a reasonable doubt, you are thinking the defendant is not guilty. Is there anything in your background, your life experiences, your view of the criminal justice system, anything at all that makes you think that you would vote to find the defendant guilty anyway, even though the State had not proved him guilty?

The flip side of that question is equally important. You listened to all the evidence and my instructions and you are thinking he is guilty, the State has proved the case beyond a reasonable doubt. Is there anything in your background, life experiences, your view of the justice system that makes you feel that you would vote to find him not guilty even though the State has proved the case?

Or to put it a little more simply, are you going to decide this case based on anything other than what you hear from the witness stand and the rules of law that I instruct you on?

That is what I mean by being a fair and impartial juror. As you sit here right now without knowing much about this case, is there anyone who thinks, for any reason that they can not be a fair and impartial juror?

Bias

[It is obvious to everyone in the courtroom that Mr. _____ is (African-American) with respect to his racial background.][11] I think we all walk around realizing we are different from everyone else. Those differences might be based on race, gender, ethnicity, body size, hair color or any number of factors, but when we let those kind of differences control how we judge someone or a situation we call that bias or prejudice or discrimination.

What is very important to me and everyone involved with this case is that we end up with 12 jurors who will decide this case on the evidence you hear from the witnesses and the rules of law I instruct you on and not on any of these kinds of difference.

Now I realize what I am about to ask you is pretty difficult. I am asking you to tell me if you don't think you can be fair. That is pretty hard even in a one on one conversation let alone in front of a room full of strangers, but it is critically important. I am not going to argue with you or try to convince you to feel differently but I do need to know if you don't think you can be fair for this or any other reason.

Is there anyone who has concerns about or simply feels that they cannot be a fair juror in this case?

B. Topics For Questions

Questions on the following topics are often included in a judge's voir dire and are recommended for consideration in all cases. Other topics may be appropriate depending on the facts of the case.

1. Whether the estimated length of trial makes it impossible for anyone to serve.

2. Whether anyone has a physical or medical condition that makes it impossible to serve or makes it difficult to hear or understand the testimony.[12]

3. Whether there are any circumstances such as work schedule, medication, etc., that may make it difficult for a juror to pay attention or stay alert.[13]

4. Advise that it is alright to ask for a recess if a juror is having trouble staying alert.

5. Whether anyone knows any member of the defendant's family.

6. Whether anyone knows the defense attorney or the prosecutor or the judge.

7. Whether anyone knows the complaining witness or other witnesses who are expected to testify.

8. Whether anyone or a member of their immediate family is employed in a law enforcement capacity.[14]

9. Whether anyone would give more or less weight to the testimony of a police witness because that person is a police officer.

10. Whether anyone has heard or read anything about the case.

11. Whether anyone has expectations about the conduct of the court and counsel, the nature of the evidence that will be presented, or the law that will be applied to this case based on descriptions of criminal investigations and trials from books, movies, television programs or the media.[15]

12. Whether anyone has previously served on a jury and, if so, whether that jury reached a verdict.[16]

13. Whether anyone has been the victim of a crime.[17]

14. Whether racial bias or prejudice may affect anyone.

15. Whether anyone has a religious or philosophical belief that prohibits them from sitting in judgment on another person.

16. If the case involves an interpreter, whether anyone speaks or understands the language involved.[18]

V. Dismissal For Cause; Following Up On Affirmative Answers[19]

If a panel member indicates that an answer to a question would be "yes," further inquiry is required. In any situation, the mere fact of an affirmative response is not enough to disqualify a person from jury service. The ultimate test is whether, the affirmative response notwithstanding, the juror can decide the case fairly and impartially on the evidence that is presented in court.[20]

In a group of four cases decided on the same day, the Wisconsin Supreme Court identified and implemented a new set of three terms for classifying juror bias.[21] State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999), was the lead decision. It held that the usefulness of the old terms for types of juror bias had "run full course" and that the terms "implied bias," "actual bias," and "inferred bias" should no longer be used. In their place, the following are adopted: statutory bias, subjective bias, and objective bias.

A. Statutory bias

"Statutory bias" refers to prospective jurors who are excluded from jury service under § 805.08(1):

- those related by blood or marriage to any party;
- those related by blood or marriage to any attorney appearing in the case; and
- those who have a financial interest in the case.

A person meeting one of these descriptions may not serve regardless of his or her ability to be impartial.

A prospective juror who is the brother-in-law of a state witness must be struck for cause on the basis of statutory bias. State v. Czarnecki, 231 Wis.2d 1, 604 N.W.2d 891 (Ct. App. 1999).[22]

Note: § 805.08(1) also refers to those who have expressed or formed an opinion or are aware of any bias or prejudice in the case; they are not considered to fall into the "statutory bias" class but are more accurately described as those for whom evidence of "subjective bias" exists. Faucher, supra, 227 Wis.2d 700, 717. Thus, an individual inquiry is required before they are to be dismissed.

In addition to those jurors falling within the "statutory bias" category, one other class of jurors must always be excused: jurors who are related to a state witness.[23] With these exceptions, it is improper to exclude any class of jurors without individual inquiry into ability fairly to decide the case.[24]

B. Subjective bias

"Subjective bias" refers to a prospective juror who has opinions or feelings about the case that the juror is unable or unwilling to set aside. It refers to the juror's actual state of mind and is usually revealed by a prospective juror during voir dire. Faucher, supra, 227 Wis.2d 700, 719; State v. T. Oswald, 2000 WI App 2, ¶19, 232 Wis.2d 62, 606 N.W.2d 207.[25]

The inquiry into subjective bias involves determining whether the prospective juror has expressed or indicated an opinion or a bias and, if so, whether the juror has the willingness and ability to set those feelings aside and consider the case on the evidence presented in court. As to the latter issue, courts should seek to elicit a clear expression of impartiality by asking a question like the following:

> Are you able to put your feelings or opinions aside and decide this case based solely on the evidence presented and the law as the court defines it for you?

However, "a prospective juror need not respond to voir dire questions with unequivocal declarations of impartiality." State v. Erickson, 227 Wis.2d 758, 776, 596 N.W.2d 749 (1999). "Magical words" are not required. State v. Jimmie R.R., 2000 WI APP 5, ¶28, 232 Wis.2d 138, 606 N.W.2d 196. Also see State v. Ferron, 219 Wis.2d 481, 579 N.W.2d 654 (1998), where a prospective juror's statement that he could "probably" set his feelings aside was not considered to be a strong enough statement.[26]

In State v. Carter, 2002 WI App 55, 250 Wis.2d 851, 641 N.W.2d 517, the court found that subjective bias was established as a matter of law where a prospective juror clearly stated that his own experience with a sexual assault in his family would influence his ability to be fair and impartial and where no follow-up questions qualified that statement. The trial court's finding that no subjective bias was shown was clearly erroneous and defense counsel provided ineffective assistance by failing to question the juror's statement or move to strike the juror. 2002 WI App 55, ¶¶13, 15.

Appellate courts reviewing these cases will look carefully at the answers to voir dire questions but evaluating the juror's sincerity also depends on the juror's conduct, demeanor, and nonverbal cues. Jimmie R.R., supra, 232 Wis.2d 138, ¶29. Thus, substantial deference will be accorded to the trial judge who can observe these qualities. The value of reliance on answers to voir dire questions is further reduced because lawyers ask leading questions and intentionally elicit contradictory answers, Jimmie R.R., supra 232 Wis.2d 138, ¶30, and sometimes present confusing and ambiguous questions. State v. Gilliam, 2000 WI App 152, ¶¶12-14, 238 Wis.2d 1, 615 N.W.2d 1.

C. Objective bias

Objective bias refers to a prospective juror whose opinions or feelings are such that a reasonable person in the juror's position could not set them aside. Objective bias may involve a direct, critical, personal connection between the individual juror and crucial evidence or a dispositive issue in the case or an intractable negative attitude toward the justice system in general. State v. J. Oswald, 2000 WI App 3 ¶8, 232 Wis.2d 103, 606 N.W.2d 238.[27]

In State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999), a prospective juror had a strong opinion about the credibility of a crucial state's witness. The supreme court found that objective bias was established because the juror "could not truly set aside his strongly held belief that [the witness] would not lie" despite his apparently sincere intentions to do so. 227 Wis.2d 700, 733.[28]

In State v. Lindell, 2001 WI 108, ¶4, 245 Wis.2d 689, 629 NW.2d 223, the court held that objective juror bias was established as a matter of law where the juror knew the homicide victim as a friend of the family and business associate.

In State v.Erickson, 227 Wis.2d 758, 776, 596 N.W.2d 749 (1999), a juror in a sexual assault case had been a victim of sexual abuse as a child. But the supreme court found that objective bias was not established because the juror's connection was remote.

Objective bias may also be established if the prospective juror has a direct connection to a dispositive issue in the case, such as the defense theory, coupled with a personal belief regarding the outcome of that issue. In State v. Kiernan, 227 Wis.2d 736, 596 N.W.2d 760 (1999), the supreme court held that "veteran jurors" who had rejected a breathalyzer defense in a preceding case should have been dismissed from service in a second drunk driving case involving the same defense. Veteran jurors are not to be dismissed solely on the basis of their having served as jurors in a similar case, but "these veteran jurors did exhibit bias in that reasonable jurors in their position could not set aside expressed opinions and prior knowledge relating to the veracity of breathalyzer results." 227 Wis.2d 736, 751.

A third situation where objective bias may be present is where jurors demonstrate an intractable or ingrained negative attitude towards the justice system. In State v. Mendoza, 227 Wis.2d 838, 596 N.W.2d 736 (1999), the supreme court held that prospective jurors with negative experience with the justice system cannot be automatically excluded but must be excluded if their experience is recent and left them with negative feelings.

The Mendoza decision advised that trial courts should err on the side of caution when considering a request to remove a juror for cause, especially where objective bias is concerned:

> The circuit courts are . . . advised to err on the side of striking prospective jurors who appear to be biased, even if appellate courts would not reverse their determinations of impartiality. Such action will avoid the appearance of bias, and may save judicial time and resources in the long run.

Mendoza, supra, at 868 (quoting State v. Ferron, 219 Wis.2d 481, 503, 579 N.W.2d 654 (1998). This admonition was repeated in State v. Lindell, supra, ¶49. Also see State v. J. Oswald, 2000 WI App 3 ¶¶52-53, 232 Wis.2d 103, 606 N.W.2d 238, J. Nettesheim, concurring.

A different aspect of objective bias was considered in State v. Neumann, 2013 WI 58, 348 Wis.2d 455, 832 N.W.2d 560, a case involving extensive pretrial publicity. Both parents of an 11-year-old were convicted of 2nd degree reckless homicide under § 940.06 after the girl died from diabetic ketoacidosis resulting from untreated juvenile onset diabetes. The wife was tried first and convicted. The jury in trial of the father was told of the result of the mother's trial. The court stated: "We recognize that evidence of a co-defendant's guilt, under some circumstances, can be prejudicial to the defendant on trial, and in cases in other jurisdictions, convictions have been overturned on this ground. . . . Nevertheless, circumstances in the present case justified informing the jury about the mother's status." 2103 WI 58, ¶¶158, 159.

In State v. Tody, 2009 WI 31, 316 Wis.2d 689, 764 N.W.2d 737, all six members of the court who participated agreed that it was error for the trial judge to fail to strike the judge's mother from the jury panel. Three justices concluded that the circumstances showed "objective bias."[29] Three justices concluded that the judge's error was in not removing the juror or recusing himself under the trial court's inherent authority to administer justice.

In State v. Sellhausen, 2012 WI 5, 338 Wis.2d 243, 808 N.W.2d 390, the issue was whether a new trial was required where the trial judge failed to disqualify his daughter-in-law from sitting on the jury. All members of the court apparently agreed that a new trial was not required because the defense removed the juror by using a peremptory challenge and received a fair trial from an impartial jury. Justice Ziegler concurred, adopting her concurring opinion in the Tody case. Three justices joined her, meaning that the concurring opinion in Tody is now the law on this issue.

D. Remedy

The erroneous failure to excuse a juror for cause does not require retrial where the defense used a peremptory challenge to strike that juror, resulting in an impartial jury. State v. Lindell, 2001 WI 108, ¶5, 245 Wis.2d 689, 629 NW.2d 223. Lindell overruled State v. Ramos, 211 Wis.2d 12, 564 N.W.2d 328 (1997), which had required an automatic reversal when a defendant used a peremptory strike to remove a prospective juror who should have been excused for cause.[30]

VI. Peremptory Challenges

A. Number – § 972.03

In a felony case, both the state and the defendant receive 4 peremptory challenges. The number increases to 6 if the crime is punishable by life imprisonment.[31] An additional peremptory challenge is to be allowed each side if additional jurors [commonly referred to as "alternate jurors"] are selected under § 972.04(1), bringing the total to 7. The number for the defense also increases if there are multiple defendants.[32] Trial courts lack authority to allow correction of an allegedly mistaken exercise of a peremptory challenge once the jury is impaneled.[33]

B. Claim that a challenge is race- or gender-based

Peremptory challenges may not be used to exclude a prospective juror on the basis of the juror's race.[34] This rule applies even though the members of a jury panel are of a different race than the defendant.[35] The same rule applies to the exercise of peremptory challenges based on the juror's gender.[36]

In order to constitute a class for these purposes, "the group must be objectively identifiable from the rest of the community, be large enough that the general community recognizes it as an identifiable group, and its members share ethnic and cultural traditions and customs, and, perhaps most important, share discrimination because of their identity and 'differentness.'" State v. Guerra-Reyna, 201 Wis.2d 751, 756, 549 N.W.2d 779 (Ct. App. 1996). Mexican-Americans are a class entitled to equal protection of the law in connection with jury service. Id.

A claim that a peremptory challenge was improperly based on race or gender must be raised by motion before the jury is sworn or it will be considered waived.[37] Upon the defendant's timely motion, a three-step process is used to evaluate the claim:[38]

- there must be a prima facie showing that the peremptory challenge was based on race or gender;[39]
- the burden shifts to the opposing party to articulate a race- or gender-neutral explanation for striking the juror;[40] and
- the court must determine whether the objecting party has carried the burden of proving purposeful discrimination.

VII. Concluding Questions

At the end of the court-conducted voir dire, many judges review one or more of the important jury instructions with the jury. An example follows.

If you are selected as a juror, following the completion of all of the testimony and the arguments of counsel, I will instruct you on the principles of law that will govern you in your consideration of the evidence, weighing the testimony, and reaching your verdict. One of the instructions is on burden of proof and presumption of innocence. It reads as follows:

[READ WIS JI-CRIMINAL 140]

Is there anyone who believes that he or she could not follow that instruction?"

Another instruction relates to the credibility of witnesses. It reads as follows:"

[READ WIS JI-CRIMINAL 300]

Is there anyone who believes that he or she could not follow that instruction?"

IX. Anonymous And "Numbers" Juries

Whenever a court restricts any juror information, including referring to a juror by number instead of by name, the court must make an individualized determination that the restriction of information is necessary and must take reasonable precautions to minimize any prejudicial effect to the defendant.

In State v. Britt, 203 Wis.2d 25, 553 N.W.2d 528 (Ct. App. 1996), the trial court had ruled that the jurors' names, addresses, and places of employment could not be publicly revealed in open court or on the record; however, both parties had access to all juror information via written questionnaires. This was considered to be an "anonymous jury" and its use upheld by the court of appeals because there was a strong reason to believe that the jury needed protection and reasonable precautions were taken to minimize any prejudicial effect to the defendant.

In State v. Tucker, 2003 WI 12, 259 Wis.2d 484, 657 N.W.2d 374, the trial court used only numbers to refer to the jurors, although both parties had access to all juror information, including the jurors' names. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that this practice, termed a "numbers jury," was subject to the same requirements as those that apply to an anonymous jury[42] and found that the trial court erred in two respects. First, the trial court did not make an individualized determination that the jurors needed protection based on the specific circumstances of the case. Second, the trial court did not take adequate precautions to minimize any prejudicial effect.

A. Individualized Determination

Before a trial court restricts any juror information, the court must make an individualized determination that the facts and circumstances of the case require that the jury be protected. Among the factors that may be taken into account:

(1) the defendant's involvement in organized crime;
(2) the defendant's participation in a group with the capacity to harm jurors;
(3) the defendant's past attempts to interfere with the judicial process; and
(4) extensive publicity that could enhance the possibility that jurors' names would become public and expose them to intimidation or harassment.

State v. Tucker, 2003 WI 12, ¶22 [citing United States v. Darden, 70 F.3d 1507, 1532 (8th Cir. 1995); United States v. Ross, 33 F.3d 1507, 1520 (11th Cir. 1994).]

B. Precautionary Statement

When juror information is restricted, there is a danger that the jurors will interpret the special measures as reflecting on the defendant's guilt or character. The general instruction on the presumption of innocence is not sufficient to address this issue. Therefore, "the circuit court, at a minimum, must make a precautionary statement to the jury that the use of numbers instead of names should in no way be interpreted as a reflection of the defendant's guilt or innocence. . . A precautionary statement must not mislead a jury, but must be based on factors and influences that are relevant in a particular case." State v. Tucker, 2003 WI 12, ¶23, ¶24.[43]

While it may be necessary to tailor the precautionary statement for the facts of a particular case, the Committee offers the following as a general model:[44]

> I have decided that for the convenience of court and counsel, we will refer to jurors by numbers. This should not influence your verdict in any manner.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal SM-20 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1991, 2000, 2003, 2004, and 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2017.

"Control of the voir dire examination rests primarily with the trial court. . . . The trial court has broad discretion as to the form and number of questions to be asked. The exercise of this discretion and the court's restriction upon inquiries, however, are subject to 'the essential demands of fairness.'" (Citation omitted.) Hammill v. State, 89 Wis.2d 404, 408, 278 N.W.2d 821 (1979).

General standards set forth by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in a 1962 decision strike the Committee as appropriate today:

> We approve the procedure followed by the trial court in conducting the voir dire examination. This procedure is for the court to propound the questions quite generally asked of jurors in most jury trials. Under this procedure, counsel are confined to later propounding only those questions to individual jurors which cover matters not included in the questions put by the court. We deem that this greatly shortens the time required in picking a jury over that required where the court leaves the questioning entirely to counsel, but at the same time adequately protects the interests of the parties. We especially commend the step here followed of holding a preliminary conference between the court and counsel, without the hearing of the jury, for the purpose of permitting counsel to request that particular questions be propounded to the jury and permitting opposing counsel to enter objections thereto. If any requested questions are denied, or if objections are entered to questions the court proposes to ask the panel, the reporter should record the same as was done here.

Filipiak v. Plombon, 15 Wis.2d 484, 496, 113 N.W.2d 365 (1962).

Subsection 805.08(1) provides in part that questions by the parties "shall not be . . . based on hypothetical questions." (The complete statute is quoted in note 3, below.)

1. Closing voir dire to the press and public is justified only when there is a compelling need to protect the defendant's right to a fair trial. A hearing must be conducted and specific findings must be made before a closure order is entered. State ex rel. LaCrosse Tribune v. Circuit Court, 115 Wis.2d 220, 340 N.W.2d 460 (1983). Also see State ex rel. Storer v. Gorenstein, 131 Wis.2d 342, 388 N.W.2d 633 (Ct. App. 1986); Press Enterprise Co. v. Superior Court, 464 U.S. 501 (1984).

In two cases from the same county, the same trial judge excluded the public from voir dire, primarily because the courtroom was too small to accommodate the large jury panels and members of the public. Neither defendant objected, and the rest of the trial was open. In State v. Pinno and State v. Seaton, 2014 WI 74, 356 Wis.2d 106, 850 N.W.2d 207, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reached the following conclusions:

> ¶6 First, the Sixth Amendment right to a public trial extends to voir dire. Presley v. Georgia, 558 U.S. 209, 213 (2010). A judge's decision to "close" or limit public access to a courtroom in a criminal case requires the court to go through an analysis on the record in which the court considers overriding interests and reasonable alternatives as set out in Waller v. Georgia, 467 U.S. 39, 45, 48 (1984). The court must make specific findings on the record to support the exclusion of the public and must narrowly tailor the closure. Id.

¶7 Second, the Sixth Amendment right to a public trial may be asserted by the defendant at any time during a trial. A defendant who fails to object to a judicial decision to close the courtroom forfeits the right to a public trial, so long as the defendant is aware that the judge has excluded the public from the courtroom. . . .

¶8 Third, the records in these cases are clear that neither Seaton nor Pinno objected to the alleged courtroom closure. . . . Therefore, Seaton and Pinno both forfeited their rights to a public trial.

Note: There is an extensive discussion of the obligations of the trial judge with respect to closing the courtroom – see ¶¶69-80.

2. The defendant has a right to be present at voir dire under § 971.04(1)(c) and the state and federal constitutions; further, this right may not be waived. State v. Harris, 229 Wis.2d 832, 839, 601 N.W.2d 682 (Ct. App. 1999). The right to be present includes voir dire conducted in camera. State v. David J.K., 190 Wis.2d 726, 528 N.W.2d 434 (Ct. App. 1994). The exclusion of the defendant from the in camera interview of three jurors was found to be harmless error in State v. Tulley, 2001 WI App 236, 248 Wis.2d 505, 635 N.W.2d 807. However, in extreme cases, a defendant may forfeit the right to be present by engaging in disruptive behavior. Trial courts are afforded considerable discretion in dealing with these difficult situations. See, for example, State v. Haste, 175 Wis.2d 1, 500 N.W.2d 678 (Ct. App. 1993); Illinois v. Allen, 397 U.S. 337 (1970). (Also see SM-30, WAIVER AND FORFEITURE OF COUNSEL . . .)

In State v. Gribble, 2001 WI App 227, 248 Wis.2d 409, 636 N.W.2d 488, the court held that it was not error for the trial court to conduct inquiries of prospective jurors regarding possible undue hardship resulting from jury service outside the presence of the defendant and defense counsel. Questioning about possible excuse from or deferral of jury service under § 756.03 is not part of the "voir dire" within the meaning of § 971.04(1)(c). 2001 WI App 227, ¶18. However, caution should be exercised in engaging in any conversation with jurors off the record. See State v. Harris, supra.

In State v. Alexander, 2013 WI 70, 349 Wis.2d 327, 833 N.W.2d 126, the defendant was tried before a jury on a charge of 1st degree intentional homicide. During the trial, two jurors approached the bailiff to state that one juror knew a woman in the gallery and the other that he knew one of the defense witnesses. The judge held separate in-chambers discussions with each juror; the prosecutor and defense counsel were present; the defendant was not. The judge dismissed both jurors. The defendant appealed on the ground that he had a right to be present at the in-chambers discussions. The Wisconsin Supreme Court recognized that the defendant had a constitutional right to be present at his trial, but "[w]hether this right to be present at trial encompasses in-chambers meetings "admits of no categorical 'yes' or 'no' answer. A conference in chambers might well constitute part of the trial depending upon what matters are discussed or passed upon. Likewise, such a conference might not be a part of the trial in the sense of one's constitutional right to be present. . . The test for whether a defendant's presence is required at an in-chambers hearing, or at a conference in the courtroom after the judge has emptied it of spectators, is whether his absence would deny him a fair and just hearing." ¶1 The court concluded that Alexander's constitutional and statutory rights to be present were not violated.

3. The statutory framework relating to the selection of jurors and voir dire is provided by §§ 972.01 and 805.08. Section 972.01 provides that civil rules apply:

> The summoning of jurors, the selection and qualifications of the jury, the challenge of jurors for cause and the duty of the court in charging the jury and giving instructions and discharging the jury when unable to agree shall be the same in criminal as in civil actions, except that s. 805.08(3) shall not apply.

(The excepted section, § 805.08(3), relates to the number of peremptory challenges, which is covered by § 972.03 for criminal cases.) Sections 756.001 through 756.03 address the qualifications of jurors and excuses from and deferrals of jury service. The standards for examination of jurors in civil cases are set forth in § 805.08(1):

> The court shall examine on oath each person who is called as a juror to discover whether the juror is related by blood or marriage to any party or to any attorney appearing in the case, or has any financial interest in the case, or has expressed or formed any opinion, or is aware of any bias or prejudice in the case. If a juror is not indifferent in the case, the juror shall be excused. Any party objecting for cause to a juror may introduce evidence in support of the objection. This section shall not be construed as abridging in any manner the right of either party to supplement the court's examination of any person as to qualifications, but such examination shall not be repetitious or based upon hypothetical questions.

4. "756.02 Juror qualifications. Every resident of the area served by a circuit court who is at least 18 years of age, a U.S. citizen and able to understand the English language is qualified to serve as a juror in that circuit unless that resident has been convicted of a felony and has not had his or her civil rights restored."

5. Persons who are not "able to read and understand the English language" are not qualified for jury service; the clerk shall strike their names from the list of prospective jurors. §§ 756.02 and 756.04(9). State v. Carlson, 2003 WI 40, ¶2, 261 Wis.2d 97, 661 N.W.2d 51.

6. State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999), adopted the term "statutory bias" to identify those excluded from jury service under § 805.08(1): those related by blood or marriage to any party or to any attorney appearing in the case and those who have a financial interest in the case. A person meeting one of these descriptions may not serve regardless of his or her ability to be impartial. Those who are to be excluded for "subjective bias" or "objective bias" can be identified only after a more complete inquiry. See the text at section V for a summary of the jury bias jurisprudence announced in Faucher and its companion cases.

7. Marriage does not cause the blood relatives of one spouse to become related to the blood relatives of the other spouse. Thus, it was not error to refuse to disqualify a juror whose second cousin was married to the victim's sister. State v. Noren, 125 Wis.2d 204, 211, 371 N.W.2d 381 (Ct. App. 1985).

8. "[P]rospective jurors who are related to a state witness by blood or marriage to the third degree as shown in Figure 852.03(2), Stats., must be struck from the jury on the basis of implied bias." State v. Gesch, 167 Wis.2d 660, 662, 482 N.W.2d 99 (1992). [Note: The degree of kinship table formerly found in § 852.03(2) was recreated as § 990.001(16) by 1999 Wisconsin Act 32.] Under the current juror bias jurisprudence, Gesch is apparently to be treated as a unique case where "objective bias" will always be present. State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 724, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999). See the text at section V for a summary of the jury bias jurisprudence announced in Faucher and its companion cases.

A prospective juror who is the brother-in-law of a state witness must be struck for cause on the basis of statutory bias. State v. Czarnecki, 231 Wis.2d 1, 604 N.W.2d 891 (Ct. App. 1999).

9. Faucher, note 6, supra, concluded that jurors who are covered by the second set of statutorily-required questions – those who have expressed or formed an opinion and those who are aware of any bias or prejudice in the case – are not in the "statutory bias" class who must always be excluded. Rather, their affirmative answer is evidence of "subjective bias" or "objective bias" which requires further inquiry into their ability to be fair and impartial. See text at section V for a summary of the jury bias jurisprudence announced in Faucher and its companion cases.

10. The Committee does not believe that the order in which the questions are presented makes any difference, and it is expected that judges will develop a sequence that seems to them to be the most logical and convenient.

11. If the defendant's difference is not obvious, start with the second sentence.

12. A trial court's finding that a juror's physical limitations caused by a medical condition did not prevent him from sitting as a juror was affirmed in State v. Guzman, 2001 WI App 54, 241 Wis.2d 310, 624 N.W.2d 717. The constitutional right to an impartial jury requires that a defendant not be tried by a juror who cannot comprehend testimony. This right was violated where two hearing-impaired jurors did not hear some of the testimony of two child witnesses. State v. Turner, 186 Wis.2d 277, 521 N.W.2d 148 (Ct. App. 1999).

13. Asking questions like this may help to avoid problems with claims relating to alleged "sleeping jurors" that have reached the appellate courts. See, for example, State v. Novy, 2013 WI 23, 346 Wis.2d 289, 827 N.W.2d 610 and State v. Saunders, 2011 WI App 156, 338 Wis.2d 160, 807 N.W.2d 679.

14. Law enforcement officers are not per se ineligible to serve as jurors. "Absent actual proof to the contrary elicited during voir dire, there is simply no basis for concluding that law enforcement officers would not act in accordance with their sworn duty and decide a case impartially. . . ." State v. Louis, 156 Wis.2d 470, 483, 457 N.W.2d 484 (1990). Whether any individual officer should be removed for cause lies within the trial court's discretion. 156 Wis.2d 470, 479. Knowing a police officer involved in the case is not cause for dismissal if the persons say it will not impair their ability fairly to determine the evidence. State v. Zurfluh, 134 Wis.2d 436, 438, 397 N.W.2d 154 (Ct. App. 1986). ¶3

In State v. Smith, 2006 WI 74, 291 Wis.2d 569, 716 N.W.2d 482 , the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that it was not error (in a Milwaukee criminal prosecution) to refuse to strike for cause a juror who worked in the Milwaukee County DA's office in Children's Court: ". . . [T]he circuit court reasonably concluded that [the juror] was not objectively biased under the facts and circumstances as a reasonable person in [the juror's] position could be impartial. . . . Essentially, we decline to create a per se rule that excludes potential jurors for the sole reason that they are employed by the Milwaukee County District Attorney's Office."

15. This topic was added by the Committee in response to suggestions that the so-called CSI effect be addressed. This refers to unrealistic expectations about investigative practices that jurors may have as a result of watching television shows, movies, etc. The Committee believes it is important to state the inquiry broadly enough to include expectations relating to the law and how judges and lawyers act as well as to include expectations created by books and media reports.

16. So-called veteran jurors should not be categorically excluded, even where issues in a subsequent trial are nearly identical to the initial trial. Rather, there should be an individualized analysis of each juror to determine if there is "subjective bias" or "objective bias." State v. Kiernan, 227 Wis.2d 736, 596 N.W.2d 760 (1999). In Kiernan, the court applied the "objective bias" test to "veteran jurors" who, sitting in a previous case, had rejected the same breathalyzer defense that Kiernan used. The court held that the veteran jurors showed "objective bias" – reasonable jurors in their position could not set aside their opinions and prior knowledge about the accuracy of breathalyzer results.

Also see State v. Loukata, 180 Wis.2d 191, 196, 580 N.W.2d 896 (Ct. App. 1993): while "jurors who had acquitted a defendant in an unrelated case were improperly excused from the panel from which Loukata's jury panel was drawn," the defendant's right to a jury selected from a fair cross section of the community was not violated.

17. In State v. Delgado, 223 Wis.2d 270, 588 N.W.2d 1 (1999), the court reversed a conviction and ordered a new trial where a juror failed to disclose, in response to a voir dire question, that she had been the victim of a sexual assault when she was a child. The court found that the trial court's finding of no "inferred bias" was clearly erroneous. Under the court's juror bias jurisprudence, this type of case is to be analyzed under the test for "objective bias." State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 726-27, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999).

Also see State v. Olson, 179 Wis.2d 715, 508 N.W.2d 616 (Ct. App. 1993), involving the same situation as that presented in Delgado.

In State v. Funk, 2011 WI 62, 335 Wis.2d 369, 799 N.W.2d 421, the defendant was convicted by a jury of two counts of sexual assault of a child. After trial, it was discovered that one of the jurors, Tanya G., had been the victim of multiple sexual assaults by a school bus driver when she was 10 and the victim of a forcible sexual assault when she was 17. Specific questions about jurors' possible history as victims were not asked during voir dire, but closely related questions were. The trial court held a postconviction hearing and concluded that Tanya G. was subjectively biased and objectively biased and ordered a new trial. The court of appeals affirmed and the supreme court reversed, summarizing its holding as follows:

> ¶2 We conclude that Tanya G. failed to respond to a material question during voir dire when Funk's attorney asked if anyone on the jury panel had previously testified in a criminal case. We also conclude that the circuit court's finding that Tanya G. was subjectively biased against Funk is unsupported by facts of record and is clearly erroneous. Finally, we conclude that the facts necessary to ground a circuit court's reasonable legal conclusion that a reasonable person in Tanya G.'s position could not be impartial were not > developed in this case, and therefore the circuit court's conclusion that Tanya G. was objectively biased was erroneous. Accordingly, we reverse the court of appeals order and reinstate the guilty verdict and judgment of conviction.

Three justices dissented, concluding that the trial court's decision deserved greater deference and that it was supported by a reasonable interpretation of the facts.

18. See Wis JI-Criminal 60 for a suggested instruction advising jurors that they must rely on the evidence as presented through the official court interpreter. It may be advisable to obtain a juror's commitment to do so during voir dire.

19. Objection to a juror's bias is waived if no motion is made to remove the juror for cause. State v. Olexa, 136 Wis.2d 475, 402 N.W.2d 733 (Ct. App. 1987). Defense counsel's "failure to so move is a waiver of the defendant's right to object to that person sitting on the jury. There need be no statement on the record by the defendant that he consents to each juror that is sworn in." State v. Brunette, 220 Wis.2d 431, 445, 583 N.W.2d 174 (Ct. App. 1998).

20. Whether jurors' answers were sufficient to "rehabilitate" them was discussed in State v. Lepsch, 2017 WI 27, 374 Wis.2d 98, 892 N.W.2d 682.

21. State v. Faucher, 227 Wis.2d 700, 596 N.W.2d 770 (1999) was the lead decision. It concluded that a juror who had a strong opinion that a key witness was credible should have been dismissed for "objective bias." State v. Kiernan, 227 Wis.2d 736, 596 N.W.2d 760 (1999), concluded that "veteran jurors" should not be categorically excused but that the jurors in the case showed "objective bias" because they had strong opinions about the reliability of breathalyzer test results, which was the focus of the defense in the case. State v. Mendoza, 227 Wis.2d 838, 596 N.W.2d 736 (1999), reached a similar conclusion with regard to jurors with criminal records – they should not be categorically excused but may show "objective bias" when their criminal justice experience is recent and resulted in strong negative feelings about the system. In the fourth case, State v. Erickson, 227 Wis.2d 758, 596 N.W.2d 749 (1999), the court concluded that a juror's experience 40 years earlier as a victim of sexual assault did not show either subjective or objective bias.

The Faucher decision also reviewed seven previously-decided juror bias cases and classified them under the new terminology. 227 Wis.2d. 700, 721-30.

22. Czarnecki relied on State v. Gesch, see note 8, supra, which had held that a juror who was the brother of the state's police witness should be excluded on the basis of "objective bias."

23. See State v. Gesch, discussed in note 8, supra. Faucher characterized Gesch as a "unique" case apparently to be treated as one of "objective bias." 227 Wis.2d 700, 724.

24. State v. Louis, 156 Wis.2d 470, 457 N.W.2d 484 (1990): police officers; State v. Kiernan, 227 Wis.2d 736, 596 N.W.2d 760 (1999): veteran jurors; State v. Mendoza, 227 Wis.2d 838, 596 N.W.2d 736 (1999): jurors with a criminal record; and State v. Chosa, 198 Wis.2d 392, 321 N.W.2d 280 (1982): Native Americans in a case where the defendant was a Native American.

25. Subjective bias was not present where a self-employed juror said he did not want to serve, because his income would suffer and that he thought this would affect his ability to fair. "Inconvenience and inability to work during regular working hours should not, and cannot, be transferred into bias sufficient to strike a juror for cause." State v. Guzman, 2001 WI App 54, ¶17, 241 Wis.2d 310, 624 N.W.2d 717.

26. But see State v. Czarnecki, 2000 WI App 155, 237 Wis.2d 794, 615 N.W.2d 672, where subjective bias was not found to be established, despite the juror's statements that he believed police officers were generally more credible than other witnesses and that he could "probably" put that belief aside.

27. But see Oswald v. Bertrand, 374 F.3d 475 (7th Cir. 2004), where the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit granted relief, concluding that there was inadequate inquiry of the extent to which extensive publicity affected the jury panel's ability to be impartial. The decision emphasized the trial court's duty to undertake a diligent inquiry where there is a high probability of jury bias. Decisions of "lower federal courts" are not binding on courts in Wisconsin. State v. Lepsch, 2017 WI 27, 374 Wis.2d 98, 892 N.W.2d 682, ¶35, footnote 14.

28. But see State v. Czarnecki, 2000 WI App 155, 237 Wis.2d 794, 615 N.W.2d 672, where Faucher was distinguished on the grounds that the juror did not have a strong opinion about the credibility of the police officer witness.

29. In Tody, three justices noted three bases contributing to "objective bias": "the judge's mother has an interest in the case, namely her familial relationship with the judge, that is extraneous to the evidence on which the jury is to base its decision"; "the mother's presence may have a potential impact on the trial proceedings or the jury's deliberations"; and, "the presence of a member of the judge's immediate family on the jury seems conspicuously inconsistent with the jury's function as, in part, a check upon the power of the judge." 2009 WI 31, ¶¶38-40. Three justices concluded that "it was counterproductive to pigeonhole this case into the category of objective bias," 2009 WI 31, ¶66, but agreed that the judge erred in presiding over the case with his mother on the jury panel. They referred to SCR 60.04(4)(e) which requires a judge to recuse himself or herself when "a person within the third degree of kinship" to the judge is a party, a lawyer, has more than a de minimis interest that could be substantially affected by the proceeding or is likely to be a material witness. The rule does not specifically list being a juror as a ground for recusal, but may offer some guidance as to the nature of the relationships that might raise the issue presented in Tody.

30. The automatic reversal rule of Ramos was not required under the federal constitution. In United States v. Martinez-Salazar, 528 U.S. 304, 307 (2000), the Court held that if a defendant elects to cure a trial court's erroneous refusal to excuse a juror for cause by exercising a peremptory challenge, "and is subsequently convicted by a jury on which no biased juror sat, he has not been deprived of any rule-based or constitutional right." Ramos was based on the deprivation of statutorily granted peremptory challenges, not on constitutional grounds. It is that decision that was overruled in Lindell.

In the opposite situation – where a juror is unnecessarily removed for cause, automatic reversal is not required. State v. Mendoza, 227 Wis.2d 838, 856-64, 596 N.W.2d 736 (1999); State v. Jimmie R.R., 2000 WI App 5, ¶25, 232 Wis.2d 138, 606 N.W.2d 196.

31. Note that a penalty of life imprisonment applies not only to Class A felonies but also to life sentences for persistent repeaters under § 939.62(2m). See State v. Erickson, 227 Wis.2d 758, 596 N.W.2d 749 (1999).

32. Section 972.03 provides in part:

> If there is more than one defendant, the court shall divide the challenges as equally as practicable among them; and if their defenses are adverse and the court is satisfied that the protection of their rights so requires, the court may allow the defendants additional challenges.

If the crime is punishable by life imprisonment, the number increases to 12 if there are two defendants and to 18 if there are three defendants. Id.

33. State v. Nantelle, 2000 WI App 110, 235 Wis.2d 91, 612 N.W.2d 356.

34. In Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 79 (1986), the United States Supreme Court reexamined the portion of Swain v. Alabama, 380 U.S. 202 (1965), relating to the evidentiary burden a defendant must meet to show unfair use of racially-based peremptory challenges. The following new test was announced:

> . . . a defendant may establish a prima facie case of purposeful discrimination in selection of the petit jury solely on evidence concerning the prosecutor's exercise of peremptory challenges at the defendant's trial. To establish such a case, the defendant first must show that he is a member of a cognizable racial group . . . and that the prosecutor has exercised peremptory challenges to remove from the venire members of the defendant's race. Second, the defendant is entitled to rely on the fact, as to which there can be no dispute, that peremptory challenges constitute a jury selection practice that permits "those to discriminate who are of a mind to discriminate." . . . Finally, the defendant must show that these facts and any other relevant circumstances raise an inference that the prosecutor used that practice to exclude the veniremen from the petit jury on account of their race. This combination of factors in the empaneling of the petit jury, as in the selection of the venire, raises the necessary inference of purposeful discrimination.

476 U.S. 79, 96.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court applied the Batson decision in State v. Walker, 154 Wis.2d 158, 453 N.W.2d 127 (1990), reversing a conviction because the record showed "an unrebutted prima facie case of purposeful discrimination." 154 Wis.2d 158, 179. See State v. Waites, 158 Wis.2d 376, 462 N.W.2d 206 (1990), where the court found the Batson claim was waived. Also see State v. Lamon, 2003 WI 78, 262 Wis.2d 747, 664 N.W.2d 607, which did not articulate new legal principles but did provide a detailed example of reasons found to be race-neutral.

35. Powers v. Ohio, 499 U.S. 400 (1991).

36. J.E.B. v. Alabama ex rel. T.B., 511 U.S. 127 (1994); State v. Joe C., 186 Wis.2d 580, 522 N.W.2d 222 (Ct. App. 1994); State v. Jagodinsky, 209 Wis.2d 577, 563 N.W.2d 188 (Ct. App. 1997).

37. State v. Jones, 218 Wis.2d 599, 581 N.W.2d 561 (Ct. App. 1998).

38. The three-part test is the one developed in Batson v. Kentucky, 476 U.S.79 (1986), for cases involving racial discrimination. It also applies to gender discrimination. State v. King, 215 Wis.2d 295, 572 N.W.2d 530 (Ct. App. 1997); State v. Jagodinsky, 209 Wis.2d 577, 563 N.W.2d 188 (Ct. App. 1997).

39. For a case finding a failure to make the required prima facie showing of race-based peremptory, see State v. Lopez, 173 Wis.2d 724, 496 N.W.2d 617 (Ct. App. 1992).

40. The party defending a claim of use of peremptories for discriminatory purposes "must offer something more than a bald, but otherwise credible, statement that other nonprohibited factors were considered. Rather, he or she must demonstrate how there is a nexus between these legitimate factors and the juror who was struck." State v. Jagodinsky, 209 Wis.2d 577, 584-85, 563 N.W.2d 188 (Ct. App. 1977).

Fears that a bilingual juror would be unable to rely exclusively on the court interpreter's version of testimony is a race-neutral ground for exercising a peremptory challenge. Hernandez v. New York, 500 U.S. 352 (1991).

The following were found to be racially neutral reasons in State v. Gregory, 2001 WI App 107, ¶12, 244 Wis.2d 65, 630 N.W.2d 711: concern about the juror's truthfulness; family members with relationship with cocaine, the substance on which the charge was based; close proximity to the alleged drug house; and, a concern that the juror's uncle could have been recently arrested for involvement with drug trafficking.

41. Whether to include preliminary instructions at this point depends on the preference of the trial judge and other factors, such as the amount of time that may pass before the trial begins. Wis JI-Criminal 50 includes recommended preliminary instructions and cautions regarding juror's use of electronic communication devices.

42. "[T]he jury in this case was not a classic 'anonymous' jury. Notwithstanding whether the jury in this case is characterized as an 'anonymous' or a 'numbers' jury, if restrictions are placed on juror identification or information, due process concerns are raised regarding a defendant's rights to an impartial jury and a presumption of innocence. Accordingly, although this case does not deal with the classic 'anonymous' jury, the reasoning in cases involving anonymous juries is beneficial to our analysis." State v. Tucker, 2003 WI 12, ¶11.

43. Tucker offered the following as illustrations of statements that have been made by courts in other jurisdictions: United States v. DeLuca, 137 F.3d 24 (1st Cir. 1998) (district court may instruct jury that their identities will be withheld to ensure that no extrajudicial information is conveyed to them); United States v. Scarfo, 850 F.2d 1015 (3d Cir. 1988) (district court may instruct jury that their anonymity is a precautionary measure to ensure that both sides get a fair trial); State v. Samonte, 928 P.2d 1 (Haw. 1996) (circuit court may instruct jury that anonymity is to protect jurors from contacts by the news media); State v. Bowles, 530 N.W.2d 521 (Minn. 1995) (circuit court may instruct jury that purpose of anonymity is to shield jurors from media harassment and undesirable publicity); State v. McKenzie, 532 N.W.2d 210 (Minn. 1995) (circuit court may instruct jury that they will remain anonymous to shield them from media harassment and ward off curiosity that might infringe on their privacy). State v. Tucker, 2003 WI 12, ¶24.

SM-21 WAIVER OF JURY TRIAL: ACCEPTANCE, WITHDRAWAL, AND RELATED ISSUES

The following is intended for use when a defendant with counsel wishes to waive a jury trial.[1] If the defendant is without counsel, it may be necessary to obtain or renew a waiver of counsel. See SM-30, Waiver and Forfeiture of Counsel.

CONTENTS

I. Accepting or Rejecting a Proposed Jury Trial Waiver

A. Consent of the State

The court should first ask the prosecutor whether the State consents to a proffered jury trial waiver. Section 972.02(1) provides that a jury trial waiver requires the consent of the state. The State is not required to offer reasons for refusing to consent.[2]

B. Trial Court Authority to Reject a Waiver

The trial court has authority to reject a jury trial waiver even if the State consents. Like the State's decision to withhold consent, the trial court need not explain its decision and, absent extraordinary circumstances, that decision is not reviewable.[3]

II. Determining the Defendant's Ability to Understand the Waiver

As with any waiver, the waiver of the right to a jury trial requires that the defendant make an understanding and intelligent decision. This may require an investigation of the defendant's background, present mental condition, etc. For suggested questions designed to explore this aspect of a waiver decision, see SM-32, ACCEPTING A PLEA OF GUILTY, at section II.

III. Determining that the Waiver is Knowing and Voluntary

A jury trial waiver must be made personally, knowingly, and voluntarily. A personal inquiry is required and the record must clearly indicate the defendant's willingness and intent to waive the right to a jury trial.[4] The following are examples of questions that should be asked. Answers indicating the need for more information should be pursued.

> Before your waiver of your constitutional right to a jury trial is accepted, the court will ask you some questions to decide whether your waiver should be accepted. If you have any trouble understanding the questions, please tell me, and take all the time you need to confer with your attorney.
> Do you understand that you have the right to a jury trial, that is to have twelve people hear all the evidence in the case and decide whether you are guilty or not guilty?
> Do you understand that in a jury trial, the State must convince each member of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that you committed the crime?[5]
> Do you understand that by giving up your right to a jury trial, this court, after hearing all of the evidence, will make a decision on whether you are guilty beyond a reasonable doubt or not guilty?
> Has anyone promised you anything to get you to give up your right to a jury trial?

Has anyone threatened you to get you to give up your right to a jury trial?

Knowing what I have just told you, do you still wish to give up your right to a jury trial?

Have you had enough time to discuss this with your attorney?

Has your attorney explained your right to a jury trial to you?

Do you understand the questions I have asked and understand what your attorney has told you?

DIRECT THE FOLLOWING QUESTION TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

Do you believe that the defendant understands the right to a jury trial and the right to a unanimous verdict and is giving up those rights freely, voluntarily, and intelligently?

IF THE COURT IS SATISFIED THAT DEFENDANT'S WAIVER OF A JURY TRIAL IS MADE FREELY, VOLUNTARILY, AND KNOWINGLY, AND THE COURT APPROVES, THE COURT SHOULD MAKE FINDINGS OF FACT, ON THE RECORD, SUBSTANTIALLY AS FOLLOWS:

The court finds that the defendant understands the constitutional right to a jury trial and that the defendant freely and voluntarily waives that right.

IV. Related Issues

A. Agreeing to a Jury of Less Than Twelve

Section 972.02(2) provides as follows:

> At any time before the verdict in a felony case, the parties may stipulate in writing or by statement in open court, on the record, with the approval of the court, that the jury shall consist of any number less than 12.

The procedures required for waiver of trial by jury apply equally to waiver of a full 12-member jury. State v. Cooley, 105 Wis.2d 642, 646, 315 N.W.2d 369 (Ct. App. 1981).

B. Waiver of a Unanimous Verdict

This question was referred to in State v. Koput, 142 Wis.2d 370, 418 N.W.2d 804 (1988), in connection with the second phase of the bifurcated trial held where a defendant enters a plea of not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. At the time of the decision, the statute did not, as it does now, provide explicitly for a 5/6 verdict at the second phase. There was uncertainty about whether the second phase verdict had to be unanimous. The court of appeals held that a unanimous verdict was required and that it was so fundamental a right that it could not be waived. State v. Koput, 134 Wis.2d 195, 396 N.W.2d 773 (Ct. App. 1986). The supreme court reversed, but because it held that the verdict was to be 5/6, it did not have to address the waiver issue.

The rule that a unanimous verdict is a right too fundamental to be waived is apparently the common law rule. However, several states do allow such waivers.[6] The ABA Standards for Criminal Justice allow a waiver of a unanimous verdict. Standard 15-1.3(b) (2nd ed. 1980). The court of appeals decision in Koput had relied on a previous holding that there could be no waiver of the unanimous verdict. That holding, Holland v. State, 87 Wis.2d 567, 275 N.W.2d 162 (Ct. App. 1978), was reversed on other grounds, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979).

C. Partial Jury Trial Waiver

In some situations, a defendant may wish to stipulate that one element of an offense is established. This might be viewed as a waiver of the right to a jury trial on that element. If so, does the acceptance of the stipulation require a partial jury trial waiver and an appropriate inquiry into the defendant's ability to give that waiver? In State v. Villarreal, 153 Wis.2d 323, 450 N.W.2d 519 (Ct. App. 1989), the trial court accepted a stipulation from the prosecutor and defense counsel that the question of whether the offense was committed while armed with a dangerous weapon would be decided by the court instead of the jury. The court of appeals held that this was error: withdrawal of that element from the jury required a personal waiver from the defendant.

V. Withdrawal of a Jury Trial Waiver

In State v. Cloud, 133 Wis.2d 58, 393 N.W.2d 123 (Ct. App. 1986), the court characterized the question of "[w]hether, and under what circumstances, a defendant may withdraw a valid jury waiver" as one "of first impression in this state." 133 Wis.2d 58, 63. The court adopted an abuse of discretion standard for evaluating a trial court's refusal to allow withdrawal of a jury trial waiver, but went further to hold "that it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to deny a criminal defendant's motion to withdraw a jury waiver if there is no showing that granting withdrawal would have substantially delayed or impeded the cause of justice." 133 Wis.2d 58, 65.

COMMENT

SM-21 was originally published in 1990. Footnote 3 was modified in April 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2004.

Section 972.02(1) provides that "criminal cases shall be tried by a jury . . . unless the defendant waives a jury in writing or by statement in open court . . . on the record, with the approval of the court and the consent of the state." (The statute allows the waiver to be accepted by telephone under § 967.08.)

The Wisconsin statute was modeled after Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. State v. Cook, 141 Wis.2d 42, 413 N.W.2d 647 (Ct. App. 1987).

Also see CR16-1, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook - Criminal-Traffic.

All the requirements of § 972.02 and the case law interpreting it do not apply to jury trial waivers in Chapter 980 commitment proceedings. See § 980.05(2). State v. Bernstein, 231 Wis.2d 292, 605 N.W.2d 555 (Ct. App. 1999); State v. Denman, 2001 WI App 96, 243 Wis.2d 14, 626 N.W.2d 296.

1. The procedure recommended here applies regardless of the time the waiver is offered. In Warrix v. State, 50 Wis.2d 368, 184 N.W.2d 189 (1971), the court interpreted § 957.01, the predecessor to present § 972.02. It held that nothing in the statute prohibited the acceptance of a jury waiver after the trial to a jury had begun. The court noted, however, that "[i]f a judge believes he cannot recollect the testimony or did not make notes to help him or for any reason he cannot function as the trier of the facts he needs only to refuse to accept the offer to waive the jury." 50 Wis.2d 368, 372.

2. Section 972.02(1) provides that a jury trial waiver requires the consent of the state. In State v. Cook, 141 Wis.2d 42, 413 N.W.2d 647 (Ct. App. 1987), the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that the state is not required to justify its refusal to consent to a defendant's jury trial waiver. It relied on Singer v. United States, 380 U.S. 24 (1965), which reached the same result in interpreting Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Section 972.02 was modeled after Rule 23. The court did note that a different result might be required if there was a showing of exceptional circumstances, such as denial of equal protection.

3. In State v. Burks, 2004 WI App 14, 268 Wis.2d 747, 674 N.W.2d 640, the court held that "the trial court's 'approval' of a defendant's jury-trial waiver under Wis. Stat. § 972.02(1) is not [a] quasi-ministerial rubber-stamping of the parties' request. . . Rather, . . . , like the prosecution's decision to withhold consent to a defendant's request to waive his or her right to a jury trial, the trial court also need not explain its decision to withhold its approval, and absent extraordinary circumstances not present here, its decision to withhold approval, like the prosecution's decision to withhold consent, is not reviewable." Burks, ¶10.

4. In State v. Anderson, 2002 WI 7, ¶29, 249 Wis.2d 586, 638 N.W.2d 301, the court stated: "Although Anderson submitted a written jury trial waiver form, we find that the circuit court erred by failing to engage Anderson in a personal colloquy regarding the jury trial waiver. . . [W]e mandate the use of a personal colloquy in every case . . ." The court identified four matters that the personal colloquy must cover: 1) a deliberate choice, absent threats or promises, to proceed without trial; 2) awareness that a jury consists of 12 people who must all agree on all elements of the crime charged; 3) awareness that in a court trial the judge decides whether the defendant is guilty; and, 4) that there was enough time to discuss the decision with counsel. Anderson, ¶24.

Also see State v. Cloud, 133 Wis.2d 58, 62, 393 N.W.2d 123 (Ct. App. 1986), citing State v. Moore, 97 Wis.2d 669, 671, 294 N.W.2d 551, 553 (Ct. App. 1980).

Section 972.02 and appellate decisions emphasize that the record must reflect the jury trial waiver and that a waiver will not be implied from a defendant's acquiescence in a trial to the court. In State v. Krueger, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held: ". . . henceforth a record demonstrating the defendant's willingness and intent to give up the right to be tried by a jury must be established before the waiver is accepted." 84 Wis.2d 272, 282, 267 N.W.2d 602 (1978).

However, the Krueger decision did not adopt a specific procedure for making the required record. It cited two methods with approval:

1) having the district attorney develop the record by asking questions of the defendant. See White v. State, 45 Wis.2d 672, 682, 173 N.W.2d 649 (1970).
2) placing the responsibility on the trial court as suggested by the ABA Standards Relating to Trial by Jury, sec.1.2(b) (1968). Commentary to that section [which is sec. 15-1.2(b) of the 2nd edition, 1980] was cited with approval in State v. Cloud, supra:

> It may well be that a defendant who has been informed by counsel or is otherwise aware of the right to trial by jury may intelligently waive that right without further admonishment from the court. However, consistent with the approach which has been taken with regard to entry of a plea of guilty, the better practice is for a court to advise a defendant of the right to jury trial before accepting a waiver. As one court has observed: "'[T]he serious and weighty responsibility' of determining whether [the defendant] wants to waive a constitutional right requires that he be brought before the court, advised of that right, and then permitted to make 'an intelligent and competent waiver.'" When the record or a written waiver establishes that a defendant was specifically advised that he or she could be tried by a jury, a subsequent attack on the waiver by the defendant is not likely to prevail.

3 Standards for Criminal Justice, sec. 15-1.2(b) commentary at 15.24 (2d ed. 1980), cited at 133 Wis.2d 58, 62.

The requirement that the defendant personally waive the right to a jury trial was reemphasized in State v. Livingston, 159 Wis.2d 561, 464 N.W.2d 839 (1991):

> . . . we hold that any waiver of the defendant's right to trial by jury must be made by an affirmative act of the defendant himself. The defendant must act personally; he and only he has the power and authority to waive his right to a jury trial, and that power and authority is legally effective only by virtue of an affirmative act by him. Neither counsel nor the court nor any other entity can act in any way or to any degree so as to waive on the defendant's behalf his right to trial by jury. The affirmative act by the defendant, in order to constitute a personal waiver, must be such as to comply with at least one of the specific means of effecting a waiver provided in sec. 972.02(1), and the court and the state must consent in order for a waiver to occur in accordance with the statute. The record must clearly demonstrate the defendant's personal waiver; the personal waiver may not be inferred or presumed. All of these concerns reflect the fact that the ultimate question is what the defendant wantsCa court trial or a jury trial; it is his decision, no matter what advice he has received. If the defendant waives the jury "in writing" under the statute when accepting the written waiver, the judge still should question the defendant as to the voluntariness and understanding of his action.

159 Wis.2d 561, 569-70.

The questions suggested here assume that the court will conduct the inquiry. While the recent jury trial waiver cases seem to assume that the court will do so, there appears to be no prohibition against having the prosecutor or defense counsel take the responsibility. This was noted by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in the Livingston case, supra:

> . . . we would add that defense counsel has a corresponding responsibility to ensure that the record of jury waiver is developed and failure to meet this responsibility can sometimes be considered inadequate representation by counsel. We also consider that in accordance with sec. 972.02(1), Stats., the district attorney bears a professional responsibility to develop an adequate record of the defendant's personal waiver of the jury.

159 Wis.2d 561, 570-71.

5. This question is based on the statement recommended in SM-32, Accepting a Plea of Guilty. It is intended to comply with the requirement imposed in State v. Resio, 148 Wis.2d 687, 436 N.W.2d 603 (1989). The court held:

> Although we have determined that knowledge of the unanimity requirement is not constitutionally required for a valid jury waiver, as a matter of judicial administration pursuant to our powers under Art. VII sec. 3 of the Wisconsin Constitution, we direct that, from the date of the mandate of this decision, a circuit court in a criminal case must advise the defendant that the court cannot accept a jury verdict that is not agreed to by each member of the jury.

SM-28 INQUIRY REGARDING THE DECISION WHETHER TO TESTIFY

THE FOLLOWING IS REQUIRED WHEN THE DEFENDANT SEEKS TO WAIVE THE RIGHT TO TESTIFY. IT IS RECOMMENDED WHEN THE DEFENDANT HAS DECIDED TO TESTIFY

DIRECT THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS TO THE DEFENDANT:

"Do you understand that you have a constitutional right to testify?"

"And do you understand that you have a constitutional right not to testify?"

"Do you understand that the decision whether to testify is for you to make?"

"Has anyone made any threats or promises to you to influence your decision?"

"Have you discussed your decision whether or not to testify with your lawyer?"

"Have you made a decision?"

"What is that decision?"

DIRECT THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

"Have you had sufficient opportunity to thoroughly discuss this case and the decision whether to testify with the defendant?"

"Are you satisfied that the defendant is making the decision knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily?"

THE COURT SHOULD STATE THE APPROPRIATE FINDING ON THE RECORD.

COMMENT

SM-28 was originally published in 2004. The Comment was updated in 2005 and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2011 to address State v. Denson, 2011 WI 70, 335 Wis.2d 681, 799 N.W.2d 831.

This Special Material is intended to provide a framework for implementing the requirement established in State v. Weed, 2003 WI 85, 263 Wis.2d 434, 666 N.W.2d 485:

> . . . in order to determine whether a criminal defendant is waiving his or her right to testify, a circuit court should conduct an on-the-record colloquy with the defendant outside the presence of the jury. The colloquy should consist of a basic inquiry to ensure that (1) the defendant is aware of his or her right to testify and (2) the defendant has discussed this right with his or her counsel. ¶43.

Weed requires the colloquy only when a defendant seeks to waive the right to testify. The Committee concluded that a similar inquiry should be conducted when the defendant decides to testify, because a constitutional right is involved regardless of the decision that is made. In State v. Jaramillo, 2009 WI App 39, ¶17, 316 Wis.2d 538, 765 N.W.2d 855, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals noted that while it lacked the authority to require a colloquy where a defendant decides to testify, "we do recommend it as good practice," citing this Comment.

In State v. Denson, 2011 WI 70, 335 Wis.2d 681, 799 N.W.2d 831, the Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed the question whether a colloquy is required when the defendant has decided to testify. The court concluded that while a fundamental constitutional right is involved, an on-the-record inquiry is not required. However, after noting there are some potential dangers in having the judge conduct a colloquy, the court recommended that an inquiry like that suggested in SM-28 be conducted. Relevant portions of the Denson decision follow.

> ¶8 A criminal defendant's constitutional right not to testify is a fundamental right that must be waived knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently. However, we conclude that circuit courts are not required to conduct an on-the-record colloquy to determine whether a defendant is knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waiving his or her right not to testify. While we recommend such a colloquy as the better practice, we decline to extend the mandate pronounced in Weed. In any case, once a defendant properly raises in a postconviction motion the issue of an invalid waiver of the right not to testify, an evidentiary hearing is an appropriate remedy to ensure that the defendant knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waived his or her right not to testify.
> ¶64 As the Weed court recognized, we are in the small minority of jurisdictions that impose an affirmative duty upon circuit courts to conduct an on-the-record colloquy to ensure that a criminal defendant is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waiving his or her right to testify. 263 Wis. 2d 434, ¶41. The vast majority of jurisdictions do not impose such a duty upon circuit courts, and in fact, many jurisdictions advise against it. Their reasons for not mandating an on-the-record colloquy are many. [Citations omitted.] The most notable include that by advising the defendant of his or her right to testify, the circuit court might inadvertently influence the defendant to waive his or her right not to testify, might improperly intrude upon the attorney-client relationship or interfere with defense strategy, or might lead the defendant into believing that his or her defense counsel is somehow deficient.

> ¶65 We believe that these risks apply with even greater force to a circuit court's inquiry into a criminal defendant's decision to testify. Defense counsel has the primary responsibility for advising the defendant of his or her corollary rights to testify and not to testify and for explaining the tactical implications of both. . . . In that sense, we believe it "unlikely that a competent defense counsel would allow a defendant to take the stand without a full explanation of the right to remain silent and the possible consequences of waiving that right." Once a defendant, counseled by his or her attorney, makes the decision to testify, a circuit court's inquiry into whether the defendant is aware of his or her corollary right not to testify runs a real risk of interfering with defense strategy and inadvertently suggesting to the defendant that the court disapproves of his or her decision to testify. . . .
> ¶66 Therefore, different from our conclusion in Weed, see 263 Wis. 2d 434, ¶¶41-42, we conclude that the risk that a circuit court's inquiry into a criminal defendant's decision to testify will influence the defendant to waive his or her right to testify or will improperly interfere with defense strategy outweighs the benefit of mandating an on-the-record colloquy to ensure that the defendant is knowingly, voluntarily, and intelligently waiving his or her right not to testify.
> ¶67 At the same time, as a practical matter, we recognize that conducting an on-the-record colloquy "is the clearest and most efficient means" of ensuring that the defendant has validly waived his or her right not to testify "and of preserving and documenting that valid waiver for purposes of appeal and postconviction motions." See Klessig, 211 Wis.2d at 206; see also Anderson, 249 Wis. 2d 586, ¶23. Here, for instance, we are mindful of the fact that had the circuit court engaged Denson in an on-the-record colloquy regarding his right not to testify, this case likely would not be before us. Accordingly, we recommend an on-the-record colloquy as the better practice. In fact, the Special Materials prepared by the Wisconsin Criminal Jury Instructions Committee already direct circuit courts to inquire into a criminal defendant's understanding of both the right to testify and the right not to testify. See Wis JI-Criminal SM-28.

The Committee recommends conducting this inquiry at the time the defense case is presented, as opposed to doing so at an earlier time. The decision should be made in context, when the consequences of testifying or waiving the right to do so will be more clear.

The questions provided here are just suggestions. If the defendant's replies indicate a possible lack of understanding, follow-up questions or allowing additional consultation between the defendant and defense counsel may be advisable.

For a case finding a waiver colloquy sufficient in light of the Weed requirements, see State v. Arredondo, 2004 WI App 7, 269 Wis.2d 369, 674 N.W.2d 647. Arredondo also addressed the standards to be applied if, after executing a valid waiver, a defendant seeks to reopen the testimony to allow him testify.

In State v. McDowell, 2004 WI 70, 272 Wis.2d 488, 681 N.W.2d 500, the Wisconsin Supreme Court imposed an additional obligation on the trial court in cases where defense counsel seeks to use the narrative approach in eliciting the defendant's testimony because of concern that the defendant may testify falsely. The court first concluded that "defense counsel may not substitute narrative questioning for the traditional question and answer format unless counsel knows the client intends to testify falsely. Absent the most extraordinary circumstances, such knowledge must be based on the client's expressed admission of intent to testify untruthfully." ¶3. If this standard is met, "the attorney's first duty shall be to attempt to dissuade the client from the unlawful course of conduct." ¶45. If counsel believes this advice will not be followed, "an attorney should seriously consider moving to withdraw from the case." ¶46. If the motion is denied, "counsel should proceed with the narrative form, advising the defendant beforehand of what that would entail." ¶47. Defense counsel also must advise the prosecutor and the court before using the narrative form. Upon being so advised, the court must proceed as follows:

Courts, in turn, shall be required to examine both counsel and the defendant and make a record of the following: (1) the basis for counsel's conclusion that the defendant intends to testify falsely; (2) the defendant's understanding of the right to testify, notwithstanding the intent to testify falsely; and (3) the defendant's, and counsel's, understanding of the nature and limitations of the narrative questioning that will result. ¶48.

SM-30 WAIVER AND FORFEITURE OF COUNSEL; SELF-REPRESENTATION; STANDBY COUNSEL; "HYBRID REPRESENTATION"; COURT APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL

Scope

This Special Material addresses issues that may arise when a defendant expresses the desire to waive counsel or appears without counsel after being directed to obtain representation. In these situations, the trial court must identify accurately the situation that is presented, make the required inquiry and make proper findings.

When a defendant affirmatively wishes to waive counsel, an inquiry must be conducted to determine whether the defendant's waiver is voluntarily and understandingly made. This includes assuring that the defendant understands the benefits of being represented by counsel and the disadvantages of proceeding without counsel. The waiver inquiry must also explore the defendant's competence for self-representation. The Committee concluded that defendants who lack competence to represent themselves cannot execute a valid waiver of the right to counsel. A suggested inquiry, suggested findings, and commentary relating to waiver of counsel are found in Part I.

A defendant may also be found to have forfeited the right to counsel. Forfeiture may occur in situations where the defendant has failed to obtain counsel, has refused to cooperate with counsel, or through other conduct has so seriously interfered with the orderly administration of the case that the right to counsel will be found to have been forfeited. A trial court must warn a defendant that, if the defendant persists in specific conduct, the court will find that the right to counsel is forfeited. The court must also engage in a colloquy designed to assure that the defendant understands the benefits of being represented by counsel and the disadvantages of proceeding without counsel. As with the express waiver of counsel, the inquiry must also explore the defendant's competence for self-representation. The court should make a clear ruling when the court deems the right to counsel to have been forfeited and make factual findings to support that ruling. A suggested inquiry, suggested findings, and commentary relating to forfeiture of counsel are found in Part II.

What makes these cases difficult is that a constitutional right of the defendant is in question regardless of how the case is resolved. The defendant has the right to be represented by counsel but also has the right to waive counsel and proceed pro se. Further, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has reaffirmed the rule that Wisconsin trial courts must evaluate a defendant's competence to proceed pro se whenever defendants seek to represent themselves. Part III discusses the considerations relating to evaluation of competence for self-representation.

Parts IV and V consider related issues: the appointment and role of standby counsel; and so-called hybrid representation, which occurs when a represented defendant seeks to engage in self-representation only during certain stages of the trial.

Attempts to waive counsel, conduct that may result in forfeiture of counsel, and attempts at self-representation are often connected with the problems confronting defendants who do not qualify for State Public Defender representation who nevertheless cannot afford to retain private counsel. Courts have the inherent power to appoint counsel in some situations. This is discussed in Part VI.

I. Express Waiver of Counsel

A. Suggested Inquiry

THE COURT MUST BE SATISFIED THAT THE DEFENDANT UNDERSTANDS THE PROCEEDINGS BEFORE ACCEPTING THE WAIVER. THE FOLLOWING ARE EXAMPLES OF AREAS THAT SHOULD BE THE SUBJECTS OF INQUIRY. ANSWERS INDICATING THE NEED FOR MORE INFORMATION SHOULD BE PURSUED. QUESTIONS SHOULD BE PHRASED IN A WAY THAT ENCOURAGES STATEMENTS FROM THE DEFENDANT THAT GO BEYOND SIMPLE "YES" AND "NO" ANSWERS.[1]

- Age

- Education and vocational training

- Present employment and employment history

- Present mental health condition and mental health history

- Present alcohol use and history of alcohol use

- Present medication or drug use

- Difficulty in understanding the court

IF THE DEFENDANT UNDERSTANDS THE PROCEEDINGS, THE COURT MUST ASSURE THAT THE DEFENDANT UNDERSTANDS THE RIGHT TO COUNSEL AND UNDERSTANDS THE BENEFITS OF BEING REPRESENTED.[2]

1. "Do you want to be represented by a lawyer?"

2. "Do you understand that you have a constitutional right to be represented by a lawyer in this case?"

3. "Do you understand that you have the right to hire your own lawyer?"

4. "If you do not have enough money to hire your own lawyer, you may be entitled to have a lawyer appointed to represent you. Do you understand that?"[3]

5. "You are charged with _____, which carries a maximum penalty of imprisonment for _____ years and a fine of _____, or both. If you are represented by a lawyer, he or she may discover information or facts which would be helpful in your defense. A lawyer may find that you have a defense to the charge or that there are facts which may result in a lighter penalty. I want you to take this into consideration in deciding whether or not you want a lawyer to represent you."

"The trial will continue under the same legal rules that would apply if you had a lawyer. If you represent yourself, you will have to follow these rules. Because you are not trained in the law, this will make it hard for you to challenge the evidence presented by the state and hard for you to present any evidence that you want to present."

"If you decide to testify you will be sworn as a witness and can give testimony while you are acting as a witness. You will be asked questions by the other side at that time. However, you cannot try to testify while acting as your own lawyer."

6. "Do you understand that a lawyer may be able to help you present your case and that it will be very difficult for you to do a good job being your own lawyer?"

7. "Do you now wish to reconsider your decision not to have a lawyer?"

8. "Has anyone told you that you should not ask for appointment of a lawyer to represent you?"

9. "Has anyone made any promises or any threats or has anyone used any influence or pressure of any kind or force of any kind to get you not to ask for the appointment of a lawyer?"

IF THE DEFENDANT INDICATES A CHANGE OF MIND AND NOW WANTS TO BE REPRESENTED BY A LAWYER, THE COURT SHOULD REFER THE CASE TO THE STATE PUBLIC DEFENDER OR ALLOW THE DEFENDANT TO SEEK PRIVATE COUNSEL.

IF THE DEFENDANT AFFIRMS THE DESIRE TO WAIVE COUNSEL, THE COURT SHOULD INQUIRE INTO THE DEFENDANT'S COMPETENCE FOR SELF-REPRESENTATION. INQUIRY INTO THE FOLLOWING AREAS IS RECOMMENDED; THE INFORMATION MAY HAVE BEEN ELICITED BY QUESTIONS ALREADY ASKED.[4]

- Level of education

- Level of literacy

- Ability to communicate in the courtroom

- Physical or psychological disability that may affect the ability to communicate in the courtroom

B. Use Of A Written Form

A standard form for a waiver of counsel has been adopted by the Judicial Conference. See, Waiver of Right To Counsel, CR-226.

Section 971.025(1) provides: "In all criminal actions and proceedings . . . the parties and court officials shall use the standard court forms adopted by the judicial conference . . ." The form may be supplemented with additional material. § 971.025(2).

Despite the fact that the use of the form is required, case law continues to require that the trial court conduct a colloquy to assure that a waiver of counsel is knowing and voluntary.

A proper integration of the colloquy and the form is illustrated by State v. Polak, 2002 WI App 120, 254 Wis.2d 585, 646 N.W.2d 845. The waiver of counsel was found to be supported by an adequate colloquy, the court noting that "we place particular emphasis on the written waiver of counsel form, used in conjunction with the oral colloquy, because that form unequivocally states Polak's awareness of the assistance an attorney could provide and that an attorney might discover helpful things unknown to Polak." Polak, ¶19. The court observed that the form was not used as a substitute for the colloquy, but to supplement it.

C. Suggested Findings

1. Waiver of Counsel Accepted

AFTER THE COURT HAS CONDUCTED THE FOREGOING INQUIRY AND IF THE DEFENDANT PERSISTS IN THE REFUSAL TO BE REPRESENTED BY COUNSEL AND APPEARS TO BE COMPETENT TO REPRESENT HIMSELF OR HERSELF, THE COURT SHOULD MAKE FINDINGS OF FACT THAT INCLUDE FINDINGS ON THE FOLLOWING TOPICS:

- that the defendant understands the proceedings, understands the nature and seriousness of the charge, and understands the maximum penalties that can be imposed if the defendant is convicted;

- that the defendant understands that a lawyer may be of assistance, understands that a lawyer may be appointed if the defendant is indigent, and understands the disadvantages of self-representation;

- that the defendant voluntarily and freely waives the right to be represented by counsel and is making a deliberate choice to proceed without counsel; and

- that the defendant has the minimal competence necessary to try to represent himself or herself because [refer to the court's evaluation of the four factors identified in Pickens].

PROPER FINDINGS SHOULD CONCLUDE WITH AN EXPRESS STATEMENT THAT THE COURT CONCLUDES THAT THE DEFENDANT'S REQUEST FOR SELF-REPRESENTATION IS GRANTED.[5]

THE COMMITTEE SUGGESTS THAT A BRIEF INSTRUCTION BE GIVEN TO THE JURY IN A CASE WHERE THE DEFENDANT HAS WAIVED COUNSEL. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 70.

2. Waiver of Counsel Denied[6]

DENIAL OF A WAIVER OF COUNSEL MUST BE SUPPORTED BY ONE OF THE FOLLOWING FINDINGS: (1) THAT THE DEFENDANT DOES NOT UNDERSTANDINGLY AND VOLUNTARILY WAIVE COUNSEL; (2) THAT THE DEFENDANT DOES NOT UNDERSTAND THE DISADVANTAGES OF SELF-REPRESENTATION; OR (3) THAT THE DEFENDANT LACKS THE MINIMAL COMPETENCE NECESSARY TO TRY TO REPRESENT HIMSELF OR HERSELF.

PROPER FINDINGS SHOULD CONCLUDE WITH AN EXPRESS STATEMENT THAT THE COURT CONCLUDES THAT THE DEFENDANT'S REQUEST FOR SELF-REPRESENTATION IS DENIED, SUPPORTED BY FINDINGS OF FACT THAT INCLUDE FINDINGS ON THE BRACKETED MATERIAL THAT APPLIES:

- the defendant does not understand the seriousness of the charge and the maximum possible penalties; or

- the defendant does not understand that a lawyer may be of assistance and that a lawyer may be appointed if the defendant is indigent; or

- the defendant does not understand the disadvantages of self-representation; or

- the defendant does not possess the minimal competence necessary to try to represent himself or herself because [refer to the court's evaluation of the four factors identified in Pickens].[7]

D. Commentary

The questions in Part I. A. are recommended for use whenever it is necessary to accept an express waiver of counsel. The defendant's answers to the recommended questions will undoubtedly suggest additional questions that should be asked to enable the court to make a full and complete determination that the defendant understands the proceedings and the right to have a lawyer, including one appointed at public expense if the defendant is indigent. A voluntary waiver of counsel will not be inferred from a silent record.[8]

The questions assume that the defendant has made clear the intention to proceed without counsel. While the burden is on the court to make a record, the Committee believes that the defendant should always have the opportunity to discuss the matter with a lawyer (e.g., with a public defender if one is available.)[9]

Pickens v. State[10] held that a valid waiver of counsel in a self-representation case requires that the record reflect the following:

(a) the deliberate choice to proceed without counsel;

(b) awareness of the seriousness of the charges and the possible penalties; and

(c) awareness of the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation.

Pickens, 96 Wis.2d 549, 563.

While the Pickens decision recommended that a colloquy with the defendant address these issues, the Wisconsin Supreme Court later mandated that they be covered. In State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1997), the court stated:

> [T]he circuit court must conduct a colloquy designed to ensure that the defendant: (1) made a deliberate choice to proceed without counsel, (2) was aware of the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation, (3) was aware of the seriousness of the charge or charges against him, and (4) was aware of the general range of penalties that could have been imposed on him.

The waiver of counsel inquiry has been modified in light of Klessig to explicitly address each of the required issues, including the disadvantages of self-representation.

II. Forfeiture of Counsel

A. Suggested Inquiry

THE COURT SHOULD IDENTIFY THE CONDUCT OF THE DEFENDANT THAT THE COURT BELIEVES PROVIDES A BASIS FOR FINDING A FORFEITURE OF THE RIGHT TO COUNSEL AND THEN ADDRESS THE DEFENDANT AS FOLLOWS:

"If you continue to engage in this conduct, the court will find that you are giving up your right to be represented by a lawyer. If that happens, the trial will continue and you will not have a lawyer to represent you.

1. "Do you understand that?

"You are charged with _____, which carries a maximum penalty of imprisonment for _____ years and a fine of _____, or both. If you are represented by a lawyer, he or she may discover information or facts that would help your defense. A lawyer may find that you have a defense to the charge or that there are facts which may result in a lighter penalty.

2. "Do you understand?

"The trial will continue under the same legal rules that would apply if you had a lawyer. If you represent yourself, you will have to follow these rules. Because you are not trained in the law, this will make it hard for you to challenge the evidence presented by the state and hard for you to present any evidence that you want to present.

"If you decide to testify, you will be sworn as a witness and can give testimony while you are acting as a witness. You will be asked questions by the other side at that time. However, you cannot try to testify while acting as your own lawyer.

3. "Do you understand that a lawyer may be able to help you present your case and that it will be very difficult for you to do a good job being your own lawyer?"

B. Suggested Findings

AFTER THE COURT HAS MADE THESE STATEMENTS AND ASKED ALL THE QUESTIONS AND IF THE DEFENDANT PERSISTS IN THE CONDUCT, THE COURT THEN, ON THE RECORD, SHOULD MAKE FINDINGS OF FACT THAT INCLUDE THE FOLLOWING TOPICS:

- that the defendant understands the charge, understands that a lawyer may be of assistance, and understands that the disadvantages of self representation; and

- that the defendant has refused to waive counsel expressly, but that the defendant has engaged in the following conduct: (describe conduct or refer to the conduct described in the colloquy with the defendant) ; and

- that this conduct has seriously disrupted the fair administration of justice in that: (describe the effects of the defendant's conduct) ; and

- that this requires the court to conclude that the defendant has forfeited the right to counsel.

C. Commentary

"Forfeiture" of counsel refers to situations where the defendant does not expressly waive counsel but, by conduct, gives up the right to representation. Other terms used to describe this situation are "constructive waiver," "waiver by conduct," and "waiver by operation of law." The term "forfeiture of counsel" is used here because it emphasizes that what is occurring is the loss of a right without the express waiver that is usually required. These situations often involve defendants who have difficulty getting along with counsel and thus may present questions whether to grant a motion to discharge counsel or a motion by counsel to withdraw.

In State v. Newton, [decided sub nom. State v. Cummings, 199 Wis.2d 721, 546 N.W.2d 406 (1996)], the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "there may be situations . . . where a circuit court must have the ability to find that a defendant has forfeited his right to counsel" [199 Wis.2d 721, 757] and found that the case before it presented that situation: "There can be no doubt from the record that Newton's behavior was manipulative and disruptive and that his continued dissatisfaction was based solely upon a desire to delay." 199 Wis.2d 721, 754. The court noted that a similar forfeiture situation was presented in State v. Woods, 144 Wis.2d 710, 424 N.W.2d 730 (Ct. App. 1988).

The Newton decision recommended that "trial courts in the future, when faced with a recalcitrant defendant," follow four steps spelled out in the dissenting opinion before finding that a defendant has forfeited counsel[11]:

(1) provide explicit warnings that, if the defendant persists in specific conduct, the court will find that the right to counsel is forfeited;

(2) engage in a colloquy indicating that the defendant has been made aware of the difficulties and dangers inherent in self-representation;

(3) make a clear ruling when the court deems the right to counsel to have been forfeited; and

(4) make factual findings to support the court's ruling.

To implement this four-step approach, the Committee recommends the statements and questions set forth in Part II. A. A finding that the right to counsel is forfeited will mean that the defendant will proceed without a lawyer. Where counsel is waived expressly, an inquiry into competence for self-representation is required. [See discussion in Section I.] It is not clear that an inquiry into competence for self-representation is required or would be appropriate where the right to counsel is forfeited rather than expressly waived.

In State v. Coleman, 2002 WI App 100, 253 Wis.2d 693, 644 N.W.2d 383, the court found that grounds for forfeiture of counsel were not established. There were three significant omissions: no specific warning that firing his attorneys would result in forfeiture of his right to counsel; no colloquy to determine understanding of the difficulties of proceeding without counsel; and, no clear ruling that Coleman had forfeited his right to counsel. The trial court was also deficient in not making a finding that Coleman was competent to represent himself. SM-30 is referred to as a "helpful discussion." Coleman, footnote 3.

III. Self-Representation

Defendants in criminal cases have the right, under both the United States[12] and Wisconsin Constitutions,[13] to represent themselves. Where there has been a clear[14] and timely[15] request to exercise this right, the trial court must conduct a careful inquiry covering several different concerns. The trial court must first assure that there is an intelligent and voluntary waiver of the right to be represented by counsel. (As discussed in Part I.) Self-representation cases also often present situations where the defendant has failed to obtain counsel, has refused to cooperate with counsel, or through other conduct has so seriously interfered with the orderly administration of the case that the right to counsel will be found to have been forfeited. (As addressed in Part II.) A finding of competence for self-representation is required where the defendant has forfeited the right to counsel, just as it is where there is an express waiver of counsel. State v. Coleman, 2002 WI App 100, 253 Wis.2d 693, 644 N.W.2d 283.

In addition to the waiver inquiry, the court must assure that the defendant understands the disadvantages of self-representation. The trial court is also required to inquire whether defendants are "competent" to represent themselves. This requirement has been reaffirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in 1997 and 2005. (See State v. Klessig and State v. Ernst, below.)

The leading Wisconsin case on self-representation is Pickens v. State.[16] Pickens held that a valid waiver in the self-representation case requires that the record reflect the following:

(a) the deliberate choice to proceed without counsel;

(b) awareness of the seriousness of the charges and the possible penalties; and

(c) awareness of the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation.

Pickens, 96 Wis.2d 549, 563.

While the Pickens decision recommended that a colloquy with the defendant address these issues, the Wisconsin Supreme Court later mandated that they be covered. In State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1997), the court stated:

> [T]he circuit court must conduct a colloquy designed to ensure that the defendant: (1) made a deliberate choice to proceed without counsel, (2) was aware of the difficulties and disadvantages of self-representation, (3) was aware of the seriousness of the charge or charges against him, and (4) was aware of the general range of penalties that could have been imposed on him.

The waiver of counsel inquiry[17] has been modified in light of Klessig to explicitly address each of the required issues, including the disadvantages of self-representation.

In State v. Ernst, 2005 WI 107, _21, 283 Wis.2d 300, 699 N.W.2d 92, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held: "We conclude that the Klessig colloquy requirement was and is a valid use of the court's superintending and administrative authority, . . . and that such a rule does not conflict in any way with the United States Supreme Court's decision in Tovar . . ." The reference is to Iowa v. Tovar, 541 U.S. 77 (2004), where the court held that a valid waiver of the Sixth Amendment right to counsel did not require specific advice from the court that waiver of counsel might result in a viable defense being overlooked and losing the opportunity for an independent opinion on whether pleading guilty is a wise choice.

A. Understanding the Disadvantages of Self-Representation

The disadvantages of self-representation are to a significant degree the mirror image of the benefits of representation by counsel that are described in the waiver of counsel inquiry. The additional factors that should be covered include the general conclusion that self-representation is not wise (the old adage that "the lawyer who represents himself has a fool for a client" was used several times by the trial court in the Pickens case) and the more specific caution that the rules governing courtroom procedures will be applied during the trial and that the defendant will be expected to abide by them. In Pickens, the trial court gave the following advice:

> Do you understand that this is a courtroom, we operate under certain legal rules, and you will be expected to comply with those. I will perhaps give some latitude because you are not trained in the law, but you will have to, even though you are not educated in the law, try your lawsuit in accordance with those rules. Do you understand that?

Pickens, 96 Wis.2d 549, 560-61.

It may be advisable to elaborate upon some of these matters by explaining the following:

(1) that the judge will not represent the defendant or protect the defendant's interests in the same manner a lawyer would;

(2) that if the defendant wishes to testify, the defendant must be sworn as a witness and submit to cross-examination – the defendant cannot try to "testify" while acting in the "lawyer" capacity;

(3) that valid objections to questions will be sustained despite the fact that lack of legal training will make it difficult for the defendant to conduct direct or cross-examination in the proper way.

In State v. Clutter, 230 Wis.2d 472, 477, 602 N.W.2d 324 (Ct. App.1999), the court addressed the risks that are involved with a decision to proceed pro se:

> Inherent in a defendant's decision to represent himself is the risk that a defense not known to him will not be presented during trial. When a defendant undertakes pro se representation that is the risk he knowingly assumes. If his strategy in proceeding pro se results in a valid defense being waived, it reflects the hazards of his decision to waive counsel. To rescue this defendant from the folly of his choice to represent himself would diminish the serious consequences of the decision he made when he elected to waive counsel.

B. "Competence" for Self-Representation

Even if there has been a valid waiver of counsel and the defendant understands the disadvantages of self-representation, the trial court must assure that the defendant has the "competence" or capacity for self-representation. This is not the same as "competency to stand trial."[18] "Thus, despite the fact that a defendant has been found competent to stand trial, it may, nevertheless, be determined that he lacks the capacity to represent himself." Pickens v. State, 96 Wis.2d 549, 568.

In State v. Klessig, 199 Wis.2d 397, 544 N.W.2d 605 (Ct. App. 1996), the court of appeals eliminated the requirement for an inquiry into competence for self-representation, holding that law "changed when the United States Supreme Court decided Godinez v. Moran, 113 S. Ct. 2680 (1993)." In Godinez, the court concluded that the only inquiry into competence required for a waiver of the right to counsel was the competence necessary to stand trial. The court of appeals' Klessig decision concluded:

> Once a defendant has been found competent to stand trial, a trial court may not engage in further or heightened competency requirements addressing the defendant's possession of skills, intelligence or experiences that would be sufficient to permit him to adequately represent his best interests at trial. 199 Wis.2d 397, 405.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed the court of appeals in State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1997), reaffirming the Pickens holding that competency for self-representation is different from competency to stand trial:

> We thus reaffirm the holding in Pickens as still controlling on the issue of competency. In Wisconsin, there is still a higher standard for determining whether a defendant is competent to represent oneself than for determining whether a defendant is competent to stand trial. . . . Accordingly, the circuit court's determination of a defendant's competency to proceed pro se must appear in the record.

The court of appeals had held that the Pickens requirement no longer applied because the United States Supreme Court decision in Godinez v. Moran established that there was a single standard for competency – if a defendant was competent to stand trial that defendant could represent himself without further inquiry into his ability to do so. The Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that Godinez was concerned with minimal requirements and allowed states to impose higher standards as a matter of state law. The court said its reaffirmation of the higher Pickens standard "stems from the independent adoption of the higher standard by the state as allowed under Godinez."

Wisconsin, with its reaffirmed Pickens standard, is in the minority in recognizing a requirement of "competence" for self-representation. The majority view in the country apparently stresses the awareness of the disadvantages of proceeding pro se – if the defendant understands the disadvantages but wishes to go ahead, self-representation should be allowed. For example, the ABA Standards for Criminal Justice refer to "competence to represent oneself" but define it in terms of understanding the consequences of the decision to proceed without a lawyer.[19]

The Pickens court recognized that the determination of competence for self-representation "must necessarily rest to a large extent upon the judgment and experience of the trial judge" and that "the trial court must be given sufficient latitude to exercise its discretion in such a way as to insure that substantial justice will result." 96 Wis.2d 549, 569.

Factors to consider in determining whether the defendant "possesses the minimal competence necessary to conduct his own defense" include:

(1) education

(2) literacy

(3) fluency in English

(4) any physical or psychological disability which may significantly affect his ability to communicate a possible defense to the jury.

Pickens v. State, 96 Wis.2d 549, 569; reaffirmed in State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 212.

CAUTION: Persons of average intelligence are entitled to represent themselves. A request for self-representation "should be denied only where a specific problem of disability can be identified which may prevent a meaningful defense from being offered, should one exist." Pickens, 96 Wis.2d 549, 569. Technical legal knowledge, as such, is not relevant to an assessment of a knowing exercise of the right to defend oneself. Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 836 (1975).

The cases dealing with self-representation recognize the difficult position of the trial judge. The difficulty is due to the fact that the defendant has a constitutionally-protected right on either side of the issue. The court addressed this in Klessig, stating that if the defendant's competence for self-representation is not established, "the circuit court must prevent the defendant from representing himself or deprive him of his constitutional right to the assistance of counsel. However, if the defendant knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily waives his right to the assistance of counsel and is competent to proceed pro se, the circuit court must allow him to do so or deprive him of his right to represent himself." State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 203-04. Complete and proper findings are extremely important in these cases.[20] If the request for self-representation is granted, the record must reflect that the defendant:

1. understands the seriousness of the charge and the maximum possible penalties;

2. understands that the defendant has the right to be represented by a lawyer;

3. understands that if the defendant is indigent, a lawyer will be appointed at public expense;

4. understands the advantages of being represented by counsel and the disadvantages of self-representation; and

5. has the minimal competence necessary to try to conduct his or her own defense. These matters are reflect in the suggested findings included in Part I. A.

If the request for self-representation is denied, the Committee has concluded that, based on the Klessig decision, the waiver of counsel must be denied. That is, the right to waive counsel, in Wisconsin, depends on a finding that the defendant is competent to proceed pro se. A defendant who is not competent to proceed pro se, cannot waive counsel. The suggested findings included in Part I. B. reflect this conclusion.

IV. Appointment of Standby Counsel

"Standby counsel" refers to the appointment of a lawyer to assist the defendant whose request for self-representation has been granted.

The authority to appoint standby counsel is recognized as included in the inherent powers of the trial court.[21] The U.S. Supreme Court first addressed the issue in Faretta v. California:[22]

> Of course, a State may – even over objection by the accused – appoint a "standby counsel" to aid the accused if and when the accused requests help, and to be available to represent the accused in the event that termination of the defendant's self-representation is necessary.

422 U.S. 806, 835 n.46.

In McKaskle v. Wiggins,[23] the Court elaborated as follows:

> Accordingly, we make explicit today what is already implicit in Faretta: A defendant's Sixth Amendment rights are not violated when a trial judge appoints standby counsel – even over the defendant's objection – to relieve the judge of the need to explain and enforce basic rules of courtroom protocol or to assist the defendant in overcoming routine obstacles that stand in the way of the defendant's achievement of his own clearly indicated goals. Participation by counsel to steer a defendant through the basic procedures of trial is permissible even in the unlikely event that it somewhat undermines the pro se defendant's appearance of control over his own defense.

465 U.S. 168, 184.

The proper role of standby counsel was also discussed in McKaskle v. Wiggins. The question was whether the standby counsel is limited to a "seen but not heard" sort of assistance: Is counsel to participate only upon the defendant's request or may counsel directly participate in the trial, unsolicited by the defendant?

The Court held that unsolicited participation by standby counsel does not impermissibly infringe on the defendant's right to self-representation. Two general limits on standby counsel were recognized:

(1) defendants are entitled to preserve actual control over the case they choose to present to the jury; and

(2) participation by standby counsel should not be allowed to destroy the jury's perception that defendants are representing themselves.

Specific actions which do not infringe upon the right to self-representation include:

(1) any actions taken at the specific or implied invitation of the defendant;

(2) assistance in overcoming routine procedural or evidentiary obstacles (e.g., introducing evidence or objecting to testimony);

(3) ensuring the defendant's compliance with basic rules of courtroom protocol and procedure.

McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 183.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court elaborated upon the role of standby counsel in Contempt in State v. Lehman, 137 Wis.2d 65, 403 N.W.2d 438 (1987). The defendant Lehman had fired four attorneys appointed by the State Public Defender and the fifth was allowed to withdraw. The State Public Defender refused to appoint another attorney and the court granted Lehman's request to appear pro se. However, the trial court appointed a lawyer to serve as standby counsel. The Supreme Court clarified that "courts possess the inherent power to appoint counsel," including standby counsel, and to order the county to pay the cost. "The decision to appoint standby counsel in this case was based, as it should be, on a determination that the needs of the Trial Court and not the Defendant, would be best served by doing so." 137 Wis.2d 65, 77 [emphasis in original]. The court emphasized that "the chief purpose of the appointment of counsel in cases like the present one is to serve the interests of the trial court. . . ." 137 Wis.2d 65, 78.

The Lehman decision was reaffirmed in State v. Newton [decided sub nom. State v. Cummings, 199 Wis.2d 721, 546 N.W.2d 406 (1996)]. The court again emphasized that appointment of standby counsel is based on the needs of the trial court to help the trial proceed in an orderly fashion and is not tied to the defendant's right to counsel. 199 Wis.2d 721, 756. In both Lehman and Newton, the court expressly noted that it was not dealing with possible constitutional claims in a situation where a defendant who, having waived (or forfeited) counsel, made a request for standby counsel which was denied by the trial court.

V. "Hybrid" Representation

Occasionally defendants seek to conduct portions of their own defense while they are represented by counsel. For example, Wisconsin cases have involved requests that a represented defendant be allowed to make opening statements or closing arguments. It has been claimed that the right to self-representation requires that defendants be allowed to represent themselves and be represented by counsel in the same case.

The United States Supreme Court has held that the Sixth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution does not require trial courts to permit "hybrid" representation. McKaskle v.

Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 183. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has reached the same conclusion with respect to a claim based on the Wisconsin Constitution. Moore v. State, 83 Wis.2d 285, 265 N.W.2d 540 (1978). In Moore, the trial court's refusal to allow the represented defendant to examine witnesses was upheld. Also see Robinson v. State, 100 Wis.2d 152, 301 N.W.2d 429 (1981), where the defendant was not permitted to make a closing argument in addition to the one made by counsel.[24]

A danger in allowing represented defendants partially to represent themselves is illustrated by what happened in State v. Johnson, 121 Wis.2d 237, 358 N.W.2d 824 (1984). Johnson presented his own opening statement but did not testify. The prosecutor responded in his own opening to emphasize that Johnson's statement was not testimony and not evidence. The defendant claimed on appeal that this was unfair comment on his right not to testify. The court of appeals affirmed the conviction and adopted a "partial waiver" rule for this sort of situation which allows a limited prosecutorial comment in response to the defendant's statement. But the court noted the dilemma that the situation presents to both the prosecutor and the trial judge. 121 Wis.2d 237, 245.

VI. Court Appointment of Counsel for Defendants Who Do Not Qualify Under State Public Defender Guidelines

It is increasingly common for trial courts to be confronted with defendants who do not meet the financial criteria of the Office of the State Public Defender but who cannot afford to retain private counsel. These defendants may not wish to waive counsel expressly. And their inability to obtain counsel may result in continuances where, upon returning again without counsel, defendants may find their conduct characterized as that which justifies a finding of forfeiture of counsel. There are other negative effects as well, such as reluctance by prosecutors to discuss the case with unrepresented defendants. This can result in delay and even in the unavailability of plea concessions or sentence recommendations that would be freely offered if counsel was present.

There is a provision for court review of the public defender's indigency determination. Under § 977.07(3), a court "may review any indigency determination upon its own motion or the motion of the defendant and shall review any indigency determination upon the motion of the district attorney or the state public defender." Review under this authority is limited to examining the public defender's application of the legislative criteria and the accompanying mathematical computations. State v. Dean, 163 Wis.2d 503, 510, 471 N.W.2d 310 (Ct. App. 1991)

Trial courts also have inherent power to appoint counsel for defendants who do not meet the criteria for appointment of counsel by the Office of the State Public Defender. In State v. Dean, 163 Wis.2d at 513, the court stated:

> The legislature cannot limit who is constitutionally entitled to an attorney. The creation of the public defender's office is not the exclusive means for assuring counsel to indigents and did not negate the inherent power of the court to appoint when the public defender declines to act. Douglas Co. v. Edwards, 137 Wis.2d 65, 77, 403 N.W.2d 438, 44 (1987). The trial court therefore is required to go beyond the public defender's determination that a defendant does not meet the legislative criteria and determine whether the "necessities of the case" and the demands of "public justice and sound policy" require appointing counsel. See Sparkman [v. State], 27 Wis.2d 92, 98, 133 N.W.2d 776, 780 (1965).

Dean held that the burden of proof lies with the defendant to convince the court that appointment of counsel is necessary despite the defendant's failure to meet the public defender's indigency criteria. The decision identified the following considerations that relate to the trial court's decision:

(1) The defendant must present evidence of his or her assets, income, liabilities and attempts to retain counsel.[25]

(2) The court is not required to conduct an independent inquiry but must ask enough questions to decide the issue. The court cannot restrict itself to the criteria mandated by the legislature in § 977.07(2) but should consider all evidence that is relevant to the defendant's present ability to retain counsel.

(3) In deciding, the court must consider whether the defendant has sufficient assets to retain private counsel at the market rate prevailing in the community. It must disregard the public defender's established cost of retained counsel in Wis. Adm. Code sec. SPD 3.02(1).[26]

Aside from the procedurally-oriented considerations, the basic question is whether the "necessities of the case" and the "demands of public justice and sound policy" require appointment of counsel.

COMMENT

SM-30 was originally approved by the Committee in 1974 and included material now found in SM-25 (Judge's Duties at Initial Appearance) and SM-31 (Waiver of Preliminary Examination). A version of SM-30 dealing only with waiver of counsel was originally published in 1987. The 1997 revision added the sections on forfeiture of counsel and court appointment of counsel and combined material formerly found in SM-30A. This revision involved general updating and was approved by the Committee in December 2005.

Part I of this Special Material is designed to be used whenever it is necessary to accept a waiver of counsel. Depending on the situation, additional issues will also have to be dealt with. If the defendant wishes to waive counsel and enter a guilty plea, SM-30 should be followed by SM-32, Accepting A Plea Of Guilty.

Part I includes a series of questions recommended for use whenever it is necessary to accept a waiver of counsel. The record must reflect a voluntary and intelligent waiver whenever the defendant wishes to go ahead with a "critical stage" of the proceeding without representation. [The right to counsel under the Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution applies to all critical stages of the proceedings that follow the filing of the criminal charge. See, for example, United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218, 87 Sup.Ct. 1926, 18 L.Ed.2d 1149 (1967); Jones v. State, 63 Wis.2d 97, 216 N.W.2d 224 (1974).] Thus, the inquiry may be necessary at the preliminary examination, the entry and acceptance of a plea, trial, or sentencing. The waiver is usually accompanied by a request that the defendant be allowed to represent himself, making additional inquiry necessary.

Part II deals with a problem referred to as forfeiture of counsel. See LaFave and Israel, Criminal Procedure, Sec. 11.3(c), West, 1984. This is intended for those situations where the defendant has failed to obtain counsel, has refused to cooperate with counsel, or through other conduct has so seriously interfered with the orderly administration of the case that the right to counsel will be found to have been forfeited. In State v. Newton, 199 Wis.2d 721, 757, 546 N.W.2d 406 (1996), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "there may be situations . . . where a circuit court must have the ability to find that a defendant has forfeited his right to counsel."

Federal cases have held that the right to counsel may be waived by a defendant who fails to retain counsel within a reasonable time when he is financially able to do so. United States ex rel. Baskerville v. Deegan, 428 F.2d 714 (2d Cir. 1970); United States v. McMann, 386 F.2d 611 (2d Cir. 1967). The Wisconsin Supreme Court has addressed this issue once, reversing a trial court's order requiring a defendant to proceed to trial despite the fact that his lawyer did not show up. In State v. Keller, 75 Wis.2d 502, 249 N.W.2d 773 (1977), the court found the record insufficient to indicate that the defendant had in fact knowingly waived his right to counsel and reversed the conviction. The court did not spell out what the trial court should do in a situation where the defendant has not obtained counsel but does not wish to waive the right to be represented. Related, but distinguishable, are cases involving the choice of counsel. Several decisions deal with the issue of abuse of discretion in denying a continuance when the defendant makes a late request to change counsel. See State v. Wedgeworth, 100 Wis.2d 514, 302 N.W.2d 810 (1981); Mulkovich v. State, 73 Wis.2d 464, 243 N.W.2d 198 (1976); Phifer v. State, 64 Wis.2d 24, 218 N.W.2d 354 (1974); Rahhal v. State, 52 Wis.2d 144, 187 N.W.2d 800 (1971). The court in Keller acknowledged that forcing a defendant to go to trial without counsel is drastically different from forcing him to go to trial with a competent counsel not his first choice. (See the discussion of forfeiture of counsel in Section II.)

1. Specific questions are not suggested to emphasize that trial judges should tailor the inquiry to fit the case at hand and the judge's preferences. Some or all of the questions may be eliminated altogether if a similar inquiry has already been conducted to, for example, set bail. Examples of specific questions on these topics are included in SM-32, Accepting A Plea Of Guilty. Additional questions will often be suggested by the defendant's responses. And, the Committee recommends that the questions be designed to elicit more than one-word answers from the defendant. This is especially important in the context of an inquiry into waiver of counsel.

In State v. Ruszkiewicz, 2000 WI App 125, 237 Wis.2d 441, 613 N.W.2d 893, the court found a waiver of counsel to be valid, despite the trial court not following the procedure recommended by SM-30. However, the decision noted that "SM-30 sets out suggested procedures and colloquies that trial courts should follow." Ruszkiewicz at ¶29.

2. But see note 9, below, suggesting that the best person to discuss the advantages of being represented by counsel is a lawyer.

3. A valid waiver of counsel does not require the trial court to advise the defendant of the right to have counsel appointed at county expense where he does not qualify under the State Public Defender guidelines. State v. Drexler, 2003 WI App 169, 266 Wis.2d 438, 669 N.W.2d 182. Also see the discussion in Sec. VI, this SM.

4. The areas listed may have already been explored in the inquiry into the defendant's ability to understand the proceedings. They are restated here because they reflect the four factors identified in Pickens as relevant to deciding whether the defendant "possesses the minimal competence necessary to conduct his own defense": education; literacy; fluency in English; and "any physical or psychological disability which may significantly affect his ability to communicate a possible defense to the jury."

5. The Committee recommends that the finding specifically refers to the four factors identified in the Pickens decision: education, literacy, fluency in English, and physical or psychological disability affecting the ability to communicate in the courtroom. Identification of more specific aspects of the competency for self-representation is difficult. As noted in the Klessig decision, the "determination must rest to a large extent upon the judgment and experience of the trial judge." 211 Wis.2d 194, 212 [quoting Pickens].

6. For appellate decisions affirming the denial of a request to proceed pro se see the following: Hamiel v. State, 92 Wis.2d 656, 285 N.W.2d 639 (1979): request was made on the morning trial was to begin and competent counsel was available; Laster v. State, 60 Wis.2d 525, 211 N.W.2d 13 (1973): request was actually to change counsel, not to proceed pro se; Browne v. State, 24 Wis.2d 491, 129 N.W.2d 175 (1964): request was to dismiss appointed counsel and defendant lacked the capacity to intelligently waive counsel.

7. The Committee recommends that the finding specifically refers to the four factors identified in the Pickens decision: education, literacy, fluency in English, and physical or psychological disability affecting the ability to communicate in the courtroom. Identification of more specific aspects of the competency for self-representation is difficult. As noted in the Klessig decision, the "determination must rest to a large extent upon the judgment and experience of the trial judge." 211 Wis.2d 194, 212 [quoting Pickens].

8. Pickens v. State, 96 Wis.2d 549, 292 N.W.2d 601 (1980). Von Moltke v. Gillies, 332 U.S. 708, 68 S.Ct. 316, 92 L.Ed. 309 (1948), is the leading U.S. Supreme Court decision on the procedure to be used in recording a waiver of counsel. Though it was a plurality opinion, its holding is consistent with decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court that both preceded and followed it. In State ex rel. Drankovich v. Murphy, 248 Wis. 433, 438, 22 N.W.2d 540 (1946), the court held that the trial judge had the duty to protect the accused's right to counsel by assuring, on the record, that the accused "knew he had the right to counsel and voluntarily rejected it." In a later plea of guilty case, the court outlined the general nature of the inquiry that a trial court should make:

> 1. To determine the extent of the defendant's education and general comprehension.
> 2. To establish the accused's understanding of the nature of the crime with which he is charged and the range of punishments which it carries.
> 3. To ascertain whether any promises or threats have been made to him in connection with his appearance, his refusal of counsel, and his proposed plea of guilty.
> 4. To alert the accused to the possibility that a lawyer may discover defenses or mitigating circumstances which would not be apparent to a layman such as the accused.
> 5. To make sure that the defendant understands that if a pauper, counsel will be provided at no expense to him.
> Finally, the trial judge should be certain that the record itself reflects the fact that careful consideration was given to the foregoing propositions.

State ex rel. Burnett v. Burke, 22 Wis.2d 486, 494, 126 N.W.2d 91 (1964).

The courts have not transformed the requirements of Von Moltke and Burnett into any specific colloquy; flexibility in approach is allowed, as long as the "knowing and voluntary" nature of the decision is apparent on the record. Pickens v. State, 96 Wis.2d 549, 561-64, 292 N.W.2d 601 (1980).

9. This suggestion assumes that a staff public defender is present in court and able to talk to the defendant right away. It is premised on the Committee's conclusion that the best way for a defendant to be informed of the value of representation by counsel is to have a discussion with a lawyer. In many areas of the state, lawyers on the staff of or provided by the State Public Defender are available to speak with unrepresented defendants before the initial appearance. Rather than the judge trying to provide a lengthy explanation of the right to counsel, it is preferable simply to give the defendant a chance to discuss the matter with an attorney.

10. 96 Wis.2d 549, 292 N.W.2d 601 (1980).

11. 199 Wis.2d 721, 757, n.18. The four steps are outlined in the dissent at 199 Wis.2d 721, 765.

12. The Sixth Amendment to the United States Constitution does not expressly recognize the right to represent oneself, but the Supreme Court has found that the right ". . . to make one's defense personallyCis thus necessarily implied by the structure of the Amendment." Faretta v. California, 422 U.S. 806, 819, 95 S.Ct. 2525, 45 L.Ed.2d 562 (1975).

13. Article I, Section 7, of the Wisconsin Constitution explicitly recognizes the right to self-representation: "In all criminal prosecutions the accused shall enjoy the right to be heard by himself and counsel. . . ." Cases have recognized the state constitutional right for many years. See Dietz v. State, 149 Wis. 462, 479, 136 N.W. 166 (1912). The reference to "by himself and counsel" (emphasis added) has been held not to require "hybrid" representation – pro se and by counsel – in a single case. See discussion at note 24, below.

14. Cases involving self-representation often involve defendants who are dissatisfied with retained or appointed counsel. It is important to clarify whether a defendant is seeking to dismiss or change his present lawyer or actually seeking to represent himself. See Laster v. State, 60 Wis.2d 525, 539, 211 N.W.2d 13 (1973).

15. The question of "How soon in the criminal proceeding must a defendant decide between proceeding by counsel or pro se?" was addressed in Hamiel v. State, 92 Wis.2d 656, 285 N.W.2d 639 (1979). The court upheld the trial court's denial of a request to proceed pro se when the request was made just as the trial was to begin. The court held that the right to proceed pro se, like the right to be represented by counsel "cannot be manipulated so as to obstruct the orderly procedure for trials or to interfere with the orderly administration of justice." 92 Wis.2d 656, 672. The factors for the trial court to consider in exercising discretion were identified:

> Where the request to proceed pro se is made on the day of trial or immediately prior thereto, the determinative question is whether the request is proffered merely to secure delay or tactical advantage. In such a situation, the trial court should determine if the request could have been made earlier, and if so, why not. If the defendant cannot show good cause as to why a demand was not made at an earlier appearance before the court, and if an adjournment would result from a granting of the defendant's self-representation request, the trial court must weigh the defendant's constitutional guarantee to a fair trial as well as the convenience of the witnesses, jurors, and the court schedule when exercising its discretion to approve or deny the request.

92 Wis.2d 656, 673.

19. See Standard 6-3.6, The Defendant's Election To Represent Himself or Herself At Trial, and Commentary. ABA Standards For Criminal Justice.

20. In State v. Marquardt, 2005 WI 157, 286 Wis.2d 204, 705 N.W.2d 878, the court affirmed a trial court finding that the defendant was not competent to represent himself. The circuit court had referred to the seriousness of the charges, the complexity of the case and evidence of the defendant's mental illness. See ¶63. The supreme court concluded that "the medical and psychological opinions in this case identified a emmber of specific problems that could have prevented Marquardt from meaningfully presenting his own defense." ¶69.

21. In Contempt in State v. Lehman, 137 Wis.2d 65, 403 N.W.2d 438 (1987), the Wisconsin Supreme Court recognized that appointment of standby counsel for a pro se defendant was within the inherent power of the trial court. The court emphasized that in cases like the one before it in Lehman, the appointment of standby counsel is to serve the interests of the court – to help assure that the trial proceeds in an orderly fashion. 137 Wis.2d 65, 78.

The ABA Standards for Criminal Justice recommend the following standard for the appointment of standby counsel:

> Standard 6-3.7 Standby counsel for pro se defendant
> When a defendant has been permitted to proceed without the assistance of counsel, the trial judge should consider the appointment of standby counsel to assist the defendant when called upon and to call the judge's attention to matters favorable to the accused upon which the judge should rule on his or her motion. Standby counsel should always be appointed in cases expected to be long or complicated or in which there are multiple defendants.

22. 422 U.S. 806, 95 S.Ct. 252, 45 L.Ed.2d 562 (1975).

23. McKaskle v. Wiggins, 465 U.S. 168, 104 S.Ct. 944, 79 L.Ed.2d 122 (1984).

24. The text of the Wisconsin constitutional provision (see note 13, supra) offers some support for the argument that "hybrid representation" is required in that it refers to "the right to be heard by himself and counsel. . . ." (emphasis added). However, the argument was expressly rejected in Moore v. State, 83 Wis.2d 285, 298-300, 265 N.W.2d 540 (1978).

25. Forms have been created by the Office of Director Of State Courts to facilitate this determination. See "Petition For Appointment Of Counsel, Affidavit Of Indigency And Order," Form GF-152, 4/97.

26. In State v. Nieves-Gonzales, 2001 WI App 90, 242 Wis.2d 782, 625 N.W.2d 913, the court found that the trial court applied the federal poverty guidelines incorrectly in denying counsel to the defendant. Those guidelines should be considered, though not every defendant with income less than the guidelines is entitled to court-appointed counsel. "W]here a trial court denies a motion for court-appointed counsel after the defendant has shown that she or he has no assets and a household income well below the federal guidelines, a trial court should set forth findings explaining why it has determined the defendant can nevertheless afford counsel." Nieves-Gonzales, ¶8.

SM-31 WAIVER OF PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION

THE FOLLOWING IS RECOMMENDED FOR USE WHEN A DEFENDANT WITHOUT COUNSEL WISHES TO WAIVE THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION. IT WILL ALSO BE NECESSARY TO CONDUCT A WAIVER OF COUNSEL INQUIRY, SEE SM-30.

"Since you are charged with a felony, you are entitled to a preliminary examination if you want one, or you may waive it. A preliminary examination is not a trial, but it is a step in the proceedings against you. Witnesses will be called by the State to testify against you and you have the right to cross-examine them. You will also have the right to present evidence. You are entitled to the assistance of a lawyer if you want one.

The purpose of the preliminary examination is to determine whether probable cause exists. Probable cause means facts, together with reasonable inferences from those facts, which lead a reasonable person to conclude that a felony has probably been committed and that you probably committed it.[1] If the court finds that there is probable cause to believe that you did commit a felony, you will be required to stand trial. If the court does not find probable cause, the charges will be dismissed or reduced or the state may refile."[2]

"Do you understand that?"

"Has anyone made any promise or threat to you to get you to waive the preliminary examination?"

Do you want a preliminary examination?"

IF THE DEFENDANT SAYS THAT HE OR SHE DOES NOT WANT A PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION, THE JUDGE SHOULD MAKE THE FOLLOWING FINDING OF FACT:

"The court finds that the defendant has freely, voluntarily, and understandingly waived (his) (her) right to a preliminary examination."

AFTER THE COURT MAKES THE FINDING OF WAIVER, THE COURT SHOULD BIND THE DEFENDANT OVER FOR TRIAL.

THE COURT SHOULD SET OR REVIEW BAIL IN ACCORDANCE WITH CHAPTER 969 OF THE WISCONSIN STATUTES.

COMMENT

SM-31 was originally published in 1987; it consisted of material previously included as part of SM-30, Waiver of Counsel. This revision was approved the Committee in February 2011; it adopted a new format and made minor additions and editorial changes.

There are no Wisconsin cases dealing specifically with the adequacy of a waiver of a preliminary examination. There are cases holding that a guilty plea constitutes an effective waiver of a preliminary, though these predated the days of great concern over adequate documentation of such matters.

The primary reason why there has not been appellate litigation on this issue is probably that the strict waiver standards apply to waivers of constitutional rights. A preliminary examination is not constitutionally required, so arguably a full record of a "knowing and intelligent waiver" is not required either.

Regardless of the legal arguments that can be made, it is undoubtedly the wise practice to reflect the waiver on the record. The inquiry ought to be quite brief when the defendant is represented by counsel. But where the defendant is not represented, a description of the preliminary hearing and an inquiry into the defendant's understanding should be conducted. SM-31 is intended as a guide for this type of inquiry.

The primary case discussing the waiver of the preliminary by entering a guilty plea is State v. Strickland, 27 Wis.2d 623, 633, 135 N.W.2d 295 (1965):

> Where a defendant appears by counsel, . . . and enters a plea of guilty without requesting a preliminary hearing, a trial court has the right to assume that the preliminary hearing has been intelligently waived.

Thus, Strickland was based on the assumption that counsel would do his job properly. Strickland used that same assumption to find that the type of plea acceptance colloquy now found in SM-32 should not be required (though it was recommended). As to the guilty plea procedure, Strickland was overruled in Ernst. Unfortunately, its assumption that the lawyer would do his or her job was explicitly overruled as well.

Even Strickland would impose a duty on the trial judge in cases where the defendant appears without counsel:

However, where a defendant charged with a felony appears without counsel and waives counsel, . . . it is the duty of the court to advise the defendant of his right to a preliminary hearing before proceeding further. 27 Wis.2d 623, 633-34.

1. The definition of probable cause is based on the one provided in the Benchbook, section CR-5. For cases discussing probable cause in the context of the preliminary examination see: State v. Berby, 81 Wis.2d 677 (1978); State v. Beal, 40 Wis.2d 607 (1968); State v. Dunn, 117 Wis.2d 487 (1984); and, State v. Schaefer, 2008 WI 25, 308 Wis.2d 279, 746 N.W.2d 457.

2. If a felony is charged but the preliminary examination discloses that only a misdemeanor was committed, the court shall order the complaint amended to conform to the evidence. § 970.03(8).

SM-32 ACCEPTING A PLEA OF GUILTY

Scope

Scope

The inquiry suggested here is intended to illustrate a complete plea acceptance procedure, fully implementing the personal inquiry required by § 971.08 and Wisconsin case law.

SM-32 has been repeatedly cited with approval by the Wisconsin Supreme Court, in decisions urging that it be used by the trial courts. In a 2006 decision, the court "strongly encouraged" trial courts to follow the procedures prescribed in SM-32. State v. Brown, 2006 WI 100, ¶23, footnote 11, 293 Wis.2d 594, 716 N.W.2d 906. Also see, State v. Hampton, 2004 WI 107, ¶44, 274 Wis.2d 379, 683 N.W.2d 14; State v. Bangert, 131 Wis.2d 246, 272, 389 N.W.2d 12 (1986); State v. Minniecheske, 127 Wis.2d 234, 245-46, 378 N.W.2d 283 (1983); and, State v. Bartelt, 112 Wis.2d 467, 483-84, 334 N.W.2d 91 (1983).

The use of written plea acceptance forms has been expressly approved. State v. Moederndorfer, 141 Wis.2d 823, 416 N.W.2d 627 (Ct. App. 1987); State v. Brandt, 226 Wis.2d 610, 594 N.W.2d 759 (1999). But a personal inquiry of the defendant is still required, ". . . making a record that the defendant had sufficient time prior to the hearing to review the form, had an opportunity to discuss the form with counsel, had read each paragraph, and had understood each one." 141 Wis.2d 823, 827. The Judicial Conference has adopted CR-227, a form titled, "Plea Questionnaire/Waiver of Rights." Section 971.025(1) provides: "In all criminal actions and proceedings . . . the parties and court officials shall use the standard court forms adopted by the judicial conference under s. 758.18 . . ."

SM-32 is divided into ten sections, each identified by a Roman numeral. The section headings are intended only to clearly identify the different parts of the plea acceptance inquiry. Directions to the judge are in all capital letters.

The suggested questions and statements to be addressed to the defendant (and, in a few instances, to defense counsel) are found in quotation marks and are numbered from 1 to 30. Their form is merely suggested by this Special Material; judges will undoubtedly want to tailor them to the case at hand and develop others of their own.

THE FOLLOWING ASSUMES THE DEFENDANT IS REPRESENTED BY COUNSEL. IF THE DEFENDANT IS NOT REPRESENTED, A VALID WAIVER OF COUNSEL MUST BE OBTAINED BEFORE ACCEPTING THE PLEA.[1]

I. Determining Compliance With Victims' Rights Legislation

THE COURT SHOULD INQUIRE OF THE PROSECUTOR:

"Have you complied with the victim notice and consultation law – § 971.095(2)?"[2]

II. Reading the Charging Document; Guilty Plea Tendered

ASSURE THAT THE DEFENDANT HAS A COPY OF THE COMPLAINT OR THE INFORMATION; IDENTIFY THE CHARGE, THE MAXIMUM TERM OF IMPRISONMENT AND THE MAXIMUM FINE,[3] APPLICABLE REPEATER STATUTES, PENALTY ENHANCERS, AND MANDATORY MINIMUM SENTENCES.[4]

THE INFORMATION OR COMPLAINT SHOULD BE READ, UNLESS THE READING IS WAIVED.[5]

THE COURT SHOULD INQUIRE PERSONALLY[6] OF THE DEFENDANT:

1. "How do you plead?"

IF THE DEFENDANT ANSWERS "NO CONTEST" OR "ALFORD," THE COURT SHOULD ADDRESS THE DEFENDANT AND DEFENSE COUNSEL AS FOLLOWS.[7]

["A plea of no contest means that you do not contest the state's ability to prove the facts necessary to constitute the crime."]

["An Alford plea is a guilty plea accompanied by a claim of innocence."]

["Do you understand that for the purposes of this proceeding, (a plea of no contest) (an Alford plea) will have the same effect as a plea of guilty? And that, if accepted, it will result in a conviction that carries the same character and force as a conviction resulting from a plea of guilty?"]

["Counsel, have you discussed the consequences of the plea with the defendant and do you believe the defendant understands them?"]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES.

2. "Before your plea is entered and accepted by the court, the court will ask you certain questions to determine whether or not your plea should be entered and accepted. If you have any trouble understanding the questions, take all the time you need to confer with your attorney."

3. "If you are not a citizen of the United States of America, you are advised that a plea of guilty or no contest for the offense with which you are charged may result in deportation, the exclusion from admission to this country or the denial of naturalization, under federal law."[8]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IN ALL FELONY CASES.

4. "If you are convicted of a felony, you will not be allowed to possess a firearm. Section 941.29 makes it a crime punishable by imprisonment for up to ten years or a fine of up to $25,000, or both, for a person convicted of a felony to possess a firearm."[9]

5. "If you are convicted of a felony, you may not vote in any election until your civil rights are restored."[10]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES.

6. "If you are convicted, you may be required to make full or partial restitution to any victim of the crime."[11]

III. Determining the Defendant's Ability to Understand the Proceedings

THE COURT MUST BE SATISFIED THAT THE DEFENDANT UNDERSTANDS THE PROCEEDINGS BEFORE ACCEPTING THE PLEA. THE COURT SHOULD MAKE PERSONAL INQUIRY OF THE DEFENDANT INTO AREAS SUCH AS EDUCATION, WORK EXPERIENCE, HISTORY OF MENTAL ILLNESS, RECENT DRUG OR ALCOHOL USE, ETC. THE FOLLOWING ARE EXAMPLES OF QUESTIONS[12] THAT SHOULD BE ASKED. ANSWERS INDICATING THE NEED FOR MORE INFORMATION SHOULD BE PURSUED.

7. "How old are you?"

8. "How far did you go in school?"

9. "Do you have a job?"

IF THE ANSWER IS YES:

"Where do you work?"

"How long have you worked there?"

IF THE ANSWER IS NO:

"When were you last employed?"

"What are you trained to do?"

10. "Have you received treatment for mental or emotional problems?"

11. "Have you had any alcohol or other intoxicants today?"

"Have you taken any medication or drugs today?"

12. "Are you having any difficulty understanding the court?"

"Are you having any difficulty understanding your attorney?"

13. "Is there anything you do not understand about what has happened in this case so far?"

IV. Establishing the Voluntariness of the Plea

ESTABLISHING VOLUNTARINESS INVOLVES TWO AREAS OF INQUIRY:

1. PLEA AGREEMENT; AND

2. THREATS OR COERCION OR PROMISES OUTSIDE OF A PLEA AGREEMENT.

14. "Is there a plea agreement in this case?"

IF THERE IS A PLEA AGREEMENT,[13] PUT IT ON THE RECORD AND ESTABLISH THE DEFENDANT'S UNDERSTANDING OF THE AGREEMENT.

15. "Do you understand the plea agreement?"

16. "Do you understand that the court is not bound by a sentencing recommendation or other terms of the plea agreement?"[14]

17. "Do you understand that upon your plea of guilty, the court may impose the maximum penalty, in spite of any agreement?"[15]

IF THE PLEA AGREEMENT INVOLVES READ-INS, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[16]

18. Do you understand that if any charges are read-in as part of a plea agreement they have the following effects:

- Sentencing – although the judge may consider read-in charges when imposing sentence, the maximum penalty will not be increased.
- Restitution – you may be required to pay restitution on any read-in charges.
- Future prosecution – the State may not prosecute you for any read-in charges.

IF THE PLEA AGREEMENT CALLS FOR PROBATION, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[17]

19. "Do you understand that if you are placed on probation and if you later violate a condition of probation, that your probation may be revoked and you may be required to serve a sentence in jail or prison?"

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES:

20. "Has anyone else made any promise or threat to you[18] (aside from the plea agreement) to get you to plead guilty to this charge?"

V. Determining the Defendant's Understanding of the Crime Charged

21. "By pleading guilty, you are admitting that you committed all the elements of the crime of _____, which are as follows:"

THE COURT MUST BE SATISFIED THAT THE DEFENDANT UNDERSTANDS THE CHARGE TO WHICH THE GUILTY PLEA IS BEING ENTERED. ONE WAY TO ACHIEVE THIS IS TO SUMMARIZE THE ELEMENTS OF THE CRIME CHARGED, RELATING THEM TO THE FACTS OF THE CASE.[19] REFERRING TO THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION FOR THE OFFENSE WILL BE HELPFUL IN IDENTIFYING THE ELEMENTS. ATTACHING A COPY OF THE APPLICABLE INSTRUCTION

TO THE PLEA QUESTIONNAIRE IS RECOMMENDED. THE COURT SHOULD INQUIRE OF DEFENSE COUNSEL REGARDING ANY SPECIAL ISSUES[20] OR PROBLEMS THAT SHOULD BE EXPLAINED TO THE DEFENDANT.

22. "Do you understand that you are admitting that you committed each of these elements?"[21]

FOR NO CONTEST PLEAS, SUBSTITUTE THE FOLLOWING.[22]

["Do you understand that your plea does not contest that the state can prove each of these elements?"]

FOR ALFORD PLEAS, SUBSTITUTE THE FOLLOWING.

["Do you understand that these are the elements the state would have to prove if you went to trial?

"And do you understand that despite your claim of innocence, if your plea is accepted the court will find you guilty, because strong evidence of guilt will have been established?"]

VI. Waiver of Constitutional Rights[23]

23. "By pleading (guilty you admit that you committed the crime) (no contest you do not contest that you committed the crime) and, thus, you relieve the state of proving at a trial that you committed that crime, and you also waive – that is, you give up – important constitutional rights.

IF AN ALFORD PLEA IS INVOLVED, SEE SM-32A NO CONTEST AND ALFORD PLEAS.[24]

"You give up your right to have the state prove that you committed each element of the crime. The state must convince each member of the jury beyond a reasonable doubt that you committed the crime. Do you understand that?

"You give up your right not to incriminate yourself, which means, you have a right not to admit to a crime, not to say anything that will subject you to a criminal penalty. If the court accepts your plea, you will be convicted, and the court can impose sentence against you. Do you understand that?

"You give up the right to confront your accusers, which means you have the right to face the witnesses against you, to hear their sworn testimony against you, and to cross-examine them by asking them questions to test the truth and accuracy of their testimony. If the court accepts your plea, you give up your right to confront your accusers. Do you understand that?

"You give up the right to present evidence in your own behalf and to require witnesses to come to court and testify for you. Do you understand that?

"Knowing that if the court accepts your plea, you give up your constitutional right to a trial by jury, your constitutional right not to incriminate yourself, and your constitutional right to confront the witnesses against you and to subpoena witnesses, do you still wish to plead (guilty) (no contest)?"

VII. Inquiry of Counsel and Defendant

THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS SHOULD BE DIRECTED TO DEFENSE COUNSEL.

24. "Have you had sufficient opportunity to thoroughly discuss this case and the plea decision with the defendant?"

25. "Are you fully satisfied that the defendant is making (his) (her) plea of guilty freely, voluntarily, and intelligently?"

26. "Are you satisfied that the defendant understands the nature of the charge(s), the elements thereof, and the effects of (his) (her) plea?"

27. "And, are you satisfied the defendant is knowingly and intelligently waiving (his) (her) constitutional rights?"

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF A REPEATER ALLEGATION IS INVOLVED.

[28. "And, are you satisfied that the defendant understands the enhanced penalty that can be imposed if the court accepts the plea(s) of guilty as a repeater?"]

THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS SHOULD BE DIRECTED TO DEFENDANT.

29. "Have you thoroughly discussed this case and the plea decision with your lawyer?"

30. "Are you satisfied with the representation you have received from your lawyer?"

VIII. Entering the Plea

IF, BASED ON THE ABOVE INQUIRY, THE COURT IS SATISFIED THAT THE PLEA SHOULD BE ENTERED, THE COURT SHOULD STATE:[25]

"The clerk is directed to enter the plea in the record. The court does not thereby accept the plea, but the court defers acceptance of the plea and will now hear facts to determine whether the court should accept the plea of guilty."

IX. Establishing a Factual Basis for the Plea

IT IS REQUIRED THAT THE COURT MAKE A RECORD SHOWING THAT THERE IS A FACTUAL BASIS FOR THE DEFENDANT'S PLEA.[26] THE TRIAL JUDGE MUST DETERMINE THAT A FACTUAL BASIS FOR THE PLEA EXISTS BY MAKING "SUCH AN INQUIRY AS SATISFIES [THE COURT] THAT THE DEFENDANT IN FACT COMMITTED THE CRIME CHARGED." WIS. STAT. § 971.08(1)(b).[27]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES AN ALFORD PLEA, THE COURT MUST MAKE A FINDING THAT THERE IS "STRONG EVIDENCE OF GUILT."[28]

THE PRECISE METHOD BY WHICH THIS DUTY IS MET HAS BEEN LEFT TO THE DISCRETION OF THE TRIAL COURTS.[29] IT IS NOT REQUIRED THAT THE EVIDENCE SUBMITTED AS A BASIS FOR THE PLEA BE ADMISSIBLE AT A TRIAL OR THAT IT BE SUFFICIENT TO CONVICT BEYOND A REASONABLE DOUBT.[30]

THE REQUIRED INFORMATION MAY BE ESTABLISHED IN A VARIETY OF WAYS, AND THE TRIAL COURT MAY ADOPT DIFFERENT PROCEDURES, DEPENDING ON THE SERIOUSNESS OF THE CHARGE. IT IS COMMON PRACTICE TO ASK THE PROSECUTOR TO ESTABLISH THE FACTUAL BASIS FOR THE PLEA. ACCEPTED METHODS INCLUDE:

(1) REFERRING TO THE CRIMINAL COMPLAINT;

(2) CONSIDERING TRANSCRIPTS OF THE PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION[31] OR HEARINGS ON PRETRIAL MOTIONS;

(3) ALLOWING THE PROSECUTOR TO DESCRIBE THE FACTS;

(4) REFERRING TO POLICE REPORTS[32] OR STATEMENTS OF THE DEFENDANT;

(5) RECEIVING TESTIMONY FROM POLICE OFFICERS,[33] VICTIMS, OR OTHER WITNESSES;[34] AND

(6) TAKING JUDICIAL NOTICE OF COURT RECORDS IN OTHER CASES (e.g., TRIAL OF A CODEFENDANT).

(7) ALLOCUTION BY THE DEFENDANT.

IN ADDITION TO THE ABOVE-DESCRIBED METHODS, SOME COURTS ADVOCATE THE USE OF A FULLY DESCRIPTIVE STIPULATION, OFTEN IN CONNECTION WITH A WRITTEN GUILTY PLEA FORM, WHICH IS SIGNED BY THE DEFENDANT, DEFENSE COUNSEL, AND THE PROSECUTOR AND DISCLOSES THE CHARGE, ITS CONSEQUENCES, THE RIGHTS WAIVED BY A GUILTY PLEA, THE FACTS SUPPORTING THE PLEA, AND ANY PLEA BARGAIN THAT HAS BEEN NEGOTIATED.[35]

THE CASE MAY BE ADJOURNED BY THE COURT FOR THE PURPOSE OF PREPARING FOR ANY OF THE METHODS OF ESTABLISHING THE FACTUAL BASIS FOR THE PLEA.

IF THE PLEA IS BEING ENTERED TO A REPEATER ALLEGATION, ADD THE FOLLOWING QUESTION.[36]

31. "Were you convicted of (name offense) on (date)?"

FOLLOWING THE OFFERING OF THE FACTUAL BASIS, DEFENSE COUNSEL SHOULD BE ASKED:

32. "From your own investigation, are you satisfied that there is a factual basis for the plea?"

X. Accepting the Plea and Pronouncing Judgment

IF THE COURT IS SATISFIED FROM THE SHOWING PRESENTED BY THE STATE THAT A FACTUAL BASIS EXISTS FOR THE DEFENDANT'S PLEA TO THE OFFENSE TO WHICH THE DEFENDANT PLEADS (OR TO A MORE SERIOUS OFFENSE),[37] THE COURT SHOULD MAKE FINDINGS OF FACT, ON THE RECORD, SUBSTANTIALLY AS FOLLOWS:[38]

"The court finds that the defendant understands the proceedings and that the plea of guilty is freely, voluntarily, and intelligently made. The court finds that the defendant understands the constitutional rights that are waived by a guilty plea and that the defendant freely and voluntarily waives those rights."

"The court finds from the record that a factual basis exists for the plea and that the defendant has committed the crime charged."

SUBSTITUTE THE FOLLOWING IF THE CASE INVOLVES AN ALFORD PLEA.

["The court finds from the record that a factual basis exists for the plea, that there is strong evidence of guilt, and that the defendant has committed the crime charged."]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES.[39]

"The court accepts the plea and finds the defendant guilty."

THE COURT SHOULD NOW STATE UPON THE RECORD:

"Upon the court's finding of guilty, it is adjudged that the defendant is convicted of the crime of _____ in violation of § _____, Wisconsin Criminal Code."

THE COURT SHOULD NOW DECIDE WHETHER A PRESENTENCE INVESTIGATION SHOULD BE ORDERED AND A DATE SHOULD BE SET FOR SENTENCING.

COMMENT

SM-32 was originally published in 1966 as "SM-30." It was revised and renumbered "SM-32" in 1974 and revised again in 1980, 1985, 1992, 1994, 1995, 2007 and 2019. The 2007 revision involved the addition of Section I., revision of question 15, and extensive updating of the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it updated the Comment and footnotes.

The inquiry suggested here is intended to illustrate a complete plea acceptance procedure, fully implementing the personal inquiry required by § 971.08 and Wisconsin case law. It is expected that individual judges will use it only as a general guide, choosing those parts that seem helpful and modifying others as appropriate to local practice and the case at hand.

The 1980 version of SM-32 was cited with approval by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Bartelt, 112 Wis.2d 467, 334 N.W.2d 91 (1983). The court "strongly advise[d] trial judges to give substantial heed to the explicit directions contained therein when accepting a plea of guilty or no contest." 112 Wis.2d 467, 484 n.3. The 1985 version was cited with approval in State v. Bangert, 131 Wis.2d 246, 389 N.W.2d 12 (1986). See discussion below. The 1995 version was cited with approval and its use urged in State v. Hampton, 2004 WI 107, ¶44, 274 Wis.2d 379, 683 N.W.2d 14 and State v. Brown, 2006 WI 100, ¶23, note 11, 293 Wis.2d 594, 716 N.W.2d 906.

Court-Required Plea Acceptance Procedures

The first Wisconsin decision to identify significant requirements for guilty plea acceptance was Ernst v. State, 43 Wis.2d 661, 170 N.W.2d 713 (1969). Ernst held that the then-existing procedures of Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure were required in state courts as a matter of federal constitutional law under the decision in Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238 (1969). It is now clear that Rule 11 procedures are not constitutionally required in state practice. State v. Bangert, supra, at 259-60. Even though application of Federal Rule 11is not required and though it has been extensively changed since 1969, its extensive commentary and the federal cases interpreting it may be helpful when questions about Wisconsin guilty plea practice arise.

State v. Bangert, supra, reaffirmed the requirement that a full personal inquiry be conducted in accepting a plea, including an inquiry into the defendant's understanding of the elements and their relation to the facts of the case. The rule of State v. Cecchini, 124 Wis.2d 200, 368 N.W.2d 830 (1985), that a plea can automatically be withdrawn if there is a defect in the acceptance colloquy, was overruled. In its place, Bangert created a new procedure to replace automatic withdrawal of a plea where the record of plea acceptance is defective:

> (1) the defendant must make a prima facie showing that required plea acceptance procedures were not complied with and must allege that the plea was not understandingly made;
> (2) if that showing is made, the burden shifts to the State to show that the plea was knowingly, voluntarily and intelligently entered. The state may go outside the record of the plea colloquy and use any evidence relevant to the issue.

The Bangert court also stated:

> Henceforth, we will also require as a function of our supervisory powers that state courts at the plea hearing follow the provisions set forth in Wis JI-Criminal SM-32 (1985), Part V, Waiver of Constitutional Rights . . .
> Although Bangert questions only the adequacy of the nature of the charge and constitutional waiver colloquy of the plea hearing, we urge trial courts to closely follow all of the procedures for the taking of a guilty or no contest plea as set forth at Wis JI-Criminal SM-32 (1985). We have previously expressed this recommendation, and believe that careful adherence to SM-32 will satisfy the constitutional standard of a voluntary and knowing plea, as well as the Ernst requirements, the procedure of Section 971.08, Stats., and the other mandatory procedures described herein.
> 131 Wis.2d 246, 22.
> . . . .
> We reiterate that the duty to comply with the plea hearing procedures falls squarely on the trial judge. We understand that most trial judges are under considerable calendar constraints, but it is of paramount importance that judges devote the time necessary to ensure that a plea meets the constitutional standard. The plea hearing colloquy must not be reduced to a perfunctory exchange. It demands the trial court's "utmost solicitude." Such solicitude will serve to forestall postconviction motions, which have an even more detrimental effect on a trial court's time limitations than do properly conducted plea hearings. Intentional failure to follow such mandate could be grounds for judicial discipline.
> 131 Wis.2d 246, 278-79.

In State v. Pegeese, 2019 WI 60, — Wis.2d —, 928 N.W.2d 590, the Wisconsin Supreme Court restated the list of duties a court has at a plea acceptance proceeding:

> ¶23 This court has recognized that circuit courts have a number of duties at a plea hearing to ensure that a defendant's guilty or no contest plea is knowing, intelligent, and voluntary, which include conducting a colloquy to:
> (1) Determine the extent of the defendant's education and general comprehension so as to assess the defendant's capacity to understand the issues at the hearing;
> (2) Ascertain whether any promises, agreements, or threats were made in connection with the defendant's anticipated plea, his appearance at the hearing, or any decision to forgo an attorney;
> (3) Alert the defendant to the possibility that an attorney may discover defenses or mitigating circumstances that would not be apparent to a layman such as the defendant;
> (4) Ensure the defendant understands that if he is indigent and cannot afford an attorney, an attorney will be provided at no expense to him;
> (5) Establish the defendant's understanding of the nature of the crime with which he is charged and the range of punishments to which he is subjecting himself by entering a plea;
> (6) Ascertain personally whether a factual basis exists to support the plea;
> (7) Inform the defendant of the constitutional rights he waives by entering a plea and verify that the defendant understands he is giving up these rights;
> (8) Establish personally that the defendant understands that the court is not bound by the terms of any plea agreement, including recommendations from the district attorney, in every case where there has been a plea agreement;
> (9) Notify the defendant of the direct consequences of his plea; and
> (10) Advise the defendant that "If you are not a citizen of the United States of America, you are advised that a plea of guilty or no contest for the offense [or offenses] with which you are charged may result in deportation, the exclusion from admission to this country or the denial of naturalization, under federal law," as provided in Wis. Stat. § 971.08(1)(c).

SM-32 covers all of the above, although not in the same order.

Addressing The Defendant Personally

Requirements at several stages of the plea acceptance procedure refer to the trial court "personally" providing advice or making inquiry. In State v. Hampton, supra, the court discussed what "personally" requires in the context of determining the defendant's understanding that the judge is not bound by sentencing recommendations in the plea agreement. The court held that the judge's duty "does not require that the court all the essential information personally, although personal explanation by the court strikes us as the most logical, consistent, and efficient way of delivering the information." 2004 WI 107, ¶43 (emphasis in original). See note 5, below.

Relying On A Plea Questionnaire/Waiver Of Rights Form

In State v. Hoppe, 2009 WI 41, 317Wis.2d 161,765 N.W.2d 794, the court held that the plea colloquy was insufficient but that other evidence showed the plea was voluntarily and understandingly made. The primary issue was the permissible extent of reliance on a signed "Plea Questionnaire/Waiver of Rights" form:

> ¶ 30. A circuit court may use the completed Plea Questionnaire/Waiver of Rights Form when discharging its plea colloquy duties. . . .
> ¶ 31. A circuit court may not, however, rely entirely on the Plea Questionnaire/Waiver of Rights Form as a substitute for a substantive in-court plea colloquy. . . [T]he plea hearing transcript must demonstrate that the circuit court used a substantive colloquy to satisfy each of the duties listed in [State v.] Brown. . . .
> ¶ 32. . . . A complete Form can therefore be a very useful instrument to help ensure a knowing, intelligent, and voluntary plea. The plea colloquy cannot, however, be reduced to determining whether the defendant has read and filled out the Form. Although we do not require a circuit court to follow inflexible guidelines when conducting a plea hearing, the Form cannot substitute for a personal, in-court, on-the-record plea colloquy between the circuit court and a defendant.

In State v. Pegeese, 2019 WI 60, — Wis.2d —, 928 N.W.2d 590, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the holding in Hoppe:

> ¶36 A plea questionnaire is indeed a useful tool to supplement a plea colloquy, but it alone does not replace a plea colloquy during which the circuit court must determine whether a plea is being made knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily.
> . . . . .
> ¶39 We therefore reaffirm that the circuit court may utilize a waiver of rights form such as Form CR-227, but the use of that form does not otherwise eliminate the circuit court's plea colloquy duties. While the circuit court must exercise great care when conducting a plea colloquy so as to best ensure that a defendant is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entering a plea, a formalistic recitation of the constitutional rights being waived is not required.

The Defendant's Right To Be Present

". . . § 971.04(1)(g) provides a criminal defendant the statutory right to be in the same courtroom as the presiding judge when a plea hearing is held, if the court accepts the plea and pronounces judgment. However, we also conclude that this statutory right may be waived ..." State v. Soto, 2012 WI 93, 343Wis.2d 43, ¶2, 817 N.W.2d 848. The court also described the type of inquiry that should accompany the use of videoconferencing for a hearing at which "presence" is required. 343Wis.2d 43, ¶46. See SM-18 Defendant's Consent To Proceed By Videoconference B Waiver Of Right To Be Present Under § 971.04.

Joining A Guilty Plea With A Plea Of Not Guilty By Reason Of Mental Disease Or Defect

The Committee recommends that the full guilty plea acceptance procedure should be followed in cases where a defendant joins a plea of guilty with a plea of not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect [NGI]. The cases should be treated as involving two pleas. First, there is a plea of guilty to the offense(s) charged, with the full plea acceptance procedures used. This is consistent with State v. Shegrud, 131 Wis.2d 133, 389 N.W.2d 7 (1986) – holding that an NGI plea is like a no contest plea and that Bangert and § 971.08 procedures should be followed – and State v. Duychak, 133 Wis.2d 307, 395 N.W.2d 795 (Ct. App. 1986). Also see, State v. Vander Linden, 141 Wis.2d 155, 414 N.W.2d 72 (Ct. App. 1987), where the recommended procedure was referred to with apparent approval. Second, there is the plea of "not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect." The Committee recommends that the colloquy reflect that defendants understand the nature of this plea, including the maximum term of commitment to which they are exposed. See § 971.17(1).

In State v. Fugere, 2019 WI 33, 386 Wis.2d 76, 924 N.W.2d 469, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that trial courts are not required to advise defendants of the maximum term of commitment if they are found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect and declined to exercise its supervisory authority to require courts to do so.

> ¶2. We conclude that a circuit court is not required to inform an NGI defendant of the maximum possible term of civil commitment at the guilt phase: (1) because a defendant who prevails at the responsibility phase of the NGI proceeding has proven an affirmative defense in a civil proceeding, avoiding incarceration, and is not waiving any constitutional rights by so proceeding in that defense; and (2) because an NGI commitment is not punishment, but rather a collateral consequence to one who successfully mounts an NGI defense to criminal charges. We therefore decline to exercise our superintending and administrative authority to require circuit courts to advise NGI defendants of the maximum period of civil commitment.

In State v. Francis, 2005 WI App 161, 285 Wis.2d 451, 701 N.W.2d 632, the court of appeals held that when accepting a guilty plea from a defendant who had originally entered an insanity plea, the court was not required to address the defendant personally with respect to the withdrawal of the insanity plea. However, the court noted:

> . . . we believe it nonetheless advisable for the trial court to engage in personal colloquy for a least two reasons: First, it helps satisfy the court that the defendant is aware and alert as to what is going on. Second, the record is protected from later ineffective assistance of counsel claims where a convicted defendant might assert that counsel never discussed the NGI withdrawal. 285 Wis.2d 451, 467, footnote 5.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has reaffirmed that it is good practice for a plea colloquy to address NGI plea withdrawal. State v. Burton, 2013 WI 61, 349 Wis.2d 1, 832 N.W.2d 611.

1. SM 30 Waiver And Forfeiture Of Counsel, etc., provides a suggested inquiry and findings for the waiver of the right to counsel.

2. Consultation with victims. This question is intended to comply with the requirements of § 971.08(1)(d), which reads as follows: "(d) Inquire of the district attorney whether he or she has complied with s. 971.095(2)."

Section 971.095 is titled: "Consultation with and notices to victim." Subsection (2) imposes a duty on the district attorney to offer all victims who have requested it "an opportunity to confer with the district attorney concerning the prosecution of the case and the possible outcomes of the prosecution, including potential plea agreements and sentencing recommendations."

The Committee concluded that this inquiry should be made at the beginning of the plea acceptance hearing. If the prosecutor has not complied with § 971.095(2), that fact should be disclosed as early as possible. If the prosecutor has complied as required, establishing that fact at the beginning of the proceeding should satisfy not only the obligation set forth in § 971.08(1)(d) but also the obligation in § 971.315 to make the same inquiry if the plea agreement calls for dismissal of charges:

> 971.315 Inquiry upon dismissal. Before a court dismisses a criminal charge against a person, the court shall inquire of the district attorney whether he or she has complied with s.

971.095(2).

See footnote 15 regarding plea agreements calling for dismissal of charges.

3. Identifying the maximum penalty. The maximum penalty must be explained at the time the plea is accepted, even if it has been explained at earlier stages of the proceedings. State v. Bartelt, 112 Wis.2d 467, 334 N.W.2d 91 (1983). A complete description of the charge and the penalty may be done in the following manner:

> "Do you understand that you are charged with burglary?"
> "And do you understand that the maximum penalty for burglary is 12 ½ years of imprisonment, composed of 7 ½ years of initial confinement and 5 years extended supervision, and a fine of $25,000?"

In State v. Sutton, 2006 WI App 118, 294 Wis.2d 330, 718 N.W.2d 146, the court held that advice is not required about the maximum term of initial confinement on a bifurcated sentence; advice on the maximum term of imprisonment is sufficient.

In State v. Douglas, 2018 WI App 12, 380 Wis.2d 389, 908 N.W.2d 466, plea withdrawal was ordered because the trial court and counsel provided erroneous information on the maximum sentence.

When the defendant entered his guilty plea in State v. Finley, 2016 WI 63, 370 Wis.2d 402, 882 N.W.2d 761, he was erroneously informed (both by the circuit court and in the plea questionnaire/waiver of rights form) that his maximum exposure was nineteen and one half years. Finley was sentenced to the actual maximum of twenty-three and one half years imprisonment, and he later sought to withdraw his plea. The court of appeals sent the case back and the trial court reduced the sentence to nineteen and one half years. Finley went back to the court of appeals; the court ordered that he be allowed to withdraw his plea. The Supreme Court affirmed:

> ¶ 95 . . . Finley is entitled to withdraw his plea: The circuit court misinformed Finley of the potential punishment he faced if convicted, information the circuit court was required to give the defendant; and the State failed to prove that when Finley entered his plea he knew the potential punishment he faced if convicted.

The decision included a "Glossary" of sentencing terms apparently intended to encourage uniformity in conducting the plea colloquy. Section 971.08 requires advising on the "potential punishment," which according to the Glossary, is the same as the maximum statutory penalty [including any penalty enhancements].

When the defendant entered his guilty plea in State v. Cross, 2010 WI 70, 326 Wis.2d 492, 786 N.W.2d 464, he, his lawyer, and the trial court all thought that the applicable maximum imprisonment he faced was 40 years. In fact, the correct maximum was 30 years imprisonment – 20 confinement and 10 ES. He was originally sentenced to 25 years confinement with 15 years ES. He moved to withdraw his plea. The trial court denied the motion but reduced the sentence to 20 years confinement and 10 years ES. The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed:

> ¶ 4 We hold that where a defendant is told that he faces a maximum possible sentence that is higher, but not substantially higher, than that authorized by law, the circuit court has not violated the plea colloquy requirements outlined in Wis. Stat. § 971.08 and our Bangert line of cases. In other words, where a defendant pleads guilty with the understanding that he faces a higher, but not substantially higher, sentence than the law allows, the circuit court has still fulfilled its duty to inform the defendant of the range of punishments. Therefore, the defendant is not entitled to an evidentiary hearing, and plea withdrawal remains in the discretion of the circuit court and will not be disturbed unless the defendant shows that it is necessary to correct a manifest injustice.

The decision overrules State v. Harden, 2005 WI App 252, 287 Wis.2d 871, 707 N.W.2d 173 and withdraws language in State v. Quiroz, 2002 WI App 52, ¶16, 251 Wis.2d 245, 641 N.W.2d 715, which held the defendant was not required to show he would have pled differently if he had known the correct maximum.

All applicable penalty enhancers should be included in the description of the maximum penalty, such as repeater allegations under § 939.62, the increased penalty for committing a crime while armed under § 939.63, etc. The previous versions of this Special Material recommended that if conviction would require that a consecutive sentence be imposed, that fact should also be disclosed. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 repealed all mandatory consecutive sentence provisions except one: § 946.43(2m)(b) relating to assaults by prisoners.

A trial court in accepting a guilty plea is not required to specifically inform the defendant that the crime is a felony or misdemeanor because this is not part of the "nature of the charge." The court noted that one way to describe "the nature of the charge" is to read from the appropriate jury instructions, which typically do not include the word "felony" or "misdemeanor." State v. Robles, 2013 WI App 76, 348 Wis.2d 325, 833 N.W.2d 184.

"Direct" and "Collateral" Consequences

The general rule is that advice on "direct" but not "collateral" consequences of conviction is required at the time a plea is accepted. A "direct consequence" is "one that has a definite, immediate, and largely automatic effect on the range of defendant's punishment." State v. Bollig, 2000 WI 6, ¶16, 232 Wis.2d 561, 605 N.W.2d 199. "Collateral consequences are indirect and do not flow from the conviction." State v. Byrge, 2000 WI 101, ¶61, 237 Wis. 2d 197, 614 N.W.2d 477. The following have been found to be "collateral consequences":

- mandatory DNA surcharge; applying the "intents/effects" test, the surcharge was not enacted with punitive intent and did not have a punitive effect. State v. Williams, 2018 WI 59, 381 Wis.2d 61, 912 N.W. 2d 373. Also see, State v. Frieboth, 2018 WI App 46, 383 Wis.2d 733, 916 N.W. 2d 643.

- requirement to register as a sex offender. Bollig, supra. [However, the court found that lack of knowledge of the registration requirement was a fair and just reason for a motion to withdraw a plea prior to sentencing.] Also see, State v. [Charles] Brown, 2004 WI App 179, 276 Wis.2d 559, 687 N.W.2d 543, where plea withdrawal was allowed because misinformation regarding sex offender registration went to the heart of the agreement.

- the possible revocation of probation for a sex offender who entered an Alford plea and therefore may not make the admission of guilt required for participation in treatment programs. State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998).

- potential commitment as a "sexually violent person" under Chapter 980. State v. Myers, 199 Wis.2d 391, 544 N.W.2d 609. [But see, State v. Nelson, 2005 WI App 113, 282 Wis.2d 502, 701 N.W.2d 32: the defendant's lack of knowledge of the possible Chapter 980 commitment was a fair and just reason for a motion to withdraw a plea prior to sentencing. Also see, State v. [Charles] Brown, 2004 WI App 179, 276 Wis.2d 559, 687 N.W.2d 543, where plea withdrawal was allowed because misinformation regarding a possible Chapter 980 commitment went to the heart of the agreement.]

- lifetime GPS monitoring is not "punishment," and, therefore, not a direct consequence that Muldrow had to be informed of prior to his plea. State v. Muldrow, 2018 WI 52, 381 Wis.2d 492, 912 N.W.2d 74.

- possible transfer to an out-of-state prison. State v. Parker, 2001 WI App 111, 244 Wis.2d 145, 629 N.W.2d 77.

- ineligibility for federal health care benefits under 42 USC 1320. State v. Merten, 2003 WI App 171, 266 Wis.2d 588, 668 N.W.2d 750.

- federal firearms restriction for those convicted of misdemeanor offenses involving domestic violence. State v. Kosina, 226 Wis.2d 482, 595 N.W.2d 464 (1999).

- deportation issues based on the defendant's own misunderstanding of his status [where the court gave the required advice]. State v. Rodriguez, 221Wis.2d 487, 585 N.W.2d 701 (1998).

- unavailability of parole and good time under Truth In Sentencing. State v. Plank, 2005 WI App 109, 282 Wis.2d 520, 699 N.W.2d 235.

Even though advice on matters in the list above is not directly required, the Committee recommends that obvious and serious collateral consequences of the guilty plea should be disclosed. The most common is probably the possible revocation of probation, parole, or extended supervision. Also see footnote 9, below, regarding the required advice on the prohibition on possession of a firearm by a convicted felon.

Care should be taken to assure that the defendant understands what the maximum statutory penalty is, as distinguished from the sentence likely to be imposed, the date of parole eligibility, the likely date of parole release, or the mandatory release date on the sentence. Confusion about parole eligibility, for example, is sometimes claimed as a basis for withdrawing a plea, usually without success. See State v. Birts, 68 Wis.2d 389, 228 N.W.2d 351 (1975), which held that trial courts should not attempt to describe parole consequences as a part of the plea acceptance procedures.

In State v. Byrge, 2000 WI 101, 237 Wis.2d 197, 614 N.W.2d 477, the court recognized a different rule where a court exercises its authority to determine parole eligibility for life sentences under s. 973.014 under the pre-Truth In Sentencing system. "In this circumstance, parole eligibility is a direct consequence of the plea." 2000 WI 101, ¶4. Thus, "in the narrow circumstance in which a circuit court has statutory authority under s. 973.014(2) to fix the parole eligibility date, the circuit court is obligated to provide the defendant with parole eligibility information before accepting the plea." 2000 WI 101, ¶4.

4. Repeater statutes; penalty enhancers; mandatory minimums

Repeater statutes, penalty enhancers, and related provisions were reduced in number by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. The following remain in force:

- § 939.615 Lifetime supervision of serious sex offenders. [See Wis JI Criminal 980.]

- § 939.616 Mandatory minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses. [First created as § 939.617 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 430; changed to § 939.616 by the Revisor when 2005 Wisconsin Act 433 created another § 939.617.] Requires a mandatory minimum sentence for certain violations of § 948.02(1) and § 948.025(1).

- § 939.617 Minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses: creates presumptive minimum sentences for violation of certain child sex offenses that are not sexual assaults: § 948.05, § 948.075, and § 948.12. Created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433.

- § 939.618 Mandatory minimum sentence for repeat serious sex crimes: provides increased penalties for persons with prior convictions under § 940.225(1) or (2). If the prior and the current conviction are for violating § 940.225(1) the maximum term of imprisonment is life without parole or extended supervision. In other situations covered by the statute, there is a mandatory minimum sentence of 3 years and 6 months for the second violation. [This is former § 939.623, renumbered, retitled, and revised by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433.]

- § 939.619 Mandatory minimum sentence for repeat serious violent crimes: provides a mandatory minimum sentence of 3 years and 6 months for violation of §§ 940.03 or 940.05 if there is a prior conviction for those crimes or a crime punishable by life imprisonment. [This is former § 939.624, renumbered and retitled by 2005 Wisconsin Act 433.]

- § 939.6195 Mandatory minimum sentence for repeat firearm crimes: requires that the term of confinement for a bifurcated sentence be at least 4 years.

- § 939.62 Increased penalty for habitual criminality: the regular "repeater" provisions are in subs. (1) and (2).

- § 939.62(2m): mandatory sentence of life without parole for a "persistent repeater." This applies to "serious child sex offenses" ("Two Strikes") and to "serious felonies" ("Three Strikes").

- § 939.621 Increased penalty for certain domestic abuse offenses: provides a penalty increase of up to 2 years for certain domestic abuse offenses. [See Wis JI Criminal 983 and 984].

- § 939.63 Penalties; use of a dangerous weapon: provides for increases in the maximum sentence if a person commits a crime while possessing, using, or threatening to use a dangerous weapon. [See Wis JI-Criminal 990].

- § 939.632 Penalties; violent crime in a school zone: provides a 5 year penalty increase for certain "violent crimes" that are felonies and a 3 month penalty increase for certain "violent crimes" that are misdemeanors. [See Wis JI Criminal 992.]

- § 939.635 Increased penalty for certain crimes against children committed by a child care provider: provides for a 5-year increase in the maximum penalty for specified crimes against a child. [See Wis JI-Criminal 2115].

- § 939.645 Penalties; crimes committed against certain people or property: this is the so-called Hate Crimes Law. It provides a 5 year penalty increase for felonies; it increases the maximum sentence to two years for Class A misdemeanors; and, it increases the maximum sentence to one year in jail for misdemeanors other than a Class A misdemeanor. [See Wis JI-Criminal 996 and 996A].

Also note that Chapter 961 has its own repeater provision for controlled substance offenses [see § 961.48] and several penalty enhancer provisions [see §§ 961.46, 961.49, and 961.495].

Finally, Chapter 980, Sexually Violent Persons, allows commitment after the completion of a prison sentence for persons found to be "sexually violent persons." See Wis JI-Criminal 2501 - 2503. This has been labeled a "collateral consequence." See the list in footnote 3.

The Committee does not believe that the trial judge is required to explain all of these provisions to the defendant during the plea acceptance procedure. However, when a penalty enhancer is charged, the maximum penalty is affected and should be disclosed on the record. Advice on the mandatory minimum sentence under § 939.616 Mandatory minimum sentence for certain child sex offenses, is required. State v. Thompson, 2012 WI 90, 342 Wis.2d 674, 818 N.W.2d 904.

Section 971.08(1)(c) requires advice on deportation consequences. See footnote 8, below.

5. If the reading of the charging document is waived, assure that the waiver appears in the record.

6. Personal Inquiry. It is a personal inquiry of the defendant that is required. The court must assure that the defendant's own responses appear on the record.

Personal inquiry is required even though the defendant is represented by competent counsel. The personal inquiry requirement is one of the major emphases of the cases that have required the formal plea procedures. In State v. Ernst, 43 Wis.2d 661, 170 N.W.2d 713 (1969), the Wisconsin Supreme Court specifically recognized that "under Boykin v. Alabama, Wisconsin courts can no longer indulge in the presumption" that counsel has fulfilled his or her duty of proper representation. 43 Wis.2d 661, 674. Whether or not one agrees with the conclusion or its assumptions about counsel's role, it is clear that the burden of assuring that a defendant understands the nature and effect of the plea has been unequivocally imposed on the trial judge. This was reaffirmed in State v. Brown, 2006 WI 100, 293 Wis.2d 594, 716 N.W.2d 906, where the court recognized that the U.S. Constitution can be satisfied by reliance on counsel's representations [see, Bradshaw v. Stumpf, 545 U.S. 175 (2005)]. The court noted, that "[s]ince Bangert, however, we have interpreted Wis. Stat. § 971.08 to require a court to obtain more direct confirmation of a defendant's understanding before accepting a plea." 2006 WI 100, ¶56, footnote 26.

If the plea is tendered by counsel, it is important that the defendant personally acknowledge that the plea is the defendant's own decision. The same practice should be followed at any other time during the plea acceptance procedure when counsel answers a question that has been directed to the defendant.

In State v. Burns, 226 Wis.2d 762, 594 N.W.2d 799 (1999), the court affirmed a conviction where the defendant was never directly asked "How do you plead?" and did not state his plea on the record. However, the court "urges circuit courts to follow the usual and strongly preferred practice of asking defendants directly and personally in open court and on the record how they plead to the charged offenses and of entering the pleas on the record." 226 Wis.2d 762, 765. SM 32, and question no. 1 in particular, was cited with approval.

If the defendant refuses to answer the questions that constitute the plea acceptance colloquy, the plea should not be accepted. See, State v. Minniecheske, 127 Wis.2d 234, 378 N.W.2d 283 (1985).

With respect to misdemeanor cases, § 971.04(2) provides that defendants may authorize their attorney in writing to act on their behalf in any manner and may "be excused from attendance at any or all proceedings." This conflicts with § 971.08(1)(a) which requires that the court must address the defendant personally before accepting a plea of guilty or no contest, and makes no exception for misdemeanors. The court of appeals dealt with the conflict in State v. Krause, 161 Wis.2d 919, 927, 469 N.W.2d 241 (Ct. App. 1991), holding that both statutes should be given effect:

> While a misdemeanant need not be present at a plea hearing, we conclude that the remaining requirements of 971.08, Stats., are equally applicable in the case of misdemeanors as in felonies.

Apparently, the court must conduct an inquiry of counsel to determine if the defendant personally is making a voluntary and understanding plea.

7. No Contest and Alford Pleas. If the defendant pleads "no contest" or "Alford," the court should make it clear to the defendant that, for the purposes of the criminal proceeding, the plea will have the same effect as an unequivocal plea of guilty. State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 632, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998). The full plea acceptance procedures should be followed for no contest pleas, which may be entered only "subject to the approval of the court." § 971.06(1)(c). An Alford plea is a guilty plea accompanied by a claim of innocence, which the court may reject if it concludes that the plea is contrary to the public interest or the interest of justice. State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 859, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995). In State v. Williams, 2000 WI App 123, 237 Wis.2d 591, 614 N.W.2d 11, the court of appeals implied that a judge's flat refusal to accept an Alford plea because "I have just made a policy that I will not accept one" would be error. However, the alleged error was considered waived in that case.

The acceptance and effects of no contest and Alford pleas are discussed in SM 32A, No Contest and Alford Pleas. [Garcia, supra, cited SM 32A with approval.]

The material in brackets provides a definition of the no contest and Alford pleas and attempts to assure that the defendant understands that those pleas result in an unequivocal judgment of guilty. The Committee was prompted to add the material by the decision in State v. Garcia, supra, where the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed that "the circuit courts of Wisconsin may, in their discretion, accept Alford pleas." The court cited SM 32A with approval with respect to its recommendation that:

> judges . . . ask defense counsel on the record whether counsel has discussed the consequences of the plea with the defendant and if so, whether the defendant has expressed his understanding of those consequences.
> 192 Wis.2d 845, 858 59.

Further, the court added the following in a footnote:

> Although not required to make the plea acceptable, including a definition of an Alford plea on the guilty plea questionnaire may help to further document the defendant's understanding of the > plea. We invite the Wisconsin Jury Instruction Committee to consider making such a change on the form.

> 192 Wis.2d 845, 860, at footnote 6.

The additions to the text of SM 32 are intended to address these concerns.

8. Deportation, exclusion from admission, denial of naturalization. This advice is in bold because it is expressly required by § 971.08(1)(c), which provides that before the court accepts a plea of guilty or no contest, it shall:

> Address the defendant personally and advise the defendant as follows: "If you are not a citizen of the United States of America, you are advised that a plea of guilty or no contest for the offense with which you are charged may result in deportation, the exclusion from admission to this country or the denial of naturalization, under federal law."

Section 971.06(3) prohibits any inquiry into the citizenship status of the defendant: "At the time a defendant enters a plea, the court may not require the defendant to disclose his or her citizenship status."

The required warning must be given at the time the plea colloquy is conducted. Giving the warning at the arraignment is not a substitute for what the statute clearly requires. State v. Vang, 2010 WI App 118, 328 Wis.2d 251, 789 N.W.2d 115.

There has been extensive litigation regarding whether plea withdrawal is required where the advice on immigration consequences was not given or not given precisely as required by the statute. The advice for the judge accepting a plea, however, should be clear: give the warning in the words of the statute. Motions to withdraw guilty pleas are also frequently based on ineffective assistance of counsel. See cases collected at the end of this footnote. In Padilla v. Kentucky, 559 U.S. 356 (2010), the court held that the right to effective assistance of counsel extends to advise on deportation consequences.

In State v. Reyes Fuerte, 2017 WI 104, 378 Wis.2d 504, 904 N.W.2d 773, the Wisconsin Supreme Court found that the advice given by the trial judge on immigration consequences fell short of what § 971.08(1)(c) requires in two ways: it referred to "resident" instead of "citizen" and failed to mention "denial of naturalization." The court held, however, that harmless error analysis applies to this situation and concluded that the error was harmless:

> ¶41 We hold that, under the circumstances of this case, the circuit court's errors in giving the plea advisement required by Wis. Stat. § 971.08(1)(c) are harmless. Reyes Fuerte knew of the potential immigration consequences because his counsel went over the plea waiver form, which contains a substantially similar advisement, with him in Spanish. The failure to bring any ineffective assistance claim under Padilla further indicates that counsel did inform Reyes Fuerte of the potential immigration consequences of his plea. Finally, the two immigration consequences relevant to Reyes Fuerte were raised by the circuit court, such that he had knowledge of those potential consequences. To allow him to withdraw his plea now would be to allow him to "manipulate [Wisconsin's] criminal justice system in order to circumvent the immigration laws;" we cannot accept that the legislature intended to, or actually did, write § 971.08(2) to have such a result. State v. Issa, 186 Wis. 2d 199, 212, 519 N.W.2d 741 (Ct. App. 1994) (Fine, J., concurring).

Reaching this conclusion required the overruling of State v. Douangmala, 2002 WI 62, 253 Wis. 2d

173, 646 N.W.2d 1:

> ¶36 In light of the foregoing, we hold that Douangmala was objectively wrong because it failed to consider the mandatory language in Wis. Stat. §§ 971.26 and 805.18 and thus overrule it. Additionally, we reinstate Chavez, Issa, Lopez, and Garcia as valid law and binding precedent.

The court still encouraged reading the statutory script verbatim:

> ¶19 Before we begin our analysis, we take a moment to remind circuit court judges that simply reading the language of the advisement from Wis. Stat. § 971.08(1)(c) is by far the best option. The use of quotation marks (such as those in § 971.08(1)(c)) is "an unusual and significant legislative signal" that should be given effect by circuit courts. State v. Garcia, 2000 WI App 81, ¶16, 234 Wis. 2d 304, 610 N.W.2d 180. In this instance, those quotation marks are best given effect by reading the advisement as written in the statute. See id. Though, as a result of this opinion, harmless error now applies as a "safety net" for circuit courts, the best practice remains reading the exact language of the statute. Id.

State v. Douangmala, 2002 WI 62, 253 Wis.2d 173, 644 N.W.2d 891, was overruled by Reyes Fuerte. In it, the court answered "yes" to the following question: "If a circuit court fails to give the deportation warning required by § 971.08(1)(c) when accepting a guilty or no-contest plea, is a defendant entitled to withdraw the plea later upon a showing that the plea is likely to result in the defendant's deportation, regardless of whether the defendant was aware of the deportation consequences of the plea at the time the defendant entered the plea?" The court said that the result is compelled by the specific terms of § 971.08(2).

Reyes Fuerte reinstated the following cases as "valid law and binding precedent": State v. Chavez, 175 Wis.2d 366, 498 N.W.2d 887 (Ct. App. 1993); State v. Issa, 186 Wis.2d 199, 519 N.W.2d 741 (Ct. App. 1994); State v. Lopez, 196 Wis.2d 725, 539 N.W.2d 700 (Ct. App. 1995); and, State v. Garcia, 2000 WI App 81, 234 Wis.2d 304, 610 N.W.2d 180.

In State v. Garcia, 2000 WI App 81, ¶1, 234 Wis.2d 304, 610 N.W.2d 180, the court held that "a trial court is required to personally address the defendant in the express words of the statute," referring to s. 971.08(1)(c). Question 3 uses the express words of § 971.08(1)(c).

Also see State v. Issa, 186 Wis.2d 199, 519 N.W.2d 741 (Ct. App. 1994), ordering withdrawal of a plea where the trial judge relied on a written plea acceptance form instead of personally addressing the defendant to assure understanding of deportation consequences.

In State v. Rodriguez, 221 Wis.2d 487, 585 N.W.2d 701 (Ct. App. 1998), the trial court addressed the defendant as required by § 971.08(1). The defendant later sought to withdraw the plea, claiming his misunderstanding of his citizenship status meant that his plea was not voluntarily and intelligently made. The court of appeals held that in this context the deportation consequences were "collateral" and the defendant's own mistake about them did not require withdrawal of the plea.

In State v. Mursal, 2013 WI App 125, ¶16, 351 Wis.2d 180, 839 N.W.2d 173, the court applied the "substantial compliance" doctrine: an immigration advisement substantially complied with § 971.08 if it explained all the elements of the statute; minor linguistic differences that don't change the meaning of the advice do not require plea withdrawal.

In State v. Valadez, 2016 WI 4, 316 Wis.2d 332, 874 N.W.2d 514, when the trial court accepted the defendant's pleas [in 2004 and 2005] it did not include advice on immigration consequences. In 2013, she moved to withdraw her pleas under § 971.08(2). Valadez was a lawful permanent resident and there were no plans to deport her. However, if she left the country and sought to reenter, she would be denied readmission. The court held that she had shown exclusion from admission was likely, satisfying the requirements of § 971.08(2), and was entitled to withdraw her plea. The decision did not resolve the question whether any time limits apply to motions under § 971.08(2).

In State v. Ortiz-Mondragon, 2015 WI 73, 364 Wis.2d 1, 866 N.W.2d 717, the defendant sought to withdraw a no contest plea, alleging ineffective assistance of counsel – specifically, the failure to advise that deportation would be mandatory rather than "a possibility." The supreme court concluded that counsel did not perform deficiently. Because federal immigration law is not "succinct, clear, and explicit" in providing that Ortiz Mondragon's substantial battery offense constituted a crime involving moral turpitude, his attorney "need[ed] [to] do no more than advise [him] that pending criminal charges may carry a risk of adverse immigration consequences." ¶5.

In State v. Shata, 2015 WI 74, 364 Wis.2d 1, 866 N.W.2d 717, the defendant made a similar claim, specifically, that counsel was ineffective for failing to advise that deportation would be mandatory rather than "a strong chance." The trial court denied withdrawal but the court of appeals reversed. The supreme court concluded plea withdrawal was not warranted:

. . . Shata is not entitled to withdraw his guilty plea because he did not receive ineffective assistance of counsel. Specifically, Shata's attorney did not perform deficiently. Shata's attorney was required to "give correct advice" to Shata about the possible immigration consequences of his conviction. Padilla, 559 U.S. at 369. Shata's attorney satisfied that requirement by correctly advising Shata that his guilty plea carried a "strong chance" of deportation. Shata's attorney was not required to tell him that his guilty plea would absolutely result in deportation. In fact, Shata's deportation was not an absolute certainty. Executive action, including the United States Department of Homeland Security's exercise of prosecutorial discretion, can block the deportation of deportable aliens. ¶5.

In State v. Villegas, 2018 WI App 9, 380 Wis.2d 246, 908 N.W.2d 198, a motion to withdraw a guilty plea was denied: counsel was not ineffective in failing to inform the defendant that his plea would render him inadmissible to the United States and ineligible for Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA). [The trial court did give the advice required by § 971.08.]

9. Possession of a firearm. Section 973.176(1) requires providing this information at the time of sentencing. The Committee concluded that it is a good practice, though not required, to include it at the time the plea is accepted as well.

Section 973.176(1) was created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 142 (effective date: March 31, 1990) and reads as follows:

FIREARM POSSESSION Whenever a court imposes a sentence or places a defendant on probation regarding a felony conviction, the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under § 941.29.

Section 941.29 makes it a Class G felony for a convicted felon to possess a firearm. The maximum term of imprisonment for a Class G felony is ten years: an initial term of confinement of 5 years and 5 years extended supervision. [2001 Wisconsin Act 109 repealed the former penalty structure, which increased the penalty for a second offense.]

Caution should be exercised where a plea agreement purports to avoid the ban on firearm possession. In Koll v. DOJ, 2009 WI App 74, 317 Wis.2d 753, 769 N.W.2d 69, the court held that the Wisconsin Department of Justice was correct in refusing to issue a gun permit to a person convicted of disorderly conduct in a domestic context, even though the plea agreement in the case was specifically tailored to characterize the offense as "non-domestic disorderly conduct" to avoid the collateral consequence of the federal ban on gun possession. However, in an unpublished opinion in a companion case [State v. Koll, 2008AP1403-CR] the court ordered withdrawal of Koll's plea because "Koll was actively misinformed as to a collateral consequence of his plea agreement and because the misinformation went to the heart of the plea agreement."

10. Right to vote. The text regarding the right to vote is based on CR-227.

11. Restitution. In State v. Dugan, 193 Wis.2d 610, 534 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1995), the court held that warning a guilty plea defendant that restitution may be required is not a mandatory component of the plea acceptance colloquy. But, in a footnote, the court stated:

> . . . we nonetheless think it the better practice for a sentencing court to include the [restitution] warning when taking a plea and to include the warning on the Moederndorfer questionnaire. 193 Wis.2d 610, 624, at footnote 7.

Section 973.20(1r) provides in part:

> When imposing sentence or ordering probation for any crime, . . . the court, in addition to any other penalty authorized by law, shall order the defendant to make full or partial restitution under this section to any victim of a crime considered at sentencing, or, if the victim is deceased, to his or her estate, unless the court finds substantial reason not to do so and states the reason on the record.

12. The suggested questions should be modified to fit the case at hand and the preference of the trial judge. Some or all of the questions may be eliminated altogether if a similar inquiry has already been conducted to, for example, set bail, evaluate a waiver of counsel, etc. Additional questions will often be suggested by the defendant's responses.

13. Plea Agreements. If there is a plea agreement, it is recommended that it be put in writing and that the written description be made part of the record. If there is not a written agreement, it is essential that the agreement be carefully and completely described on the record. State ex rel. White v. Gray, 57 Wis.2d 17, 203 N.W.2d 638 (1973); State v. Lee, 88 Wis.2d 239, 26 N.W.2d 268 (1979).

Concessions to others; "Package agreements." The court must be alert for indications that the plea agreement contemplates concessions to a relative or close friend. This type of agreement "bears particular scrutiny by a trial or reviewing court conscious of the psychological pressures upon an accused such a situation creates." State ex rel. White v. Gray, 57 Wis.2d 17, 29, 203 N.W.2d 638 (1973). These agreements also must be reviewed from the point of view of whether they are in the public interest. State ex rel. White v. Gray, 57 Wis.2d 17, 29 30. Also see Seybold v. State, 61 Wis.2d 227, 212 N.W.2d 146 (1973).

Regarding "package plea agreements," see State v. Goyette, 2006 WI App 178, 295 Wis.2d 359, 722 N.W.2d 731. A "package plea agreement" refers to "a plea agreement that is contingent on two or more codefendants all entering pleas according to the terms of the agreement. If one defendant does not enter a plea according to the agreement, the State is not bound by the agreement with respect to any of the defendants." 2006 WI App 178, ¶1. The court acknowledged that "package plea agreements carry with them the risk that one of the defendants will be improperly pressured into entering a plea," id. at ¶31, but found that any pressure felt in that case was not improper but was "self-imposed coercive element." See, Craker v. State, 66 Wis.2d 222, 223 N.W.2d 872 (1974).

Charges "dismissed outright." State v. Frey, 2012 WI 99, 343 Wis.2d 358, 817 N.W.2d 436, concluded that "dismissed outright" has no particular meaning for sentencing or plea agreement purposes and reaffirmed the standard rule on what may be considered at sentencing: the sentencing court may consider dismissed charges for proper purposes; the defendant should have the opportunity to "refute the purported inaccuracies of the facts underlying the dismissed charges." In the context of plea agreements, "dismissed charges do not have a static meaning. They are a product of the parties' negotiations and they mean what the parties intend them to mean" subject to the exception "that a plea agreement involving one or more dismissed charges cannot limit what the judge may consider at sentencing." ¶¶77, 78.

"Conditional" pleas. Plea agreements sometimes attempt to provide the defendant with the right to appeal adverse pretrial rulings. These attempts at a "conditional guilty plea" do not confer upon defendants any right to appeal they do not otherwise have. Section 971.31(10) allows appeals of orders denying motions to suppress evidence or motions challenging the admissibility of a statement of the defendant notwithstanding the guilty plea. No other adverse pretrial rulings may be appealed after a plea of guilty, including those relating to the constitutionality of a statute or denying or granting a motion in limine. Review of those issues is waived by a guilty plea. State v. White, 112 Wis.2d 178, 332 N.W.2d 756 (1983); State v. Riekkoff, 112 Wis.2d 119, 332 N.W.2d 744 (1983). The two cases emphasize that there were no "conditional" guilty pleas in Wisconsin and attempts to create them will not be given effect by appellate courts. However, pleas entered on the assumption that they are "conditional" may be subject to withdrawal as not having been voluntarily and intelligently made. This was the result in both White and Riekkoff: the defendant was allowed to withdraw the plea. Thus, in reviewing plea agreements and in accepting pleas generally, the court should be alert for indications that the parties may be trying to create a "conditional" plea.

Limits on sentencing advocacy. Wisconsin cases illustrate the apparent popularity of plea agreements that relate in some way to limitations on sentencing information or advocacy. Prosecutors may agree "not to oppose" a particular sentence or "to remain silent" at sentencing. One danger is that these agreements may conceal relevant information from the sentencing judge. "A plea agreement which does not allow the sentencing court to be appraised of relevant information is void [as] against public policy." State v. Naydihor, 2004 WI 43, Par. 21, 270 Wis.2d 585, 678 N.W.2d 220 (quoting State v. Ferguson, 166 Wis.2d 317, 324, 479 N.W.2d 241 (Ct. App. 1991). Also see the discussion in SM 34 Sentencing Procedures, Standards, And Special Issues, section VII.B. The general rule is clear: The parties cannot agree to limit the information the sentencing judge will consider. Also see, State v. McQuay, 154 Wis.2d 116, 452 N.W.2d 377 (1990).

14. Advising that the court is not bound by the agreement. In State v. Hampton, 2004 WI 107, ¶42, 274 Wis.2d 379, 683 N.W.2d 14, the court held:

> The essence of the mandate is that the court must engage in a colloquy with the defendant on the record at the plea hearing to ascertain whether the defendant understands that the court is not bound by a sentencing recommendation from the prosecutor or any other term of the defendant's plea agreement. The plea colloquy is defective if it fails to produce an exchange on the record that indicates that the defendant understands the court is free to disregard recommendations based on a plea agreement for sentencing.

Question 16 was modified in 2007 to address the Hampton requirement more directly than the previous version did.

[See footnote 15, below, where the issue of the court and plea agreements is discussed in more depth.]

15. Plea Agreements and the Trial Judge. It is the firm policy in Wisconsin that trial judges not involve themselves in plea bargaining. State v. Wolfe, 46 Wis.2d 478, 175 N.W.2d 216 (1970); State v. Erickson, 53 Wis.2d 474, 192 N.W.2d 872 (1972). A 2003 decision of the court of appeals re-emphasized this rule: ". . . we adopt a bright-line rule barring any form of judicial participation in plea negotiations before a plea agreement has been reached." State v. [Corey] Williams, 2003 WI App 116, ¶ 1, 265 Wis.2d 229, 666 N.W2d 58. But see, State v. Hunter, 2005 WI App 5, 278 Wis.2d 419, 692 N.W2d 256: "the Williams rule does not require automatic plea withdrawal whenever a court expresses its view of the strength of the State's case or advises a defendant to consider to the advisability of pursuing a disposition short of trial."

To assure that this policy is carried out, and to assure the integrity of the sentencing function (see Erickson, supra), the judge should make it clear to the defendant that the prosecutor's recommendations about the sentence are not binding on the court and that the court is free to impose the maximum sentence allowed by statute for the offense. See footnote 14, supra.

Advising that a plea agreement will not be followed. Some Wisconsin judges prefer the practice of letting the defendant know if a plea agreement recommends a disposition that the judge finds to be unacceptable and afford the defendant the opportunity to withdraw the guilty plea at that point. (Judges who follow this practice need to modify, or omit, questions 15 and 16.) This is similar to the practice recognized by the ABA Standards For Criminal Justice, which allows the parties to give advance notice of the plea agreement to the judge and allows the judge to indicate whether he or she would concur in the agreement if such concurrence is consistent with the material disclosed in the presentence report. Section 3.3, ABA Standards Relating To The Plea Of Guilty. Also see Rule 11(c) of the Federal Rules Of Criminal Procedure. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has declined to adopt this practice as a statewide requirement. Melby v. State, 70 Wis.2d 368, 234 N.W.2d 634 (1975).

The Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed the issue in State v. [Adrian] Williams, 2000 WI 78, 236 Wis.2d 293, 613 N.W.2d 132. The defendant in this appeal asked the court "to adopt a new rule of procedure, which would require that if a trial judge anticipates exceeding the state's sentence recommendation under a plea agreement, the trial judge must inform the defendant of that fact and allow the defendant to withdraw his or her plea." ¶1. The court denied the request, reaffirming the traditional rule against judicial participation in the plea agreement process. [Also see, In re the Amendment of Rules, 128 Wis.2d 422 (1986), where the court rejected a petition of the Wisconsin Judicial Council that asked the court to adopt rules for a similar process.]

But see, State v. Marinez, 2008 WI App 105, 313 Wis.2d 490, 756 N.W.2d 570, where the court held that a trial judge may indicate that a plea agreement will not be followed and allow the defendant to withdraw the plea. The court reads the Williams decision, supra, as holding that this procedure should not be required and not that the practice is forbidden.

Promises not to charge or to dismiss or reduce pending charges. While the trial judge is clearly not bound by the prosecutor's recommendations as to sentence, promises to drop pending charges or not to bring potential charges are largely beyond the judge's control. Promises not to pursue uncharged offenses are, of course, generally beyond judicial scrutiny. And, prosecutors are allowed great discretion in making decisions about the dismissal or reduction of pending charges as part of plea agreements. See, for example, United States v. Cowan, 524 F.2d 504 (5th Cir. 1975), and United States v. Ammidown, 497 F.2d 617 (D.C. Cir. 1973). However, a trial court retains the authority to refuse to grant a motion to reduce or dismiss charges in limited situations: ". . . (p)rosecutorial discretion to terminate a pending prosecution in Wisconsin is subject to the independent authority of the trial court to grant or refuse a motion to dismiss 'in the public interest.'" State v. Kenyon, 85 Wis.2d 36, 45, 270 N.W.2d 160 (1978).

The rule regarding "refusal to dismiss in the public interest" was reaffirmed in State v. Conger, 2010 WI 56, 325 Wis.2d 664, 797 N.W.2d 341. The court held that "a circuit court must review a plea agreement independently and may, if it appropriately exercises its discretion, reject any plea agreement that does not, in its view, serve the public interest." ¶3. While what constitutes the public interest "is a consideration that is not capable of precise outlines . . . [and] the factors that a court may weigh . . . will vary from case to case. One appropriate factor among many may well be the viewpoint of law enforcement. . ." ¶4 [The primary concern in the case was a plea agreement calling for the reduction of felony charges to misdemeanors.]

For an application of the Kenyon standard, and a conclusion that a trial court erred in refusing to grant a prosecutor's motion to dismiss, see State v. Rivera-Hernandez, Nos. 2018AP311-CR & 2018AP312-CR, unpublished slip op. (WI App Feb. 20, 2019). A similar conclusion was reached in a federal case originating in Wisconsin, In Re United States Of America [U.S. v. Bitsky], 545 F.3d 450 (7th Cir. 2003).

Section 971.315 requires that "[b]efore a court dismisses a criminal charge against a person, the court shall inquire of the district attorney whether he or she has complied with s. 971.095(2)." See footnote 2, supra.

Limits on sentencing advocacy. Certain types of plea agreements may indicate the need to assure that defendants understand what they have bargained for. This is increasingly common in situations where the agreement involves a prosecutor's commitment to make no recommendation as to sentence or "not to oppose" a particular sentence that the defendant may argue for. If the prosecutor promises to make no recommendations but the presentence report recommends a substantial sentence, has the defendant received what he has bargained for? Literally, he has, if the prosecutor has in fact not argued for the substantial sentence, but as a practical matter, the agreement is not being carried out. The trial judge may have a limited role to play in this situation: in determining whether the defendant understands the plea agreement, it may be appropriate to clarify that the prosecutor's agreement regarding sentence binds only the prosecutor and not the court or the person who may prepare the presentence report. See cases cited in footnote 13, above.

16. Read-ins. If the plea agreement includes "read-ins," the description of the agreement must include them. Austin v. State, 49 Wis.2d 727, 183 N.W.2d 56 (1971). The offenses which are "read in" should be identified as accurately as possible to avoid later questions about the scope of the prosecutor's promise not to charge the other offenses. The text regarding read-ins is based on that found in CR-227.

In State v. Sulla, 2016 WI App 46, 369 Wis.2d 405, 880 N.W.2d 659, the defendant sought to withdraw his no contest pleas on the ground that he did not understand the effect a read-in charge could have at sentencing – even though the plea questionnaire and the judge's colloquy addressed the topic. The trial court denied his motion without a hearing; the court of appeals remanded the case for a hearing on Sulla's claim. The supreme court reversed the court of appeals, concluding that no hearing was required and that the record of the plea hearing established that Sulla was fully advised of the effect of the read-ins. Two justices concurred, urging that special care be taken in this situation because, as with Alford pleas, there is a need for additional clarification – citing SM-32A, which addresses no contest and Alford pleas, as a model.

In State v. Straszkowski, 2008 WI 65, 310 Wis.2d 259, 750 N.W.2d 835, the defendant sought to withdraw his guilty plea, claiming he did not know that he was admitting that he committed crimes that were read in. The court held that plea withdrawal was not required and sought to clarify the nature of read-ins:

> ¶5 Although the case law on read-in charges is neither consistent nor clear, a proper reading of the history of Wisconsin's read-in procedure demonstrates that it is not a critical component of a read-in charge that the defendant admit guilt of the charge (or that the defendant's agreement to read in the charge be deemed an admission of guilt) for purposes of sentencing. In sum, no admission of guilt from a defendant for sentencing purposes is required (or should be deemed) for a read-in charge to be considered for sentencing purposes and to be dismissed. To avoid confusion, prosecuting attorneys, defense counsel, and circuit courts should hereafter avoid (as they did in the instant case) the terminology "admit" or "deemed admitted" in referring to or explaining a defendant's agreement to read in a dismissed charge. A circuit court should advise a defendant that it may consider read-in charges when imposing sentence but that the maximum penalty of the charged offense will not be increased; that a circuit court may require a defendant to pay restitution on any read-in charges; and that the State is prohibited from future prosecution of the read-in charge.
> ¶6 Although we hold that no admission of guilt from a defendant is required for a read-in offense to be dismissed and considered for sentencing purposes, this decision does not bar a circuit court from accepting a defendant's admission of guilt of a read-in charge. This decision does not address what plea colloquy duties a circuit court might have with respect to such an admission, the issue the defendant raises. Our narrow holding is that an admission of guilt is not required by our read-in procedure and that the circuit court should avoid the terminology "admit" or "deemed admitted" in referring to or explaining a read-in charge for sentencing purposes except when a defendant does admit the read-in charge.

NOTE: In some cases, the plea agreement may call for an admission to uncharged offenses or dismissed charges as in, for example, sexual assault cases where the intent is to acknowledge all victims.

17. Possibility of probation revocation. Advice on the consequences of probation revocation is not expressly required by Wisconsin case law, but the Committee recommends that it be included to assure that defendants fully understand the potential penalty they are facing. See State v. James, 176 Wis.2d 230, 232 33, 500 N.W.2d 345 (Ct. App. 1993): "in accepting a negotiated plea for probation, the trial court should but is not required to advise the defendant of the potential maximum term to which he or she would be subjected in the event probation is revoked."

18. Coercion. The essence of the "coercion" aspect of a plea's voluntariness is that "[w]hen the defendant is not given a fair or reasonable alternative to choose from, the choice is legally coerced." Rahhal v. State, 52 Wis.2d 144, 151, 187 N.W.2d 800 (1971). The Wisconsin cases have distinguished "self-imposed coercive elements" which do not affect the voluntary nature of the plea: religious beliefs and family desires, Craker v. State, 66 Wis.2d 222, 223 N.W.2d 872 (1974); desire to avoid implicating the defendant's wife, Drake v. State, 45 Wis.2d 226, 172 N.W.2d 664 (1969). Also see State ex rel. White v. Gray, 57 Wis.2d 17, 203 N.W.2d 638 (1973).

In State v. Basley, 2006 WI App 253, 298 Wis.2d 232, 726 N.W.2d 671, the alleged source of coercion was defense counsel's threat to withdraw on the morning of trial. The case was remanded for a hearing on the defendant's motion to withdraw his plea.

19. Understanding the elements of the crime charged. Like establishing the factual basis for the plea (see footnote 26), establishing that the defendant understands the crime charged need not be pursued in any single, set manner. Martinkoski v. State, 51 Wis.2d 237, 186 N.W.2d 302 (1971); State v. Bagnall, 61 Wis.2d 297, 212 N.W.2d 122 (1973). The court must "determine a defendant's understanding of the nature of the charge and establish that the defendant has an awareness of the essential elements of the crime." State v. McKee, 212 Wis.2d 488, 491, 569 N.W.2d 93 (1997), citing State v. Bangert, 131 Wis.2d 246, 389 N.W.2d 12 (1986). McKee rejected the defendant's argument that the trial court was required to specify which aspect of his conduct supported which of the charges against him. If the "essential elements" are identified in the plea colloquy, Bangert does not require that the court define or explain those elements. State v. Trochinski, 2002 WI 56, 253 Wis.2d 38, 644 N.W.2d 891.

In State v. Brown, 2006 WI 100, 293 Wis.2d 594, 716 N.W.2d 906, the court ordered withdrawal of a guilty plea because the trial court did not address the facts or elements of the crimes in a manner sufficient to establish that the defendant understood the charges. The court extensively reviewed Bangert [referred to as "a timeless primer"] and again strongly encouraged courts to follow the full plea acceptance procedures as outlined in SM-32.

Methods. Bangert, supra, identified several methods that can be used to ascertain the defendant's understanding of the nature of the charges:

1) summarize the elements of the crime by reading from the appropriate jury instructions or from the applicable statute;

2) ask defense counsel whether he or she explained the nature of the charge to the defendant and request that counsel summarize the extent of the explanation, including a reiteration of the elements;

3) expressly refer to the record or other evidence of the defendant's understanding established before the plea hearing, including any signed statements.
131 Wis.2d 246, 268.

"Elements" outside the offense definition. The Committee recommends advising on all elements of the crime to which the plea is entered, including elements that are incorporated by reference in the offense definitions. One example is a crime requiring sexual contact – the definition of sexual contact requires that the touching be for a sexual purpose, an element that is sometimes overlooked. See, for example, State v. Nichelson, 220 Wis.2d 214, 582 N.W.2d 460 (1998), where plea withdrawal was ordered because the colloquy did not indicate that the defendant understood the State had to prove that the defendant's purpose in touching the child was his own sexual gratification. The same result was reached in State v. Jipson, 2003 WI App 222, 267 Wis.2d 467, 671 N.W.2d 18. Also see, State v. Bollig, 2000 WI 16, 232 Wis.2d 561, 605 N.W.2d 199: advice on the "purpose" element should have been given but the error was cured by other facts in the record. Also see, State ex rel Patel v. State, 2012 WI App 117, 344 Wis.2d 405, 824 N.W.2d 862 (in a child enticement case based on intent to engage in sexual contact, the purpose of the touching is an element of the crime; however, coram nobis is not the proper remedy for addressing the trial court's failure to identify that element during the plea colloquy).

There are other similar situations:

- attempts – the elements of the intended crime must be included.
- felony murder – the elements of the underlying felony must be included.
- bail jumping based on commission of a new crime – the elements of the new crime must be included,

There is authority to the contrary with respect to at least two crimes. State v. Steele, 2011 WI App 34, 241 Wis.2d 269, 625 N.W.2d 595, involved a plea to burglary with intent to commit a felony. The court of appeals held that the failure to specify the intended felony in the colloquy was not a defect because the nature of the specific felony was not an essential element of the burglary charge. ¶9. State v. Hendricks, 2018 WI 15, 379 Wis.2d 549, 906 N.W.2d 666, involved a plea to child enticement based on the intent to engage in sexual contact. The supreme court held that the failure to specify the elements of sexual contact in the colloquy was not a defect because it was not an essential element of the child enticement charge.

Despite the decisions in Hendricks and Steele holding that plea withdrawal is not required where there is arguably a shortfall in the elements addressed in the colloquy, the Committee concluded that the preferred plea acceptance practice is to include them.

Inconsistencies between the plea questionnaire and the oral colloquy. In State v. Brandt, 226 Wis.2d 610, 594 N.W.2d 759 (1999), the defendant sought to withdraw his plea because a written form that was used was inaccurate as to the elements of the crime. However, the trial court conducted a complete and accurate oral colloquy. The supreme court concluded that "where . . . a circuit court ignored the plea questionnaire in its colloquy concerning the elements of the crimes, the adequacy of that colloquy rises or falls on the circuit court's discussion at the plea hearing. In such cases, the adequacy or deficiency of the plea questionnaire is not at issue because it does not constitute the basis on which the plea is accepted." 226 Wis.2d 610, ¶24.

20. Special issues. The duty to inquire may extend beyond the statutorily defined elements of the offense. So-called penalty enhancers, such as committing a crime while armed with a dangerous weapon (§ 939.63), should be included in the description of the "elements" of the crime. (See footnote 4, supra, for a complete list of penalty enhancers.)

Likewise, especially complicated issues relating to the charge should also be explored. For example, if the defendant is charged as an aider and abettor, the court should make it clear that if the plea is accepted, the defendant stands in exactly the same position as the one who directly committed the crime. See Nash v. Israel, 707 F.2d 298 (7th Cir. 1983). The plea colloquy must address party to crime liability in order to show that the defendant had the necessary understanding of the crime charged. State v. Howell, 2007 WI 75, ¶¶44-51, 301 Wis.2d 350, 734 N.W.2d 48; State v.[James] Brown, 2006 WI 10, ¶55, 293 Wis.2d 594, 716 N.W.2d 906. But see, State v. [Calvin] Brown, 2012 WI App 139, ¶15, 345 Wis.2d 333, 824 N.W.2d 916, holding that advice on party to crime liability would have been superfluous where the facts showed that the defendant directly committed the crime (even though the charge referred to party to crime).

Defenses. Inquiry into defenses which are fairly raised by the facts known to the judge is recommended at this point in the plea acceptance procedure. For example, if, in a battery case, there is evidence that might support a claim of self-defense, the court should inquire to assure that it has at least been considered by the defendant and defense counsel. Case law has discussed this issue in connection with the factual basis requirement. See footnote 26.

In State v. Ravesteijn, 2006 WI App 250, 297 Wis.2d 663, 727 N.W.2d 53, the defendant challenged his guilty plea to kidnapping for ransom on the ground that he was not advised by the court that the penalty could be reduced from a Class B to a Class C felony if the victim was released without permanent physical injury. The court of appeals apparently holds that the plea was valid, but:

> ¶31. . . . . Ravesteijn's unknowing waiver of the opportunity to reduce the charge to a Class C felony and thereby reduce his potential punishment resulted in manifest injustice. Resentencing is all that is necessary to correct the injustice done here. Therefore the sentence imposed pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 940.31(2)(a), a Class B felony, is set aside and vacated. The cause is remanded for a determination of whether Ravesteijn is guilty of a Class B or Class C felony.

In State v. Lackershire, 2007 WI 74, 288 Wis.2d 609, 707 N.W.2d 891, the court held there was a defect in establishing a factual basis for a guilty plea to second degree sexual assault of a child, where the defendant claimed to be the victim of a sexual assault by the "child." The court held that being a victim constitutes a defense and that the trial court should have explored that issue as part of the factual basis inquiry: ". . . If the defendant was raped, the act of having sexual intercourse with a child does not constitute a crime. § 948.01(6)." ¶29. The court relied on State v. Olson, 2000 WI App. 158, 238 Wis.2d 74, 616 N.W.2d 144, to conclude that the entire definition of sexual intercourse in § 948.01(6) is modified by the phrase "by the defendant or upon the defendant's instruction." Thus, sexual intercourse resulting from being forced to engage in it by the other party is not "by the defendant or upon the defendant's instruction."

21. Equivocal or vague responses. If the defendant denies an element of the crime, or equivocates about its existence, a careful inquiry must be made to assure that the defendant actually wants to plead guilty to that crime. The denial or vague response may be an indication that the defendant is not certain about admitting guilt. Responses of that nature should not be considered the equivalent of an express intention to plead no contest or to enter an Alford plea. See the discussion in SM 32A regarding the special considerations in accepting no contest and Alford pleas.

If, after further inquiry, the defendant persists in denying an essential element, the court should not accept the guilty plea (unless an Alford plea is expressly being pursued). Johnson v. State, 53 Wis.2d 787, 193 N.W.2d 659 (1972); State v. Stuart, 50 Wis.2d 66, 183 N.W.2d 155 (1971).

22. The material in brackets was added in 1995 in part as a response to the decision in State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995), see footnote 7, supra.

The Committee does not encourage or recommend the routine acceptance of Alford or no contest pleas. The alternatives provided are intended to assure that, if the trial court decides to accept those pleas, the defendant clearly understands the consequences and that a complete record is made of that understanding.

23. Waiver of trial-related rights. State v. Bangert, 131 Wis. 2d 246, 389 N.W.2d 12 (1986), reaffirmed the requirement that the trial court make a record of the defendant's understanding of the constitutional rights being waived by the plea. The court also stated:

> Henceforth, we will also require as a function of our supervisory powers that state courts at the plea hearing follow the provisions set forth in Wis JI-Criminal SM-32 (1985), Part V, Waiver of > Constitutional Rights, or specifically refer to some portion of the record or communication between defense counsel and defendant which affirmatively exhibits defendant's knowledge of the constitutional rights he will be waiving. The court must then as before, ascertain whether the defendant understands he will be waiving certain constitutional rights by virtue of his guilty or no contest plea. 131 Wis.2d 246, 271 72.

[NOTE: What Bangert refers to as "Part V" is numbered "VI." in this version.]

In State v. Pegeese, 2019 WI 60, 387 Wis.2d 119, 928 N.W.2d 590, the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that courts are not required to address each constitutional right that is waived:

¶4 . . . We further decline to exercise our superintending authority to impose a specific requirement that at a plea hearing circuit courts must individually recite and specifically address each constitutional right being waived and then otherwise verify the defendant's understanding of each constitutional right being waived.

However, the decision refers to SM-32 in footnote 8 at ¶41:

8. Though today we do not require circuit courts to recite any particular magic words when conducting a plea colloquy, circuit courts should be mindful of the suggested plea colloquy in Wis JI–Criminal SM-32 (2007). See Bangert, 131 Wis. 2d at 268 (stating that circuit courts can use Wis JI–Criminal SM-32 (1985) as one method of fulfilling the requirements under Bangert).

There must be assurance that the defendant is personally waiving trial-related constitutional rights, even if a written plea acceptance form is used. See State v. Moederndorfer, 141 Wis.2d 823, 416 N.W.2d 627 (Ct. App. 1987) and State v. Hansen, 168 Wis.2d 749, 485 N.W.2d 74 (Ct. App. 1992). If the defendant attempts to enter a no contest plea but refuses to waive any constitutional rights, the plea should not be accepted. See State v. Minniecheske, 127 Wis.2d 234, 378 N.W.2d 283 (1985).

The material in this section was revised in 2019 to make it more consistent and understandable. No change in substance was intended.

24. Trial courts may wish to change the wording of the first part of question 23 for Alford pleas. The following is suggested:

> "By entering an Alford plea, you are conceding that the State has strong evidence that you committed the crime and, thus, ..."

25. Entry of the plea. Note that SM-32 advises that the plea be "entered" at this point, but not "accepted." The distinction is an important one, because jeopardy attaches upon the acceptance of the plea. State v. Comstock, 168 Wis.2d 915, 947, 485 N.W.2d 354 (1992). The procedures set forth to this point are intended to assure that the plea is voluntarily and understandingly made. Before formally accepting the plea, the court must also be satisfied that a factual basis exists.

26. Factual Basis. In Ernst v. State, 43 Wis.2d 661, 170 N.W.2d 713 (1969), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the then-existing procedures of Rule 11 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure were required in state courts as a matter of federal constitutional law, citing Boykin v. Alabama, 395 U.S. 238 (1969). [It is now clear that Rule 11 procedures are not constitutionally required in state practice. State v. Bangert, supra, footnote 20, at 259 60.] The text of what is now Rule 11(b)(3) is the source of the "factual basis for the plea" requirement: "Before entering judgment on a guilty plea, the court must determine that there is a factual basis for the plea."

The statutory requirement in Wisconsin is that the court "make such inquiry as satisfies it that the defendant in fact committed the crime charged." Section 971.08(1)(b). It may be helpful to view the factual basis as requiring that facts be presented to support a finding that each element of the crime is present.

Wisconsin cases have referred to the purpose of the factual basis as "determining whether the facts, if proved, constitute the offense charged and whether the defendant's conduct does not amount to a defense." Edwards v. State, 51 Wis.2d 231, 236, 186 N.W.2d 193 (1971). In State v. Black, 2001 WI 31, 242 Wis.2d 126, 624 N.W.2d 363, the court held that:

> . . . a factual basis for a plea exists if an inculpatory inference can be drawn from the complaint or facts admitted to by the defendant even though it may conflict with an exculpatory inference elsewhere in the record and the defendant later maintains that the exculpatory inference is the correct one. ¶16

Two justices dissented, citing the earlier cases like Edwards for the "does not constitute a defense" rule. The majority apparently accepted this as a general rule, but concluded it did not apply on the facts of the Black case.

In State v. Lackershire, 2007 WI 74, 288 Wis.2d 609, 707 N.W.2d 891, the court held there was a defect in establishing a factual basis for a guilty plea to second degree sexual assault of a child, where the defendant claimed to be the victim of a sexual assault by the "child." The court held that being a victim constitutes a defense and that the trial court should have explored that issue as part of the factual basis inquiry. See the discussion in footnote 20, supra.

The Committee recommends that the trial court inquire into defenses that are fairly raised by the facts relied on to establish the factual basis for the plea.

27. Factual Basis for a Related Crime. In most cases, a factual basis is established for the crime to which the plea is entered. Sometimes, usually in the context of a plea bargain, a plea is offered to a crime that does not closely match the conduct which the factual basis establishes. For example, a defendant may plead guilty to a disorderly conduct charge in a case originally charged as theft or burglary. In the Committee's judgment, it should be sufficient if a factual basis is shown for a more serious offense that is related to the defendant's conduct. This should be the case even if a true greater-and-lesser included offense relationship does not exist. A flexible approach is especially important in light of the strict "statutory elements" test used to analyze lesser included offenses. See, for example, Randolph v. State, 83 Wis.2d 663, 266 N.W.2d 334 (1978). Also see, SM-6, Jury Instructions On Lesser Included Offenses.

This conclusion is arguably inconsistent with part of the description of the factual basis requirement in Ernst v. State, 43 Wis.2d 661, 170 N.W.2d 713 (1969). Ernst quoted Federal Rule 11 and McCarthy v. United States, 394 U.S. 459 (1969), in stating that the record must show that the conduct which the defendant admits, ". . . constitutes the offense charged in the indictment or information, or an offense included therein to which the defendant is pleading guilty." (Emphasis added.) Taken literally, this would mean, for example, that on a negotiated plea of guilty to disorderly conduct arising out of theft, the court could not accept the plea since disorderly conduct is not a lesser included offense of theft. It is the opinion of the Committee, however, that the Wisconsin Supreme Court did not intend to so confine or narrow guilty plea practice and that the requirements of Ernst are met if the trial court satisfies itself that the plea is voluntarily and understandingly made and that a factual basis is shown for either the offense to which the plea is offered or to a more serious charge reasonably related to the defendant's conduct. Two decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals reach different results on this issue.

In State v. Harrell, 182 Wis.2d 408, 513 N.W.2d 676 (Ct. App. 1994), the defendant was charged with three counts of first degree sexual assault of a child; another count was added after the preliminary examination. A plea agreement was reached whereby the defendant entered a no contest plea to one count of second degree sexual assault of a child and one count of third degree sexual assault. The parties agreed to use the complaint as the factual basis. The defendant moved to withdraw his plea after sentencing, claiming that he was not advised he was waiving his right to a unanimous jury and that no factual basis was established for the third degree sexual assault offense because there was no showing of "without consent." The court of appeals rejected both claims. As to the factual basis issue, the court noted that more flexibility is allowed when there is a plea bargain. It is enough if a factual basis is shown for the offense to which the plea is entered or for a more serious offense reasonably related to that offense. In a footnote, the court indicated its decision "adopts in part the reasoning of the Wisconsin Jury Instruction Committee," citing SM 32. 182 Wis.2d 408, 418.

In State v. Harrington, 181 Wis.2d 985, 512 N.W.2d 261 (Ct. App. 1994), the defendant was charged with burglary and agreed to plead no contest to felony theft. The probable cause statement in the complaint was not changed. The parties stipulated that the complaint furnished a factual basis for the plea and the defendant was found guilty of felony theft. On appeal, the court found that the complaint furnished a factual basis for burglary but not for felony theft because there were no facts regarding the value of the stolen property. The court said that the state pointed to no authority for the proposition that a factual basis for the more serious offense is sufficient and granted relief to the defendant. SM 32 was not mentioned. The relief granted was to remand for sentencing on misdemeanor theft – not withdrawal of the plea, citing State v. White, 85 Wis.2d 485, 271 N.W.2d 97 (1978).

Harrell and Harrington flatly contradict one another. The conflict was not reviewed: the petition to review in Harrell was dismissed as untimely; no petition to review was filed in Harrington. No published decision has resolved this conflict although two decisions have appeared to accept the Harrell rule. In State v. Smith, 202 Wis.2d 21, 549 N.W.2d 232 (1996), the court held that an Alford plea could not be accepted to a crime that it was "legally impossible" for him to commit. "Strong proof of guilt" could not be found in that situation because the crime to which the plea was entered required that the victim be under the age of 16 and it was undisputed that the victim was 16 years old. The court acknowledged the Harrell decision, but found it inapplicable in this situation because there could not be "strong proof" of the age element of the crime. In State v. West, 214 Wis.2d 468, 571 N.W.2d 196 (Ct. App. 1997), the court of appeals declined to apply Harrell because the crime to which the plea was offered and the crime for which a factual basis was offered had the same penalty. Thus, the court held, there was no factual basis for the crime of conviction or for a more serious offense.

In light of this history, the Committee reaffirms its conclusion that it should be sufficient "that a factual basis is shown for either the offense to which the plea is offered or to a more serious charge reasonably related to the defendant's conduct." Trial judges should be cautious of offers to "stipulate to the complaint" as the factual basis, where the plea is to a different offense than the one charged in the complaint.

28. Alford pleas – "strong evidence of guilt." To accept an Alford plea, the court must find that the evidence the State would offer at trial constitutes "strong proof of guilt." State v. Garcia, 192 Wis. 2d 845, 859 60, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995). Also see, State v. Johnson, 105 Wis.2d 657, 663, 314 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1991). "The requirement of a higher level of proof in Alford pleas is necessitated by the fact that the evidence has to be strong enough to overcome a defendant's 'protestations' of innocence." State v. Smith, 202 Wis.2d 21, 27, 549 N.W.2d 232 (1996). "'Strong proof of guilt' is not the equivalent of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, but it is 'clearly greater than what is needed to meet the factual basis requirement under a guilty plea.'" State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 645, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998), citing State v. Smith, supra.

The Alford decision used the phrase "strong evidence of guilt," while the Wisconsin decisions tend to use "strong proof of guilt." The Committee does not believe there is a significant difference between "evidence" and "proof" in this context; the term "strong evidence of guilt" is used in the Special Material.

29. Factual basis – methods. Edwards v. State, 51 Wis.2d 231, 186 N.W.2d 193 (1971); Morones v. State, 61 Wis.2d 544, 213 N.W.2d 31 (1972). Accepted methods are listed in the text accompanying notes 31 34. The same rule applies to Alford pleas, which do not require any specific method for establishing a factual basis showing strong proof of guilt. State v. Nash, 2020 WI 85, ¶¶36-39, 47-49, 394 Wis.2d 238, 951 N.W.2d 404.

Some courts follow a practice of personally addressing defendants to establish the factual basis, or of asking defendants if they agree with the facts established by the state. It may not be possible to require defendants to incriminate themselves, even though the guilty plea is being entered. In a different context, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the privilege against self-incrimination survives a plea of guilty and continues at least until sentencing. State v. McConnohie, 121 Wis.2d 57, 358 N.W.2d 256 (1984). Also see, Mitchell v. U.S., 526 U.S. 314 (1999): neither a guilty plea nor making statements at the plea colloquy waive the 5th Amendment privilege.

The relationship between determining the factual basis and the defendant's agreement that a factual basis exists was considered in State v. Thomas, 2000 WI 13, 232 Wis.2d 714, 605 N.W.2d 836. The court held that "the defendant need not admit to the factual basis in his or her own words; the defense counsel's statements suffice." 232 Wis.2d 714, ¶18. "All that is required is for the factual basis to be developed on the record – several sources can supply the facts." 232 Wis.2d 714, ¶20. "[A] judge may establish the factual basis as he or she sees fit, as long as the judge guarantees that the defendant is aware of the elements of the crime, and the defendant's conduct meets those elements." 232 Wis.2d 714,¶22.

Not only is a full confession not required, a guilty plea may be accepted even if the defendant maintains innocence. North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25 (1970); State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995). See footnote 24, supra. [For a discussion of the acceptance and effects of an "Alford plea, see SM 32A, No Contest And Alford Pleas. SM 32A emphasizes that before an Alford plea is accepted, the judge take care to insure that there is strong evidence of guilt and that the defendant clearly wants to plead guilty despite his claim of innocence, with full understanding of the charge, of its consequences, and with the advice of competent counsel.]

30. Edwards, supra, 51 Wis.2d 231, 236.

31. Edwards, Morones, supra. But see Christian v. State, 54 Wis.2d 447, 195 N.W.2d 470 (1972), holding, in absence of stipulation of parties, that while the record of the preliminary did show the critical facts of the case, alone it would not have been enough to establish factual basis for the plea.

32. Edwards, supra; Spinella v. State, 85 Wis.2d 494, 271 N.W.2d 91 (1978).

33. Bressette v. State, 54 Wis.2d 232, 194 N.W.2d 635 (1972); State v. Jackson, 69 Wis.2d 266, 230

N.W.2d 832 (1975); and Levesque v. State, 63 Wis.2d 412, 217 N.W.2d 317 (1974).

34. Craker v. State, 66 Wis.2d 222, 223 N.W.2d 872 (1974).

35. Even if there is a stipulation to the factual basis, the court must find that facts are established which are sufficient to support all the required elements of the crime.

36. Repeater provisions. Repeater provisions can be an issue at three different stages of the plea acceptance procedure: 1) when the maximum penalty for the offense is identified – see footnote 3, supra, recommending that "all applicable penalty enhancers should be included in the description of the maximum penalty, such as repeater allegations under § 939.62. . ."; 2) when the defendant's understanding of the crime charged is determined – see footnote 19, supra, advising that this duty may extend beyond the statutorily defined elements of the offense to things like penalty enhancers; and, 3) when the factual basis for the plea is established – question 31 was added to meet this need, not only to assure the validity of the plea but also to provide the proof of repeater status required before sentencing.

Adding a question like number 31 was suggested by the court of appeals in State v. Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d 251, 261, 513 N.W.2d 631 (Ct. App. 1994):

One simple and direct question to the defendant from either the prosecutor or the trial judge asking whether the defendant admits to the repeater allegation will, in most cases, resolve the issue. We suggest that trial judges include this question in their colloquy with the defendant at the plea hearing (if there is one) or, otherwise, at the time of sentencing.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has given similar advice in a case involving sentencing as a repeater after a jury trial: "The trial court may ask the defendant the direct question while observing the defendant's criminal record before him whether the defendant was convicted on a particular date of a specific crime. . . ." State v. Farr, 119 Wis.2d 651, 659, 350 N.W.2d 640 (1984).

Question 31 is modeled after the one suggested in Farr.

37. In the Committee's judgment, it should be sufficient if a factual basis is shown for a more serious offense that is related to the defendant's conduct. See the discussion in footnote 27, supra.

38. It is at this point that the plea is formally accepted. This is when jeopardy attaches. See State v. Comstock, discussed in footnote 25, supra.

39. In the usual case, the court states that the defendant is adjudged convicted immediately after the finding of guilty is made. However, practices are common which stop short of a finding of guilt or entry of a judgment of conviction. The court should accept the plea but defer making a finding of guilt. Section 961.47, Conditional Discharge for Possession as First Offense, authorizes this sort of procedure. Persons found guilty of possession of a controlled substance under § 961.41(3g)(b), and who have not previously been convicted of a crime involving controlled substances, are eligible for special disposition under this section. No judgment of conviction is entered, and the defendant avoids a criminal conviction if probation is successfully completed. (Section 961.47 states that a "judgment of guilt" is not entered. The Committee believes "judgment of guilt" is the equivalent of "judgment of conviction.")

SM-32A NO CONTEST AND ALFORD PLEAS

CONTENTS

I. The Pleas Compared

Guilty pleas are recognized as substitutes for the adjudication of guilt by trial for two reasons: the plea constitutes a waiver of trial by the accused (sometimes characterized as a consent to the entry of judgment); and the plea constitutes an express admission that the defendant committed the act charged. The no contest plea and the Alford plea both lack an express admission of guilt. With a no contest plea, the defendant refuses to admit guilt (or admits guilt solely for the purposes of the instant criminal proceeding). With an Alford plea, the defendant expressly maintains innocence while choosing to plead guilty.

The legitimacy of both pleas has been recognized by the courts. But special caution is required of the trial judge who considers accepting either a no contest or an Alford plea. It must be assured that the defendant knows what he or she is doing and that the apparent conflict between the refusal to admit guilt and the consent to entry of judgment is expressed on the record and acknowledged.

The terms "no contest plea" and "Alford plea" are sometimes used interchangeably. However, the Alford case clearly dealt with a guilty plea, not a plea of no contest, so there are two different entities. An Alford plea goes beyond a no contest plea in the sense that the former involves an outright claim of innocence while the latter involves something less than an express admission of guilt. [Cited with approval in State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 632, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998).]

While there may be a conceptual difference between the two pleas, for purposes of accepting the pleas, any such difference "is of no constitutional significance . . ., for the constitution is concerned with practical consequences, not the formal categorizations of state law." North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 37 (1970). [For reference to a complete hybrid, a "no contest plea with a claim of innocence," see Estate of Safran, 102 Wis.2d 79, 306 N.W.2d 27 (1981).]

II. Plea Of No Contest

A. Description

Historically labeled "nolo contendere," the correct title for this plea is now "no contest." The essential characteristics of the no contest plea are:

1. when accepted by the court it constitutes an admission of guilt for the purposes of the case which supports a judgment of conviction and is in that respect equivalent to a plea of guilty; and
2. the plea cannot be used collaterally against the defendant, as, for example, in a later civil action.

Lee v. State Board of Dental Examiners, 29 Wis.2d 330, 334, 139 N.W.2d 61 (1966).

B. Effect Of A No Contest Plea

1. A no contest plea supports a fully effective criminal conviction

Whatever the distinction between a no contest plea and a guilty plea, it does not carry over to the conviction. "A judgment of conviction based on a plea of nolo contendere is a conviction which contains all the consequences of a conviction based on a plea of guilty or a verdict of guilty. There is no difference in the nature, character or force of a judgment of conviction depending upon the nature of the underlying plea." Lee, supra, 29 Wis.2d 330, 335. But see § 908.03(22) discussed below.

Thus, a conviction following a no contest plea is a full-blown criminal conviction for all purposes, such as later invocation of repeater statutes (State v. Suick, 195 Wis. 175, 217 N.W. 743 (1928); State v. Brozosky, 197 Wis. 446, 222 N.W. 311 (1928)) and revocation of a professional license (State v. Lee, supra).

2. Collateral use of a no contest plea is prohibited

The usual distinction between a guilty plea and a no contest plea is that a guilty plea constitutes an express admission of guilt which can be used against the defendant in collateral proceedings while a no contest plea is an admission only for the purposes of the criminal case and cannot be collaterally used. This distinction is recognized and preserved in the Wisconsin Rules of Evidence.

Section 904.10 forbids the later use of no contest pleas, offers to plead no contest, and statements made in connection with those pleas or offers:

> 904.10 Offer to plead guilty; no contest; withdrawn plea of guilty. Evidence of a plea of guilty, later withdrawn, or a plea of no contest, or of an offer to the court or prosecuting attorney to plead guilty or no contest to the crime charged or any other crime, or in civil forfeiture actions, is not admissible in any civil or criminal proceeding against the person who made the plea or offer or one liable for the person's conduct. Evidence of statements made in court or to the prosecuting attorney in connection with any of the foregoing pleas or offers is not admissible.

Section 908.03(22) recognizes that the hearsay rule does not exclude evidence of criminal judgments offered to prove facts essential to the judgment but provides an exception for judgments of conviction based on no contest pleas:

> 908.03 Hearsay exceptions; availability of declarant immaterial. The following are not excluded by the hearsay rule, even though the declarant is available as a witness:
> . . . .
> (22) Judgment of previous conviction. Evidence of a final judgment, entered after a trial or upon a plea of guilty, but not upon a plea of no contest, adjudging a person guilty of a felony as defined in §§ 939.60 and 939.62(3)(b), to prove any fact essential to sustain the judgment, but not including, when offered by the state in a criminal prosecution for purposes other than impeachment, judgments against person other than the accused. The pendency of an appeal may be shown but does not affect admissibility.

Evidence of criminal judgments not based on no contest pleas may be inadmissible in Wisconsin on other-than-hearsay grounds. See Estate of Safran, 102 Wis.2d 79, 306 N.W.2d 27 (1981).

Thus, the defendant whose no contest plea is accepted is assured that the plea, statements made in connection with it, and the judgment entered upon it will all be inadmissible in later civil actions or other collateral proceedings. The conviction, however, is admissible to prove the fact of conviction itself. See discussion above.

C. Acceptance Procedures For No Contest Pleas

1. Guilty plea procedures apply

The same acceptance procedures are required for pleas of no contest as are required for guilty pleas. Section 971.08 applies to both types of pleas, requiring personal inquiry of the defendant to determine that the plea is made voluntarily and supported by a factual basis.

Wisconsin cases also tend to lump both pleas together when discussing acceptance procedures and the standards for withdrawing a plea. See, for example, State v. Galvan, 40 Wis.2d 679, 162 N.W.2d 622 (1968); State v. Schill, 93 Wis.2d 361, 286 N.W.2d 836 (1980); State v. Lee, 88 Wis.2d 239, 276 N.W.2d 268 (1979). If a no contest plea is accompanied by a refusal to answer the questions constituting the plea acceptance colloquy and a refusal to waive trial related rights, the plea should not be accepted. See State v. Minniecheske, 127 Wis.2d 234, 378 N.W.2d 283 (1985).

2. The court should assure that the defendant understands the consequences of the plea

It appears that some defendants view the no contest plea as an indication of lesser culpability than a plea of guilty. [See State v. Morse, 2005 WI App 223, ¶11, 287 Wis.2d 369, 706 N.W.2d 152, where the defendant sought to withdraw a no contest plea because the trial court failed to "dispel his misconception that he would receive a lesser sentence for pleading no contest." The motion was denied.] Trial courts accepting no contest pleas may be well advised to point out to the defendant that for purposes of the criminal case, the no contest plea is the basis for a criminal conviction that carries the full weight and force of a conviction resulting from a guilty plea or a jury finding of guilt. The conviction may be the basis for later criminal repeater charges or for collateral consequences such as revocation of professional license. See discussion above.

D. Court Authority To Reject No Contest Pleas

1. Court approval is required

Section 971.06 provides that a defendant may enter a no contest plea "subject to the approval of the court." This is consistent with Wisconsin case law, which has characterized the no contest plea as one which the defendant "may not interpose as a matter of right. It is received at the discretion of the court." State v. Suick, 195 Wis. 175, 177, 217 N.W. 743 (1928). Also see State v. Erickson, 53 Wis.2d 474, 476, 192 N.W.2d 872 (1972), where the court recognized the trial court's authority to refuse to accept a no contest plea because the offense was a felony with a possibility of imprisonment. At common law, there was apparently some dispute over the propriety of a no contest plea in cases involving imprisonment. There is now no doubt about the plea's suitability for even the most serious felonies. See State v. Suick, 195 Wis. 175, 217 N.W. 743 (1928), and Hudson v. United States, 272 U.S. 451 (1926).

2. Guides to the exercise of discretion

Neither statutes nor case law identify the factors that are to guide the judge's exercise of discretion in deciding whether to receive a no contest plea. The practice in the state appears to vary widely. Some courts accept no contest pleas routinely without inquiring into the reasons for the plea. Other courts discourage no contest pleas by requiring that a rational explanation support the offer of the plea. Some courts routinely accept the pleas in misdemeanors but require a reason in felonies.

Section 971.06(1)(c) recognizes that a defendant may plead no contest "subject to the approval of the court." It is likely that the court "approval" referred to in the statute requires an exercise of discretion which weighs the plea in light of the public interest and the interests of justice. As with any exercise of discretion, this requires the court to consider proper factors, reach a conclusion, and explain the basis for the conclusion.

The specific factors that may be considered cannot be exhaustively listed and are likely to depend on the facts and circumstances of each case. One consideration may be whether the preference for a no contest plea is based solely on a factual dispute that is relevant only to possible future civil litigation and not to the criminal charge (e.g., the exact value of stolen property). Another consideration may be whether the no contest plea might affect the defendant's eligibility for postconviction treatment programs. Some programs for sex offenders, for example, require a complete admission of guilt, evidenced by a guilty plea, as a precondition for acceptance into the treatment program. See, for example, State v. Carrizales, 191 Wis.2d 85, 528 N.W.2d 29 (Ct. App. 1995), where a defendant who had entered a no contest plea was terminated from a sex offender treatment program because he would not admit committing the sexual assault upon which his conviction was based. Also see State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998) discussed below, making the same point with respect to Alford pleas.

Section 971.095(2) requires the district attorney to confer with victims "concerning the prosecution of the case and the possible outcomes of the prosecution, including potential plea agreements and sentencing recommendations." The statute does not specify whether the victim's interest should influence the decision to accept a no contest plea.

Statements made in the context of the no contest pleas, the plea itself, and the judgment resulting from the plea are all inadmissible in later civil actions. §§ 904.10, 908.03(22). By contrast, the guilty plea is admissible in later civil actions, and the criminal judgment based on a guilty plea is not excluded by the hearsay rule. § 908.03(22).

III. The Alford Plea

A. Description

In North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25 (1970), the U.S. Supreme Court recognized the constitutionality of accepting a guilty plea even though the defendant maintains innocence. Alford's guilty plea to second degree murder allowed him to escape the death penalty that might have been imposed if he had been convicted of first degree murder after a trial. His plea was found to be constitutional because the record showed he knew what he was doing and that there was a strong factual basis for the plea.

The term "Alford plea" is now used to identify the situation where defendants plead guilty but maintain their innocence. The legitimacy of the plea in Wisconsin was first recognized in State v. Johnson, 105 Wis.2d 657, 314 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1981). In State

v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed that "the circuit courts of Wisconsin may, in their discretion, accept Alford pleas." The court noted that the plea gives the defendant a valuable option:

> A defendant may wish to plead guilty yet publicly maintain his innocence to avoid ridicule or embarrassment, such as where the charge is sexual assault of children. . . . Other times he might plead guilty while protesting his innocence because he does not think the jury will believe his claim of self-defense or accident.
> 192 Wis.2d 845, 857.

The court concluded that Alford pleas are acceptable as long as the defendant fully understands the consequences and the record shows the "strong evidence of guilt" that must support the plea. [See the discussion in section C., below.]

B. Effect

While statutes and case law address the effect of a no contest plea, there is no statutory authority describing the effect of the Alford plea. It seems logical to treat both pleas the same way.

1. An Alford plea supports a fully effective criminal conviction

There is no doubt that an Alford plea supports a fully effective criminal judgment. This is especially clear since a true Alford plea is a plea of guilty. [Cited with approval in State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, footnote 9, 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998).] Thus, the arguments for treating differently a conviction following a no contest plea (which have been rejected in the no contest situation) do not even apply to an Alford plea.

2. What rules apply to the collateral use of an Alford plea?

If a defendant enters a true Alford plea, that is, a guilty plea joined with a claim of innocence, what limits are there on the collateral use of the resulting conviction? It could be argued that because the plea is technically one of "guilty," that the special rules dealing with no contest pleas do not apply.

Apart from the technical arguments that could be made, it appears to be the better practice to treat an Alford plea as a no contest plea for collateral purposes. The basis for treating a no contest plea differently than a guilty plea is the defendant's refusal to make a full admission of guilt. In an Alford plea, the defendant not only refuses to make a full admission of guilt but also expressly claims innocence. It would be illogical to restrict the collateral use of the no contest conviction, where there has been a limited admission of guilt, while placing no limits on the Alford conviction, where a claim of innocence has been made. The Wisconsin Supreme Court cited the committee's conclusion on this issue with approval in State v. Nash, 2020 WI 85, ¶34, 394 Wis. 2d 238, 951 N.W.2d 404.

Thus, the Alford plea conviction should be treated as follows:

1) the conviction is complete and unequivocal; it can be the basis for later repeater charges, suspension of a professional license, etc.
2) the plea is not an admission for collateral purposes;
3) statements made in connection with the plea are not admissible for collateral purposes; and
4) the conviction should be treated the same as a conviction following a no contest plea under sec. 908.03(22).

C. Acceptance Procedures

1. Guilty plea procedures apply

The rule for accepting Alford pleas is that regular guilty plea acceptance procedures apply, but special care must be taken. (See discussion below.)

The fact that an Alford plea is being submitted ought to be disclosed to the court as early as possible and usually is so disclosed. However, in a regular guilty plea case, the defendant may sometimes indicate hesitation about admitting guilt or may make statements that sound like claims of innocence. The court should fully explore such hesitation or statements, to assure that the defendant in fact understands what he or she is doing. A regular guilty plea should not be converted into an Alford plea without an express, unequivocal decision to that effect on the part of the defendant.

2. Special care is required

While Alford pleas are constitutionally acceptable and regular guilty plea procedures may be used, special care must be taken in two respects:

– it must be clear that the defendant fully understands the charge and the effect of the plea; and – there must be strong evidence of guilt.

a. The defendant's understanding

Alford held that a guilty plea may be accepted in the absence of an express admission of guilt if the defendant "voluntarily, knowingly, and understandingly consent[s] to the imposition of a prison sentence . . . [and] intelligently concludes that his interests require entry of a guilty plea." 400 U.S. 25, 37. The regular guilty plea acceptance procedures are already designed to assure that any guilty plea is voluntarily and intelligently made. However, in the Alford situation, it is recommended that the court address special questions to defendants to assure that they understand that if the plea is accepted, an unequivocal criminal judgment will be entered – a judgment that will allow imposition of the same penalties that could follow a regular guilty plea.

The court should also ask defense counsel to make a statement on the record to show that the nature and consequences of the Alford plea were thoroughly discussed with the defendant and what the defendant's understanding of that discussion was.

In State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995), the court cited the preceding advice with approval:

> Competent counsel can easily explain the Alford plea. Moreover, defendants in Wisconsin are protected by procedural safeguards of sec. 971.08, Stats., and by material developed for the circuit courts by the Wisconsin Jury Instructions Committee specifically for Alford pleas. . . . [T]he Committee materials direct circuit judges to ask defense counsel on the record whether counsel has discussed the consequences of the plea with the defendant and if so, whether the defendant has expressed his understanding of those consequences.
> 192 Wis.2d 845, 858.

Further, the court added the following in a footnote:

> Although not required to make the plea acceptable, including a definition of an Alford plea on the guilty plea questionnaire may help to further document the defendant's understanding of the plea. We invite the Wisconsin Jury Instruction Committee to consider making such a change on the form.
> 192 Wis.2d 845, 860, at note 6.

The following is included in the text of SM-32, Accepting A Plea of Guilty, to address these concerns:

> IF THE DEFENDANT ANSWERS "NO CONTEST" OR "ALFORD," THE COURT SHOULD ADDRESS THE DEFENDANT AND DEFENSE COUNSEL AS FOLLOWS:

["A plea of no contest means that you do not contest the state's ability to prove the facts necessary to constitute the crime."]

["An Alford plea is a guilty plea accompanied by a claim of innocence."]

["Do you understand that for the purposes of this proceeding, (a plea of no contest) (an Alford plea) will have the same effect as a plea of guilty? And that, if accepted, it will result in a conviction that carries the same character and force as a conviction resulting from a plea of guilty?"]

["Counsel, have you discussed the consequences of the plea with the defendant and do you believe the defendant understands them?"]

b. "Strong evidence of guilt"

For all guilty pleas, a "factual basis" for the plea must be established. A precise evidentiary burden has never been assigned to "factual basis." The factual basis should be sufficient to satisfy the court that the defendant in fact committed the crime to which the plea is entered. § 971.08(1)(b). What it takes to so satisfy the judge will vary depending on the circumstances of each case, so the lack of a precise evidentiary standard is understandable.

With an Alford plea, the court must be satisfied that there is "strong evidence of actual guilt." North Carolina v. Alford, 400 U.S. 25, 37 (1970). This standard was adopted in Wisconsin in State v. Johnson, 105 Wis.2d 657, 663-664, 314 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1981), (referring to "strong proof of guilt"). This standard was affirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 858, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995): ". . . the plea is acceptable where the trial court determines that strong proof guilt has been shown."

The Supreme Court has also elaborated on the nature of and reasons for this requirement. "'Strong proof of guilt' is not the equivalent of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, but it is 'clearly greater than what is needed to meet the factual basis requirement under a guilty plea.'" State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615, 645, 579 N.W.2d 698, quoting State v. Smith, 202 Wis.2d 21, 27, 549 N.W.2d 232 (1996), and State v. Spears, 147 Wis.2d 429, 435, 433 N.W.2d 595 (Ct. App. 1988). For a traditional guilty plea, the record must show that the conduct the defendant admits constitutes the offense charged or an included offense to which the defendant pleads guilty. Because a defendant who enters an Alford plea expressly claims to be innocent, the record must reflect a "strong proof of guilt" to "overcome" or "substantially negate" the defendant's "protestations of innocence." Warren, 219 Wis.2d at 645 & n.17; Smith, 202 Wis.2d at 27; Johnson, 105 Wis.2d at 663, 664; Alford, 400 U.S. at 37-38. "We require that the record reflect a strong proof of guilt not to convince the defendant of his or her guilt; rather, it is constitutionally required to ensure that the defendant is knowingly, intelligently, and voluntarily entering a plea that will result in a judgment of conviction, despite the defendant's claims of innocence." State v. Nash, 2020 WI 85, ¶35, 394 Wis. 2d 238, 951 N.W.2d 404, citing Garcia, 192 Wis. 2d at 857-60.

Although an Alford plea requires a more substantial factual basis than a traditional guilty plea, a court need not use a particular method or insist on the presentation of specific evidence (such as live testimony, oral statements of relevant witnesses, or other documentary evidence) to establish the factual basis. Nash, 394 Wis. 2d 238, ¶¶36-39, 47-49. Instead, as with a traditional guilty plea, what constitutes an adequate record is determined based on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, and that determination is left to the discretion of the circuit court. Id., ¶¶36-38, citing State v. Thomas, 2000 WI 13, ¶20, 232 Wis.2d 714, 605 N.W.2d 836 ("All that is required is for the factual basis to be developed on the record—several sources can supply the facts."). Thus, a factual basis may be established by witness testimony, or a prosecutor reading police reports, or a summary of evidence from the prosecutor. Johnson, 105 Wis. 2d at 659-60, 664-65 (the state's recital of evidence it would present at re-trial, as well as evidence offered at first trial that ended in a hung jury); Spears, 147 Wis.2d at 438-40 (testimony of witnesses called by the state at the plea hearing and summary of expected testimony of other witnesses); Warren, 219 Wis.2d at 646-47 (preliminary hearing testimony of the victim and a police officer); Nash, 394 Wis.2d 238, ¶¶40-45 (details in criminal complaint, prosecutor's summary of the evidence, and other-acts evidence offered for admission at trial). Further, because Alford pleas are often the result of plea negotiations, a court may not need to go to the same length to determine the factual basis as it would when there is not a negotiated plea. Nash, 394 Wis.2d 238, 36.

While the court need not use any "magic words" when determining whether there is strong proof of guilt, Nash, 394 Wis.2d 238, ¶36, by keeping the heightened standard in mind and attending to its requirements a court can assure that an Alford plea is validly entered and rests on a sound basis despite the "difficulty posed by an Alford plea in relation to the factual basis requirement." Smith, 202 Wis.2d at 27. An example of the factual basis problem may be seen in the Spears decision, which extensively discusses whether the "evidence" was sufficient to establish the "conduct evincing a depraved mind" element of what was then called second degree murder (now, first degree reckless homicide). The majority and dissenting opinions disagree about whether "strong proof" of this troublesome element was presented, illustrating the difficulty in resolving the inherent contradiction presented by a guilty plea accompanied by a claim of innocence.

c. "Heightened diligence" in sex offense cases

In State ex rel. Warren v. Schwarz, 219 Wis.2d 615 579 N.W.2d 698 (1998), the court called "for heightened diligence on the part of circuit courts in accepting Alford pleas—particularly in cases involving sex offenses . . . An inherent conflict arises when a charged sex offender enters an Alford plea: the offender cannot maintain innocence under the Alford plea and successfully complete the sex offender treatment program, which requires the offender to admit guilt." ¶72. The court added:

> ¶ 75. Should the circuit courts in their discretion decide to accept Alford pleas in such cases, we strongly advise them to give Alford-pleading defendants an instruction at the time of the plea that their protestations of innocence extend only to the plea itself, and do not serve as a guarantee that they cannot subsequently be punished for violating the terms of their probation which require an admission of guilt. Because of the unique nature of Alford pleas, circuit courts accepting such pleas should take extra care to ensure that defendants understand that in order to successfully complete the treatment program, they will be required to admit guilt. Such instructions will avert any misconceptions by defendants that the Alford plea provides any "promises" or "guarantees" of what is constitutionally appropriate probationary treatment. ¶75.

D. Court Authority To Reject An Alford Plea

The Alford decision held that a guilty plea coupled with a claim of innocence was not unconstitutional. State v. Johnson and State v. Garcia both held that an Alford plea was not inconsistent with Wisconsin law relating to guilty pleas. However, Alford, Johnson, and Garcia do not require a court to accept an Alford plea.

1. Court approval is required

The Alford decision explicitly recognized that a trial court is not required to accept an Alford plea:

> Our holding does not mean that a trial judge must accept every constitutionally valid guilty plea merely because a defendant wishes so to plead. A criminal defendant does not have an absolute right under the Constitution to have his guilty plea accepted by the court, see Lynch v. Overholser, 369 U.S., at 719, 8 L Ed 2d 220 (by implication), although the States may by statute or otherwise confer such a right. Likewise, the States may bar their courts from accepting guilty pleas from any defendants who assert their innocence. Cf. Fed. Rule Crim. Proc. 11, which gives a trial judge discretion to "refuse to accept a plea of guilty. . . ." We need not now delineate the scope of that discretion. 400 U.S. 25, 38, n.11.

Garcia reaffirmed that a "circuit court may reject the plea if it concludes that the plea is contrary to the public interest or the interests of justice." 192 Wis.2d 845, 859 (citing this Special Material with approval). A concurring opinion by Justice Abrahamson advised circuit courts to seek "to resolve the conflict between the waiver of trial and the claim of innocence." 192 Wis.2d 845, 868. A concurring opinion by Justice Wilcox concluded that "an Alford plea is a troubling way to finalize the criminal judicial process. I recommend that the trial courts in this state act with great reticence when confronted with an Alford plea."
192 Wis.2d 845, 868.

2. Guides to the exercise of discretion

Wisconsin has not chosen to limit the court's authority to accept or reject Alford pleas. Thus, the trial judge confronted with an Alford plea is entitled to exercise discretion in deciding whether to accept it. In many respects, this exercise of discretion will be like that involved in deciding whether to accept a no contest plea (see discussion above).

A refusal to accept an Alford plea should be supported by a clear statement of the factors that persuaded the court to exercise its discretion in that manner. In State v. Williams, 2000 WI App 123, 237 Wis.2d 591, 614 N.W.2d 11, the court of appeals implied that a judge's flat refusal to accept an Alford plea because "I have just made a policy that I will not accept one" would be error. However, the alleged error was considered waived in that case.

COMMENT

SM-32A was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1995 and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it provided a general updating.

The primary changes made in the 1995 revision were those reflecting the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Garcia, 192 Wis.2d 845, 532 N.W.2d 111 (1995).

SM-32B ACCEPTING A PLEA OF GUILTY: USE OF WRITTEN FORM

The following questions are suggested for use when a written form is employed to furnish a record that a plea is made voluntarily and understandingly.

Many courts have developed written forms for accepting guilty pleas. A sample form is provided as Appendix I to this Special Material. It includes all the questions that are included in the full oral acceptance procedure recommended in SM-32.

The use of a written form was approved in State v. Moederndorfer, but the court added that the trial court should personally question the defendant concerning the form. The court referred to "making a record that the defendant had sufficient time prior to the hearing to review the form, had an opportunity to discuss the form with counsel, had read each paragraph, and had understood each one."[1]

The sample questions that follow are intended to comply with the Moederndorfer decision. Also included are questions to be directed at defense counsel.

THE COURT TO THE DEFENDANT:

(Mr.) (Ms.) _____, I have here a form entitled (state caption on form). It appears to have your signature on the last page (and your initials on each paragraph).

1. Did you sign and initial this form?
2. When did you do that?
3. Have you read the form?
4. Do you believe you understand what is in the form?
5. Do you have any questions about it?
6. Have you used any drugs, alcohol, or medication today?

[AT THIS POINT REVIEW THE FORM AND FOLLOW UP ON ANY ITEMS THAT MAY RAISE A QUESTION ABOUT THE UNDERSTANDING OF THE PLEA]

7. Did you talk this over with your lawyer?

8. Did you discuss what is in this form and what is being recommended here?

9. Do you understand that by pleading guilty you are giving up the constitutional rights detailed in the form?

10. Did you have enough time to talk with your lawyer?

11. Do you have any questions now about the form or about your plea of guilty?

THE COURT TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

12. (Mr.) (Ms.) _____, as the lawyer for the defendant, have you had ample opportunity to confer with the defendant with regard to this plea of guilty?

13. Have you reviewed the (state caption on form) with the defendant?

14. Are you satisfied that the defendant understands the charge(s), the elements thereof, and the possible consequences of an adjudication of guilt?

15. And, are you satisfied the defendant is knowingly, intelligently waiving (his) (her) constitutional rights?

[16. And are you satisfied that the defendant understands the enhanced penalty that can be imposed if the court accepts the plea(s) of guilty as a repeater?]

17. Based upon your own independent investigation, are you satisfied that there is an ample factual basis to warrant the court's acceptance of the tendered pleas?

THE COURT TO THE DEFENDANT:

18. (Mr.) (Ms.) _____, you have heard what your lawyer has told me. Is there anything that you wish to disagree with or ask questions about?

19. Are you satisfied with the representation you received from your lawyer up to this point?

20. And is there anything that I may have asked you that you now upon reflection wish to modify or change in any way?

21. Do you want the court to accept your plea(s) of guilty at this time?

COMMENT

Special Material 32B was originally published in 1985. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 1992.

1. The use of a written plea acceptance form was approved in State v. Moederndorfer, 141 Wis.2d 823, 416 N.W.2d 627 (Ct. App. 1987):

> Personal colloquy by verbally following the provisions of SM-32 is not mandatory. The trial court may instead refer to some portion of the record or some communication between defense counsel and defendant. Any one of these alternatives is proper so long as the alternative used exhibits defendant's knowledge of the constitutional rights waived.

141 Wis.2d 823, 827

The court found that the written form used in the case was sufficient, that the court conducted a full personal inquiry about the defendant's understanding of the form, and that there is nothing inherently wrong about using a form – to the contrary, using a form may be preferable:

> People can learn as much from reading as listening, and often more. In fact, a defendant's ability to understand the rights being waived may be greater when he or she is given a written form to read in an unhurried atmosphere, as opposed to reliance upon oral colloquy in a supercharged courtroom setting. A trial court can accurately assess a defendant's understanding of what he or she has read by making a record that the defendant had sufficient time prior to the hearing to review the form, had an opportunity to discuss the form with counsel, had read each paragraph, and had understood each one.

141 Wis.2d 823, 828

A guilty plea was vacated despite the use of a written form in State v. Hansen, 168 Wis.2d 749, 485 N.W.2d 74 (Ct. App. 1992). The defect was the trial court's failure to address the defendant personally to ascertain his understanding of the constitutional rights being given up by the guilty plea:

> . . . the colloquy was limited to whether Hansen had gone over the Moederndorfer form with his attorney before he signed it and whether Hansen understood the form. We conclude that such limited personal colloquy is not the substantive kind of personal exchange between the trial court and the defendant which Bangert, sec. 971.08, Stats., and Moederndorfer require.
> While our approval of the Moederndorfer form certainly lessened the extent and degree of the colloquy otherwise required between the trial court and the defendant, it was not intended to eliminate the need for the court to make a record demonstrating the defendant's understanding that the plea results in the waiver of the applicable constitutional rights. The record made in Moederndorfer is demonstrative. Although the personal colloquy there was also brief, it nonetheless established the defendant's understanding that, by entering the plea, he was giving up the rights detailed in the form. Moederndorfer, 141 Wis.2d at 828-29 n.1, 416 N.W.2d at 630. This is a subtle, but important, requirement.

168 Wis.2d 749, 755-56

Question number 9 above is believed to satisfy the Hansen requirement.

APPENDIX I GUILTY PLEA ACCEPTANCE FORM

[SPECIAL MATERIAL WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

This Special Material was originally published as SM-32B in 1985. It was revised and published as SM-32B APPENDIX in 1992 and revised in 1995. Its withdrawal was approved by the Committee in 2019.

The use of court form CR-227 is now required for plea acceptance.

SM-33 INFORMATION ON POSTCONVICTION RELIEF

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-33 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, and 1985. It was withdrawn by the Committee in 2010.

See § 973.18 and the form adopted by the Judicial Conference: CR-233 Notice of Right to Seek Postconviction Relief. Section 971.025(1) provides: "In all criminal actions proceedings . . . the parties and court officials shall use the standard court forms adopted by the judicial conference under s. 758.18."

SM-33A INSTRUCTION TO BE USED ON DENIAL OF ANY POSTCONVICTION MOTION (OTHER THAN § 974.06)

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-33A was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980 and 1981. It was withdrawn by the Committee in October 1991.

The Committee withdrew this special material for several reasons: giving such advice is not required by case law or statute; appellate procedure is sufficiently technical that it is difficult to give complete and accurate information to a defendant; and, probably because of the preceding reasons, the advice was apparently rarely, if ever, used.

SM-33B INSTRUCTION TO BE USED ON DENIAL OF A POSTCONVICTION MOTION UNDER § 974.06

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-33B was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980 and 1981. It was withdrawn by the Committee in October 1991.

The Committee withdrew this special material for several reasons: giving such advice is not required by case law or statute; appellate procedure is sufficiently technical that it is difficult to give complete and accurate information to a defendant; and, probably because of the preceding reasons, the advice was apparently rarely, if ever, used.

The situation addressed by this special material is even more complex because the § 974.06 motion is considered civil in nature. § 974.06(6) Thus, the relevant rules are as follows:

- § 809.30(2)(L) provides that appeals under § 974.06 are governed by the procedures for civil appeals.
- § 808.04(1) states the general rule for civil appeals: 45 or 90 days, depending on whether written notice of the order denying relief was received.
- § 808.04(5) provides a special 120-day rule for "a person imprisoned on a criminal sentence against whom a civil final judgment or order is rendered.".

SM-34 SENTENCING PROCEDURE, STANDARDS, AND SPECIAL ISSUES

This Special Material outlines the procedures and standards recommended for use at sentencing. It also discusses several issues of importance to sentencing.

CONTENTS

I. The Basic Requirements for the Sound Exercise of Discretion

In McCleary v. State, 49 Wis.2d 263, 182 N.W.2d 512 (1971), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a trial judge, when imposing a sentence upon a defendant, must on the record explain the reasons for the imposition of the particular sentence given as well as outline on the record the basic facts relied upon or taken into consideration during the sentencing deliberations.

As the McCleary court said at page 281, ". . . requisite to a prima facie valid sentence is a statement by the trial judge detailing his reasons for selecting the particular sentence imposed." The court then went on to say that a trial judge must ". . . state the facts on which he predicates his judgment, and . . . give the reasons for his conclusion."[1]

The sound exercise of discretion requires the consideration of a variety of factors (see the discussion at page 4, below). Of these, the primary factors "are the gravity of the offense, the character of the offender, and the need for protection of the public." Elias v. State, 93 Wis.2d 278, 286 N.W.2d 559 (1980). "In other words, a 'sentencing court must assess the crime, the criminal, and the community, and no two cases will present identical factors.'" State v. Halbert, 147 Wis.2d 123, 128, 432 N.W.2d 633 (Ct. App. 1988), citing In re Judicial Administration: Felony Sentencing Guidelines, 120 Wis.2d 198, 201, 353 N.W.2d 793 (1984).

The sentencing court must not approach the sentencing "with an inflexibility that bespeaks a made-up mind," as shown by a trial court's statement that it never granted probation for drug offenses. State v. Halbert, supra at 128, citing State v. Martin, 100 Wis.2d 326, 302 N.W.2d 58 (Ct. App. 1981). Considering the sentencing decision before the sentencing hearing and reaching tentative conclusions about the sentence does not violate these principles. State v. Varnell, 153 Wis.2d 334, 450 N.W.2d 524 (Ct. App. 1989).

The cases attempting to articulate a rule against a "mechanistic sentencing approach," while technical to some extent, reflect an underlying sentencing principle of great importance. Making it clear that the sentencing court has considered all the facts of the individual case is extremely important to giving defendants, victims, and the public the sense that they have been treated fairly.

II. Sentencing Standards

A judge should always tailor the sentence to fit the particular circumstances of the case and the individual characteristics of the defendant. There are certain standards, however, which should be followed by the judge when deciding on a sentence.

A. The Minimum Amount of Confinement

In Neely v. State, 47 Wis.2d 330, 334, n. 8, 177 N.W.2d 79 (1970), and again in McCleary v. State, supra at 276, the Wisconsin Supreme Court quoted with approval Standard 2.2 of the ABA Standards Relating to Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures, which states:

> The sentence imposed in each case should call for the minimum amount of custody or confinement which is consistent with the protection of the public, the gravity of the offense and the rehabilitative needs of the defendant.[2]

Further, in Bastian v. State, 54 Wis.2d 240, 247-49, n.1, 194 N.W.2d 687 (1972), the Wisconsin Supreme Court expressly adopted Standard 1.3 of the ABA Standards Relating to Probation:

> Criteria for granting probation.
> (a) The probation decision should not turn upon generalizations about types of offenses or the existence of a prior criminal record, but should be rooted in the facts and circumstances of each case. The court should consider the nature and circumstances of the crime, the history and character of the offender, and available institutional and community resources. Probation should be the sentence unless the sentencing court finds that:
> (i) confinement is necessary to protect the public from further criminal activity by the offender; or
> (ii) the offender is in need of correctional treatment which can most effectively be provided if he is confined; or
> (iii) it would unduly depreciate the seriousness of the offense if a sentence of probation were imposed.
> (b) Whether the defendant pleads guilty, pleads not guilty or intends to appeal is not relevant to the issue of whether probation is an appropriate sentence.[3]

B. Repeal of the Wisconsin Sentencing Guidelines

Wisconsin employed a system of advisory sentencing guidelines from 1985 through 1995. 1995 Wisconsin Act 27 repealed the statutes that referred to the Sentencing Commission and the sentencing guidelines [§§ 15.104(17), 973.01, and 973.011-.012, 1993 Wis. Stats., were all repealed with an effective date: July 29, 1995.]

C. Factors to Consider

When imposing a sentence, judges should first outline on the record the basic facts taken into consideration in the sentencing deliberations. In State v. Tew, 54 Wis.2d 361, 367-68, 195 N.W.2d 615 (1972), the Wisconsin Supreme Court listed some of the factors which may be properly considered in sentencing:

- a past record of criminal offenses;
- a history of undesirable behavior patterns;
- the defendant's personality, character, and social traits;
- the results of a presentence investigation;
- the vicious or aggravated nature of the crime;
- the degree of the defendant's culpability;
- the defendant's demeanor at trial;
- the defendant's age, educational background, and employment record;
- the defendant's remorse, repentance, and cooperativeness;
- the defendant's need for close rehabilitative control; and
- the rights of the public.

Several additional factors have been recognized as appropriate considerations by case law or statutes:

- the effect of the crime on the victim (including rehabilitative needs);[4]
- the victim's statement (see § 972.14(3) discussed below);
- juvenile record;[5]
- read-ins;[6]
- false testimony during trial;[7]
- failure to name accomplice after disclosure of existence of co-conspirator;[8] and
- conduct relating to charges for which the defendant was acquitted.[9]

There are a number of factors that are not to be considered in imposing sentence:

- exercise of constitutional rights, such as the right to a trial,[10] the privilege against self-incrimination,[11] or the right to present a defense;[12]
- beliefs and associations protected by the First Amendment, unless a reliable connection is established between the criminal conduct and those beliefs and associations;[13]
- refusal to admit guilt;[14] and
- the amount of credit that will be due for pretrial confinement.[15]

The list of proper and improper factors suggests a potentially elusive distinction relating to the general proposition that it is proper to give favorable consideration to the remorse and cooperation that accompany a plea of guilty. The same principles that forbid penalizing the defendant for going to trial instead of pleading guilty, or for presenting a good faith, though unsuccessful, defense, are recognized as prohibiting the imposition of a harsher sentence solely because the defendant refuses to admit guilt. Thus, the defendant can be rewarded for showing remorse but is not to be penalized for refusing to admit guilt. This distinction was directly addressed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in Scales v. State, 64 Wis.2d 485, 219 N.W.2d 286 (1974). In Scales, the court acknowledged that a posttrial confession of guilt and an expression of remorse may be considered in mitigation of sentence but held that it does not follow that lack of remorse may properly be considered as a basis for an increased sentence. If the defendant has chosen to exercise the right against self-incrimination, the defendant may not be penalized for it, even after a jury's determination of guilt.[16]

D. Standards for Consecutive Sentences

Section 973.15(2) provides in part that "the court may impose as many sentences as there are convictions and may provide that any such sentence be concurrent with or consecutive to any other sentence imposed at the same time or previously." Specific standards for deciding when sentences on multiple counts should be ordered to run consecutively to one another are not further addressed in the statutes and have not been adopted by the appellate courts. A summary of the law is provided in State v. Johnson, 178 Wis.2d 42, 51-2, 503 N.W.2d 575 (Ct. App. 1993):

> . . . [M]ore than fifteen years ago the supreme court "recommended" that the ABA standards for consecutive sentencing "be given consideration as a guideline" in Wisconsin. But the court has never pursued the matter further; indeed, it has repeatedly declined to adopt the standards. . . . [citations omitted]

> . . . thus, under existing law, whether to impose consecutive, as opposed to concurrent, sentences is, like all other sentencing decisions, committed to the trial court's discretion.

There are a variety of technical constraints applicable to the imposition of consecutive sentences, most arising when periods of probation are also involved. Section 973.15(2)(a) provides that the court may provide that a sentence may be ordered to be consecutive "to any other sentence imposed at the same time or previously." Problems arise because ordering a term of probation has not been considered a "sentence." State v. Maron, 214 Wis.2d 384, 571 N.W.2d 454 (Ct. App. 1997); Prue v. State, 63 Wis.2d 109, 216 N.W.2d 43 (1974). Thus, for example, a term of imprisonment may not be made consecutive to a term of probation or to jail time served as a condition of probation. See State v. Maron, 214 Wis.2d 384, 394-5, and cases cited therein.

III. The Presentence Investigation Report

The presentence investigation report is not only of great value at sentencing, but also plays an important role after sentence is imposed. If the defendant is placed on probation, the report becomes the probation agent's primary source of information. The agent will use the report in determining what special conditions of supervision to impose and in determining what level of supervision is required. If the probationer violates the conditions of supervision, the information in the report may also influence the decision whether or not to pursue revocation proceedings.

If the defendant is sentenced to imprisonment or is incarcerated after probation revocation proceedings, the presentence report becomes part of the person's correctional treatment file and is consulted by corrections staff whenever decisions are made about how the person will serve the sentence and what the conditions of confinement will be. Decisions about security classification, institutional assignment, job assignment, and eligibility for educational, vocational, and treatment programs, are made with reference to the presentence report.

Perhaps most importantly, the presentence report becomes part of the file consulted by the parole board when parole release decisions are made. Even after the person is released on parole, the report may be used by the parole agent in determining conditions of parole, the level of supervision, and the need for pursuing revocation proceedings.

A defendant has the due process right to be sentenced on the basis of true and correct information and the presentence report is the primary means of communicating this information to the court. But neither due process nor the right to counsel under the 5th or 6th Amendment requires that counsel be allowed to be present when the defendant is interviewed by the presentence preparer. State v. Perez, 170 Wis.2d 130, 487 N.W.2d 630 (Ct. App. 1992) [re: a due process claim]; State v. Knapp, 111 Wis.2d 380, 330 N.W.2d 242 (Ct. App.), cert. denied, 464 U.S. 834 (1983) [re: a 5th and 6th Amendment claim].

A. When to Order a Presentence Report

Wis. Stat. § 972.15(1) provides that after conviction, the court may order a presentence investigation, "except that the court may order an employe of the department to conduct a presentence investigation only after a conviction for a felony." Although this statute gives a trial court discretion not to order a presentence report in any particular case, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has urged and encouraged trial courts to use this sentencing aid. See Bruneau v. State, 77 Wis.2d 166, 174, 252 N.W.2d 347 (1977). The ABA Standards for Criminal Justice call for a presentence investigation and report in the following circumstances:

> . . . where incarceration for one year or more is a possible disposition, where the defendant is less than twenty-one years old, or where the defendant is a first offender, unless the defendant or defense counsel waives production of the report and the court specifically finds that it has sufficient information to exercise the discretion accorded to it.

Standard 18-5.1(b).

B. Defense Access to the Presentence Report

Section 972.15(2) provides:

> When a presentence investigation report has been received the judge shall disclose the contents of the report to the defendant's attorney and to the district attorney prior to sentencing. When the defendant is not represented by an attorney, the contents shall be disclosed to the defendant.

There has been disagreement about whether this statute required that the presentence report be personally disclosed to the defendant. Counsel clearly had the obligation to review the report with the defendant, but in some courts there was reluctance to disclose the report for the defendant's direct review. This situation has been clarified by the decision of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. Skaff, 152 Wis.2d 48, 447 N.W.2d 84 (Ct. App. 1989). The court held that § 972.15(2) should not be read to deny access to the represented defendant: "the legislature could not have intended that a defendant appearing without counsel had greater rights to his PSI than a defendant who appeared with counsel." 151 Wis.2d 48, 57. The court went beyond the statutory grounds, however, to hold that access is guaranteed by constitutionally-based due process considerations: "to deny Skaff timely access to his PSI, pursuant to court order, is to prejudicially deny him an essential factor of due process, i.e., a procedure conducive to sentencing based on correct information." 151 Wis.2d 48, 57.

The importance of defense review of the presentence report was emphasized in State v. Anderson, 222 Wis.2d 403, 410, 588 N.W.2d 75 (Ct. App. 1998), where a case was remanded to the trial court for resentencing based on ineffective assistance of counsel:

> . . . Anderson disputed the important and relevant portions of PSI. Having done that, it was trial counsel's further duty to see that the accuracy of those matters was fully resolved by a proper hearing. Counsel did not do this. As a result, the trial court relied on certain of these disputed portions of the PSI without first resolving the accuracy of the allegations. We hold that Anderson was prejudiced by this process.

C. Discovering Errors in the Report

Defense counsel will often bring alleged errors in the report to the court's attention. If that is not done, the Committee believes that the court should ask counsel whether any errors were discovered. It should be counsel's responsibility to review the report carefully and thoroughly with the defendant to determine whether it contains errors that could be prejudicial to the defendant either at sentencing or in the correctional process.

D. Correcting the Inaccurate Report

If the importance of the presentence report after sentencing is acknowledged, and if one purpose of allowing the defendant access to the report is to afford the chance to discover and correct inaccuracies, it follows that any errors found in the report should be corrected. It may require some care and follow-through to assure that corrections are actually made. A simple statement from the court that certain information is in error and will not be relied upon is usually not sufficient to achieve actual correction of the report. Multiple copies are likely to be in existence and it may be advisable for the court to order directly that all copies be corrected in the manner designated by the court.

IV. Explaining the Sentence; a Suggested Format

A. In General

Before pronouncing sentence, the court must make two inquiries relating to the rights of victims at sentencing: the inquiry of the district attorney described in § 972.14(2m); and a determination whether a victim wishes to make a statement to the court. These obligations are discussed in Section V., below.

Pronouncing sentence typically begins by setting forth the factors considered on the record; the judge should then, based on these facts, explain and give reasons for the type of sentence or custody imposed upon the defendant. Ordinarily, the type of sentence or custody will consist of either probation, a fine, common jail confinement with or without Huber privileges, or imprisonment. The judge should explain why the type of sentence or custody imposed is deemed appropriate and why a less severe sentence is considered inappropriate.

Lastly, the judge should explain and give reasons for the length or duration of the custody imposed and the amount of the fine if a fine is part of the disposition. For example, if a maximum prison sentence is imposed, the judge should explain why the maximum sentence is appropriate and why a sentence of a lesser number of years is considered inappropriate. The justification for the length of the sentence should always be set forth in the record, as well as the reasons for not imposing a sentence of lesser duration.

B. A Sentencing Format

The Committee believes that the requirements relating to the sound exercise of sentencing discretion can be carried out effectively if a format like the following is used to explain the court's sentencing decision.

Judges often rely on notes in preparing for sentencing and in articulating the rationale for the sentence imposed. Parties are not entitled to access to these notes in the context of postconviction proceedings.[17]

Before pronouncing sentence, the court should have made the inquiry of the district attorney described in § 972.14(2m) and ascertained whether a victim wishes to make a statement [discussed below]. The defendant and defense counsel should have reviewed the presentence report and the court should have asked whether there are any errors in the presentence report or any omissions of significant material. The oral pronouncement of sentence should then include the following:

1. Identify the offense or offenses for which sentence is to be imposed.
2. Identify the maximum penalty, including any penalty enhancers.
3. Identify the recommendations of the prosecutor, defense counsel, and the presentence report.
4. Identify information relating to impact of the crime on the victim.
5. Explain the general objectives that a criminal sentence may address:
   - protection of the community
   - punishment
   - rehabilitation of the defendant
   - deterrence of others
6. Identify the general objectives of greatest importance in this case.
7. Identify the factors that were considered in arriving at the sentence and indicate how they influenced the decision.
8. If probation is rejected, indicate why.
9. Conclude with the statement that based on all these factors, the designated sentence is imposed, stating clearly:
   - what the term of years is
   - how the sentence relates to other sentences imposed at the same time or previously (concurrent or consecutive)
   - the number of days sentence credit due under § 973.155
10. Inform the defendant of the restrictions on firearm possession under § 941.29.[18]
11. If applicable, inform the defendant of the restrictions on child sex offenders working with children under § 973.034[19] and sex offender reporting requirements under § 973.048.[20]
12. Advise the defendant of the right to seek postconviction relief.[21]

At the conclusion of the sentencing proceeding, the court should assure that the judgment of conviction accurately reflects the sentence imposed.

C. A Sample Sentencing Pattern

The following is a sentencing pattern that, in the Committee's judgment, employs a logical and complete sequence in covering all the essential steps in the sound exercise of sentencing discretion.

In the case of State versus _____, Case No. _____, the defendant has been convicted of the crime of _____ upon a (guilty verdict by the jury) (trial by the court) (plea of guilty). Defendant is now before the court for the purposes of sentencing.

The maximum penalty for _____ is _____. The presentence author recommends _____. The defendant requests _____.

On sentencing the following witnesses for the state appeared: _____ _____. The following witnesses for the defense appeared: _____ _____. (Identify letters or other material submitted to the court.) (Identify information relating to impact of the crime on the victim.) (No corrections to the presentence report were noted.) (Corrections to the presentence report are as follows: _____.)

(State summary of the offense.)

In deciding the defendant's sentence (disposition), the court considers the following:

(A) Seriousness of the offense
1. Dangerousness – actual/potential
2. Injuries
3. Effects of the crime – temporary/permanent
4. Amounts involved

(B) Character of the defendant
1. Age, education, and health of defendant
2. Record – juvenile record, adult record, and pending charges
3. Status – married, children
4. Demeanor, remorse, personality, truthfulness (defendant as a witness)

(C) Needs of society
1. Is defendant good risk?
2. Does community need protection?
3. Deterrent effect of sentence
4. Moral need for punishment

(a) You are hereby sentenced to the Wisconsin State Prisons for an indeterminate period not more than _____ years, or
(b) You are hereby sentenced to the Wisconsin State Prisons for an indeterminate term not more than _____ years, stayed for _____ years during which time you are on probation with the following terms.
(c) Sentence is withheld and you are hereby placed on probation for a period of _____ years under the following conditions.

Fine, if any, costs, and surcharges.

_____ is entitled to sentence credit under § 973.155 in the amount of _____ days. _____ is ordered to pay restitution in the amount of _____.

For felonies, advise the defendant that § 941.29 makes it a Class E felony for a person convicted of a felony to possess a firearm.[22]

If applicable, inform the defendant of the restrictions on child sex offenders working with children under § 973.034 and sex offender reporting requirements under § 973.048.[23]

Advise on the right to seek postconviction relief.[24]

V. Victim Participation in Sentencing

Considering the impact of the crime on the victim and allowing the victim to address the court are mandatory. Article I, § 9 of the Wisconsin Constitution provides in part that "This state shall ensure that crime victims have . . . the opportunity to make a statement to the court at disposition. . ." This right is implemented by two statutes imposing obligations on the court. One obligation is to inquire of the district attorney; the other obligation is to determine whether victims wish to provide information to the court.

A. Obligation to Inquire of the District Attorney

This obligation is imposed by § 972.14(2m), which reads as follows:

> Before pronouncing sentence, the court shall inquire of the district attorney whether he or she has complied with s. 971.095(2) and with sub. (3)(b), whether any of the victims of a crime considered at sentencing requested notice of the date, time and place of the sentencing hearing and, if so, whether the district attorney provided to the victim notice of the date, time and place of the sentencing hearing.

The reference to "s. 971.095(2)" is to the general duty of the district attorney to offer all victims "who have requested the opportunity an opportunity to confer with the district attorney concerning the prosecution of the case and the possible outcomes of the prosecution, including potential plea agreements and sentencing recommendations." The reference to "sub. (3)(b)" is to § 972.14(3)(b), which requires the district attorney to "make a reasonable attempt" to contact victims and inform them of their right to make a statement at sentencing.

Complete compliance with these obligations can, in the Committee's judgment, be achieved by asking the following questions of the district attorney:

- whether he or she has complied with the victim notice and consultation law – § 971.095(2); and

- whether he or she has made a reasonable attempt to contact victims of a crime to be considered at sentencing* to inform them of their right to make a statement in court or to submit a written statement to be read in court. [As required by § 972.14(3)(b)]; and

- whether any of the victims of a crime to be considered at sentencing requested notice of the date, time, and place of the sentencing hearing; and, if so,

- whether he or she provided to the victim notice of the date, time, and place of the sentencing hearing.

*"Crime considered at sentencing" is defined in § 972.14(1)(ag) as "any crime for which the defendant was convicted and any read-in crime. . . ."

B. Court Determination Whether Victims Wish to Provide Information

The second obligation is imposed by § 972.14(3)(a), which provides:

> Before pronouncing sentence, the court shall determine whether a victim of a crime considered at sentencing wants to make a statement to the court. If a victim wants to make a statement, the court shall allow the victim to make a statement in court or to submit a written statement to be read in court. The court may allow any other person to make or submit a statement under this paragraph. Any statement under this paragraph must be relevant to the sentence.

Compliance with this obligation can, in the Committee's judgment, be achieved by addressing all those present in the courtroom and:

- asking whether any victim of a crime considered at sentencing wants to make a statement to the court; and

- stating that if a victim wants to make a statement, the court will allow an oral statement in court or the submission a written statement.

The application of § 972.14(3)(a) was originally limited to felony cases; that restriction was repealed by 1995 Wisconsin Act 77 [effective date: July 1, 1996].

Subsection (1)(b) of § 972.14 provides a cross-reference for the definition of "victim." "Victim" has the meaning provided in § 950.02(4), which is: "a person against whom a crime has been committed."

As the statute clearly states, the victim (or the victim's family member in a homicide case) must be allowed to make a statement at sentencing. The only limitation on the statement is that the statement must be relevant to the sentence. One type of information that appears clearly to be relevant is that relating to the impact of the crime on the victim or the victim's family.

First, "the vicious or aggravated nature of the crime" has long been considered to be one of the factors properly considered at sentencing. State v. Wells, 51 Wis.2d 477, 187 N.W.2d 328 (1971).

Further, several statutes allow, or even require, the court to consider victim impact information. One of the specified rights in § 950.04, titled, "Basic Bill of Rights for Victims and Witnesses," is that found in subsection (2m):

> To have the court provided with information pertaining to the economic, physical and psychological effect of the crime upon the victim of a felony and have the information considered by the court.

This right is implemented by two other provisions. Section 972.15, relating to the presentence report, includes subsec. (2m), which reads as follows:

> The person preparing the presentence investigation report shall attempt to contact the victim to determine the economic, physical and psychological effect of the crime on the victim. The person preparing the report may ask any appropriate person for information. This subsection does not preclude the person who prepares the report from including any information for the court concerning the impact of a crime on the victim.

The implementation is completed by subsec. (4) of § 973.013, which provides that "[i]f information under § 972.15(2m) has been provided in a presentence investigation report, the court shall consider that information when sentencing the defendant."

It is possible for sentencing proceedings to become highly emotional and for victim impact statements to contribute to that situation. To minimize potential problems, it may be helpful to remind those speaking on the victim's behalf that their comments are to be directed to the court, not to the defendant, and are to be delivered with due respect to the dignity and formality of the proceedings.

Consideration of victim impact information was challenged in State v. Horn, 126 Wis.2d 447, 461 (1985), where the defendant characterized it as "irrelevant, inflammatory and prejudicial." The court of appeals held there was no abuse of discretion in considering the victim impact information, noting that it is specifically authorized by § 972.15. Also see State v. Jones, 151 Wis.2d 488, 444 N.W.2d 760 (Ct. App. 1989), holding that it is appropriate to consider the "rehabilitative needs of the victim" in imposing sentence. It is not error for the presentence report to go beyond impact information and refer to victims' wishes as to the specific sentence to be imposed; but, like recommendations from other sources, they will be accepted only if the court "can independently conclude that the recommended sentence is appropriate in light of the acknowledged goals of sentencing as applied to the facts of the case." State v. Johnson, 158 Wis.2d 458, 465, 463 N.W.2d 352 (Ct. App. 1990).

The United States Supreme Court has considered the use of victim impact information in two death penalty cases. In Booth v. Maryland, 482 U.S. 496 (1987), the court held that the Eighth Amendment prohibited a capital sentencing jury from considering victim impact evidence. Booth was overruled in Payne v. Tennessee, 501 U.S. 808 (1991):

> Victim impact statement is simply another form or method of informing the sentencing authority about the specific harm caused by the crime in question, evidence of a general type long considered by sentencing > authorities. We think the Booth Court was wrong in stating that this kind of evidence leads to the arbitrary imposition of the death penalty. In the majority of cases, and in this case, victim impact evidence serves entirely legitimate purposes. In the event that evidence is introduced that is so unduly prejudicial that it renders the trial fundamentally unfair, the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment provides a mechanism for relief. . . .

> We are now of the view that a State may properly conclude that for the jury to assess meaningfully the defendant's moral culpability and blameworthiness, it should have before it at the sentencing phase evidence of the specific harm caused by the defendant.

The Booth decision had not been applied to noncapital cases by the United States Supreme Court and the Wisconsin Court of Appeals has explicitly declined to extend Booth to noncapital cases. See State v. Scherreiks, 153 Wis.2d 510, 451 N.W.2d 759 (Ct. App. 1989). With its overruling by Payne, the Booth rationale clearly has no application to Wisconsin sentencing practice.

VI. The Defendant's Presence and Right to Allocution

Section 971.04(1)(g) provides that the defendant shall be present at "the pronouncement of judgment and the imposition of sentence." In State v. Koopmans, 210 Wis. 2d. 670, 563 N.W.2d 528 (1997), the court held that this provision is mandatory and nonwaivable in felony cases. It requires the defendant's presence at sentencing even if the defendant was present at the beginning of the trial but was voluntarily absent without permission of the court thereafter. See § 971.04(3). Subsection (2) of § 971.04 allows a defendant in a misdemeanor case to be excused from attendance at any or all stages of the proceedings, including sentencing. But the misdemeanor defendant may be excused only "with leave of the court," indicating this is a discretionary decision on the part of the trial judge.

Section 972.14(2) provides that before pronouncing sentence, the court shall afford the "defendant an opportunity to make a statement with respect to any matter relevant to sentence." It is important to afford defendants this right because it may be the only time during the entire proceeding when they have the chance to relate their side of the story. Along these lines, courts should be alert for statements made during "allocution" that may indicate that a guilty plea was not knowingly made. For example, assume that a defendant who has entered a guilty plea to burglary as a party to the crime states at sentencing that he should be given some leniency because he was asleep in the back seat of the car at the time of the crime and did not know his friends planned to commit a burglary. This indicates that the defendant did not understand the facts necessary to constitute the crime of burglary and casts doubt on the validity of the plea. This should have come up at the time the plea was accepted, but the opportunity for allocution may lead defendants to be more forthcoming about how their actions match up with the charge, and courts should be alert for statements at sentencing that cast doubt on the plea.

VII. Sources and Accuracy of Information

Subject to the general limitation that proper factors be considered, the sentencing court may rely on a broad range of information. Two of the potential problems that may arise represent opposite sides of the same coin: attempts by the parties to withhold information and attempts by nonparties to bring information to the judge's attention. An additional question is whether unconstitutionally obtained evidence may be considered.

A. Information from Nonparties

Recent developments emphasize the propriety of affording the victim a chance to be heard at sentencing, but what about unsolicited advice from persons not directly concerned with the criminal case? A common manifestation of this problem is the correspondence people sometimes direct to the sentencing court. The Committee recommends that all correspondence of this type be filed and disclosed to the prosecutor and defense. The court should clearly indicate whether or not the information was relied on when sentence is imposed.

B. Plea Agreements Relating to Sentencing Information or Advocacy

Plea agreements relating to sentence recommendations are apparently quite common. For example, the defendant may agree to plead guilty to a crime with a 10-year maximum penalty in return for the prosecution agreement to recommend a sentence of 5 years. These agreements are considered to be legitimate as long as the defendant understands that the prosecutor's recommendation is not binding on the sentencing judge.

Recent Wisconsin cases illustrate a related type of plea agreement, one where the prosecutor agrees "not to oppose" a particular sentence or "to remain silent" at sentencing. The danger with these agreements is that they may result in concealing from the sentencing judge information which is highly relevant to sentencing. Wisconsin appellate courts have made it clear that it is improper to conceal relevant information from the sentencing judge and that plea agreements which purport to do so are invalid because they are contrary to public policy. A recent case illustrating this situation is State v. McQuay, 154 Wis.2d 116, 452 N.W.2d 377 (1990) [reversing 148 Wis.2d 823, 436 N.W.2d 905 (Ct. App. 1989)]. McQuay entered an "Alford" plea to 5 counts of sexual assault. The plea agreement called for the dismissal of 24 other sexual assault charges and further provided that they would not be considered at sentencing. The presentence report, however, contained 10 pages of information on the dismissed charges. The sentencing judge said he did not consider the 24 other charges, but noted that if he could "there wouldn't be enough years for this Court to give you." McQuay challenged the sentence on appeal, claiming the plea agreement was breached when the presentence report contained information on the dismissed charges. The court of appeals vacated the judgment on the grounds that the plea agreement not to reveal relevant information to the sentencing judge was void – it is "against public policy and cannot be respected by the courts." 148 Wis.2d 823, 826.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed, disagreeing with the factual conclusion that the agreement had called for withholding information from the judge. The supreme court read the agreement as a promise by the prosecutor to recommend to the sentencing court that it not consider the dismissed counts in imposing sentence. As such, it was a valid agreement and was not breached. The supreme court did not disagree with the court of appeals' legal conclusion that an agreement to withhold information is void as against public policy.

State v. Jorgensen, 137 Wis.2d 163, 404 N.W.2d 66 (Ct. App. 1987), illustrates the same problem with respect to a plea agreement that called for the state to "remain silent" at sentencing. At the sentencing hearing, the prosecutor interrupted defense counsel to call attention to a "factual discrepancy" in defense counsel's description of the facts of the offense. The court of appeals found that this statement was not a breach of the plea agreement and also held that any plea agreement that would call for the prosecutor to remain silent, regardless of the accuracy of statements made at sentencing, would be unenforceable as violating public policy. [Also see State v. Moederndorfer, 141 Wis.2d 823, 416 N.W.2d 627 (Ct. App. 1987): plea agreement to remain silent was not breached when state corrected the defendant's misstatement about the disposition of a codefendant's case.]

The general rule is clear: the parties cannot agree to limit the information the sentencing judge will consider.

Another problem with agreements calling for the prosecutor to remain silent is the difficulty in determining whether the agreement is complied with when information is provided by another government-related source. For example, what if the prosecutor remains silent but the presentence report recommends a harsh sentence? This problem may relate more directly to withdrawal of a guilty plea than to imposition of sentence, but the sentencing court should be alert to indications that this problem may exist.

C. Considering Unconstitutionally Obtained Evidence

In State v. Rush, 147 Wis.2d 225, 432 N.W.2d 688 (Ct. App. 1988), the court of appeals held that evidence suppressed because it was seized in violation of the 4th Amendment may be considered at sentencing. "We see no basis for a claim that consideration of the suppressed evidence at sentencing will inspire or encourage illegal searches. . . . Applying the exclusionary rule to sentencing would also unduly restrict a trial court's access to a broad range of evidence in determining a proper sentence." 147 Wis.2d 225, 230.

A leading federal case, however, indicates that there may be situations where the Fourth Amendment exclusionary rule might be applied to sentencing. In Verdugo v. United States, 402 F.2d 599 (9th Cir. 1968), the court excluded illegally seized evidence at sentencing because the illegal search was conducted after the regular criminal investigation was finished for the purpose of finding contraband and enhancing the possibility of a heavier sentence. LaFave, Search and Seizure, § 1.6(f), p. 137 (West 1987).

It is not clear whether the Rush rule would be applied to statements obtained in violation of the 5th or 6th Amendment. There may be two aspects to this problem. The first question is whether the 5th or 6th Amendment limits on interrogation apply to presentence interviews conducted to obtain sentencing information.

In Estelle v. Smith, 451 U.S. 454 (1981), the United States Supreme Court held that Miranda and the 6th Amendment required that a defendant be given warnings and enjoy the assistance of counsel at a psychiatric interview later used against the defendant at the penalty phase of a death penalty trial. In State v. Knapp, 111 Wis.2d 380, 330 N.W.2d 242 (Ct. App. 1983), the defendant argued that Estelle requires the presence of counsel under the 6th Amendment and Miranda warnings at an interview preceding the preparation of the presentence report.

On the Miranda issue, the court of appeals distinguished Estelle and concluded that warnings are not necessary.

> Unlike the situation in Estelle, the purpose of a presentence investigation is not to generate evidence to be used by the state in proving an essential element of its case against the accused. Rather, presentence reports are designed to gather information concerning a defendant's personality, social circumstances and general pattern of behavior, so that the judge can make an informed sentencing decision. The interview does not involve the accusatorial atmosphere characterized by the stationhouse confrontation in Miranda or the psychiatric examination on "future dangerousness" at issue in Estelle. Therefore, the Miranda safeguards should not be required.

111 Wis.2d 380, 386.

Knapp's argument based on the 6th Amendment right to counsel was also rejected, the court holding that Estelle did not require the presence of counsel, just the opportunity to get advice before the interview occurred.

Therefore, under Knapp, there can be no 5th or 6th Amendment violation at a presentence interview. There would be no grounds for arguing that an exclusionary rule based on the 5th or 6th Amendment could apply at the sentencing stage with respect to statements made during the presentence interview.

A second question is whether statements obtained outside a presentence interview, such as during a regular pretrial interrogation session, are admissible at sentencing if obtained in violation of 5th or 6th Amendment rights. Neither the United States Supreme Court nor the Wisconsin appellate courts have decided this question. Estelle v. Smith held that using such statements at sentencing was unconstitutional because they did incriminate the defendant in the sense of determining his punishment. Of course, Estelle v. Smith was a capital case, an important distinction that has been the basis for rules limited to the death penalty context.

VIII. Denying and Setting Parole Eligibility

There are three situations where a sentencing court is required or allowed to deny parole eligibility or to set a later parole eligibility date than called for by the generally applicable statute. This authority relates only to the "eligibility" date, that is, the date when the defendant may first be considered for parole release. The date of actual release on parole will continue to be determined by the Parole Commission.

A. Denying Parole for a "Persistent Repeater" – § 939.62(2m)

"Persistent repeater" is the term used to refer to those who are subject to imprisonment without the possibility of parole. The term originally applied only to those covered by the Wisconsin "three strikes" provision; 1997 Wisconsin Act 326 added certain offenders who have two convictions for certain child sex offenses.[25]

Subsection (2m)(a)2m. of § 939.62, originally enacted as part of the original "three strikes" provision, identifies the crimes that are considered to be "serious felonies." Subsection (2m)(b)1. provides that a person is a "persistent repeater" if he or she "has been convicted of a serious felony on 2 or more separate occasions at any time preceding the serious felony for which he or she presently is being sentenced. . . ."

Subsection (2m)(a)1m. of § 939.62, created by Act 326, identifies the crimes that are considered to be "serious child sex offenses." Subsection (2m)(b)2. provides that a person is a "persistent repeater" if he or she "has been convicted of a serious child sex offense on at least one occasion at any time preceding the date of violation of the serious child sex offense for which he or she presently is being sentenced. . . ."

If the person qualifies as a "persistent repeater" under either of these standards, the sentence for the serious felony or serious child sex offense for which he or she is presently being sentenced "is life imprisonment without the possibility of parole." § 939.62(2m)(c).

The constitutionality of the statute's original "three strikes" provisions was upheld in State v. Lindsey, 203 Wis.2d 423, 554 N.W.2d 215 (Ct. App. 1996).

The "persistent repeater" allegation must be included in the charging document and proven in the same manner as a regular repeater allegation. See, § 973.12(1). If it is properly alleged and proven, the sentence of life without parole is mandatory; there is no exercise of discretion on the part of the sentencing court.

Even though the life without parole sentence is mandatory, the defendant must still be accorded the statutory right to allocution. State v. Lindsey, 203 Wis.2d 423, 446.

B. Setting Parole Eligibility in Class A Felonies – § 973.014

The authority for setting the parole eligibility date for persons convicted of Class A felonies was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 412, with an effective date of July 1, 1988. The primary provision is § 973.014,[26] which, as amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 48 provides as follows:

> 973.014 Sentence of life imprisonment; parole eligibility determination; extended supervision eligibility determination. (1) Except as provided in sub. (2), when a court sentences a person to life imprisonment for a crime committed on or after July 1, 1988, but before December 31, 1999, the court shall make a parole eligibility determination regarding the person and choose one of the following options:
> (a) The person is eligible for parole under § 304.06(1).
> (b) The person is eligible for parole on a date set by the court. Under this paragraph, the court may set any later date than that provided in § 304.06(1), but may not set a date that occurs before the earliest possible parole eligibility date as calculated under § 304.06(1).
> (c) The person is not eligible for parole. This paragraph applies only if the court sentences a person for a crime committed on or after August 31, 1995, but before December 31, 1999.
>
> . . .
> (2) When a court sentences a person to life imprisonment under s. 939.62(2m)(c), the court shall provide that the sentence is without the possibility of parole or extended supervision.[27]

Subsection (1)(c) was created in 1995 to make it clear that a court could flatly deny parole eligibility. The original version of § 973.014 lacked a grant of that specific authority; the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that the sentencing court was required to set a date certain and could not deny eligibility outright. State v. Setagord, 187 Wis.2d 340, 523 N.W.2d 124 (Ct. App. 1994). On remand in the Setagord case, the sentencing court then set a parole eligibility date that exceeded the defendant's life expectancy. A second appeal followed. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "§ 973.014(1)(b) unambiguously grants the circuit court discretion to impose a parole eligibility date beyond a defendant's expected lifetime." State v. Setagord, 211 Wis.2d 397, 565 N.W.2d 506 (1997). With the creation of sub. (1)(c) courts can now provide that a sentence is to be without the possibility of parole and need not resort to the strategy of setting a date that the defendant could not be expected to reach.

Subsection (2) refers to the sentencing of "persistent repeaters" under § 939.62(2m), which requires a mandatory sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole. ["Persistent repeater" is the formal title for Wisconsin's "three strikes" law.]

Section 973.014 is silent regarding criteria for making the parole eligibility decision. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that the "factors that a sentencing court considers when imposing a sentence are the same factors that influence the determination of parole eligibility." State v. Borrell, 167 Wis.2d 749, 774, 482 N.W.2d 883 (1992), cited with approval in State v. Setagord, 211 Wis.2d 397, 416, 565 N.W.2d 506 (1997). Thus, it appears to the Committee that a court should refer to the regular criteria applicable to sentencing and try to relate them to the period of time that ought to elapse before the defendant sees the parole board rather than to the usual questions of prison or probation and, if prison, how long a term.

Note that the statute requires a specific finding in every Class A felony case. Unless the court orders that the defendant shall not be eligible for parole under sub. (1)(c), a determination must be made that parole eligibility will be as provided in § 304.06(1) or that eligibility will be at a later date than would be provided by following § 304.06(1). Section 304.06(1) establishes regular parole eligibility for a Class A felony at about 13 years, 4 months – 20 years, less the 1/3 reduction under § 302.11(1) (for what used to be called "good time").

Credit for presentence confinement under § 973.155 is not required to be awarded against a parole eligibility set by the court under § 973.014. State v. Chapman, 175 Wis.2d 231, 499 N.W.2d 223 (Ct. App. 1993). State v. Seeley, 212 Wis.2d 75, 567 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1997).

C. Setting Parole Eligibility in "Serious Felonies" – § 973.0135

A provision similar to § 973.014 is found in § 973.0135, Sentence for certain serious felonies; parole eligibility determination. This provision requires the court to set a parole eligibility date for certain offenders in other than Class A felonies. The statute applies to a person who is being sentenced for a "serious felony" and who has previously been convicted of a "serious felony" and sentenced to more than one year of imprisonment. Crimes that qualify as a "serious felony" are specified in sub. (1)(b). They are the same as those specified as "serious felonies" under § 939.62(2m)(a)2m. for purposes of the "persistent repeater" or "three strikes" law.

Section 973.0135 applies to sentences imposed for crimes committed on or after April 21, 1994, and requires the court to make a parole eligibility determination by choosing one of two options set forth in sub. (2):

> (a) The person is eligible for parole under s. 304.06(1).
> (b) The person is eligible for parole on a date set by the court. Under this paragraph, the court may not set a date that occurs before the earliest possible parole eligibility date as calculated under s. 304.06(1) and may not set a date that occurs later than two-thirds of the sentence imposed for the felony.

This section does not apply if the current "serious felony" is a crime punishable by life imprisonment; in that situation, § 973.014 will apply. The effect of § 973.0135(2)(b) is to allow a court to set a parole eligibility date that falls at a point after the regular eligibility date [25% of the sentence imposed] and not later than the date for mandatory release [two-thirds of the sentence imposed]. Regardless of the action taken by the sentencing court as to parole eligibility, persons convicted of a "serious felony" are now subject to only a "presumptive" mandatory release date. The parole commission decides whether to deny presumptive mandatory release. See § 302.11(1g)(b).[28]

IX. Stay of Execution of Sentence

Section 973.15(8) specifies the situations where execution of a sentence may be stayed:

> (8) (a) The sentencing court may stay execution of a sentence of imprisonment or to the intensive sanctions program only:
> 1. For legal cause;
> 2. Under § 973.09(1)(a); or
> 3. For not more than 60 days.
> (b) If a court sentences a person under s. 973.03(5)(b), this subsection applies only to the first period of imprisonment.

"Legal cause" under sub. (a)1. has been interpreted to mean for the purpose of allowing the defendant to pursue within the Wisconsin court system some relief against the sentence or conviction. Reinex v. State, 51 Wis. 152 (1881); Weston v. State, 28 Wis.2d 136, 135 N.W.2d 820 (1965). A stay to allow the defendant's release while a federal habeas corpus petition is pursued is not authorized in Wisconsin. State v. Shumate, 107 Wis.2d 460, 319 N.W.2d 834 (1981).

The "for legal cause" basis for staying execution of sentence was applied in State v. Szulczewski, 216 Wis.2d 494, 574 N.W.2d 660 (1998), in a case where a person already subject to a commitment as not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect was convicted of a crime and faced criminal sentencing. The trial court sentenced the person to five years in prison and ordered that the sentence begin immediately, concluding that immediate commencement of the criminal sentence was required by § 973.15. The supreme court held that the commitment could provide "legal cause" for stay of execution of sentence under § 973.15(8)(a)1. The sentencing court may exercise discretion in determining whether to stay execution of the new prison sentence, balancing the purposes of the commitment with the traditional purposes of criminal sentencing: deterrence, rehabilitation, retribution, and segregation.

Subsection (a)3. was created in response to State v. Braun, 100 Wis.2d 77, 301 N.W.2d 180 (1981), which held that in the absence of special statutory authorization, Wisconsin courts lacked authority to grant a delay to allow a defendant to put his affairs in order. Subsection (a)3. apparently authorizes that type of stay, although it would be limited to 60 days. The Attorney General has advised that it is not permissible to stay a jail sentence beyond the 60 day limit recognized in sub. (a)3. because of jail overcrowding. OAG 39-87, July 13, 1987.

X. Resentencing After a Successful Appeal

In State v. Carter, 208 Wis.2d 142, 560 N.W.2d 256 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court clarified the standard that applies when it is necessary to resentence a defendant who has successfully appealed the initial conviction or sentence. A sentencing court in that situation is to "consider all information relevant about a defendant, including information about events and circumstances either that the sentencing court was unaware of at the initial sentencing or that occurred after the initial sentencing." 208 Wis.2d 141, 146. The decision resolved a conflict between two decisions of the court of appeals: State v. Pierce, 117 Wis.2d 83, 342 N.W.2d 776 (Ct. App. 1983), held that an increased sentence could be supported by reference to the fact that the defendant had been arrested for two batteries committed after the initial sentencing; State v. Solles, 169 Wis.2d 556, 485 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1992), held that a resentencing court could not consider information favorable to the defendant that occurred after the initial sentence was imposed. Carter overruled Solles.

The Carter decision also rejected the distinction proposed by the state that would have treated differently cases where the entire conviction was reversed and cases where just the sentence was vacated. Carter held that both cases are to be treated the same: when resentencing is required for any reason, the initial sentencing is a nullity and ceases to exist. The court's role is the same at resentencing as at the initial sentencing and the court should have complete, accurate and current information. 208 Wis.2d 141, 154.

Carter leaves intact the basic principle applicable to resentencing after successful appeal: the defendant is not to receive a harsher sentence as punishment for the successful exercise of the right to appeal. Due process principles protect against vindictiveness by requiring that a harsher sentence must be "based upon objective information concerning identifiable conduct on the part of the defendant occurring after the time of the original sentencing proceeding." 208 Wis.2d 141, 148, quoting North Carolina v. Pearce, 395 U.S. 711, 726 (1969). Also see State v. Stubbendick, 110 Wis.2d 693, 329 N.W.2d 399 (1983).

COMMENT

SM-34 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1990 and 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 1999 and involved a general updating and the addition of new material at sections II.D., V., VIII., IX., and X.

1. The American Bar Association Standards for Criminal Justice were reenacted in a second edition in 1980. This provision was reenacted as Standard 20-2.3(c), with the exception of the last sentence which was deleted.

2. The equivalent provision in the second edition of the ABA Standards (see note 1, supra) is Standard 18-2.2(a), Sentencing Alternatives and Procedures:

> (a) The sentence imposed in each case should call for the minimum sanction which is consistent with the protection of the public and the gravity of the crime. In determining the gravity of the offense and the public's need for protection, sentencing authorities best serve the public interest and the appearance of justice when they give serious consideration to the goal of sentencing equality and the need to avoid unwarranted disparities.

The revised standard deletes reference to "the rehabilitative needs of the defendant" as a criteria for deciding when confinement is called for. See note 3, below.

3. This standard was revised in the 1980 edition of the ABA Standards and is found in part in Standard 18-2.5(c):

> (c) A sentence not involving total confinement is to be preferred in the absence of affirmative reasons to the contrary. Examples of legitimate reasons for the defendant selection of total confinement in a given case are:
> > (i) Confinement is necessary in order to protect the public from further serious criminal activity by the defendant; or > > (ii) Confinement is necessary so as not to unduly depreciate the seriousness of the offense and thereby foster disrespect for the law.
> On the other hand, neither community hostility to the defendant nor the apparent need of the defendant for rehabilitation or treatment provides acceptable reasons for imposing a sentence of total confinement.

Former Standard 1.3(b) appears at Standard 18-2.3(vi) of the second edition, without change.

4. Sections 973.013(4) and 972.15(2m); State v. Jones, 151 Wis.2d 488, 444 N.W.2d 760 (Ct. App. 1989). See Sec. V., this Special Material.

5. Sections 48.35(1)(b) and 938.35(1)(a); Lange v. State, 54 Wis.2d 569, 196 N.W.2d 680 (1972); State v. Johnson, 105 Wis.2d 657, 314 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1982).

6. Austin v. State, 49 Wis.2d 727, 183 N.W.2d 56 (1971).

7. United States v. Grayson, 438 U.S. 41 (1978). Grayson reaffirmed that it is not permissible to impose an added term for suspected perjury. However, the defendant's false testimony is considered relevant to the defendant's prospects for rehabilitation and therefore may be relied on by the sentencing judge to determine the appropriate sentence. The Wisconsin rule appears to be the same. See Lange v. State, cited above, note 5, and Zastrow v. State, 62 Wis.2d 381, 215 N.W.2d 426 (1974).

8. State v. Olson, 127 Wis.2d 412, 380 N.W.2d 375 (Ct. App. 1985). Also see Roberts v. United States, 445 U.S. 552 (1980), where the court held that a defendant's refusal to name his suppliers in a drug conspiracy was properly considered at sentencing. In Roberts, the defendant made no claim before the sentencing judge that his refusal was based on concerns of self-incrimination or fears of physical retaliation. Had it been, the argument would have "merited serious consideration. . . . But the mere possibility of unarticulated explanations or excuses for antisocial conduct does not make that conduct irrelevant to the sentencing decision." 445 U.S. 552, 559.

9. In State v. Bobbitt, 178 Wis.2d 11, 503 N.W.2d 11 (Ct. App. 1993), the defendant was tried on charges of attempted first degree intentional homicide while armed, robbery, and false imprisonment. The jury acquitted him of the attempted homicide charge and convicted him on the others. In sentencing, the court referred to the violence that accompanied the robbery; the violence had been the basis for the attempted homicide charge. The court of appeals concluded that "the trial court did not misuse its discretion when it considered the violent conduct surrounding the attempted homicide for which Bobbitt was acquitted." 178 Wis.2d 11, 18.

The Bobbitt result is consistent with statements in prior Wisconsin cases, but there was no express authority on the issue. [See, for example, State v. Marhal, 172 Wis.2d 491, 501-04, 493 N.W.2d 758 (Ct. App. 1992), concluding that there would have no error even if the trial court in that case had considered the defendant culpable of a more serious crime where the jury returned a verdict on a lesser included offense.] The United States Supreme Court has reached the same conclusion in a case challenging provisions of the Federal Sentencing Guidelines which allow consideration of acquittal conduct. United States v. Watts, 518 U.S. 148 (1997).

10. Hanneman v. State, 50 Wis.2d 689, 184 N.W.2d 896 (1971); Kubart v. State, 70 Wis.2d 94, 233 N.W.2d 404 (1975); Jung v. State, 32 Wis.2d 541, 145 N.W.2d 684 (1966); and United States v. Wiley, 267 F.2d 453 (7th Cir. 1959), 278 F.2d 500 (7th Cir. 1960).

11. Scales v. State, 64 Wis.2d 485, 219 N.W.2d 286 (1974); Williams v. State, 79 Wis.2d 235, 255 N.W.2d 504 (1977).

12. See Kubart v. State, and United States v. Wiley, cited in note 10, supra. It is proper, however, to consider a wholly frivolous defense and the defendant's conduct at trial. Finger v. State, 40 Wis.2d 103, 161 N.W.2d 272 (1968); Lange v. State, cited in note 5, supra.

13. Several Wisconsin cases have discussed claims by defendants that the sentencing court improperly considered religious or political beliefs or associations. The general rule appears to be that beliefs and associations protected by the First Amendment may not be considered at sentencing unless a reliable connection is established between the criminal conduct and the defendant's beliefs and associations.

The United States Supreme Court addressed the issue in connection with capital sentencing in Dawson v. Delaware, 503 U.S. 159 (1992). Evidence was introduced relating to the defendant's membership in the Aryan Brotherhood, a white supremacist prison gang. The court did not hold that consideration of that evidence was banned in all cases, but found that the state had failed to show how it was connected to any matter relevant to sentencing.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has addressed this issue several times. In State v. Fuerst, 181 Wis.2d 903, 512 N.W.2d 243 (Ct. App. 1994), the court found that the sentencing court's remarks about the defendant's lack of religious beliefs and failure to attend church constituted an erroneous exercise of discretion. It is not improper "to include information about religious beliefs and practices in presentence reports as part of the description of the defendant's 'whole person,'" 181 Wis.2d 903, 913, but that information cannot be relied on in sentencing unless a relationship is established between those beliefs and the criminal conduct.

In State v. Marsh, 177 Wis.2d 643, 502 N.W.2d 899 (Ct. App. 1993), the defendant claimed his sentencing was tainted by the inclusion of evidence that he studied Odinism, the white supremacy religion of the Vikings, and possessed other material relating to the Ku Klux Klan, Nazi Germany, and the National Association for the Advancement of White People. The state conceded that some of this information was improperly considered because it was unrelated to the crime, but the court of appeals found it was harmless error.

In State v. J.E.B., 161 Wis.2d 655, 469 N.W.2d 192 (Ct. App. 1991), the court of appeals upheld the sentencing court's consideration of information showing that the defendant read books including graphic descriptions of adults having sexual contact with children. Although the books are presumably protected by the First Amendment, a sufficient relationship was shown between them and the defendant's criminal activity – sexual assault of a child.

Both Fuerst and J.E.B. apply a test articulated in United States v. Lemon, 723 F.2d 922, 936 (D.C. Cir. 1983): "due process at sentencing requires that before a court may consider a defendant's associations, there must be some identifiable link between those associations and the crime for which the defendant was convicted."

14. See note 16, below.

15. The intent of this statement is to emphasize that the sentence should not be structured as to negate the effect of § 973.155 which requires credit against the sentence for time spent in presentence confinement. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has identified the procedure that should be followed:

> . . . trial judges are first to determine and impose an appropriate sentence independently of any time previously served. Only then should time served be determined and become relevant to the > final sentence imposed on the conviction. The time previously served should not be a factor in the exercise of sentencing discretion. . . .

State v. Walker, 117 Wis.2d 579, 586, 345 N.W.2d 413 (1984). Also see Struzik v. State, 90 Wis.2d 357, 279 N.W.2d 922 (1979), and Klimas v. State, 75 Wis.2d 244, 249 N.W.2d 285 (1977), requiring the same procedure.

Recent decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have continued to list "pretrial confinement" as one of the many permissible sentencing factors. See, for example, State v. Jones, 151 Wis.2d 488, 495, 444 N.W.2d 760 (Ct. App. 1989), and State v. Larsen, 141 Wis.2d 412, 427, 415 N.W.2d 535 (Ct. App. 1987). However, these cases have not explicitly focused on the issue that is of concern here. They appear simply to have repeated the long list of permissible sentencing factors that can ultimately be traced to cases that preceded the clarification of the right to credit for presentence confinement and the jail credit statute. Thus, the procedure set forth in Walker ought to be followed. (Awarding credit for presentence confinement is discussed in SM-34A, Determining Sentence Credit Under § 973.155.)

16. Also see State v. Fuerst, 181 Wis.2d 903, 915, 512 N.W.2d 243 (Ct. App. 1994), citing State v. Wickstrom, 118 Wis.2d 339, 348 N.W.2d 183 (Ct. App. 1984) for the proposition that "a sentencing court does not erroneously exercise its discretion by noting a defendant's lack of remorse as long as the court does not attempt to compel an admission of guilt or punish the defendant for maintaining his innocence."

17. In State v. Panknin, 217 Wis.2d 200, 204, 579 N.W.2d 52 (Ct. App. 1998), the court concluded that "irreversible harm would be done to the judicial process by opening the private notes of the court to litigants." The court also suggested a method for handling notes:

> A judge's personal notes should not be placed in the clerk of court's file. It is too easy for a clerk to become distracted and forget to seal the notes; or, there is nothing preventing a person reviewing the file from opening sealed notes. A better practice is to keep a personal filing cabinet for notes in chambers. A court can use file folders labeled with the case number or keep notes on the computer's hard drive using the case number for the file name. The confidential nature of the notes is secure if the court keeps them in chambers and out of the public court file.

217 Wis.2d 200, 204, at footnote 2.

18. 1989 Wisconsin Act 142 (effective date: March 31, 1990), created § 973.033 to read:

> Sentencing; restriction on firearm possession. Whenever a court imposes a sentence or places a defendant on probation regarding a felony conviction, the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under s. 941.29.

Section 941.29 makes it a Class E felony for a convicted felon to possess a firearm.

19. Section 973.034 provides:

> Whenever a court imposes a sentence or places a defendant on probation regarding a conviction under s. 940.22(2) or 940.225(2)(c), if the victim is under 18 years of age at the time of the offense, or a conviction under s. 948.02(2), 948.025(1), 948.05(1), 948.06 or 948.07(1), (2), (3) or (4), the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under s. 948.13.

Section 948.13 makes it a Class C felony for a person previously convicted of a "serious child sex offense" to "engage in an occupation or participate in a volunteer position that requires him or her to work or interact primarily and directly with children under 16 years of age."

The requirement that courts inform defendants at sentencing and the new criminal offense under § 948.13 both apply to offenses committed on or after May 6, 1997, the effective date of 1995 Wisconsin Act 265 which created both statutes.

20. Section 973.048(1) provides that when a court sentences or places on probation a person convicted of a designated sex offense, "the court shall require the person to comply with the reporting requirements under s. 301.45. Subsection (2) of § 973.048 provides that when a person is sentenced or placed on probation for any violation of "ch. 940, 944 or 948 or ss. 943.01 to 943.15, the court may require the person to comply with the reporting requirements under s. 301.45 if the court determines that the underlying conduct was sexually motivated, as defined in s. 980.01(5), and that it would be in the interest of public protection to have the person report under s. 301.45."

The reference to "s. 301.45" is to the statute requiring that sex offenders register with the department of corrections. The effective date of § 973.048 is June 1, 1997.

21. Section 973.18(2) requires that the trial judge personally inform the defendant at the time of sentencing of the right to seek postconviction relief and, if indigent, the right to the assistance of the state public defender. See SM-33, Information on Postconviction Relief.

22. See note 18, supra.

23. See notes 19 and 20, supra.

24. See note 21, supra.

25. The effective date of 1997 Wisconsin Act 326 was July 16, 1998. Section 15 of the Act provides that "the treatment of section 939.62(2m)(b)2. of the statutes first applies to serious child sex offenses committed on the effective date of this subsection, but does not preclude the counting of other serious child sex offenses as prior serious child sex offenses for sentencing a person as a persistent repeater under section 939.62(2m)(b)2. of the statutes, as created by this act."

26. The constitutionality of § 973.014 as originally enacted was upheld in State v. Borrell, 167 Wis.2d 749 482 N.W.2d 883 (1992).

27. The references restricting applicability to offenses committed " before December 31, 1999" recognize that the "truth in sentencing" system created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 283 is scheduled to take effect on that date. "Extended supervision" is a component of that system.

28. The provision for "presumptive" mandatory release was created at the same as § 973.0135. See 1993 Wisconsin Act 194. Both provisions apply to sentences for offenses committed on or after April 21, 1994.

SM-34A DETERMINING SENTENCE CREDIT UNDER SECTION 973.155

CONTENTS

I. Introduction

Wisconsin Stat. § 973.155(1) establishes the basic rule governing sentence credit: An offender is entitled to sentence credit for time he or she spent in custody in connection with the course of conduct for which sentence is imposed. In addition, § 973.155(2) requires a sentencing court to make a specific finding of the number of days for which sentence credit is to be granted to an offender under § 973.155 and to include that finding in the judgment of conviction. The purpose of this Special Material is to assist the court in making a proper determination of sentence credit.

A sentencing court must give credit accorded by the statute because an offender may not serve more time than that for which he is sentenced.[1] Sentence credit has the effect of reducing the amount of time the offender serves in jail or, for bifurcated sentences, in prison under the term of confinement before reaching the date on which he or she is released to the term of extended supervision. That is because, with one exception,[2] when credit is granted an offender's sentence is computed as having begun as many days before the date of sentencing as days credit have been granted. For example, an offender sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment, consisting of five years of confinement and five years of extended supervision, and entitled to six months of credit will be released to extended supervision four years, six months from the date of sentencing.

The basic rule for determining credit is easily stated, but its application can be difficult, particularly in situations in which an offender has multiple cases with different periods of pretrial custody and concurrent or consecutive sentences. To help the sentencing court understand and apply the basic rule, this Special Material proceeds as follows. First, it explains the basic rule governing sentence credit. Next, it discusses procedural and technical aspects of making a credit determination. It then provides a detailed explanation of the basic rule used to determine the number of days for which credit is due. After that explanation, it discusses situations that arise with some regularity, and illustrates, with reference to case law, if available, how to determine credit in those situations. Finally, it provides information about correcting a finding of sentence credit.

II. The Basic Rule

The basic rule for determining sentence credit is set forth in § 973.155(1) and (1m), which read as follows:

> (1)(a) A convicted offender shall be given credit toward the service of his or her sentence for all days spent in custody in connection with the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed. As used in this subsection, "actual days spent in custody" includes, without limitation by enumeration, confinement related to an offense for which the offender is ultimately sentenced, or for any other sentence arising out of the same course of conduct, which occurs:

1. While the offender is awaiting trial;
2. While the offender is being tried; and
3. While the offender is awaiting imposition of sentence after trial.

(b) The categories in par. (a) and sub. (1m) include custody of the convicted offender which is in whole or in part the result of a probation, extended supervision or parole hold under s. 302.113 (8m), 302.114 (8m), 304.06 (3), or 973.10 (2) placed upon the person for the same course of conduct as that resulting in the new conviction.

(1m) A convicted offender shall be given credit toward the service of his or her sentence for all days spent in custody as part of a substance abuse treatment program that meets the requirements of s. 165.95 (3), as determined by the department of justice under s. 165.95 (9) and (10), for any offense arising out of the course of conduct that led to the person's placement in that program.

The basic rule, then, is that entitlement to sentence credit depends on the offender having been in custody in connection with the course of conduct for which sentence is imposed.[3] A defendant seeking sentence credit has the burden of demonstrating both custody and its connection with the course of conduct for which the sentence was imposed.[4] Entitlement does not depend on the offender's inability to post bond.

The focus of this Special Material is the determination of sentence credit for days spent in custody up to the date of sentencing, as identified in the three periods of time listed in § 973.155(1)(a).[5] It will also address credit when imposing sentence in sentence withheld – probation ordered cases, which may include time the offender spent in custody while on probation.

III. Procedure for Making the Finding of Sentence Credit in All Cases

A. Tell the parties to be prepared to address sentence credit at sentencing

A great saving of judicial time and energy can be realized if an accurate determination of sentence credit is made at the time the judgment of conviction is entered, when the facts are fresh, records are available, and the defendant and counsel are present to address the issue. Therefore, the court should require the parties to be prepared to address the sentence credit issue at the time of sentencing. Disputes about the number of days for which credit is due should be anticipated and settled before judgment is entered, by stipulation[6] or, if necessary, further hearing. Accurate information and the informed participation of prosecutor and defense counsel are essential.

B. Make a finding after the proper disposition has been determined

In all cases, the court should first follow its usual procedure to determine the appropriate disposition. After the decision as to type and length of disposition has been made, the finding of the number of days for which sentence credit is due should be made.[7]

C. Make a finding in every case

The finding regarding sentence credit should be made in every case, including those where the disposition is probation or the sentence is to home detention under § 973.03(4).[8] Although § 973.155 does not explicitly require that the sentence credit determination be made in cases where sentence is withheld and probation ordered, making the finding in probation cases will document the finding of credit due up to the date of disposition and make it available if probation is later revoked. (NOTE: The finding on the original judgment will relate only to the credit due as of the date of that judgment; additional credit may also be appropriate at the time of revocation for custody during the revocation process. The consideration of other periods of time in the sentence withheld – probation ordered and revoked case is discussed below, in Section V.B.)

In a case in which the disposition is probation and the court orders jail time as a condition under § 973.09(4), any sentence credit the court grants does not have to be credited against the condition time, although the court has discretion to do so.[9]

D. Make the finding in terms of a number of days

The defendant is entitled to a day of sentence credit for each calendar day during which he or she spent at least part of the day in custody. State v. Johnson, 2018 WI App 2, 379 Wis.2d 684, 906 N.W.2d 704, 2018 WI App 2, ¶8. The only exception to this rule is that the defendant is not entitled to sentence credit for the day on which he or she is sentenced because the Department of Corrections counts that day toward the service of the sentence. State v. Kontny, 2020 WI App 30, ¶¶10-12, 392 Wis. 2d 311, 943 N.W.2d 923. Only the number of days for which credit is due should be determined by the court. That number should be entered on the judgment of conviction. The standard judgment of conviction form adopted by the Judicial Conference and mandated for use under § 971.025(1) includes a blank for entering a finding of the number of days of credit.

The finding should be in terms of the number of days and should not be expressed as weeks, months, years, or fractions thereof. The sentencing court should not determine the date sentence is to commence. The prison registrar or jail custodian will compute the sentence. As noted in the Introduction, the sentence will be computed as though it had begun as many days before the date of sentencing as days credit have been granted. That is, the sentence of an offender sentenced by the court on May 1, and entitled to 30 days sentence credit, will be computed as though it began on April 1. The date on which the offender is eligible for release will be calculated by the prison registrar or jail custodian as though the sentence had begun April 1.

E. If no credit is due, make that finding

The court should make a specific finding even when it determines that no credit is due. Insert "No" or "0" in the blank provided for the sentence credit finding. This will avoid future questions about whether credit was considered.

F. Apply the credit to the sentence being served

When sentence credit is applied at the time of sentencing, the circuit court should apply sentence credit to the term of incarceration.[10] For instance, if an offender is entitled to credit applicable to charges for which he receives both an imposed sentence and a stayed sentence, the credit must be applied to the imposed sentence.[11]

IV. An Explanation of the Basic Rule

The basic rule established by § 973.155 is that an offender is entitled to sentence credit if the person was (A) in custody and the custody was (B) in connection with (C) the course of conduct for which sentence is imposed. If one of these requirements is not met, the defendant is not entitled to credit.

A. In custody…

"In custody" is not defined in § 973.155, but the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that "for purposes of sentence credit an offender's status constitutes custody whenever the offender is subject to an escape charge for leaving that status." State v. Magnuson, 2000 WI 19, ¶31, 233 Wis.2d 40, 606 N.W.2d 536.

This means the inquiry into whether an offender was in "custody" begins with the definition of "custody" provided in the escape statute, § 946.42(1)(a)1. In the majority of cases, application of that definition will be sufficient. In some cases, however, the court may also have to consider whether the offender was in a status that subjected him or her to an escape charge for leaving that status.

1. "Custody" based on liability under the escape statute

a. "Custody" as defined in § 946.42(1)(a)1.

Section 946.42(1)(a)1. provides that "custody" includes without limitation the following:

> a. Actual custody of an institution, including a juvenile correctional facility, as defined in s. 938.02 (10p), a secured residential care center for children and youth, as defined in s. 938.02 (15g), a juvenile detention facility, as defined in > s. 938.02 (10r), a Type 2 residential care center for children and youth, as defined in s. 938.02 (19r), a facility used for the detention of persons detained under > s. 980.04 (1), a facility specified in s. 980.065, or a juvenile portion of a county jail.[12]
> b. Actual custody of a peace officer or institution guard.
> bm. Actual custody or authorized physical control of a correctional officer.
> c. Actual custody or authorized physical control of a probationer, parolee, or person on extended supervision by the department of corrections.
> e. Constructive custody of persons placed on supervised release under ch. 980.
> f. Constructive custody of prisoners and juveniles subject to an order under s. 48.366, 938.183, 938.34 (4d), (4h), or (4m), or 938.357 (4) or (5)(e) temporarily outside the institution whether for the purpose of work, school, medical care, a leave granted under s. 303.068, a temporary leave or furlough granted to a juvenile, or otherwise.

g. Custody of the sheriff of the county to which the prisoner was transferred after conviction.

h. Custody of a person subject to a confinement order under s. 973.09(4).

The following situations are within this definition of custody:

- Detention in the county jail before bail is set or thereafter;
- Detention in the county jail during nonworking hours as a condition of bail release or probation;[13]
- Detention in jail in another state when that detention results at least in part from a Wisconsin warrant;[14]
- Time spent in secure juvenile detention pending a waiver to adult court, when jurisdiction is waived and an adult sentence is imposed;[15]
- Time spent at an in-house rehabilitation center when "temporarily outside the [jail] for the purpose of medical care."[16]

b. "Custody" based on unauthorized departure from certain correctional settings

Under Magnuson a person who is in a correctional program that does not constitute "custody" under the definition in § 946.42(1)(a) is still entitled to credit if the statute that creates the correctional program allows for an escape charge for unauthorized departure from the program. Magnuson, 233 Wis.2d 40, ¶¶26-30. In most cases this basis for "custody" will not come into play, as the correctional programs covered by the definition are for offenders who have already been sentenced. Nonetheless, such claims may arise in cases where an offender was in custody on more than one case or charge, so the court and counsel should be aware of the programs that are covered. They include:

- The community residential confinement program under § 301.046;
- The intensive sanctions program under § 301.048;

- Jail labor off the institution grounds under § 302.37(4);
- Home detention under § 302.425;
- Prison labor off the institution grounds under § 303.03;
- Work release plans for prison inmates under § 303.065; and
- County work camps under § 303.10;
- Placement of a juvenile offender in a setting specified under §§ 938.357(4)(a), 938.533(3)(a), 938.538(4)(a), and 938.539(1).

2. Participation in certain AODA programs covered by § 973.155(1m)

Under § 973.155(1m), a person is entitled to credit "for all days spent in custody as part of a substance abuse treatment program that meets the requirements of s. 165.95(3), as determined by the Office of Justice Assistance under s. 165.95(9) and (10) for any offense arising out of the course of conduct that led to the person's placement in that program." The substance abuse treatment programs referred to are those mandated for participants in a qualified "treatment" court.

The Committee concluded that the standard for determining whether the person's status constituted "custody" for purposes of sub. (1m) is the same standard that applies under sub. (1): If the offender was subject to an escape charge for leaving the status, sentence credit should be granted for time spent in that status. Further, § 973.155(1m) is clear that credit for the time the offender was in the treatment program may be applied only to the sentence for the offense being handled in the treatment court.

3. Custody during competency proceeding commitments.

Under Wis. Stat. § 971.14(2)(a), a person committed to a mental health facility for an inpatient competency examination is deemed to be in custody under § 973.155 while he or she is in the facility. Under Wis. Stat. § 971.14(5)(a)3., the days a person spends in a commitment for competency treatment, whether inpatient or outpatient, are also considered days spent in custody under § 973.155.

4. Situations not considered to constitute "custody"

Not included within the definitions of "custody" for sentence credit purposes are the following situations:

- Conditions of release on bond that do not involve spending parts of each day in the county jail;[17]

- Voluntary participation in drug, alcohol, or other treatment programs even though the offender may not be completely free of all restraint on his liberty during such program,[18] unless the program is covered under § 973.155(1m);

- Home detention under a federal consent decree designed to reduce jail overcrowding;[19]

- Time spent on electronic monitoring as a condition of probation.[20]

- Time spent in the community after the person reports to jail but is turned away due to overcrowding or after the person is released early from a period of confinement, even though the person was turned away or released early through no fault of his or her own.[21]

B. …in connection with…

1. Determining whether a connection exists

The requirement that custody be "in connection with" the course of conduct means simply that the custody must be, at least in part, the result of a legal status (arrest, bail, Department of Corrections hold, court order, etc.) stemming from the course of conduct for which sentence is being imposed. If the offender was under restraint for reasons related to the course of conduct, credit is required.[22]

The connection between the custody and the conduct for which sentence is imposed must be a factual connection, not just a "procedural" or "tangential" one.[23] For example, the fact that an offender is sentenced in multiple cases at the same time does not create a connection between custody and the sentences imposed.[24]

Where there are multiple charges an offender's custody may be "in connection with" one charge but not another. Thus, the filing of a detainer against someone already in custody on other charges does not result in "custody" on the charges covered by the detainer.[25] Similarly, an offender is in general not entitled to sentence credit under § 973.155 for custody that is being served in satisfaction of another unrelated criminal sentence.[26]

For example, if an offender serving a sentence for theft is charged with battery to another inmate, his custody is connected only to the theft sentence, not to the battery charge, as long as he is serving that theft sentence.[27]

As another example, assume a person is released on personal recognizance on one charge but later is arrested on a different charge and remains in custody as a result of an inability to post cash bail. When sentenced, the person is entitled to credit only on the sentence for the charge on which he was held in custody. This is true even if the charge on which he was in custody was bail jumping based on a violation of the conditions of the personal recognizance bond in the other case.[28]

2. A connection between custody and a charge may be "severed"

When an offender has multiple charges, a period of custody may initially be connected to all of the charges, but an event relating to one of the charges may "sever" that connection. Once the connection between custody and a particular charge is severed, the offender no longer earns credit toward that charge.

The most common way for a connection between custody and multiple charges to be severed is by sentencing on one of the charges. For instance, assume a person is arrested and held in custody in two separate cases, A and B. If he is sentenced in Case A before he is sentenced in Case B, the sentencing in Case A severs the connection between the custody and Case B, and he is in custody solely for the conviction in Case A. Thus, the person is not entitled to credit toward Case B for any time in custody after being sentenced in Case A.[29]

Another common way for the connection between custody and pending charges to be severed is for the offender to commence serving a previously imposed and stayed sentence after revocation of probation or be returned to prison after revocation of extended supervision. In those situations, relevant statutes provide that the offender commences the previously imposed sentence upon entering the prison system.[30]

C. …the course of conduct for which sentence is being imposed

The use of "course of conduct" rather than a more limited term, such as "offense" or "crime," suggests that credit is to extend to periods of custody that may not have been caused by the specific crime for which sentence is ultimately imposed. Credit is required in at least four situations which raise the "course of conduct" issue:

1. Where several crimes were charged as a result of a single course of conduct, but the offender is convicted of only one crime. Thus, an offender held in custody as a result of charges of theft, burglary, and battery, all resulting from a single incident, must receive sentence credit even if he is convicted of only one of the crimes charged;

2. Where offenses for which the person spent time in custody are "read in" for purposes of sentencing in another case, the offender is entitled to credit for the custody on the read-in offenses, regardless of whether the read-in offenses are factually connected to the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed;[31]

3. Where the offender is convicted of a crime which is a lesser included offense of the crime originally charged. Thus, an offender is entitled to credit if he was arrested for and charged with armed robbery even if he is convicted of the lesser included crime of theft; and

4. Where the offender is held in custody on a probation, parole, or extended supervision hold which is issued due to the course of conduct for which sentence is imposed. (See § 973.155(1)(b).) Credit will be due toward both the sentence for the course of conduct and the sentence in the case in which the hold was issued up to the time the defendant begins serving one of the sentences, unless the sentences are consecutive.[32]

Note, however, that "course of conduct" does not mean "criminal episode." In State v. Tuescher, 226 Wis.2d 465, 595 N.W.2d 443 (Ct. App. 1999), the court held "a defendant earns credit toward a future sentence while serving another sentence only when both sentences are imposed for the same specific acts." Id., 479.[33]

V. Applying the Basic Rule in Common Situations

A. The credit determination to make at the time of original disposition in all cases

The determination to be made at the time of original disposition in all cases is the period of time the offender spent in custody in connection with the course of conduct up to the date of sentencing. The statute identifies three periods of time, namely, those occurring:

1) while the offender is awaiting trial;
2) while the offender is being tried; and
3) while the offender is awaiting imposition of sentence after trial.

B. Imposing sentence after probation has been revoked in a sentence withheld case

1. Determining sentence credit at the time of sentencing after revocation

The basic procedure outlined above should have been followed when the original disposition was ordered in the sentence withheld – probation ordered case. If probation is revoked and an offender is returned to court for imposition of sentence, another sentence credit determination must be made. Three separate periods of time are relevant to the new sentence credit determination:

- Days in custody prior to original disposition – this finding should be the judgment of conviction entered at the time of original disposition;

- Days in custody after original disposition and through the date of probation revocation (for example, conditional jail time, holds, or sanction time) – this finding should be in the revocation order and warrant issued by the department or in the revocation summary provided by the department; and

- Days in custody after revocation, awaiting imposition of sentence – this finding must be made by the sentencing court.

2. "Custody" during the period of probation

Questions may arise about what constitutes "custody in connection with the course of conduct" in the sentence withheld case. These relate primarily to whether certain restrictive situations constitute "custody." It is clear that time spent in jail awaiting revocation should be credited. But restrictions on an offender during the probationary period raise questions:

a. Jail time as a condition of probation

Section 973.155 is not explicit about whether sentence credit is required for time spent in the county jail as a condition of probation. However, the definition of "custody" under the escape statute expressly covers time spent in jail as a condition of probation.[34] That means the offender was in custody while serving that condition time and is therefore entitled to credit for that time toward a sentence imposed after revocation of probation.

b. Time in a treatment facility as a condition of probation

If a probationer spent time in, for example, a drug treatment facility, he or she will be entitled to credit for that time if one of the following applies:

1. The person's status was such that he or she was in "custody" under the standard discussed above in Section IV.A 1, because the offender was subject to an escape charge for leaving the status.

2. The treatment program is covered under § 973.155(1m) as discussed in Section IV.A 2.

C. Sentence credit in multiple sentence situations

Proper determination of sentence credit can be complex in cases where several sentences are involved. The possible situations and relationships are endless.

Problems can be minimized if the court informs itself about the credit applicable to any previously imposed sentence and ensures that each judgment for the sentences it imposes has a finding of sentence credit. This can most easily be achieved by requiring the parties to come to court prepared to discuss and settle the sentence credit issue.

In light of the basic rule discussed above, in Section IV, the Committee recommends the following guiding principles in multiple sentence situations:

- When sentence A is to run concurrently with sentence B, the custody credited to sentence A must be factually connected to the course of conduct for which sentence A is imposed.

- When sentence A is to run consecutively to sentence B, the custody factually connected to sentence A is credited to the sentence only if the custody has not already been credited to sentence B. The aim is to credit the total sentence (consisting of all consecutive sentences put together) with one day for each day spent in custody without duplication of credit for time in custody in connection with more than one of the sentences.

1. Concurrent sentences

When concurrent sentences are imposed for offenses arising from the same course of conduct, sentence credit is to be determined as a total number of days and is to be credited against each sentence imposed. Credit against each sentence is required because credit against only one sentence would be negated by the concurrent sentence. Thus, if the credit was not awarded against both sentences, the offender would not receive the credit to which he is entitled.[35]

However, if concurrent sentences are imposed for offenses that do not arise out of the same course of conduct, the court must determine which sentence any specific period of time in custody should be credited against. As noted above in Section IV.B.2, as a general rule sentencing on one charge severs the connection between the custody and other pending charges. Thus, when custody is in connection with multiple, unrelated charges, credit should be granted on all concurrent sentences imposed for the charges up to the time the defendant begins serving one of the sentences. The amounts may not be equal. Also, the fact that concurrent sentences are imposed at the same time does not serve to transform custody connected to one case into custody connected to another case.[36]

Examples of concurrent sentence situations follow.

a. Multiple counts in a single judgment

Concurrent Sentence Example 1
Smith was arrested for two burglaries, charged in a two-count information, and convicted of both charges on the same day. He spent one year in jail awaiting disposition. He was sentenced to serve five years of imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run concurrently with one another.

The judgment of conviction should order that credit is due for 365 days pursuant to § 973.155.

When the judgment reaches the prison, the registrar will credit each of the concurrent sentences with 365 days, thus computing the sentences as though they had begun 365 days earlier.

b. Sentences on unrelated charges for which different amounts of credit are due

Concurrent Sentence Example 2
Johnson is arrested and charged with a burglary and remains in custody for 10 days before posting bail. He is later arrested for a new burglary and remains in custody, unable to post bail. 150 days after his second arrest, he is convicted of both charges and given two years of imprisonment on each count, concurrent.

The judgment of conviction on the first burglary should order that credit is due for 10 days, while the judgment for the second conviction should order 150 days of credit.

This illustrates one of those situations where the periods of time for which credit is due on unrelated concurrent sentences will not line up with each other. Some credit will be due on one sentence and a different amount of credit will be due on another.

In these cases, the registrars shall properly compute the credit ordered against each sentence. Taking the above example, if a defendant is entitled to 10 days of credit on one two-year sentence and 150 days of credit on a concurrent two-year sentence, the registrar will compute each sentence separately and the defendant's controlling sentence will be the two-year sentence with the lesser amount of credit.

c. A sentence imposed to run concurrently with a sentence imposed earlier

In this situation, the determinative questions are the existence of a connection between any of the offender's time in custody and the offense for which sentence is being imposed and, if there is a connection, whether it was ever "severed."

Concurrent Sentence Example 3
Sauk County officials suspected Smith of committing an armed robbery in Sauk County and discover that he is serving a sentence in the Wisconsin State Prison on another charge. Sauk County filed a detainer at the prison. Six months later, Smith is convicted on the Sauk County charge and is sentenced to a term of imprisonment of 10 years, to run concurrently to the sentence he was already serving.

The judgment of conviction in Sauk County should indicate that Smith is entitled to no sentence credit under § 973.155. All the time Smith spent in custody after the filing of the Sauk County charge was spent in service of the previously imposed sentence on an unrelated charge. Thus, there was never a connection between the Sauk County case and Smith's custody, so no additional credit is required.[37]

Concurrent Sentence Example 4
Smith is arrested and charged on the same day in two separate cases, A and B, each arising from a different course of conduct. Unable to post cash bail, he remains in custody. Ninety days after his arrest he is convicted and sentenced in Case A. Sixty days later he is convicted and sentenced in Case B. The sentence is ordered to run concurrently with the sentence in Case A.

The sentencing in Case A severed the connection between Smith's custody and Case B. Thus, his custody after the first 90 days was due solely to the sentence in Case A, and the judgment of conviction in Case B should give credit only for the first 90 days.[38]

Concurrent Sentence Example 5
Smith was convicted of burglary and sentenced to five years of imprisonment, but execution of the sentence was stayed and he was placed on probation. He committed another burglary while on probation and was taken into custody. A probation hold was imposed, and bail, which he could not post, was set on the new charge. He was convicted of the new charge and sentenced to five years of imprisonment, to run concurrently with the sentence underlying the probation, as probation had been revoked at the same time. He spent 180 days in custody.

The judgment of conviction on the new charge should order that credit be granted for 180 days spent in custody. The department's revocation order should also reflect that 180 days credit is due on the sentence underlying the revoked probation.

When the judgment and the revocation order reach the prison, the registrar will credit each sentence with 180 days, by computing each sentence as though it had begun 180 days earlier.

(NOTE: This example assumes that no credit was due on the sentence underlying the probation for time spent in custody prior to the original sentencing on that charge. If such credit was due, it should be reflected on the original judgment of conviction and in the revocation order and would be credited by the registrar against only the first sentence.)

Concurrent Sentence Example 6

Smith was convicted of burglary; sentence was withheld and he was placed on probation. He committed another burglary while on probation and was taken into custody. A probation hold was imposed, and bail, which he could not post, was set on the new charge. His probation was revoked and after 180 days in custody he was sentenced after revocation to four years of imprisonment. Ninety days later he was convicted of the new burglary charge and sentenced to four years of imprisonment, to run concurrently with the four-year sentence imposed for the first burglary.

The judgment of conviction on the new burglary charge should order that credit be granted for 180 days spent in custody before being sentenced after revocation for the first burglary. Smith is not entitled to the additional 90 days he was in custody after the sentencing in the first case because that sentencing severed the connection between his custody and the new charge.[39]

While the credit on each judgment will be equal, the second sentence will control Smith's release date because as of the date of sentencing in the second case, he had served 90 more days of the first sentence.

(NOTE: This example also assumes that no credit was due on the sentence underlying the probation for time spent in custody prior to the original sentencing on that charge. If such credit was due, it should be reflected on the original judgment of conviction and in the revocation order and would be credited by the registrar against only the first sentence.)

Concurrent Sentence Example 7

While Smith is on extended supervision he is arrested for a new offense. He is held in custody on an ES hold and on cash bail on the new offense. Three months after his arrest his ES is revoked, and a month after revocation, he is returned to the prison system to commence reconfinement time. Two months after being returned to prison he is convicted and sentenced for the new offense and given a concurrent sentence.

The offender's custody was connected to both the ES case and the new offense until the time he was returned to prison. The return to prison severed the connection between the offender's custody and the new offense. Because the sentence for the new offense is concurrent, however, the offender is entitled to credit toward that sentence for the time between his arrest and his return to prison.[40]

Whether an offender subject to multiple charges or revocations awaits resolution of pending matters in jail or prison, whether cases are resolved at the same time or at wide intervals, or whether one case or the other is first resolved is often fortuitous. Practices differ from county to county, based on local court calendars, whether the offender will waive revocation or plead guilty, and even whether the local detention facility has available space.[41] These practices may result in disparate results in similar cases or may allow "persons to manipulate the system to their advantage" (as by delaying the revocation of probation, parole, or extended supervision).[42] Trial courts should be as fully informed as possible about each case so that unfair results can be avoided. If different judges are involved, it will be unlikely that each judge will be aware of the sentence credit situation in the other case when completing his or her own judgment, but the judge imposing the second sentence should try to become informed of the credit awarded against the first sentence.

d. Concurrent sentences imposed after revocation of probation and revocation of a deferred entry of judgment agreement

Concurrent Sentence Example 8

Smith is arrested and charged with a felony and two misdemeanors arising out of the same course of conduct. He is placed on probation for the misdemeanors and is subject to a deferred entry of judgment agreement on the felony, and is free on bond with respect to the felony. He is later taken into custody and placed on a probation hold, and both probation and the deferred entry of judgment agreement are revoked. After being in custody for 75 days on the hold and while awaiting revocation of probation, he is sentenced after revocation on the misdemeanors and sentenced on the felony. The court imposes concurrent sentences on all three counts.

The judgment of conviction should indicate that Smith is entitled to 75 days of credit on all three sentences even though he was not on probation for the felony because the custody was in connection for the course of conduct for which all three sentences were imposed.[43]

Note that if the felony arose from a course of conduct different from that of the misdemeanors, the custody for any probation hold, or while awaiting probation, revocation would not be connected to the felony unless the bond on the felony was revoked or amended in a way that also kept the person in custody.

2. Consecutive sentences

The objective with consecutive sentences is to assure that credit is awarded against one, but only one, of the consecutive sentences.[44] In situations where consecutive sentences are imposed by different judges, there will have to be some communication between the two courts to assure that sentence credit is properly ordered. This can most easily be achieved by requiring the parties to come to the sentencing hearing prepared to identify any sentence credit awarded on any previously imposed sentences.

Examples of common consecutive sentence situations follow.

a. Multiple counts in a single judgment

Consecutive Sentence Example 1
Smith was arrested for two armed robberies, charged in a two-count information, and convicted of both charges on the same day. He spent one year in jail awaiting disposition. He is sentenced to serve 10 years of imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run consecutively to one another. The judgment of conviction should order that 365 days credit be granted.

If an offender with multiple charges is entitled to credit that is applicable to all of the charges and is given an imposed sentence on one charge and a consecutive imposed and stayed sentence on the others, the credit must be awarded against the first imposed sentence.[45]

b. Sentence to run consecutively to a sentence imposed by another court

Consecutive Sentence Example 2
Smith is arrested for an armed robbery in Dane County. An armed robbery charge is already pending in Sauk County, but Smith had been released on bail. He spends one year in Dane County jail awaiting trial and is then convicted and sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment, with sentence credit ordered for the one year he spent in jail. He pleads guilty to the Sauk County charge and is sentenced to 10 years of imprisonment, to run consecutively to the Dane County charge. Sauk County had lodged a detainer against Smith in Dane County.

The Dane County judgment should order that credit be granted for the 365 days spent in Dane County jail. When the sentencing takes place in Sauk County, the judge must be informed of the sentence and sentence credit ordered in the Dane County judgment. This should be done by the parties, who should come to the Sauk County sentencing prepared to address the sentence credit issue, ideally with a copy of the Dane County judgment.

The Sauk County judge would not order credit for the time spent in custody in Dane County, even though that custody may have been due in part to the Sauk County detainer, because the detainer is insufficient to establish a connection between the Dane County custody and the Sauk County case.[46] When the defendant reaches the institution, his total sentence will be computed as though it had begun 365 days earlier.

(NOTE: There may be other periods of custody allocable solely to the Sauk County case for which credit may be due in the Sauk County judgment.)

c. Multiple sentences with differing amounts of credit

Consecutive Sentence Example 3
Roberts is arrested for a theft and, after remaining in custody for 30 days, is released on bail. He is later arrested for a burglary and remains in custody until he is sentenced in both cases 60 days later. He is sentenced to two years of imprisonment for the theft and six years of imprisonment for the burglary, to run consecutively to the theft sentence.

The judgment of conviction for the theft conviction should include 30 days of sentence credit, while the judgment of conviction for the burglary conviction should order 60 days of sentence credit. Thus, the total consecutive sentences of eight years are reduced by the total of 90 days Roberts spent in custody before sentencing on the two cases.

d. Sentence to run consecutively to a sentence imposed following revocation of probation

Consecutive Sentence Example 4
Smith was convicted of armed robbery in 2010 and placed on probation; sentence was withheld. He was entitled to no sentence credit as a result of that episode. In 2011, he commits another armed robbery. A probation hold is filed against him and he is charged with the new offense. He spends one year in jail awaiting trial and revocation. He is sentenced on the new charge first and receives a 10-year sentence, with credit ordered for the one year. He then comes before the judge who imposed the original probation. A 10-year consecutive sentence is imposed.

The judgment imposed first should order credit for the one year spent in custody. The judge imposing the sentence following revocation of probation must be informed about the sentence and sentence credit ordered in the first judgment and should order no credit for time spent in custody that was awarded as credit on the first judgment.

(NOTE: If Smith had received an imposed and stayed sentence originally, or was on parole or extended supervision, the Department of Corrections would give credit on the stayed sentence or the sentence for which Smith was on parole or extended supervision for all time in custody on the new offense until the person is received at or returned to prison. Thus, in these circumstances, the judge who imposes a consecutive sentence on the new offense (which was the basis for revoking probation, parole, or extended supervision) should not grant credit for any custody on the new offense.[47])

VI. Correcting Sentence Credit Errors[48]

6. Since the effective date of § 973.155 in 1978, it has been required that the sentence credit determination be made part of the judgment of conviction as a finding by the court. As stressed above in Section III.A., judicial time and energy may be saved if courts require accurate information at the time of sentencing and impress upon the parties the importance of making the credit determination at that time. Even when this is done, however, the credit determination may turn out to be wrong and need correction. Correcting an erroneous credit determination is required even if the defendant stipulated to that determination. State v. Kontny, 2020 WI App 30, 392 Wis.2d 311, ¶¶7-9, 943 N.W.2d 923. See also, State v. Slater, 2021 WI App 88, 400 Wis. 2d 93, 968 N.W.2d 93.

If a determination was not made in the judgment, past practice has been to first petition the Department of Corrections for credit. When a determination has been made part of the judgment, any change in that determination requires an amendment of the judgment. While administrative change of the sentence credit finding might be more convenient, a finding in a judgment simply may not be amended by administrative action.

In cases where court action is required to correct a judgment, the correction process can be simple and efficient. A number of different procedural designations could be applied to the request for correction. Regardless of how the request is categorized, it should follow the general format described below.

1. An application to correct the sentence credit determination should be made in the sentencing court.

2. The application should specify the additional credit that is being requested – e.g., to change the sentence credit determination from 50 to 75 days.

3. The application should specify the nature of each separate period of custody for which credit is being claimed – e.g., 10 days in the Wood County jail after arrest and before transfer to Dodge County; 15 days in a mental health facility while competency to stand trial was being evaluated.

4. The application should identify the reason for each period of custody and must show that it was "connected with the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed."

5. Attached to the application should be confirmation by the person having custody of the offender for each period which verifies both the duration and the reason for the custody.

6. A copy of the application should be sent to the district attorney.

7. A hearing is not required but may be ordered in the discretion of the court.

8. If the sentence credit determination is corrected, an amended judgment should be prepared which reflects the proper sentence credit. The amended judgment should be promptly sent to the institution having custody of the offender.

It may happen that an error in the initial determination of sentence credit is not discovered and corrected until after an offender has served the custody portion of the sentence and has been released on parole or extended supervision. The judgment of conviction should still be amended because the additional credit reduces the offender's sentence and, therefore, the amount of time remaining on parole or extended supervision. The amended judgment should be sent to the records office of the Department of Corrections' Division of Community Corrections, which is responsible for supervision of offenders on parole or extended supervision.

The judgment should also be amended even if the error is not discovered and corrected until after the offender's parole or extended supervision has been revoked and the offender reincarcerated under § 302.11(7) or reconfined under § 302.113(9). The additional credit must be applied to reduce the length of reincarceration or reconfinement the offender serves as well as the total length of the remaining sentence.[49]

9. If the application to correct the sentence credit determination is denied, an order to that effect should be entered, and a copy sent to the person who filed the application.

Circuit courts are sometimes asked to address sentence credit requests made by offenders who were sentenced in Wisconsin and later transferred to other jurisdictions—for instance, due to a warrant or detainer. The basic rule described above also applies to these cases: To be granted credit, the offender must have been in custody in connection with the course of conduct for which the Wisconsin sentence was imposed.[50]

That the offender was in custody is typically not disputed in these cases. Instead, the issue is whether that custody was in connection with the Wisconsin case. Because the basic rule of § 973.155 applies, whether an offender sentenced Wisconsin who is made available to another jurisdiction remains in custody in connection with the Wisconsin case will depend on whether an event in the other jurisdiction severs the connection between custody and the Wisconsin case. The event that will most likely sever the connection will be the imposition of a sentence in the other jurisdiction, though, as in Wisconsin, the nature of the sentence imposed in the other jurisdiction will affect the offender's entitlement to credit.[51]

Determining credit in these situations will therefore require obtaining as much information as possible about not only the amount time the offender was in custody, but also the reasons for the offender's transfer to the other jurisdiction, the nature and disposition of the proceedings in that jurisdiction, when any sentence was imposed, whether the sentence was consecutive or concurrent, and whether credit was given in the other jurisdiction.

COMMENT

SM-34A was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1985, 1988, 1991, 1995, 2013, 2016, 2018, 2019, 2021, and 2023. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; added to the comment.

1. State v. Carter, 2010 WI 77, ¶51, 327 Wis.2d 1, 785 N.W.2d 516 (quoting State v. Ward, 153 Wis.2d 743, 745, 452 N.W.2d 158 (Ct. App. 1989), and State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 379, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985)). Also see, State v. Obriecht, 2015 WI 66, ¶23, 363 Wis.2d 816, 867 N.W.2d 387.

2. The exception is that when a court imposing a life sentence establishes a specific date for parole eligibility under § 973.014(1)(b), time spent in custody prior to sentencing is not credited against that parole eligibility date. State v. Chapman, 175 Wis.2d 231, 499 N.W.2d 222 (Ct. App. 1993). While the court may consider the amount of credit as a factor in setting the eligibility date, the date set by the court governs. State v. Seeley, 212 Wis.2d 75, 83-88, 567 N.W.2d 897 (Ct. App. 1997).

Section 973.014(1)(b) applies only to offenses committed before December 31, 1999, when Truth-in-Sentencing took effect. However, the Truth-in-Sentencing legislation created § 973.014(1g)(a)2., which allows a court imposing a life sentence for an offense committed on or after December 31, 1999, to set a date on which the person is eligible to petition for supervised release under § 302.114(5). No published decision has addressed whether time spent in custody before sentencing should be credited against the extended supervision eligibility date set by a court, but the Committee concludes that under the rationales of Chapman and Seeley the time in custody would not be credited.

3. State v. Obriecht, 2015 WI 66, ¶23, 363 Wis.2d 816, 867 N.W.2d 387.

4. State v. Villalobos, 196 Wis.2d 141, 148, 537 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1995).

5. Note that the statute qualifies this listing of three periods of time with the phrase "without limitation by enumeration." Thus, periods of time not listed may be creditable under § 973.155.

6. As noted in Section VI, a defendant's stipulation to a specific amount of credit does not prevent the defendant from seeking additional credit in a subsequent motion. State v. Kontny, 2020 WI App 30, ¶¶7-9, 392 Wis. 2d 311, 943 N.W.2d 923. See also State v. Slater, 2021 WI App 88, 400 Wis. 2d 93, 968 N.W.2d 740.

7. In State v. Walker, 117 Wis.2d 579, 345 N.W.2d 413 (1984), the Wisconsin Supreme Court identified the procedure that should be followed: The appropriate sentence is to be determined independently of any time previously served; only then should sentence credit be determined. For a more complete discussion see note 15, SM-34, Sentencing Procedure, Standards, And Special Issues (© 1999).

The awarding of sentence credit is a judicial function that requires a court to reach its own conclusion about the amount of sentence credit to be awarded and to explain its findings and reasoning on the record. While the court may seek assistance from its court clerk in collecting information that may be relevant to the credit determination, the awarding or denial of sentence credit is the duty of the court, not the court clerk. State v. Kitt, 2015 WI App 9, 359 Wis.2d 592, 859 N.W.2d 164.

8. Section 973.03(4)(b) expressly provides for sentence credit for periods of home detention.

9. In State v. Avila, 192 Wis.2d 870, 532 N.W.2d 423 (1995), the Wisconsin Supreme Court rejected the claim that principles of equal protection require that a period of jail time ordered as a condition of probation be reduced to reflect time spent in jail prior to trial because of indigency. The court also rejected the defendant's claim that his condition of probation jail time should be credited for prison time served pursuant to a conviction later reversed. The court held that the applicable statute, § 973.04, applied only to credit against subsequent "sentences" and that jail time as a condition of probation is not a sentence. Avila did not involve a claim that § 973.155 applied, but the same result should follow: that statute also requires credit only against "sentences"; time in jail ordered as a condition of probation is not a "sentence."

10. State v. Obriecht, 2015 WI 66, ¶24, 363 Wis.2d 816, 867 N.W.2d 387.

11. State v. Wolfe, 2001 WI App 66, 242 Wis. 2d 426, 625 N.W.2d 655. See also § 973.155(3) (computing custody as if it were served time in the institution to which the defendant has been sentenced).

12. State ex rel. Thorson v. Schwarz, 2004 WI 96, ¶¶16-29, 274 Wis.2d 1, 681 N.W.2d 914, held that a person detained or committed under Chapter 980 is not in "custody" for purposes of § 973.155. In 2005 Wis. Act 434, § 45, however, the definition of "custody" under the escape statute was amended to cover detention under Chapter 980. See § 946.42(1)(a)1.a. and 1.e. (referring to facilities under §§ 980.04(1) and 980.065 and to supervised release under Chapter 980). The amendments to § 946.42(1)(a) took effect August 1, 2006. Thus, as of that date, a person detained or committed under Chapter 980 is in "custody" for purposes of § 973.155, effectively superseding Thorson's holding to the contrary. Note, however, that Thorson also held a person's custody under Chapter 980 is not "in connection with" the predicate offense for the commitment; that holding is not changed by the amendments to the definition of "custody" in § 946.42. See note 25, below.

13. Credit is to be granted for time spent in jail as a condition of probation based both on the holding in State v. Gilbert, 115 Wis.2d 371, 340 N.W.2d 511 (1983), and on the fact that 1995 Wis. Act 154 amended the definition of "custody" in § 946.42(1)(a) to include custody in jail as a condition of probation.

As to bail release, note that §§ 969.02(3)(d) and 969.03(1)(e) allow a court to set a condition of bail release that requires a defendant to return to custody after specified hours.

14. Credit should be granted when, for example, a Wisconsin offender is arrested in Illinois on a Wisconsin warrant even if the offender is also being held on Illinois charges, unless or until the offender begins serving a sentence on the Illinois charges. State v. Carter, 2010 WI 77, ¶¶31-40, 58-72, 82, 327 Wis.2d 1, 785 N.W.2d 516. Credit should not be granted when a Wisconsin offender, already in custody on Illinois charges, has a Wisconsin "hold" or detainer filed against him. This is consistent with the conclusion that filing a detainer against one already in custody in Wisconsin does not result in "custody" under § 973.155 on the charge which is the subject of the detainer. See note 27, below.

A prior version of SM-34A (© 1995) stated that a person was in "custody" in another state only if his or her custody was based exclusively on a Wisconsin warrant. This conclusion was rejected in State v. Carter, 2007 WI App 255, ¶¶11-25, 306 Wis.2d 450, 743 N.W.2d 700, aff'd, 2010 WI 77, ¶40, 327 Wis.2d 1, 785 N.W.2d 516, and was removed in the 2014 version of SM-34A.

15. State v. Baker, 179 Wis.2d 655, 508 N.W.2d 40 (Ct. App. 1993).

16. State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996). Credit is not required where jail time as a condition of probation is stayed and the person is hospitalized for treatment. State v. Edwards, 2003 WI App 221, 267 Wis.2d 491, 671 N.W.2d 371.

17. A person required to remain in his home during all nonworking hours as a condition of bail pending appeal, is not entitled to credit for the period of home detention on the sentence imposed after the appeal was decided. State v. Pettis, 149 Wis.2d 207, 441 N.W.2d 247 (Ct. App. 1989).

18. See the discussion of State v. Cobb, 135 Wis.2d 181, 400 N.W.2d 9 (Ct. App. 1986). In Cobb, the court held that credit was properly denied to a probationer who was ordered, as a condition of probation, to spend either one year in jail or go to a drug abuse treatment center. He chose to participate in a drug treatment program and successfully completed it. When his probation was revoked, he sought credit for the time her spent in the program. The court held that credit was not required because there was no evidence of "custody" – defining that term, by reference to the escape statute, as "physical detention by an institution, institution guard or peace officer." 135 Wis.2d 181, 185. As discussed above in Section IV.A.1 and 2, after Cobb was decided the supreme court clarified that for purposes of sentence credit "custody" is defined not solely by physical detention, but by whether the offender is subject to an escape charge for leaving whatever status or setting her or she was in. Magnuson, 233 Wis.2d 40, ¶31.

19. In State v. Harris, 168 Wis.2d 168, 483 N.W.2d 808 (Ct. App. 1992), the court held that there was no authority to grant credit for time served in a home detention program ordered under the auspices of a federal consent decree.

20. State ex rel. Simpson v. Schwarz, 2002 WI App 7, 250 Wis.2d 214, 640 N.W.2d 527.

21. State v Friedlander, 2019 WI 22, 385 Wis. 2d 612, 923 N.W.2d 849. Friedlander sought credit for time he spent in the community after he was released from a prison sentence when he should instead haven been transferred to a county jail to serve time as a condition of probation in another case. The court of appeals concluded that Friedlander was entitled to credit for the time he was in the community through no fault of his own, citing State v. Riske, 152 Wis. 2d 260, 448 N.W.2d 260 (1989), and State v. Dentici, 2002 WI App 77, 251 Wis. 2d 436, 643 N.W. 2d 180. Riske and Dentici held that a defendant who reported to jail to serve a sentence but was turned away due to overcrowding was entitled to credit for the time he was at liberty. The decisions adopted an equitable doctrine recognized in other jurisdictions that a person erroneously released from custody continues to serve his or her sentence.

The supreme court reversed the court of appeals' grant of credit to Friedlander and overruled Riske and Dentici. The supreme court concluded that Riske and Dentici are inconsistent with the bright-line rule that a person must be subject to an escape charge to be in "custody" for the purposes of § 973.155. Under that rule, it is irrelevant to a sentence credit determination that a person at liberty through no fault of his or her own. Friedlander, 385 Wis. 2d 612, ¶¶24-42.

22. A defendant held "in part" on unsatisfied cash bail on the principal charge and an unrelated charge was in custody in connection with the principal charge up until disposition of the unrelated charge. State v. Harr, 211 Wis.2d 584, 596-97, 568 N.W.2d 307 (Ct. App. 1997). Harr applied State v. Gavigan, 122 Wis.2d 389, 362 N.W.2d 162 (Ct. App. 1984) (citing a prior version of SM-34A) and State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985) (approving the reasoning in Gavigan).

In some cases a person facing multiple charges arising out of the same course of conduct may be placed on probation for some of the charges and be subject to deferred entry of judgment agreement on other of the charges. If the person is taken into custody on a probation hold, that custody is also considered to be in connection with the charge that is subject to the deferred entry of judgment agreement. State v. Zahurones, 2019 WI App 57, ¶¶13-17, 389 Wis. 2d 69, 934 N.W.2d 905.

See also State v. (Elandis) Johnson, 2009 WI 57, ¶27, 318 Wis.2d 21, 767 N.W.2d 207 (in deciding whether an offender is entitled to credit under § 973.155, the court must determine whether the person was in custody and "whether all or part of the 'custody' for which credit is sought was 'in connection with the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed'"); State v. Hintz, 2007 WI App 113, ¶8, 300 Wis.2d 583, 731 N.W.2d 646 (credit must be awarded under § 973.155(1)(b) for time in custody on an extended supervision hold if the hold was "at least in part" due to the conduct resulting in the new conviction); State v. Thomas, 2021 WI App 59, 399 Wis. 2d 165, 963 N.W.2d 927 (credit must be awarded under Wis. Stat. § 973.155(1)(a) toward a state criminal sentence for time in custody on a federal supervision hold if the hold was due in part to the conduct resulting in the state sentence). Cf. State v. Thompson, 225 Wis.2d 578, 593 N.W.2d 875 (Ct. App. 1999) (offender was in custody in connection with an adult charge while confined under a juvenile commitment because the adult charge led to revocation of juvenile supervision and confinement in juvenile facility).

In State v. (Marcus) Johnson, 2007 WI 107, 304 Wis.2d 318, 735 N.W.2d 505, the defendant argued for a broad interpretation of the "in connection with" language in § 973.155 based in part on the statement in the paragraph to which this note is appended that custody "must be, at least in part, the result of a legal status . . . stemming from the course of conduct for which sentence is being imposed." Id., ¶68. The supreme court rejected Johnson's "expansive interpretation" as contrary to applicable case law, in particular State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985), where, once the offender began serving a sentence on one charge, it was irrelevant that he was also awaiting trial on another charge. Id., ¶69. Because SM-34A discusses and incorporates the holdings of the applicable case law, including Beets, the Committee concluded the court's rejection of Johnson's argument did not require a revision of the language of SM-34A.

23. State v. Beiersdorf, 208 Wis.2d 492, 498, 561 N.W.2d 749; (Ct. App. 1997); State v. Floyd, 2000

WI 14, ¶¶15-17, 232 Wis.2d 767, 606 N.W.2d 155; State v. (Elandis) Johnson, 2009 WI 57, ¶33, 318 Wis.2d 21, 767 N.W.2d 207; State v. Harrison, 2020 WI 35, ¶¶36-46, 391 Wis. 2d 161, 942 N.W.2d 310 (holding that the sentences the defendant was serving consecutively to previously imposed sentences in other cases were not factually connected to the course of conduct for which the previous sentences were imposed; thus, when the consecutive sentences were vacated, the defendant was not entitled to have the time in custody on the vacated consecutive sentences credited toward the previously imposed sentences); State v. Lira, 2021 WI 81, ¶¶29-32, 399 Wis. 2d 419, 966 N.W.2d 605 (where an offender previously sentenced in Wisconsin is serving a sentence in another state is returned to Wisconsin to address new, unrelated Wisconsin cases or offenses, his custody here was not factually connected with his Wisconsin sentences and was not entitled to credit on his Wisconsin sentences for time in custody back in Wisconsin). See also State ex rel. Thorson v. Schwarz, 2004 WI 96, ¶34, 274 Wis.2d 1, 681 N.W.2d 914, which held that time spent in the Wisconsin Resource Center pending a Chapter 980 commitment trial is not "in connection with" the sentence on a criminal offense that served as one of the predicates for the Chapter 980 petition.

24. State v. (Elandis) Johnson, 2009 WI 57, 318 Wis.2d 21, 767 N.W.2d 207. See also note 36, below.

25. "Custody" as used in § 973.155 must result "from the occurrence of a legal event, process, or authority which occasions, or is related to, confinement on the charge for which the defendant is ultimately sentenced." State v. Demars, 119 Wis.2d 19, 26, 349 N.W.2d 708 (Ct. App. 1984) (communication of a detainer which carried no custodial mandate was not sufficient to establish connection with the case in which the detainer was filed); State v. Nyborg, 122 Wis.2d 765, 768, 364 N.W.2d 553 (Ct. App. 1985) (same); State v. Villalobos, 196 Wis.2d 141, 147-48, 537 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1995) (entry in a jail log indicating an outstanding arrest warrant from another county was not "occurrence of a legal event, process, or authority" sufficient to establish connection between basis for custody and charges for which warrant was issued). Cf. State v. Carter, 2007 WI App 255, ¶¶14-18, 306 Wis.2d 450, 743 N.W.2d 700, aff'd as modified as to number of days of credit granted, 2010 WI 77, ¶¶9, 33-34, 81-82, 327 Wis.2d 1, 785 N.W.2d 516 (arrest of defendant in Illinois on Wisconsin warrant established a connection between custody and Wisconsin course of conduct).

26. State v. Gavigan, 122 Wis.2d 389, 393, 362 N.W.2d 162 (Ct. App. 1984) (citing a prior version of SM-34A). The reasoning in Gavigan was approved by the supreme court in State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 380-81, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985). See also State v. Carter, 2010 WI 77, ¶37, 327 Wis.2d 1, 785 N.W.2d 516 ("once a defendant is actually serving the sentence on a charge, the defendant is not entitled to credit for presentence custody toward sentences on unrelated charges, although trial may be pending on the separate charges at the time the defendant is serving the first sentence."). See also State v. Lira, 2021 WI 81, ¶¶29-32, 399 Wis. 2d 419, 966 N.W.2d 605 (where an offender previously sentenced in Wisconsin is serving a sentence in another state is returned to Wisconsin to address new, unrelated Wisconsin cases or offenses, his custody here was not factually connected with his Wisconsin sentences and was not entitled to credit on his Wisconsin sentences for time in custody back in Wisconsin).

27. An offender's custody may preclude establishment of a connection with a course of conduct even if the custody is not due to service of a criminal sentence. In State v. Riley, 175 Wis.2d 214, 498 N.W.2d 884 (Ct. App. 1993), the defendant escaped from jail confinement ordered as a condition of probation. He was eventually arrested after committing a new crime during the period of escape. He was returned to jail to continue serving the original condition-of-probation confinement and cash bail was set on the new charge, which Riley did not post. At the completion of the condition of probation confinement, Riley was sentenced on the new charge. The court of appeals held that credit for the time spent in jail as a condition of the original probation was not due against the new sentence because § 973.155 "does not authorize credit for a term of confinement ordered [as a consequence] for prior criminal activity irrespective of whether that confinement is a condition of probation or as the result of a sentence after revocation of probation." Id., 220-21, citing State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985). See also State v. Villalobos, 196 Wis.2d 141, 144-46, 537 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1995) (applying Riley to similar facts).

Further, a defendant already in custody under a juvenile commitment was not entitled to credit toward an adult battery charge he committed while confined in a juvenile correctional institution based on a previous unrelated delinquency adjudication. State v. (Marcus) Johnson, 2007 WI 107, 304 Wis.2d 318, 735 N.W.2d 505. Because Johnson's juvenile commitment order pre-existed the battery charge, it precluded the creation of a connection between Johnson's custody and the battery charge. Id., ¶63. Nor was a connection created when Johnson's commitment was later extended based in part on the conduct giving rise to the battery charge because, the court concluded, the commitment would have been extended even if the battery had not occurred. Id., ¶71. The court distinguished State v. Thompson, 225 Wis.2d 578, 593 N.W.2d 875 (Ct. App. 1999), [cited above, in note 22,] on the grounds that Thompson's custody was both connected to the new charge, which had been a basis for the revocation of juvenile supervision, and was for treatment in the juvenile system, not continuing punishment of the original offense. Id., ¶¶45-55.

Note, however, that custody under a civil commitment for contempt does not preclude a connection between the custody and a pending criminal charge. Unlike a person serving a sentence, as in Beets, jail time as a condition of probation, as in Riley, or a juvenile commitment, as in (Marcus) Johnson, a person confined under a civil contempt commitment would not necessarily be in custody absent the pending criminal charge because the person may obtain release by meeting the contempt commitment's purge conditions. State v. Trepanier, 2014 WI App 105, ¶¶20-21, 357 Wis.2d 662, 855 N.W.2d 465.

28. In State v. Beiersdorf, 208 Wis.2d 492, 561 N.W.2d 749 (Ct. App. 1997), the defendant posted a personal recognizance bond on a sexual assault charge and remained on that bond until his sentencing. He was, however, held in custody on cash bond on later charges of bail jumping based on violations of the recognizance bond in the sexual assault case. He was sentenced to prison on the sexual assault charge; his sentence on the bail jumping charge was imposed and stayed and he was placed on probation, to run consecutively to the prison sentence for sexual assault. The court of appeals concluded Beiersdorf was in custody only "in connection with" the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed and stayed. Thus, no credit is due on the prison sentence for sexual assault.

29. State v. Gavigan, 122 Wis.2d 389, 362 N.W.2d 162 (Ct. App. 1984) (discussed in detail in note 34, below); State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985) (discussed in detail in note 39, below). While sentencing on one charge may be the most common event that will sever the connection, it is not the only one. In State v. Harr, 211 Wis.2d 584, 596, 568 N.W.2d 307 (Ct. App. 1997), the court concluded that the offender's commitment under § 971.17 after being found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect severed the connection between his custody and an unrelated pending charge.

Not every event that creates an independent basis for legal custody "severs" the connection between an offender's custody and a pending criminal case. To sever the connection, the event must have put the offender in a status that would keep the offender in custody even in the absence of the criminal case. For instance, in State v. Trepanier, 2014 WI App 105, 357 Wis.2d 662, 855 N.W.2d 465, an offender who was already in custody on cash bail in a criminal case was found in contempt for failing to pay a fine in an unrelated case and ordered to be held in custody under the contempt order unless he met the purge condition. The subsequent contempt order did not sever the connection between the custody and the criminal case because, unlike the offender in Beets, who would have been in custody under the sentence imposed even in the absence of the pending criminal case, Trepanier could have obtained release from the contempt order by satisfying the purge conditions. Id., ¶¶15-21.

In addition, being on bond on a charge that is subject to a deferred entry of judgment agreement does not "sever" the connection between that count and other counts in the case for which the person is placed on probation. State v. Zahurones, 2019 WI App 57, ¶¶18-28, 389 Wis. 2d 69, 934 N.W.2d 905.

30. State v. Slater, 2021 WI App 88, 400 Wis. 2d 93, 698 N.W.2d 740 (citing Wis. Stat. § 973.10(2)(b) governing imposed and stayed sentences); State v. Presley, 2006 WI App 82, 292 Wis. 2d 734, 715 N.W.2d 713, and State v. Davis, 2017 WI App 55, 377 Wis. 2d 678, 901 N.W.2d 488 (citing Wis. Stat. § 304.072(4) governing persons revoked from parole or extended supervision).

31. State v. Floyd, 2000 WI 14, ¶32, 232 Wis.2d 767, 606 N.W.2d 155. The court in Floyd disclaimed reliance on the "in connection with the course of conduct" language in § 973.155 and instead relied on the phrase "related to an offense for which sentence was imposed," finding the unique nature of read-in offenses made them "related" to offenses for which a defendant is sentenced for purposes of § 973.155(1).

Floyd limits its holding to offenses that are "read in" for sentencing purposes. 232 Wis.2d 767, ¶30. Thus, Floyd does not require credit to be given for custody related to every offense that a judge "considers" at sentencing. See State v. Piggue, 2016 WI App 13, 366 Wis.2d 605, 875 N.W.2d 663. In Piggue, the defendant was in custody on a sexual assault charge when he tried to persuade the victim not to testify against him. He was acquitted of the sexual assault, but was then charged with and convicted of witness intimidation. The judge considered the sexual assault allegations when sentencing Piggue on the intimidation charge, so Piggue argued that Floyd required the time he spent in custody on the sexual assault charges to be credited toward the intimidation sentence. The court of appeals held that Floyd should not be extended beyond its express limitation to "read-in" offenses. 366 Wis.2d 605, ¶¶12-13.

The Supreme Court of Wisconsin reaffirmed Floyd in State v. Fermanich, 2023 WI 48, 407 Wis.2d 693, 991 N.W.2d 340. In Fermanich, the defendant was arrested in Oneida County after stealing three trucks in Langlade County within a span of two hours. Fermanich remained in custody in Oneida County due to his inability to post cash bail, during which time additional charges were filed against him in Langlade County, where he was granted a signature bond. Subsequently, the cases from both counties were consolidated, and Fermanich pleaded guilty to one charge from Langlade County and two from Oneida County, leading to the dismissal of all other charges. Upon violating the terms of his probation, Fermanich was sentenced to 18 months of initial confinement. Applying Floyd, the Supreme Court ruled that Fermanich should receive 433 days of sentence credit for the time he spent in custody related to the Oneida County charges, which were dismissed and read-in, but still considered alongside the Langlade County charge for which the circuit court ultimately sentenced him. Id. at ¶16.

32. As noted above, in Section IV.B.2 of this Special Material, once a person begins serving one of the sentences, his "custody" is no longer "in connection with" the other pending charge. Credit on the sentence for that pending charge will be due only for the days when both charges were pending, prior to the commencement of the other sentence. State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 352 (1985). For cases applying Beets to offenders who are revoked from extended supervision for new charges and given a sentence on the new charges concurrent to the sentence on which supervision was revoked, see State v. Hintz, 2007 WI App 113, 300 Wis.2d 583, 731 N.W.2d 646; State v. Presley, 2006 WI App 82, 292 Wis.2d 734, 715 N.W.2D 713; and State v. Davis, 2017 WI App 55, 377 Wis.2d 678, 901 N.W.2d 488. For a case applying Beets to an offender who was on probation with an imposed and stayed sentence and whose probation was revoked for new charges for which he received a concurrent sentence, see State v. Slater, 2021 WI App 88, 400 Wis. 2d 93, 698 N.W.2d 740.This situation is discussed below, Section V.C.1.c, this Special Material. For a discussion of credit in consecutive sentence situations, see below, Section V.C. (intro.) and 2, this Special Material.

33. The defendant in Tuescher won a new trial on an attempted homicide charge arising out of an incident involving a burglary and shooting. The attempted homicide conviction was reversed, and while it was being relitigated he remained in custody serving the sentences imposed for two other charges arising out of the incident. After he was convicted and sentenced again on the attempted homicide, Tuescher sought credit toward the new sentence for his time in custody between winning the new trial and being resentenced. The defendant was not entitled to the credit because during that time he was serving the sentences imposed on the charges which were not retried. 226 Wis.2d 465, 467.

34. See Wis. Stat. § 946.42(1)(a)1.h., and State v. Gilbert, 115 Wis.2d 371, 340 N.W.2d 511 (1983). The question of credit for time spent in jail as a condition of probation was an open one at the time SM-34A was originally published. That version recommended that credit be granted for such time. The Committee's conclusion was adopted in Gilbert, which held that the plain meaning of § 973.155 required that credit be given: "there is no basis for interpreting the statute as excluding custody as a condition of probation from the statute's coverage." 115 Wis.2d 371, 377.

Because jail time as a condition of probation is not a sentence, any "good time" the circuit court allowed the offender to earn while serving the conditional jail time is not eligible for sentence credit under 973.155(4); that statute provides for sentence credit to include "good time" only for sentences of one year or less. State ex rel Baade v. Hayes, 2015 WI App 71, 365 Wis.2d 174, 870 N.W.2d 478.

35. This principle was cited with approval and applied in State v. Ward, 153 Wis.2d 743, 452 N.W.2d 158 (Ct. App. 1989).

36. State v. (Elandis) Johnson , 2009 WI 57, ¶¶50-60, 318 Wis.2d 21, 767 N.W.2d 207, criticized a prior version of SM-34A (© 1995) that referred to crediting equally all concurrent sentences "imposed at the same time or for offenses arising from the same course of conduct." The court found this formulation "unfortunate" because it was "too broad" and had led to the belief that when concurrent sentences are imposed at the same time, any credit is to be applied against each of the sentences imposed regardless of whether the custody was factually connected to each sentence. Noting that the "unfortunate" passage was more understandable, if still inaccurate, when read in context with the examples in the Special Material, the court made it clear that any custody applied to any given sentence must also be factually connected to that sentence. Id., ¶¶61-68. As applied to Johnson's case, the court held:

> ¶47 Calculating the correct number of days that need to be credited to each of Johnson's concurrent sentences requires that we examine separately each sentence and the time spent in presentence custody "in connection with" each sentence. We cannot, as Johnson's argument attempts to do, conflate all the concurrent sentences imposed on the same day and make a credit determination as if there were only one overall sentence imposed.

The language criticized in (Elandis) Johnson was removed in the 2014 version of SM-34A.

37. When credit has been granted against an earlier sentence which was completely served before sentencing on a new offense, no credit against the new sentence is required. State v. Morrick, 147 Wis.2d

185, 432 N.W.2d 654 (Ct. App. 1988); State v. Amos, 153 Wis.2d 257, 280, 450 N.W.2d 503 (Ct. App. 1989); State v. Jackson, 2000 WI App 41, ¶19, 233 Wis.2d 231, 607 N.W.2d 338.

See also State v. Rohl, 160 Wis.2d 325, 466 N.W.2d 208 (Ct. App. 1991) (defendant not entitled to credit for time served in California while he was on Wisconsin parole because he had received full credit for the time toward the sentence he completed in California); State v. Martinez, 2007 WI App 225, 305 Wis.2d 753, 741 N.W.2d 280 (reaching the same conclusion with respect to time served in a federal institution); State v. Coles, 208 Wis.2d 328, 559 N.W.2d 599 (Ct. App. 1997) (a defendant who was sentenced on one count to a "time served" sentence that used all his pretrial credit was not entitled to any of that credit toward a sentence on a second count because the sentence on the second count was effectively consecutive).

38. State v. Gavigan, 122 Wis.2d 389, 362 N.W.2d 162 (Ct. App. 1984). Gavigan committed a robbery on September 15, 1982. About 24 hours later, he led police on a high speed chase that resulted in a charge of fleeing an officer. Thirty-nine days after his arrest, he pleaded guilty to the fleeing charge and was sentenced to six months in jail. One hundred and seven days later Gavigan was sentenced on the robbery – a three-year sentence to run concurrently with the six-month sentence on the misdemeanor. The trial judge gave 39 days credit on the three-year sentence.

Gavigan claimed he should also receive credit for the 107 days that followed the misdemeanor sentence but preceded the robbery sentence. The court of appeals affirmed the denial of credit for the 107 days, holding that the custody was not "in connection with" the robbery charge – it was attributable solely to the misdemeanor conviction.

39. See State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 369 N.W.2d 352 (1985). Beets was convicted of drug offenses and placed on probation with sentence withheld. He was arrested on a burglary charge and held in custody for that charge. Within a few days, a probation hold was added. The hold was based on the burglary charge.

Seventy-eight days after his arrest, Beets' probation was revoked and two concurrent three-year sentences were imposed. He received credit for the 78 days and went to prison.

One hundred and ninety-two days after his prison sentence began, Beets was sentenced on the burglary. He received a three-year sentence concurrent with the sentence he was already serving. He received 78 days credit for the time spent in custody before the first sentence was imposed (when both the revocation and the burglary charge were pending).

Beets sought credit for the 192 days that elapsed after his first prison sentence began, while the burglary charge was pending.

The supreme court affirmed the trial court's denial of credit, holding that confinement after the first sentence was imposed could not be "in connection with" the pending burglary charge. Thus, § 973.155 does not require credit, because the charges resulting in the first sentence and the pending charges were not "related." The court stated that "unless the acts for which the first and second sentences are imposed are truly related or identical, the sentencing on one charge severs the connection between the custody and the pending charges." Id., 383.

The rule in Beets that sentencing on a related charge "severs the connection" was applied in State v.

Abbott, 207 Wis.2d 624, 558 N.W.2d 927 (Ct. App. 1996). Abbott committed a battery while serving a sentence under the Division of Intensive Sanctions (DIS) program. He received a sanction of 89 days in jail. Later, he pled guilty to the battery and was sentenced. The court of appeals held Abbott was not entitled to credit on the battery sentence for time spent in jail for the DIS sanction. Any connection between the two sentences was severed when Abbott began serving the DIS sanction. See also State v. Hintz, 2007 WI App 113, ¶7 n.3, 300 Wis.2d 583, 731 N.W.2d 646 (applying Beets to offender revoked from extended supervision for new charges and given a sentence on new charges concurrent to sentence on which supervision was revoked).

However, Beets does not mean every sentencing "severs" the connection between custody and charges unrelated to the one on which the sentence is imposed. In State v. Yanick, 2007 WI App 30, 299 Wis.2d 456, 728 N.W.2d 365, the defendant was serving six months of confinement as a condition of probation for an OWI offense. While serving that condition time he was sentenced in an unrelated case. That sentence began running while he was serving condition time and was longer than the condition time.

When his probation on the OWI was revoked, he was entitled to credit toward the revocation sentence for the condition time despite the fact much of that time was concurrent to the sentence in the unrelated case:

> ¶22 To the extent the State is suggesting that Beets holds that service of a sentence on crime A always "severs" time in custody owing to crime B for purposes of awarding sentence credit on the sentence for crime B, we disagree. Beets addressed a particular type of status--time in custody serving a sentence and awaiting disposition on a separate crime. Beets does not address service of a sentence and concurrent service of custody time pursuant to a disposition, which is the sort of concurrent custody time at issue here.

Because Yanick was ultimately sentenced for the OWI for which he was confined as a condition of probation, his custody was factually connected to the course of conduct for which sentence was imposed. See also State v. (Elandis) Johnson, 2009 WI 57, ¶¶42-44, 318 Wis.2d 21, 767 N.W.2d 207 (discussing Yanick).

If an offender is in custody on a federal supervision hold based on state criminal charges and later receives a sentence for the state charges that is concurrent to the federal sentence, the offender is entitled to credit toward the state sentence for time spent in custody until the imposition of sentence in the federal case, which severed the connection between custody and the state charges. State v. Thomas, 2021 WI App 59, 399 Wis. 2d 165, 963 N.W.2d 927.

40. State v. Hintz, 2007 WI App 113, 300 Wis.2d 583, 731 N.W.2d 646. Hintz asked only for confinement up to his reconfinement hearing, which for purposes of § 973.155 is essentially a sentencing hearing. See State v. Presley, 2006 WI App 82, 292 Wis.2d 734, 715 N.W.2d 713. Courts no longer determine the amount of reconfinement after revocation of extended supervision, so the reconfinement hearing is not the point at which the offender's sentence begins running again; instead the sentence resumes running when the person is returned to prison. Wis. Stat. § 304.072(4). State v. Davis, 2017 WI App 55, 377 Wis.2d 678, 901 N.W.2d 488.

41. Depending on the situations, sentences begin to run or resume running at different times.

a) Sentences to confinement commence on the date of imposition. Wis. Stat. § 973.15(1). This provision covers situations in which sentence was originally withheld and probation imposed.

b) Following revocation of probation in the imposed-and-stayed-sentence-probation-imposed case, the sentence commences when the offender arrives at the prison. The revocation date is irrelevant. Wis. Stat. § 973.10(2)(b). See also State v. Slater, 2021 WI App 88, 400 Wis. 2d 93, 968 N.W.2d 740.

c) Sentences of revoked parolees or persons on extended supervision resume running on the date the person is received at the correctional institution. Wis. Stat. § 304.072(4). See also State v. Presley, 2006 WI App 82, 292 Wis. 2d 734, 715 N.W.2d 713; State v. Davis, 2017 WI App 55, 377 Wis. 2d 678, 901 N.W.2d 488.

42. State v. Beets, 124 Wis.2d 372, 383, 369 N.W.2d 382 (1985).

43. State v. Zahurones, 2019 WI App 57, 389 Wis. 2d 69, 934 N.W.2d 905.

44. The Wisconsin Supreme Court approved of this general principle in State v. Boettcher, 144 Wis.2d 86, 423 N.W.2d 533 (1988), reversing 138 Wis.2d 292, 405 N.W.2d 767 (Ct. App. 1987). The essential dates and facts were as follows:

4/12/86	Boettcher, on probation with a three year stayed sentence, is arrested for a new offense; a probation hold is imposed.
4/22/86	Initial appearance on new charge; signature bond on new charge; probation hold remains in effect so Boettcher remains in custody.
7/23/86	Probation is revoked and the three year stayed sentence takes effect – on that sentence, credit for all days in custody from 4/12 through 7/23 (110 days) is awarded; sentence is imposed on new offense – 1 year to run consecutively to the other sentence – and no credit for time in custody is given.

The court of appeals held that additional credit should have been given on the sentence for the new crime for the 10 days between 4/12 and 4/22 – the time after arrest and before he was "released" on a signature bond for the new offense. (Of course, he was not released; he remained in custody on the probation hold.) The court reasoned that he was "in custody" on the new offense for this period and credit must be given against the eventual sentence on that offense. This is the case even though he received credit for that 10-day period on the other sentence resulting from the revoked probation.

The supreme court reversed the court of appeals, concluding "that dual credit is not permitted – that the time in custody is to be credited to the sentence first imposed – and that, where the sentences are consecutive, the total time to be served is thus reduced by the number of days in custody as defined by sec. 973.155, Stats. Credit is to be given on a day for day basis, which is not to be duplicatively credited to more than one of the sentences imposed to run consecutively." 144 Wis.2d 86, 87.

This holding is consistent with SM-34A, which the court cited with approval:

> We agree with, and endorse, the position of the Wisconsin Criminal Jury Instructions Committee's language in SM-34A V.B., where, in discussing consecutive sentences, it concludes:

> "The objective with consecutive sentences is to assure that credit is awarded against one, but only one, of the consecutive sentences." 144 Wis.2d 86, 101.

The Boettcher rule also applies where a sentence has already been served: "The core idea of Boettcher is that 'dual credit is not permitted' where a defendant has already received credit against a sentence which has been, or will be, separately served." State v. Jackson, 2000 WI App 41, ¶19, 233 Wis.2d 231, 607 N.W.2d 338. See also State v. Coles, 208 Wis.2d 328, 334, 559 N.W.2d 599 (Ct. App. 1997) (a defendant who was sentenced on one count to "time served" in an amount equal to his pretrial credit was not entitled to any credit on the prison sentence imposed for a second count; the prison sentence was consecutive to the "time served" sentence because the "time served" sentence was completed upon pronouncement of sentence); State v. Rohl, 160 Wis.2d 325, 466 N.W.2d 208 (Ct. App. 1991) (applying Boettcher to deny defendant credit for time served in California while he was on Wisconsin parole before his Wisconsin parole was revoked; because his parole was not revoked until after he was released in California and returned to Wisconsin, his post-revocation Wisconsin sentence was consecutive, not concurrent, to the California sentence); State v. Martinez, 2007 WI App 225, 305 Wis.2d 753, 741 N.W.2d 280 (reaching the same conclusion with respect to time served in a federal institution before the person's Wisconsin parole was revoked).

Further, the Boettcher rule applies when one of several concurrent sentences is vacated and, after resentencing, is ordered to run consecutively to the previously imposed sentences with which it was originally running concurrent. State v. Lamar, 2011 WI 50, ¶¶35-37, 334 Wis.2d 536, 799 N.W.2d 758. Lamar was serving two concurrent sentences. He successfully challenged his conviction, but by the time he did so one of the sentences was finished. After he was reconvicted, the court imposed a new sentence, ordered it to run consecutively to any other sentence, and denied Lamar credit for the time he had served on the sentence that discharged before his conviction was vacated. The supreme court affirmed, holding "the time for which Lamar seeks credit was served on a separate, non-concurrent sentence. If Lamar received the sentence credit he seeks, he would receive dual credit from two consecutive sentences [for the same period of time]. As this court held in Boettcher, defendants are not entitled to receive this dual credit on a consecutive sentence." 334 Wis.2d 536, ¶37 (citing a previous version of this Special Material). The court also concluded that § 973.04 – which requires credit for confinement previously served when a sentence is vacated and a new sentence imposed – was not inconsistent with application of Boettcher and that denial of the credit did not violate the prohibition against double jeopardy. 334 Wis.2d 536, ¶¶35, 43-50.

Finally, the Boettcher rule applies to cases in which an offender is seeking credit against consecutive sentences for a period of pretrial custody in two separate cases. State v. Trepanier, 2014 WI App 105, ¶14, 357 Wis.2d 662, 855 N.W.2d 465. Trepanier was in custody in both a pending criminal case and a civil commitment for contempt. When he was sentenced in the criminal case the judge ordered the sentence to run consecutively to the civil commitment. Boettcher did not preclude awarding credit for the time Trepanier was in both pretrial custody for the criminal case and custody under the civil commitment because the custody for the civil commitment was not pretrial custody. Id., ¶¶12-14.

45. State v. Wolfe, 2001 WI App 66, 242 Wis.2d 426, 625 N.W.2d 655.

46. See note 25, above.

47. Note, however, that if supervision has not yet been revoked, ordering the credit for the new offense may be required. In State v. (Eliseo) Brown, 2010 WI App 43, 324 Wis.2d 236, 781 N.W.2d 244, the defendant was held in custody in connection with a Wisconsin case and an Illinois parole hold. He was sentenced in Wisconsin first, and given a sentence consecutive to any other sentence. The circuit court denied him credit for his custody time on the theory Illinois might grant it to him, and thus give him improper "double credit." The court of appeals held it must be applied to the Wisconsin sentence, as the question of "double credit" was not ripe because Illinois had not revoked his parole yet, and to deny credit on this sentence might mean he would never get it at all.

48. This section discusses the modification or correction of a sentence to reflect sentence credit where none, or an allegedly inadequate amount, had originally been given. See State v. Amos, 153 Wis.2d 257, 279-82, 450 N.W.2d 503 (Ct. App. 1989), for a case where a sentence was amended to eliminate sentence credit to which the defendant was not entitled.

49. State v. Obriecht, 2015 WI 66, ¶¶33-36, 42-47, 363 Wis.2d 816, 867 N.W.2d 387. Obriecht addressed the application of credit to an offender reincarcerated under § 302.11(7), which governs parole revocation, but § 302.113(9), which governs extended supervision revocation, is essentially identical to § 302.11(7). Thus, the Committee concludes Obriecht's holding will also apply to offenders who have been reconfined under § 302.113(9).

50. State v. Lira, 2021 WI 81, ¶35, 399 Wis. 2d 419, 966 N.W.2d 605 (when a "convicted offender" is "made available to another jurisdiction," sentence credit toward the offender's Wisconsin sentence must conform to "the terms of s. 973.155).

51. For example, if the offender is serving a Wisconsin sentence and the other jurisdiction imposes a concurrent sentence, the Wisconsin sentence would continue to run—just as would be the case if the offender serving a sentence imposed in one county in Wisconsin was given a new, concurrent sentence in another Wisconsin county. If the other jurisdiction imposes a consecutive sentence, that would sever the connection between the offender's custody and the Wisconsin case until the offender is returned to Wisconsin to complete the sentence imposed here. Cf. Lira, 399 Wis. 2d 419, ¶¶33. It might also be the case that the offender's custody in the other jurisdiction before being sentencing there should be credited to the Wisconsin sentence because the offender was not given any credit for that time toward the sentence in the other jurisdiction.

SM-35 INCREASED PENALTY FOR HABITUAL CRIMINALITY — § 939.62

CONTENTS

Scope

This Special Material addresses issues arising in implementing Wisconsin's "repeater" statute – § 939.62. The formal title for the provision is "increased penalty for habitual criminality," but the commonly used term "repeater" is employed here. This addresses the generally applicable repeater provisions set forth in subsections (1), (2), and (3) of § 939.62.[1] Not addressed is the "persistent repeater" provision in § 939.62(2m)[2] or the several crime-specific repeater provisions that now exist.[3]

Issues arise at several stages of the criminal prosecution: when repeater status is alleged in the charging document; when a plea of guilty is accepted; when proof of repeater status is made; when the trial court makes the formal finding of repeater status; and when the repeater-enhanced sentence is imposed. There are also substantive issues concerning the timing of offenses and convictions, how the repeater statute's time periods are affected by periods of incarceration, and how the repeater statute is applied to specific statutory violations.

I. Alleging Repeater Status

A. Before Arraignment or Plea

If the State seeks to establish that a defendant is a repeat offender and thus eligible for an enhanced sentence, it must allege the defendant's prior convictions "in the complaint, indictment or information or amendments so alleging at any time before or at arraignment, and before acceptance of any plea." § 973.12(1).

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has recognized that the time of arraignment or plea acceptance is "the cut-off point after which time a defendant can no longer face exposure to repeater enhancement for the crime" charged. State v. Martin, 162 Wis.2d 883, 900, 470 N.W.2d 900 (1991). This cut-off point is strict and applies regardless of the type of plea entered by the defendant. When a repeater allegation is improperly added after the deadline, it is of no effect and must be vacated. Proof of prejudice is irrelevant. Finally, the portion of § 973.12(1) which allows for time to investigate the defendant's possible prior convictions before a plea is accepted does not extend the period for alleging repeater status beyond the time of arraignment or plea acceptance or entry. Martin, 162 Wis.2d 883, 906.

B. Amending a Repeater Allegation

A charging document may be amended after arraignment or plea acceptance to correct an error in the portion dealing with repeater status if the amendment does not prejudice the defendant. In State v. Gerard, 189 Wis.2d 505, 509, 525 N.W.2d 718 (1994), the court allowed the correction of the portion of the information which dealt with the extent of the penalty because that portion was not required by § 973.12(1) and because the amendment did not prejudice the defendant. An amendment of this type is not prohibited by § 973.12(1) because the allegation of a defendant's prior convictions will still have been made prior to arraignment and plea acceptance. Therefore, the amendment will be allowed unless there is prejudice to the defendant.

Applying Martin and Gerard, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals has held that "where the information correctly alleges a defendant's repeater status, a post-arraignment amendment to the information does not violate § 973.12 as long as it does not affect the sufficiency of the notice to the defendant concerning his or her repeater status." State v. Campbell, 201 Wis.2d 777, 785, 549 N.W.2d 501 (Ct. App. 1996).

A post-arraignment or post-plea amendment to the charging document alleging a provable prior conviction after the State failed to prove the prior conviction included in the original charging document will not be allowed. An amendment of that sort violates due process because the defendant has not been sufficiently notified of possible punishment at the time of arraignment or plea. State v. Wilks, 165 Wis.2d 102, 110, 477 Wis.2d 632 (Ct. App. 1991).

C. Dismissal and Refiling

When a repeater allegation has not been timely filed, or if there is an error in the allegation, the State may move for dismissal of the complaint without prejudice and, if the motion is granted, issue a new complaint that includes a proper repeater allegation. State v. Larsen, 177 Wis.2d 835, 839-40, 503 N.W.2d 359 (Ct. App. 1993).

II. Methods of Establishing Repeater Status; When it Must be Established

Before sentencing a defendant to the enhanced periods set forth in § 939.62, the prior convictions serving as a basis for the penalty increase must be "admitted by the defendant or proved by the State." Wis. Stat. § 973.12. As elaborated by the case law discussed below, this statute provides that the prior convictions can be established in either of the two ways:

(a) by the defendant's personal admission of the priors; or (b) by proof of the priors by reference to an official record, preferably by furnishing the court with copies of the judgment of conviction.

A. By the Defendant's Personal Admission

An admission of the prior convictions by the defendant is the simplest, surest way to establish the existence of the convictions. The admission must be made by the defendant personally, on the record. An admission may not "be inferred nor made by a defendant's attorney, but rather, must be a direct and specific admission by the defendant." State v. Koeppen, 195 Wis.2d 117, 127, 536 N.W.2d 386 (Ct. App. 1995) (Koeppen I), citing State v. Farr, 119 Wis.2d 651, 659, 350 N.W.2d 640 (1984). The admission must contain specific reference to the date of the conviction and any period of incarceration, if relevant to application of § 939.62 (see below, Sec. III. A and C). State v. Saunders, 2002 WI 107, ¶22, 255 Wis.2d 589, 649 N.W.2d 263.

In guilty plea cases, it is sufficient to cover this step with a specific question during the plea acceptance colloquy. SM 32, Accepting A Plea Of Guilty, includes the following question:

"Were you convicted of (name of offense) on (date)?"

Adding a question like this was suggested by the court of appeals in State v. Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d 251, 261, 513 N.W.2d 631 (Ct. App. 1994):

> One simple and direct question to the defendant from either the prosecutor or the trial judge asking whether the defendant admits to the repeater allegation will, in most cases, resolve the issue. We suggest that trial judges include this question in their colloquy with the defendant at the plea hearing (if there is one) or, otherwise, at the time of sentencing.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has given similar advice in a case involving sentencing as a repeater after a jury trial:

> The trial court may ask the defendant the direct question while observing the defendant's criminal record before him whether the defendant was convicted on a particular date of a specific crime. . . .

Farr, 119 Wis.2d at 659.

The question in SM-32 is modeled after the one suggested in Farr.

B. By Copy of the Judgment of Conviction or Other Official Record

If the defendant does not provide a direct personal admission of the prior conviction, then the State must prove the existence and date of the conviction beyond a reasonable doubt. Saunders, 255 Wis. 2d 589, ¶¶20, 51.

The best, most direct method of proving prior convictions is to provide a certified copy of the judgment(s) of conviction. Saunders, 255 Wis. 2d 589, ¶¶24, 55. An uncertified copy may also suffice. Id., ¶¶25-31, 34. Other documents may also be used. Section 973.12(1) provides in part as follows:

> An official report of the F.B.I. or any other governmental agency of the United States or of this or any other state shall be prima facie evidence of any conviction or sentence therein reported.

Any official report specific enough to identify the defendant, the crimes, and the date of the convictions is sufficient. See Farr, 119 Wis.2d at 660. A presentence report qualifies if the repeater allegation was expressly contemplated by the writer of the report; the date of the relevant prior conviction is included in the report; and the report contains sufficient indications that the writer independently verified the prior conviction from sources other than the complaint. State v. Caldwell, 154 Wis.2d 683, 693–95, 454 N.W.2d 13 (Ct. App. 1990).

Section 939.62(3)(a) excludes motor vehicle offenses under chs. 341 to 349 as qualifying prior convictions for § 939.62 sentencing enhancement. However, if a defendant has previously been convicted of a criminal offense involving a motor vehicle—for instance, under §§ 940.09 and 940.10—that conviction will be listed on the defendant's Department of Transportation driving transcript. A certified DOT transcript is sufficient to prove prior convictions for purposes of sentence enhancement under the traffic code. State v. Spaeth, 206 Wis.2d 135, 153, 556 N.W.2d 728 (1996). The standard for establishing prior convictions for sentence enhancement in traffic cases is lower than under § 939.62, Saunders, 255 Wis. 2d 589, ¶¶32-33, and there is no case addressing the use of a DOT transcript to prove a prior conviction for purposes of § 939.62. Nonetheless, the Committee concludes that the standards for assessing the sufficiency of a presentence report or other official report under § 973.12 would apply to the use of a DOT transcript if it is offered as proof of a prior conviction for purposes of § 939.62.

By contrast, Consolidated Court Automation Programs (CCAP) reports are not sufficient to establish prima facie proof of a qualifying conviction for purposes of sentencing a defendant as a repeater. State v. Bonds, 2006 WI 83, ¶42, 292 Wis.2d 344, 717 N.W.2d 133 (a CCAP report is neither the official record of a criminal case nor a copy of the actual judgment of conviction).

Note that once a defendant has been found guilty of an alleged qualifying conviction, whether upon entry of a plea or return of verdict, the defendant has been "convicted" for purposes of § 939.62 even if he or she has not yet been sentenced. State v. Wimmer, 152 Wis. 2d 654, 449 N.W.2d 621 (Ct. App. 1989). In the event a judgment of conviction has not yet been entered for the alleged qualifying offense because the defendant has not yet been sentenced, proof of existence of conviction will require some other kind of court record—for instance, a transcript of the plea, a copy of the verdict forms, or minute sheets.

Proof of the prior conviction is not governed by the formal rules of evidence applicable at trial. Saunders, 255 Wis.2d 589, ¶¶36-46; Wis. Stat. § 911.01(4)(c). The state may satisfy the proof requirement by asking the court to take judicial notice of court records in the same county and supplying the necessary information. Wis. Stat. § 902.01(2)(b) and (4); State v. Koeppen, 2000 WI App 121, ¶¶35-37, 237 Wis. 2d 481, 614 N.W.2d 530 (Koeppen II). Regardless of the evidence submitted to prove the qualifying conviction, if the defendant objects to its accuracy or reliability the State may need to submit supplemental proof to establish beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of the conviction. The court must look at and weigh the totality of the evidence to determine if the State has satisfied its burden. Saunders, 255 Wis.2d 589, ¶¶52-53.

Finally, the existence of the prior convictions must be established before sentence is actually imposed. If the defendant did not personally admit the convictions at the time of the plea or went to trial, the court may ask for an admission at the sentencing hearing. Koeppen I, 195 Wis.2d at 130; Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d at 261. If the defendant has not admitted the convictions, the State may rely on proof that was submitted as evidence or otherwise entered in the record either before or at sentencing. Saunders, 255 Wis.2d 589, ¶48; State v. Kashney, 2008 WI App 164, 314 Wis.2d 623, 761 N.W.2d 762. However, if the State relies on the use of judicial notice, it must do so prior to sentencing despite § 902.01(6), which provides that judicial notice may ordinarily be taken at any stage of the proceeding. Koeppen I, 195 Wis.2d at 131 (the use of judicial notice at a postconviction proceeding to correct the failure to prove prior convictions at sentencing is not effective because it is too late).

III. Substantive Issues

A. Timing of Offenses and Convictions

A defendant will be eligible for enhanced punishment as a repeat offender "if the actor was convicted of a felony during the 5 year period immediately preceding the commission of the crime for which the actor presently is being sentenced, or if the actor was convicted of a misdemeanor on 3 separate occasions during that same period, which convictions remain of record and unreversed. . . ." § 939.62(2); State v. Midell, 40 Wis.2d 516, 527, 162 N.W.2d 54 (1968); Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d at 259. The date the judgment or judgments of conviction were entered determine the date for measuring the 5 year period. State v. Mikrut, 212 Wis.2d 859, 569 N.W.2d 765 (Ct. App. 1997).

B. Misdemeanor Convictions

The phrase "convicted of a misdemeanor on three separate occasions," as used in § 939.62(2), does not require that three misdemeanor convictions occur in three separate court appearances. State v. Wittrock, 119 Wis.2d 664, 674, 350 N.W.2d 647 (1984). The focus is on the quantity of crimes committed and not the date of each conviction. "Whenever a misdemeanant is convicted of a fourth misdemeanor which was committed subsequent to the convictions of three prior misdemeanors, the defendant's sentence may be enhanced by the repeater statute." Id.

Because the focus is on the quantity of misdemeanors committed, a defendant's sentence may be enhanced even if the three misdemeanors serving as the basis for repeater status were committed as part of a single incident or transaction. State v. Hopkins, 168 Wis.2d 802, 810, 484 N.W.2d 549 (1992). "[T]hree convictions of misdemeanors during the five-year period satisfies the statute, regardless of when the misdemeanors were committed." Id.

In the Committee's judgment, a misdemeanor conviction expunged under § 973.015 cannot be the basis for a repeater finding. Section 939.62(2) requires that "convictions remain of record and unreversed"; an expunged conviction does not "remain of record."[4]

C. Periods of Incarceration

When a court calculates the 5 year period between the commission of the present offense and the conviction of any prior offenses, "time which the actor spent in actual confinement serving a criminal sentence shall be excluded." § 939.62(2).

The charging document need not include the period of incarceration served by the defendant even if the period between the commission of the present crime and the defendant's prior conviction(s) is greater than 5 years. State v. Squires, 211 Wis.2d 873, 879, 565 N.W.2d 309 (Ct. App. 1997).

Where the period between the commission of the present crime and the conviction for any prior crimes exceeds five years and the defendant had been imprisoned during that period, the length of the period of confinement must either be admitted by the defendant or proved by the State. State v. Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d at 260 (the defendant's admission that he spent "10 months, about" in prison was inadequate to satisfy the proof of the element).

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has suggested the use of the following question to obtain an adequate admission from the defendant: "For what period of time was the defendant incarcerated as a result of the conviction?" Zimmerman, 185 Wis.2d at 559.

If an adequate admission cannot be obtained from the defendant, the State must prove the period of incarceration in the same way it is required to prove the defendant's prior convictions. Goldstein, 182 Wis.2d at 260 61.

IV. Sentencing

Section 939.62 applies only where the court wishes to impose a sentence beyond the statutory maximum for the crime of which the defendant was convicted. So, even if repeater status was properly alleged and proved, the penalty increases come into play only if the sentencing judge imposes a sentence in excess of the regular maximum for the crime. If the court imposes a sentence within the regular statutory range, it is error to attribute any part of that sentence to repeater status under § 939.63. Harris, 119 Wis.2d at 625. Relying on the § 939.62 to enhance a sentence within the statutory maximum is an abuse of discretion and a specific increase imposed for repeater status will be dropped from the sentence. Id. See also State v. Vinson, 183 Wis.2d 297, 313-15, 515 N.W.2d 314 (Ct. App. 1994).

However, a sentencing judge's mistaken reference to a defendant's status as a repeat offender will not automatically constitute an abuse of discretion. If the judge offers specific findings upon which the sentence was based and does not specifically state that the sentence is being enhanced due to the repeat offender statute, an abuse of discretion will not be found even if the judge mistakenly refers to the defendant as a repeat offender or if the judge correctly refers to the defendant as a repeat offender but imposes a sentence below the statutory maximum. Farr, 119 Wis.2d at 661-63.

A. Correctly Stating a Repeater Sentence

The factfinding for proof of prior convictions is to be done by the trial court. Block v. State, 41 Wis.2d 205, 211, 163 N.W.2d 196 (1968). If the court desires to impose a sentence greater than the regular statutory maximum, it must "make a finding that the defendant is a repeater." State v. Harris, 119 Wis.2d 612, 619-20, 350 N.W.2d 633 (1984). The findings must specifically articulate the basis for the repeater status on the facts on record. Id.

Section 939.62(1) provides that if a person qualified as a repeater, maximum sentences are increased as follows:

- a maximum term of imprisonment of one year or less may be increased to not more than 2 years.

- a maximum of more than one year but not more than 10 years may be increased by not more than 2 years if the prior convictions were for misdemeanors and by not more than 6 years if the prior conviction was for a felony.

- a maximum of more than ten years may be increased by not more than 2 years if the prior convictions were for misdemeanors and by not more than 10 years if the prior conviction was for a felony.

If the defendant's status as a repeater under § 939.62 has been properly alleged and proved, and if the sentencing court has concluded that a sentence in excess of the regular statutory maximum is appropriate, the sentence should be correctly stated on the record and reflected in the judgment of conviction. The court should state that the defendant's status as a repeater has been established, identify the increased sentence that § 939.62 allows, and then state the sentence that is being imposed. Again, the term of years imposed must be in excess of that authorized by the statutory maximum for the crime and within the increased penalty allowed by § 939.62. The court should not indicate that any particular portion of the sentence is attributed to the defendant's repeater status, but a statement to that effect will not constitute reversible error. See § 973.12(2) and State v. Upchurch, 101 Wis.2d 329, 335, 305 N.W.2d 57 (1981), cited in Harris, 119 Wis.2d 612, 625.

B. Multiple Counts; Consecutive or Concurrent Sentences

If a defendant is being sentenced for multiple counts and is a repeat offender, the sentence for all or any of the separate counts may be increased accordingly. Melby v. State, 70 Wis.2d 368, 384, 234 N.W.2d 634 (1975).

The imposition of consecutive sentences is not a condition to the use of an enhanced penalty under § 939.62, Stats. State v. Davis, 165 Wis.2d 78, 83, 477 N.W.2d 307 (Ct. App. 1991). The phrase "maximum term of imprisonment," as used in § 939.62, refers only to each individual crime and does not contemplate the total sentence for multiple count convictions. Therefore, each count in a multiple count conviction may be enhanced under § 939.62, even if the individual sentences are imposed concurrently. Id.

C. Probation

The maximum term of probation is the maximum term of imprisonment for the crime. If the maximum term of imprisonment is increased under § 939.62(1), the maximum term of probation is increased accordingly. State v. Wicks, 168 Wis.2d 703, 706-07, 484 N.W.2d 378 (Ct. App. 1992).

D. Correcting an Improper Repeater Sentence

Section 973.13 provides that if a sentence is wrongly enhanced under § 939.62, (as by a failure to prove repeater status) the excess portion of the sentence will be void and the sentence commuted without further proceedings. This may be done either by an appellate court or by the trial court in a postconviction proceeding. Theriault, 187 Wis.2d at 133; Zimmerman, 185 Wis.2d at 559; State v. Holloway, 202 Wis.2d 694, 551 N.W.2d 841 (Ct. App. 1996).

If a trial court in a postconviction proceeding determines that the defendant's prior convictions were not properly proved, the court may correct the sentence by removing the excess portion and may also amend other portions of the sentence. Holloway, 202 Wis.2d at 698. Therefore, if a sentencing court is forced to correct the sentence under § 973.13, it may resentence the defendant "if the premise and goals of the prior sentence have been frustrated" by the need to commute the sentence. Id. at 700. In Holloway, the trial court reduced a sentence due to a failure to prove the defendant's prior convictions, but then altered the sentences from concurrent to consecutive. The court of appeals affirmed that the sentencing court acted lawfully.

V. Application to Specific Crimes

A. Attempt – § 939.32

The penalty for an attempt (of other than a Class A felony) is half the penalty allowed for the completed crime. § 939.32(1). Because § 939.62 is considered a penalty enhancer and not a crime in itself, it is not subject to the halving provisions of the attempt statute, § 939.32(1). Therefore, if a defendant who qualifies as a repeat offender is convicted of an attempt, the "maximum penalty for the underlying crime is halved and then that penalty may be enhanced under § 939.62." State v. Bush, 185 Wis.2d 716, 725 26, 519 N.W.2d 645 (Ct. App. 1994).

B. Controlled Substance Offenses – § 961.48

Section 961.48 provides for enhanced penalties for second or subsequent offenses under Chapter 961. It fulfills the same legislative purpose as does § 939.62. State v. Ray, 166 Wis.2d 855, 872, 481 N.W.2d 288 (Ct. App. 1992). Therefore, if a defendant is eligible for penalty enhancement under both § 961.48 and § 939.62, the sentence may be enhanced under either section but not under both. Id. at 873.

C. Contempt of Court – Punitive Sanction – § 785.04

Contempt of court for which a punitive sanction is imposed under § 785.04 is not a crime, and therefore, is not subject to the penalty-enhancing provisions of § 939.62. State v. Carpenter, 179 Wis.2d 838, 842-43, 508 N.W.2d 69 (Ct. App. 1993) applying McGee v. Racine County Circuit Court, 150 Wis.2d 178, 441 N.W.2d 308 (Ct. App. 1989).

D. Possession of a Firearm by a Felon – § 941.29

Section 941.29 states that "any person previously convicted of a felony who possesses a firearm is guilty of a Class E felony." This statute does not create a "penalty enhancer" but rather creates a distinct crime. State v. Jones, 142 Wis.2d 570, 576, 419 N.W.2d 263 (Ct. App. 1987). Therefore, the two year maximum penalty applicable to violations of § 941.29 may be enhanced under § 939.62. Id.

E. Use of a Dangerous Weapon – § 939.63

Section 939.63 states that the maximum term of imprisonment for a crime may be increased if "a person commits a crime while possessing, using or threatening to use a dangerous weapon." Sections 939.62 and 939.63 may both be used to enhance the maximum term of imprisonment for a single crime. State v. Pernell, 165 Wis.2d 651, 658, 478 N.W.2d 297 (Ct. App. 1991). If the sentencing court wishes to use both § 939.62 and § 939.63 to increase the maximum term of imprisonment for a single crime, § 939.63 must be applied first. The amount of enhancement available under § 939.62 should then be determined (based on the maximum term of imprisonment for the underlying crime plus the amount already enhanced under § 939.63). Id. at 658 59.

COMMENT

SM-35 was approved by the Committee in February 1998 and revised in 2022. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023; it corrected a statutory error to align with the most up-to-date language.

1. The text of subs. (1), (2), and (3) of § 939.62 follow. As to sub. (2m), see note 2, below.

(1) If the actor is a repeater, as that term is defined in sub. (2), and the present conviction is for any crime for which imprisonment may be imposed (except for an escape under s. 946.42 or a failure to report under s. 946.425) the maximum term of imprisonment prescribed by law for that crime may be increased as follows:

(a) A maximum term of one year or less may be increased to not more than 3 years.

(b) A maximum term of more than one year but not more than 10 years may be increased by not more than 2 years if the prior convictions were for misdemeanors and by not more than 6 years if the prior conviction was for a felony.

(c) A maximum term of more than 10 years may be increased by not more than 2 years if the prior convictions were for misdemeanors and by not more than 10 years if the prior conviction was for a felony.

(2) The actor is a repeater if the actor was convicted of a felony during the 5-year period immediately preceding the commission of the crime for which the actor presently is being sentenced, or if the actor was convicted of a misdemeanor on 3 separate occasions during that same period, which convictions remain of record and unreversed. It is immaterial that sentence was stayed, withheld or suspended, or that the actor was pardoned, unless such pardon was granted on the ground of innocence. In computing the preceding 5-year period, time which the actor spent in actual confinement serving a criminal sentence shall be excluded.

[NOTE: Sub. (2m) is not included.]

(3) In this section, "felony" and "misdemeanor" have the following meanings:

(a) In case of crimes committed in this state, the terms do not include motor vehicle offenses under chs. 341 to 349 and offenses handled through proceedings in the court assigned to exercise jurisdiction under chs. 48 and 938, but otherwise have the meanings designated in s. 939.60.

(b) In case of crimes committed in other jurisdictions, the terms do not include those crimes which are equivalent to motor vehicle offenses under chs. 341 to 349 or to offenses handled through proceedings in the court assigned to exercise jurisdiction under chs. 48 and 938. Otherwise, felony means a crime which under the laws of that jurisdiction carries a prescribed maximum penalty of imprisonment in a prison or penitentiary for one year or more. Misdemeanor means a crime which does not carry a prescribed maximum penalty sufficient to constitute it a felony and includes crimes punishable only by a fine.

2. Section 939.62(2m) contains what is commonly referred to as the "three strikes" provision. The formal title is "persistent repeater."

3. Repeater statutes are proliferating. The following provide increased penalties for repeated commission of specific crimes and are not addressed in this Special Material.

- § 939.621 Increased Penalty for Certain Domestic Abuse Offenses: provides a penalty increase of up to 2 years for domestic abuse offenses committed within 72 hours of arrest for a domestic abuse offense.

- § 939.626 Increased Penalty; Repeat Child Sex Crimes: provides a 10 year penalty increase for a second violation of §§ 948.02, 948.05, 948.06, 948.07, or 948.08.

Several other statutes refer to an "increased penalty" in their titles, but in fact provide for a minimum sentence, not an increase of the maximum. See, for example, § 939.623 Increased Penalty; Repeat Serious Sex Crimes [five-year minimum sentence]; § 939.624 Increased Penalty; Repeat Serious Violent Crimes [five-year minimum sentence]; § 939.635 Penalties; Assault Or Battery In Secured Juvenile Correctional Facility [five-year minimum sentence].

Finally, there is a series of statutes providing for a penalty increase where a crime is committed under certain circumstances: while armed with a dangerous weapon; while identity is concealed; etc. These have the effect of creating an additional element of the crime and most are addressed by jury instructions presenting the additional fact as a special question for the jury:

- § 939.625 Gang Crime Penalty Enhancer: provides a penalty increase of 5 years for gang-related criminal activity [see Wis JI-Criminal 985].

- § 939.63 Penalties; Use Of A Dangerous Weapon: provides for penalty increases if a person commits a crime while possessing or using a dangerous weapon [see Wis JI-Criminal 990].

- § 939.632 Penalties; Violent Crime in a School Zone: provides a 5-year penalty increase for certain "violent crimes" that are felonies and a 6 month penalty increase for certain "violent crimes" that are misdemeanors (changing their status from a misdemeanor to a felony). There is no jury instruction.

- § 939.64 Penalties; Use of Bulletproof Garment: provides a 5 year penalty increase for felonies committed while wearing a bulletproof garment [see Wis JI-Criminal 993].

- § 939.641 Penalties; Concealing Identity: provides a 5 year penalty increase for felonies committed while identity is concealed; increases the maximum sentence to one year in jail for misdemeanors [see Wis JI-Criminal 994].

- § 939.645 Penalties; Crimes Committed Against Certain People or Property: this is the so-called Hate Crimes Law; it provides a 5 year penalty increase for felonies and increases the maximum sentence to one year in jail for misdemeanors [see Wis JI-Criminal 996, 996.1].

- § 939.648 Penalty; Terrorism: provides a 10 year penalty increase for crimes involving "terrorism." There is no jury instruction.

- § 939.646 Penalty; Crimes Committed Using Information Obtained From The Sex Offender

Registry: provides for a 6 month increase on misdemeanors and a 5 year increase for felonies if the crime was committed using information obtained from the sex offender registry under § 301.46. There is no jury instruction.

- § 939.648 Penalty; Terrorism: provides a 10 year penalty increase for crimes involving "terrorism."

Also note that Chapter 961 has its own repeater provision for controlled substance offenses [see § 961.48]. See the discussion at sec. V., B., this Special Material.

4. For discussion of misdemeanor expunction under § 973.015, see SM 36, Misdemeanors; Special Disposition Under Section 973.015.

SM-36 SPECIAL DISPOSITION UNDER SECTION 973.015 C EXPUNCTION[1]

The following is suggested as a framework for deciding whether or not a defendant should receive alternative disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1.[2]

AT THE TIME OF SENTENCING,[3] THE COURT SHALL, IF REQUESTED BY THE DEFENDANT OR DEFENDANT'S COUNSEL, AND MAY, ON THE COURT'S OWN MOTION, DETERMINE WHETHER THE DEFENDANT SHOULD BE AFFORDED SPECIAL DISPOSITION UNDER § 973.015.

I. An Offender is Eligible for § 973.015(1m)(a)1. Disposition if:

A. The offender was under the age of 25 at the time the offense was committed;

B. The offense is

1. a misdemeanor

2. a Class H felony and

a. the person has not been convicted of a prior felony, and
b. the felony is not a violent offense as defined in s. 301.048(2)(bm), and
c. the felony is not a violation of s. 940.32, s. 948.03(2), (3), or (5)(a)1., 2., 3., or 4., or of s. 948.095.

3. a Class I felony and

a. the person has not been convicted of a prior felony, and
b. the felony is not a violent offense as defined in s. 301.048(2)(bm), and
c. the felony is not a violation of s. 948.23(1)(a)

C. The court determines that the offender will benefit and society will not be harmed by the disposition.[4]

II. Ordering Special Disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1.

If the sentencing judge determines that special disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1. is appropriate, the judge should state the finding on the record as follows:

"The court finds that the defendant has been convicted of an offense for which the maximum penalty is imprisonment for six years or less and that the defendant was under age 25 at the time the offense was committed. The court also finds that the defendant will benefit and that society will not be harmed by special disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1."

"THEREFORE IT IS ORDERED, pursuant to § 973.015(1m)(a)1., that upon successful completion[5] of the sentence imposed, as evidenced by receipt by this court (of payment of the fine and costs) (of a certificate of discharge from the (detaining) (probationary) (authority)), the clerk of court shall expunge[6] the record without further order of this court."

III. Rejecting Special Disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1.

If the defendant has requested special disposition under § 973.015(1m)(a)1. and the judge determines that the disposition is not appropriate, the judge should make a specific statement on the record that the disposition was considered and state the reasons for rejecting it:

"Special disposition available under Wis. Stat. § 973.015(1m)(a)1. has been considered. The court has determined that such disposition is not appropriate because (the offender will not benefit because (specify) (and) (society will be harmed because (specify)).

COMMENT

SM-36 was originally published in 1979 and revised in 1991, 1995, 1998, 2010, and 2013. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it involved editorial changes to the text, updating statutory references, and adding case law references to the Comment.

Section 973.015 was created by Chapter 39, § 711m, Laws of 1975, as a companion to the Youthful Offenders Act, Chapter 54, Wis. Stat., which has been repealed (Chapter 418, Laws of 1977).

This Special Material outlines the standards for discretionary expunction under § 973.015(1m)(a)1. Expunction is required under § 973.015(1m)(a)2. "if the offense was a violation of § 942.08 (2)(b), (c), or (d) or (3) and the person was under the age of 18 when he or she committed it." Section 942.08 defines the offense of "invasion of privacy." Subsection (1m)(a)2. was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 50 [effective date: September 5, 2003]. A third expunction option is provided by sub. (2m), created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014]. It applies to victims of trafficking who were convicted of violating § 944.30, Prostitution.

2009 Wisconsin Act 28 expanded the scope of § 973.015. The statute originally allowed expunction of misdemeanor convictions committed by persons under the age of 21. Act 28 amended the statute to change the age limit to "under the age of 25" and to extend applicability to all offenses for which the maximum penalty is 6 years or less (with some exceptions). The changes first apply to sentencing orders that occur on the effective date of Act 28 – July 1, 2009. (Sections 9309 and 9400, Act 28.)

Thus, the expunction authorized by § 973.015(1m)(a)1. now applies to all Class H and I felonies committed by persons under age 25, subject to exceptions set forth in new sub. (1)(c):

- it is not applicable to Class H felonies if

    - the defendant has a prior felony conviction, or
    - the crime is a "violent offense" under § 301.048(2)(bm)*, or
    - the crime is a violation of

        - § 940.32 [Stalking]
        - § 948.03(2), (3) or (5)(a)1., 2., 3., or 4. [Physical abuse of a child] or
        - § 948.095 [Sexual assault by school staff person]

- it is not applicable to Class I felonies if

    - the defendant has a prior felony conviction, or
    - the crime is a "violent offense" under § 301.048(2)(bm)*, or
    - the crime is a violation of § 948.23(1)(a) [Concealing the death of a child]

* The reference to a "violent offense under § 301.048(2)(bm)" is to the intensive sanctions statute, which lists more than 50 crimes that are deemed violent offenses. Of the crimes listed, only a few are Class H or I felonies.

NOTE: The standard for the court to use to determine whether expunction should be ordered remains the same: the person must successfully complete the sentence; and the person will benefit from expunction and society will not be harmed.

1. "Expunction" is the proper noun form of the verb "expunge." However, the use of "expungement" is common and § 973.015 is often referred to as "the expungement statute." See, for example, State v. Leitner, 2001 WI App 172, ¶1, 247 Wis.2d 195, 633 N.W.2d 207. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has noted: "There are two different words for the noun form of 'expunge'; we use 'expunction,' but 'expungement' is also used. To be clear, 'expungement' and 'expunction' mean the same thing." State v. Arberry, 2018 WI 7, ¶1, footnote 2, 379 Wis.2d 254, 905 N.W.2d 811.

2. Section 973.015 does not create a new type of sentence as such, but provides for the possibility of record expunction after completion of a sentence. It comes into play after an offender has been convicted and sentenced under standard procedure.

Ordering expunction is within the discretion of the sentencing judge since the statute provides: ". . . the court may order at the time of sentencing. . . ." (Emphasis added.) The court should consider disposition under § 973.015 and make a record of its decision, whenever the defendant requests it. The court may also consider disposition under this section on its own motion but need not consider it in every case where there is no request by the defendant or counsel.

A court commissioner does not have the authority to order expunction. State v. Michaels, 142 Wis.2d 172, 417 N.W.2d 415 (Ct. App. 1987).

Expunction under § 973.015 does not extend to judgments in forfeiture actions. Kenosha County v. Frett, 2014 WI App 127, 359 Wis.2d 246, 858 N.W.2d 397. The attorney general has concluded "that circuit courts in the State of Wisconsin do not possess the inherent or implied powers, in the absence of authorizing or enabling statutes, to order the destruction or expunction of criminal conviction records." 70 Op. Att'y Gen. 115, 120 (1981).

3. In State v. Matasek, 2014 WI 27, 353 Wis.2d 601, 846 N.W.2d 811, the supreme court affirmed a decision of the court of appeals which held that a trial court's decision whether or not to order expunction under § 973.015 is to be made at the time of sentencing. Under that view, the statute does not allow the trial court to leave the issue open until the defendant successfully completes the sentence. The supreme court stated:

> We interpret the phrase "at the time of sentencing" in Wis. Stat. § 973.015 to mean that if a circuit court is going to exercise its discretion to expunge a record, the discretion must be exercised at the sentencing proceeding. ¶6.

In State v. Arberry, 2018 WI 7, ¶5, 379 Wis.2d 254, 905 N.W.2d 811, the court reaffirmed the conclusion in State v. Matasek: ". . . a defendant may not seek expunction after sentence is imposed because both the language of Wis. Stat. § 973.015 and Matasek require that the > determination regarding expunction be made at the sentencing hearing." Further, a motion for modification of sentence does not create a second "time of sentencing"; the term refers only to the original imposition of sentence. ¶17.

4. See § 973.015(1m)(a)1. Except for stating the standard "the person will benefit and society will not be harmed," § 973.015 contains no guidelines for the judge to apply in deciding whether to order special disposition. Since the statute says only that the court "may order" special disposition at the time of sentencing, the Committee concluded that the decision lies entirely within the discretion of the sentencing judge, applying those standards that are generally applicable to the sentencing decision. Also see, State v. Helbricht, 2017 WI App 5, 373 Wis.2d 203, 891 N.W.2d 412.

5. "Successful completion" involves paying a fine, serving a jail sentence, or completing a period of probation and not being convicted of a subsequent offense (see § 973.015(1m)(b)).

In State v. Ozuna, 2017 WI 64, 376 Wis.2d 1, 898 N.W.2d 20, the defendant was issued a certificate discharging him from probation. The certificate had two boxes – both of which were checked – one indicating that probation was successfully completed and the other that he had not satisfied a "no alcohol" condition. He was denied previously-ordered expunction because he did not "successfully complete" probation. The supreme court concluded that expunction was properly denied – completing probation without revocation does not mean that all conditions were satisfied, and "successful completion" requires that those conditions be satisfied. The court noted that the form has been changed – it now has two boxes: "successfully completed" and "not successfully completed."

In State v. Hemp, 2014 WI 129, 359 Wis.2d 320, 856 N.W.2d 811, the supreme court reversed a decision of the court of appeals which held that Hemp's successful completion of his sentence did not automatically entitle him to expungement: while the controlling authority must issue the certificate of discharge, the court of appeals held that Hemp was responsible for doing the latter and he failed to do so in a timely manner. The supreme court reversed:

> ¶4 First, we hold that the successful completion of probation automatically entitled Hemp to expungement. Second, we hold Wis. Stat. § 973.015 is unambiguous and places no burden on Hemp to petition for expungement within a certain period of time because the duty to forward the certificate of discharge rests solely with the "detaining or probationary authority." Finally, we hold the circuit court improperly exercised its discretion when it reversed the decision it made at sentencing to find Hemp eligible for expungement.

6. Section 973.015 does not define "expunge." The word literally means "to destroy or obliterate; it implies not a legal act, but a physical annihilation." (Black's Law Dictionary, Revised 4th Edition.) On November 3, 1997, the Wisconsin Supreme Court issued Order No. 97-07, dealing with expunction of court records. The order created SCR 72.06 to read as follows:

> 72.06 Expunction
> When required by statute or court order to expunge a court record, the clerk of the court shall do all of the following:

(1) Remove any paper index and nonfinancial court record and place them in the case file.
(2) Electronically remove any automated nonfinancial record, except the case number.
(3) Seal the entire case file.
(4) Destroy expunged court records in accordance with the provisions of this chapter.

While this order clarifies the procedure to be followed by the clerk of courts in dealing with a record ordered expunged, there is little authority in Wisconsin relating to the consequences of expunged convictions. In State v. Anderson, 160 Wis.2d 435, 466 N.W.2d 681 (Ct. App. 1991), the court held that a conviction ordered expunged under § 973.015 cannot be used to impeach the credibility of the convicted person. [Anderson also held that the statute required physical destruction of the court record, a conclusion apparently overruled by SCR 72.06.]

The Committee concluded that a conviction expunged under § 973.015 may not be used as a prior offense for purposes of the general repeater statute, § 939.62. Section 939.62(2) requires that prior convictions "remain of record and unreversed." In the Committee's judgment, an expunged conviction does not "remain of record." This conclusion was also reached by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Leitner, below.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that "§ 973.015 does not direct district attorneys or law enforcement agencies to expunge their records documenting the facts underlying an expunged record of conviction. We further conclude that the circuit court may consider, when sentencing an offender, the facts underlying a record of conviction expunged under § 973.015." State v. Leitner, 2002 WI 77, ¶48, 253 Wis.2d 449, 646 N.W.2d 341. The court also recognized that "expunging the court record provides substantial advantages to the offender. An expunged record of a conviction cannot be considered at a subsequent sentencing; an expunged record of a conviction cannot be used for impeachment at trial under § 906.09(1); and an expunged record of a conviction is not available for repeater sentence enhancement." 2002 WI 77, ¶39. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals applied Leitner in State v. Allen, 2015 WI App 96, ¶38, 373 Wis.2d 98, 890 N.W.2d 245: ". . . a sentencing court must be permitted to consider all the facts underlying an expunged criminal conviction, and not just those underlying the crime itself."

SM-39 BAIL AFTER CONVICTION; STAY OF EXECUTION OF SENTENCE

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-30A was originally published as SM-30A in 1985. It was renumbered SM-39 in 1987. It was withdrawn by the Committee in 1995.

Bail after conviction is addressed at CR-2-9, Wisconsin Judicial Benchbook, Volume I.

SM-40 COURT'S INSTRUCTION TO DEFENDANT AT ARRAIGNMENT AND BEFORE ACCEPTANCE OF A PLEA OF GUILTY ON SEX CRIMES CHARGE

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-40 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1978. It was withdrawn in 1991.

This Special Material provided advice to a defendant charged with certain sex crimes and subject to specialized treatment under provisions found in Wis. Stat. Ch. 975. The sex crimes program was repealed by Chapter 184, Laws of 1979. No person could be committed under Chapter 975 after July 1, 1980. § 975.01(1). Therefore, there is no use for this Special Material after that date.

The legislation repealing the sex crimes program also extended a sentencing option to those persons committed under the Sex Crimes Law. They may petition the committing court for the imposition of a criminal sentence to replace the Chapter 975 commitment. See SM-41, Resentencing Persons Committed Under The Sex Crimes Law.

SM-41 SENTENCING PERSONS COMMITTED UNDER THE SEX CRIMES LAW

[WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

SM-41 was published in 1987. It was withdrawn by the Committee in 2010.

This Special Material outlined the procedure under § 975.17, which allowed persons committed under Chapter 975, the Sex Crimes Law, to petition the court for imposition of a criminal sentence to replace the Chapter 975 commitment. Chapter 975 commitments were repealed by Chapter 117, Laws of 1979, effective July 1, 1980.

SM-45 INQUIRY IN CONFLICT OF INTEREST CASES

This Special Material is intended to implement decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court requiring that the trial court make an inquiry when facts indicate a potential conflict of interest on the part of defense counsel. The obligation first applied to cases where codefendants were represented by the same lawyer, State v. Kaye, 106 Wis.2d 1, 14, 315 N.W.2d 337 (1982),[1] and was later expanded to all cases where a conflict of interest may arise, State v. Miller, 160 Wis.2d 646, 467 N.W.2d 118 (1991).[2]

Where an inquiry is required, it has two purposes: to elicit sufficient facts to determine whether an actual conflict or a serious potential conflict exists; and if a conflict exists, to determine whether the defendant may waive the right to conflict-free representation.

I. Cases in Which an Inquiry is Required

A. Multiple representation

State v. Kaye held that an inquiry is required: ". . . whenever the same attorney or law firm represents more than one defendant in the same criminal case." The rule was reaffirmed in State v. Miller, supra, and in State v. Dadas, 190 Wis.2d 340, 526 N.W.2d 818 (Ct. App. 1994).[3]

1. Federal Rule 44(c), after which the Kaye requirement was modeled, requires an inquiry when defendants are represented by attorneys "associated in the practice of law."

2. An inquiry should be made whether counsel is retained or appointed.[4]

3. Inquiry is required in both felonies and misdemeanors.

4. The inquiry is not limited to cases expected to go to trial[5] but is required to assure effective assistance of counsel in regard to all matters beyond the initial appearance and setting of pretrial release.

B. Other conflict of interest situations

The primary cases reaching the appellate courts have involved multiple representation, but conflict of interest concerns can also arise where defense counsel has previously participated in the prosecution of the defendant[6] or represents or has represented a witness for the state.[7] In either situation, the trial court should conduct an inquiry into the existence of an actual conflict.[8]

II. Inquiry Whether a Conflict Exists

A. Standard

The court must first determine whether an actual or serious potential conflict exists.

Cases have elaborated upon the standard in multiple representation cases, concluding that there is an actual conflict of interest where incriminating information voluntarily supplied by one client is used to provide evidence of another client's criminal activities, expose another client to potential criminal prosecution, or provide justification for a sentencing recommendation or a sentence.[9] Counsel could face a conflict of interest in several different situations: in pursuing plea negotiations for one client; cross-examining one of the clients at trial; or pursuing a line of defense for one client that might implicate another.[10]

In conflict situations not involving multiple representation, similar concerns are involved, all relating to the central question: is counsel able to give undivided loyalty to the client.

B. Timing

Inquiry regarding the existence of an actual conflict of interest or of a serious potential conflict should be made at the arraignment in misdemeanors and as early as possible in felonies. In felonies, waiting until the arraignment is too late. The inquiry should be conducted:

1. In open court (generally, but see below).

2. On the record.

3. With the participation of the prosecutor.

Evidence of possible conflict of interest could arise at any time during the case; if so, an inquiry should be conducted then.

C. In chambers inquiry

If the initial inquiry indicates a possibility of conflict of interest, a more detailed inquiry is required. If the detailed inquiry would result in disclosures to the prosecutor that would be unfairly prejudicial to the defendant, inquiry should be in chambers, on the record, with defendant and defense counsel. The prosecutor may be excluded. If a detailed inquiry would result in information coming to the trial judge's attention that would be unfairly prejudicial to the defendant, the inquiry may be conducted before a different judge.

III. Inquiry of Defense Counsel

Adequately investigating the conflict of interest issue may require making inquiry of defense counsel.

A. Standards relating to conflict of interest

The Wisconsin Rules of Professional Conduct for Attorneys address conflict of interest in two sections. See SCR 20:1.7, Conflict of interest: general rule, and SCR 20:1.8, Conflict of interest: prohibited transactions.

Specific duties of defense counsel are elaborated upon by Sec. 4-3.5(b) of the ABA Standards. This standard was adopted in State v. Kaye, 106 Wis.2d 1, 15:[11]

> (b) Except for preliminary matters such as initial hearings or applications for bail, a lawyer or lawyers who are associated in practice should not undertake to defend more than one defendant in the same criminal case if the duty to one of the defendants may conflict with the duty to another. The potential for conflict of interest in representing multiple defendants is so grave that ordinarily a lawyer should decline to act for more than one of several codefendants except in unusual situations when, after careful investigation, it is clear that:
> (i) no conflict is likely to develop;
> (ii) the several defendants give an informed consent to such multiple representation; and

(iii) the consent of the defendants is made a matter of judicial record. In determining the presence of consent by the defendants, the trial judge should make appropriate inquiries respecting actual or potential conflicts of interest of counsel and whether the defendants fully comprehend the difficulties that an attorney sometimes encounters in defending multiple clients. In some instances, accepting or continuing employment by more than one defendant in the same criminal case is unprofessional conduct.

B. Questions to ask defense counsel

1. Has counsel considered the possibility of conflict?

2. What investigation has counsel undertaken to see whether conflict exists?

3. What discussion or explanation of conflict has there been with the client?

C. The court should strongly advise against multiple representation

IV. Inquiry of Defendants

If a conflict is found to exist, it may be waived by the defendant after a proper inquiry is made by the court. This requires addressing the defendant personally, in the same manner as a guilty plea.

An inquiry like the following is suggested:

COURT: "Your right to a fair trial guarantees that you have the right to be represented by counsel. In the circumstances of this case, one part of that right to counsel may be in conflict with another part of that right.

"You do have the right to counsel of your own choice. That is, you have the right to select your own lawyer and to be represented by that lawyer. At the same time, you have the right to be represented by a lawyer who has undivided loyalty to you; that is, your lawyer should have only your interests at heart with no conflicting reason for not representing your interests as vigorously as possible.

[THE FOLLOWING TWO PARAGRAPHS APPLY ONLY TO THE MULTIPLE REPRESENTATION CASE.][12]

"It is the right to counsel with no conflict of interest that is at stake here. Because your lawyer is undertaking to represent both you and your codefendant, there is the potential for a conflict of interest. A lawyer seeking to represent two defendants in the same case unavoidably faces the possibility that the duty to one client may conflict with the duty to the other. A conflict can arise in many different situations: plea negotiations; deciding what witnesses to call and how to question them; deciding whether either defendant should testify; making opening and closing arguments in court; and in other situations. And if both you and your codefendant are convicted, it will be especially difficult for the lawyer to represent both of you effectively at sentencing without arguing that one of you deserves more blame than the other.

"Conflict of interest arises in many different ways and is difficult to detect or foresee. As a result, the law strongly prefers that a lawyer represent only one person. However, the law also recognizes that a person accused of crime has the right to be represented by the lawyer of his choice and therefore allows you to give up the right to counsel who represents only you.

"You should discuss these problems with your lawyer, and you should feel free to discuss them with another lawyer if you want to. If, after carefully considering possible problems which may arise, you wish to continue to be represented by your present lawyer, the court will consider your request. The court will be in recess until you have had a full opportunity to consider this with your lawyer and decide this important matter."

AFTER ALLOWING A REASONABLE PERIOD OF TIME FOR THE DEFENDANT(S) TO CONSIDER THE CONFLICT OF INTEREST PROBLEM, MAKE THE FOLLOWING INQUIRY ON THE RECORD.

"Do you wish to continue with your present lawyer?"

[IF THE ANSWER IS "NO," NO FURTHER INQUIRY IS NECESSARY.]

"Have you had enough time to consider the possible conflict of interest problem?"

"Have you discussed possible conflicts in your case with your lawyer?"

"Do you have any questions about the conflict of interest problem?"

"Please explain what the term "conflict of interest" means to you."

[CONTINUE ASKING ABOUT THE DEFENDANT'S PERCEPTION OF THE CONFLICTS PROBLEM UNTIL SATISFIED THAT THE DEFENDANT IS AWARE OF AND UNDERSTANDS THE VARIOUS RISKS INVOLVED.]

"In spite of these possible problems, do you wish to continue to be represented by (name of lawyer) ?"

V. Waiver of the Right to Separate Counsel

A. The waiver must be free, voluntary, and understanding

1. It is like a guilty plea or a waiver of jury trial.

2. Inquiry into educational background, etc., may be necessary.[13]

B. If there is a valid waiver, the defendant may continue with joint representation subject to review by the court. See section VI, below.

VI. Rejecting the Waiver; Disqualifying Counsel

A trial court has the authority to disqualify counsel, even over the defendant's objection and proffered waiver of the right to conflict-free representation, when an actual or serious potential conflict of interest exists.[14]

The court must first have determined that an actual or serious potential conflict exists after conducting the inquiry outlined above. The court should be alert to any possibility that the state is seeking to manufacture the conflict to eliminate a particular lawyer as an adversary. When there is any evidence of this, it should be carefully explored in the record.[15]

Once an actual or serious potential conflict is established, the decision to disqualify counsel resides in the sound discretion of the trial court. Factors to consider include:[16]

(1) whether client and counsel have a close relationship or one of long duration;

(2) whether counsel has performed substantial work in the case;

(3) whether an alternative lawyer of like ability could be obtained; and,

(4) whether disqualification would cause unacceptable delay.

COMMENT

SM-45 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1989, 1991, and 1995. This revision, which involved a general updating and expanded SM-45 to apply to conflict of interest generally, was approved by the Committee in August 1999.

1. In State v. Kaye, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held:

> . . . we will require trial courts to conduct an inquiry whenever the same attorney or law firm represents more than one defendant in the same criminal case. The court should inquire of the defendants and their attorney at the arraignment as to the possibility for actual conflicts of interest. The judge should ensure that the defendants understand the potential conflicts and determine whether they want separate counsel. If the defendants insist on being represented by the same counsel, after being fully advised of the potential problems, the trial judge should permit such multiple representation. However, this determination should not be made unless it is clear the defendants have made a voluntary and knowing waiver of their right to separate counsel.

106 Wis.2d 1, 14.

Kaye arose in connection with a defendant's postconviction claim that he was denied effective assistance of counsel at sentencing because his lawyer also represented a codefendant. Though Kaye had not objected to the multiple representation in the trial court, he argued at the postconviction stage that his lawyer was precluded from arguing that Kaye was less culpable than the codefendant because the lawyer also represented the codefendant. The Wisconsin Supreme Court denied relief on the ground that Kaye failed to show "that an actual conflict of interest adversely affected his lawyer's performance," citing Cuyler v. Sullivan, 446 U.S. 335, 348 (1980), in which the United States Supreme Court established the standard for evaluating claims of ineffectiveness of counsel based on conflict of interest. However, the court in Kaye established the requirement for an inquiry by the trial court in order to avoid having problems like this arise in the future.

[Note that a different standard applies to evaluating claims of ineffective assistance of counsel in multiple representation cases. The test is whether "an actual conflict of interest adversely affected performance." This is in contrast to the test in all other situations, which involves two questions: (1) was performance of counsel deficient; and (2) if so, was there prejudice. Strickland v. Washington, 466 U.S. 668 (1984). In the multiple representation situation, prejudice is presumed "if the defendant demonstrates that counsel actively represented conflicting interests and that an actual conflict of interest adversely affected his lawyer's performance." Burger v. Kemp, 483 U.S. 776, 107 S.Ct. 3114, 3120 (1987), citing Strickland, supra, 466 U.S. at 692, and Cuyler, supra, 446 U.S. at 348, 350.]

The rule announced in Kaye is modelled after Rule 44(c) of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. Rule 44(c) provides:

(c) Joint Representation. Whenever two or more defendants have been jointly charged > pursuant to Rule 8(b) or have been joined for trial pursuant to Rule 13, and are represented by the same retained or assigned counsel or by retained or assigned counsel who are associated in the practice of law, the court shall promptly inquire with respect to such joint representation and shall personally advise each defendant of the right to the effective assistance of counsel, including separate representation. Unless it appears that there is good cause to believe no conflict of interest is likely to arise, the court shall take such measures as may be appropriate to protect each defendant's right to counsel.

The commentary to the federal rule offers a helpful discussion of the scope and nature of the multiple representation problem.

2. In Miller, the court reaffirmed the rule in State v. Kaye, supra, as to multiple representation cases, but stated the obligation to conduct an inquiry more broadly: ". . . a circuit court should make an inquiry . . . when counsel represents codefendants in the same criminal case or when a question of conflict of interest is raised in any criminal case about an accused's counsel of choice." 160 Wis.2d 646, 660-61.

3. In State v. Dadas, 190 Wis.2d 340, 526 N.W.2d 818 (Ct. App. 1994), the court of appeals reaffirmed the need for a trial court to conduct a colloquy with the defendant(s) in all cases where one lawyer represents more than one defendant. Noting that State v. Kaye, supra, did not identify the remedy to be applied where a required colloquy is not conducted, the court of appeals decided it should "independently review the record to ascertain from the facts and circumstances if there was an actual conflict of interest." 190 Wis.2d 340, 346.

4. Multiple representation concerns should rarely come up in cases involving appointed counsel, since the State Public Defender is under a statutory obligation to enact rules relating to conflict of interest. See § 977.02(6).

5. See, for example, § 968.45(1), relating to witnesses before a grand jury, which reads in part as follows:

> . . . . If the prosecuting officer, attorney for a witness or a grand juror believes that a conflict of interest exists for an attorney or attorneys to represent more than one witness before a grand jury, the person so believing may make a motion before the presiding judge to disqualify the attorney from representing more than one witness before the grand jury. A hearing shall be held upon notice with the burden upon the moving party to establish the conflict.

6. State v. Love, 227 Wis.2d 60, 594 N.W.2d 806 (1999), reversing 218 Wis.2d 1, 579 N.W.2d 277 (Ct. App. 1998): defense counsel was a former prosecutor who had represented the state at Love's original sentencing two years earlier. The court of appeals held that the appearance of a conflict was so strong that nothing more is required to warrant a remand for resentencing with different counsel. The supreme court reversed, holding that an inquiry into the presence of an actual conflict of interest is required in the serial representation case. Also see State v. Cobbs, 221 Wis.2d 101, 548 N.W.2d 709 (Ct. App. 1998): defense counsel had previously worked as a prosecutor in a case involving the defendant five years earlier; there was no actual conflict or a serious potential conflict of interest.

7. State v. Street, 202 Wis.2d 534, 551 N.W.2d 830 (Ct. App. 1996): defense counsel had an actual conflict of interest because counsel was also representing a detective – who was the lead investigator in the criminal prosecution of Street – in the detective's divorce.

8. In State v. Love, note 6, supra, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the same inquiry should be conducted in the serial representation case that Kaye requires for the multiple representation case. The court emphasized that the key to addressing these potential problems is early disclosure to the trial court:

> In extending Cuyler-Kaye standards to serial representation, we are bound to extend also the requirement that all potential conflicts of interest that result from an attorney switching sides be made known to the court as soon as feasible before trial so that the court can inform the affected parties and conduct an appropriate inquiry.

227 Wis.2d 60, 79.

9. State v. Dadas, 190 Wis.2d 340, 347-48, 526 N.W.2d 818 (Ct. App. 1994).

10. These were examples recognized in State v. Miller, supra, 160 Wis.2d 646, 659.

11. The ABA standard cited in the text and adopted in Kaye recognizes that an attorney who undertakes multiple representation may be engaging in unprofessional conduct. For a case where multiple representation was the basis for discipline of an attorney, see Disciplinary Proceedings Against Eisenberg, 117 Wis.2d 332, 344 N.W.2d 169 (1984).

12. The two paragraphs that follow in the text are intended to describe the conflict of interest that exists where one lawyer represents more than one defendant. In other conflict cases, a similar description of the nature of the conflict should be provided.

13. SM-30, WAIVER OF COUNSEL, suggests general questions that relate to the defendant's ability to make an understanding and voluntary waiver of counsel. The same questions may be useful in connection with the waiver of conflict-free counsel. Also see SM-32, ACCEPTING A PLEA OF GUILTY, for similar questions about educational background, drug use, etc.

14. In Wheat v. United States, 486 U.S. 153 (1988), the United States Supreme Court dealt with the question whether a federal district court could decline a defendant's waiver of the right to conflict-free representation. Wheat was charged with crimes relating to a drug distribution enterprise. He sought to substitute for his lawyer by bringing in a different lawyer who also represented two others charged with crimes related to the same drug enterprise. The trial judge refused to allow the substitution, finding that there was an irreconcilable conflict of interest that could not be waived, despite the defendant's willingness to do so. Wheat appealed on the ground that the refusal to accept his waiver deprived him of his right to be represented by counsel of his choice. The Supreme Court upheld the action of the trial court, holding that "where a court finds an actual conflict of interest, there can be no doubt that it may decline a proffer of waiver, and insist that defendants be separately represented." This applies to cases involving potential as well as actual conflicts. The trial court "must recognize a presumption in favor of petitioner's counsel of choice, but that presumption may be overcome not only by a demonstration of actual conflict but by a showing of serious potential for conflict. The evaluation of the facts and circumstances of each case under this standard must be left primarily to the informed judgment of the trial court."

In State v. Miller, 160 Wis.2d 646, 467 N.W.2d 118 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court adopted the Wheat rule:

> We conclude that the circuit court may, in its discretion, disqualify counsel of a criminal accused, even over the accused's objection and proffered waiver of the right to conflict-free representation, when an actual or a serious potential for conflict of interest exists.

160 Wis.2d 646, 650.

The court overruled any language in State v. Kaye, supra, that could be interpreted as prohibiting a circuit court from exercising this authority.

15. In State v. Miller, supra, the court repeated the caution set forth in Wheat that trial courts be alert to the possibility that the government may seek to create a conflict of interest to eliminate a defense lawyer who may be a formidable adversary. The Wisconsin Supreme Court "repeat[ed] these admonitions so that circuit courts will be sensitive to the motives of the prosecutors and carefully explore this issue on the record in the exercise of its discretion to disqualify counsel." 160 Wis.2d 646, 654.

16. These factors were acknowledged in State v. Miller, supra, 160 Wis.2d 646, 659.

SM-50 COMPETENCY TO PROCEED

The following Special Material outlines the procedures relating to a criminal defendant's competency to proceed as those procedures are set forth in sections 971.13 and 971.14, Wisconsin Statutes. The material takes into account the changes in those statutes made by legislation through the end of the 2021-22 legislative session.

CONTENTS

I. The Legal Standard for Incompetency

Section 971.13(1) provides: "No person who lacks substantial mental capacity to understand the proceedings or assist in his or her own defense may be tried, convicted, or sentenced for the commission of an offense so long as the incapacity endures." (Emphasis added.)

A. "Lacks substantial mental capacity"

The phrase "lacks substantial mental capacity" replaced the former statute's "as a result of mental disease or defect is unable. . ." Thus, there is no need to identify a particular mental disease as the source of the alleged difficulty. The co-reporters for the Judicial Council committee that drafted the current competency statutes state:

> Not every defendant with a clinically recognized mental disorder is incompetent to stand trial. The legal standard is whether the defendant has the present mental capacity to understand the proceedings and assist in his or her own defense. The new legislation does not change this standard. It does clarify, however, that a defendant should not be considered incompetent to proceed merely because he or she requires medication to maintain legal competency.

Fosdal and Fullin, "Wisconsin's New Competency to Stand Trial Statute," Wisconsin Bar Bulletin (Oct. 1982) p. 11.

The term "lacks substantial mental capacity" can include mental retardation as the basis for an incompetency finding. In State v. Garfoot, 207 Wis.2d 215, 227-28, the Wisconsin Supreme Court made the following comments in connection with a suggestion noted in the state's argument that mental retardation alone may not warrant a finding that the defendant is not competent to stand trial:

> The State is correct in that mental retardation in and of itself is generally insufficient to give rise to a finding of incompetence to stand trial. However a defendant may be incompetent based on retardation alone if the condition is so severe as to render him incapable of functioning in critical areas.

B. "To understand the proceedings or to assist in his or her own defense"

This part of the standard has been part of Wisconsin law since 1965. The constitutional standard was stated as follows in Dusky v. United States, 362 U.S. 402 (per curiam, 1960): ". . . the test must be whether he has sufficient present ability to consult with his lawyer with a reasonable degree of rational understanding – and whether he has a rational as well as a factual understanding of the proceedings against him." The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that § 971.13(1) codifies the Dusky standard. State v. Garfoot, supra, 207 Wis.2d 215, 226.[1]

The same standard for competency applies at any stage of the proceedings. A higher or more demanding standard is not required for the decision to withdraw a plea of not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. State v. Byrge, 225 Wis.2d 702, 712, 594 N.W.2d 388 (Ct. App. 1999).

C. Rationale for the competency rule

The rule against trying a person who is not competent is grounded in due process: it violates fundamental fairness to prosecute a defendant who is not able to fully exercise his or her constitutional procedural rights. Further, "a defendant's full assistance and cooperation has been traditionally thought essential to developing the 'true facts' of the case." State ex rel. Matalik v. Schubert, 57 Wis.2d 315, 322, 204 N.W.2d 13 (1973).

D. Competency and related issues

It is often the defendant's courtroom behavior, inability to understand procedures, or difficulty in getting along with counsel that first gives reason to doubt competency to proceed. These problems may indicate other issues as well. These related issues are discussed briefly below.

1. Competency and criminal responsibility

Competency to stand trial is concerned with the defendant's mental condition at the time of the trial. Only the mental conditions that affect the ability to understand the proceedings and assist in the defense are at issue.

Criminal responsibility (or the "insanity defense") differs in two important respects. First, it is concerned with the defendant's mental condition at the time of the offense. Second, it is concerned with the effect of that mental condition on the defendant's ability to tell right from wrong or to conform his or her conduct to what the law requires.

A person with serious mental problems may present both competency to proceed and insanity defense issues, only one of them, or neither one. Trial courts should be alert for indications that either issue needs to be pursued and keep in mind the different time frames and abilities that each issue involves.

Courts sometimes order that competency and criminal responsibility evaluations be conducted at the same time or order an inpatient criminal responsibility examination.

There is no statutory authority for an inpatient examination of a defendant's criminal responsibility. Trying to combine that examination with a competency evaluation causes problems for the examiners because there usually is not enough time to conduct both of them.

2. Competency and self-representation

This Special Material is concerned with competency to proceed in cases where the defendant is represented by counsel.[2] Occasionally, the competency of defendants who seek to represent themselves is questioned. Competency to stand trial is not the same as competency to proceed pro se. Pickens v. State, 96 Wis.2d 549, 567, 292 N.W.2d 601 (1980). In State v. Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 564 N.W.2d 716 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court reaffirmed the Pickens rule and reversed a decision of the court of appeals that had held that separate inquiry into "competence for self-representation" was no longer required.

Extensive discussion of waiver of counsel, self-representation, and related issues is beyond the scope of this Special Material. But because these issues often arise in conjunction with competency to stand trial questions, a few considerations relating to the competency inquiry should be emphasized.

First, whether or not the defendant is represented by counsel, the court must determine if there is "reason to doubt" the defendant's competency to proceed. If there is "reason to doubt," the examination procedures set forth in subsecs. (1)-(3) of § 971.14 and outlined in this Special Material should be followed. If the court determines that the defendant is not competent to proceed, a commitment under § 971.14(5) should follow.

Second, if the defendant is found to be competent to proceed and wishes to proceed pro se, the court must determine if the defendant is making a knowing and voluntary waiver of the right to counsel. If the waiver is valid, a further inquiry must be made to determine whether the defendant "possesses the minimal competency necessary to conduct his own defense." Pickens, 96 Wis.2d 549 at 569, reaffirmed in Klessig, 211 Wis.2d 194, 212. For a complete discussion, see SM 30 WAIVER AND FORFEITURE OF COUNSEL; SELF-REPRESENTATION; STANDBY COUNSEL; "HYBRID REPRESENTATION"; COURT APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL.

3. Competency and amnesia

Amnesia by itself does not mean that a defendant is not competent to stand trial. Questions relating to amnesia may be raised by a request for a competency evaluation and, as to the competency issue, the regular standard applies. A defendant may suffer from amnesia and be competent under this standard. In those cases, Wisconsin courts have adopted a six-part test to determine whether the defendant – competent but claiming amnesia – can receive a fair trial. See State v. McIntosh, 137 Wis.2d 339, 404 N.W.2d 557 (Ct. App. 1987), and State v. King, 187 Wis.2d 548, 523 N.W.2d 159 (Ct. App. 1994).

4. Chapter 980 sexually violent person commitments

Section 971.14 once applied to chapter 980 commitments pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 980.05(1m) (2003-04). The previous version of § 980.05(1m) provided: "At the trial to determine whether the person who is the subject of a petition under § 980.02 is a sexually violent person, all rules of evidence in criminal actions apply. All constitutional rights available to a defendant in a criminal proceeding are available to the person." However, § 980.05(1m) was repealed by 2005 Wis. Act 434, §§ 101, 131(1) [effective August 1, 2006]. Therefore, because competency evaluations under § 971.14 are limited to criminal case defendants, they no longer apply to prisoners against whom a ch. 980 petition has been filed.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals affirmed this in In Re Commitment of Luttrell, 2008 WI App 93, 312 Wis.2d 695, 754 N.W.2d 249 when it held that a prisoner eligible for commitment under § 980.05(5) did not have a due process right to a competency evaluation under § 971.14. The court concluded that a ch. 980 action is a civil commitment, not a criminal prosecution, thus a prisoner against whom a ch. 980 petition has been filed is not a criminal case defendant. Luttrell, supra, at ¶7. Although a successful ch. 980 petition results in continued confinement, prisoners determined to be sexually violent persons are confined for treatment purposes, not for punishment. Id. at ¶9.

II. When and How Is Competency Raised?

A. May be raised at any time

1. In the trial court

Competency may be raised at any time between the filing of charges and the pronouncement of judgment. While questions about competency are usually raised before trial, it can become an issue after trial but before sentencing. State v. McKnight, 65 Wis.2d 582, 223 N.W.2d 550 (1974).

2. During postconviction proceedings

In State v. Debra A.E., 188 Wis.2d 111, 523 N.W.2d 727 (1994), the Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed the standards and procedures to be used when competency is raised during postconviction proceedings. First, the court noted that the procedures set forth in §§ 971.13 and 971.14 govern competency determinations only through the sentencing stage of a criminal trial and that they do not require circuit courts to rule on competency during postconviction relief proceedings. 188 Wis.2d 111, 128 & n.14. However, when the question of competency is raised in the circuit court at the postconviction stage, the court has the power to consider the question and should use the same "reason to doubt standard" employed under § 971.14. 188 Wis.2d 111, 131 & n.17. The court may use its discretion to determine how the competency evaluation should be made; if a hearing is held, the court should be guided by § 971.14 to the extent feasible. 188 Wis.2d 111, 131-32. The standard for the competency decision is as follows: ". . . a defendant is incompetent to pursue postconviction relief . . . when he or she is unable to assist counsel or to make decisions committed by law to the defendant with a reasonable degree of rational understanding." 188 Wis.2d 111, 126.

Because § 971.14(4) governs competency determinations only through the sentencing stage of a criminal trial and no other statutory section governs the standard of proof and the allocation of the burden of persuasion on the competency/incompetency issue during a postconviction proceeding, the burden of proof applicable during such proceedings has been established by case law. In State v. Daniel, 2015 WI 44, 362 Wis.2d 74, 862 N.W.2d 867, the supreme court held that when the issue of a defendant's competency is raised, and the state contends the defendant is competent, it has the burden of proving competency by a preponderance of the evidence.

If the court finds that a defendant is not competent at the postconviction stage, "the court's goal is to fashion a process through which circuit courts and counsel can manage the postconviction relief . . . while protecting defendants' fair opportunity for postconviction relief and promoting the effective administration of the judicial system. . . [O]rdinarily this process need not include a court order for treatment to restore competency. Meaningful postconviction relief can be provided even though a defendant is incompetent." 188 Wis.2d 111, 129 30. The court identified the following alternatives for the court to apply as appropriate:

(1) continuation of postconviction relief proceedings – defense counsel should initiate or continue postconviction relief on a defendant's behalf when any issues rest on the record, do not necessitate the defendant's assistance or decision making, and involve no risk to the defendant;

(2) continuances or enlargement of time limits for postconviction relief [if issues do necessitate the defendant's assistance or decision making];

(3) appointment of temporary guardians – upon defense counsel's request, to make the decisions the law requires the defendant to make; and

(4) permitting defendants who regain competency to raise issues at a later proceeding that could not have been raised earlier because of incompetency.

188 Wis.2d 111, 133-36.

In State v. Scott, 2018 WI 74, 382 Wis.2d 476, 488, 914 N.W.2d 141, the supreme court reinforced Debra A.E.'s observation that postconviction competency proceedings will "ordinarily … not include a court order for treatment to restore competency," 188 Wis. 2d at 130. The court held that the circuit court acted prematurely when it ordered the defendant to be medicated to competency "without first determining whether and to what extent postconviction proceedings could continue despite the defendant's incompetency." Scott, 382 Wis.2d 476, ¶26. Scott requires a circuit court to follow the mandatory procedures established in Debra A.E. before it may order a non-dangerous but incompetent defendant involuntarily medicated for the purpose of conducting a postconviction proceeding. Scott, 382 Wis.2d 476, ¶21-26. See also Debra A.E., 188 Wis.2d 111, 131- 36.

If an involuntary medication order is entered during postconviction proceedings, the defendant may appeal the order as a matter of right under § 808.03(1) and is entitled to an automatic stay of the medication order pending appeal. Scott, 382 Wis.2d 476, ¶42-44; State v. Green, 2022 WI 30, ¶¶18-36, 401 Wis.2d 542, 973 N.W.2d 770 (holding that Scott's automatic stay rule does not apply to pretrial involuntary treatment orders). The State may seek to lift an automatic stay pending appeal under the standard set forth in State v. Gudenschwager, 191 Wis. 2d 431, 529 N.W.2d 225 (1995), as modified by the court in Scott. 382 Wis.2d 476, ¶¶45-48.

3. During probation revocation proceedings

In State ex rel. Vanderbeke v. Endicott, 210 Wis.2d 503, 563 N.W.2d 883 (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court set forth the procedure to be employed when competency is raised during a probation revocation proceeding.

If an administrative law judge has reason to doubt the probationer's competency, the revocation proceeding is to be stayed until a competency determination can be made. An administrative law judge having reason to doubt a probationer's competency shall promptly forward a written request for a competency determination to the circuit court in the county in which the probationer was sentenced. The request shall be accompanied by a copy of the papers on file in the revocation proceeding and the administrative law judge's written statement explaining the grounds for finding reason to doubt the probationer's competency.

Upon receipt of the written request from an administrative law judge, the circuit court shall determine the probationer's competency. The procedures for determining competency to proceed at trial, set forth in § 971.14, shall be followed to the extent practicable.

4. Retrospective evaluation of a defendant's competency to stand trial

The ability to conduct a retrospective determination of a defendant's competency to stand trial is inherently difficult. However, in State v. Johnson, 133 Wis.2d 207, 225, 395 N.W.2d 176 (1986), the court of appeals determined that "the mere passage of time may not make the effort meaningless" if there is sufficient evidence in the record derived from the trial. By analyzing the applicable legal and medical records, along with a current medical evaluation, the court determined that it was possible to produce "a hindsight picture of Johnson's competency at the time of trial." Id. at 225.

If the circuit court concludes that a meaningful inquiry can be held, it must then hold a competency hearing. If the circuit court finds that a meaningful hearing cannot be held, or if it finds that the accused was incompetent during the trial, then it must vacate the judgment of conviction and order a new trial. Because "retrospective determinations of competency are factual determinations," they will be upheld "unless totally unsupported by facts in the record and, therefore, clearly erroneous." See State v. Smith, 2016 WI 23, ¶30, 367 Wis.2d 483, 878 N.W.2d 135; See also, State v. Byrge, 2000 WI 101, ¶33, 237 Wis.2d 197, 614 N.W.2d 477; State v. Garfoot, 207 Wis.2d 214, 224-25, 558 N.W.2d 626 (1997); Wis. Stat. § 805.17(2).

B. "Reason to doubt" the defendant's competency

Section 971.14(1r)(a) requires that a competency inquiry be made "whenever there is reason to doubt a defendant's competency to proceed." Defendants who may be incompetent cannot waive the right to have the court determine their capacity to stand trial. Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375, 384 (1966).

C. Who may raise the issue?

1. Defense counsel

Defense counsel usually raises the competency issue and may do so either by written motion or orally, on the record, in court. If defense counsel has reason to doubt the defendant's competency, counsel must bring the issue to the trial court's attention. Failure to do so constitutes ineffective assistance of counsel. State v. Johnson, 133 Wis.2d 207, 395 N.W.2d 176 (1986). In Johnson, defense counsel had letters from a psychiatrist and a psychologist expressing serious doubts about the defendant's competency but made the "strategic decision" to withhold the letters from the court. The defendant was convicted, but the conviction was reversed on the ground that counsel's failure to raise the competency issue constituted ineffective assistance of counsel as a matter of law. ". . . [W]here defense counsel has a reason to doubt the competency of his client to stand trial, he must raise the issue with the trial court. The failure to raise the issue of competency makes the counsel's representation fall below an objective standard of reasonableness. . . . We believe that considerations of strategy are inappropriate in mental competency situations. Thus, we hold that strategic considerations do not eliminate defense counsel's duty to request a competency hearing." 133 Wis.2d 207, 220 21.

In State v. Meeks, 2003 WI 104, 263 Wis.2d 794, 666 N.W.2d 859, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a lawyer who formerly represented the defendant could not testify about his or her perceptions of the former client's competency when competency was raised in a new prosecution. [See discussion at Sec. IV. A.1., below.] The court adopted what is characterized as the minority view on this issue and admitted that it creates a tension with the Johnson decision. The court did not overrule Johnson, pointing out that:

> The attorney is merely obligated to "raise the issue [of competency] with the trial court." Johnson, 133 Wis.2d at 220. There is no requirement that the attorney testify about his or her reasons for raising the issue or the opinions, perceptions, or impressions that form the basis for his or her reason to doubt the client's competence. Meeks, 263 Wis.2d 794, ¶46.

2. Defendant

Defendants may occasionally try to raise the competency issue themselves, even if defense counsel has not. In these situations, courts may wish to conduct an inquiry to establish whether the defendant's competency is the problem as opposed to difficulty in getting along with defense counsel or simply dissatisfaction with defense counsel.

3. Prosecutor

The prosecutor may also choose to raise the competency issue. In these cases, courts should be aware that in some instances, criminal charges followed by a prosecutor's raising the defendant's competency to proceed have been used as a substitute for initiating civil commitment proceedings under Chapter 51.

4. Court – sua sponte

Even if competency is not raised by the parties, a court has a duty to make an inquiry into competency whenever the defendant's conduct gives rise to "reason to doubt." Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162 (1975); Pate v. Robinson, 383 U.S. 375 (1966).

D. Basis for "reason to doubt" competency

A statement by the defendant or defense counsel to the effect that the defendant cannot understand the proceedings may not be enough to trigger a full competency inquiry and is not sufficient if negated by the defendant's actions, such as preparing motions that show an understanding of the proceedings. State v. McKnight, 65 Wis.2d 582, 223 N.W.2d 550 (1974). The claim should be supported by facts, such as the defendant's demeanor, medical history, the presence of irrational behavior, any prior medical opinions on competency to stand trial, etc. While defense counsel's representations need not be accepted without question, the United States Supreme Court has recognized that doubt expressed by the one with the closest contact with the defendant "is unquestionably a factor which should be considered." Drope v. Missouri, 420 U.S. 162, 177 n.13 (1975). If competency is not raised in open court, the presentation of a written motion (often captioned "Motion for Competency Evaluation") is an effective method for calling the issue to the court's attention.

In some cases, the "reason to doubt" competency will be obvious. In more difficult cases, it may be necessary to conduct an evidentiary hearing to help the court decide whether the full competency inquiry should be ordered.

In State v. Weber, 146 Wis.2d 817, 433 N.W.2d 583 (Ct. App. 1988), the court reviewed the "reason to doubt" standard in light of four factors: a statement by the defendant's first lawyer that he had "some question" regarding competency; the defendant's demeanor in the courtroom, specifically his silence and responses to certain questions; a civil mental commitment several years earlier; and statements by the defendant's second lawyer at sentencing to the effect that the defendant was under psychiatric care. The court concluded that these factors did not, individually or in combination, establish a "reason to doubt" competency.

E. Probable cause determination

When the court is satisfied that there is reason to doubt the defendant's competency, an examination of the defendant is to be ordered but only after a finding that it is probable that the defendant committed the offense charged.

1. Unnecessary, if after preliminary examination

If the question about competency arises after the preliminary examination, a further probable cause determination is not required. § 971.14(1r)(b).

2. From the complaint, unless the defendant avers the complaint is false

If competency is raised before the preliminary examination in a felony case (or at any time before the verdict is returned in a misdemeanor), the court may not order a competency evaluation until satisfied that it is probable that the defendant committed the offense charged.

The probable cause finding may be based solely upon the criminal complaint unless the defendant "submits an affidavit alleging with particularity that the averments of the complaint are materially false," in which case a hearing must be ordered. § 971.14(1r)(c).

3. Hearing on probable cause

The hearing is limited to the issues and witnesses required for determining probable cause. The defendant may call and cross examine witnesses. The rules of evidence do not apply. § 911.01(4)(c).

Section 971.14(1r)(c) allows the receipt of testimony over the telephone at the probable cause hearing: "Upon a showing by the proponent of good cause under § 807.13(2)(c), testimony may be received into the record of the hearing by telephone or live audiovisual means."

If the court finds that probable cause is not established, the charge shall be dismissed without prejudice, and the defendant shall be released (subject to being held in custody or continued on bail for not more than 72 hours pending the issuance of a new complaint – see § 971.31(6)). If the court finds that probable cause exists, an examination is ordered. § 971.14(1r)(c).

III. The Competency Examination

A. Ordering the examination

1. Appointing examiners

"One or more" examiners are to be appointed; they need not be psychiatrists but must have "the specialized knowledge determined by the court to be appropriate." § 971.14(2)(a). This is a change from prior law, which required that examiners be "physicians."

2. Outpatient examinations preferred

A defendant released on bail may not be ordered to have an inpatient examination unless the defendant fails to cooperate in the examination or the examiner informs the court that inpatient observation is necessary to an adequate examination. § 971.14(2)(b).

If the defendant is not released on bail, outpatient examinations are required unless "an inpatient examination is determined by the court to be necessary." § 971.14(2)(a).

3. Inpatient examinations

If an inpatient examination is found to be necessary, the defendant may be committed to "a suitable mental health facility" for up to 15 days. § 971.14(2)(a) and (c). The facility may request one 15 day extension if it can show good cause why the examination cannot be completed within the original period. § 971.14(2)(c).

The Department of Health Services determines where the evaluations take place. § 971.14(2)(am):

> Notwithstanding par. (a), if the court orders the defendant to be examined by the department or a department facility, the department shall determine where the examination will be conducted, who will conduct the examination and whether the examination will be conducted on an inpatient or outpatient basis. Any such outpatient examination shall be conducted in a jail or a locked unit of a facility. In any case, under this paragraph in which the department determines that an inpatient examination is necessary, the 15 day period under par. (c) begins upon the arrival of the defendant at the inpatient facility. If an outpatient examination is begun by or through the department, and the department later determines that an inpatient examination is necessary, the sheriff shall transport the defendant to the inpatient facility designated by the department, unless the defendant has been released on bail.

The court must arrange for the transportation of in-custody defendants to the examining facility and back to the jail. § 971.14(2)(d).

Time spent at an inpatient facility for a competency examination is time for which sentence credit is due under § 973.155 if the defendant is eventually convicted and sentenced. § 971.14(2)(a).

4. The commitment order for an examination

The commitment order should be executed completely and clearly. Use of the officially adopted circuit court form is required. § 971.025(1). The form is CR205 (revised February 2017), available on the state court website: http://www.wicourts.gov/. It should indicate the name of the defense counsel[3] and the prosecutor since examiners often wish to consult with the lawyers in conducting the examination. The examiners also find it helpful if the commitment order is accompanied by documents that provide more information about the defendant and the offense. The criminal complaint should be attached to the commitment order in all cases. When available, the following materials are also helpful:

- police reports

- record of previous convictions or arrests
- a presentence report from other recent cases
- any other clinical records the prosecutor may have.

This additional material is especially important for inpatient examinations since they must be completed within 15 days.

5. Examiner's duties

The examiner shall personally observe and examine the defendant and shall have access to treatment records. § 971.14(2)(e). "Treatment records" are defined in § 51.30(1)(b).

6. Medication and treatment during the examination period

Section 971.14(2)(f) provides that a defendant may receive voluntary treatment during the examination period. This "clarifies that a defendant on examination status may receive voluntary treatment but, until committed under sub. (5) may not be involuntarily treated or medicated unless necessary for the safety of the defendant or others. See s. 51.61(1)(f), (g), (h), and (i)." Judicial Council Committee's Note, 1981. Also, see State ex rel. Jones v. Gerhardstein, 141 Wis.2d 710, 416 N.W.2d 823 (1987), discussed in Sec. V.B., below.

7. Examination by other experts

Section 971.14(2)(g) provides that the defendant may be examined at any time by other experts chosen by the defendant or by the prosecution. These experts must be allowed reasonable access to the defendant. The examinations are limited to competency purposes.

B. The examiner's report

The requirements for the report and its contents are specified in § 971.14(3).

1. Time limits for filing

Section 971.14(2)(c) establishes the following time limits:

a. Outpatient examinations: within 30 days of the ordering of the examination.

b. Inpatient examinations: within 15 days of the ordering of the examination (unless the single permissible 15-day extension has been ordered, in which case within 30 days).[4]

2. Contents

Section 971.14(3) requires that the report contain the following:

a. Description of the examination.

b. Identification of the persons interviewed, the specific records reviewed, and any tests administered.

c. The clinical findings of the examiner.

d. The examiner's opinion regarding the defendant's present mental capacity to understand the proceedings and assist in his or her defense, including the facts and reasoning, in reasonable detail, upon which that opinion is based.

e. If the report indicates the defendant lacks competency, the examiner's opinion regarding the likelihood that the defendant, if provided treatment, may be restored to competency within 12 months (or the maximum sentence for the most serious offense with which the defendant is charged, whichever is less).

f. If sufficient information is available, the examiner's opinion on whether the defendant needs medication or treatment and whether the defendant is not competent to refuse medication or treatment. [Sub. (3)(dm).]

Section 971.14(3)(e) further requires that the report contain "the facts and reasoning, in reasonable detail" for the findings and opinions set forth in c. through f., above.

3. Filing and distribution

The report is to be filed with the court (§ 971.14(3)), and the "court shall cause copies of the report to be delivered forthwith to the district attorney and defense counsel, or the defendant personally if not represented by counsel." § 971.14(4)(a).

"Upon the request of the sheriff or jailer charged with care and control of the jail in which the defendant is being held . . . , the court shall cause a copy of the report to be delivered to the sheriff or jailer." § 971.14(4)(a).

The report shall not be otherwise disclosed prior to the hearing on competency. § 971.14(4)(a).

IV. The Judicial Determination Regarding Competency

Competency to stand trial is a legal issue to be decided by the court. A finding is not to be made on the basis of rubber stamping the expert's report. State ex rel. Haskins v. Dodge County Court, 62 Wis.2d 250, 264, 214 N.W.2d 575 (1974). Stated another way, the ultimate legal conclusion of competency to stand trial is a judicial rather than medical determination. State v. Smith, 2016 WI 23, ¶52, 367 Wis.2d 483, 878 N.W.2d 135.

A. The hearing on competency

1. The need for an evidentiary hearing

A full evidentiary hearing is not always required since the statutes allow the district attorney, the defendant, and the defense counsel to "waive their respective opportunities to present other evidence on the issue." § 971.14(4)(b). In State v. Guck, 176 Wis.2d 845, 500 N.W.2d 910 (1993), the court held that § 971.14(4)(b) does not require a personal statement by a defendant waiving the evidentiary hearing. In Guck, defense counsel stated in the trial court that he had discussed the report and the right to a hearing with the defendant and that the defendant wished to waive the hearing. The court concluded that "the Legislature did not intend to require a personal statement by a criminal defendant waiving the opportunity to present evidence on the issue of competency under sec. 971.14(4)(b)." 176 Wis.2d 845, 855.

Though Guck makes it clear that the statute does not require a personal statement by the defendant, the Committee continues to recommend as good practice that the court personally inquire of the defendant whether he or she concurs in the waiver. A simple question at this stage may help to forestall a later, more cumbersome inquiry into the effectiveness of defense counsel.

Section 971.14(4)(b) allows the receipt of testimony over the telephone at the competency hearing: "Upon a showing by the proponent of good cause under § 807.13(2)(c), testimony may be received into the record of the hearing by telephone or live audiovisual means."

As to whether a defense lawyer may (or must) testify, State v. Meeks, 2003 WI 104, 263 Wis.2d 794, 666 N.W.2d 859, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a lawyer who formerly represented the defendant could not testify about his or her perceptions of the former client's competency when competency was raised in a new prosecution. Meeks was charged with felony murder, and his competency to stand trial was raised shortly after initial appearance. The state introduced testimony of an attorney who had represented Meeks on charges in earlier cases but did not represent him on the current charges. The attorney did not testify as to any specific communications with Meeks, but the implication of her testimony was that Meeks was competent to proceed during those earlier cases.

The court of appeals held that the testimony was appropriate because it did not divulge the contents of any specific conversations and therefore did not violate the attorney-client privilege. The Wisconsin Supreme Court reversed, holding that:

> . . . an attorney's opinions, perceptions, and impressions relating to a former client's mental competency fall with the definition of a confidential communication pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 905.03(2) and SCR 20:1.6. As a result, such communications may not be revealed without the consent of the client. 2003 WI 104, ¶2.

The court adopted what is characterized as the minority view on this issue and admitted that it creates a tension with the Johnson decision. [discussed in Sec. II.A.4., above]. The court did not overrule Johnson, pointing out that:

> The attorney is merely obligated to "raise the issue [of competency] with the trial court." Johnson, 133 Wis.2d at 220. There is no requirement that the attorney testify about his or her reasons for raising the issue or the opinions, perceptions, or impressions that form the basis for his or her reason to doubt the client's competence. Meeks, 263 Wis.2d 794, ¶46.

In a final summary, the court restated its conclusion:

> In summary, we hold that the testimony of [former defense counsel] violated the attorney-client privilege. While the contents of confidential conversations with Meeks were not revealed in her testimony, [former defense counsel]'s expressed opinions, perceptions, and impressions of Meeks' competency were premised upon and inextricably linked to confidential communications. Confidential communications must be interpreted to include both verbal and non-verbal communications in order to preserve inviolate the integrity of the attorney-client relationship. Meeks, 263 Wis.2d 794, ¶58.

2. The burden of persuasion

Section 971.14(4)(b) provides as follows with respect to the standard of proof and the allocation of the burden of persuasion on the competency/incompetency issue:

> . . . . At the commencement of the hearing, the judge shall ask the defendant whether he or she claims to be competent or incompetent. If the defendant stands mute or claims to be incompetent the defendant shall be found to be incompetent unless the state proves by the greater weight of the credible evidence that the defendant is competent. If the defendant claims to be competent, the defendant shall be found competent unless the state proves by evidence which is clear and convincing that the defendant is incompetent.

The statute appears to comply with due process requirements for the competency determination and commitment for treatment.[5] However, a possible problem remains if the statute is read literally: if a defendant "claims to be competent," the burden is on the state to prove incompetence "by evidence which is clear and convincing"; if the state fails to meet its burden, the statute provides that "the defendant shall be found competent."

A problem may arise in at least two ways. One is that if the defendant "claims to be competent," the state may well claim the defendant is competent as well, leaving neither party with an interest in presenting the case for either competency or incompetency. A second variation would be presented if the state does attempt to prove incompetency but fails. In either situation, the possible problem is this: failure to prove incompetency by clear and convincing evidence (either because no one pursues that issue or because the standard of proof is not satisfied) does not necessarily mean that competency is established by the greater weight of the evidence.

If it is a basic due process requirement that a person not be tried unless competency is established by at least the greater weight of the evidence, an affirmative finding must be made in every case where there is "reason to doubt" competency. The statute's assertion that "the defendant shall be found competent" in the absence of proof (to a higher degree of certainty) that the defendant is incompetent is no substitute for a finding based on the evidence.

As a practical matter, this should not be a serious problem, but the Committee recommends the cautious approach of making a finding of competency, based on the record, whenever there is "reason to doubt" competency rather than relying on the automatic direction of the statute. In virtually every case, a record failing to show incompetence (by clear and convincing evidence) should support an affirmative finding that the defendant is competent (by the greater weight of the evidence). A recommended finding is included in Sec. IV.B., below.

The approach recommended here is essentially the same as the one called for by the ABA Criminal Justice Mental Health Standards. They call for a finding by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant is competent. The burden of persuasion is not assigned to either party. If that finding is not made, the court is to consider issues of treatment to effect competence. Involuntary commitment for treatment is to be ordered if the basis therefor is established by clear and convincing evidence. See ABA Criminal Justice Mental Health Standards 7 4.8(c) and 7 4.9(a) (1989).

B. If the court finds the defendant competent to proceed, the criminal proceeding shall resume.

If the court finds the defendant competent to proceed, a specific finding should be made. A finding like the following is recommended:

> The court has considered the reports of the examiners, the conduct and demeanor of the defendant, and all the facts and circumstances relating to the defendant's understanding of these proceedings. The court is satisfied by the greater weight of the credible evidence that the defendant does not lack substantial capacity to understand the proceeding or assist.

C. If the court finds the defendant incompetent to proceed, the court must determine if the defendant is likely to regain competency.

If the court finds that the defendant is not competent to proceed, the court must further determine whether the defendant is likely to become competent within the shorter of the two time periods specified by § 971.14(5)(a):

- within 12 months, or
- within a period equal to the maximum sentence for the most serious offense with which the defendant is charged (if that period is less than 12 months).

In practice, these limits amount to a 12 month limit for Criminal Code felonies because the lowest felony penalty class — Class I — provides for a maximum of 1.5 years imprisonment and 2 years of extended supervision. Most Criminal Code misdemeanors are "Class A" and have a 9 month maximum sentence. There are some Class B and C misdemeanors in the Criminal Code, which have 90 day and 30 day maximum penalties, respectively.

1. Recovery of competency not likely: release of defendant

If the court determines that regaining competency within the designated time period is not likely, § 971.14(6)(a) provides that the defendant is to be released, subject to the civil commitment transition provision described in § 971.14(6)(b) and in Sec. VIII. B., below.

2. Recovery of competency likely: commitment of defendant

If the court determines that the defendant is likely to become competent within the specified period, the court is to order that the proceedings be suspended and shall commit the defendant to the custody of the department for placement in an appropriate institution.

§ 971.14(5)(a). The commitment process is addressed in the next section. The reexamination process is described in Sec. VI.

V. Commitment as not competent to proceed – § 971.14(5)(a)

A. Basis for and terms of a commitment order.

1. Basis for commitment

Both of the following bases must exist to support a commitment:

a. The defendant lacks substantial mental capacity to understand the proceedings or assist in his or her own defense; and

b. The defendant is likely to become competent within the commitment period.

2. Length of commitment[7]

The commitment may continue until competency is regained or until the lesser of the following limits is reached:

a. 12 months

The 12-month limit will apply to almost all cases where Criminal Code felonies are charged because the felony class with the shortest penalty, Class I, carries a maximum sentence of 1.5 years confinement and 2 years extended supervision.

b. The maximum sentence for the most serious offense charged

The "maximum sentence" limit will apply only to misdemeanors. Class A misdemeanors carry a 9 month maximum sentence; Class B and C misdemeanors carry 90 day and 30 day maximums, respectively.

3. The commitment order

The commitment order should be executed completely and clearly. Use of the officially adopted circuit court form is required. § 971.025(1). The form is CR 206 (revised September 2022), available on the state court website: http://www.wicourts.gov/.

B. The right to refuse medication; involuntary medication orders.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that all involuntarily committed persons have the right to refuse psychotropic medication. State ex rel. Jones v. Gerhardstein, 141 Wis.2d 710, 416 N.W.2d 883 (1987). This includes persons committed under § 971.14 as not competent to stand trial.

A finding on competence to refuse medication is to be made as part of the initial competency evaluation if sufficient information is available to the examiner. See § 971.14(3)(dm). A similar finding is also to be made at the time the person is committed as not competent to stand trial. See § 971.14(4)(b). If no court order regarding competence to refuse medication was entered at the time of commitment, a procedure for returning to court to obtain such an order is set forth in § 971.14(5)(am).

The standard for determining competence to refuse medication is set forth in § 971.14(3)(dm):

> …The defendant is not competent to refuse medication or treatment if, because of mental illness, developmental disability, alcoholism or drug dependence, and, after the advantages and disadvantages of and alternatives to accepting the particular medication or treatment have been explained to the defendant, one of the following is true:
> 1. The defendant is incapable of expressing an understanding of the advantages and disadvantages of accepting medication or treatment and the alternatives.
> 2. The defendant is substantially incapable of applying an understanding of the advantages, disadvantages, and alternatives to his or her mental illness, developmental disability, alcoholism, or drug dependence in order to make an informed choice as to whether to accept or refuse medication or treatment.

The necessity and extent of advice on the "advantages, disadvantages and alternatives" in a civil commitment case is discussed in Outagamie County v. Melanie L., 2013 WI 67, 349 Wis.2d 148, 833 N.W.2d 607.

It is important that hearings be held as quickly as possible so that needed treatment is not delayed. It may help to receive testimony pursuant to the rules on conducting proceedings by telephone or audiovisual means. (Section 971.14(5)(am) refers to the "procedures and standards specified in [§ 971.14] sub. (4)(b)." Subsection (4)(b) includes a provision for taking testimony by telephone.)[8] The hearing may be conducted by a court commissioner. State ex rel. Jones v. Gerhardstein, supra, 141 Wis.2d 710, 746.

Note that at any stage where a person is found not competent to refuse medication, the effect of a court order is to authorize medication or treatment under appropriate medical standards. (See § 971.14(4)(d).) The statute does not give the court authority to order that specific kinds of treatment be offered.

The provisions in § 971.14 authorizing involuntary medication orders must be implemented only after consideration of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in Riggins v. Nevada, 504 U.S. 127 (1992) and Sell v. United States, 539 U.S. 166 (2003), and the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Fitzgerald, 2019 WI 69, 387 Wis.2d 384, 929 N.W.2d 165.

In Riggins, the Court reversed a conviction because the state trial court failed to make sufficient findings to support the forced administration of antipsychotic drugs during trial. Riggins was charged with murder and robbery. He complained about hearing voices and having trouble sleeping. The drug Mellaril was prescribed, beginning at a level of 100 milligrams per day. It was eventually increased to 800 milligrams per day. Prior to trial, Riggins requested that the trial court order the administration of the drug suspended until after trial. The trial court refused without an extensive statement of reasons.

The United States Supreme Court held that the involuntary administration of Mellaril denied Riggins "a full and fair trial." The side effects of the drugs could affect Riggins' outward appearance, which is observed by the jury in evaluating the defendant's demeanor. And ". . . it is clearly possible that such side effects impacted . . . the content of his testimony on direct or cross examination, his ability to follow the proceedings, or the substance of his communication with counsel." 504 U.S. 127, 137. Further, a defendant has a liberty interest in freedom from unwanted antipsychotic drugs. The Court found the record insufficient to support a finding that these interests were outweighed by the need to accomplish an essential state policy, so the conviction was reversed.

The Court elaborated on Riggins in Sell. The Court held:

> . . . the Constitution permits the Government involuntarily to administer antipsychotic drugs to a mentally ill defendant facing serious criminal charges in order to render that defendant competent to stand trial, but only if the treatment is medically appropriate, is substantially unlikely to have side effects that may undermine the fairness of the trial, and, taking account of less intrusive alternatives, is necessary significantly to further important governmental trial-related interests. 539 U.S. 166, 179.

The Court emphasized that the instances where involuntary medication is permitted may be rare. That is because the standard says or implies the following:

> First, a court must find that important governmental interests are at stake. . .
> Second, the court must conclude that involuntary medication will significantly further those concomitant state interests. . .
> Third, the court must conclude that involuntary medication is necessary to further those interests. The court must find that any alternative, less intrusive treatments are unlikely to achieve substantially the same results.
> Fourth, . . . the court must conclude that administration of the drugs is medically appropriate, i.e., in the patient's best medical interest in light of his medical condition. 539 U.S. 166, 180-181 [emphasis in original]
> The question regarding medication for competency purposes was restated as follows:
> Has the government, in light of the efficacy, the side effects, the possible alternatives, and the medical appropriateness of a particular course of antipsychotic drug treatment, shown a need for that treatment sufficiently important to overcome the individual's protected interest in refusing it? Id., at 183.

In Fitzgerald, the Wisconsin Supreme Court examined the constitutionality of § 971.14 as it related to the issue of ordering involuntary medication to restore a criminal defendant's competency to stand trial. In a unanimous decision, the Court vacated the circuit court's order for involuntary medication, holding that § 971.14 was unconstitutional as applied to Fitzgerald. Therefore, regardless of the language of § 971.14(3)(dm) and (4)(b), the four Sell factors must be satisfied before a court can issue an involuntary medication order to restore competency to stand trial.[6]

Wisconsin Circuit Court form CR-206 Order for Commitment for Treatment (Incompetency) was revised in light of Fitzgerald to accurately reflect the factors set forth in Sell.

In State v. Scott, 2018 WI 74, 382 Wis.2d 476, 914 N.W.2d 141, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a defendant committed for treatment to competency may appeal an involuntary medication order as a matter of right under § 808.03(1) and that the order is subject to an automatic stay pending appeal. However, the court amended that rule in State v. Green, 2022 WI 30, 401 Wis.2d 542, 973 N.W.2d 770, and held that Scott's automatic stay rule does not apply to involuntary treatment orders for a person being treated to competency before trial. Instead, the defendant may seek a discretionary stay pending appeal under the standard in State v. Gudenschwager, 191 Wis.2d 431, 529 N.W.2d 225

(1995). 401 Wis. 2d 542, ¶¶18-36 & n.13.

C. Suspension of the criminal proceedings

The criminal proceedings are "suspended" during the competency commitment. Pretrial motions under § 971.31 may be decided notwithstanding the defendant's lack of competency if they are "susceptible of fair determination prior to trial and without the personal participation of the defendant." § 971.13(3).

VI. Reexamination and Reports

A. Timing of the reports

The treatment facility is required to reexamine the defendant and report to the court at specified intervals. Written reports are to be furnished to court three months after commitment, six months after commitment, nine months after commitment, and within 30 days of the expiration of the commitment. § 971.14(5)(b).

B. Contents of the reports – § 971.14(5)(b)

Each report shall indicate one of the following:

1. The defendant has become competent; or

2. The defendant remains incompetent but is likely to attain competency within the remaining commitment period; or

3. The defendant has not made such progress that attainment of competency is likely within the remaining commitment period. A report making this indication must include the examiner's opinion regarding whether the defendant is mentally ill, alcoholic, drug dependent, developmentally disabled, or infirm because of aging or other like incapacities.

C. Reexamination hearing; when required and how conducted

A reexamination hearing is required if the report indicates the defendant either has regained competency or is unlikely to attain competency within the remaining commitment period. A hearing is not required if the report indicates the defendant remains incompetent but is likely to attain competency within the remaining commitment period. § 971.14(5)(c).

The hearing shall be held within 14 days of the receipt of the report and is subject to the same requirements as the original commitment hearing – see § 971.14(4) and Sec. IV., above. The parties may waive the hearing, in which case the finding is to be based on the report.

If the court determines the defendant is competent, the criminal proceeding shall be resumed. If the court determines the defendant is making sufficient progress toward becoming competent, the commitment shall continue. § 971.14(5)(c)).

VII. The Defendant Who Regains Competency

A. Competency regained

If the court determines that the defendant has become competent, the defendant is to be discharged from the commitment, and the criminal proceedings are resumed. § 971.14(5)(c).

B. Competency dependent on medication

If medication has assisted the defendant in regaining competency, the court "may make appropriate orders for the continued administration of the medication in order to maintain the competence of the defendant for the duration of the proceedings." § 971.14(5)(d). The Committee recommends that § 971.14(5)(d) be interpreted in light of Riggins, Sell, and Fitzgerald to require a specific finding that the need for the ordered medication outweighs the interests of the defendant that the cases identify. See the discussion in Sec. V.B., above, regarding orders for involuntary medication to restore competency.

C. Recommitment

If a defendant who has been restored to competency thereafter again becomes incompetent, there may be a recommitment. § 971.14(5)(d). The court must make the same determinations as those required for an original commitment: not competent but likely to become competent within the commitment period.

The maximum period for a recommitment is 18 months, minus the days spent under previous commitments, or 12 months, whichever is less. § 971.14(5)(d).

D. Sentence credit

Sentence credit under § 973.155 is due for all days spent in commitment as not competent to proceed, whether the commitment is inpatient or outpatient. § 971.14(5)(a).3 Sentence credit is also required for all days spent during a commitment to an inpatient facility for examination relating to competency to proceed. § 971.14(2)(a).

VIII. Competency Not Regained: Discharge from the Commitment

A. Releasing the defendant

If the court determines that it is unlikely that an incompetent defendant will become competent within the remaining commitment period, it shall discharge the defendant from the commitment and release him, subject to the provisions relating to transition and civil commitment. § 971.14(6)(a). (Transition to civil commitment is discussed at Sec. B., below.)

1. Periodic return to court

If a defendant is released, the court may order the defendant to appear in court at specified intervals for redetermination of competency to proceed. § 971.14(6)(a).

2. Reexamination of competency

"Counsel who have received notice under par. (c) [from custodian of incompetent defendant who was civilly committed] or who otherwise obtain information that a defendant discharged under par. (a) [discharge and release] may have become competent may move the court to order that the defendant undergo a competency examination. . . ." § 971.14(6)(d).

This competency examination is to be conducted under § 971.14(2), the same statute that applies to an original examination. The court may order a report under § 971.14(3) and a hearing under § 971.14(4).

If the court determines that the defendant is competent, the criminal proceeding is resumed.

If the court determines that the defendant is not competent, it shall release the defendant. However, the court "may impose such reasonable nonmonetary conditions as will protect the public and enable the court and district attorney to discover whether the person subsequently becomes competent." § 971.14(6)(d).

3. Status of the criminal charges

The above procedures clearly imply that the criminal charges will remain pending. There is no authority for a trial judge to order dismissal sua sponte. State ex rel. Haskins v. Dodge County Court, 62 Wis.2d 250, 268, 214 N.W.2d 575 (1974). Dismissal of charges is apparently within the prosecutor's discretion, subject to the general rules relating to speedy trial. 62 Wis.2d 250, 267-71

B. Transition to civil commitment

One of the purposes of the changes made by § 917.14(6), was to facilitate the transition to civil commitment for persons who had been discharged from a competency commitment.[8]

1. Detention – § 971.14(6)(b)

When a defendant is discharged from a competency commitment, the court may order that he be taken into custody and delivered to one of the following facilities:

a. A facility specified in § 51.15(2) (facilities for the emergency detention of persons undergoing civil mental commitment).

b. An approved public treatment facility under § 51.45(2)(c) (an alcohol treatment facility).

c. An appropriate medical or protective placement facility.

The length of the detention is governed by the statutes relating to the parallel civil commitments: § 51.20 for civil mental commitment; § 51.45(11) for commitments for alcohol treatment; and § 55.06(11) for protective placements.

2. Commitment "statement"

Either the district attorney or the corporation counsel may prepare the "statement" for commitment. § 971.14(6)(b). It is to be based on the allegations of the criminal complaint and the evidence in the case. The statement must meet the requirements for the related civil petitions: § 51.20(1) for civil mental commitments; § 51.45(13)(a) for alcohol treatment; and § 55.06(11) for protective placements. It need not be corroborated by others and will be treated as the petition for commitment. All conduct "during or subsequent to the time of the offense" may be considered in deciding whether the "recent overt acts" requirement for civil commitment has been satisfied. See § 51.20(1)(am).

3. Filing the statement

The statement for commitment shall be given to the director of the facility to which the defendant was delivered. It shall be "filed with the branch of circuit court assigned to exercise criminal jurisdiction in the county in which the criminal charges are pending." § 971.14(6)(b). However, the court may transfer the matter to the branch assigned jurisdiction under Chapter 51.

4. If a person is committed

A person committed under this procedure is treated as though committed under § 51.20, § 51.45, or § 55.06, as applicable. Days spent subject to this commitment do not require sentence credit under § 973.155. § 971.14(6)(b).

5. Notice of transfer or discharge

At least 14 days prior to transfer, discharge, or expiration of the commitment order, the § 51.42 or § 51.437 board must notify the court which originally discharged the person from the competency commitment, the district attorney for the county in which that court is located, and the person's attorney of record. § 971.14(6)(c).

6. Subsequent competency examinations

Upon receiving the above notice or upon receiving other information that the defendant is competent to proceed, either the district attorney or defense counsel may move the court to order another competency examination under § 971.14(2). The procedures relating to the original evaluation of competency apply. § 971.14(6)(d).

If the court determines that the defendant is competent, the criminal proceedings shall be resumed. If the court determines that the defendant is not competent, it shall order release but may impose such reasonable nonmonetary conditions as will protect the public and enable the court and district attorney to discover whether the person subsequently becomes competent. § 971.14(6)(d).

COMMENT

SM 50 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1986, 1988, 1989, 1991, 1997, 2004, and 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2023.

This Special Material is intended to outline the statutory procedures and case law requirements relating to determining a defendant's competency to stand trial.

The 2004 revision withdrew three appendices. Appendix A was a letter describing the "local sites" project of the Department of Health and Family Services, which is intended to provide faster and less expensive competency evaluations. Trial courts generally receive periodic updates on the local sites assigned to their courts. Appendix B illustrated a completed order for competency evaluation. Appendix C illustrated a completed order for commitment for treatment. The forms for these orders are available on the state court website. See CR 205 and CR 206 at http://www.wicourts.gov/.

1. This basic standard for competency is sometimes elaborated upon by reference to more specific abilities and characteristics. In State v. Garfoot, the court noted that "[t]o elicit information about a defendant's competence, many courts and experts rely on a 13 point checklist known as the 'McGarry Scale' or 'Competency to Stand Trial Instrument,'" and made reference to State v. Shields, 593 A.2d 986 (Del. Super. 1990), which in turn refers to a detailed list of factors. 207 Wis.2d 215, 228, n.7.

2. It is assumed that a person committed for a competency examination will always be represented by counsel or will have waived counsel. A person must at least be afforded the opportunity to be represented, not only because it is constitutionally required (the criminal prosecution has begun) but also because medical ethics preclude conducting a competency examination of any person charged with crime "prior to access to or availability of legal counsel." American Psychiatric Association Ethical Guidelines, Section 4, Number 13.

3. Examiners are ethically prohibited from examining a person charged with a crime who has not had access to counsel. See note 2, supra.

4. The 15 day limit under § 971.14(2)(am) does not begin to run until the defendant arrives at the examination facility; the limit did not apply where the court's order was not reduced to writing, and the defendant was never transported to the examination facility. State ex rel. Hager v. Marten, 226 Wis.2d 687, 594 N.W.2d 791 (1999).

5. Subsection (4) of § 971.14 contains two different burdens of persuasion, depending on what the defendant claims with regard to competency. This possibly awkward approach was adopted in an attempt to serve two different interests. The statute requires the state to prove competency by the greater weight of the evidence to serve the basic due process requirement that an incompetent defendant may not be tried. The statute requires the state to prove incompetency by clear and convincing evidence to justify the involuntary commitment for treatment of the defendant who is found to lack competency. This approach was developed in an attempt to meet requirements that were believed to follow from the analogy made between involuntary civil mental commitments and commitments of those found not competent to stand trial. The United States Supreme Court has addressed some aspects of this issue since § 971.14 was adopted in its present form.

In Medina v. California, 505 U.S. 437, 439 (1972), the Court held that "the Due Process Clause permits a State to require a defendant who alleges incompetence to stand trial to bear the burden of proving so by a preponderance of the evidence." In Cooper v. Oklahoma, 517 U.S. 348 (1996), the Court held that an Oklahoma statute requiring the defendant to prove lack of competency by clear and convincing evidence violated the Due Process Clause. And, in Addington v. Texas, 441 U.S. 418 (1979), the Court held that the "clear and convincing evidence" burden satisfies the requirements of due process for the purposes of civil mental commitment. The Wisconsin two-step approach clearly complies with these due process-based requirements.

The constitutionality of the Wisconsin statutory scheme regarding the burden of persuasion was upheld in State v. Wanta, 224 Wis.2d 679, 592 N.W.2d 645 (Ct. App. 1999).

6. Subsections (3)(dm) and (4)(b) are less comprehensive than the standard articulated in Sell in four ways:

First, sub. (3)(dm) "does not require the circuit court to find that an important government 'interest in bringing to trial an individual accused of a serious crime' is at stake," as required by the first Sell factor. Fitzgerald, supra at ¶26. Instead, § 971.14 "merely requires the circuit court to find probable cause that the defendant committed a crime—not necessarily a serious one." Id. at ¶26. See also, § 971.14(1r).

Second, sub. (3)(dm) fails to consider the second Sell factor, as "it does not require the circuit court to conclude that medication is substantially likely to restore a defendant's competency or to consider whether side effects 'will interfere significantly with the defendant's ability to assist counsel in conducting a trial defense.'" Fitzgerald, at ¶27 (quoting Sell, 539 U.S. at 181, 123 S.Ct. 2174 (2003)).

Third, in contrast to the third Sell standard, "§ 971.14(4)(b) mandates involuntary medication if the State establishes pursuant to paragraph (3)(dm) the defendant's inability to either express an understanding of the advantages and disadvantages of medication or to make an informed choice about it, regardless of the existence of less intrusive but nonetheless effective options." ¶28.

Fourth, in contrast to the fourth Sell factor, which requires the circuit court to conclude that the administration of medication is medically appropriate, § 971.14(4)(b) can be read to authorize "whoever administers the medication or treatment to the defendant" to "observe appropriate medical standards." § 971.14(4)(b). See State v. Fitzgerald, 2019 WI 69, ¶¶14-17, 387 Wis.2d 384, 929 N.W.2d 165.

7. Under pre Truth In Sentencing law, good time credit is to be accorded persons committed as incompetent to stand trial. State v. Moore, 167 Wis.2d 491, 481 N.W.2d 633 (1992).

8. For a case illustrating the transition from a competency commitment to a civil mental commitment, see In Re the Mental Condition of Billy Jo W., 182 Wis.2d 616, 514 N.W.2d 707 (1994). In that case, the court held that in certain circumstances, a court may order the release of civil commitment records where there is a "significant interrelationship between criminal proceedings involving a violent felony and the civil commitment." 182 Wis.2d 616, 649. Upon making a threshold determination that the interrelationship exists, the court must balance the public interest in access against the individual's privacy interest.

SM-52 DISCLOSURE OF THE IDENTITY OF AN INFORMER

Section 905.10(1) recognizes a privilege on the part of the government "to refuse to disclose the identity of a person who has furnished information relating to or assisting in an investigation of a possible violation of the law."[1] The privilege may be claimed by an appropriate representative of the federal government or of the state or local government unit involved.[2]

The privilege does not exist if the informer or the holder of the privilege discloses the identity of the informer "to those who would have cause to resent the communication."[3] The privilege also does not exist if the informer appears as a witness for the state.[4]

There are two instances where a court may be called upon to conduct an inquiry into whether the identity of an informer should be disclosed despite the existence of the privilege. One occurs at the pretrial stage, where information from an informer is relied upon to establish the legality of obtaining evidence. The other occurs at trial where the defendant seeks the testimony of the informer. Different procedures and standards apply to the disclosure inquiry in these two situations.

I. Pretrial Disclosure: Legality of Obtaining Evidence

In the context of a motion to suppress evidence, the informer's identity relates to evaluating his or her reliability and credibility as part of the probable cause determination. Where an informer has provided information relied upon to establish the legality of, for example, a search and seizure, disclosure of identity may be required if "the judge is not satisfied that the information was received from an informer reasonably believed to be reliable or credible." § 905.10(3)(c).

If the judge orders disclosure, the state may request that the disclosure be made in-camera. If the request is made, the judge "shall" direct[5] that the disclosure be made in-camera. No counsel or party is permitted to be present. A record of the in-camera proceeding is to be made, but it is to be sealed and preserved to be made available in the event of an appeal.

II. Disclosure at Trial : Testimony on the Merits

Disclosure of an informer's identity at trial may become an issue when "it appears from the evidence in the case or from other showing by a party that an informer may be able to give testimony necessary to a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence." § 905.10(3)(b). Upon such a showing, the court shall give the state an opportunity to oppose disclosure in an in-camera proceeding. The amount of evidence required to justify the inquiry has been referred to as a "minimal burden. . . . The showing need only be one of a possibility that the informer could supply testimony necessary to a fair determination."[6]

The in-camera proceeding is to provide the state "an opportunity to show . . . facts relevant to determining whether the informer can, in fact, supply"[7] testimony necessary to a fair determination of guilt or innocence. The statute provides that the showing will ordinarily be in the form of affidavits but that the judge may direct that testimony may be taken. No counsel or party shall be permitted to be present at the in-camera proceeding.

The standard for deciding whether the informer's identity may be disclosed was stated in State v. Vanmanivong, 2003 WI 51, 261 Wis.2d 202, 661 N.W.2d 76, ¶24: ". . . a defendant must show that an informer's testimony is necessary to the defense before a court may require disclosure. 'Necessary' in this context means that the evidence must support an asserted defense to the degree that the evidence could create a reasonable doubt."[8]

The decision on whether to order disclosure is within the discretion of the trial court. The court should make sufficient findings "to show that its conclusion was reached by a reasoning process based on the facts of record or reasonable inferences from those facts."[9]

If the court concludes that the informer can give testimony that meets the "necessary" standard, and if the state elects not to disclose the informer's identity, the judge shall dismiss the charges to which the testimony would relate.[10]

Evidence submitted for the in-camera proceeding shall be sealed and preserved for possible reference on appeal. It is not to be otherwise revealed without the consent of the state.

COMMENT

SM-52 was originally published in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2004.

1. Procedures relating to deciding whether an informer's identity must be disclosed are set forth in considerable detail in § 905.10 of the Wisconsin Rules of Evidence. The statute is based in part on preexisting Wisconsin precedent, see Stelloh v. Liban, 21 Wis.2d 119, 126, 124 N.W.2d 101 (1963), and is consistent with the reasoning of the principal United States Supreme Court case, Roviaro v. United States, 353 U.S. 53 (1957). See State v. Outlaw, 108 Wis.2d 112, 120-24, 321 N.W.2d 145 (1982).

The privilege protects not only the identity of the informer but also the contents of a communication that will tend to reveal the identity. State v. Gordon, 159 Wis.2d 335, 464 N.W.2d 91 (Ct. App. 1990).

2. Section 905.10(2) "Who May Claim. The privilege may be claimed by an appropriate representative of the federal government, regardless of whether the information was furnished to an officer of the government or of a state or subdivision thereof. The privilege may be claimed by an appropriate representative of a state or subdivision if the information was furnished to an officer thereof." The text of this Special Material refers only to "the state," on the assumption that the majority of Wisconsin cases will involve the claim of privilege by the state.

3. Section 905.10(3)(a). "[T]he State is the holder of the privilege . . . disclosure by the confidential informer's attorney . . . without specific authorization by the informer, is not 'by the informer's own action.'" State v. Lass, 194 Wis.2d 591, 598, 535 N.W.2d 904 (1995). Lass also concluded that the privilege survives the death of the confidential informer.

4. The full statement in § 905.10(3)(a) is "as a witness for the federal government or a state or subdivision thereof."

5. Section 905.10(3)(c) provides in part: "The judge shall on the request of the federal government, state or subdivision thereof, direct that the disclosure be made in-camera."

See State v. Fischer, 147 Wis.2d 694, 433 N.W.2d 647 (Ct. App. 1988), for a case finding there was an insufficient showing to require disclosure.

6. State v. Outlaw, 108 Wis.2d 112, 126, 321 N.W.2d 145 (1982). For a case finding no "showing whatsoever," see State v. Hargrove, 159 Wis.2d 69, 70, 464 N.W.2d 14 (Ct. App. 1990). An in-camera proceeding is not necessary if, without one, the trial court concludes that the informant "could provide relevant testimony necessary to a fair determination on the issue of guilt or innocence." State v. Norfleet, 2002 WI App. 140, 254 Wis.2d 569, 582-83, 647 N.W.2d 341.

7. Section 905.10(3)(b).

8. The Vanmanivong decision based this standard on State v. Outlaw, 108 Wis.2d 112, 126, 321 N.W.2d 145 (1982). The rule of the Outlaw case is found in the concurring opinions in which four justices joined because only three justices joined in the lead opinion. State v. Dowe, 120 Wis.2d 192, 352 N.W.2d 660 (1984).

The disagreement in the Outlaw case was over the meaning of "necessary" in the phrase "necessary to a fair determination of the issue of guilt or innocence." The definition in the concurring opinion was approved by a majority of the court: "an informer's testimony is necessary if it could have created in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt regarding a defendant's guilt." 108 Wis.2d 112, 140 Further, the concurrence "would limit the test to evidence being necessary to support the theory of defense." 108 Wis.2d 112, 141. [Otherwise, evidence corroborating guilt would result in the disclosure of an informant's identity.] A second concurring opinion was also joined in by four justices and added two caveats to the "necessary" definition: evidence that is merely cumulative cannot be necessary; and evidence is not necessary if it is also available from another source. 108 Wis.2d 112, 142.

The previously published version of this Special Material summarized the Outlaw rule as follows: the test for disclosure of the informer's identity is whether there is a reasonable probability that the informer could give testimony necessary to the defense. All justices in Outlaw agreed that the state is not required to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the informer's testimony would not be helpful to the defense. (See the lead opinion at 108 Wis.2d 127 and the concurring opinion at 108 Wis.2d 138.) Testimony is necessary to the defense when it could create in the minds of the jurors a reasonable doubt about guilt. Testimony is not necessary when it is cumulative or available from another source.

9. State v. Larsen, 141 Wis.2d 412, 420, 415 N.W.2d 535 (Ct .App. 1987). Also see Outlaw, supra, 108 Wis.2d 112, 128. A finding denying disclosure in the following terms was found to fail to show that discretion was exercised: "I do not consider that there is a reasonable probability that the testimony of either informer would be able to give testimony necessary to a fair determination of guilt or innocence." 141 Wis.2d 412, 419-20.

For a review of the application of the complete procedure required by § 905.10, see State v. Gerard, 180 Wis.2d 327, 509 N.W.2d 112 (Ct. App. 1993).

10. Section 905.10(3)(b) states that the judge "shall" dismiss the charges upon motion by the defense and "may" do so on the court's own motion.

SM-55 INQUIRY WHEN A WITNESS CLAIMS THE PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF INCRIMINATION

I. Introduction

This Special Material outlines the procedures a trial judge should follow when a witness asserts the privilege against self-incrimination.

The privilege is recognized in identical terms by both the United States and Wisconsin Constitutions[1]: "nor shall [a person] be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself."

The privilege can be raised in a variety of situations in a criminal case: at a grand jury or John Doe hearing; at a preliminary examination; at a hearing on a pretrial motion; or at trial. The same basic procedure applies regardless of the situation.

One response to a valid claim of the privilege is to order the witness to testify, thereby granting immunity. Sections 972.08 and 972.085 provide the statutory recognition for immunity in criminal cases. A number of other statutes spell out procedures for immunity in a variety of other situations.[2] All immunity statutes are interpreted in the same way – as coextensive with the constitutional privilege.[3]

Discussed here are issues relating to the requirements for a valid claim of the privilege, the granting of immunity to who one invokes the privilege, and immunity for defense witnesses.

II. Invoking the Privilege

A. Should not be claimed in the presence of the jury

Section 905.13(2) provides as follows:

> In jury cases, proceedings shall be conducted, to the extent practicable, so as to facilitate the making of claims of privilege without the knowledge of the jury.

It is especially important to see that this rule is followed with respect to the privilege against self-incrimination. The burden properly falls on the attorney who calls the witness to assure that the witness is not expected to assert the privilege upon taking the stand. See §§ 3-5.7(c) and 4-7.6(c) of the ABA Standards Relating To Criminal Justice relating to the duty of counsel where a witness is expected to claim a valid privilege not to testify.

In State v. Heft, 185 Wis.2d 289, 517 N.W.2d 494 (1994), the defendant argued that her rights to due process and equal protection were denied by the trial court's application of § 905.13. The trial court had denied the defendant's request to require a witness to claim the privilege against self-incrimination in the presence of the jury. The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the decision of the court of appeals[4] that the right to present a defense was not significantly infringed; Heft was allowed to present a complete defense by introducing other evidence that the witness' driving, not Heft's, was the cause of the accident. The court also held that the fact that § 905.13 applies to criminal but not to civil cases does not deny equal protection of the law to criminal defendants. There are reasonable bases for the distinction which are rationally related to legitimate state interests: the consequences of a criminal conviction are much more severe; the need for mutuality in light of the inability to comment on the defendant's decision not to testify; and the concern for collusion.[5]

If the privilege is unexpectedly invoked before the jury, an inquiry should be conducted outside the jury's presence. (See below.) A cautionary instruction should be given if requested but only if requested. See § 905.13(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 317.[6]

B. How the privilege is invoked

No particular statement is required to invoke the privilege. A literally correct invocation would be that the witness "declines to answer on the ground that the answer might tend to incriminate the witness." But no precise formula is required:

> [i]t is agreed by all that a claim of privilege does not require any special combination of words. . . .
> [T]he fact that a witness expresses his intention in vague form is immaterial so long as the claim is sufficiently definite to apprise the [court] of his intention. As everyone agrees, no ritualistic formula is necessary.

Quinn v. United States, 349 U.S. 155, 162 (1955), cited in State v. Worgull, 128 Wis.2d 1, 13, 381 N.W.2d 547 (1986).

A claim of privilege as to one question does not necessarily carry over to other questions, especially where they are directed toward a different area. See State v. Hall, 65 Wis.2d 18, 28-30, 221 N.W.2d 806 (1974).

III. Court Inquiry When the Privilege is Invoked

When the privilege is invoked, the court must conduct an inquiry to determine whether the claim of privilege is valid.[7] The privilege is personal to the witness; it applies only to "testimonial" evidence; and it extends to responses that might tend to "incriminate" the witness.

A. The privilege is personal to the witness

1. The witness cannot refuse to answer on the ground that the answer might incriminate another person.[8]

2. Corporations cannot invoke the privilege.[9]

B. The privilege applies only to "testimonial" evidence

1. "Testimonial" defined

> The distinction which has emerged . . . is that the privilege is a bar against compelling "communications" or "testimony," but that compulsion which makes a suspect or accused the source of 'real or physical evidence' does not.

Schmerber v. United States, 384 U.S. 757, 764 (1966); cited in State v. Driver, 59 Wis.2d 35, 40, 207 N.W.2d 850 (1973).

2. The privilege does not apply to physical evidence

The privilege does not extend to physical evidence, even if the witness is required to be the source of that evidence or to participate in the obtaining or displaying of the evidence. For example, the following practices do not implicate the privilege:

a. fingerprinting[10]

b. participating in a lineup[11]

c. providing a voice sample or speaking certain words[12]

d. trying on a shirt[13]

e. taking blood samples[14]

C. The evidence must "tend to incriminate" the witness

In State ex rel. Rizzo v. County Court, 32 Wis.2d 642,146 N.W.2d 499 (1966), the Wisconsin Supreme Court approved the following definition of incriminating evidence:

> A matter is incriminating or tends to incriminate whenever, in the probable operation of law or the ordinary happening of events, there would be reasonable grounds to apprehend dangers to the witness from his being compelled to answer questions about which he has a particular personal knowledge. Maloney, A Code of Evidence for Wisconsin – Self-Incrimination, 1946 Wis. L. Rev. 147, 155.

The United States Supreme Court in Kastigar v. United States, 406 U.S. 441, 445 (1972), stated that the Fifth Amendment privilege ". . . protects against any disclosures that the witness reasonably believes could be used in a criminal prosecution or could lead to other evidence that might be so used."

The privilege may be validly claimed even after the witness has pleaded guilty. Since sentencing remains, testimony could result in "injurious disclosure." State v. Seibert, 141 Wis.2d 753, 416 N.W.2d 900 (Ct. App. 1987). After conviction, the privilege survives through postconviction attack and appeal. State v. Anastas, 107 Wis.2d 270, 320 N.W.2d 15 (Ct. App. 1982).[15]

D. Determining the validity of the claim without requiring self-incrimination

While an inquiry must be made into the validity of the claim, a valid claim could be compromised if the inquiry is too detailed or extensive. That is, witnesses should not be required to incriminate themselves in the process of establishing the validity of their claim. For this reason, courts have been urged to extend substantial deference to the claim.

There is apparently no authority in Wisconsin for conducting an in camera inquiry into the validity of the claim of privilege and then sealing the record. However, adopting such a procedure ought to lie within the inherent powers of the trial court. A model is offered by the procedure set forth in § 905.10, which sets forth an in camera procedure for determining whether a confidential informant's identity must be disclosed. (See SM-52, Disclosure of the Identity of an Informer.)

E. The court should make a finding

1. The following is suggested as a finding:

"The court finds that the (evidence) (answer) demanded of the witness (might tend to incriminate) (could not incriminate) him because, in the probable operation of the law or the ordinary happening of events there (are) (are not) reasonable grounds to apprehend dangers to the witness."[16]

F. Further action if the claim of privilege is not valid

1. Order the witness to testify

The following is suggested as a statement for the trial court to make to the witness:

"The court has concluded that the [question(s)] [request(s) for evidence] directed to you do not violate your privilege against self-incrimination. Therefore, you are ordered to (answer the question(s)) (produce the evidence demanded)."

2. If the witness continues to refuse continue with the following:

"If you do not now produce the evidence requested, you may be summarily confined until such time as you are willing to do so, or until this (trial) (grand jury term) (John Doe investigation) is completed, but in no case exceeding one year. You may not be released on bail pending an appeal concerning such confinement."

If the witness now refuses to comply with the order, the court may order the witness' summary confinement as provided by Wis. Stat. § 972.08(2).[17]

G. Further action if the claim of privilege is valid

1. excuse the witness

2. strike previous testimony[18]

3. give cautionary instructions[19]

4. order the witness to testify, resulting in a grant of immunity (see Section IV., below)

IV. Grants of Immunity

A. Requirements

A witness is granted immunity when all of the following occur:

1. there is a valid claim of the privilege against self-incrimination
2. the prosecutor moves to compel the testimony
3. the court orders the witness to testify
4. the witness complies with the order

It is within the court's discretion to grant or to deny the prosecutor's motion to compel testimony. If the court grants the motion and orders the witness to answer or to produce evidence, and if the witness complies with such order, the witness is automatically invested with immunity under Wis. Stat. § 972.08.

B. Testimony after the order

1. Immunity is "automatic"

Strictly speaking, there need be no motion for a grant of immunity and, accordingly, no order granting immunity. Rather, immunity is the automatic result of testimony following an order to testify after a valid claim of the privilege against self-incrimination. The operative language is found in § 972.08(1)(a):

> Whenever any person refuses to testify or produce books, papers or documents when required to do so before any grand jury, in a proceeding under § 968.26 or > at a preliminary examination, criminal hearing or trial for the reason that the testimony or evidence required of him or her may tend to incriminate him or her or subject him or her to a forfeiture or penalty, the person may nevertheless be compelled to testify or produce the evidence by order of the court on motion of the district attorney. No person who testifies or produces evidence in obedience to the command of the court in that case may be liable to any forfeiture or penalty for or on account of testifying or producing evidence, but no person may be exempted from prosecution and punishment for perjury or false swearing committed in so testifying.

2. Immunity is "use" immunity

The 1989-90 legislature changed immunity in Wisconsin from the broader "transactional" immunity to the narrower "use," or "use and fruits" immunity.[20] Section 972.08(1)(b) provides that all immunity is "subject to the restrictions under § 972.085," which reads as follows:

> Immunity from criminal or forfeiture prosecution under §§ 13.35, 17.16(7), 77.61(12), 93.17, 111.07(2)(b), 128.16, 133.15, 139.20, 139.39(5), 195.048, 196.48, 551.56(3), 553.55(3), 601.62(5), 767.47(4), 767.65(21), 776.23, 885.15, 885.24, 885.25(2), 891.39(2), 968.26, 972.08(1) and 979.07(1), provides immunity only from the use of the compelled testimony or evidence in subsequent criminal or forfeiture proceedings, as well as immunity from the use of evidence derived from that compelled testimony or evidence.

Thus, the statute provides "immunity only from the use of the compelled testimony or evidence . . . as well as immunity from the use of evidence derived from that compelled testimony or evidence." Whether evidence sought to be used in a later prosecution is protected by the immunity statute is obviously of concern only in the later prosecution. Immunity extends to subsequent criminal or forfeiture proceedings. It does not extend to protect from prosecution or punishment for perjury or false swearing committed in the course of testifying. See Wis JI-Criminal 246 for a suggested instruction on the testimony of a witness who has received immunity.[21]

3. Bargained-for immunity: Nonprosecution agreements

As described above, immunity results from ordering a person to testify after a valid claim of privilege. The order can only follow a motion by the prosecutor. In many cases, there may be agreements with the witness, whereby concessions, including immunity, are granted in exchange for the witness' testimony. The legal effect of statutory immunity is limited to "use" immunity. Given that the broader "transactional" immunity is more attractive to the witness, what is the effect of a prosecutor's promise to, in effect, grant transactional immunity to a witness in exchange for testimony?

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals dealt with a so-called nonprosecution agreement in State v. Lukensmeyer, 140 Wis.2d 92, 409 N.W.2d 395 (Ct. App. 1987). The agreement, reduced to writing, granted Lukensmeyer "immunity" in return for truthful testimony in a murder prosecution. The court found that Lukensmeyer had breached the agreement and could be prosecuted. But the court noted that his challenge to the nonprosecution agreement was a question of first impression in Wisconsin: "Because neither party raised it, we do not reach the question of the agreement's fundamental validity. We assume, but do not decide, that a prosecutor may lawfully enter an agreement not to prosecute in return for cooperation in a criminal investigation." 140 Wis.2d 92, 102.

The question may be more important now that statutory immunity is only of the "use" variety. One could argue that the prosecutor should not be able to grant broader immunity than the statutes allow. As a practical matter, of course, prosecutors may exercise their discretion not to prosecute virtually without review. And in the process of plea negotiations charges are routinely dropped, which could be characterized as immunity on those dropped charges. Lukensmeyer appears to have it right: all agreements by the prosecutor, whether designated as "immunity" or not, need to be reviewed under the general rules relating to the fulfillment and breach of plea agreements.[22]

V. Immunity for Defense Witnesses

Immunity may be granted only upon the motion of the prosecutor. The court cannot grant immunity sua sponte; the defendant does not have the right to compel the state to request immunity for a defense witness. Hebel v. State, 60 Wis.2d 325, 210 N.W.2d 695 (1973); Sanders v. State, 69 Wis.2d 242, 230 N.W.2d 845 (1975); Peters v. State, 70 Wis.2d 22, 233 N.W.2d 420 (1975).

While the defendant has no reciprocal right to immunity grants for defense witnesses, the rule is tempered by two considerations. First, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has noted that the prosecutor's duty is "'to seek justice, not merely to convict.' When the prosecutor is considering whether or not to make a motion for immunity, he should bear in mind this predominant objective of impartial justice, and not merely whether the evidence will be favorable to the prosecution. He should not hesitate to move for immunity solely on the basis that the testimony thus elicited might exonerate the defendant." Peters, supra, 70 Wis.2d 22, 41. Second, developments in other contexts suggest that a prosecutor's refusal to request immunity for a defense witness based solely on tactical considerations may violate due process. See McMorris v. Israel, 643 F.2d 458 (7th Cir. 1981), where, under Wisconsin's since-abandoned polygraph stipulation rule, it was held that a prosecutor must have valid, nontactical reasons for refusing to enter into a stipulation.

The law on this topic was reviewed in State v. Evers, 163 Wis.2d 725, 472 N.W.2d 828 (Ct. App. 1991). Peters and Sanders, supra, were reviewed and a standard was adopted to identify the showing a defendant must make to obtain judicial review of a prosecutor's immunization decision: "To demonstrate an abuse of prosecutorial discretion, a defendant must make a substantial evidentiary showing that the government intended to distort the judicial fact-finding process. See Stuart v. Gagnon, 614 F.Supp. 247 (E.D. Wis. 1985)." 163 Wis.2d 725, 737.

COMMENT

SM-55 was originally published in 1974. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 1994.

1. The privilege is found in the 5th Amendment to the United States Constitution and in Article 1, § 8. The latter differs in one respect from the former; it refers to being compelled to be "a witness against himself or herself." (Emphasis added.)

2. The immunity statutes are listed in § 972.085.

3. See, for example, State v. Hall, 65 Wis.2d 18, 27, 221 N.W.2d 806 (1974); State v. Aliota, 64 Wis.2d 354, 361, 219 N.W.2d 585 (1974).

4. 178 Wis.2d 823, 505 N.W.2d 437 (Ct. App. 1993).

5. 185 Wis.2d 289, 302, 517 N.W.2d 494 (1994).

6. Wis JI-Criminal 317 reads as follows:

> A witness, (name of witness), exercised the constitutional right not to answer (a question) (questions) on the ground that the answer(s) might tend to incriminate the witness.
> (Name of witness)'s decision not to testify must not be considered by you in any way and must not influence your verdict in any manner.

7. "The trial court has a clear responsibility to make a full record that the witness' fear of incrimination is valid, real and appreciable, and not speculative or merely an imaginary possibility of incriminatory danger." State v. Harris, 92 Wis.2d 836, 844-45, 285 N.W.2d 917 (Ct. App. 1979). Also see State v. McConnohie, 121 Wis.2d 57, 68-71, 358 N.W.2d 256 (1984).

16. This suggested finding is based on the quotation from State ex rel. Rizzo v. County Court, found at page 5 of this Special Material.

17. But see State v. Gonzalaz, 172 Wis.2d 576, 493 N.W.2d 410 (Ct. App. 1992), holding that the summary contempt power of § 978.08(2) is not applicable to a pretrial motion hearing.

19. See Wis JI-Criminal 317, note 6, supra.

20. "Transactional immunity is essentially a promise not to prosecute the immunized witness for the transaction about which he testifies. In contrast, use . . . immunity . . . preserves the possibility of prosecution of the witness, provided that the government can prove that it did not use the witness's testimony in . . . proving his guilt at trial." BNA Criminal Practice Manual, Immunity, 111:2402-03.

21. Wis JI-Criminal 246 reads as follows:

> You have heard the testimony of (name of witness) who has received immunity. This means that (name of witness') testimony and evidence derived from that testimony cannot be used in a later criminal prosecution of (name of witness) .
> This witness, like any other witness, may be prosecuted for testifying falsely.
> You should consider whether receiving immunity affected the testimony and give the testimony the weight you feel it deserves.

22. "Informal" immunity and other plea concessions should be brought to jury's attention. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 245 and 246.

SM-90 PROCEDURE TO FOLLOW IN ADVISING A PRISONER OF RIGHTS UNDER THE UNIFORM DETAINER ACT

WHEN ANOTHER JURISDICTION[1] FILES A WRITTEN REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY CUSTODY OR AVAILABILITY OF A PRISONER WITH THE WARDEN OF AN INSTITUTION (OR WITH THE SHERIFF IN CHARGE OF A COUNTY JAIL),[2] THE PRISONER IS TO BE TAKEN FORTHWITH BEFORE A JUDGE OF A COURT OF RECORD.[3] THE JUDGE SHOULD EXAMINE THE REQUEST FOR A TEMPORARY CUSTODY TO ASSURE THAT IT HAS BEEN DULY APPROVED, RECORDED, AND TRANSMITTED BY THE COURT HAVING JURISDICTION OVER THE INDICTMENT, INFORMATION OR COMPLAINT UPON WHICH THE REQUEST IS BASED.[4]

IF THE REQUEST IS IN PROPER FORM, THE COURT SHOULD ADVISE THE PRISONER AS FOLLOWS:

A request for your temporary custody or availability under Article IV of the Uniform Detainer Act was received on (date request received by warden or sheriff) from (name of officer and jurisdiction). You are charged with committing the offense of (name of offense), on (date offense committed), in (site of offense). (SPECIFY ALL OFFENSES LISTED IN THE REQUEST.) The request for temporary custody means that (receiving state) wants to have you returned to stand trial on the charge(s) I have just described to you. If you are returned to (receiving state), you may also be tried on other charges upon which detainers have been filed.[5] Trial must be commenced within 120 days of your arrival in (receiving state), unless a continuance has been granted in open court in your presence or the presence of your counsel.[6] After the charges are resolved, you will be returned to Wisconsin to complete your present sentence.

Authorities from (receiving state) will be able to pick you up after 30 days have elapsed from the date the request was received unless the governor of Wisconsin disapproves the request within that period of time. You have the right to petition the governor to ask that he disapprove the request.[7] You may petition the governor by writing the following person:

Pardon and Extradition Counsel

Office of the Governor

State Capitol Building

Madison, Wisconsin 53702

You may not oppose your delivery to the authorities from (receiving state) on the ground that the governor has not affirmatively consented to or ordered the delivery.[8]

You also have the right to contest your delivery in court[9] and to be represented by an attorney. If you cannot afford to hire an attorney, one will be appointed for you. If you wish to contest the matter in court, the only issues will be the sufficiency of the request for temporary custody and your identification as the person sought.[10] Your guilt or innocence on the criminal charge(s) will not be inquired into. If you wish to contest your delivery in court you must request a hearing promptly; the hearing must be held within 30 days after the request for temporary custody was received.

Do you understand your rights as I have just described them to you?

And do you understand that if you wish to contest your delivery to (receiving state), either by petitioning the governor or by requesting a court hearing, or both, the matter must be resolved within 30 days after the request for temporary custody was received, which will be (specify date)?

[END OF ADVICE TO PRISONER]

IF THE PRISONER REQUESTS COUNSEL, COUNSEL SHOULD BE APPOINTED IMMEDIATELY.

IF THE PRISONER REQUESTS A COURT HEARING TO CONTEST DELIVERY, A DATE SHOULD BE SET WITHIN THE 30-DAY PERIOD FOLLOWING THE RECEIPT OF THE REQUEST.

IF THE PRISONER INDICATES THAT HE OR SHE DOES NOT WISH TO CONTEST DELIVERY PURSUANT TO THE REQUEST FOR TEMPORARY CUSTODY, THE COURT SHOULD EMPHASIZE THAT NO FURTHER LEGAL PROCEEDINGS WILL BE REQUIRED AND THAT THE PRISONER WILL BE MADE AVAILABLE TO THE AUTHORITIES FROM THE RECEIVING STATE AT THE END OF THE 30-DAY PERIOD.[11]

IF THE PRISONER INDICATES THAT HE OR SHE DOES NOT KNOW WHAT TO DO, EMPHASIZE THAT THE PRISONER HAS THE RIGHT TO CONSULT WITH COUNSEL, AND THE RIGHT TO HAVE COUNSEL APPOINTED IF INDIGENT, TO ASSIST IN MAKING THE DECISION.

COMMENT

SM-90 was originally published in 1980. This revision involved nonsubstantive editorial changes and updated the comment. It was approved by the Committee in February 1998.

The procedures described in this Special Material are required by Wis. Stat. § 976.06 created by Chapter 158, Laws of 1975. The statute is designed to remedy the deficiencies in the Uniform Detainer Act identified by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State ex rel. Garner v. Gray, 55 Wis.2d 574, 201 N.W.2d 163 (1972). In Garner, the court held the Uniform Detainer Act unconstitutional because it failed to require that the prisoner be advised of his rights to contest his delivery under the detainer by petitioning the governor and by going to court. To remedy the defect, the court required that prisoners be taken before a judge to be advised of these rights. Section 976.06 is modelled after § 976.03(10) of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act.

The usual sequence of events leading up to this court appearance begins with the receipt by the custodian (sheriff, prison warden) of what is broadly called a detainer. A detainer, also called a "hold" or "hold order," is a notice of a criminal charge pending against a prison inmate, given by law enforcement or prosecuting officials to prison authorities to insure that after the completion of the prisoner's present sentence he will be held until turned over to the notifying authorities for prosecution. The detainer usually consists of a letter or other written document accompanied by a copy of the outstanding warrant, information, or indictment. (Jacob and Sharma, "Justice After Trial: Prisoners' Need For Legal Services In The Criminal-Correctional Process," 18 Kansas L. Rev. 495, 579 (1970).)

Out of recognition that the existence of a detainer can have a detrimental effect on such aspects of the prisoner's confinement as custody classification, parole eligibility, work-release eligibility, and parole planning, many states, including Wisconsin, have adopted the Uniform Detainer Act (Wis. Stat. § 976.05). (A list of states which have adopted the Act follows as Appendix A.) The Act's purpose is to encourage the expeditious and orderly disposition of charges outstanding against a prisoner and to determine the proper status of any and all detainers based on untried indictments, information or complaints (' 976.05(1) Article I). Both prisoners and prosecuting authorities may initiate proceedings under the Act, and different procedures apply depending upon who initiates the action.

The Act requires that upon receipt of a detainer, the warden promptly inform the prisoner of its source and contents. The prisoner must also be informed of the right to request final disposition of the charge on which the detainer is based. If the prisoner makes that request, 976.05(3) [Article III(a)] of the Act requires that the charge be dismissed if not brought to trial within 180 days.

The Act also provides a procedure enabling the charging jurisdiction to gain custody of the prisoner for the purpose of bringing him to trial. This procedure is described in 976.05(4) [Article IV] of the Act and is initiated by the presentation of a written request for temporary custody to the proper authorities in the state where the prisoner is incarcerated. The request is presented after a detainer has been lodged against the prisoner and it is the receipt of the request for temporary custody that triggers the court appearance described in this Special Material.

State v. Aukes, 192 Wis.2d 338, 531 N.W.2d 382 (Ct. App. 1995), discusses the two different procedures available under the Interstate Agreement on Detainers. Under Article III [' 976.05(3)] a prisoner may request a final disposition of charges pending in another state. The prisoner must be brought to trial within 180 days after the prosecutor receives the prisoner's request. Under Article IV [' 976.05(4)], an officer of a jurisdiction in which charges are pending can request to have a prisoner returned to that jurisdiction for trial. A prisoner returned under this provision must be tried within 120 days. In Aukes, the court of appeals concluded that the 180-day limit applied to a person returned to Wisconsin from Colorado. The court also found that the 180-day limit was tolled during the time that an appeal of a suppression order was pending and that it was ultimately waived when the defendant agreed to a trial date set after the limit would have expired. That waiver can occur by conduct; express waiver on the record is not necessary.

When another jurisdiction makes a request under Article IV, the prisoner is to be brought before a court "forthwith." § 976.06. This is the court appearance addressed by this Special Material. The prisoner has the right to request a hearing to test the legality of the request and the hearing is to be held within 30 days. If a hearing is not held within the 30-day period, the original request or detainer is dismissed. State v. Sykes, 91 Wis.2d 436, 283 N.W.2d 446 (Ct. App. 1979). However, dismissal of procedurally defective detainers does not bar successive requests. In the Matter of Custody of Aiello, 166 Wis.2d 27, 479 N.W.2d 178 (Ct. App. 1991). The new request must itself satisfy the requirements of the Act, including it being approved by the court in the jurisdiction filing the request. State ex rel. Kerr v. McCaughtry, 183 Wis.2d 54, 515 N.W.2d 276 (Ct. App. 1994).

1. In the Uniform Detainer Act (Wis. Stat. § 976.05) and in this Special Material, the state requesting the custody of the prisoner is referred to as the "receiving state." Wisconsin is the "sending state." See § 976.05(2) Article II(a) and (b).

2. The Act applies to "one who has entered upon a term of imprisonment in a penal or correctional institution." (Section 976.05(3), Article III(a).) It is usually applied to inmates of the state prisons, but could also be invoked with regard to county jail inmates. The Act does not apply to persons adjudged to be mentally ill (' 976.05(6), Article VI(b)). A separate compact exists for juveniles, see Wis. Stat. § 938.991.

3. It may be necessary for the court to issue a writ of habeas corpus as prosequendum or ad testificandum to allow the warden or other custodian to bring the prisoner from the place of his confinement to the court.

4. See § 976.05(1), Article IV(a). A sample "Request for Temporary Custody" follows as Appendix B. It is the suggested Agreement on Detainers Form V, see Handbook on Interstate Crime Control, p. 106.

5. Section 976.05(4), Article IV(b) provides that upon receiving a request for temporary custody, the warden or other custodian shall furnish the requesting officer with a certificate specifying the term of the prisoner's commitment, the time already served, the time remaining to be served, the amount of good time earned, the parole eligibility date, and any parole board decisions. Such a certificate is also to be sent to any other officials in the receiving state who have lodged detainers against the prisoner, thus alerting those officials to the possible availability of the prisoner. Therefore trial on other charges could result when the prisoner is returned to the receiving state.

6. Section 976.05(4), Article IV(c).

7. Section 976.05(4), Article IV(a) states in part:

> . . . and that there shall be a period of 30 days after receipt by the appropriate authorities before the request is honored, within which period the governor of the sending state may disapprove the request for temporary custody or availability either upon the governor's own motion or upon motion of the prisoner.

Garner, supra, held, and new § 976.06 requires, that the prisoner be advised of the right to petition the governor.

8. Section 976.05(4), Article IV (d).

9. The decision in Garner, supra, required that the prisoner be advised of his right to contest delivery under the detainer, "either by petitioning the governor or by going to court." (Garner, supra, at 585.) Section 976.06 requires that the prisoner be advised of both rights and says that the court hearing scheduled if the prisoner wishes to contest the request in court must also be set within the 30-day time limit applicable to the governor's denial of the request (see note 6, supra). There is no indication whether a prisoner may exercise both rights in a single case or must elect between petitioning the governor and contesting the request in court.

10. Section 976.06 was modelled after § 976.03(10) of the Uniform Criminal Extradition Act. Therefore the issues cognizable upon habeas corpus in an extradition proceeding may offer guidance as to the issues the court can consider in the detainer case where the prisoner wishes to contest the detainer. The issues which can be raised by habeas corpus in an extradition case have been identified by the Wisconsin Supreme Court as follows:

1. Are the papers in order and properly authenticated?
2. Was a crime substantially charged under the law of the demanding state?
3. Is the petitioner the person named in the papers (identity)?
4. Was the petitioner present in the demanding state at the time of the alleged offense (fugitive status)?

State v. Ritter, 74 Wis.2d 227, 246 N.W.2d 552 (1976).

Each of these four categories, except fugitive status, should be open to inquiry in the detainer case. Guilt or innocence on the underlying charge can only be inquired into insofar as it relates to one of the other four issues. The receiving state's motive for demanding the prisoner's return is also irrelevant. (Handbook on Interstate Crime Control, pp. 147-154.)

Whether or not courts in the sending state can consider constitutional claims is open to question. On the one hand, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that trial courts in habeas corpus proceedings can "examine into constitutional questions affecting the legality of the arrest in this state for extradition at least where constitutional standards are shown not to have been complied with on the face of the documents." State ex rel. Foster v. Uttech, 31 Wis.2d 664, 671, 143 N.W.2d 500 (1966). The Uttech case has been recognized as a limited exception to the general rule that "whether correct constitutional procedures had been followed by the demanding state in obtaining the arrest of the defendant was an issue to be raised in the demanding state, not the asylum state." State v. Hughes, 68 Wis.2d 662, 670, 229 N.W.2d 655 (1975). The decision in Ritter, supra, limited the application of Uttech to the case where the alleged constitutional defect appears on the face of the papers. Where defects in the receiving state's procedures are alleged, Ritter suggests that the following practical test be applied: "Can the defects in the procedures of the demanding state be more easily raised and adequately handled in the demanding state after the accused is returned or is the decision one which the asylum state can make with comparative ease and with expertise equal to that of the demanding state, thus saving the accused the expense, inconvenience and jeopardy involved in litigating the issue in the demanding state?" (Ritter, supra at page 237.)

With respect to a specific defect, trial within 180 days as guaranteed by the Uniform Detainer Act, the Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that the claim that a prisoner was not afforded this right may not be considered in the sending state but must be decided by the courts in the receiving state. State ex rel. Garner v. Gray, 59 Wis.2d 323, 208 N.W.2d 161 (1973).

11. The court may also wish to advise the custodian of the prisoner that if the prisoner does not contest delivery, or if the governor takes no action and the prisoner does not challenge delivery in court, that the custodian may surrender the prisoner after the expiration of the 30-day period to the appropriate representative of the receiving state who shall present the following:

1. Proper identification and evidence of his or her authority to act for the state into whose temporary custody the prisoner is to be given.

2. A duly certified copy of the indictment, information or complaint on the basis of which the detainer has been lodged and on the basis of which the request for temporary custody of the prisoner has been made.
