Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of first degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1980 as Wis JI-Criminal 1204 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1205 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1983, 1988, and 1990. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1205 was published in 1996 and revised in 2002 and 2005. A nonsubstantive change was made in 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in 2018; it involved an editorial correction to footnote 10.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

This offense, like the offense defined in sub. (2)(a), has an element requiring the "use or threat of force." The case law interpreting that element has developed in cases under sub. (2)(a), but the Committee concluded that the interpretations apply to this offense as well. See footnotes 2-6.

1. Section 940.225(1)(c) uses the phrase, "aided or abetted," (emphasis added). Since traditional criminal statutes have referred to "aiding and abetting," the Committee has used that construction in this instruction. The Committee feels that this does not change the meaning of the statute or of the aiding and abetting concept. In State v. Thomas, 128 Wis.2d 93, 381 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that "aided or abetted" in § 940.225(1)(c) has the same meaning as the phrase "aids and abets" in § 939.05 and therefore is not unconstitutionally vague.

2. The phrase, "by use or threat of force or violence," as used in subsection (2)(a) of § 940.225 was construed in State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981). The court held that jury agreement is not required on "use" as opposed to "threat" or on "force" as opposed to "violence." Thus, instructing the jury in the disjunctive is acceptable in this instance, although the Committee recommends selecting one of the alternatives whenever the evidence supports only one.

3. "[T]he use or threat of force or violence element of second degree sexual assault includes forcible contact or force used as a means of making the sexual contact. Thus, the element is satisfied whether the force is used or threatened as part of the sexual contact itself or whether it is used or threatened before the sexual contact." State v. Hayes, 2003 WI App 99, ¶15, 264 Wis.2d 377, 633 N.W.2d 351, citing State v. Bonds, supra. (Affirmed, 2004 WI 80, 273 Wis.2d 1, 681 N.W.2d 203.)

4. State v. Hayes, 2004 WI 80, ¶59, 273 Wis.2d 1, 681 N.W.2d 203:

> The "use or threat of force or violence" element . . . is satisfied if the use or threat of force or violence is directed to compelling the victim's submission. The element is satisfied whether the force is used or threatened as part of the sexual contact or whether it is used or threatened as part of the sexual contact to compel the victim's submission.

5. State v. Jaworski, 135 Wis.2d 235, 239-40, 400 N.W.2d 29 (Ct. App. 1986):

> [W]e reject Jaworski's argument that . . . the state must therefore establish a separate threat for each count charged.
> . . . The crucial inquiry is whether on each date sexual intercourse was achieved by threat of violence.
> A reasonable trier of fact could well conclude . . . that the initial threat of violence lingered on the latter dates. . . Part of S.H.'s fear may also have been attributable to Jaworski's alleged threats to tell other inmates as well as S.H.'s family and friends what had happened. However, that fact does not preclude a finding that the original threat of violence continued to weigh upon S.H. and caused him to cooperate out of fear for his safety.

State v. Speese, 191 Wis.2d 205, 213-14, 528 N.W.2d 63 (Ct. App. 1995):

In State v. Jaworski, . . . we held that a reasonable trier of fact could infer that an initial threat of violence, made two to five days earlier than the charged sexual assaults, had lingered on the days the charged assaults occurred, and that the earlier threat had caused the victim to submit out of fear. . . .

Speese . . . asserts that her subjective fear was unreasonable and insufficient to prove the threat or use of force. We disagree.

The jury could infer from the evidence that Teresa had good reason to fear Speese, he having used force on her on at least one prior occasion when she refused to have sexual intercourse with him. The fact finder may take into account the context of the threat. . . The context here is the relationship between Speese and Teresa and their respective ages. The relationship of some ten years' duration is between a stepfather and his juvenile female stepchild whom he has sexually abused throughout the period and beaten.

6. State v. Bonds, 165 Wis.2d 27, 32, 477 N.W.2d 265 (1991):

. . . Section 940.225(2)(a) does not state that the force used or threatened may not be the force employed in the actual nonconsensual contact. Nor does it state that the force must be directed toward compelling the victim's submission. The phrase "by use of force" includes forcible contact or the force used as the means of making contact.

. . . Force used at the time of the contact can compel submission as effectively as force or threat occurring before contact. Regardless of when the force is applied, the victim is forced to submit. When force is used at the time of contact, the victim has no choice at the moment of simultaneous use of force and making of contact. When force is used before contact, the choice is forced. In both cases, the victim does not consent to the contact.

7. Section 940.225(1)(c) states that the defendant must have been aided or abetted and have sexual contact or sexual intercourse without consent by use or threat of force or violence. The nature of the connection between being aided and having intercourse or contact is not clear. The earlier version of this instruction tried to express this connection by stating that the aiding and abetting must have "compelled the victim to submit" to the sexual assault.

This issue was discussed in State v. Thomas, 128 Wis.2d 93, 104-05, 381 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1985). In Thomas, the 1983 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1204, and relevant footnotes, were cited by the defendant in support of his argument that the statute was intended to apply only to the "gang rape situation." The Thomas court rejected the argument, holding that "aiding and abetting" has the same meaning in § 940.225(1)(c) as it has in § 939.05. Since the Committee had not intended to suggest a different result, the 1988 revision deleted the "compelled the victim to submit" language and revised the aiding and abetting explanation to track closely the one used for purposes of § 939.05.

8. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

"Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (cm), (d), (g), (h) and (I). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):

(b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
(c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

9. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430, 299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

10. The use of the aiding and abetting concept in § 940.225(1)(c) is somewhat different from that of traditional criminal statutes, because this statute provides for increased penalty for the principal actor where the actor is aided by others. The usual situation, for example, Wis. Stat. § 939.05(2)(b), Parties to Crime, involves defining the culpability of the aider and abettor. For further definition of "aiding and abetting," see Wis JI-Criminal 400 and the 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Comment to § 339.05.

The requirement that the aider(s) must have known that the defendant was committing the sexual assault is added to the instruction on the basis of the definition of the aider's culpability in § 939.05. Section 939.05 refers to "intentionally aid and abets," which has been interpreted as "acting with knowledge or belief that another person is committing or intends to commit a crime." The Committee also concluded that the defendant must know of the aider's presence or willingness to assist.

Another question arising under this subsection relates to the liability of the aider. Is the aider guilty of first or second degree sexual assault? If aiding is established, the principal is guilty of the first degree offense. Usually, the aider is guilty of the same offense as the principal. In the sexual assault case, however, the crime the aider intended to aid was arguably a second degree offense, Sexual Contact or Intercourse Without Consent by use or threat of force or violence under § 940.225(2)(a). The aiding is the only factor that elevates the offense as far as the principal is concerned. Does it also increase the seriousness for the aider? The Wisconsin Court of Appeals so held in State v. Curbello-Rodriguez, 119 Wis.2d 414, 351 N.W.2d 758 (Ct. App. 1984).

11. The sentence in brackets is recommended for use when the evidence raises an issue whether the person actually gave assistance or merely stood by without intending to assist.

Wis JI-Criminal 1206 and 1207 were originally published in 1980 and were revised in 1983. The instructions were withdrawn in 1989.

These instructions were withdrawn because the statute with which they deal was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. The same legislation recreated essentially the same offenses in § 948.02(1), First Degree Sexual Assault Of A Child. See Wis JI-Criminal 2102 and 2103.

1208 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITHOUT CONSENT BY USE OR THREAT OF FORCE OR VIOLENCE — § 940.225(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with another person without consent and by use or threat of force or violence.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual (contact) (intercourse).

3. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim) by use or threat of force or violence.[1]

   The use or threat of force or violence may occur before or as part of the sexual (contact) (intercourse).[2]

   SELECT THE ALTERNATIVES SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE

   [This element is satisfied if the use or threat of force or violence compelled (name of victim) to submit.][3]

[Use or threat of force or violence on one date can carry over to an alleged sexual assault on a later date if the use or threat of force or violence continued to weigh on (name of victim) and caused (him) (her) to cooperate out of fear for (his) (her) safety.][4]

[The phrase "by use of force" includes forcible sexual contact or force used as the means of making sexual contact.][5]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[6]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what (name of victim) said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances. This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. The phrase, "by use or threat of force or violence," as used in subsection (2)(a) of § 940.225, was construed in State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981). The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

1209 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITHOUT CONSENT CAUSING INJURY, ILLNESS, DISEASE OR IMPAIRMENT OF A SEXUAL OR REPRODUCTIVE ORGAN, OR MENTAL ANGUISH REQUIRING PSYCHIATRIC CARE — § 940.225(2)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with another person without consent and causes (injury) (illness) (disease or impairment of a sexual or reproductive organ) (mental anguish requiring psychiatric care).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).
2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual (contact) (intercourse).
3. The defendant caused (injury to (name of victim)) (illness to (name of victim)) (disease or impairment of a sexual or reproductive organ of (name of victim)) (mental anguish requiring psychiatric care for (name of victim)).[1]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[2]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual [contact] [intercourse] with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what (name of victim) said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances. This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[3]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

Comment

This instruction was originally published in 1980 as Wis JI-Criminal 1210 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1211 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1983 and 1990. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1209 was published in 1996 and revised in 2001 and 2009. The 2009 revision involved amendments to footnote 1. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. No further definition is attempted for any of the alternatives for this element. Before the 2008 revision, the text referred to "bodily injury." The Committee decided to delete "bodily" because it does not appear in the definition of the offense and may invite problems in connection with defining "injury." "Injury" is not defined in the sexual assault statute, in the general definitions provided in Chapter 939, or by a published court decision. While the Criminal Code uses the closely related term "bodily harm," caution should be used in equating the two because unpublished decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached conflicting results, focusing on whether "pain" is sufficient to constitute "injury." In a prosecution under § 940.225(2)(b), the court held that the trial court erred in defining "injury" using the Criminal Code definition of "bodily harm" [see § 939.22(4)] because "injury" does not include "pain." State v. Gonzalez, No. 2006AP2977 CR, March 20, 2008. [Ordered not published, April 30, 2008.] However, in a prosecution under § 346.63(2)(a), where "injury" is also used, the court held that the word "injury" encompasses physical pain. State v. Maddox, No. 03 0227 CR, July 8, 2003. [Ordered not published, August 27, 2003.] Neither of these decisions may be cited as authority because they were not published. See § 809.23(3). But they indicate the need for caution in equating "injury" with "bodily harm."

It is not clear what is intended by the reference in the statute to "sexual or reproductive organs." The phrase is not defined in the statutes or by prior case law, although the Sexual Assault Law uses the term "intimate parts" in defining sexual contact (§ 940.225(5)(b)). According to cases from other states, "sexual or reproductive organs" include the immediate vicinity of the genital organs as well as the organs themselves, State v. Nash, 83 N.H. 536, 145 A. 262 (N.H. 1929); and it does not include the breasts, State v. Moore, 194 Ore. 232, 241 P.2d 455 (Ore. 1952).

2. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

> "Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (d) and (g). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):
> (b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
> (c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

3. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430, 299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

1211 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON SUFFERING FROM MENTAL ILLNESS — § 940.225(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a person who suffers from a mental illness or deficiency which renders that person temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising the person's conduct, and the defendant knows of such condition.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).
2. (Name of victim) suffered from a mental (illness) (deficiency) at the time of the sexual (contact) (intercourse).[1]
3. The mental (illness) (deficiency) rendered (name of victim) temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising (his) (her) conduct. In other words, (name of victim) must have lacked the ability to evaluate the significance of (his) (her) conduct because of (his) (her) mental (illness) (deficiency).[2]

4. The defendant knew that (name of victim) was suffering from a mental (illness) (deficiency) and knew that the mental condition rendered (name of victim) temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising (his) (her) conduct.[3]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR THE DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR THE DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE RELATING TO THE VICTIM'S CONDUCT THAT IS RELEVANT TO THE THIRD OR FOURTH ELEMENTS.[4]

[Use of Consent Evidence]

[Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense. However, you may consider any words or actions of (name of victim) indicating consent in determining (whether (name of victim) was suffering from a mental (illness) (deficiency) that rendered (him) (her) incapable of appraising her conduct) (or) (whether the defendant knew that (name of victim) was suffering from a mental (illness) (deficiency) that rendered (him) (her) incapable of appraising her conduct).]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1980 as Wis JI-Criminal 1212 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1213 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1983, 1990, and 1993. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1211 was published in 1996 and revised in 1998, 2002, 2015, and 2021. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it amended to the comment.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Section 940.225(2)(c) provides that it is second degree sexual assault if one "[h]as sexual contact or sexual intercourse with a person who suffers from a mental illness or deficiency which renders that person temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising the person's conduct, and the defendant knows of such condition." This offense is similar to a violation under § 940.225(3), Third Degree Sexual Assault, which prohibits sexual intercourse without consent, where, in satisfying the consent element, the state relies on the presumption of no consent under § 940.225(4)(b), which applies where the victim "suffers from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct." This statement in subsection (4)(b) is almost identical to the wording of § 940.225(2)(c) but is not exactly the same.

The distinguishing feature of the more serious offense under subsection (2)(c) is that the defendant must know of the victim's mental illness or deficiency. Such knowledge is not required where the presumption applies under subsection (4)(b), so in this sense, the subsection (2)(c) offense requires greater proof than does the offense under subsection (3). However, "without consent" is not an element of the (2)(c) offense, while it is an element of the (3) offense. Each offense, therefore, requires proof of an element that the other does not, although the victim could be essentially the same under either offense. Therefore, under the strict Wisconsin test (see § 939.66 and Randolph v. State, 83 Wis.2d 630, 266 N.W.2d 334 (1978)), third degree sexual assault apparently cannot be a lesser included offense of a crime charged under subsec. (2)(c).

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. The Committee decided not to define "mental illness or deficiency" in the uniform instruction. Existing statutory definitions did not seem suitable because they are written in the context of determining when treatment is required or when involuntary commitment of the mentally ill person is appropriate. (See, for example, Wis. Stat. § 51.01(13)(a) and (b) and § 51.75(2)(c) and (d).) For the purposes of the Sexual Assault Law, the Committee concluded that the term "mental illness or deficiency" has a meaning within the common understanding of the jury. Additional guidance as to the type of illness or deficiency required is offered by the qualifying phrase in the statute: ". . . which renders that person temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising the person's conduct."

In State v. Perkins, 2004 WI App 213, ¶19, 277 Wis.2d 243, 689 N.W.2d 684, the court of appeals court cited the discussion above with apparent approval. The court held that "[W]hen, as here, there is lay opinion testimony supported by ample testimony as to the victim's behavior, the existence of a mental illness or deficiency that rendered the victim temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising his or her conduct can be established without the presentation of expert testimony." Also see State v. Onyeukwu, 2104AP518 CR, [not published] for an example of a decision finding the evidence sufficient to establish "mental deficiency" based on evidence showing that the 22 year old victim "was probably functioning on a sixth-grade level." ¶16.

2. This is an attempt to elaborate on the meaning of "rendered the person temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising the person's conduct." It is adapted from the discussion in State v. Smith, 215 Wis.2d 84, 94, 572 N.W.2d 496 (Ct. App. 1997).

3. Section 940.225(2)(c) requires that the defendant know of the victim's condition. The Committee concluded that this requires knowledge of the existence of the mental illness or deficiency and knowledge that the illness or deficiency "renders the person temporarily or permanently incapable of appraising the person's conduct."

4. Section 940.225(4) provides in part: "Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (d) and (g)." Thus, "without consent" is not an element of this offense, and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

While consent is not a defense as such, evidence of facts indicating that the victim appeared to give consent might be relevant to other elements of the crime: whether the victim was mentally incapable of appraising his or her conduct and whether the defendant knew that the victim was suffering from a mental illness that rendered her incapable of appraising his or her conduct.

1212 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON WHO IS UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT — § 940.225(2)(cm)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(cm) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a person who is under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which renders that person incapable of giving consent if the defendant has actual knowledge that the person is incapable of giving consent and has the purpose to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with the person while the person is incapable of giving consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the sexual (contact) (intercourse).

   [_____ is an intoxicant.][1]

   ["Intoxicant" means any alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, controlled substance, controlled substance analog or other drug, any combination thereof.][2]

3. (Name of victim) was under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which rendered (him) (her) incapable of giving consent.

   This requires that (name of victim) was incapable of giving freely given agreement to engage in sexual (intercourse) (contact).[3]

4. The defendant had actual knowledge[4] that (name of victim) was incapable of giving consent.

5. The defendant had the purpose to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) while (name of victim) was incapable of giving consent.[5]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Deciding About Purpose and Actual Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and actual knowledge. Purpose and actual knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and actual knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1212 was originally published in 1998 and revised in 2002, 2007, and 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Section 940.225(2)(cm) was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 220 (effective date: May 14, 1998). It originally provided that it was second degree sexual assault if one "[h]as sexual contact or sexual intercourse with a person who is under the influence of an intoxicant to a degree which renders that person incapable of appraising the person's conduct, and the defendant knows of such condition." Although the statute referred to "intoxicant," alcohol, the most common intoxicant, was excluded from the definition. The original statute was apparently intended to address the so-called date rape drugs such as "gamma hydroxybutyrate" or "GHB," "gamma hydroxybutyrolactone" or "GBL," ketamine, or flunitrazepam, the possession of which was also criminalized by the same legislation creating this sexual assault offense. See § 961.41(3g)(f) as created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 220.

Section 940.225(2)(cm) was amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 436 (effective date: June 6, 2006). Act 436 made the following changes:

- it included "alcohol beverage" in the definition of "intoxicant" in sub. (5)(ai);
- it changed "incapable of appraising the person's conduct" to "incapable of giving consent";
- it restated the knowledge requirement as "has actual knowledge that the person is incapable of giving consent"; and,
- it added: "and the defendant has the purpose to have sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the person while the person is incapable of giving consent."

Section 940.225(2)(cm) was further amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 [effective date: Dec. 14, 2013] to add "hazardous inhalant" to the definition of "intoxicant." Act 83 also created a definition of "hazardous inhalant" in § 939.22(15). For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving a "hazardous inhalant," see Wis JI-Criminal 2667.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault

"against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. If the charging document specifies one of the substances that qualifies as an "intoxicant" under § 940.225(5)(ai), the Committee suggests simply telling the jury that, for example: "A controlled substance is an intoxicant." If one of the alternatives is not specified or if reading the full statutory definition is believed to be preferable, that definition is provided in the second set of brackets.

2. This is the definition of "intoxicant" in § 940.223(5)(ai). The definition was revised by 2005 Wisconsin Act 436 to include "alcohol beverage" as an "intoxicant." It was further revised by 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 to include "hazardous inhalant."

3. 2005 Wisconsin Act 436 amended s. 940.225(2)(cm) to refer to the victim being under the influence to a degree which renders that person "incapable of giving consent" in place of "rendered the person incapable of appraising the person's conduct." The statement in the instruction incorporates the key parts of the definition of "consent" in s. 940.225(4).

Act 436 did not amend the second sentence of s. 940.225(4), which provides that "consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (cm) . . ." While "without consent" is not an element of this offense, evidence relating to consent may be relevant to the elements that refer to the victim being incapable of giving consent. Thus, the revised instruction does not include the statement found in the prior version that informs the jury that "consent is not a defense." See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1211.

4. Section 940.225(2)(cm), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 436, requires that the defendant "has actual knowledge that the person is incapable of giving consent." "Actual knowledge" replaced "knows" used in the prior version of the statute. The Committee interprets this change as emphasizing the subjective nature of the mental element required for this offense.

5. Section 940.225(2)(cm), as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 436, requires that the defendant "has the purpose to have sexual contact or sexual intercourse with the person while the person is incapable of giving consent." The 2006 revision of the instruction added the fifth element to reflect this addition to the statutory definition.

1213 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON THE DEFENDANT KNOWS IS UNCONSCIOUS — § 940.225(2)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a person who the defendant knows is unconscious.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).
2. (Name of victim) was unconscious[1] at the time of the sexual (contact) (intercourse).
3. The defendant knew that (name of victim) was unconscious at the time of the sexual (contact) (intercourse).[2]

Meaning of ("Sexual Contact") ("Sexual Intercourse")

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE RELATING TO THE VICTIM'S CONDUCT THAT IS RELEVANT TO THE SECOND OR THIRD ELEMENTS.[3]

[Use of Consent Evidence]

[Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense. However, you may consider any words or actions of (name of victim) indicating consent in determining (whether (name of victim) was unconscious) (or) (whether the defendant knew that (name of victim) was unconscious).]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1980 as Wis JI-Criminal 1214 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1215 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1983, 1990, and 1993. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1213 was published in 1996 and revised in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2022, it amended footnote 1 by revising the term "heavy sleep" to "sleep." It also added to the comment.

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

Third-degree and fourth-degree sexual assault are not lesser included offenses of this subsection because they require proof of an element that second-degree sexual assault of an unconscious victim does not. Specifically, proof that the victim did not consent to the sexual contact or intercourse.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. The statute does not define "unconscious." The Committee decided not to include a definition in the text of the instruction because a definition would be most helpful if tied to the facts of the case. When a case involves a substantial question about the meaning of "unconscious," the following material may be helpful.

Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary defines "unconscious" as "not knowing or perceiving, or being unaware." The Committee believes the common meaning of unconscious includes the loss of awareness caused by intoxication, the taking of drugs, or sleep. In State v. Curtis, 144 Wis.2d 691, 695 96, 424 N.W.2d 719 (Ct. App. 1988), the court held that "unconscious" under § 940.225(2)(a) includes "a loss of awareness which may be caused by sleep" and that it was proper for the trial court to instruct the jury in those terms.

The constitutionality of § 940.225(2)(d) was upheld in State v. Pittman, 174 Wis.2d 255, 496 N.W.2d 74 (1993). The court held that the statutory standard "provides clear notice that sexual intercourse with a person who is asleep is illegal." 174 Wis.2d 255, 277. Further, the statute "provides an objective standard for those applying the law," id., since sleep is within the common knowledge of the jury. (The jury in Pittman was instructed, in accord with Curtis, supra, that "unconsciousness is a loss of awareness which may be caused by sleep.") Pittman also affirmed the exclusion of expert testimony on the effects of alcohol on sleep and consciousness, holding that it was irrelevant and tended to convey to the jury the expert's belief that the complaining witness was lying.

2. Knowledge that the victim is unconscious is expressly required by § 940.225(2)(d).

3. Section 940.225(4) provides in part: "Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (cm), (d) and (g)." Thus, "without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

While consent is not a defense as such, evidence of facts indicating that the victim appeared to give consent might be relevant to other elements of the crime: whether the victim was incapable of appraising her conduct; and, whether the defendant knew that the victim was under the influence to a degree that rendered her incapable of appraising her conduct.

1214 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITHOUT CONSENT WHILE AIDED AND ABETTED — § 940.225(2)(f)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(f) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with another person without consent and is aided and abetted[1] by one or more other persons.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual (contact) (intercourse).

3. The defendant was aided and abetted by one or more other persons.

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[2]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual (contact) (intercourse) with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what (name of victim) said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances. This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[3]

Meaning of "Aiding and Abetting"

The defendant was aided and abetted if another person knew that the defendant was having or intended to have sexual [contact] [intercourse] without consent and either:

- provided assistance to the defendant; or,
- was willing to assist the defendant if needed and the defendant knew of the willingness to assist.

Assistance may be provided by words, acts, encouragement, or support.[4]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[5]

[However, a person does not aid and abet if the person is only a bystander or spectator and does nothing to assist or encourage the commission of a crime.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1988 as Wis JI-Criminal 1217.1 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1217.2 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1990. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1214 was published in 1996 and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

This offense was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 245, effective date: April 21, 1988. A related offense is defined as first degree sexual assault by § 940.225(1)(c); it has the additional element of the "use or threat of force or violence." See Wis JI-Criminal 1205.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. Section 940.225(2)(f) uses the phrase "aided or abetted" (emphasis added). Since traditional criminal statutes have referred to "aiding and abetting," the Committee has used that construction in the instruction. The Committee feels that this does not change the meaning of the statute or of the aiding and abetting concept. In State v. Thomas, 128 Wis.2d 93, 381 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that "aided or abetted" in § 940.225(1)(c) has the same meaning as the phrase "aids and abets" in § 939.05 and therefore is not unconstitutionally vague.

2. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

> "Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (d) and (g). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):
> (b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
> (c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

3. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430, 299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

4. The use of the aiding and abetting concept in § 940.225(1)(c) is somewhat different from that of traditional criminal statutes, because this statute provides for increased penalty for the principal actor where he is aided by others. The usual situation, for example, Wis. Stat. § 939.05(2)(b), Parties to Crime, involves defining the culpability of the aider and abettor. For further definition of "aiding and abetting," see Wis JI-Criminal 400 and the 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Comment to § 339.05.

The requirement that the aider(s) must have known that the defendant was committing the sexual assault is added to the instruction on the basis of the definition of the aider's culpability in § 939.05. Section 939.05 refers to "intentionally aid and abets," which has been interpreted as "acting with knowledge or belief that another person is committing or intends to commit a crime." The Committee also concluded that the defendant must know of the aider's presence or willingness to assist.

Another question arising under this subsection relates to the liability of the aider. Is the aider guilty of second or third degree sexual assault? If aiding is established, the principal is guilty of the second degree offense. Usually, the aider is guilty of the same offense as the principal. In the sexual assault case, however, the crime the aider intended to aid was arguably a third degree offense, Sexual Intercourse Without Consent under § 940.225(3). The aiding is the only factor that elevates the offense as far as the principal is concerned. Does it also increase the seriousness for the aider? The Wisconsin Court of Appeals so held in State v. Curbello Rodriguez, 119 Wis.2d 414, 351 N.W.2d 758 (Ct. App. 1984), with respect to the same situation under § 940.225(1)(c).

5. The sentence in brackets is recommended for use when the evidence raises an issue whether the person actually gave assistance or merely stood by without intending to assist.

1215 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE WITH A PATIENT OR RESIDENT — § 940.225(2)(g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(g) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is an employee of a (type of facility or program)[1] and has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a (patient) (resident) of that (facility) (program).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was an employee of (name of facility or program).[2]
2. (Name of victim) was a (patient)[3] (resident)[4] of (name of facility or program).[5]
3. (Name of facility or program) was (an adult family home) (a community based residential facility) (an inpatient health care facility) (a state treatment facility).[6]

   (Name alternative selected) is (specify the part of the statutory definition that applies).[7]
4. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF

"SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1988 as Wis JI-Criminal 1217.3 [for sexual intercourse offenses] and Wis JI-Criminal 1217.4 [for sexual contact offenses]. Those instructions were revised in 1990 and 1994. A revision combining the instructions as Wis JI-Criminal 1215 was published in 1996 and revised in 2002 and 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee December 2021; it added to the comment.

The revised instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

This instruction is for violations of § 940.225(2)(g), as amended by 1993 Wisconsin Act 445, effective date: May 12, 1994.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. Section 940.225(2)(g) was amended by 1993 Wisconsin Act 445. The former statute applied to an employee of "an inpatient facility or a state treatment facility." The revised statutes applies to an employee of "a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k)." Those facilities or programs are:

- (2)(b) an adult family home
- (2)(c) a community-based residential facility
- (2)(h) an inpatient health care facility
- (2)(k) a state treatment facility

The Committee recommends naming the type of facility in this paragraph, for example: ". . . an employee of a state treatment facility."

2. Here insert the name of the facility or program. For example: "St. Mary's Hospital."
3. "Patient" is defined as follows in § 940.225(5)(am):

"Patient" means any person who does any of the following:

1. Receives care or treatment from a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k), from an employe of a facility or program or from a person providing services under contract with a facility or program.

2. Arrives at a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k) for the purpose of receiving care or treatment from a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k), from an employee of a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k), or from a person providing services under a contract with a facility or program under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h) or (k).

4. "Resident" is defined as follows in § 940.225(ar): ". . . any person who resides in a facility under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h), or (k)."

5. Here insert the name of the facility or program. For example: "St. Mary's Hospital."

6. Here insert the name of the facility or program and select the applicable type of facility or program. For example: "St. Mary's Hospital was an inpatient health care facility."

7. Here name the applicable type of facility or program and select the relevant part of the statutory definition for that type of facility or program. For example: "An inpatient health care facility is any hospital licensed or approved by the Department of Health and Family Services under (specify licensing statute)."

Section 940.225(2)(g) applies to offenses involving employees and patients or residents in facilities or programs "under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h), or (k)." Those subsections of § 940.295 refer to definitions in other statutes, resulting in extensive and complex references. The Committee recommends that care be taken to assure that essential parts of the applicable definitions are included.

The facilities or programs under s. 940.295(2)(b), (c), (h), or (k) and the cross-referenced definitions are as follows:

- (2)(b) adult family home. § 940.295(1)(am) provides that "'adult family home' has the meaning given in s. 50.01(1)."

- (2)(c) community-based residential facility. § 940.295(1)(c) provides that "'community-based residential facility' has the meaning given in s. 50.01(1g)."

- (2)(h) inpatient health care facility. § 940.295(1)(i) provides that "'inpatient health care facility' has the meaning given in s. 50.135(1)."

- (2)(k) state treatment facility. § 940.295(1)(r) provides that "'state treatment facility' has the meaning given in s. 50.01(15)."

Many of the cross-referenced definitions include their own references to other statutes, sometimes to indicate exceptions. The potential for complexity is illustrated by State v. Powers, 2004 WI App 156, ¶6, 276 Wis.2d 107, 687 N.W.2d 50, where the court of appeals held that an employee of a health care facility operated by the United States Department of Veterans Affairs [the VA Medical Center at Tomah] is not subject to prosecution for an alleged violation of § 940.225(2)(g). As applicable to this situation, sub. (2)(g) requires that the victim of the offense be a patient or resident of a facility or program under § 940.295(2)(h) – an inpatient health care facility. Section 940.295(1)(i) provides that "'inpatient health care facility' has the meaning given in s. 50.135(1)." Section 50.135(1) requires that this type of facility be licensed by the state. The state conceded that as a VA facility, the Tomah Medical Center is not licensed by the state, so the court held that § 940.225(2)(g) does not apply.

While Powers was an appeal of the denial of a pretrial motion, the Committee concluded that the state must prove that the facility or program involved in the case is covered by one of the referenced definitions. If not agreed to by the parties, this will present a factual issue for the jury.

8. Section 940.225(4) provides in part: "Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (d) and (g)."

1216 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE BY A CORRECTIONAL STAFF MEMBER — § 940.225(2)(h)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(h) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a correctional staff member who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with an individual who is confined in a correctional institution.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a correctional staff member.

   "Correctional staff member" means an individual who works at a correctional institution [and includes a volunteer].[1]

2. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).[2]

   Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense.[3]

3. (Name of victim) was confined in a correctional institution.

   (Name institution) is a correctional institution.[4]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1216 was originally published in 2004 and revised in 2007, 2012, and 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.225(2)(h), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 51, effective date: September 5, 2003.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. This is the definition provided in § 940.225(5)(ad). The Committee recommends including the bracketed reference to a volunteer only when there is evidence that the defendant was a volunteer.

A Milwaukee County sheriff's deputy, assigned to work as a bailiff in the courthouse, is not a "correctional staff member" for purposes of § 940.225(2)(h), even though the deputy's duties included escorting inmates from the criminal justice facility to the courthouse holding cell. State v. Terrell, 2006 WI App 166, 295 Wis.2d 619, 721 N.W.2d 527.

2. The definition of the offense in § 940.225(2)(h) includes the following statement:

> This paragraph does not apply if the individual with whom the actor has sexual contact or sexual intercourse is subject to prosecution for the sexual contact or sexual intercourse under this section.

It is not clear to the Committee whether this statement presents an issue for the court or for the jury. In addition, it is not clear what "subject to prosecution" means. The legislative history indicates that this language was added to the original bill in response to concerns of the Attorney General that "the bill as [originally] drafted would make a crime any incident in which a correctional officer is a victim of a sexual assault." Letter of February 26, 2003, from Attorney General Lautenschlager to Reps. Bies and Albers, Co-Chairpersons, Assembly Committee on Corrections and the Courts. (Emphasis in original.)

In State v. Blum, an unpublished decision (No. 2010AP2363 CR, decided August 1, 2012), the court of appeals concluded that the "subject to prosecution" issue is a question of law for the court, not an affirmative defense that should be determined by the fact finder at trial. [Cited for informational purposes; see § 809.23(3)(b).]

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense because it is not included in the offense definition. Further, § 940.225(4) provides in part: "Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (cm), (d), (g),(h), and (i)." The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to advise the jury of this fact.

4. Section 940.225(5)(acm) provides:

> "Correctional institution" means a jail or correctional facility, as defined in s. 961.01(12m), a juvenile correctional facility, as defined in s. 938.02(10p), or a juvenile detention facility, as defined in s. 938.02(10r).

By following these cross references, one may find a statute that provides that a particular institution or facility is a correctional institution. See, for example, the list of "state prisons" in § 302.01. When a statute so provides, the Committee recommends advising the jury that, for example, "The Waupun Correctional Institution is a correctional institution." It will be for the jury to determine whether, in fact, the victim was confined to that institution.

A "person detained at his or her residence by virtue of participation in the home detention program is 'confined in a correctional institution' for purposes of § 940.225(2)(h)." State v. Hilgers, 2017 WI App 12, ¶17, 373 Wis.2d 756, 893 N.W.2d 261.

1217 SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE BY A PROBATION, PAROLE, OR EXTENDED SUPERVISION AGENT — § 940.225(2)(i)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(i) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a (probation) (parole) (extended supervision) agent who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with an individual on (probation) (parole) (extended supervision), and who supervises that individual in his or her capacity as an agent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a (probation) (parole) (extended supervision) agent.[1]

2. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).[2]

   Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense.[3]

3. (Name of victim) was on [probation] [parole] [extended supervision].

4. The defendant supervised (name of victim) in (his) (her) capacity as a (probation) (parole) (extended supervision) agent.[4]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1217 was originally published in 2004 and revised in 2007 and 2013. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it updated the comment.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.225(2)(i), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 51, effective date: September 5, 2003.

The instruction uses a simplified statement of the statutory description of the supervision requirement in sub. (2)(i), which reads in part as follows:

> . . . agent who supervises the individual, either directly or through a subordinate, . . . or who has influenced or has attempted to influence another probation, parole, or extended supervision agent's supervision of the individual.

If a case involves supervising "through a subordinate" or "influencing or attempting to influence" another agent's supervision, the introductory definition of the offense and the fourth element must be modified.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. The statute does not provide a definition of "probation, parole or extended supervision agent." However, another Criminal Code statute, § 940.20(2m)(a)2. provides the following:

> "Probation, extended supervision and parole agent" means any person authorized by the department of corrections to exercise control over a probationer, parolee or person on extended supervision.

2. The definition of the offense in § 940.225(2)(i) includes the following statement:

This paragraph does not apply if the individual with whom the actor has sexual contact or sexual intercourse is subject to prosecution for the sexual contact or sexual intercourse under this section.

It is not clear to the Committee whether this statement presents an issue for the court or for the jury. In addition, it is not clear what "subject to prosecution" means. The legislative history indicates that this language was added to the original bill in response to concerns of the Attorney General that "the bill as [originally] drafted would make a crime any incident in which a correctional officer is a victim of a sexual assault." Letter of February 26, 2003, from Attorney General Lautenschlager to Reps. Bies and Albers, Co-Chairpersons, Assembly Committee on Corrections and the Courts. (Emphasis in original.)

In State v. Blum, an unpublished decision (No. 2010AP2363 CR, decided August 1, 2012), the court of appeals concluded that the "subject to prosecution" issue is a question of law for the court, not an affirmative defense that should be determined by the fact finder at trial. [Cited for informational purposes; see § 809.23(3)(b).] Blum involved a prosecution under § 940.225(2)(h), which has the same statement relating to "subject to prosecution."

3. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense because it is not included in the offense definition. Further, § 940.225(4) provides in part: "Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of sub. (2)(c), (cm), (d), (g),(h), and (i)." The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to advise the jury of this fact.

4. This is a simplified statement of the statutory description of the supervision requirement in sub. (2)(i), which reads in part as follows:

. . . agent who supervises the individual, either directly or through a subordinate, . . . or who has influenced or has attempted to influence another probation, parole, or extended supervision agent's supervision of the individual.

The fourth element must be modified if the case involves supervision "through a subordinate" or "influencing or attempting to influence" another agent's supervision.

1217A SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE BY AN EMPLOYEE OF AN ENTITY — § 940.225(2)(j)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(j) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a licensee, employee, or nonclient resident of an entity who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with a client of the entity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a (licensee) (employee) (nonclient resident)[1] of an entity.

2. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

   Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense.[2]

3. (Name of victim) was a client of the entity.

   "Client" means an individual who receives direct care or treatment services from an entity.[3]

Meaning of "Entity"

"Entity" means _____.[4]

Meaning of ["Sexual Contact"] ["Sexual Intercourse"]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1217A was approved by the Committee in August 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

Section 940.225(2)(j) was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 388 (effective date: Dec. 1, 2006).

The instruction provides for inserting definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse" provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A and 1200B. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing separate instructions for the definitions. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021] created Wis. Stat. sec. 940.225(1)(d), which makes it a first degree sexual assault to commit what would otherwise be a second degree sexual assault "against an individual who is 60 years of age or older." Wis JI-Criminal 1204 provides a model for integrating the instruction for the second degree offense into instruction for a violation of § 940.225(1)(d).

1. Section 940.225(5)(ak), created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 388, defines "nonclient resident" as follows: ". . . an individual who resides, or is expected to reside, at an entity, who is not a client of the entity, and who has, or is expected to have, regular, direct contact with the clients of the entity."

2. "Without consent" is not an element of this offense because it is not included in the offense definition. The Committee concluded that it may be helpful to advise the jury of this fact.

3. This is the definition provided in s. 940.225(5)(abm), which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 388.

4. Section 940.225(2)(j) refers to "an entity," as defined in s. 48.685(1)(b) or 50.065(1)(c). The Committee recommends choosing the applicable part of applicable definition and inserting it in the blank.

1217B SECOND DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT OR INTERCOURSE BY A LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER WITH A PERSON DETAINED OR IN CUSTODY — § 940.225(2)(k)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(2)(k) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a law enforcement officer who has sexual (contact) (intercourse) with any person who (is detained by any law enforcement officer, as provided under s. 968.24) (is in the custody of any law enforcement officer).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a law enforcement officer.

   "Law enforcement officer" means any person employed by the state or any political subdivision of the state, for the purpose of detecting and preventing crime and enforcing laws or ordinances and who is authorized to make arrests for violations of the laws or ordinances that the person is employed and sworn to enforce. ["Law enforcement officer" includes a university police officer, as defined in s. 175.42 (1) (b)].[1]

2. The defendant had sexual (contact) (intercourse) with (name of victim).

Consent to sexual (contact) (intercourse) is not a defense.[2]

3. (Name of victim) was (detained by any law enforcement officer, as provided under s. 968.24) (in the custody of any law enforcement officer).

This applies (whether the custody is lawful or unlawful) (whether the detainment or custody is actual or constructive).[3]

[Section 968.24 provides that after having identified himself or herself as a law enforcement officer, a law enforcement officer may stop a person in a public place for a reasonable period of time when the officer reasonably suspects that such person is committing, is about to commit or has committed a crime, and may demand the name and address of the person and an explanation of the person's conduct. Such detention and temporary questioning shall be conducted in the vicinity where the person was stopped.][4]

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of second degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1217B was approved by the Committee in June 2022.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.225(2)(k), created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 188 [effective date: March 19, 2022].

1. This is the definition provided in Wis. Stat. § 165.85 (2) (c). The Committee recommends including the bracketed reference to a university police officer only when there is evidence that the defendant was a university police officer.

2. Section 940.225(2)(k) provides in part "Consent is not an issue in an action under this paragraph." Thus, "without consent" is not an element of this offense and consent is not a defense. The Committee concluded it may be helpful to advise the jury of that fact.

3. The definition of the offense in § 940.225(2)(k) provides this language. § 940.225 does not define "actual" or "constructive" custody.

4. Section 968.24 concerns the temporary questioning of a person in a public place without arrest. More specifically, the section is the statutory codification of "Terry stop" authority. Because the connection between the statutory offense and an on-the-street detention may be confusing to a jury, the Committee concluded it may be helpful to include the bracketed statement if the facts of the case so require.

1218A THIRD DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITHOUT CONSENT — § 940.225(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Third degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(3)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual intercourse with another person without consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim).
2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual intercourse.

Meaning of "Sexual Intercourse"

"Sexual intercourse" means any intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object, into the genital or anal opening of another. Emission of semen is not required.[1]

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[2]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual intercourse with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what [he] [she] said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances.

This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[3]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of third degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1980 as Wis ll-Criminal 1218 and revised in 1983 and 1990. A revision renumbering it as Wis JI-Criminal 1218A was published in 1996. A revision in 2001 involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it reflects changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018].

This instruction is for violations of § 940.225(3)(a): sexual intercourse without consent, as amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174. Act 174 amended former sub.(3) by splitting it into subdivs. (a) and (b). The text and the penalty were not changed.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1218B for violations under sub. (3)(b): sexual contact [as defined in § 940.225(5)(b)2. and 3.] without consent.

1. The alternatives for defining "sexual intercourse" are those found in Wis JI-Criminal l 200B. They are built in to this instruction for the convenience of users and to emphasize that this instruction is for third degree sexual assaults involving sexual intercourse, not third degree sexual assaults involving the new type of sexual contact created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69. The definition of "sexual intercourse" is explained in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1200R.

2. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code Offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

> "Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (d) and (g). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):
> (b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.

(c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a. freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

3. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430, 299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

1218B THIRD DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT WITHOUT CONSENT INVOLVING EJACULATION, ETC. — § 940.225(3)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Third degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(3)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual contact with another person without consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual contact with (name of victim) .
2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual contact.

Meaning of "Sexual Contact"

Sexual contact requires

[intentional [penile ejaculation of ejaculate] [emission of (urine) (feces)] by the defendant upon any part of the body clothed or unclothed of (name of victim) .][1]

[that the defendant intentionally caused (name of victim) to [ejaculate] [emit (urine) (feces)] on any part of the defendant's body, whether clothed or unclothed.][2]

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to [become sexually aroused or gratified] [sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim)] .[3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances bearing upon intent.

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[4]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual contact with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what [he] [she] said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances. This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of third degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1218B was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2002 and 2004. The 2004 revision involved a correction of an inadvertent error in the definition of consent. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it reflects changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174 [effective date: March 30, 2018].

This instruction is for violations of § 940.225(3)(b), as amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 174. For violations of sub. (3)(a), see Wis JI-Criminal 1218A. Act 174 amended former sub. (3) by splitting it into two subdivs. (a) and (b). The text and the penalty were not changed. This instruction applies only to sexual contact as defined in § 940.225(5)(b)2. and 3. which provide that sexual contact includes:

> Sub. (b)2. Intentional penile ejaculation of ejaculate or intentional emission of urine or feces by the defendant upon any part of the body clothed or unclothed of the complainant if that ejaculation or emission is either for the purpose of sexually degrading or sexually humiliating the complainant or for the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant.

> Sub. (b)3. For the purpose of sexually degrading or humiliating the complainant or sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant, intentionally causing the complainant to ejaculate or emit urine or feces on any part of the defendant's body, whether clothed or unclothed.

2017 Wisconsin Act 174 amended former sub. (3) by splitting it into subivs. (a) and (b). The text and the penalty were not changed. See Wis JI-Criminal 1218A for violations under sub. (3)(a): sexual intercourse without consent.

Unlike the other instructions for sexual contact offenses, this instruction builds in the applicable alternative specified in subs. (5)(b) 2. and 3. This is to emphasize that this instruction is only for those specific types of sexual contact. For sexual contact offense generally, see Wis JI-Criminal 1219.

1. This definition of "sexual contact" was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69 [effective date: December 2, 2095], which also created the offense addressed by this instruction.

2. The instruction phrases the alternatives as requiring that the defendant acted "with intent to" achieve one of the prohibited results. The statute refers to acting with "the purpose of ..." No change in meaning is intended.

Note that only the two identified alternatives apply to sexual contact involving intentional ejaculation or intentional emission of urine or feces. The "intent to cause bodily harm" alternative that applies to other types of sexual contact does not apply to the offense defined by this instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 1200A.

3. This definition of "sexual contact" was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 273 [effective date: April 20, 2006.]

4. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code Offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

> "Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (d) and (g). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):
> (b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
> (c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

5. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430,299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

1219 FOURTH DEGREE SEXUAL ASSAULT: SEXUAL CONTACT WITHOUT CONSENT — § 940.225(3m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fourth degree sexual assault, as defined in § 940.225(3m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual contact with another person without consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual contact with (name of victim).

2. (Name of victim) did not consent to the sexual contact.

Meaning of "Sexual Contact"

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING THE DEFENDANT TOUCHING THE VICTIM:

[Sexual contact is an intentional touching by the defendant of the (name intimate part)[1] of (name of victim). The touching may be of the (name intimate part) directly or it may be through the clothing. The touching may be done by any body part or by any object, but it must be an intentional touching.

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (cause bodily harm to (name of victim) .) (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)[2]]

FOR SEXUAL CONTACT INVOLVING THE VICTIM BEING CAUSED OR ALLOWED TO TOUCH THE DEFENDANT:

[Sexual contact is an intentional touching by (name of victim) of the (name intimate part) [3] of the defendant, if the defendant intentionally caused[4] (name of victim) to do that touching. The touching may be of the (name intimate part) directly or it may be through the clothing.

Sexual contact also requires that the defendant acted with intent to (cause bodily harm to (name of victim) .) (become sexually aroused or gratified.) (sexually degrade or humiliate (name of victim) .)[5]]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances bearing upon intent.

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"[6]

"Did not consent" means that (name of victim) did not freely agree to have sexual contact with the defendant. In deciding whether (name of victim) did not consent, you should consider what she said and did, along with all the other facts and circumstances. This element does not require that (name of victim) offered physical resistance.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of fourth degree sexual assault have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1219 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1983, 1990, 1992, 1996, and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2004 and involved correction of an inadvertent error in the consent definition.

This instruction is for fourth degree sexual assault as defined in § 940.225(3m). It applies to cases involving "sexual contact" as defined in § 940.225(5)(b)1. A new type of third degree sexual assault was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, effective date: December 2, 1995. It applies only to sexual contact as defined in § 940.225(5)(b)2., which provides that sexual contact includes:

> Intentional penile ejaculation of ejaculate or intentional emission of urine or feces by the defendant upon any part of the body clothed or unclothed of the complainant if that ejaculation or emission is either for the purpose of sexually degrading or sexually humiliating the complainant or for the purpose of sexually arousing or gratifying the defendant.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1218B for an instruction for third degree sexual assault based on the new definition of "sexual contact."

Unlike the other instructions for sexual contact offenses, this instruction builds in the alternatives for defining "sexual contact" that are found in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A. This was done for the convenience of users and to emphasize that the definition of a new type of sexual contact created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69 [see above] does not apply to fourth degree sexual assault as defined in § 940.225(3m).

1. Section 939.22(19) defines "intimate parts": "'Intimate parts' means the breast, buttock, anus, groin, scrotum, penis, vagina, or pubic mound of a human being." The Committee suggests naming the specific intimate part involved in the sexual contact.

In State v. Morse, 126 Wis.2d 1, 374 N.W.2d 388 (Ct, App. 1985), the court of appeals held that a trial court did not improperly broaden the scope of the sexual contact definition in § 939.22(19) by defining "intimate part" to include "the vaginal area."

2. Each alternative definition includes the requirement that the contact be for a prohibited purpose. Earlier versions of the instructions included the purpose as a separate element, but the Committee concluded that it was preferable to deal with at as a second part of the sexual contact definition. The Committee also concluded that including purpose as part of each alternative will reduce the possibility that it would be inadvertently overlooked. Failure to include the purpose of the contact as a part of the jury instruction is reversible error. State v. Krueger, 2001 WI App 14, 240 Wis.2d 644, 623 N.W.2d 211. Likewise, failure to include reference to purpose when accepting a guilty plea may be grounds for withdrawal of the plea. State v. Bollig, 2000 WI 6, 232 Wis.2d 561, 605 N.W.2d 199.

The instruction phrases the alternatives as requiring that the defendant acted "with intent to" achieve one of the prohibited results. The statute refers to acting with "the purpose of . . ." No change in meaning is intended.

3. See note 1, supra.

4. The instruction refers to the touching of the defendant by the complainant as a touching which the defendant "causes" the complainant to do. The statute does not expressly provide for the "causing" alternative, but the Committee concluded that the requirement is implicit.

For sexual assault offenses against children, another alternative exists for this type of sexual contact: allowing a child to touch an intimate part of the defendant. This alternative was recognized in State v. Traylor, 170 Wis.2d 393, 489 N.W.2d 626 (Ct. App. 1992). See the discussion in note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 2101A. Under § 940.225, certain adult victims are in a situation very similar to that of a child victim: persons suffering from mental illness or deficiency [sub. (2)(c)]; persons under the influence of an intoxicant [sub. (2)(cm)]; or, patients or residents [sub. (2)(g)]. However, the Committee decided not to incorporate the "or allowed" alternative in this instruction in the absence of clear authority extending the Traylor decision beyond offenses against children.

Applied literally to a case where the victim is caused to touch the defendant, § 940.225(5)(b) requires an "intentional touching by the complainant . . . of the . . . defendants' intimate parts. . . ." The Committee concluded that it is proper to interpret this definition in a manner that focuses on the defendant's, rather than the victim's, intent. Thus, the instruction refers simply to "a touching" by the victim that the defendant "intentionally caused." This is consistent with the Traylor decision's interpretation of almost identical language in the definition of "sexual contact" in § 948.01(5)(a).

The constitutionality of the sexual contact definition (prior to its amendment by Chapter 309, Laws of 1981) was considered by the Wisconsin courts in several cases. The constitutionality of the basic definition was upheld in State ex rel. Skinkis v. Treffert, 90 Wis.2d 528, 280 N.W.2d 316 (Ct. App. 1979). In State v. Nye, 105 Wis.2d 63, 312 N.W.2d 826 (1981), the Wisconsin Supreme Court summarily affirmed a Wisconsin Court of Appeals decision (101 Wis.2d 398, 302 N.W.2d 83 (Ct. App. 1981)) which held that it was error to include in a jury instruction the former statutory language "if that touching can reasonably be construed to be for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification." Chapter 309, Laws of 1981, eliminated the phrase from § 940.225(5)(b); the standard instructions had never included it in the definition of sexual contact.

5. See note 2, supra.

6. The definition of "consent," found in Wis. Stat. § 940.225(4), applies to prosecutions under § 940.225. The definition of "without consent," found in § 939.22(48), is applicable to other Criminal Code offenses but does not apply to prosecutions under § 940.225. Section 940.225(4) reads as follows:

"Consent," as used in this section, means words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to have sexual intercourse or sexual contact. Consent is not an issue in alleged violations of subs. (2)(c), (d) and (g). The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of § 972.11(2):

(b) A person suffering from a mental illness or defect which impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
(c) A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The definition of "without consent" used in the instruction is designed for the usual case where no special circumstances recognized by the statute as affecting consent are present. If the evidence raises an issue about the victim's being "competent to give informed consent," being unconscious, or being mentally ill, see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for these special circumstances.

The instruction on "without consent" rephrases the statutory definition in the interest of clarifying it for the jury. First, it states the element in the active voice by requiring that the victim did not consent. Second, the Committee concluded that it was more clear to refer to consent as a freely given agreement which may be shown by words or actions rather than to reiterate the statute which refers to consent as "words or overt actions indicating a freely given agreement." No change in meaning is intended. It is more direct to speak of consent as an agreement, evidence of which may be provided by words or actions of the victim, along with the other facts concerning the incident.

If the jury finds that the victim did not in fact consent, it apparently is no defense that the defendant believed there was consent, even if the defendant's belief is reasonable. This is the case because Wis. Stat. § 940.225 uses none of the "intent words" which indicate that the defendant's knowledge of no consent is an element of the crime, see Wis. Stat. § 939.23.

7. See State v. Lederer, 99 Wis.2d 430, 299 N.W.2d 457 (Ct. App. 1980); State v. Clark, 89 Wis.2d 804, 275 N.W.2d 715 (1979).

1220 BATTERY — § 940.19(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery, as defined in § 940.19(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause bodily harm to that person or another without the consent of the person so harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[1]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

   "Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[4]

3. The defendant caused bodily harm without the consent[5] of (name of victim) .

4. The defendant knew that (name of victim) did not consent.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of battery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1220 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1979, 1980, 1986, 1992, 1994, and 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2014 and involved a nonsubstantive correction in the text.

This instruction is for "simple battery," as defined in § 940.19(1). For an instruction integrating the privilege of self-defense with simple battery, see Wis JI-Criminal 1220A.

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" is a lesser included offense. "Or equally serious" was added by 1993 Wisconsin Act 441, effective date: May 10, 1994. This change clarified the confusion resulting from the drafting of the battery statutes in terms that did not satisfy the strict "comparison of the statutory elements" test that the Wisconsin Supreme Court has adopted for lesser included offenses. See State v. Richards, 123 Wis.2d 1, 365 N.W.2d 7 (1985), where the court held that simple battery under § 940.19(1) and "intermediate battery" under § 940.19(1m) are not lesser included offenses of aggravated battery.

The amendment to § 939.66 affects only the legal possibility of submitting the lesser offense; the evidentiary standard for submitting the lesser crime must also be satisfied. See SM-6, Jury Instructions on Lesser Included Offenses.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1220A BATTERY: SELF-DEFENSE IN ISSUE — § 940.19(1); § 939.48

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery, as defined in § 940.19(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause bodily harm to that person or another without the consent of the person so harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[1]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

   "Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[4]

3. The defendant caused bodily harm without the consent[5] of (name of victim).

4. The defendant knew that (name of victim) did not consent.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[6]

Self-Defense

Self-defense is an issue in this case. The law of self-defense allows the defendant to threaten or intentionally use force against another only if:[7]

- the defendant believed that there was an actual or imminent unlawful interference with the defendant's person; and
- the defendant believed that the amount of force the defendant used or threatened to use was necessary to prevent or terminate the interference; and
- the defendant's beliefs were reasonable.

Determining Whether Beliefs Were Reasonable

A belief may be reasonable even though mistaken.[8] In determining whether the defendant's beliefs were reasonable, the standard is what a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have believed in the defendant's position under the circumstances that existed at the time of the alleged offense.[9] The reasonableness of the defendant's beliefs must be determined from the standpoint of the defendant at the time of the defendant's acts and not from the viewpoint of the jury now.

State's Burden of Proof

The State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not act lawfully in self-defense.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of battery have been proved and that the defendant did not act lawfully in self-defense, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1220A was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1994 and 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2014 and involved a nonsubstantive correction in the text.

This instruction combines the uniform instruction for simple battery (Wis JI-Criminal 1220) with the instruction on the privilege of self-defense (Wis JI-Criminal 800). The Committee concluded that integrating the elements and the privilege provides a clearer statement of all the facts necessary to constitute guilt in a case where self-defense is an issue. This kind of approach was suggested in State v. Staples, 99 Wis.2d 364, 299 N.W.2d 270 (Ct. App. 1980).

1. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

7. The instruction on self-defense is adapted from Wis JI-Criminal 800.

8. This treatment of "reasonably believes" is intended to be consistent with the definition provided in § 939.22(32).

9. The phrase "in the defendant's position under the circumstances that existed at the time of the alleged offense" is intended to allow consideration of a broad range of circumstances that relate to the defendant's situation. For example, with children (assuming they are old enough to be criminally charged), the standard relates to a reasonable person of like age, intelligence, and experience. Maichle v. Jonovic, 69 Wis.2d 622, 627-28, 230 N.W.2d 789 (1975).

1221 ABUSE OF CHILDREN

1221A ABUSE OF CHILDREN — EXPOSING A CHILD TO CRUEL MALTREATMENT — § 940.201

[INSTRUCTIONS WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1221 was originally published in 1974 and was revised in 1978, 1981, and 1986.

Wis JI-Criminal 1221A was originally published in 1987.

Both instructions were withdrawn in 1989 because the statute with which they deal was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. The offense formerly known as child abuse is replaced by §§ 948.03, Physical Abuse Of A Child (see Wis JI-Criminal 2108 through 2113) and 948.04, Causing Mental Harm To A Child (see Wis JI-Criminal 2116).

1221C FAILURE TO REPORT CHILD ABUSE — § 48.981(2), (3), and (6)

[INSTRUCTION RENUMBERED – SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2119]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1221C was approved by the Committee in August 1987. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 2119 in June 1992.

This instruction dealt with violations of § 48.981, which requires reporting of child abuse by designated persons. It was originally numbered "1221C" to follow the instruction for the crime of child abuse, then defined in § 940.201. Child abuse offenses are now defined in § § 948.03 and 948.04 and are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 2108 through 2116. Thus, former Wis JI-Criminal 1221C was renumbered to Wis JI-Criminal 2119 to follow the instructions for the child abuse crimes.

1222 SUBSTANTIAL BATTERY WITH INTENT TO CAUSE BODILY HARM — § 940.19(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Substantial battery, as defined in § 940.19(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes substantial bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause bodily harm to that person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused substantial bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the substantial bodily harm.[1]

   "Substantial bodily harm" means bodily injury that causes [a laceration that requires (stitches) (staples) (a tissue adhesive)] [any fracture of a bone] [a broken nose] [a burn] [a petechia] [a temporary loss of consciousness, sight, or hearing] [a concussion] [a loss or fracture of a tooth].[2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

"Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[5]

The intent to cause bodily harm must exist at the time of the act causing substantial bodily harm.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1222 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2000 and 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2017; it updated the definition of "substantial bodily harm" and added to footnote 2.

Section 940.19(2) was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 441 (effective date: May 10, 1994). The offense requires the causing of substantial bodily harm with intent to cause bodily harm. The offense is a Class E felony. Note that this offense does not contain a "without consent" element as does "simple battery" under § 940.19(1).

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1222A for an instruction integrating the privilege of self-defense with the elements of this offense.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. This is the definition of "substantial bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(38). It was revised by 2003 Wisconsin Act 223 [effective date: April 27, 2004] to include reference to a laceration requiring "staples or a tissue adhesive" and "a broken nose." Note that the definition provides only a list of harms that constitute "substantial bodily harm." Compare this with the definitions of "bodily harm" [' 939.22(4)] and "great bodily harm" [' 939.22(14)] which contain a general category in addition to a list of specific harms: in § 939.22(4) – "any impairment of physical condition," in § 939.22(14) – "other serious bodily injury."

2007 Wisconsin Act 127 [effective date: April 4, 2008] amended the definition of "substantial bodily harm" to include "a petechia" and created sec. 939.22(23) defining the term as ". . . a minute colored spot that appears on the skin, eyes, eyelid, or mucous membrane of a person as a result of a localized hemorrhage or rupture to a blood vessel or capillary."

In a decision addressing "great bodily harm," the Wisconsin Court of Appeals concluded: "Just because all fractures meet the definition of substantial bodily harm, that does not imply that a particular fracture . . . cannot be serious enough to qualify as an "other serious bodily injury for purposes of being great bodily harm." State v. Davis, 2016 WI App 73, 371 Wis.2d 737, 885 N.W.2d 807, ¶21.

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

6. The elements of this offense are the causing of substantial bodily harm by an act done with intent to cause bodily harm. Therefore, it differs from simple battery primarily with respect to the degree of harm caused. The Committee concluded that this instruction makes the distinction clear but also that it would be appropriate to emphasize that distinction to the jury in a separate paragraph (where, for example, battery is submitted as a lesser included offense).

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1224 AGGRAVATED BATTERY WITH INTENT TO CAUSE BODILY HARM — § 940.19(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Aggravated battery, as defined in § 940.19(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes great bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause bodily harm to that person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the great bodily harm.[1]

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[2] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

"Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[5]

The intent to cause bodily harm must exist at the time of act causing great bodily harm.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1224 was originally published in 1994. The revision approved by the Committee in June 2000 involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the comment. This revision corrected an inadvertent error in the first element.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1224A for an instruction integrating the privilege of self-defense with the elements of this offense.

This offense was originally defined by § 940.19(1m), which was created by Chapter 111, Laws of 1979. The offense requires the causing of great bodily harm with intent to cause bodily harm and was referred to as "intermediate battery" during the legislative process. (See the Analysis by the Legislative Reference Bureau to 1979 Assembly Bill 169.) 1993 Wisconsin Act 441 renumbered the statute to § 940.19(4) and increased the penalty to a Class D felony. It also eliminated the requirement that the harm be caused "without consent." (Effective date: May 10, 1994.)

1993 Wisconsin Act 441 also amended subsection (2m) of § 939.66 to provide that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" is a lesser included offense. (Emphasis added to highlight the 1994 change.) Section 939.66 is intended to resolve the difficulties resulting from the drafting of the battery statutes in terms that did not satisfy the strict "comparison of the elements" test that the Wisconsin Supreme Court has adopted for lesser included offenses. See State v. Richards, 123 Wis.2d 1, 365 N.W.2d 7 (1985), where the court held that simple battery under § 940.19(1) and "intermediate battery" under § 940.19(1m) [now § 940.19(4)] were not lesser included offenses of aggravated battery.

Section 939.66(2m) affects only the legal possibility of submitting the lesser offense; the evidentiary standard for submitting the lesser crime must also be satisfied. See SM-6, Jury Instructions on Lesser Included Offense.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. The definition was changed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 to substitute "substantial risk" for "high probability" in the phrase "substantial risk of death." See Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B [formerly 923.1 and 923.2].

6. The elements of this offense are the causing of great bodily harm by an act done with intent to cause bodily harm. Therefore, it differs from simple battery primarily with respect to the degree of harm caused. The Committee concluded that this instruction makes the distinction clear but also that it would be appropriate to emphasize that distinction to the jury in a separate paragraph (where, for example, battery is submitted as a lesser included offense).

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

1224A AGGRAVATED BATTERY WITH INTENT TO CAUSE BODILY HARM: SELF-DEFENSE IN ISSUE — §§ 940.19(4); 939.48

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Aggravated battery, as defined in § 940.19(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes great bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause bodily harm to that person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

[Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.][2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

"Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[5]

The intent to cause bodily harm must exist at the time of act causing great bodily harm.[6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[7]

Self-Defense

Self-defense is an issue in this case. The law of self-defense allows the defendant to threaten or intentionally use force against another only if:[8]

- the defendant believed that there was an actual or imminent unlawful interference with the defendant's person; and
- the defendant believed that the amount of force the defendant used or threatened to use was necessary to prevent or terminate the interference; and
- the defendant's beliefs were reasonable.

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE FORCE USED WAS INTENDED OR LIKELY TO CAUSE DEATH OR GREAT BODILY HARM.]

[The defendant may intentionally use force which is intended or likely to cause death or great bodily harm only if the defendant reasonably believed that the force used was necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm to (himself) (herself).][9]

Determining Whether Beliefs Were Reasonable

A belief may be reasonable even though mistaken.[10] In determining whether the defendant's beliefs were reasonable, the standard is what a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have believed in the defendant's position under the circumstances that existed at the time of the alleged offense.[11] The reasonableness of the defendant's beliefs must be determined from the standpoint of the defendant at the time of the defendant's acts and not from the viewpoint of the jury now.

[IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT PROVOKED THE ATTACK, ADD APPROPRIATE INSTRUCTION HERE – SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 815.]

State's Burden of Proof

The State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not act lawfully in self-defense.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved and that the defendant did not act lawfully in self-defense, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1224A was approved by the Committee in June 2000.

This instruction combines the uniform instruction for aggravated battery with intent to cause bodily harm (Wis JI-Criminal 1224) with the instruction on the privilege of self-defense (Wis JI-Criminal 800). The Committee concluded that integrating the elements and the privilege provides a clearer statement of all the facts necessary to constitute guilt in a case where self-defense is an issue. This kind of approach was suggested in State v. Staples, 99 Wis.2d 364, 299 N.W.2d 270 (Ct. App. 1980).

1. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

2. The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. The definition was changed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 to substitute "substantial risk" for "high probability" in the phrase "substantial risk of death." See Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B [formerly 923.1 and 923.2].

6. The elements of this offense are the causing of great bodily harm by an act done with intent to cause bodily harm. Therefore, it differs from simple battery primarily with respect to the degree of harm caused. The Committee concluded that this instruction makes the distinction clear but also that it would be appropriate to emphasize that distinction to the jury in a separate paragraph (where, for example, battery is submitted as a lesser included offense). [After the 1994 change in the statute, this offense also differs from simple battery in that this offense no longer requires that the harm be caused "without consent" while simple battery retains a "without consent" element.]

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

8. The instruction on self-defense is adapted from Wis JI-Criminal 800.

9. See § 939.48(1).

10. This treatment of "reasonably believes" is intended to be consistent with the definition provided in § 939.22(32).

11. The phrase "in the defendant's position under the circumstances that existed at the time of the alleged offense" is intended to allow consideration of a broad range of circumstances that relate to the defendant's situation. For example, with children (assuming they are old enough to be criminally charged), the standard relates to a reasonable person of like age, intelligence, and experience. Maichle v. Jonovic, 69 Wis.2d 622, 627-28, 230 N.W.2d 789 (1975).

1225 AGGRAVATED BATTERY WITH INTENT TO CAUSE GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.19(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Aggravated battery, as defined in § 940.19(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes great bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause great bodily harm to that person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the great bodily harm.[1]

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[2] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

2. The defendant intended to cause great bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

"Intent to cause great bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause great bodily harm to another human being.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1225 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003. It reflects changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1225A for an instruction integrating the privilege of self-defense with the elements of this offense.

Subsection (5) of § 940.19 was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 (effective date: February 1, 2003) to delete intent to cause "substantial bodily harm." The subsection now prohibits causing great bodily harm with intent to cause great bodily harm.

1993 Wisconsin Act 441 amended subsection (2m) of § 939.66 to provide that a "crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" is a lesser included offense. (Emphasis added to highlight the 1994 change.) As a Class E felony, aggravated battery is the most serious type of battery. Thus, all other types of battery are lesser included offenses.

Subsection 939.66(2m) is intended to resolve the difficulties resulting from the drafting of the battery statutes in terms that did not satisfy the strict "comparison of the elements" test that the Wisconsin Supreme Court has adopted for lesser included offenses. See State v. Richards, 123 Wis.2d 1, 365 N.W.2d 7 (1985), where the court held that simple battery under § 940.19(1) and "intermediate battery" under § 940.19(1m) were not lesser included offenses of aggravated battery.

Subsection 939.66(2m) affects only the legal possibility of submitting the lesser offense; the evidentiary standard for submitting the lesser crime must also be satisfied. See SM-6, Jury Instructions on Lesser Included Offenses.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. 1225A AGGRAVATED BATTERY WITH INTENT TO CAUSE GREAT BODILY HARM: SELF-DEFENSE IN ISSUE — § § 940.19(5); 939.48

Aggravated battery, as defined in § 940.19(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes great bodily harm to another by an act done with the intent to cause great bodily harm to that person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[2] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

"Intent to cause great bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause great bodily harm to another human being.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[5]

Self-Defense

Self-defense is an issue in this case. The law of self-defense allows the defendant to threaten or intentionally use force against another only if:[6]

- the defendant believed that there was an actual or imminent unlawful interference with the defendant's person; and
- the defendant believed that the amount of force the defendant used or threatened to use was necessary to prevent or terminate the interference; and
- the defendant's beliefs were reasonable.

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE FORCE USED WAS INTENDED OR LIKELY TO CAUSE DEATH OR GREAT BODILY HARM.]

[The defendant may intentionally use force which is intended or likely to cause death or great bodily harm only if the defendant reasonably believed that the force used was necessary to prevent imminent death or great bodily harm to (himself) (herself).][7]

Determining Whether Beliefs Were Reasonable

A belief may be reasonable even though mistaken.[8] In determining whether the defendant's beliefs were reasonable, the standard is what a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have believed in the defendant's position under the circumstances that existed at the time of the alleged offense.[9] The reasonableness of the defendant's beliefs must be determined from the standpoint of the defendant at the time of the defendant's acts and not from the viewpoint of the jury now.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1226 BATTERY WITH SUBSTANTIAL RISK OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.19(6)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery, as defined in § 940.19(6) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to another by conduct which creates a substantial risk of great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[1]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [another person].[3]

   "Intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another human being.[4]

3. The defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm.[5]

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[6] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

[IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD A PHYSICAL DISABILITY, ADD THE FOLLOWING.][7]

[If you find that (name of victim) had a physical disability at the time of the offense, and that the disability was discernible by an ordinary person viewing the victim, or was actually known by the defendant,[8] you may find from that fact alone that the defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm. But you are not required to do so, and you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence that the defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm.][9]

4. The defendant knew that (his) (her) conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm.[10]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and

knowledge.[11]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1226 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2001 and 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2021; it made changes pursuant to 2021 Wisconsin Act 76.

This offense was originally defined in § 940.19(3), created by Chapter 113, Laws of 1979. It was renumbered § 940.19(6) by 1993 Wisconsin Act 441 and the penalty increased to a Class D felony. The law was originally drafted as a straightforward "Battery To Older Persons" provision, with an increased penalty for battery committed against persons 60 years of age or older (see 1979 Assembly Bill 8). The bill was amended to apply to all batteries involving a "high probability of great bodily harm," with the facts that the victim was over age 62 or suffering from physical disability creating "a rebuttable presumption of conduct creating a high probability of great bodily harm." The 1994 revision changed "high probability" to "substantial risk." § 940.19(6), the provision that presumed that a defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm when the victim was 62 years of age or older, was repealed by 2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021]. 2021 Act 76 also created various provisions related to crimes and other proceedings involving individuals who are 60 years of age or older. For the new crime of physical abuse to an elder person, see Wis JI-Criminal 1249A through 1249F.

Instructing the jury when the "presumption" is in the case is discussed at notes 7 and 9, below.

The 1994 revision corrected what was probably an inadvertent technical error in the former statute. The introductory section of § 940.19(3), 1991 92 Wis. Stats., reads as follows (emphasis added):

Whoever intentionally causes bodily harm to another by conduct which creates a high probability of great bodily harm is guilty of a Class E felony. A rebuttable presumption of conduct creating a substantial risk of great bodily harm arises . . .

1993 Wisconsin Act 441 preserved the inconsistency when it recreated former sub. (3) as sub. (b), but "high probability" was changed to "substantial risk" by a "revisor's bill," 1994 Wisconsin Act 483.

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. In most cases, the defendant will be charged with intending to harm the actual victim and the name of the victim should be used in instructing the jury. However, the defendant is also guilty of battery if he intends to harm one person but actually harms another. This is the common law doctrine of transferred intent which has been described as follows in connection with first degree murder:

> It is immaterial that the human being killed is not the one the actor intended to kill. If X shoots at and kills a person who he thinks is Y but who is actually Z, X is as guilty as if he had not been mistaken about the identity of the person killed. The same is true where X shoots at Y intending to kill him, but he misses Y and kills Z. In both of these cases, X has caused "the death of another human being by an act done with intent to kill that person or another." In other words, the section incorporates the common law doctrine of "transferred intent."1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 58.

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. For offenses committed before August 8, 2021, include the following language after the definition of "great bodily harm" in element 3.

> [IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM WAS 62 YEARS OF AGE OR OLDER, ADD THE FOLLOWING.]
> [If you find that (name of victim) was age 62 or older at the time of the offense, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm, but you are not required to do so, and you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence that the defendant's conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm.]

This paragraph on the "rebuttable presumption" established by § 940.19(3) follows the rule set out in § 903.03(3) for instructing the jury on presumptions in criminal cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for a discussion of the Committee's approach to instructing on "presumptions" and "prima facie" cases. See also, footnote 7, regarding the submission of presumptions to the jury.

6. The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. The definition was changed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 to substitute "substantial risk" for "high probability" in the phrase "substantial risk of death." See Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

7. See § 903.03(2) regarding the submission of presumptions to the jury. It provides in part:

> When the presumed fact establishes guilt or is an element of the offense or negates a defense, the judge may submit the question of guilt or the existence of the presumed fact to the jury, if, but only if, a reasonable juror on the evidence as a whole, including the evidence of the basic facts, could find guilt or the presumed fact beyond a reasonable doubt.

Therefore, there must be sufficient evidence of the "presumed fact" – substantial risk of great bodily harm – to enable a reasonable juror to be convinced of its existence beyond a reasonable doubt, before an instruction on the "presumption" flowing from the "basic facts" of disability may be submitted.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed the "physical disability" presumption in State v. Crowley, 143 Wis.2d 324, 422 N.W.2d 847 (1988). The court dealt with two issues: the general validity of the presumption relating a physical disability to the likelihood of great bodily harm; and the validity of associating physical disability with the condition of the victim in the case before the court.

As to the first issue, the court applied the rule of Ulster County Court v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140 (1979), described as holding that "a presumption may be impermissible if there is no reasonable nexus or relationship between the evidentiary facts and the fact to be presumed." 143 Wis.2d 324, 339. The court concluded that "the relationship, the nexus, between physical disability and the likelihood that violence against one physically disabled will lead to great bodily harm, is unassailable. . . ." 143 Wis.2d 324, 339.

The court also concluded that the victim in the Crowley case, who was 48 years old, weighed 96 lbs., was 4' 9" in height, and was legally blind, was "physically disabled" within the meaning of the statute. The court concluded that disability need not be found as a medical fact but only as a matter discernibly evident to a lay person. Further, the court held that it is not necessary that the victim qualify as a "handicapped person" as that term is used in the Fair Employment laws.

8. The 1994 revision of the statute added the phrase, "or that is actually known by the actor," to sub. (6)(b).

9. This paragraph on the "rebuttable presumption" established by § 940.19(3) follows the rule set out in § 903.03(3) for instructing the jury on presumptions in criminal cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for a discussion of the Committee's approach to instructing on "presumptions" and "prima facie" cases.

10. Subsection 940.19(6) applies to those who "intentionally cause bodily harm by conduct which creates a substantial risk of great bodily harm." Subsection 939.23(3) provides that when "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires that the actor "have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." The Committee concluded that this requires that the defendant charged under § 940.19(6) must have known that his conduct created a substantial risk of great bodily harm. The Committee further concluded that it need not be established that the defendant knew that the victim was over the age of 62 or suffering from a physical disability, because those two factors are essentially treated only as evidence of the fourth element of the crime: that the defendant's conduct has created a substantial risk of great bodily harm. See notes 6 through

11. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1227 BATTERY TO AN UNBORN CHILD — § 940.195(1), (2), (4), (5)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery to an unborn child, as defined in § 940.195 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes [(bodily harm) (substantial bodily harm) (great bodily harm)][2] to an unborn child by an act done with the intent to cause [(bodily harm) (or) (great bodily harm)][3] [(to that unborn child) (or) (to the woman who is pregnant with that unborn child) (or) (to another)].[4]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused (bodily harm) (substantial bodily harm) (great bodily harm) to an unborn child.

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the (bodily harm) (substantial bodily harm) (great bodily harm).[5]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][6]

"Substantial bodily harm" means bodily injury that causes [a laceration that requires (stitches) (staples) (a tissue adhesive)] [any fracture of a bone] [a broken nose] [a burn] [a petechia] [a temporary loss of consciousness, sight, or hearing] [a concussion] [a loss or fracture of a tooth].[7]

["Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[8] (Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.)]

"Unborn child" means any individual of the human species from fertilization until birth that is gestating inside a woman.[9]

2. The defendant intended to cause [(bodily harm) (or) (great bodily harm)] [(to the unborn child) (or) (to the woman who was pregnant with the unborn child) (or) (to another)].

"Intent to cause [(bodily harm) (or) (great bodily harm)]" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause [(bodily harm) (or) (great bodily harm)] [(to an unborn child) (or) (to the woman who was pregnant with the unborn child) (or) (to another human being)] or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause [(bodily harm) (or) (great bodily harm)] [(to an unborn child) (or) (to the woman who was pregnant with the unborn child) (or) (to another human being)].

[DEFINE THE INTENDED HARM IF IT IS DIFFERENT FROM THE HARM CAUSED][10]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1227 was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2017; it updated the definition of "substantial bodily harm."

This instruction is drafted to provide a model for the offenses defined in § 940.195, which was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 295 [effective date: July 1, 1998]. Two changes were made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109: sub. (3) – causing substantial bodily harm to an unborn child with intent to cause substantial bodily harm – was repealed; sub. (5) was amended to delete the reference to intent to cause "substantial bodily harm." The effective date of those changes was February 1, 2003.

As amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, there are five subsections of § 940.195, each roughly the same as the subsections of § 940.19, the general battery statute. Act 109 repealed former subsection (3), which applied to causing substantial bodily harm with intent to cause substantial bodily harm. The approach used in this instruction ought to work for all violations except for violations under sub. (6): intentionally causing bodily harm by conduct that creates a substantial risk of great bodily harm. See the discussion in footnote 1, suggesting that Wis JI-Criminal 1226 be used as a model for violations of sub. (6).

Section 939.75, also created by Act 295, defines "unborn child" and sets forth several exceptions to the applicability of the revised statutes. Subsection (2)(b) recognizes the following exceptions:

- induced abortions [subd. 1.]
- acts committed in accordance with usual and customary standards of medical practice during diagnostic testing or therapeutic treatment by a licensed physician [sub. 2.]
- an act by a health care provider that is in accordance with a pregnant woman's power of attorney for health care, etc. [subd. 2h.]
- an act by a woman who is pregnant with an unborn child [subd. 3.]

- the lawful prescription, dispensation or administration, and the use by any a woman of, any medicine, drug or device that is used as a method of birth control or is intended to prevent pregnancy. [subd. 4]

Subsection (3) provides that if any of these exceptions are "placed in issue by the trial evidence, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the facts constituting the exception do not exist . . ." Thus, these exceptions are to be handled in the same manner as, for example, the mitigating circumstance of adequate provocation under the general homicide law: once supported by some evidence, the absence of the exception becomes a fact the state must prove. The Committee decided not to draft instructions for the absence of these exceptions because it appeared to the Committee that their applicability would most likely be determined before charges were filed or at least before trial.

1. As amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, there are five subsections of § 940.195, each roughly the same as the subsections of § 940.19, the general battery statute. Act 109 repealed former subsection (3) which applied to causing substantial bodily harm with intent to cause substantial bodily harm.

The offenses differ from one another depending on three variables: 1) the type of harm caused – whether it was bodily harm, substantial bodily harm, or great bodily harm; 2) the type of harm intended to be caused – whether it was bodily harm or great bodily harm; and, 3) the entity intended to be harmed – the unborn child, the woman who is pregnant with the unborn child, or another. This instruction is set up with these alternatives in brackets throughout, allowing the user to select the alternatives that apply to the offense charged. This approach ought to work for all violations except for violations under sub. (6): intentionally causing bodily harm by conduct that creates a substantial risk of great bodily harm. For that offense, Wis JI-Criminal 1226 can be used as a model and should be modified to refer to causing harm to an unborn child as illustrated by the first element of this instruction.

2. Select the alternative within the bracket that applies. Subs. (1) and (6) of § 940.195 require causing bodily harm; sub. (2) requires causing substantial bodily harm; subs. (4) and (5) require causing great bodily harm.

3. Select the alternative within the bracket that applies. Subs. (1), (2), and (4) of § 940.195 require intent to cause bodily harm; sub. (5) requires intent to cause great bodily harm. The alternatives do not address the offense defined in sub. (6): intentionally causing bodily harm by conduct that creates a substantial risk of great bodily harm. For that offense, Wis JI-Criminal 1226 can be used as a model, modified to refer to causing harm to an unborn child as illustrated by the first element of this instruction.

4. Select the alternative within the bracket that applies. This set of options includes the traditional one of defining the crime as involving intent to harm the victim (here, the unborn child), "or another" (sometimes termed "transferred intent"), and the addition of intent to harm the woman who is pregnant with the unborn child. More than one alternative may be selected if supported by the evidence.

5. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

6. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

7. This is the definition of "substantial bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(36). Also see footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1222.

8. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of "great bodily harm."

9. This is the definition of "unborn child" provided in § 939.75(1).

10. As amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, the statute defines two offenses where the harm caused is different from the harm intended: sub. (2) covers causing substantial bodily harm with intent to cause bodily harm; sub. (4) covers causing great bodily harm with intent to cause bodily harm. For those cases, "bodily harm" should be separately defined here, as part of the "intent to cause bodily harm" element. If the harm caused and harm intended match, the definition of the term in the first element is sufficient.

1228 BATTERY BY PRISONER — § 940.20(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery by prisoner, as defined in § 940.20(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility] and who intentionally causes bodily harm or a soft tissue injury to (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (another inmate) of the (prison) (detention facility) without the consent of that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a prisoner confined to a [state prison] [(state) (county) (municipal) detention facility].

   This requires that the defendant was confined to a (prison) (detention facility) as a result of a violation of law.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally caused (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) to (name of victim) .

"Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury).[3]

"Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) to another human being.[4]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[5]]

["Soft tissue injury" means an injury that requires medical attention to a tissue that connects, supports, or surrounds other structures and organs of the body and includes tendons, ligaments, fascia, skin, fibrous tissues, fat, synovial membranes, muscles, nerves, and blood vessels.[6]]

3. (Name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (another inmate) of (name of institution).

4. The defendant caused (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury) without the consent of (name of victim).[7]

5. The defendant knew (name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (a visitor) (another inmate) of (name of institution) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury).[8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1228 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2011; it revised the instruction to reflect changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 74.

2011 Wisconsin Act 74 amended § 940.20(1) to add reference to causing "a soft tissue injury" as defined in § 946.41(2)(c). See footnote 6, below. The effective date of Act 74 is December 2, 2011.

1. The defendant's status as a "prisoner" should rarely be in question, but the Committee concluded there should be some definition of the term in the instruction. The definition in the instruction was adapted from that found in Wis. Stat. § 46.011 and from the decision in State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 83 N.W.2d 721 (1957), where the court made the following observations:

> So far as we know, the word "prisoner" has not been defined by this court. Black's Law Dictionary (4th ed.), p. 1358, defines the word as follows:
> "One who is deprived of his liberty; one who is against his will kept in confinement or custody."
> Webster's New International Dictionary (2d ed.) gives the following definition:
> "A person under arrest, in custody or in prison; one involuntarily restrained; a captive; as a prisoner of justice, or war or at the bar; to take one prisoner."

State v. Brill, 1 Wis.2d 288, 291.

The Brill definition has been cited with approval in several cases involving § 940.20(1). In C.D.M. v. State, 125 Wis.2d 170, 370 N.W.2d 287 (Ct. App. 1985), the court held that a juvenile confined as a delinquent at the Lincoln Hills School was a "prisoner" under § 940.20(1) because he had violated a criminal law and was confined for a correctional objective. 125 Wis.2d 170, 173.

The Committee concluded that "prisoner" includes all persons who are confined to one of the identified institutions as a result of a violation of the law. "Prisoner" is also defined in § 46.011(2) (for purposes of Chapter 46 to 51, 55, and 58) and in § 301.01(2) (for purposes of Chapters 301 to 304). But the Committee concluded that these definitions are not directly applicable here because they are concerned primarily with defining the authority of state agencies.

A person committed to a state mental health facility (in this case, the Mendota Mental Health Institute) after being found not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect, is a "prisoner" for purposes of § 940.20(1), Battery by prisoners. State v. Skampfer, 176 Wis.2d 304, 500 N.W.2d 369 (Ct. App. 1993). The important fact is that the person's liberty was restrained premised on a finding that the person had violated the criminal law.

A probationer who violates a condition of probation and as a result is taken into custody is a prisoner "confined as a result of a violation of the law" as provided in C.D.M., supra, and this instruction. State v. Fitzgerald, 2000 WI App 55, ¶12, 233 Wis.2d 584, 608 N.W.2d 391 [also involving a charge under § 940.20(1).]

2. The institution's status as one of the designated facilities should not be a contested issue in most cases, and the Committee concluded that it is appropriate for the trial court to so instruct the jury.

The question of what institutions are covered by the statute is arguably difficult only with regard to "state detention facilities." "County detention facility" most likely refers to a county jail (and possibly to the House of Correction in Milwaukee County); "municipal detention facility" most likely refers to city jails. But it is not clear what institutions are included in the term "state detention facility." The Committee concluded that the statute may be applied to persons confined in mental health institutes provided their confinement is a result of criminal charges. This interpretation would include those committed for determination of competency to stand trial, those committed as not competent to stand trial, and those committed as not guilty by reason of mental disease or defect. This conclusion is consistent with the decision in State v. Skampfer, see note 1, supra.

Section 302.01 identifies the institutions which are "state prisons." Also see § 302.02 which defines the "precincts" of the state prisons, that is, those locations that are considered part of the prisons for legal purposes.

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of (bodily harm) (a soft tissue injury). The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

4. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

6. 2011 Wisconsin Act 74 amended § 940.20(1) to add as an alternative harm the causing of "a soft tissue injury" as defined in § 946.41(2)(c). The definition in the instruction is the one provided in § 946.41(2)(c).

7. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

8. The knowledge element is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

1228A BATTERY BY A PERSON COMMITTED UNDER § 980.04 or § 980.065 — § 940.20(1g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(1g) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who is placed in facility under (§ 980.04) (§ 980.065) and who intentionally causes bodily harm to an officer, employee, agent, visitor, or other resident of the facility without (his) (her) consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was placed in a facility under (§ 980.04) (§ 980.065).[1]

2. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[3]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition[4].

3. (Name of victim) was (an officer) (an employee) (an agent) (a visitor) (a resident) of the facility.

4. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[5] of (name of victim).

5. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1228A was approved by the Committee in June 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in October; it reflects changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 13.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.20(1g) which applies to batteries committed by one committed as a "sexually violent person" under Chapter 980. The statute was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 434 [effective date: August 1, 2006].

2021 Wisconsin Act 13 [effective date: March 28, 2021] amended § 940.20 (1g) to include persons who are not yet formally committed pursuant to § 980.065 and § 980.06 but who are detained in a facility while awaiting a Chapter 980 trial.

1. The offense definition refers to "Any person who is placed in a facility under s. 980.04 or 980.065." Section 980.04 designates the place of placement for a person who has had a finding of probable cause against them that they are "eligible for commitment under s. 980.05 (5)," but who has yet to be adjudicated under § 980.06. A detention order under § 980.04 "remains in effect until the petition is dismissed after a hearing under sub. (3) or after a trial under s. 980.05 (5) or until the effective date of a commitment order under s. 980.06, whichever is applicable." Section 980.065 designates the place of placement for "a person committed under s. 980.06." A commitment under § 980.06 is the final commitment of a person who has been found to be a sexually violent person.

2. The institution's status as one of the designated facilities should not be a contested issue in most cases, and the Committee concluded that it is appropriate for the trial court to so instruct the jury.

The question of what institutions are covered by the statute is arguably difficult only with regard to "state detention facilities." "County detention facility" most likely refers to a county jail (and possibly to the House of Correction in Milwaukee County); "municipal detention facility" most likely refers to city jails. But it is not clear what institutions are included in the term "state detention facility." The Committee concluded that the statute may be applied to persons placed in mental health institutes provided their confinement is a result of criminal charges.

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

4. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). Thus, the defendant must know that the victim did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.

1229 BATTERY BY A PERSON SUBJECT TO AN INJUNCTION — § 940.20(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who is subject to [a domestic abuse] [an harassment][1] injunction and who intentionally causes bodily harm to the petitioner who sought the injunction by an act done without the consent of that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) petitioned for [a domestic abuse] [an harassment] injunction against the defendant.
2. At the time of the alleged offense, the defendant was subject to the [domestic abuse] [harassment] injunction.
3. The defendant intentionally caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

4. (Name of victim) did not consent to the bodily harm.[4]

5. The defendant knew (name of victim) petitioned for the injunction and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[5]

Meaning of "Intentionally"

"Intentionally" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1229 was originally published in 1997 and revised in 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2015; it corrected a statutory cross reference in footnote 1 and revised the Comment.

Battery by a person subject to an injunction, as defined in § 940.20(1m), was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 343. [Effective date: June 4, 1996.] Subsection (a) of § 940.20(1m) addresses injunctions issued under § 813.12 - domestic abuse injunctions - and tribal court injunctions filed under § 806.247(3). Subsection (b) of § 940.20(1m) addresses injunctions issued under § 813.125 - harassment injunctions. The offense definitions in subs. (a) and (b) are otherwise the same and this instruction may be used for any of the violations.

1. While § 940.20(1m) refers to the injunction statutes by number, the Committee concluded that the instruction would be more easily understood if it used the terms "domestic abuse injunction," "harassment injunction," or "tribal injunction filed under § 806.247(3)" to describe the injunction.

Note that child abuse injunctions under § 813.122 and vulnerable adult injunctions under § 813.123 are not covered by § 940.20(1m).

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. Give additional instruction regarding the phrase "without consent" when the evidence warrants it. See § 939.22(48)(a)-(c).

5. The knowledge element is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

6. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1230 BATTERY TO A FIRE FIGHTER OR COMMISSION WARDEN — § 940.20(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a (fire fighter) (commission warden) where at the time of the act the defendant knows or has reason to know that the victim is a (fire fighter) (commission warden) acting in an official capacity and there is no consent by the victim.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[1]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. (Name of victim) was a (fire fighter)[3] (commission warden).[4]

3. (Name of victim) was acting in an official capacity.

   (Fire fighters) (Commission wardens) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[5] to perform.[6] [The duties of a (fire fighter) (commission warden) include: _____.][7]

4. The defendant knew or had reason to know that (name of victim) was a (fire fighter) (commission warden) acting in an official capacity.[8]

5. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[9] of (name of victim) .

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[10]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1230 was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1225 in 1974 and renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1230 in 1994. It was revised in 2005 and 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2015 to reflect changes made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78.

Section 940.20(2) was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015]. "Law enforcement officer" was deleted and moved to § 940.203 which, as amended, applies to battery or threat to a judge, prosecutor, or law enforcement officer. See Wis JI-Criminal 1240C and 1240D for offenses involving battery and threat to prosecutors or law enforcement officers.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. Section 940.20(2) provides that the definition of "fire fighter" in § 102.475(8)(b) applies:

> (b) "Fire fighter" means any person employed by the state or any political subdivision as a member or officer of a fire department or a member of a volunteer department, including the state fire marshal and deputies.

4. 2007 Wisconsin Act 27 [effective date: November 27, 2007] amended § 940.2(2) to include "commission warden" and created § 939.22(5) to define the term: "'Commission warden' means a conservation warden employed by the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission."

5. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

6. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

7. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

8. The "knew or had reason to know" requirement is taken directly from § 940.20(2). It is treated as a separate element rather than being combined with the sixth element where knowledge of lack of consent is addressed. This is because the "reason to know" standard differs from the actual knowledge that is required when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute. See § 939.23(3).

The instruction applies the "reason to know" standard to the victim's status as a law enforcement and to "acting in official capacity." The statute expressly applies "reason to know" only to status as a law enforcement officer. But the two requirements are so closely connected that the Committee concluded the same knowledge standard has to apply to each.

9. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

10. For further definition of "intentionally," including the alternative referring to being "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause the result," see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

1231 BATTERY OR THREAT TO A PROBATION, EXTENDED SUPERVISION AND PAROLE AGENT, COMMUNITY SUPERVISION AGENT, OR AN AFTERCARE AGENT — § 940.20(2m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(2m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent) where at the time of the (act) (threat) the defendant knows or has reason to know that the victim is (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent) (a family member of (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent)), the (act) (threat) is in response to an action by the agent acting in (his) (her) official capacity, and there is no consent by the person (harmed) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[1]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING BODILY HARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.][2]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][3]

2. (Name of victim) was ((a probation, extended supervision and parole agent)[4] (a community supervision agent)[5] (an aftercare agent)[6]) (a family member of (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent)).

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][7]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat), the defendant knew, or had reason to know, that (name of victim) was (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent) (a family member of (a probation, extended supervision and parole agent) (a community supervision agent) (an aftercare agent)).[8]

4. The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken by the agent acting in (his) (her) official capacity.

(Probation, extended supervision and parole agents) (community supervision agents) (aftercare agents) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[9] to perform.[10] [These duties include: _____.][11]

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm without the consent[12] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[13] This requires that the defendant intended to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[14]

Meaning of "Intentionally"

Intent to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm means that the defendant had the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[15]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1231 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 1996, 2005, 2008, 2019, and 2022. The 2022 revision amended the body of the instruction and the comment based on 2021 Wisconsin Act 187. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.20(2m) was created by 1989 Wisconsin Act 336 and originally applied to battery of probation and parole agents. It was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 77 to include battery to "aftercare agents." [Effective date: July 1, 1996]. "Extended supervision agents" were added by 1997 Wisconsin Act 283. [Effective date: June 24, 1998]. 2015 Wisconsin Act 55 added "community supervision agents" [with a delayed effective date of September 24, 2017]. § 940.20 (2m)(b) 2021 was amended by Wisconsin Act 187 to provide that it is a Class H felony to commit, or threaten to commit, battery against an agent or the family member of an agent. The Act also amended the definitions of "aftercare agent" and "community supervision agent" [Effective date: March 19, 2022].

1. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also, see Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

3. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

4. Section 940.20(2m)(a)2. provides that "'probation, extended supervision and parole agent' means any person authorized by the department of corrections to exercise control over a probationer, parolee, or person on extended supervision or authorized by a federally recognized American Indian tribe or band to exercise control over a probationer, parolee, or person on extended supervision or a comparable program that is authorized by the tribe or band."

5. "Community supervision agent" is defined as follows in § 940.20(2m)(a)1m.: ". . . any person authorized by the department of corrections to exercise control over a juvenile on community supervision or authorized by a federally recognized American Indian tribe or band to exercise control over a juvenile on community supervision or a comparable program that is authorized by the tribe or band."

6. "Aftercare agent" is defined as follows in § 940.20(2m)(a)1.: ". . . any person authorized by the department of corrections to exercise control over a juvenile on aftercare or authorized by a federally recognized American Indian tribe or band to exercise control over a juvenile on aftercare or a comparable program that is authorized by the tribe or band."

7. Section 940.20 (2m) (a) 1p. provides:

"Family member" means a spouse, child, stepchild, foster child, parent, sibling, or grandchild.

8. The "knew or had reason to know" requirement is taken directly from § 940.20(2m)(b)1. It is treated as a separate element rather than being combined with the sixth element, where knowledge of lack of consent is addressed. This is because the "reason to know" standard differs from the actual knowledge that is required when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute. See § 939.23(3).

The instruction applies the "reason to know" standard to the victim's status as a probation, extended supervision and parole agent, a community supervision agent, or an aftercare agent, or a member of the agent's family and the agent "acting in an official capacity." The statute expressly applies "reason to know" only to status as a probation, extended supervision and parole agent, a community supervision agent, or an aftercare agent, or a member of the agent's family. But the two requirements are so closely connected that the Committee concluded the same knowledge standard has to apply to each.

9. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

10. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

11. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

Wisconsin Administrative Code, Chapter DOC 328, Community Supervision Of Offenders, provides "rules, services, and programs for offenders who are under the supervision of the department." DOC 328.04(2) extensively describes the duties of agents who provide community supervision. All the agents specified in § 940.20(2m) must be "authorized by the department to exercise control" over specific categories of persons who are being supervised. See the definitions quoted in footnotes 3, 4, and 5 above. Thus, it appears that all would be subject to the standards and grants of authority in DOC 328.

12. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

13. Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.20(2m)(b), which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2m)(b)1., through 2. and 3. Sub. (2m)(b)1. has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2m)(b) proper and the other facts that follow.

14. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

15. See note 12, supra.

1232 BATTERY TO JUROR [JUROR HAS ASSENTED TO VERDICT] — § 940.20(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery to a juror, as defined in § 940.20(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a person without the consent of that person because the person assented to a (verdict) (indictment).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[1]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. The defendant intended to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).

   The phrase "intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[3]

3. The defendant caused bodily harm without the consent of (name of victim).

4. The defendant knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[4]

5. The defendant caused such bodily harm to (name of victim) because (name of victim) assented to a (verdict) (indictment).

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

The offense covered by this instruction was formerly covered by Wis JI-Criminal 1224 which was originally published in 1979 and revised in 1982 and 1992. It was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1232 in 1994 and revised in 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2004.

Section 940.20(3) was amended by 1997 Wisconsin Act 143 (effective date: May 5, 1998) to delete reference to "witnesses," limiting the coverage of the statute to offenses against grand and petit jurors. Offenses against witnesses are addressed by § 940.201, also created by Act 143. See Wis JI-Criminal 1238 and 1239.

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. The knowledge element is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

5. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee has concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional, statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1233 BATTERY TO WITNESS [WITNESS LIKELY TO BE CALLED TO TESTIFY]

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1233 was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1224A in 1979. It was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1233 in 1994. It was withdrawn by the Committee in August 1998 after § 940.20(3) was revised to delete reference to "witnesses." Battery or threat to witness is now covered by § 940.201; see Wis JI-Criminal 1238.

1234 BATTERY TO A PUBLIC OFFICER — § 940.20(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Battery to a public officer, as defined in § 940.20(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a public officer, without the consent of that person, in order to influence the action of the officer or as a result of any action taken within the officer's official capacity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a public officer at the time of the alleged offense.

   "Public officer" means any person appointed or elected according to law to discharge a public duty for the state or one of its subordinate governmental units.[1]

   (A _____ is a public officer.)[2]

2. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[3]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

3. The defendant intended to cause such bodily harm.

The phrase "intent to cause bodily harm" means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[5]

4. (Name of victim) did not consent to such bodily harm.

5. The defendant knew (name of victim) did not consent.[6]

6. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) (in order to influence the official action of (name of victim)) (as a result of action taken within (name of victim) 's official capacity).[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

The offense covered by this instruction was formerly covered by Wis JI-Criminal 1226 which was originally published in 1978 and revised in 1992. It was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1234 in 1994 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008; it involved minor revisions to footnotes.

The offense of battery to a public officer, as defined in § 940.20(4), was created by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977.

1. This definition of "public officer" is found in § 939.22(30).

2. Where a statute provides that a person holding a particular position is a public officer, the Committee believes the jury may be told of that fact. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that the victim did hold such a position.

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

6. The knowledge element is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'."

7. For definition of "official capacity," see Wis JI-Criminal 915.

1235 BATTERY TO A TECHNICAL COLLEGE DISTRICT OR SCHOOL DISTRICT OFFICER OR EMPLOYEE — § 940.20(5)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a school district officer or employee[1] where at the time of the act the defendant knows or has reason to know that the victim is a school district officer or employee acting in that capacity and there is no consent by the victim harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a school district (officer) (employee).[4]

3. (Name of victim) was acting in the capacity of a school district (officer) (employee).[5]

This means the (officer) (employee) was performing duties that (he) (she) was employed[6] to perform.[7]

4. The defendant knew, or had reason to know, that (name of victim) was a school district (officer) (employee) acting in the capacity of a school district (officer) (employee).[8]

5. (Name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.

6. The defendant acted intentionally.

This requires that the defendant intended to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[9]

Intent to cause bodily harm means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1235 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008; it revised the definition of "capacity."

Section 940.20(5) was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 54 (effective date: November 30, 1993).

1. The instruction is drafted for a case involving a "school district officer or employee." The statute also applies to offenses against "technical college district officers or employees." For that case, the instruction would have to be changed to refer to the appropriate type of victim.

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. Section 940.20(5)(a)1 provides that "school district" has the meaning given in § 115.01(3). That definition reads as follows:

> (3) School Districts. The school district is the territorial unit for school administration. School districts are classified as common, union high, unified and 1st class city school districts. A joint school district is one the territory of which is not wholly in one municipality.

Section 940.20(5)(a)2. Provides that "'technical college district' means a district established under ch. 38."

5. The appropriate alternative should be selected. The Committee concluded that "officer" refers to an appointed or elected position, such as school board member, while "employee" refers to anyone who is paid by the district for performing functions on behalf of the district. See § 939.22(30) for similar distinctions between the terms "public officer" and "public employee."

6. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged or involved in performing a duty or service. The statute applies to both officer and employees, the former being elected or appointed. See note 5, supra. If the use of "employed" is thought to be confusing if used to refer to "officers," "elected" or "appointed" could be substituted.

7. Unlike statutes dealing with closely related offenses (see subsec. (2), (2m), and (4) of § 940.20), § 940.20(5) refers not to "in an official capacity" but to "acting in that capacity." In defining this element, the Committee concluded that it was appropriate to define the term as "official capacity" is defined for the closely related offenses. The definition is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

8. The "knew or had reason to know" requirement is taken directly from § 940.20(5)(b). It is treated as a separate element rather than being combined with the sixth element where knowledge of lack of consent is addressed. This is because the "reason to know" standard differs from the actual knowledge that is required when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute. See § 939.23(3).

The instruction applies the "reason to know" standard to the victim's status as a school district officer or employee and to "acting in that capacity." The statute expressly applies "reason to know" only to status as an officer or employee. But the two requirements are so closely connected that the Committee concluded the same knowledge standard has to apply to each.

9. Knowledge that the victim was acting in an official capacity and that the victim did not consent is required because the word "intentionally" is used in the statute. That requires not only intent to cause bodily harm but also "knowledge of those facts necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." § 939.23(3).

10. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1236 BATTERY TO A PUBLIC TRANSIT VEHICLE OPERATOR OR PASSENGER — § 940.20(6)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(6) is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to a public transit vehicle operator or passenger.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a public transit vehicle (operator) (passenger).

   "Public transit vehicle" means any vehicle used for providing transportation service to the general public.[4]

3. The defendant acted intentionally.

This requires that the defendant intended to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) was a public transit vehicle (operator) (passenger).[5]

Intent to cause bodily harm means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1236 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2005. This revision corrected a typographical error; it was approved by the Committee in April 2014.

The offense defined in § 940.20(6) was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 164 (effective date: April 2, 1994). [This statute was originally created as sub. (5) of § 940.20; it was changed to sub. (6) by a later revisor's bill, 1993 Wisconsin Act 491.]

1. This instruction deals with an offense under § 940.20(6)(b)1. That subsection applies to harm that "occurs while the victim is an operator, a driver, or a passenger of, in or on a public transit vehicle." The instruction refers only to "operator or passenger"; the Committee concluded that "operator" includes "driver." Other classes of victims are covered by (b)2. and 3:

> 2. The harm occurs after the offender forces or directs the victim to leave a public transit vehicle.
> 3. The harm occurs as the offender prevents, or attempts to prevent the victim from gaining lawful access to a public transit vehicle.

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. This is the definition provided in § 940.20(6)(a).

5. Knowledge that the victim was an operator or passenger is required because the word "intentionally" is used in the statute. That requires not only intent to cause bodily harm but also "knowledge of those facts necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word "intentionally." § 939.23(3).

6. See § 939.23(3). Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B provide additional definition of "intentionally" which may be incorporated here if felt to be necessary.

1237 BATTERY TO AN EMERGENCY MEDICAL CARE PROVIDER[1] — § 940.20(7)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN FOR OFFENSES OCCURRING AFTER MARCH 24, 2022, BECAUSE THE STATUTE TO WHICH IT PERTAINED WAS REPEALED BY 2021 WISCONSIN ACT 209. FOR OFFENSES OCCURRING AFTER MARCH 24, 2022, SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1247A AND 1247B.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(7) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to an (identify appropriate category for the victim)[2], where at the time of the act the defendant knows or has reason to know that the victim is an (identify appropriate category for the victim) acting in an official capacity and there is no consent of the victim harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (identify appropriate category for the victim). [A _____ is (identify appropriate category for the victim).][5]

3. (Name of victim) was acting in an official capacity.

   This means (name of victim) was performing duties that (he) (she) was employed[6] to perform.[7] [The duties of a _____ include: _____.][8]

4. The defendant knew, or had reason to know, that (name of victim) was acting in an official capacity.[9]

5. (Name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.

6. The defendant acted intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant intended to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[10]

   Intent to cause bodily harm means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that his conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[11]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1237 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2004, 2008, and 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2020; it reflects statutory amendments made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 97. Its withdrawal for offenses occurring after the effective date of 2021 Wisconsin Act 209 was approved by the Committee in April 2022.

Section 940.20(7) was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 145 [effective date: March 20, 1996].

2017 Wisconsin Act 12 [effective date: June 23, 2017] changed the terminology used in the statute from "emergency medical technician" to "emergency medical services practitioner" and from "first responder" to "emergency medical responder."

2019 Wisconsin Act 97 [effective date: February 7, 2020] added the category of "a health care provider who works in a hospital" to the list of applicable victims. The Act also amended the definition of "emergency department."

1. The statute applies to five different categories of person; for each category, the statute provides a full or partial definition. The instruction provides a blank where it is necessary to identify the category applicable to the victim. The category is to be defined, if necessary, in the second element.

2. Identify the appropriate category for the victim in this blank and the other blanks in the instruction: a health care provider who works in a hospital; emergency department worker; emergency medical services practitioner; emergency medical responder; or ambulance driver. The terms will be defined, if necessary, in the second element.

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. If it is believed to be necessary, provide a definition for the type of victim involved. For "emergency department worker," see § 940.20(7)(a)2. For "emergency medical services practitioner," § 940.20(7)(a)2g provides that the definition in § 256.01(5) applies. For "emergency medical responder," § 940.20(7)(a)2d provides that the definition in § 256.01(4p) applies. For "ambulance driver" § 940.20(7)(a)1e provides that the definition of "ambulance" in § 256.01(1t) applies.

§ 940.20(7)(a) provides: "'Emergency department' means a room or area in a hospital that is primarily used to provide emergency care, diagnosis or radiological treatment."

§ 940.20(7)(a)3 provides: "'health care provider' means any person who is licensed, registered, permitted or certified by the department of health services or the department of safety and professional services to provide health care services in this state." For "hospital" § 940.20(7)(a)4 provides that the definition in § 50.33 (2) applies.

6. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged or involved in performing a duty or service.

7. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

8. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

9. The "knew or had reason to know" requirement is taken directly from § 940.20(7)(b). It is treated as a separate element rather than being combined with the sixth element where knowledge of lack of consent is addressed. This is because the "reason to know" standard differs from the actual knowledge that is required when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute. See § 939.23(3).

The instruction applies the "reason to know" standard to the victim's status as an emergency medical care provider and to "acting in an official capacity." The statute expressly applies "reason to know" only to status as an officer or employee. But the two requirements are so closely connected that the Committee concluded the same knowledge standard has to apply to each.

10. Knowledge that the victim was acting in an official capacity and that the victim did not consent is required because the word "intentionally" is used in the statute. That requires not only intent to cause bodily harm but also "knowledge of those facts necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." § 939.23(3).

11. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

12. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee has concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional, statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1238 BATTERY OR THREAT TO A WITNESS [WITNESS HAS ATTENDED OR TESTIFIED] — § 940.201

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.201 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to a person who he or she knows or has reason to know is or was a witness by reason of the person having attended or testified as a witness and without the consent of the person harmed or threatened.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[1]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING BODILY HARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.][2]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][3]

2. (Name of victim) was a witness.

["Witness" means any person who has attended a proceeding to testify or who has testified.][4]

[A [insert proper term from the definition in § 940.41(3)] is a witness.]

3. The defendant knew [or had reason to know] that (name of victim) was a witness.[5]

4. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim) because[6] the person attended or testified as a witness.

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened) bodily harm without the consent[7] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[8] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten) bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1238 was originally published 1998 and revised in 2004 and 2022. The 2004 revision involved the adoption of a new format, adding a definition of "true threat," and nonsubstantive changes in the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

In 1998, this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1232 for offenses against witnesses. Wis JI-Criminal 1232 has been revised to apply only to battery against a juror.

This instruction is for violations of § 940.201(2)(a), where the alleged battery has taken place after the victim has testified or attended as a witness. In State v. McLeod, 85 Wis.2d 787, 271 N.W.2d 157 (Ct. App. 1978), the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that the battery to witness statute also applies where the victim has not yet testified but is expected to be called. For that type of case, the second and fourth elements must be modified. See footnotes 4 and 6 below. Wis JI-Criminal 1239, which formerly provided a separate instruction for that type of case, has been withdrawn. [The withdrawal note for Wis JI-Criminal 1239 contains a summary of McLeod.

Section 940.201 was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 143, effective date: May 5, 1998. Similar offenses against witnesses were formerly addressed by § 943.20(3). Act 143 expanded the scope of the statute by including threats to cause bodily harm and, in sub. (2)(b) threats to cause and causing of bodily harm against family members of a witness. If a threat or harm to a family member of a witness is involved, the instruction must be modified.

1. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

3. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

4. The definition of "witness" in the first set of brackets is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(3), which applies to violations of § 940.201. If that statement does not fit the status of the victim, the definition in the second set of brackets should be used, selecting the proper alternative from the full definition, which reads as follows:

> (3) "Witness" means any natural person who has been or is expected to be summoned to testify; who by reason of having relevant information is subject to call or likely to be called as a witness, whether or not any action or proceeding has as yet been commenced; whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose; who has provided information concerning any crime to any peace officer or prosecutor; who provided information concerning a crime to any employee or agent of a law enforcement agency using a crime reporting telephone hotline or other telephone number provided by the law enforcement agency; or who has been served with a subpoena issued under § 885.01 or under the authority of any court of this state or of the United States.

In State v. McLeod, 85 Wis.2d 787, 271 N.W.2d 157 (Ct. App. 1978), the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that the predecessor to § 943.201 B § 940.26, 1975 Wis. Stats. B also applied where the victim has not yet attended or testified but is expected to be summoned to testify. For that type of case, the definition of "witness" in the second element should be modified to refer to "a person who is expected to be summoned to testify."

5. The statute includes the requirement that the defendant "knew or had reason to know" that the victim is or was a witness. A strong argument can be made that making an element of this statement is unnecessary because of the element that follows. That is, if the defendant committed the battery against the victim because the victim had testified, the defendant must have known that the victim was a witness. However, because the "knew or had reason to know" requirement is part of the statute, the Committee concluded that it should be retained as an element. In all cases that the Committee could envision, the defendant who caused harm to another person "by reason of" that person having testified would have known that person was a witness. Thus, the "had reason to know" alternative is placed in brackets because it is not expected to be applicable to the typical case under the statute.

6. This element is drafted for a case where the person has attended or testified. If that statement does not fit the status of the victim, the statement must be modified. See note 4, supra.

The instruction uses "because" in place of the statutory language "by reason of . . ." The Committee intended no substantive change and believed the instruction will be easier for a jury to understand if "because" is used.

7. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

8. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.20(2m)(b), which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2m)(b)1., through 2. and 3. Sub. (2m)(b)1. has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2m)(b) proper and the other facts that follow.

9. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

1239 BATTERY OR THREAT TO WITNESS [WITNESS LIKELY TO BE CALLED TO TESTIFY] — § 940.201

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1239 was originally published 1998, replacing Wis JI-Criminal 1233 for offenses against persons who have not yet testified as a witness but are likely to do so. It was withdrawn in 2003 because the Committee concluded that an offense of that type could be addressed by making relatively minor adjustments in Wis JI-Criminal 1238.

The separate instruction formerly provided by Wis JI-Criminal 1239 addressed the type of violation recognized by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in McLeod v. State, 85 Wis.2d 787, 271 N.W.2d 157 (Ct. App. 1978). McLeod held that the predecessor to § 940.201 applied to a battery against a person who had not yet attended or testified as a witness, but who was expected to do so. McLeod dealt with § 940.206, 1975 Wis. Stats., which was renumbered § 940.20(3) without substantive change by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977. Current § 940.201 replaced § 940.20(3) in 1998.

McLeod dealt with the conflict between the definition of the crime, which refers to "by reason of having attended or testified," and the reference in the definition of "witness" which includes anyone who "is expected to be summoned to testify" or who is "likely to be called as a witness, whether or not any action has as yet been commenced." (As described above, the definition of "witness" in § 940.41(3) now applies. However, the McLeod issue remains the same under the new definition.) In McLeod, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals determined that the statute applies to batteries upon witnesses who have not testified:

> Despite this clear and precise definition of who is a "witness" and protected by this battery-to-a-witness statute, it is here contended that a person who has not already testified from the witness stand is not protected by this statute. Reliance for this contention is based upon a phrase in the sentence in the battery-to-a-witness statute requiring the assault to be "with intent to cause bodily harm to that person [a witness as defined in § 943.30(3)(b)]." As to such intent, the statute states that is to be "by reason of his [the witness] having attended or testified as a witness . . . ." Does this use of the past tense operate to replace or alter the definition of "witness," carefully spelled out in the earlier part of the same section of the same statute? We think not. It is true that the legislature, in its rules of construction of statutes, has prescribed that "[t]he present tense of a verb includes the future when applicable," but not that the past tense include the future. However, in such construction-of-laws statute, the legislature has provided its rules shall be observed "unless construction in accordance with a rule would produce a result inconsistent with the manifest intent of the legislature. . . ." In the statute before us here, the manifest intent of the legislature is spelled out by the definition of "witness" to include persons expected to be summoned to testify in the future. The reference to intent to harm "by reason of" the victim having testified, we hold, includes an > assault intended to prevent the consequences of the victim having testified as well as to punish such witness for testimony already given. Our state Supreme Court has said that "the meaning of a word takes color and expression from the purport of the entire phrase of which it is a part, and it must be construed to harmonize with the context as a whole." Here, dealing with a single sentence statute, with a clear definition by incorporation of who is to be protected by the statute, we hold that "by reason of" reference to include the attacker's fear of future, as well as past consequences, to the attacker of the witness, "having attended or testified as a witness . . . ." No other construction of the "by reason of" reference harmonizes with or carries out the manifest and expressed purpose of the battery-to-a-witness statutes. [footnotes omitted, 85 Wis.2d 787, 791-92]

In cases like McLeod, even though the witness has not testified, there must be a connection between the battery and the victim's status as a witness, and the instruction so requires.

1240 BATTERY OR THREAT TO JUDGE — § 940.203

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240 was originally published in 1994 and withdrawn in 2002 when it was divided into two versions: Wis JI-Criminal 1240A, Battery To Judge, and Wis JI-Criminal 1240B, Threat To Judge.

1240A BATTERY TO A JUDGE — § 940.203(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any judge where at the time of the act the person knows[1] that the victim is a (judge) (family member of a judge), the act is in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity,[2] and there is no consent by the person harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[3]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., circuit court judge) is a judge.][5]

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. The defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

4. The defendant caused bodily harm in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity.

   Judges act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[8] to perform.[9] [The duties of a judge include: _____].[10]

5. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).[12]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240A was originally published in 1994. The 2002 revision divided the single instruction into two instructions, WI JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. Wis JI-Criminal 1240A was revised in 2008 to change the definition of "official capacity." The 2016 revision updated the Comment to reflect changes made by the 2015 Wisconsin Act 78. The 2018 revision reflected changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018] and 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. This instruction was revised in 2019 to correct a typographical error in element one.

Section 940.203 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 50 [effective date: November 25, 1993] and originally applied only to the offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 to include officers of the court. This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203 involving battery to a judge; for violations based on threats to a judge, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240B. For battery and threats to prosecutors and law enforcement officers, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240C and 1240D. For battery and threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241A and 1241B.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the prosecutor's or law enforcement officer's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. 2015 Wisconsin Act 109 amended § 940.203 to delete what was previously an alternative for this aspect of the offense definition: "… the judge is acting in an official capacity at the time of the act or threat…"

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more person's might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. Section 940.203(1)(b) provides a definition of "judge" for the purpose of this offense. As amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 that definition provides: "'Judge' means a person who currently is or who formerly was a supreme court justice, court of appeals judge, circuit court judge, municipal judge, tribal judge, temporary or permanent reserve judge or circuit, supplemental, or municipal court commissioner."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

10. The duties of judges may be set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

11. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.203 which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

1240B THREAT TO A JUDGE — § 940.203(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally threatens to cause bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any judge where, at the time of the act, the person knows[1] that the victim is a (judge) (family member of a judge), the act is in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity,[2] and there is no consent by the person harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).

   [A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., circuit court judge) is a judge.][5]

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. The defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

4. The threat was in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity.

   Judges act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[8] to perform.[9] [The duties of a judge include: _____].[10]

5. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[12] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[13]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240B was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2002, 2016, 2018, 2019, and 2020. The 2002 revision divided the single instruction into two instructions, WI JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. Wis JI-Criminal 1240A was revised in 2008 to change the definition of "official capacity." The 2016 revision updated the Comment to reflect changes made by the 2015 Wisconsin Act 78. The 2018 revision reflected changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 and 2017 Wisconsin Act 352. The 2020 revision added the definition of "true threat." This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.203 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 50 [effective date: November 25, 1993] and originally applied only to offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018] to include officers of the court. 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 [effective date: April 18, 2018] amended the definitions of "judge" and "law enforcement officer." This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203 involving threats to a judge; for violations based on battery to a judge, see Wis-JI Criminal 1240A. For battery and threats to prosecutors and law enforcement officers, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240C and 1240D. For battery and threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241A and 1241B.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the prosecutor's or law enforcement officer's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. 2015 Wisconsin Act 109 amended § 940.203 to delete what was previously an alternative for this aspect of the offense definition: "… the judge is acting in an official capacity at the time of the act or threat…"

3. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, 28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of the statute criminalizing language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, 43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, 29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in context and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, 23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to another…"

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. Section 940.203(1)(b) provides a definition of "judge" for the purpose of this offense. As amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 352, that definition provides: "'Judge' means a person who currently is or who formerly was a supreme court justice, court of appeals judge, circuit court judge, municipal judge, tribal judge, temporary or permanent reserve judge or circuit, supplemental, or municipal court commissioner."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

10. The duties of judges may be set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

11. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.203, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

13. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1240C BATTERY TO A PROSECUTOR OR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER — § 940.203(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer) where at the time of the act the person knows[1] that the victim is a [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)], the act is in response to an action taken in the (prosecutor's) (law enforcement officer's) official capacity and there is no consent by the person harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)].

[A (e.g., district attorney) is a prosecutor.][4]

[A (insert title, e.g., sheriff) is a law enforcement officer.][5]

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. The defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was a [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)].

4. The defendant caused bodily harm in response to an action taken in the (prosecutor's) (law enforcement officer's) official capacity.

   (Prosecutors) (law enforcement officers) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[8] to perform.[9] [The duties of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer) include: _____].[10]

5. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).[12]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240C was originally published in 2016 and revised in 2017, 2018, and 2019. The 2018 revision reflected changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018] and 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The 2019 revision corrects a typographical error in element one.

Section 940.203 originally applied only to the offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 to include officers of the court. This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203 involving battery to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer; for violations based on threats to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer, see Wis-JI Criminal 1240D. For battery and threats to a judge, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. For battery and threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241A and 1241B.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the prosecutor's or law enforcement officer's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more person's might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. In the Committee's judgement, the jury may be told, for example, that district attorney is a prosecutor. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was a district attorney. Section 940.203(d) provides a definition of "prosecutor" for the purposes of this offense:

"Prosecutor" means a person who currently is or formerly was any of the following:

1. A district attorney, a deputy district attorney, an assistant district attorney, or a special prosecutor under s. 978.045 or 978.05(8)(b).
2. The attorney general, a deputy attorney general, or an assistant attorney general.
3. A tribal prosecutor.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

5. In the Committees judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a sheriff is a law enforcement officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was sheriff.

Section 940.203(1)(c) as amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 provides the following definition of "law enforcement officer":

(c) "Law enforcement officer" means any person who currently is or was employed by the state, by any political subdivision, or as a tribal law enforcement officer for the purpose of detecting and preventing crime and enforcing laws or ordinances and who is authorized to make arrests for violations of the laws or ordinances the person is employed to enforce, whether that enforcement authority extends to all laws or ordinances or is limited to specific laws or ordinances.

6. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

Referring to this offense as defined under § 940.20(2), 2005-2006 Wis. Stats., the Wisconsin Court of Appeals clarified that "acting with lawful authority" – an element of resisting or obstructing an officer under § 946.41 – is not an element of battery to a law enforcement officer: "…a law enforcement officer need not be acting 'lawfully' for what he or she does to be done in the officer's 'official capacity.' Rather the officer need only be acting within his or her jurisdiction as an officer and not on some 'personal frolic' unrelated to the officer's law-enforcement responsibilities." State v. Haywood, 2009 WI App 178, 11, 322 Wis.2d 691, 777 N.W.2d 921.

In State v. Rowan, 2012 WI 60, 341 Wis.2d 281, 814 N.W.2d 854, the supreme court found the evidence sufficient to satisfy the "acting in an official capacity" requirement where a police officer was called to a hospital to assist in restraining a combative suspect who was under arrest.

10. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

11. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.203 which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

1240D THREAT TO A PROSECUTOR OR LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER — § 940.203(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally threatens to cause bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer) where at the time of the threat the person knows[1] that the victim is a current or former [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)], the threat is in response to an action taken in the (prosecutor's) (law enforcement officer's) official capacity and there is no consent by the person threatened.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][2]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)].

[A (e.g., district attorney) is a prosecutor.][4]

[A (insert title, e.g., sheriff) is a law enforcement officer.][5]

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. The defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was a [(prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)] [family member of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer)].

4. The threat was in response to an action taken in the (prosecutor's) (law enforcement officer's) official capacity.

(Prosecutors) (law enforcement officers) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[8] to perform.[9] [The duties of a (prosecutor) (law enforcement officer) include: _____].[10]

5. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[12] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[13]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240D was originally published in 2016 and revised in 2017, 2018, and 2019. The 2018 revision reflected changes made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018] and 2017 Wisconsin Act 352 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The 2019 revision corrected a typographical error in element one. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.203 originally applied only to offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 to include officers of the court. This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203 involving threats to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer; for violations based on battery to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer, see Wis-JI Criminal 1240AC. For battery and threats to a judge, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. For battery and threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241A and 1241B.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the prosecutor's or law enforcement officer's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, 28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of the statute criminalizing language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, 43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, 29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in context and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, 23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S., 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to another…"

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that the district attorney is a prosecutor. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was a district attorney. Section 940.203(d) provides a definition of "prosecutor" for the purposes of this offense:

"Prosecutor" means a person who currently is or formerly was any of the following:

1. A district attorney, a deputy district attorney, an assistant district attorney, or a special prosecutor under s. 978.045 or 978.05(8)(b).
2. The attorney general, a deputy attorney general, or an assistant attorney general.
3. A tribal prosecutor.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

5. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a sheriff is a law enforcement officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was sheriff.

Section 940.203(1)(c), as amended by 2017 Wisconsin Act 352, provides the following definition of "law enforcement officer":

(c) "Law enforcement officer" means any person who currently is or was employed by the state, by any political subdivision, or as a tribal law enforcement officer for the purpose of detecting and preventing crime and enforcing laws or ordinances and who is authorized to make arrests for violations of the laws or ordinances the person is employed to enforce, whether that enforcement authority extends to all laws or ordinances or is limited to specific laws or ordinances.

6. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

10. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

11. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.203, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

13. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1241A BATTERY TO GUARDIAN AD LITEM, CORPORATION COUNSEL, TRIBAL COURT ADVOCATE, OR ATTORNEY — § 940.203(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney) where at the time of the act the person knows[1] that the victim is [(a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)] [a family member of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)], the act is in response to an action taken in the (guardian ad litem's) (corporation counsel's) (tribal court advocate's) (attorney's) official capacity and there is no consent by the person harmed.

State's Burden of Poof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[2]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a [current or former (guardian ad litem)[4] (corporation counsel)[5] (tribal court advocate)[6] (attorney)[7]] [family member of a current or former (guardian ad litem) (corporation counsel) (tribal court advocate) (attorney)].

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][8]

3. The defendant knew[9] that (name of victim) was [(a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)] [a family member of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)].

4. The defendant caused bodily harm in response to an action taken in the (guardian ad litem's) (corporation counsel's) (tribal court advocate's) (attorney's) official capacity in a [specify the proceeding under Wisconsin statutes chapter _____] [specify the proceeding in a tribal court similar to Wisconsin statutes chapter _____.][10]

(Guardians ad litem) (Corporation counsel) (Tribal court advocates) (Attorneys) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[11] to perform.[12] [The duties of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney) include: _____].[13]

[A _____ is a proceeding under chapter (specify the Wisconsin Statutes chapter)].[14]

[A _____ is a proceeding in a tribal court.][15]

5. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[16] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).[17]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1241A was approved by the Committee in July 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2022; it amended the body of the instruction and the comment based on 2021 Wisconsin Act 191 [effective date: March 19, 2022].

Section 940.203 originally applied only to the offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018]. The title of § 940.203 was amended to read as "Battery or threat to a judge, prosecutor, an officer of the court or law enforcement officer." "Advocate" was added by 2021 Wisconsin Act 191 [effective date: March 19, 2022].

This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203(3) involving battery to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney; for violations based on threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241B. For battery and threats to a judge, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. For battery and threats to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240C and 1240D.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and guardian ad litem's, corporation counsel's, advocate's, attorney's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. Section 54.40(2) provides the duties of "guardian ad litem."

5. Section 59.42 provides the duties of "corporation counsel."

6. Section 940.203 (1)(ab) provides that "Advocate" means an individual who is representing the interests of a child, the tribe, or another party in a tribal court proceeding.

7. Section 940.203(1)(ac) provides that "attorney" means a legal professional practicing law as defined in SCR 23.01. The practice of law in in Wisconsin is defined in SCR 23.01 as "[t]he application of legal principles and judgment with regard to the circumstances or objectives of another entity or person(s) where there is a client relationship of trust or reliance and which require the knowledge, judgment, and skill of a person trained as a lawyer. The practice of law includes but is not limited to:

1. Giving advice or counsel to others as to their legal rights or the legal rights or responsibilities of others for fees or other consideration.
2. Selection, drafting, or completion for another entity or person of legal documents or agreements which affect the legal rights of the other entity or person(s).

3. Representation of another entity or person(s) in a court, or in a formal administrative adjudicative proceeding or other formal dispute resolution process or in an administrative adjudicative proceeding in which legal pleadings are filed or a record is established as the basis for judicial review.
4. Negotiation of legal rights or responsibilities on behalf of another entity or person(s).
5. Any other activity determined to be the practice of law by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

8. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

9. See note 1, supra.

10. Section 940.203(3)(b) specifies that the act be in response to "an action taken by the current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney in his or her official capacity in a proceeding under ch. 48, 51, 54, 55, 767, 813, or 938 or in a similar proceeding in a tribal court."

11. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

12. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

13. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

14. Wisconsin Statutes ch. 48, 51, 54, 55, 767, 813, or 938.

15. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

16. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

17. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.203 which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

1241B THREAT TO GUARDIAN AD LITEM, CORPORATION COUNSEL, TRIBAL COURT ADVOCATE, OR ATTORNEY — § 940.203(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.203(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally threatens to cause bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney) where at the time of the threat the person knows[1] that the victim is [(a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)] [a family member of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)], the threat is in response to an action taken in the (guardian ad litem's) (corporation counsel's) (tribal court advocate's) (attorney's) official capacity and there is no consent by the person threatened.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim).

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][2]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a [current or former (guardian ad litem)[4] (corporation counsel)[5] (tribal court advocate)[6] (attorney)[7]] [family member of a current or former (guardian ad litem) (corporation counsel) (tribal court advocate) (attorney)].

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][8]

3. The defendant knew[9] that (name of victim) was [(a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)] [a family member of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney)].

4. The threat was in response to an action taken in the current or former (guardian ad litem's) (corporation counsel's) (tribal court advocate's) (attorney's) official capacity in a

[specify the proceeding under Wisconsin statutes chapter _____] [specify the proceeding in a tribal court similar to Wisconsin statutes chapter _____.][10]

(Guardians ad litem) (Corporation counsel) (Tribal court advocates) (Attorneys) act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[11] to perform.[12] [The duties of (a guardian ad litem) (a corporation counsel) (a tribal court advocate) (an attorney) include: _____].[13]

[A _____ is a proceeding under chapter (specify the Wisconsin Statutes chapter)].[14]

5. The defendant threatened to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) without the consent[16] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[17] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to another human being, or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[18]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in case this bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1241B was approved by the Committee in July 2018 and revised in 2022. The 2022 revision amended the body of the instruction and the comment based on 2021 Wisconsin Act 191 [effective date: March 19, 2022]. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.203 originally applied only to offenses against judges and their family members. It was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 78 [effective date: November 13, 2015] to add prosecutors and law enforcement officers. Section 940.203 was amended again by 2017 Wisconsin Act 272 [effective date: April 13, 2018]. The title of § 940.203 was amended to read as "Battery or threat to a judge, prosecutor, an officer of the court or law enforcement officer." "Advocate" was added by 2021 Wisconsin Act 191 [effective date: March 19, 2022].

This instruction is drafted for violations under § 940.203(3) involving threats to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney; for violations based on battery to a current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney, see Wis JI-Criminal 1241A. For battery and threats to a judge, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240A and 1240B. For battery and threats to a prosecutor or law enforcement officer, see Wis JI-Criminal 1240C and 1240D.

1. Neither the summary of the offenses here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" found as part of the offense definition in sec. 940.203(2)(a). The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and guardian ad litem's, corporation counsel's, advocate's, or attorney's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action taken in the person's official capacity. Therefore, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of the statute criminalizing language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46,

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in context and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm to another…"

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. Section 54.40(2) provides the duties of "guardian ad litem."

5. Section 59.42 provides the duties of "corporation counsel."

6. Section 940.203 (1)(ab) provides that "Advocate" means an individual who is representing the interests of a child, the tribe, or another party in a tribal court proceeding.

7. Section 940.203(1)(ac) provides that "attorney" means a legal professional practicing law as defined in SCR 23.01. The practice of law in Wisconsin is defined in SCR 23.01 as "[t]he application of legal principles and judgment with regard to the circumstances or objectives of another entity or person(s) where there is a client relationship of trust or reliance and which require the knowledge, judgment, and skill of a person trained as a lawyer. The practice of law includes but is not limited to:

   1. Giving advice or counsel to others as to their legal rights or the legal rights or responsibilities of others for fees or other consideration.

2. Selection, drafting, or completion for another entity or person of legal documents or agreements which affect the legal rights of the other entity or person(s).
3. Representation of another entity or person(s) in a court, or in a formal administrative adjudicative proceeding or other formal dispute resolution process or in an administrative adjudicative proceeding in which legal pleadings are filed or a record is established as the basis for judicial review.
4. Negotiation of legal rights or responsibilities on behalf of another entity or person(s).
5. Any other activity determined to be the practice of law by the Wisconsin Supreme Court.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

8. Section 940.203(1)(a) provides a definition of "family member" for the purpose of this offense: "'Family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

9. See note 1, supra.

10. Section 940.203(3)(b) specifies that the act be in response to "an action taken by the current or former guardian ad litem, corporation counsel, advocate, or attorney in his or her official capacity in a proceeding under ch. 48, 51, 54, 55, 767, 813, or 938 or in a similar proceeding in a tribal court."

11. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

12. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

13. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

14. Wisconsin Statutes ch. 48, 51, 54, 55, 767, 813, or 938.

15. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

16. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

17. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered

by the drafting style of § 940.203, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should have known" and thereby breaks the connections between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

18. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1242 BATTERY OR THREAT TO A DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE EMPLOYEE — § 940.205

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.205 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any Department of Revenue employee[1] where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[2] that the victim is a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee), [the Department of Revenue employee is acting in an official capacity], [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity],[3] and there is no consent by the person (harmed) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING BODILY HARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.][5]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][6]

2. (Name of victim) was a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee).

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][7]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat) the defendant knew[8] that (name of victim) was a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee).

4. [The Department of Revenue employee was acting in an official capacity at the time of the (act) (threat).] [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity.][9]

Department of Revenue employees act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[10] to perform.[11] (The duties of a Department of Revenue employee include: _____.)[12]

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm without the consent[13] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[14] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[15]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1242 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 2004, 2008, and 2022. The 2004 revision added a definition of "true threat." The 2008 revision amended the definition of "official capacity."

This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.205 was created by 1985 Wisconsin Act 29.

1. Section 940.205 applies to offenses against the person or family of any department of revenue "official, employee or agent." The instruction refers to "employee" throughout since that appears to be the most inclusive term.

2. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (2)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity. That is, the threat or act must be committed either when the Department of Revenue employee is acting in an official capacity or in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

3. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

4. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

5. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

6. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

7. Section 940.205(1) provides:

"In this section, family member" means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, foster child or treatment foster child.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

8. See note 2, supra.

9. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

10. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

11. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

12. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

13. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

14. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.205, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

15. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1243 BATTERY TO A NURSE — § 940.20(2r)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN FOR OFFENSES OCCURRING AFTER MARCH 24, 2022, BECAUSE THE STATUTE TO WHICH IT PERTAINED WAS REPEALED BY 2021 WISCONSIN ACT 209. FOR OFFENSES OCCURRING AFTER MARCH 24, 2022, SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1247A AND 1247B.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.20(2r) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to (a nurse) (an individual acting under the supervision of a nurse) where at the time of the act the defendant knows or has reason to know that the victim is (a nurse) (an individual acting under the supervision of a nurse) acting in a professional capacity and there is no consent by the victim harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[1]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

2. (Name of victim) was (a nurse)[3] (an individual acting under the supervision of a nurse).
3. (Name of victim) was acting in (his) (her) professional capacity.[4]
4. The defendant knew, or had reason to know, that (name of victim) was (a nurse acting in a professional capacity) (an individual acting under the supervision of a nurse acting in a professional capacity).[5]
5. The defendant caused bodily harm without the consent of (Name of victim).
6. The defendant acted intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant intended to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[6]

Meaning of "Intentionally"

Intent to cause bodily harm means that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to another human being or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause bodily harm to another.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1243 was approved by the Committee in August 2020. Its withdrawal for offenses occurring after the effective date of 2021 Wisconsin Act 209 was approved by the Committee in April 2022.

Section 940.20(2r) was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 97 [effective date: February 7, 2020].

1. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

2. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

3. § 940.20(2r)(a) provides that "nurse" means an individual who is licensed (as a registered nurse) pursuant to § 441.06 or (as a practical nurse) pursuant to 441.10.

4. If further instruction on "professional capacity" is necessary, see secs. 441.001(3) and (4), which define practical and professional nursing.

5. The "knew or had reason to know" requirement is taken directly from § 940.20(2r). It is treated as a separate element rather than being combined with the sixth element where knowledge of lack of consent is addressed. This is because the "reason to know" standard differs from the actual knowledge that is required when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute. See § 939.23(3).

The instruction applies the "reason to know" standard to the victim's status as a nurse or an individual acting under the supervision of a nurse and to "acting in official capacity."

6. Knowledge that the victim was acting in a professional capacity and that the victim did not consent is required because the word "intentionally" is used in the statute. That requires not only intent to cause bodily harm but also "knowledge of those facts necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." § 939.23(3).

7. See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1244 BATTERY OR THREAT TO A DEPARTMENT OF SAFETY AND PROFESSIONAL SERVICES OR DEPARTMENT OF WORKFORCE DEVELOPMENT EMPLOYEE — § 940.207

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.207 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any Department of (Safety and Professional Services) (Workforce Development) employee[1] where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[2] that the victim is a (department employee) (family member of a department employee), [the employee is acting in an official capacity], [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action taken in the employee's official capacity],[3] and there is no consent by the person (harmed) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

"True threat" means a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][6]

2. (Name of victim) was (an employee of) (a family member of an employee of) the Department of (Safety and Professional Services) (Workforce Development).

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][7]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat), the defendant knew[8] that (name of victim) was (an employee of) (a family member of an employee of) the Department of (Commerce) (Workforce Development).

4. [The employee was acting in an official capacity at the time of the (act) (threat).] [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken in the employee's official capacity.][9]

Employees act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed[10] to perform.[11] [The duties of a Department of (Safety and Professional Services) (Workforce Development) employee include:_____.][12]

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm without the consent[13] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[15]

Deciding About Intent

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1244 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 1998, 2004, 2008, 2012, and 2022. The 2012 revision changed the reference from the Department of Commerce to the Department of Safety and Professional Services. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.207 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 86. A series of legislative changes affected the types of employees covered by the statute. As amended by 1997 Wisconsin Act 3, the statute applies to battery or threat to employees and family members of employees of the Department of Commerce and the Department of Workforce Development. 2011 Wisconsin Act 32 changed "Department of Commerce" to "Department of Safety and Professional Services."

1. Section 940.207 applies to offenses against the person or family of any department "official, employee or agent." The instruction refers to "employee" throughout since that appears to be the most inclusive term.

2. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (2)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the employee's official capacity. That is, the threat or act must be committed either when the employee is acting in an official capacity or in response to an action taken in the employee's official capacity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

3. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

4. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

5. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

6. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would > reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

7. Section 940.207(1) provides:

> "In this section, family member" means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, foster child or treatment foster child.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

8. See note 2, supra.

9. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

10. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

11. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

12. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743

N.W.2d 468; and State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

General powers and duties of the Department of Commerce are set forth in § 101.02, Wis. Stats.; those of the Department of Workforce Development are set forth in § 103.005, Wis. Stats.

13. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

14. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.207, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

15. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1245 BATTERY TO A COUNTY, CITY, VILLAGE, OR TOWN EMPLOYEE — § 940.208

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.208 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to an employee of a city[1] where at the time of the act, the person knows[2] that the victim is a city employee, the employee is enforcing[3] a city[4] zoning ordinance, building code, or other construction law, rule, standard, or plan at the time of the act, the enforcement activity complies with any applicable law, ordinance, rule or notice requirement, and there is no consent by the person harmed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[5]

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[6]

2. (Name of victim) was an employee of a city.

3. At the time of the act the defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was an employee of a city.

4. (Name of victim) was enforcing a city zoning ordinance, building code, or other construction law, rule, standard, or plan.

5. The enforcement complied with any applicable law, ordinance, rule or notice requirement.

6. The defendant caused bodily harm without the consent[8] of (name of victim).

7. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1245 was approved by the Committee in July 2008.

Section 940.208 was created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 193 [effective date: April 11, 2008].

The statute applies to harm caused to an employee of a county, city, village, or town, but the instruction is drafted for offenses against city employees in an effort to make a very long statute more manageable. The statute also applies where the act is in response to activity undertaken to enforce, or to inspect for the purpose of enforcing, a state, county, city, village, or town zoning ordinance, building code, or other construction law, rule, standard, or plan. Again, the instruction is drafted for offenses related to enforcement activities. If any of the other options are involved, the standard instruction will need to be modified.

1. The instruction is drafted for offenses against city employees, but the statute also applies to harm caused to an employee of a county, village, or town. If any of the other options are involved, the standard instruction will need to be modified.

2. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see sec. 940.208(1)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act and the employee being engaged in enforcement or inspection activity. That is, the act must be committed either when the employee is engaged in enforcement or inspection activity or in response to enforcement or inspection activity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

3. The instruction is drafted for cases involving bodily harm caused during enforcement activity, but the statute also applies where the harm is caused during an inspection for the purpose of enforcement or where harm is caused in response to activity undertaken to enforce. If any of the other options are involved, the standard instruction will need to be modified.

4. The instruction is drafted for enforcement of a city zoning ordinance, building code, etc., but the statute also applies to a state, county, village, or town zoning ordinance, building code, or other construction law, rule, standard, or plan. If any of the other options are involved, the standard instruction will need to be modified.

5. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

6. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

7. See note 2, supra.

9. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.208 which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the element set forth in (1). Sub. (1) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in the introductory sentence of the statute.

1246 MAYHEM — § 940.21

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Mayhem, as defined in § 940.21 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who cuts or mutilates the tongue, eye, ear, nose, lip, limb, or other bodily member of another with intent to disable or disfigure that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant cut or mutilated (the tongue) (the eye) (the ear) (the nose) (the lip) (a limb) (any bodily part)[1] of (name of victim) .
2. The cutting or mutilation caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .[2]

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor[3] in producing great bodily harm.

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.[4]
3. The defendant intended to disable or disfigure (name of victim) .

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to disable or disfigure (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to disable or disfigure (name of victim).

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of mayhem have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Until 1994, violations of § 940.21, Mayhem, were addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1230, which was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1982, 1987, and 1992. That instruction was revised and republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1246 in 1994 and revised in 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2008 and involved revising the definition of the first element and adding footnote 1.

The second element of the instruction, requiring the causing of great bodily harm, was added in 1982 and reflects the holding in State v. Kirby, 86 Wis.2d 292, 272 N.W.2d 113 (Ct. App. 1978). Kirby held that "causing great bodily harm" was an element of mayhem, even thought it was not expressly stated in the statute. Kirby also held that injury by conduct regardless of life [which would be "reckless injury" under § 940.23 under current law] and endangering safety by conduct regardless of life [which would be "recklessly endangering safety" under § 941.30 under current law] were lesser included offenses of mayhem. The Committee revised the instruction in September 1982 to comply with the Kirby decision.

In July 1982, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals (District I) decided State v. Cole (not published) and held that the 1969 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1230, without "great bodily harm," was a proper statement of the law. Though written by the author of Kirby, the Cole decision did not mention that case or acknowledge the great bodily harm issue.

On January 27, 1987, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals (District IV) decided State v. Webie. The defendant appealed his conviction for endangering safety by conduct regardless of life. The conviction was reversed because the court found that "endangering safety. . ." was not a lesser included offense of mayhem, the crime with which Webie was originally charged. This result required expressly overruling Kirby on the lesser included offense issue. Webie also noted that "we need not consider whether mayhem continues to incorporate the unexpressed great bodily harm requirement." Though it reversed a previous decision and was recommended for publication, Webie was ordered not published on April 2, 1987.

In the meantime, Cole (see State v. Cole, above) had gone to federal court, claiming that the failure to instruct on an element (great bodily harm) of the crime (mayhem) deprived him of due process. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the 7th Circuit granted habeas corpus relief in Cole v. Young, 817 F.2d 412 (7th Cir. 1987). The court reviewed Kirby, Cole, and Webie and decided that state law made great bodily harm an element of mayhem. That being the case, the court found a constitutional violation in the failure to instruct on that element.

Since it is the only published opinion, Kirby remains the law of the state. While at least one district of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals disagrees with it, that disagreement did not manifest itself in a published opinion. Thus, Kirby must be followed until it is officially overruled.

In State v. Quintana, 2008 WI 33, ¶73, 308 Wis.2d 615, 748 N.W.2d 447, (see note 1, below) the court acknowledged the above discussion but noted that "the legislature has not acted to correct any possible misinterpretation that arose out of the 1978 Kirby decision or its progeny. The inclusion of great bodily harm as an element supports our conclusion that the legislature sought a broad definition of 'other bodily member' as great bodily harm is not limited to specific parts of the body."

1. In State v. Quintana, 2008 WI 33, 308 Wis.2d 615, 748 N.W.2d 447, the court held that the term "other bodily member" in the mayhem statute is to be broadly construed and includes the forehead:

> ¶90 . . . . We conclude that the forehead qualifies as an "other bodily member" under Wis. Stat. § 940.21, Mayhem. Wisconsin's mayhem statute seeks to punish those who intentionally disable or disfigure another person's bodily member. The manner in which the legislature used the phrase, "other bodily member," requires that we give that phrase a broad construction. If "other bodily member" were to be narrowly construed, the construction would produce absurd results, and the purpose of the statute would easily be defeated. Because the legislature intended the phrase "other bodily member" to be construed broadly rather than narrowly, the phrase "other bodily member" in the mayhem statute encompasses all bodily parts, including a person's forehead. The application of the mayhem statute is limited by the need to prove that a person specifically intended to disable or disfigure.

In light of this decision, the Committee decided that list of alternatives in the first element should be revised to include a general reference to "any bodily part." In addition to the paragraph quoted above, see ¶33: "In short, 'other bodily member' encompasses all bodily parts."

2. Kirby v. State, 86 Wis.2d 292, 301, 272 N.W.2d 113 (Ct. App. 1978):

> Although at common law mayhem required proof of mutilation or dismemberment that affected one's combat ability, the statutory enactments creating the crime have not required such extensive mutilation or disfigurement. Nonetheless, "cuts or mutilates" as used in the statute requires proof of an act of greater severity than a mere nick with a knife. We believe that "cutting or mutilation," a statutory element of mayhem, requires an injury that constitutes "great bodily harm" as interpreted in LaBarge [74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976)] and required as an element of injury by conduct regardless of life.

Also see LaFave and Scott, Criminal Law (1972) at 614-17.

3. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. If additional definition is necessary, see note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1185, and Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

4. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of "great bodily harm."

1247A BATTERY OR THREAT TO A STAFF MEMBER OF A HEALTH CARE FACILITY — § 940.204(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.204(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any health care facility worker[1] where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[2] that the victim ((works) (formerly worked) in a health care facility) (is a family member of a person who (works) (formerly worked) in a health care facility), [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action occurring at the health care facility], [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action taken in the employee's official capacity],[3] and there is no consent by the person (harmed) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

   IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING BODILY HARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.][5]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][6]

2. (Name of victim) was ((a worker at) (a former worker at)) (a family member of (a worker at) (a former worker at)) a health care facility.[7]

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][8]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat), the defendant knew or should have known[9] that (name of victim) was ((a worker at) (a former worker at)) (a family member of (a worker at) (a former worker at)) a health care facility.

4. [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action occurring at the health care facility.] [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken by the official, employee, or agent of a health care facility acting in their official capacity.][10]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES AN OFFICIAL, EMPLOYEE, OR AGENT OF THE HEALTH CARE FACILITY ACTING IN AN OFFICIAL CAPACITY, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

Officials, employees, or agents of the health care facility act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are authorized to perform.

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[12] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the causing of bodily harm.[13]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[14]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal was 1247A approved by the Committee in April 2022. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 940.204(2) was created by 2022 Wisconsin Act 209 [effective date: March 25, 2022]. This instruction applies to battery or threat to a staff member of a health care facility and family members of a staff member of a health care facility. For battery or threat to a health care provider, see Wis JI-Criminal 1247B.

1. Section 940.204(2) applies to offenses against the person or family of anyone "who works in a health care facility." The instruction refers to "worker" throughout since that appears to be the most inclusive term.

2. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (2)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the employee's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed either in response to an action occurring at the healthcare facility or in response to an action taken in the employee's official capacity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

3. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

4. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

5. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

6. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The Committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6, which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

7. Section 940.204(1)(b) provides:

"In this section: 'health care facility' means any of the following:

1. A hospital, as defined in s. 50.33 (2).
2. A clinic, which is a location with the primary purpose of providing outpatient diagnosis, treatment, or management of health conditions.
3. A pharmacy that is licensed under s. 450.06.
4. An adult day care center, as defined in s. 49.45(47).
5. An adult family home, as defined in s. 50.01 (1).
6. A community−based residential facility, as defined in s. 50.01 (1g).
7. A residential care apartment complex, as defined in s. 50.01 (6d).
8. A nursing home, as defined in s. 50.01 (3).
9. A mental health or substance use disorder facility, which is a location that provides diagnosis, treatment, or management of mental health or substance use disorders.
10. An ambulatory surgical center, as defined in 42 CFR 416.2."

8. Section 940.204(1)(a) provides:

"In this section: 'family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

9. See note 2, supra.

10. Based on the evidence, one or both of the alternatives in brackets should be selected. If the evidence supports selecting both, the alternatives should be separated by the disjunctive "or."

11. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.204(2), which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

13. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

14. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For a longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1247B BATTERY OR THREAT TO A HEALTH CARE PROVIDER — § 940.204(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.204(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) bodily harm to the (person) (family member) of any health care provider where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[1] that the victim is a (health care provider) (family member of a health care provider), the (act) (threat) is in response to an action by the health care provider acting in their official capacity, and there is no consent by the person (harmed) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

   IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING BODILY HARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

   ["Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.][3]

IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person making the threat would foresee that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (health care provider) (family member of a health care provider).

[a (e.g., nurse) is a health care provider.][5]

[a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat) the defendant knew or should have known[7] that (name of victim) was a (health care provider) (family member of a healthcare provider).

4. The (act) (threat) was in response to an action by the health care provider acting in their official capacity.

Health care providers act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are authorized to perform.

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) bodily harm without the consent[8] of

(name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally. This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) bodily harm.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1247B was approved by the Committee in April 2022.

Section 940.204(3) was created by 2022 Wisconsin Act 209 [effective date: March 25, 2022]. This instruction applies to battery or threat to a health care provider and family members of a health care provider. For battery or threat to a staff member of a health care facility, see Wis JI-Criminal 1247A.

1. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contain the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (3)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the health care provider's official capacity. That is, the act or threat must be committed in response to an action by the health care provider acting in his or her capacity as a health care provider. In this situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4).

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

4. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 6 which requires that "the defendant acted with the mental purpose to threaten bodily harm" to another…

5. In the Committee's judgement, the jury may be told, for example, that a nurse is a health care provider. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was a nurse. Section 940.204(1)(c) provides a definition of "health care provider" for the purposes of this offense:

"Health care provider" means any of the following:

1. A nurse licensed under ch. 441.
2. A chiropractor licensed under ch. 446.
3. A dentist licensed under ch. 447.
4. A physician, perfusionist, or respiratory care practitioner licensed or certified under subch. II of ch. 448.
5. A naturopathic doctor or limited-scope naturopathic doctor licensed under ch. 466.
6. A physical therapist or physical therapist assistant who is licensed under subch. III of ch. 448 or who holds a compact privilege under subch. X of ch. 448.
7. A podiatrist licensed under subch. IV of ch. 448.
8. A dietitian certified under subch. V of ch. 448.
9. An athletic trainer licensed under subch. VI of ch. 448.
10. An occupational therapist or occupational therapy assistant who is licensed under subch. VII of ch. 448 or who holds a compact privilege under subch. XI of ch. 448.
11. A physician assistant licensed under subch. VIII of ch. 448.
12. An optometrist licensed under ch. 449.
13. A pharmacist or pharmacy technician licensed or registered under ch. 450.
14. An acupuncturist certified under ch. 451.
15. A psychologist who is licensed under ch. 455, who is exercising the temporary authorization to practice, as defined in s. 455.50 (2) (o), in this state, or who is practicing under the authority to practice interjurisdictional telepsychology, as defined in s. 455.50 (2) (b).
16. A social worker, marriage and family therapist, or professional counselor certified or licensed under ch. 457.
17. A speech-language pathologist or audiologist licensed under subch. II of ch. 459 or a speech and language pathologist licensed by the department of public instruction.
18. A massage therapist or bodywork therapist licensed under ch. 460.
19. An ambulance service provider, as defined in s. 256.01 (3).
20. An emergency medical services practitioner, as defined in s. 256.01 (5).
21. An emergency medical responder, as defined in s. 256.01 (4p).
22. A radiographer or limited X−ray machine operator licensed or permitted under ch. 462.
23. A driver of an ambulance, as defined in s. 256.01(1t)."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. Section 940.204(1)(a) provides:

"In this section: 'family member' means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, or foster child."

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 2, supra.

9. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.204(3) which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (3)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (3)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (3) proper and the other facts that follow.

10. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1249A PHYSICAL ABUSE OF AN ELDER PERSON: INTENTIONAL CAUSATION OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.198(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of an elder person[1], as defined in § 940.198(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes great bodily harm to an elder person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[3]

2. The defendant intentionally[4] caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause great bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.

3. (Name of victim) was 60 years of age or older at the time of the offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required and a mistake regarding the (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1249A was approved by the Committee in October 2021.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving intentional physical abuse of an elder person causing great bodily harm as provided in Wis. Stat 940.198(2)(a). § 940.198(2)(a) was created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021].

Prior to the enactment of § 940.198, battery committed against persons 62 years of age or older was covered by WI JI-Criminal 1226 Battery With Substantial Risk of Great Bodily Harm. That instruction applied to all batteries involving a "substantial risk of great bodily harm," with the fact that the victim was over age 62 creating "a rebuttable presumption of conduct creating a substantial risk of great bodily harm."

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

1. The definition of "elder person" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(a) which provides: "'Elder person' means any individual who is 60 years of age or older."

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

3. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976). The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

4. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changes from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and B.

5. This is the standard statement that is used in other instructions where the victim's age is an element and is based on the complementary rules stated in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). Although both of those statutes refer to "the age of a minor," sub. (4) of § 940.198 provides a similar rule for this offense: "This section applies irrespective of whether the defendant had actual knowledge of the crime victim's age. A mistake regarding the crime victim's age is not a defense to prosecution under this section." The Committee concluded that the standard statement is clearer; no change in meaning is intended.

1249C PHYSICAL ABUSE OF AN ELDER PERSON: INTENTIONAL CAUSATION OF BODILY HARM TO AN ELDER PERSON UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES OR CONDITIONS THAT ARE LIKELY TO PRODUCE GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.198(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of an elder person[1], as defined in § 940.198(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes bodily harm to an elder person under circumstances or conditions that are likely to produce great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to cause bodily harm to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain

3. The circumstances or conditions under which the defendant caused bodily harm were likely to produce great bodily harm.

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[5]

4. The defendant knew that the circumstances or conditions under which (he) (she) caused bodily harm were likely to produce great bodily harm.[6]

5. (Name of victim) was 60 years of age or older at the time of the offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required and a mistake regarding the (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[7]

6. Section 940.198(2)(c) applies to those who "intentionally cause bodily harm to an elder person under circumstances or conditions that are likely to produce great bodily harm," Section 939.23(3) provides that when "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires that the actor "have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." The Committee concluded that this requires that the defendant charged under § 940.198(2)(c) must have known that the circumstances or conditions under which the he or she caused bodily harm were likely to produce great bodily harm.

7. This is the standard statement that is used in other instructions where the victim's age is an element and is based on the complementary rules stated in §§ 939.23(6) and 939.43(2). 1249D PHYSICAL ABUSE OF AN ELDER PERSON: RECKLESS CAUSATION OF GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.198(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of an elder person[1], as defined in § 940.198(3)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes great bodily harm to an elder person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[3]

2. The defendant recklessly caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[4]

In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should consider all the factors relating to the conduct. These include the following: what the defendant was doing; why (he) (she) was doing it; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; and whether the conduct showed any regard for the safety of (name of victim).[5]

3. (Name of victim) was 60 years of age or older at the time of the offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required and a mistake regarding the (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1249D was approved by the Committee in October 2021.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving reckless physical abuse of an elder person causing great bodily harm as provided in Wis. Stat 940.198(3)(a). § 940.198(3)(a) was created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021].

Prior to the enactment of § 940.198, battery committed against persons 62 years of age or older was covered by WI JI-Criminal 1226 Battery With Substantial Risk of Great Bodily Harm. That instruction applied to all batteries involving a "substantial risk of great bodily harm," with the fact that the victim was over age 62 creating "a rebuttable presumption of conduct creating a substantial risk of great bodily harm."

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

1. The definition of "elder person" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(a) which provides: "'Elder person' means any individual who is 60 years of age or older."

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

3. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976). The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

4. The definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(b). Note that this definition is different from the definition of "criminal recklessness" in § 939.24.

5. This paragraph is modeled after the one used for crimes involving recklessness as defined in § 939.24. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1020. It is believed to be appropriate here because, even though "recklessly" is defined differently in § 940.198(1)(b), the basic concept is the same – all the circumstances relating to the conduct should be considered in considering whether it created an unreasonable risk of harm and whether it showed conscious disregard for safety.

6. This is the standard statement that is used in other instructions where the victim's age is an element and is based on the rule stated in § 939.43(2). Although that statute refers to "the age of a minor," sub. (4) of § 940.198 provides a similar rule for this offense: "This section applies irrespective of whether the defendant had actual knowledge of the crime victim's age. A mistake regarding the crime victim's age is not a defense to prosecution under this section." The Committee concluded that the standard statement is clearer; no change in meaning is intended.

1249E PHYSICAL ABUSE OF AN ELDER PERSON: RECKLESS CAUSATION OF BODILY HARM — § 940.198(3)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of an elder person[1], as defined in § 940.198(3)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes bodily harm to an elder person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. The defendant recklessly caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[4]

In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should consider all the factors relating to the conduct. These include the following: what the defendant was doing; why (he) (she) was doing it; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; and whether the conduct showed any regard for the safety of (name of victim).[5]

3. (Name of victim) was 60 years of age or older at the time of the offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required and a mistake regarding the (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1249E was approved by the Committee in October 2021.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving reckless physical abuse of an elder person causing bodily harm as provided in Wis. Stat 940.198(3)(b). § 940.198(3)(b) was created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021].

Prior to the enactment of § 940.198, battery committed against persons 62 years of age or older was covered by WI JI-Criminal 1226 Battery With Substantial Risk of Great Bodily Harm. That instruction applied to all batteries involving a "substantial risk of great bodily harm," with the fact that the victim was over age 62 creating "a rebuttable presumption of conduct creating a substantial risk of great bodily harm."

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

1. The definition of "elder person" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(a) which provides: "'Elder person' means any individual who is 60 years of age or older."

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. The definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(b). Note that this definition is different from the definition of "criminal recklessness" in § 939.24.

5. This paragraph is modeled after the one used for crimes involving recklessness as defined in § 939.24. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1020. It is believed to be appropriate here because, even though "recklessly" is defined differently in § 940.198(1)(b), the basic concept is the same – all the circumstances relating to the conduct should be considered in considering whether it created an unreasonable risk of harm and whether it showed conscious disregard for safety.

6. This is the standard statement that is used in other instructions where the victim's age is an element and is based on the rule stated in § 939.43(2). Although that statute refers to "the age of a minor," sub. (4) of § 940.198 provides a similar rule for this offense: "This section applies irrespective of whether the defendant had actual knowledge of the crime victim's age. A mistake regarding the crime victim's age is not a defense to prosecution under this section." The Committee concluded that the standard statement is clearer; no change in meaning is intended.

1249F PHYSICAL ABUSE OF AN ELDER PERSON: RECKLESS CAUSATION OF BODILY HARM TO AN ELDER PERSON UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES OR CONDITIONS THAT ARE LIKELY TO PRODUCE GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.198(3)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Physical abuse of an elder person[1], as defined in § 940.198(3)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes bodily harm to an elder person under circumstances or conditions that are likely to produce great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing the bodily harm.[2]

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[3]

2. The defendant recklessly caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to (name of victim) and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim).[4]

In determining whether the conduct created an unreasonable risk of harm and showed a conscious disregard for the safety of (name of victim), you should consider all the factors relating to the conduct. These include the following: what the defendant was doing; why (he) (she) was doing it; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; and whether the conduct showed any regard for the safety of (name of victim).[5]

3. The circumstances or conditions under which the defendant caused bodily harm were likely to produce great bodily harm.

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[6]

4. (Name of victim) was 60 years of age or older at the time of the offense.

Knowledge of (name of victim)'s age by the defendant is not required and a mistake regarding the (name of victim)'s age is not a defense.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1249F was approved by the Committee in October 2021.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving reckless physical abuse of an elder person causing great bodily harm as provided in Wis. Stat 940.198(3)(a). § 940.198(3)(c) was created by 2021 Wisconsin Act 76 [effective date: August 8, 2021].

Subsection (2m) of § 939.66 provides that "a crime which is a less serious or equally serious type of battery than the one charged" qualifies as a lesser included offense of the charged crime. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

1. The definition of "elder person" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(a) which provides: "'Elder person' means any individual who is 60 years of age or older."

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

3. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

4. The definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.198(1)(b). Note that this definition is different from the definition of "criminal recklessness" in § 939.24.

5. This paragraph is modeled after the one used for crimes involving recklessness as defined in § 939.24. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1020. It is believed to be appropriate here because, even though "recklessly" is defined differently in § 940.198(1)(b), the basic concept is the same – all the circumstances relating to the conduct should be considered in considering whether it created an unreasonable risk of harm and whether it showed conscious disregard for safety.

6. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914. The reference to "other serious bodily injury" at the end of the statutory definition is intended to broaden the scope of the statute rather than to limit it by application of an "ejusdem generis" rationale. LaBarge v. State, 74 Wis.2d 327, 246 N.W.2d 794 (1976). The Committee concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

7. This is the standard statement that is used in other instructions where the victim's age is an element and is based on the rule stated in § 939.43(2). Although that statute refers to "the age of a minor," sub. (4) of § 940.198 provides a similar rule for this offense: "This section applies irrespective of whether the defendant had actual knowledge of the crime victim's age. A mistake regarding the crime victim's age is not a defense to prosecution under this section." The Committee concluded that the standard statement is clearer; no change in meaning is intended.

1248 SEXUAL EXPLOITATION BY THERAPIST — § 940.22

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual exploitation by a therapist, as defined in § 940.22 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is or holds himself or herself out to be a therapist and who intentionally has sexual contact with a patient or client during any ongoing therapist-patient or therapist-client relationship.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four[1] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (was) (held (himself) (herself) out to be) a therapist.

   "Therapist"[2] means a person who performs or purports to perform psychotherapy.[3]

   To be considered a therapist, it is not necessary that a person be licensed or certified by the state.

   ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT IS A MEMBER OF A PROFESSION LISTED IN § 940.22(1)(I):

   ["Therapist" may include a _____ if that person performs or purports to perform psychotherapy.][4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (patient) (client) of the defendant.

3. The defendant intentionally had sexual contact with (name of victim).

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1200A FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL CONTACT" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.

4. The sexual contact occurred during an ongoing therapist-patient or therapist-client relationship.

It is not required that the sexual contact took place during an actual treatment session, consultation, interview, or examination.[5] It is sufficient if a therapist-patient or therapist-client relationship existed between the defendant and (name of victim) when the sexual contact occurred.

You should consider all the circumstances in determining whether a therapist-patient or therapist-client relationship existed.[6]

Whether or not (name of victim) consented to sexual contact is not an issue in this case.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1248 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1992, 1996 and 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2005.

The 2006 revision changed the definition of "therapist" in the first element, in part to reflect the decision in State v. Draughon, 2005 WI App 162, 285 Wis.2d 633, 702 N.W.2d 412. The court of appeals held that "the jury instruction addressing Draughon's status as a 'therapist' under § 940.22(1)(I) was error." The trial court followed the format recommended by Wis JI-Criminal 1248 [8 1996], which provided as follows for the first element: "'Therapist'" means a person who performs psychotherapy. It includes a (identify type of therapist) ." The court of appeals concluded that stating "It includes a member of the clergy" as called for by Wis JI-Criminal 1248 "lead[s] to the faulty conclusion that by definition, clergy members perform psychotherapy." Because "the instruction given never directed the jury to make an independent, beyond-a-reasonable-doubt decision as to whether Draughon performed or purported to perform psychotherapy . . . its omission is constitutional error." Draughon, ¶14.

This instruction was revised in 2005 to reflect the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. DeLain, 2005 WI 52, 280 Wis.2d 51, 695 N.W.2d 484. The court held "that it is the totality of the circumstances . . . that determines whether there was an ongoing therapist-patient relationship when sexual contact occurred." DeLain, ¶24. See footnote 5, below. The DeLain decision also "disavow[ed] the court of appeals discussion of 'intentionally.'" Id. at ¶24. The court of appeals had concluded that because § 940.22 used the word "intentionally" it required that the defendant know that the victim was a patient and know that the defendant and the victim had an ongoing therapist-patient relationship. State v. DeLain, 2004 WI App 79, 272 Wis.2d 356, 679 N.W.2d 562, ¶¶10-11, citing § 939.23(3). The Committee had revised the instruction to add an element embodying this knowledge requirement but deleted it in response to the supreme court decision.

This instruction provides for inserting a definition of "sexual contact" as provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1200A. That definitional material was formerly included in the text of each offense instruction. When a new alternative was added to the statutory definition of sexual contact by 1995 Wisconsin Act 69, the Committee decided to modify its original approach by providing a separate instruction that included all alternatives for definition of the term. The Committee believes that this will be more convenient to the users of the instructions, making it easier to prepare an instruction that is tailored to the facts of the case.

1. State v. DeLain, 2005 WI 52, 280 Wis.2d 51, 695 N.W.2d 484, the Wisconsin Supreme Court stated that this offense has three elements. ¶9. The instruction provides for four elements, using a separate element for the victim's status as a patient or client of the defendant. See element 2. No change in substance is intended.

2. Section 940.22(1)(I) provides the following definition of "therapist":

> "Therapist" means a physician, psychologist, social worker, marriage and family therapist, professional counselor, nurse, chemical dependency counselor, member of the clergy or other person, whether or not licensed or certified by the state, who performs or purports to perform psychotherapy.

The Committee concluded that the instruction would be more clear if it provided a general definition of the term ("a person who performs or purports to perform psychotherapy") and then provided for a statement, to be used where applicable, that one of the professions named in subsec. (1)(I) may be included in the definition. See State v. Draughon, 2005 WI App 162, discussed in the first paragraph of the Comment, and note 4, below.

3. "Psychotherapy" should be defined if necessary. Section 940.22(1)(d) refers to the definition in § 455.01(6), which reads as follows:

> "Psychotherapy" means the use of learning, conditioning methods and emotional reactions in a professional relationship to assist persons to modify feelings, attitudes and behaviors which are intellectually, socially or emotionally maladjustive or ineffectual.

4. If the case involves one of the "therapists" listed in § 940.22(1)(I), insert the name in the blank provided. See note 2, supra.

5. The requirement that the sexual contact occur "during an ongoing therapist-patient or therapist-client relationship" was added by 1985 Wisconsin Act 275. The same act eliminated the requirement that the contact occur during any particular examination, interview, etc.

A teacher who engages in informal counseling with students is not engaged as a professional therapist, even if the teacher has a psychology degree. "[T]he only reasonable meaning of the requirement for an ongoing therapist-patient/client relationship in the criminal statute is that of a professional therapist-patient/client relationship." State v. Ambrose, 196 Wis.2d 768, 777, 540 N.W.2d 208 (Ct. App. 1995).

6. This statement is based on State v. DeLain, 2005 WI 52, 280 Wis.2d 51, 695 N.W.2d 484, where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held "that it is the totality of the circumstances . . . that determines whether there was an ongoing therapist-patient relationship when sexual contact occurred." DeLain, ¶24. The decision then refers to factors that may be relevant to this determination, though not dispositive: a defendant's state of mind; a secret unilateral action of a patient; the explicit remarks of one party to the other regarding the status of the relationship; how much time has gone by since the last therapy session; how close together the therapy sessions had been to each other; the age of the patient; the particular vulnerabilities experienced by the patient as a result of his or her mental health issues; and, the ethical obligations of the therapist's profession [referring to sections in the Wisconsin Administrative Code: § Psy 5.01(31), § MPSW 20.02(21), and § Psy 5.01(14)(a)-(b) and (c)1-7]. DeLain, ¶24.

The DeLain decision also "disavow[ed] the court of appeals discussion of 'intentionally.'" Id. at ¶24. The court of appeals had concluded that because § 940.22 used the word "intentionally" it required that the defendant know that the victim was a patient and know that the defendant and the victim had an ongoing therapist-patient relationship. State v. DeLain, 2004 WI App 79, 272 Wis.2d 356, 679 N.W.2d 562, ¶¶10-11, citing § 939.23(3).

7. "Without consent" is not included as an element in the statute. To avoid possible speculation or confusion, the Committee concluded that the jury should be specifically informed that consent is not an issue.

1250 FIRST DEGREE RECKLESS INJURY — § 940.23(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree reckless injury, as defined in § 940.23(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes great bodily harm to another human being under circumstances that show utter disregard for human life.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of first degree reckless injury, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.[1]

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.[2]

2. The defendant caused great bodily harm by criminally reckless conduct.

   "Criminally reckless conduct" means:[3]

   - the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm to another person; and

- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant was aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.[4]

3. The circumstances of the defendant's conduct showed utter disregard[5] for human life.

In determining whether the circumstances of the conduct showed utter disregard for human life, consider these factors: what the defendant was doing; why the defendant was engaged in that conduct; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; whether the conduct showed any regard for life;[6] and, all other facts and circumstances relating to the conduct.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENDANT'S AFTER-THE-FACT CONDUCT HAS BEEN ADMITTED.[7]

[Consider also the defendant's conduct after the great bodily harm to the extent that it helps you decide whether or not the circumstances showed utter disregard for human life at the time the great bodily harm occurred.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense were present, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1250 was originally published in 1962 and revised in 1989, 2002, and 2012 and 2015. The 2012 revision added the material at footnote 7. The 2015 revision revised footnote 4 to reflect 2013 Wisconsin Act 307. The Comment was updated in April 2019. A "Reporter's Note" was removed in 2020.

This instruction is for a violation of § 940.23(1), as amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The amended statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989. For a brief overview of the homicide revision, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI Criminal 1000. A comprehensive outline and discussion of the changes can be found in "The Importance of Clarity in the Law of Homicide: The Wisconsin Revision," by Walter Dickey, David Schultz, and James L. Fullin, Jr., 1989 Wisconsin Law Review 1325.

First degree reckless injury replaces what was called "injury by conduct regardless of life" under prior law.

The homicide revision also created § 940.23(2), Second Degree Reckless Injury. See Wis JI Criminal 1252.

In State v. Kloss, 2019 WI App 13, 386 Wis.2d 314, 925 N.W.2d 563, the court of appeals held that solicitation of first-degree reckless injury is a crime and that solicitation of first degree recklessly endangering safety is a lesser included offense thereof.

1. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

2. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

3. "Criminal recklessness" is defined as follows in § 939.24(1):

> . . . 'criminal recklessness' means that the actor creates an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being and the actor is aware of that risk.

The Judicial Council Note to § 939.24, 1987 Senate Bill 191, explains that "[r]ecklessness requires both the creation of an objectively unreasonable and substantial risk of human death or great bodily harm and the actor's subjective awareness of that risk."

4. The statutory definition of "recklessness" clarifies that subjective awareness of the risk is required. That raises the possibility that intoxication could, as a factual matter, negate awareness of the risk. For that reason, the original definition of recklessness provided that if voluntary intoxication prevented the actor from being aware of the risk, it was not a defense. This rule was set forth in § 939.24(3):

> (3) A voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness if, had the actor not been in that condition, he or she would have been aware of creating an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being.

The Judicial Council Note to subsection (3) explains it as follows:

Subsection (3) continues the present rule that a voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness. Ameen v. State, 51 Wis.2d 175, 185, 186 N.W.2d 206 (1971). Patterned on s. 2.08 of the model penal code, it premises liability on whether the actor would have been aware if not in such condition of the risk of death or great bodily harm. The commentaries to s. 2.08, model penal code, state the rationale of this rule in extended fashion.

Note to § 939.24(3), 1987 Senate Bill 191.

Section 939.42, the statute codifying both voluntary and involuntary intoxication defenses, was revised by 2013 Wisconsin Act 307 [effective date: April 18, 2014]. Reference to voluntary intoxication was eliminated; as amended, the statute refers only to involuntary intoxication. Act 307 also repealed former sub. (3) of § 939.24, thus getting rid of the special rule excluding voluntary intoxication as a defense to the "aware of the risk" element. For cases arising before the effective date of Act 307, the suggestion included in the previous version of this Comment would still apply: "In a case where there is evidence of intoxication, it may be helpful to advise the jury of the rule provided in subsection (3). The Committee concluded that simply reading the statute is the best way to provide the necessary information."

5. "Under circumstances which show utter disregard for human life" is the factor that distinguishes this offense from second degree reckless homicide. The Judicial Council Note to § 940.02 provides that it is intended to reflect the substance of case law defining "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life":

First-degree reckless homicide is analogous to the prior offense of 2nd-degree murder. The concept of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life" has been a difficult one for modern juries to comprehend. To avoid the mistaken connotation that a clinical mental disorder is involved, the offense has been recodified as aggravated reckless homicide. The revision clarifies that a subjective mental state, i.e., criminal recklessness, is required for liability. See s. 939.24, stats. The aggravating element, i.e., circumstances which show utter disregard for human life, is intended to codify judicial interpretations of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life." State v. Dolan, 44 Wis.2d 68, 170 N.W.2d 822 (1969); State v. Weso, 60 Wis.2d 404, 210 N.W.2d 442 (1973).

Note to § 940.02, 1987 Senate Bill 191.

The Dolan and Weso cases do not contain significant definitions themselves but rather cite with approval Wis JI-Criminal 1345 (© 1962), which used the phrase "utter lack of concern for the life and safety of another."

The Committee concluded that no further definition of the phrase "utter disregard" was necessary. The jury should be able to give the phrase a common sense meaning in determining whether the conduct is such that it amounts to aggravated reckless homicide offense.

A phrase with essentially the same meaning is used in the Model Penal Code. Section 2.02(1)(b) provides that criminal homicide constitutes murder when it is "committed recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life." The Commentary to § 2.02(1)(b) explains that whether conduct demonstrates "extreme indifference" "is not a question . . . that can be further clarified." Attempts to explain the term by reference to common law concepts, says the Commentary, suffer from lack of clarity, and "extreme indifference" is simpler and more direct than other attempts to reformulate the common law.

The Judicial Council Committee considered the Model Penal Code formulation but opted for "utter disregard," apparently on the grounds that it would more clearly tie in with prior case law which could be referred to for examples of the kind of conduct that is intended to be covered by first degree reckless homicide under the revised statutes.

For discussions of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life" under prior law, see, e.g., Balistreri v. State, 83 Wis.2d 440, 265 N.W.2d 290 (1978); Wagner v. State, 76 Wis.2d 30, 250 N.W.2d 331 (1977); and Seidler v. State, 64 Wis.2d 456, 219 N.W.2d 320 (1974). In State v. Geske, 2012 WI App 15, 339 Wis.2d 170, 810 N.W.2d 226, the defendant, convicted of first degree reckless homicide, challenged the sufficiency of the evidence on the "utter disregard" element. Relying on the Wagner and Balistreri cases, she argued that her swerve just before the collision showed some regard for human life. The court held that the evidence of the swerve had to be considered in the context of all the circumstances: "A legally intoxicated person driving over eighty miles per hour through the city could not reasonably expect to avoid any collision by swerving at the last moment. Given the totality of the situation here, Geske's ineffectual swerve failed to demonstrate a regard for human life." ¶18.

The meaning of "utter disregard for human life" was discussed in State v. Jensen, 2000 WI 84, 236 Wis.2d 521, 613 N.W.2d 170. The court relied on Weso, supra, to conclude that the phrase identifies an objective standard. The court noted:

> Although "utter disregard for human life" clearly has something to do with mental state, it is not a sub-part of the intent element of this crime, and, as such, need not be subjectively proven. It can be (and often is) proven by evidence relating to the defendant's subjective state of mind-by the defendant's statements, for example, before, during and after the crime. But it can also be established by evidence of heightened risk, because of special vulnerabilities of the victim, for example, or evidence of a particularly obvious, potentially lethal danger. However it is proven, the element of utter disregard for human life is measured objectively, on the basis of what a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have known. ¶17.

The Committee considered changing the instruction in response to Jensen, but concluded that the text accurately conveys a standard consistent with the decision. Jensen concluded that the standard could be understood and applied "without categorical rules being laid down by appellate courts on sufficiency of the evidence challenges." ¶29. The Committee concluded that the instruction could also be properly applied without attempting to articulate "categorical rules."

Also see, State v. Edmunds, 229 Wis.2d 67, 598 N.W.2d 290 (Ct. App. 1999), which, like Jensen, reviewed the application of the "utter disregard . . ." standard to a "shaken baby" case.

6. All the circumstances relating to the defendant's conduct should be considered in determining whether that conduct shows "utter disregard" for human life. These circumstances would include facts relating to the possible provocation of the defendant:

> Under prior law, adequate provocation mitigated 2nd-degree murder to manslaughter. State v. Hoyt, 21 Wis.2d 284, 124 N.W.2d 47 (1965). Under this revision, the analogs of those crimes, i.e., first-degree reckless and 2nd-degree intentional homicide, carry the same penalty; thus mitigation is impossible. Evidence of provocation will usually be admissible in prosecutions for crimes requiring criminal recklessness, however, as relevant to the reasonableness of the risk (and, in prosecutions under this section, whether the circumstances show utter disregard for human life). Since provocation is integrated into the calculus of recklessness, it is not an affirmative defense thereto and the burdens of production and persuasion stated in s. 940.01(3), stats., are inapplicable.
> Judicial Council Note to § 940.02, 1987 Senate Bill 191.

7. This material was added in 2011 in response to the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Burris, 2011 WI 32, 333 Wis.2d 87, 797 N.W.2d 430. The decision reversed a decision of the court of appeals which had reversed Burris' conviction for 1st degree reckless injury. The court of appeals reversed because the trial court's response to a jury question about whether after-the-incident conduct should be considered in evaluating whether "the circumstances show utter disregard for human life" was potentially misleading. The supreme court held:

> ¶7 We conclude that, in an utter disregard analysis, a defendant's conduct is not, as a matter of law, assigned more or less weight whether the conduct occurred before, during, or after the crime. We hold that, when evaluating whether a defendant acted with utter disregard for human life, a fact-finder should consider any relevant evidence in regard to the totality of the circumstances.

The court also held, that under the facts of the Burris case, "the supplemental instruction did not mislead the jury into believing that it could not consider Burris's relevant after-the-fact conduct in its determination on utter disregard for human life." ¶8.

The court recommended that the Committee address this issue in the jury instructions:

> ¶64 . . . [S]upplemental instructions such as the one given here, taken out of context from Jensen, do have the potential to be confusing. Thus, we recommend that the Criminal Jury Instruction Committee, in its comments to the "first-degree reckless" offense instructions, Wis JI-Criminal 1016-22, 1250, and the utter disregard for human life instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 924A, advise against taking certain language directly from utter disregard cases such as Jensen without providing the necessary context to fully explain the proper inquiry. Additionally, we recommend that the Committee consider revising these instructions to more explicitly direct the jury that, in its utter disregard for human life consideration, it should consider the totality of the circumstances including any relevant evidence regarding a defendant's conduct before, during, and after the crime.

The addition to the instruction referring to after-the-fact conduct is intended to address the court's suggestions. The committee decided it was not necessary to include a reference to conduct before or during the act because the paragraph immediately preceding the addition calls the jury's attention to "what the defendant was doing" and "all the other facts and circumstances relating to the conduct." Juries will rarely have questions about the relevance of conduct before and during the act but they may have questions about the after-fact-conduct, as the jury in the Burris case did.

1252 SECOND DEGREE RECKLESS INJURY — § 940.23(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree reckless injury, as defined in § 940.23(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly causes great bodily harm to another human being.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of second degree reckless injury, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's act was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.[1]

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[2] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

2. The defendant caused great bodily harm by criminally reckless conduct.

   "Criminally reckless conduct" means:[3]

   - the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm to another person; and

- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant was aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.[4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense were present, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1252 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2015; it revised footnote 4 to reflect 2013 Wisconsin Act 307.

This instruction is for a violation of § 940.23(2), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989. For a brief overview of the homicide revision, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI-Criminal 1000. A comprehensive outline and discussion of the changes can be found in "The Importance of Clarity in the Law of Homicide: The Wisconsin Revision," by Walter Dickey, David Schultz, and James L. Fullin, Jr., 1989 Wisconsin Law Review 1325.

1. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of death. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 901 Cause.

2. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. The definition was changed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 to substitute "substantial risk" for "high probability" in the phrase "substantial risk of death." See Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

3. "Criminal recklessness" is defined as follows in § 939.24(1):

> . . . 'criminal recklessness' means that the actor creates an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being and the actor is aware of that risk.

The Judicial Council Note to § 939.24, 1987 Senate Bill 191, explains that "[r]ecklessness requires both the creation of an objectively unreasonable and substantial risk of human death or great bodily harm and the actor's subjective awareness of that risk."

4. The statutory definition of "recklessness" clarifies that subjective awareness of the risk is required. That raises the possibility that intoxication could, as a factual matter, negate awareness of the risk. For that reason, the original definition of recklessness provided that if voluntary intoxication prevented the actor from being aware of the risk, it was not a defense. This rule was set forth in § 939.24(3):

> (3) A voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness if, had the actor not been in that condition, he or she would have been aware of creating an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being.
> The Judicial Council Note to subsection (3) explains it as follows:
> Subsection (3) continues the present rule that a voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness. Ameen v. State, 51 Wis.2d 175, 185, 186 N.W.2d 206 (1971). Patterned on s. 2.08 of the model penal code, it premises liability on whether the actor would have been aware if not in such condition of the risk of death or great bodily harm. The commentaries to s. 2.08, model penal code, state the rationale of this rule in extended fashion.

Note to § 939.24(3), 1987 Senate Bill 191.

Section 939.42, the statute codifying both voluntary and involuntary intoxication defenses, was revised by 2013 Wisconsin Act 307 [effective date: April 18, 2014]. Reference to voluntary intoxication was eliminated; as amended, the statute refers only to involuntary intoxication. Act 307 also repealed former sub. (3) of § 939.24, thus getting rid of the special rule excluding voluntary intoxication as a defense to the "aware of the risk" element. For cases arising before the effective date of Act 307, the suggestion included in the previous version of this Comment would still apply: "In a case where there is evidence of intoxication, it may be helpful to advise the jury of the rule provided in subsection (3). The Committee concluded that simply reading the statute is the best way to provide the necessary information.

1255 STRANGULATION AND SUFFOCATION — § 940.235

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.235 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally impedes the normal breathing or circulation of blood by applying pressure on the throat or neck or by blocking the nose or mouth of another person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant impeded the normal breathing or circulation of blood by applying pressure on the throat or neck or by blocking the nose or mouth of (name of victim).

2. The defendant did so intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to impede normal breathing or circulation of blood or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[1]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

> ADD THE FOLLOWING QUESTION IF THE DEFENDANT HAS A PREVIOUS CONVICTION UNDER § 939.632(1)(e)1 AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACTOR IS ESTABLISHED[2]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime)[3] ?]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1255 was originally published in 2009. The comment was revised in 2014. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2021; it added the penalty-increasing special question. It also added to the Comment.

This instruction addresses violations of § 940.235, created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 127 [effective date: April 4, 2008].

1. Section 939.23(3). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and B.

2. Section 940.235(2) provides that this offense is a Class G felony if "the actor has a previous conviction under this section or a previous conviction for a violent crime, as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1." Violent crimes defined in s. 939.632(1)(e)1. are felonies under 34 specified statutes.

The statutorily-authorized penalty-increasing provision in subsection (2) requires proof of a prior conviction. Therefore, the fact that the defendant was convicted of a "violent crime" under § 939.632(1)(e)1. must be found by the jury. For example, in State v. Warbelton, 2009 WI 6, ¶3, 315 Wis.2d 253, 759 N.W.2d 557, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that a prior conviction for a violent crime under § 940.32(2m)(a) "is an element of the stalking crime, rather than a penalty enhancer." The Committee concluded that presenting the penalty-increasing fact as a special question, as done in this instruction, is not inconsistent with its status as an element of the crime.

Warbelton also held that if a defendant stipulates to the existence of the prior conviction, the prior conviction element is still to be presented to the jury in the absence of a jury trial waiver on that element. In the Warbelton case, the parties stipulated to the fact of prior conviction. The stipulation was accepted, but the state refused to consent to a jury trial waiver on the prior conviction element. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held the trial court did not err in submitting the element to the jury. The Court held that State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997), which allows withdrawal of the "status element" in a case involving a charge of operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration, is limited to prosecutions for driving while under the influence of an intoxicant or with a prohibited alcohol concentration. For a discussion of stipulations that go to elements of the crime and jury trial waivers in that context, see Wis JI-Criminal 162A, Law Note: Stipulations.

3. The applicable crimes are: a "violent crime" as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.

1260 INJURY BY NEGLIGENT HANDLING OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON — § 940.24[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Injury by negligent handling of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 940.24 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who causes bodily harm to another human being by the negligent operation or handling of a dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated or handled a dangerous weapon.
2. The defendant operated or handled[2] a dangerous weapon in a manner constituting criminal negligence.
3. The defendant's operation or handling of a dangerous weapon caused bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Cause" means that criminal negligence by the defendant was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm.[3]

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[4]

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[5]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[6]]

[any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[7]][8]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Meaning of "Criminal Negligence"

"Criminal negligence" means:[9]

- the defendant's operation or handling of a dangerous weapon created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation or handling of a dangerous weapon created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1260 was originally published in 1963 and revised in 1986, 1988 and 2000. This revision was approved the Committee in February 2011 and involved adding reference to 2011 Wisconsin Act 2 to the Comment and reorganizing the definitions in the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 940.24, as amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The amended statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1260 (8 1989) for offenses committed after that date. For a discussion of the homicide revision generally, and of the offense covered by this instruction, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI-Criminal 1000.

2011 Wisconsin Act 2 amended § 940.24 to add an exception by creating subsection (3) to read:

> (3) Subsection (1) does not apply to a health care provider acting within the scope of his or her practice or employment.

"Health care provider" is defined in one other Criminal Code statute. Section 940.20(7)(a)3. provides: "'Health care provider' means any person who is licensed, registered, permitted or certified by the department of health services or the department of regulation and licensing to provide health care services in this state." Note that § 940.24 applies only to criminal negligence in the "operation or handling of a dangerous weapon, explosives, or fire . . ." It is not obvious to the Committee how the exception for health care providers would relate to the elements of this offense.

The usual practice in Wisconsin is to treat statutory exceptions like affirmative defenses: If there is some evidence of the exception, the burden is on the state to prove that the exception does not apply. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon, which recommends adding an element where there is a claim that the defendant was a peace officer; peace officers are subject to an exception from the ban on carrying concealed weapon in § 941.23.

1. The 1988 homicide revision amended the list of instrumentalities in § 940.24 by striking "firearm, airgun, knife or bow and arrow" and replacing those terms with "dangerous weapons, explosives or fire."

The Judicial Council Note to § 940.24 (1987 Senate Bill 191) indicates that the intent was not to eliminate any of the previously mentioned instrumentalities:

> The definition of the offense is broadened to include highly negligent handling of fire, explosives and dangerous weapons other than a firearm, airgun, knife or bow and arrow. See s. 939.22(10), stats.

2. In State v. Bodoh, 226 Wis.2d 718, 595 N.W.2d 330 (1999), the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that § 940.24 could apply to a case where the defendant's dogs caused injury to a fourteen-year-old boy who was riding a bicycle. The decision resorted to the dictionary to conclude that Bodoh did not "operate" his dogs because a person normally has to be present to "perform a function with a dog or to control the functioning of a dog." However, the court found that a person need not be physically present to "handle" a dog: Bodoh handled the dogs because he "was responsible for supervising, directing, and controlling his dogs." 226 Wis.2d 718, 731.

3. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient in most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

> There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

4. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

5. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based on the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in s. 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

6. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of that term, as defined in § 939.22(14).

7. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of that term, as defined in § 939.22(14).

8. A potential problem in instructing on this part of the definition of dangerous weapon is illustrated by State v. Tomlinson, 2002 WI 91, 254 Wis.2d 502, 648 N.W.2d 367. Tomlinson was charged with being party to the crime of first degree reckless homicide while using a dangerous weapon. In instructing on the dangerous weapon penalty enhancer the court stated: "'Dangerous weapon' means a baseball bat." The supreme court held that the instruction was error, concluding that it created a "mandatory conclusive presumption because it requires the jury to find that Tomlinson used a 'dangerous weapon' . . . if it first finds . . . that he used a baseball bat." 2002 WI 91, ¶62.

In light of Tomlinson, the Committee concluded that the definition of "dangerous weapon" in the instructions should be revised to include all the statutory alternatives in the text of the instruction. The alternative to be used in a case like Tomlinson would be the following:

"Dangerous weapon" means any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.

If instructing the jury in terms tailored to the facts of the case is believed to be desirable, a different approach for a baseball bat case might be as follows:

The state alleges that a baseball bat was a dangerous weapon. A baseball bat may be considered to be a dangerous weapon if, in the manner it was used, it was calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

9. The instruction on criminal negligence is based on the definition provided in § 939.25. The Committee concluded that this definition, which highlights the three significant components of the statutory definition, is preferable to the one formerly used, which began by defining "ordinary negligence." See Wis JI-Criminal 925 for a complete discussion of the Committee's rationale for adopting this definition and for optional material that may be added if believed to be necessary.

10. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

1261 INJURY (GREAT BODILY HARM) BY NEGLIGENT USE OF A VEHICLE — § 940.245

[INSTRUCTION RENUMBERED – SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2654]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1261 was originally published in 1986. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 2654 in 1988.

Section 940.245 was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 and recreated as subsection (4) of 346.62, Reckless Driving. The change was made as part of the revision of the homicide and related statutes which had an effective date of January 1, 1989. Wis JI-Criminal 2654 is to be used in place of Wis JI-Criminal 1261 for offenses committed on or after that date.

1262 INJURY (GREAT BODILY HARM) BY OPERATION OF A VEHICLE WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE — § 940.25(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.25(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who causes great bodily harm to another by the operation of a vehicle while under the influence of an intoxicant.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[2] a vehicle.[3]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[4]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[5] in producing great bodily harm.

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[6] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

3. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to operate a vehicle was materially impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[7]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle and control a motor vehicle.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular acts of unsafe driving. What is required is that the person's ability to safely control the vehicle be materially impaired.

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[8]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING MORE THAN 0.04 BUT LESS THAN 0.08 GRAMS HAVE BEEN ADMITTED, THE EVIDENCE IS RELEVANT BUT DOES NOT HAVE PRIMA FACIE EFFECT. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 232.[9]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[10] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[11] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time of the alleged operating, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[12]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[13]

[Jury's Decision]

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2),[14] USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not been under the influence of an intoxicant.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[15] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[16]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[17] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[18] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not been under the influence of an intoxicant and had been exercising due care.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1262 was originally published in 1978 and revised in 1982, 1986, 1988, 1993, 2004, and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2014.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.25(1)(a), causing great bodily harm while operating under the influence an intoxicant. For cases involving great bodily harm to an unborn child, see Wis JI-Criminal 1185A which identifies the changes that should be made in the instructions.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1263 for the related offense involving a prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] of .08 or more. For persons with three or more priors, the PAC level is .02. See Wis JI-Criminal 1263A. For cases involving two charges – under the influence and PAC – Wis JI-Criminal 1189 can be used as a model.

Section 940.25(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she had not been under the influence . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 14 and following. The defense was formerly addressed in a separate instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 1188, which has been withdrawn. The constitutionality of the defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in the Introductory Comment that precedes Wis JI-Criminal 2600. They are cross-referenced by paragraph number in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant, which is defined to include "an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, . . . a controlled substance or controlled substance analog under ch. 961, . . . any combination of an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, controlled substance and controlled substance analog, or . . . any other drug, or . . . an alcohol beverage and any other drug." See § 939.22(42) in note 7, below. For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664A. For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving a "hazardous inhalant," see Wis JI-Criminal 2667.

2. Section 940.25 refers only to "operation" of a vehicle. It does not include "handling" as the statute defining the otherwise identical homicide offense does. [Compare § 940.09.]

3. Section 939.22(44) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

4. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

5. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. If additional definition is necessary, see note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1185, and Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

6. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of "great bodily harm."

7. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving the influence of a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664. For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664A. The definition in the instruction paraphrases the full definition provided in § 939.22(42):

> "Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the actor's ability to operate a vehicle or handle a firearm or airgun is materially impaired because of his or her consumption of an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, of a controlled substance or controlled substance analog under ch. 961, of any combination of an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, controlled substance and controlled substance analog, or of any other drug or of an alcohol beverage and any other drug.

Note: "hazardous inhalant" was added to the definition in § 939.22(42) by 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 [effective date: Dec. 14, 2013]. Act 83 also created a definition of "hazardous inhalant" in § 939.22(15). For a model tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving a "hazardous inhalant," see Wis JI-Criminal 2667.

For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

8. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

9. It may be that cases will be charged under § 940.09(1)(a) where a test has shown an alcohol concentration of more than 0.04 grams but less than 0.08 grams. Section 885.235(1)(b) provides that a test result in this range "is relevant evidence on intoxication . . . but is not to be given any prima facie effect." Wis JI-Criminal 232 provides an instruction for this situation.

10. Regarding the evidentiary significance of test results, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

11. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

12. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Section 940.09(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the death would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she had not been under the influence of an intoxicant . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used.

14. See note 13, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

15. Section 940.09(2) expressly places the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction describes the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

16. The material that follows was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to articulate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

17. The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

18. The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 940.09(2). The third sentence in the bracketed material is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted. See note 16, supra, and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

19. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements have not been proved [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

1263 INJURY (GREAT BODILY HARM) BY OPERATION OF A VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE — § 940.25(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.25(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who causes great bodily harm to another by the operation of a vehicle while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[2] a vehicle.[3]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[4]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[5] in producing the great bodily harm.

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[6] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

3. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[7]

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[8]

WHERE TEST RESULTS SHOWING 0.08 GRAMS OR MORE HAVE BEEN ADMITTED[9] AND THERE IS NO ISSUE RELATING TO THE DEFENDANT'S POSITION ON THE "BLOOD-ALCOHOL CURVE,"[10] THE JURY SHOULD BE INSTRUCTED AS FOLLOWS:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the defendant's blood] [.08 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the defendant's breath] at the time the test was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time of the alleged operating, unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[11]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[12]

[Jury's Decision]

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2),[13] USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[14] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[15]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[16] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[17] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration and had been exercising due care.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[18]]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1263 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1986, 1988, 1993, and 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2005.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.25(1)(b) involving a prohibited alcohol concentration [PAC] of .08 or more. The 2004 revision reflected the change in the prohibited alcohol concentration level for persons with 2 or fewer priors from 0.10 to 0.08 made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30. The change applies to all offenses committed on or after September 30, 2003. For persons with three or more priors, the PAC level is .02. See Wis JI-Criminal 1263A.

The 2006 revision reflected the correction made in § 885.235 by 2005 Wisconsin Act 8. That correction restored statutory authority for giving prima facie effect to test results in cases where the defendant has three or more priors. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, sec. VII.

For cases involving great bodily harm to an unborn child, see Wis JI-Criminal 1185A which identifies the changes that should be made in the instructions.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1262 for the related offense of causing great bodily harm while operating under the influence, as defined in § 940.25(1)(a). For cases involving two charges – operating under the influence and with a PAC – Wis JI-Criminal 1189 can be used as a model.

Section 940.25(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 13 and following. The defense was formerly addressed in a separate instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 1188, which has been withdrawn. The constitutionality of the defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

The 2004 revision adopted a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in the Introductory Comment that precedes Wis JI-Criminal 2600. They are cross-referenced by paragraph number in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Section 940.25(1)(b) defines this offense as causing death by operation or handling a vehicle "while the person has a prohibited alcohol concentration as defined in s. 340.01(46m)." Section 340.01(46m), as amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 [effective date: September 30, 2003], provides as follows:

(a) If the person has 2 or fewer prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, as counted under s. 343.307(1), an alcohol concentration of 0.08 or more.
[(b) – repealed]

(c) If the person has 3 or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, as counted under s. 343.307(1), an alcohol concentration of more than 0.02.

Section 340.01(1v) defines "alcohol concentration" as follows:

(1v) "Alcohol concentration" means any of the following:

(a) The number of grams of alcohol per 100 milliliters of a person's blood.
(b) The number of grams of alcohol per 210 liters of a persons's breath.

The instruction refers to "prohibited alcohol concentration" in the introductory paragraph and in the general statement of the third element. It then provides for using the appropriate measure of alcohol concentration – blood alcohol or alcohol in the breath – in the definition of the third element. For cases involving 0.02 level, see Wis JI-Criminal 1263A.

2. Section 940.25 refers only to "operation" of a vehicle. It does not include "handling" as the statute defining the otherwise identical homicide offense does. [Compare § 940.09.]

3. Section 939.22(44) defines "vehicle" as follows:

"Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

4. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of "great bodily harm."

7. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

8. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

10. Regarding the "blood alcohol curve," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

Section 940.09(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the death would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used.

13. See note 12, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

1263A INJURY (GREAT BODILY HARM) BY OPERATION OF A VEHICLE WITH A PROHIBITED ALCOHOL CONCENTRATION — 0.02 GRAMS OR MORE — § 940.09(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.25(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who causes great bodily harm to another by the operation of a vehicle while that person has a prohibited alcohol concentration.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following [three] [four][2] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated[3] a vehicle.[4]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[5]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused great bodily harm to (name of victim) .

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[6] in producing great bodily harm.

   "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[7] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

3. The defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

Definition of "Prohibited Alcohol Concentration"

"Prohibited alcohol concentration" means[8]

[.02 grams or more of alcohol in 210 liters of the person's breath].

[.02 grams or more of alcohol in 100 milliliters of the person's blood].

NOTE: THE DEFENDANT'S ADMISSION OF THREE OR MORE PRIOR CONVICTIONS DISPENSES WITH THE NEED FOR PROOF OF THE FOLLOWING ELEMENT. IF THERE IS AN ADMISSION, DO NOT INSTRUCT ON THIS ELEMENT AND PROCEED TO THE PARAGRAPH CAPTIONED "HOW TO USE THE TEST RESULT EVIDENCE."[9]

[4. The defendant had three or more convictions, suspensions, or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1).][10]

IF THE FOURTH ELEMENT IS INCLUDED AND IF REQUESTED BY THE DEFENDANT, THE FOLLOWING CAUTIONARY INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN:[11]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant had prior convictions, suspensions, or revocations. This evidence was received as relevant to the status of the defendant's driving record, which is an issue in this case. It must not be used for any other purpose and, particularly, you should bear in mind that conviction, suspension, or revocation at some previous time is not proof that the defendant operated a motor vehicle with a prohibited alcohol concentration on this occasion.]

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that the alcohol concentration in a defendant's (breath) (blood) (urine) sample taken within three hours of operating a vehicle is evidence of the defendant's alcohol concentration at the time of the operating.[12]

IF AN APPROVED TESTING DEVICE TEST IS INVOLVED, THE FOLLOWING MAY BE ADDED:[13]

[The law recognizes that the testing device used in this case uses a scientifically sound method of measuring the alcohol concentration of an individual. The State is not required to prove the underlying scientific reliability of the method used by the testing device. However, the State is required to establish that the testing device was in proper working order and that it was correctly operated by a qualified person.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[14]

[Jury's Decision]

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all the elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2),[15] USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[16] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[17]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[18] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[19] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not had a prohibited alcohol concentration and had been exercising due care.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[20]]

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1263.1 in 1992. In 1998, it was revised and renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1263A. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2004.

This instruction has been revised for use for violations of § 940.25(1)(b) involving a prohibited alcohol concentration level [PAC] of .02 or more, which applies to persons with three or more priors. See § 340.01(46m)(c), created by 1999 Wisconsin Act 109. [Effective date: January 1, 2001.]

The fact of having three or more priors is included as a bracketed fourth element in this instruction. It is an element because the existence of priors changes the substantive definition of the crime from an alcohol concentration of .08 or more to one of .02 or more. It is in brackets because it is not to be submitted to the jury if the defendant admits having the priors. See footnotes 2 and 9, below. When priors change the offense from a forfeiture to a crime or increase the criminal penalty, they need not be submitted to the jury. See Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. IV, D.

The instruction previously published as Wis JI-Criminal 1263A dealt with a PAC of .08 or more. 2003 Wisconsin Act 30 changed the generally applicable PAC level to .08 or more for persons with 2 or fewer prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, as counted under § 343.307(1). [Effective date: September 30, 2003.] Wis JI-Criminal 1263 has been revised to apply to those cases.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1262 for the related offense of causing great bodily harm while operating under the influence, as defined in § 940.25(1)(a). For cases involving two charges – operating under the influence and with a PAC – Wis JI-Criminal 1189 can be used as a model.

For cases involving great bodily harm to an unborn child, see Wis JI-Criminal 1185A which identifies the changes that should be made in the instructions.

Section 940.25(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 15 and following. Regarding the defense, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

This revision adopts a new format for footnotes. Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in the Introductory Comment that precedes Wis JI-Criminal 2600. They are cross-referenced by paragraph number in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Regarding the statutory definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration," see note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1263.

2. The instruction is drafted to allow for use with either three or four elements, depending on whether the fourth element, relating to the defendant having three or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations, is submitted to the jury. See discussion at note 9, below.

3. Section 940.25 refers only to "operation" of a vehicle. It does not include "handling" as the statute defining the otherwise identical homicide offense does. [Compare § 940.09.]

4. Section 939.22(44) defines "vehicle" as follows:

> "Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

5. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

6. The Committee has concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. If additional definition is necessary, see note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1185, and Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

7. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of "great bodily harm."

8. The definitions are provided in § 340.01(46m) and (1v). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. V.

9. The fourth element has been placed in brackets because the Committee concluded that the "status element" of this offense must be addressed in the same manner as for .08 offenses under the version of the law addressed in State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997). In Alexander, the Wisconsin Supreme Court referred to this element as a "status element" and held that if the defendant admits having two or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations [the relevant number under prior law], the "admission dispenses with the need for proof of the status element, either to a jury or to a judge." 214 Wis.2d 628, 646. When there is an admission of the status element, "admitting any evidence of the defendant's prior convictions, suspensions or revocations and submitting the status element to the jury . . . [is] an erroneous exercise of discretion." 214 Wis.2d 628, 651. The court's rationale for removing an element in this situation was that the status element involves facts "entirely outside the gravamen of the offense" and "adds nothing to the State's evidentiary depth or descriptive narrative." 214 Wis.2d 628, 649-50.

The court gave explicit direction to the trial courts as to how to handle this situation:

> "When a circuit court is faced with the circumstances presented in this case, the circuit court should simply instruct the jury that they must find beyond a reasonable doubt that: 1) the defendant was driving or operating a motor vehicle on a highway; and 2) the defendant had a prohibited alcohol concentration at the time . . . The 'prohibited alcohol concentration' means 0.08 . . ." 214 Wis.2d 628, 651-52.

By placing the "status element" in brackets, the Committee intends to implement the approach approved in Alexander. If the defendant admits the "status element", the instruction should be given with three elements: causing death, by operating a vehicle, and, having an alcohol concentration of more than .02. If the defendant does not admit the "status element", the instruction should be given with a fourth element: having three or more prior convictions, suspensions or revocations as counted under § 343.307(1).

Because the defendant's admission removes an element from the jury's consideration, the record should reflect the defendant's acknowledgment that a jury determination is, in effect, being waived on the "status element."

10. This element is not to be included if the defendant admits the priors. See note 9, supra.

The text of the fourth element is based on the definition of "prohibited alcohol concentration" in § 340.01(46m)(b). The types of convictions, suspensions, and revocations that are counted under § 343.307(1) are convictions for operating while intoxicated or suspensions or revocations for refusal to submit to chemical tests for alcohol. The priors may include offenses in other jurisdictions. The text of § 343.307(1) is provided in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment.

The Committee concluded that the instruction should use the statutory language "as counted under § 343.307(1)" because evidence of the defendant's driving record will usually be submitted with testimony that the prior offenses are those that are counted under the statute.

11. Making the fact of prior convictions, etc., an issue for the jury creates the possibility that a jury may make improper use of the evidence relating to the defendant's driving record. Therefore, upon request, an instruction should be given on the limited use to be made of the driving record evidence. In State v. Ludeking, 195 Wis.2d 132, 536 N.W.2d 119 (Ct. App. 1995), the court pointed to this cautionary paragraph as a way to offset the inevitable prejudicial impact of presenting this evidence to the jury.

12. This statement is supported by the general rule stated in § 885.235(1g) that the results of properly conducted alcohol tests are admissible. Whether the test result is accorded any additional evidentiary significance depends on the applicability of other provisions in § 885.235. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

13. Regarding the reliability of the testing device, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.

14. Section 940.09(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the death would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she . . . did not have a prohibited alcohol concentration . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used.

15. See note 14, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

16. Section 940.09(2) expressly places the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction describes the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

17. The material that follows was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to articulate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

18. The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

19. The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 940.09(2). The third sentence in the bracketed material is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted. See note 17, supra, and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

20. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements have not been proved [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

1266 INJURY (GREAT BODILY HARM) BY OPERATION OF A VEHICLE WITH A DETECTABLE AMOUNT OF A RESTRICTED CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE — § 940.25(1)(am)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.25(1)(am) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who causes great bodily harm to another by the operation of a vehicle while the person has a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a vehicle.[1]

   "Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it in motion.[2]

2. The defendant's operation of a vehicle caused great bodily harm to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's operation of a vehicle was a substantial factor[3] in producing great bodily harm.

   "Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.[4]

3. The defendant had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance[5] in his or her blood at the time the defendant operated a vehicle.

(Name restricted controlled substance) is a restricted controlled substance.[6]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING IF DELTA-9-TETRAHYDROCANNABINOL IS THE ALLEGED RESTRICTED CONTROLLED SUBSTANCE.

[Delta 9 tetrahydrocannabinol is considered a restricted controlled substance if it is at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood.]

How to Use the Test Result Evidence

The law states that a chemical analysis showing a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in a defendant's blood sample is evidence of the presence of a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in a defendant's blood at the time of the operating.[7]

USE THE FOLLOWING IF APPROPRIATE:

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a detectable amount of (name restricted controlled substance) in the defendant's blood at the time the sample was taken, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant had a detectable amount of (name restricted controlled substance) in (his) (her) blood at the time of the operating but you are not required to do so. You the jury are here to decide this question on the basis of all the evidence in this case, and you should not find that the defendant had a detectable amount of (name restricted controlled substance) in (his) (her) blood at the time of the alleged operating unless you are satisfied of that fact beyond a reasonable doubt.]

IF THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2), USE THE FOLLOWING CLOSING:[8]

[Jury's Decision]

[If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.]

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSE DEFINED BY SECTION 940.25(2),[9] USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Consider Whether the Defense is Proved]

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had been exercising due care and had not had a detectable amount of (name restricted controlled substance) in his or her blood.

The burden is on the defendant to prove by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence[10] that this defense is established.

"By the greater weight of the evidence" is meant evidence which, when weighed against that opposed to it, has more convincing power. "Credible evidence" is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF REQUESTED AND IF EVIDENCE OF THE CONDUCT OF THE VICTIM HAS BEEN INTRODUCED AS RELEVANT TO THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE. DO NOT GIVE WITHOUT CLEAR JUSTIFICATION.[11]

[Evidence has been received relating to the conduct of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged crime. Any failure by (name of victim) to exercise due care[12] does not by itself provide a defense to the crime charged against the defendant.[13] Consider evidence of the conduct of (name of victim) in deciding whether the defendant has established that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not had a detectable amount of (name restricted controlled substance) in his or her blood.]

Jury's Decision

[If you are satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you are not satisfied to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that this defense is proved and you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all elements of this offense have been proved, you must find the defendant not guilty.[14]]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1266 was approved by the Committee in June 2010. This revision was approve by the Committee in August 2020; it added an alternative element to the instruction and to footnotes 6 and 7 based on 2019 Wisconsin Act 68.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.25(1)(am), causing great bodily harm while operating a vehicle with a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance. The statute was created by 2003

Wisconsin Act 97 and applies to offenses committed on or after the Act's effective date: December 19, 2003. For a general discussion of Act 97, see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. IX.

Section 940.25(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and . . . he or she did not have a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood . . ." The defense is addressed in the instruction by using an alternative ending, see text at footnote 8 and following. The constitutionality of the defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985). See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

Footnotes common to several instructions are collected in the Introductory Comment that precedes Wis JI-Criminal 2600. They are cross-referenced in the footnotes for the individual instructions to which they apply. Footnotes unique to individual instructions are included in full in those instructions.

1. Section 939.22(44) defines "vehicle" as follows:

"Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

2. Regarding the definition of "operate," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

3. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added immediately preceding the sentence in the instruction beginning with "before":

There may be more than one cause of great bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

The statute does provide the defendant with an affirmative defense in certain situations, see footnote 8, below. The defense is closely related to the cause element but, in the Committee's judgment, deals with a different issue and may apply even if the defendant's operation was the cause as required by the second element. If the defendant's operation caused the great bodily harm, the defense allows the defendant to avoid liability if it is established that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if the defendant had not been operating "with a detectable amount" and had been exercising due care. The constitutionality of eliminating causal negligence as an element and providing the affirmative defense was upheld by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Caibaiosai, 122 Wis.2d 587, 363 N.W.2d 574 (1985).

See Wis JI Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

4. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI Criminal 914.

5. The Committee suggests that the name of the restricted controlled substance be used throughout the instruction. See note 1, supra.

6. The Committee concluded that it adds clarity to tell the jury that the alleged substance does qualify as a restricted controlled substance under the statute. Whether the defendant actually had a detectable amount of the substance in his or her blood remains a jury question.

Section 340.01(50m) defines "restricted controlled substance" as follows:

(50m) 'Restricted controlled substance' means any of the following:

(a) A controlled substance included in schedule I other than tetrahydrocannabinol.
(b) A controlled substance analog, as defined in s. 961.01(4m), of a controlled substance described in par. (a).
(c) Cocaine or any of its metabolites.
(d) Methamphetamine.
(e) Delta 9 tetrahydrocannabinol, excluding its precursors or metabolites, at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood.

2019 Act 68 amended the definition of delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol to require that delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol be at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of a person's blood. Prior to Act 68, the statute required only a detectable amount of delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol.

7. This statement is similar to the one used for the results of properly conducted alcohol tests. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 2663. [The Committee's general approach to instructing on test results is discussed in Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VII.] The Committee concluded that it is proper to use it for tests in "restricted controlled substance" cases as well.

Whether additional instruction on the evidentiary significance of the test should be given is not clear, however, because the statute created for "detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance" cases is not phrased in the same way that the alcohol test statutes are. Section 885.235(1k), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 97, reads as follows:

885.235(1k) In any action or proceeding in which it is material to prove that a person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood while operating or driving a motor vehicle . . . if a chemical analysis of a sample of the person's blood shows that the person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood, the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence on the issue of the person having a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood without requiring any expert testimony as to its effect.

As for the admissibility of evidence concerning the concentration of delta-9- tetrahydrocannabinol in a person's blood, sec. 885.235(5), created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 68, reads as follows:

> [t]he only form of chemical analysis of a sample of human biological material that is admissible as evidence bearing on the question of whether or not the person had delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol at a concentration of one or more nanograms per milliliter of the person's blood is a chemical analysis of a sample of the person's blood.

Comparing this statute to § 885.235(1g), the statute addressing alcohol tests, reveals several differences:

- sub. (1k) does not require that the test be taken within 3 hours of driving;
- sub. (1k) does not directly provide for admissibility of test results; and,
- sub. (1k) does not explicitly connect having a detectable amount in the blood at the time of the test with having a detectable amount at the time of driving.

As to the second difference – admissibility – the Committee concluded that the statement "the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence" strongly implies that the analysis is admissible. As to the third difference – connection with the time of driving – the Committee concluded that the statement "the court shall treat the analysis as prima facie evidence on the issue of the person having . . ." may express a legislative intent that the analysis be admissible to prove the material issue "that a person had a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood while operating or driving a motor vehicle . . ." as stated at the beginning of sub. (1k). For that reason, the instruction includes a paragraph that addresses the "prima facie" effect of the chemical analysis. The paragraph is in brackets to suggest that trial courts make an independent determination about whether its use is appropriate. To be admissible, the analysis must be found to be relevant to the issue which it is offered to prove.

8. Section 940.25(2) provides that the defendant "has a defense if he or she proves by a preponderance of the evidence that the great bodily harm would have occurred even if he or she had been exercising due care and he or she had not been under the influence of an intoxicant . . ." When there is not "some evidence" of the defense in the case, this set of closing paragraphs should be used.

See Wis JI Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

9. See note 8, supra. When there is "some evidence" of the defense in the case, the second set of closing paragraphs should be used.

10. Section 940.09(2) expressly places the burden on the defendant to prove the defense "by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction describes the standard as "to a reasonable certainty, by the greater weight of the credible evidence," because the Committee concluded that "the greater weight" will be more easily understood by the jury than "preponderance."

11. The material that follows was drafted to respond to the recommendations made by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Lohmeier, 205 Wis.2d 182, 556 N.W.2d 90 (1996). The court recommended that an instruction be drafted to articulate the rule in § 939.14, Criminal conduct or contributory negligence of victim no defense. See Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

12. The phrase "failure to exercise due care" is intended to refer to what might be characterized as "negligence" on the part of the victim. The Committee concluded that the term "negligence" should not be used because that highlights the conflict with the rule of § 939.14. The usual substitute for "negligence" would be a reference to the failure to exercise "ordinary care." The instruction uses "due care" instead because that is the term used in the statutory affirmative defense applicable to violations of §§ 940.09, 940.25 and 346.63. In cases involving the defense, it would be confusing to refer to "ordinary care" when referring to the victim's conduct and to "due care" when referring to the defendant's conduct. Because "due care" is used in the statute, the term is adopted for both references in this instruction. The Committee does not believe that there is a substantive difference between the two terms.

13. The instruction attempts to articulate a very fine distinction which, in the abstract, may be difficult to understand. "Defense" is used here to refer to a special rule of law providing a defense to the crime. However, in plain language, negligence on the part of the victim can be a reason why the defendant is not guilty of the charge. It could prevent the defendant's conduct from being the cause of the harm, or it could satisfy the requirements of the affirmative defense under § 940.09(2). The third sentence in the bracketed material is intended to address the recommendations in Lohmeier that a "bridging" instruction be drafted. See note 11, supra, and Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. X.

14. This statement is included to assure that both options for a not guilty verdict are clearly presented:

1) not guilty because the elements have not been proved [regardless of the conclusion about the defense]; and

2) not guilty even though the elements have been proved, because the defense has been established.

1268 ABUSE OF INDIVIDUALS AT RISK — § 940.285

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abuse of individuals at risk, as defined in § 940.285 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one[1] who [(intentionally) (recklessly) (negligently)] subjects an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances that (are likely to) cause [death] [great bodily harm] [(bodily harm)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was an individual at risk at the time of the alleged offense.

   CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITIONS

   ["Individual at risk" means a person age 60 or older who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][2]

   ["Individual at risk" means an adult who has a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs his or her ability to care for his or her needs and who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][3]

2. The defendant subjected (name of victim) to [physical abuse] [emotional abuse] [sexual abuse] [treatment without consent] [unreasonable confinement or restraint] [deprivation of a basic need].[4]

CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITIONS

["Physical abuse" means the intentional or reckless infliction of bodily harm.[5] "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[6]]

["Emotional abuse" means language or behavior that serves no legitimate purpose and is intended to be intimidating, humiliating, threatening, frightening, or otherwise harassing, and that does or reasonably could intimidate, humiliate, threaten, frighten, or otherwise harass the individual to whom the conduct or language is directed.][7]

["Treatment without consent" means the administration of medication to an individual who has not provided informed consent, or the performance of psychosurgery, electroconvulsive therapy, or experimental research on an individual who has not provided informed consent, with the knowledge that no lawful authority exists for the administration or performance."][9]

["Unreasonable confinement or restraint" includes the intentional and unreasonable confinement of an individual in a locked room, involuntary separation of an individual from his or her living area, use on an individual of physical restraining devices, or the provision of unnecessary or excessive medication to an individual, but does not include the use of these methods or devices in entities regulated by the department if the methods or devices are employed in conformance with state and federal standards governing confinement and restraint.][10]

["Deprivation of a basic need" means deprivation of a basic need for food, shelter, clothing, or personal or health care, including deprivation resulting from the failure to provide or arrange for a basic need by a person who has assumed responsibility for meeting the need voluntarily or by contract, agreement, or court order.][11]

3. The defendant acted (intentionally) (recklessly) (negligently).

["Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to subject (name of victim) to abuse or was aware that (his)(her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result. "Intentionally" also requires that the defendant knew that (name of victim) was an individual at risk .][12]

["Recklessly" means conduct that creates a situation of unreasonable risk of harm and demonstrates a conscious disregard for the safety of the individual at risk.][13]

["Negligently" means that the defendant acted in a manner constituting criminal negligence. (ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925 CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE).][14]

4. The defendant (intentionally) (recklessly) (negligently) subjected an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances that [(were likely to cause) (caused)] [(death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm)].[15]

["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing (death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm).][16]

["Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.][17]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][18]

[ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR CASES INVOLVING INTENTIONAL ABUSE]

[Deciding About Intent and Knowledge]

[You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1268 was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1998 and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2006; it reflects changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388.

The 2007 revision reflected changes made to §940.285 by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388. The primary changes were to replace "vulnerable adult" with "individual at risk" and "maltreatment" with "abuse," adding new definitions for the latter. Act 388 also created an exception in sub. (1m): "Nothing in this section may be construed to mean that a vulnerable adult [sic] is abused solely because he or she consistently relies upon treatment by spiritual means through prayer for healing, in lieu of medical care, in accordance with his or her religious traditions."

Section 940.285 recognizes a variety of harms and a variety of mental states. The Committee concluded that the best way to address the considerable complexity that has resulted is to provide a single model instruction which can be modified to refer to the appropriate mental state and degree of harm. This has resulted in the use of many brackets and parentheses. To illustrate that the instruction becomes simpler when proper selection of alternatives is made, an example is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 1268 EXAMPLE.

Section 940.285, as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388, defines the following offenses.

Offense	Penalty
Intentionally or recklessly subject an individual at risk to abuse and cause death	Class C felony [sub. (2)(b)1g.]
Negligently subject an individual at risk to abuse and cause death	Class D felony [sub. (2)(b)1g.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or negligently subject an individual at risk to abuse and cause great bodily harm	Class F felony [sub. (2)(b)1m.]
Intentionally subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances likely to cause great bodily harm	Class G felony [sub.(2)(b)1r.]
Recklessly or negligently subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances likely to cause great bodily harm	Class I felony [sub.(2)(b)1r.]
Intentionally subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances that cause bodily harm	Class H felony [sub. (2)(b)2.]
Intentionally subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances likely to cause bodily harm	Class I felony [sub. (2)(b)2.]

Recklessly or negligently subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances that cause or are likely to cause bodily harm	Class A misdr. [sub. (2)(b)4.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or negligently subject an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm	Class B misdr. [sub. (2)(b)5.]

Because the statute defines so many different offenses, there is the potential for a variety of lesser included offense questions.

One potential question is easily resolved: a special subsection of § 939.66 provides that all less serious violations of § 940.285 are included offenses of more serious violations. See § 939.66(6c).

Two general categories of variables govern the lesser included offense possibilities. First, there may be a different mental state: the statute provides three alternatives: subjecting an individual at risk to abuse intentionally, recklessly, or negligently. Second, the abuse may have occurred under circumstances involving different levels of harm: causing death, great bodily harm, or bodily harm; likely to cause great bodily harm or bodily harm; and not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm.

Presenting lesser included offenses in a way that will be understandable to the jury is a challenge. One approach would be the traditional long form, whereby a complete instruction on the charged offense would be followed by a complete instruction on each applicable lesser included offense. This has the serious disadvantage of resulting in a set of instructions that might be very long and repetitious. However, depending on the lessers and the complexity of their relationship to the charged crime, this may be the most effective way to approach the problem.

The other approach would be take the shorter approach described in Wis JI-Criminal 112A: specifying the difference between the charged crime and the lesser included crime and instructing the jury on that difference.

1. Before being amended by 2005 Wisconsin Act 264, section 940.285 applied to "any person, other than a person in charge of or employed in any facility enumerated in § 940.29 or in a facility or program under s. 940.295(2). . . ." The amended statute lacks any reference to the persons to whom it applies, except for the reference to "any person " in sub. (2)(b).

2. Section 940.285(1)(dg) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk" and cross references the definition of "elder adult at risk" in s. 46.90(1)(br). The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 46.90(1)(br) without change.

3. Section 940.285(1)(dg) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk" and cross references the definition of "adult at risk" in s. 55.01(1e). The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 55.01(1e) without change.

4. Section 940.285(1)(ag) provides that "abuse" means any of the alternatives listed in subds. 1. - 6. Of that statute and provides cross references to other statutes for definitions of those alternatives. The applicable alternative should be selected and the appropriate definition used.

5. The definition of "physical abuse" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(fg), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)1.

6. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4) and in § 46.90(1)(aj). The term may also be used as part of the fourth element.

7. The definition of "emotional abuse" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(cm), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)2.

8. The definition of "sexual abuse" is a paraphrase of the one provided in § 46.90(1)(gd), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)3. Section 46.90(1)(gd) states: "'Sexual abuse' means a violation of s. 940.225(1), (2), (3), or (3m)." Definition of the applicable sexual assault offense should be included.

9. The definition of "treatment without consent" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(h), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)4. Select the part of the definition that applies to the case.

10. The definition of "unreasonable confinement or restraint" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(I), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)5. Select the part of the definition that applies to the case.

11. This is definition provided in subd. 6. of s. 940.285(1)(ag).

12. This is based on the general definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3).

13. This definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.285(1)(dm). It differs from the general definition of "recklessness" in § 939.24 in several respects. First, it refers to risk of harm; the § 939.24 definition is limited to risks of great bodily harm or death. Second, it refers only to an "unreasonable" risk; § 939.24 requires an unreasonable "and substantial" risk. Third, it refers to "conscious disregard for the safety"; § 939.24 refers to being "aware of the risk." The latter is not believed to be a substantive difference – "conscious disregard" was used in the definition of reckless homicide before the revision in 1989 when it was changed to clarify that a subjective mental state was required.

Note: The definition in § 940.285(1)(dm) continues to refer to "vulnerable adult." That term was replaced by "individual at risk" elsewhere in the statute.

14. Wis JI-Criminal 925 provides a standard definition of "criminal negligence" based on the one provided in § 939.25. That definition applies whenever a criminal statute uses the term "negligent" or "negligently." [See § 939.25(2).] Section 940.285(2)(a)3. contains the phrase: "negligently subjects an individual at risk to abuse."

15. Here insert the appropriate level of harm from the options provided in § 940.285(2)(b). The different levels and the associated penalties are summarized in the Comment preceding footnote 1.

16. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

17. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

18. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4). There is no need to repeat the definition here if it has already been given as part of the second element.

1268 EXAMPLE ABUSE OF INDIVIDUALS AT RISK: RECKLESSLY SUBJECTING AN INDIVIDUAL AT RISK TO ABUSE UNDER CIRCUMSTANCES THAT CAUSE GREAT BODILY HARM — § 940.285(2)(b)1.m.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abuse of individuals at risk, as defined in § 940.285 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly subjects an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances that cause great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was an individual at risk at the time of the alleged offense.

   "Individual at risk" means a person age 60 or older who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.

2. The defendant subjected (name of victim) to physical abuse.

   "Physical abuse" means the intentional or reckless infliction of bodily harm. "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.

3. The defendant acted recklessly.

"Recklessly" means conduct that creates a situation of unreasonable risk of harm and demonstrates a conscious disregard for the safety of the individual at risk.

4. The defendant recklessly subjected (name of victim) to abuse under circumstances that caused great bodily harm.

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1268 EXAMPLE was originally published in 199 and revised in 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2006; it reflects changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388.

This instruction attempts to illustrate how the general model provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1268 would be applied to a violation of § 940.285 involving recklessly subjecting an individual at risk to abuse under circumstances causing great bodily harm. Reducing the general model to this example required electing the appropriate material from the many alternatives set forth in brackets and parentheses in Wis JI-Criminal 1268.

1269 RECKLESS ABUSE OF VULNERABLE ADULTS — § 940.285(2)(b)3

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 1995. It was withdrawn in 1998 when § 940.285 was revised by 1997 Wisconsin Act 180. All violations of § 940.285 are now addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1268.

1270 ABUSE OF RESIDENTS OF PENAL FACILITIES — § 940.29

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abuse of residents of penal facilities, as defined in § 940.29 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one in charge of or employed in a penal or correctional institution or other place of confinement who abuses, neglects, or ill-treats a person confined in or a resident of that institution or place, or who knowingly permits another person to do so.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (in charge of) (employed in) a facility.

2. (Name of victim) was (a resident of) (confined in) a facility.

3. The facility was a [(penal) (correctional) institution] [place of confinement].

   IF A STATUTE IDENTIFIES THE NATURE OF THE FACILITY, ADD THE FOLLOWING.[1]

   [(Name of facility) is a (penal) (correctional) institution.]

4. The defendant (did knowingly) (knowingly permitted[2] another person to) abuse, neglect, or ill-treat (name of victim) .

   The phrase "abuse, neglect, or ill-treat"[3] means any act or failure to act which causes unreasonable[4] suffering, misery, or physical harm to a resident.

[Reasonable conduct necessary for treatment or maintenance of order and discipline in the facility and deprivation incidental to confinement reasonably required by a sentence or commitment are not abuse, neglect, or ill treatment.][5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1270 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980, 1991, and 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2006 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 940.29 was amended by 1993 Wisconsin Act 445 (effective date: May 12, 1994) to apply only to "a penal or correctional institution or other place of confinement." The statute had applied to a long list of institutions and facilities. Those places are now covered by § 940.295, created by Act 445. See Wis JI-Criminal 1271, 1271 EXAMPLE, and 1272.

1. The Committee has concluded that the sentence in brackets is permissible as long as there is a statute providing that, for example, a county jail is a penal or correctional institution. See, for example, sec. 801.02(7)(a): ". . . A correctional institution includes a Type 1 prison, . . . , a Type 2 prison, . . ., a county jail and a house of correction." Thus, the element would read: "The Jones County Jail is a correctional institution."

2. A case involving the pre-1984 version of this statute was State v. Serebin, 119 Wis.2d 837, 350 N.W.2d 65 (1984). Serebin was charged under the "knowingly permitted" alternative. There was evidence in that case that staff members of a nursing home had advised the defendant of the various deficiencies in staffing and food that were causing harm to the patients. The court found a sufficient causal connection between the failure to remedy the staff shortages and the harm to the patients to sustain the administrator's conviction.

3. The phrase "abuse, neglect, or ill-treat" is, in the Committee's judgment, intended to refer to a single concept involving the causing of unjustified harm to another rather than to state three different ways of committing the offense.

The definition of "abuse, neglect, or ill-treat" is adapted from the one found in the earlier version of Wis JI-Criminal 1270 (8 1974) which was used by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Serebin, supra, note 2, though not expressly approved. Serebin reviewed the sufficiency of the evidence in a case where the administrator of a nursing home was charged with knowingly permitting the abuse of nursing home residents. The court found that bedsores (which could have been prevented) constituted physical harm and weight loss caused by inadequate diet constituted suffering.

Also see s. 940.295(1)(k), which defines Aneglect@ for purposes of a related offense.

4. Some discomfort is likely to be unavoidable in any situation where a person is confined in one of the institutions covered by § 940.29. What is prohibited is the causing of harm that is unreasonable under the circumstances.

5. This paragraph is to be used when the evidence provides a basis for it. It is intended to give some explanation of the word "unreasonable" used in the preceding paragraph. It explains that some deprivation may be inherent in confinement in the facilities covered by the statute and that what is prohibited is the causing of suffering or physical harm that goes beyond that level.

1271 ABUSE OF PATIENTS AND RESIDENTS — § 940.295

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abuse of patients and residents, as defined in § 940.295 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one [(in charge of) (employed in)] (name type of facility) [1] who [(intentionally) (recklessly) (negligently)] abuses a [(patient) (resident)] of that [(facility) (program)] (or who knowingly permits another person to do so)[2] under circumstances that (are likely to) cause [death] [great bodily harm] [bodily harm].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (in charge of) (employed in) (name of facility) .[3]

2. (Name of victim) was a (patient)[4] (resident)[5] of (name of facility) .[6]

3. (Name of facility) was a (type of facility) .[7]

   [(Type of facility) means (use the applicable statutory definition, if any) .]

4. The defendant subjected[8] (name of victim) to [physical abuse] [emotional abuse] [sexual abuse] [treatment without consent] [unreasonable confinement or restraint].[9]

   CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITIONS

["Physical abuse" means the intentional or reckless infliction of bodily harm.[10] "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[11]]

["Emotional abuse" means language or behavior that serves no legitimate purpose and is intended to be intimidating, humiliating, threatening, frightening, or otherwise harassing, and that does or reasonably could intimidate, humiliate, threaten, frighten, or otherwise harass the individual to whom the conduct or language is directed.][12]

["Treatment without consent" means the administration of medication to an individual who has not provided informed consent, or the performance of psychosurgery, electroconvulsive therapy, or experimental research on an individual who has not provided informed consent, with the knowledge that no lawful authority exists for the administration or performance.][14]

["Unreasonable confinement or restraint" includes the intentional and unreasonable confinement of an individual in a locked room, involuntary separation of an individual from his or her living area, use on an individual of physical restraining devices, or the provision of unnecessary or excessive medication to an individual, but does not include the use of these methods or devices in entities regulated by the department if the methods or devices are employed in conformance with state and federal standards governing confinement and restraint.][15]

5. The defendant acted (intentionally) (recklessly) (negligently).

["Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to subject (name of victim) to abuse or was aware that (his)(her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result. "Intentionally" also requires that the defendant knew that (name of victim) was a (patient) (resident) (individual at risk).][16]

["Recklessly" means conduct that creates a situation of unreasonable risk of death or harm to and demonstrates a conscious disregard for the safety of the (patient) (resident).][17]

["Negligently" means that the defendant acted in a manner constituting criminal negligence. (ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925 CRIMINAL NEGLIGENCE).][18]

6. The defendant [intentionally] [recklessly] [negligently] abused (name of victim) under circumstances that [(were likely to cause) (caused)] [death] [great bodily harm] [bodily harm].[19]

["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing (death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm)].[20]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.][21]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][22]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR CASES INVOLVING INTENTIONAL ABUSE

[Deciding About Intent and Knowledge]

[You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH ABUSE OF A PATIENT OR RESIDENT WHO IS AN "INDIVIDUAL AT RISK":[23]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) an individual at risk?

CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITIONS

["Individual at risk" means a person age 60 or older who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][24]

["Individual at risk" means an adult who has a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs his or her ability to care for his or her needs and who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][25]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was an individual at risk, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1271 was originally published in 1995 and revised in 1999, 2003, 2007 and 2008. The 2007 revision reflected changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388. The 2008 revision updated statutory references in footnotes 23, 24, and 25 to reflect changes made by 2007 Wisconsin Act 45. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2011 and involved adding reference to 2011 Wisconsin Act 2 to the Comment.

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving intentional, reckless or negligent abuse of patients or residents. The statute also prohibits intentional, reckless or simple neglect. If a case involves a charge of neglect as opposed to abuse, use Wis JI-Criminal 1272.

Section 940.295 recognizes a variety of harms and a variety of mental states. The Committee concluded that the best way to address the considerable complexity that has resulted is to provide a single model instruction which can be modified to refer to the appropriate mental state and degree of harm. This has resulted in the use of many brackets and parentheses. To illustrate that the instruction becomes simpler when proper selection of alternatives is made, an example is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 1271 EXAMPLE.

Section 940.295, as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388, defines the following offenses involving abuse of patients or residents.

Offense	Penalty
Intentionally or recklessly abuse a patient or resident and cause death to an individual at risk	Class C felony
Negligently abuse a patient or resident and cause death to an individual at risk	Class D felony [sub. (3)(b)1g.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or negligently abuse a patient or resident and cause great bodily harm to an individual at risk	Class E felony [sub. (3)(b)1m.]
Intentionally abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that cause great bodily harm [to other than an individual at risk]	Class F felony [sub. (3)(b)1r.]

Intentionally abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause great bodily harm	Class G felony [sub. (3)(b)1r.]
Intentionally abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that cause bodily harm	Class H felony [sub. (3)(b)2.]
Intentionally abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause bodily harm	Class I felony [sub. (3)(b)2.]
Recklessly or negligently abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that cause great bodily harm [to other than an individual at risk]	Class H felony [sub. (3)(b)3.]
Recklessly or negligently abuse a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause bodily harm	Class A misdr. [sub. (3)(b)4.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or negligently abuse a patient or resident under circumstances not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm	Class B misdr. [sub. (3)(b)5.]

Because the statute defines so many different offenses, there is the potential for a variety of lesser included offense questions. One potential question is easily resolved: a special subsection of § 939.66 provides that all less serious violations of § 940.295 are included offenses of more serious violations. See § 939.66(6e).

Two general categories of variables govern the lesser included offense possibilities. First, there may be a different mental state. The statute provides three alternatives: intentionally, recklessly, or simply neglecting a patient or resident. Second, the abuse may have occurred under circumstances involving different levels of harm. Causing death, great bodily harm or bodily harm; likely to cause great bodily harm or bodily harm; and, not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm.

Presenting lesser included offenses in a way that will be understandable to the jury is a challenge. One approach would be the traditional long form, whereby a complete instruction on the charged offense would be followed by a complete instruction on each applicable lesser included offense. This has the serious disadvantage of resulting in a set of instructions that might be very long and repetitious. However, depending on the lessers and the complexity of their relationship to the charged crime, this may be the most effective way to approach the problem. The other approach would be use the shorter form described in Wis JI-Criminal 112A: specifying the difference between the charged crime and the lesser included crime and instructing the jury on that difference.

2011 Wisconsin Act 2 amended § 940.295 to add an exception to the version of the offense defined in sub. (3)(a)3.: abuses, with negligence, or neglects a patient or resident. Subsection (3)(am) is created to read:

> (3)(am) Paragraph (a)3. does not apply to a health care provider acting within the scope of his or her practice or employment who commits an act or omission of mere inefficiency, unsatisfactory conduct, or failure in good performance as the result of inability, incapacity, inadvertency, ordinary negligence, or good faith error in judgment or discretion.

"Health care provider" is defined in one other Criminal Code statute. Section 940.20(7)(a)3. provides: "'Health care provider' means any person who is licensed, registered, permitted or certified by the department of health services or the department of regulation and licensing to provide health care services in this state." The usual practice in Wisconsin is to treat statutory exceptions like affirmative defenses: If there is some evidence of the exception, the burden is on the state to prove that the exception does not apply. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon, which recommends adding an element where there is a claim that the defendant was a peace officer; peace officers are subject to an exception from the ban on carrying concealed weapon in § 941.23.

1. Here specify the type of facility involved, such as "an adult day care center." The facilities covered by the statute are listed in sub. (2) of § 940.295:

(2) Applicability. This section applies to any of the following types of facilities or programs:
(a) An adult day care center.
(b) An adult family home.
(c) A community-based residential facility.
(d) A foster home.
(e) A group home.
(f) A home health agency.
(g) A hospice.
(h) A inpatient health care facility.
(i) A program under § 51.42(2).
(j) The Wisconsin Educational Services Program for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing under § 115.52 and the Wisconsin Center for the Blind and Visually Impaired under § 115.525.
(k) A state treatment facility.
(L) A treatment facility.
(m) A residential care center for children and youth operated by a child welfare agency licensed under § 48.60 or an institution operated by a public agency for the care of neglected, dependent, or delinquent children.
(n) Any other health facility or care-related facility or home, whether publicly or privately owned.

2. Read the phrase in parentheses if the case is based on the defendant permitting another to abuse a patient or resident. In that case, the fourth and sixth elements must be modified. Footnote 8 suggests a modification of the fourth element for "knowingly permits" case. Footnote 19 suggests a modification of the sixth element.

3. Here specify the name of the facility, for example: "The Fairview Care Center."

4. An extensive definition of "patient" is provided in § 940.295(1)(L). If a definition of that term is believed to be necessary, the applicable part of the statutory definition should be added to the instruction.

5. "Resident" is defined as follows in § 940.295(1)(p): "'Resident' means any person who resides in a facility under sub. (2)."

6. Here specify the name of the facility, for example: "The Fairview Care Center."

7. The name of the facility should be used in the first blank; the type of facility listed in sub. (2) should be used in the second blank. For example: "3. The Fairview Care Center was an adult day care center."

The second sentence allows for providing a definition of the type of facility involved. Cross-references to statutory definitions for many of the types of facilities are provided in sub. (1) of § 940.295:

Facility	Definition
- adult family home	§ 50.01(1)
- community-based residential facility	§ 50.01(1g)
- foster home	§ 48.02(6)
- group home	§ 48.02(7)
- home health agency	§ 50.49(1)(a)
- hospice	§ 50.90(1)
- inpatient health care facility	§ 50.135(1)
- state treatment facility	§ 51.01(15)
- treatment facility	§ 51.01(19)

"Adult day care center" is defined in § 49.45(4), although that definition is not cross-referenced in § 940.295.

8. If the case is based on the defendant knowingly permitting another to abuse a patient or resident, the fourth element should be changed to read as follows:

> 4. The defendant knowingly permitted another person to subject (name of victim) to [physical abuse] [emotional abuse] [sexual abuse] [treatment without consent] [unreasonable confinement or restraint].

9. The statement of this element is a paraphrase of the statute. The statute refers to one who "abuses" a patient or resident, then defines "abuse" by reference to s. 46.90(1)(a). Section 46.90(1)(a) then lists five categories that constitute "abuse." The instruction states the element in the same way that it appears in Wis JI-Criminal 1268 by referring to "subjects to abuse" and then providing definitions for each alternative. No change in meaning is intended.

10. The definition of "physical abuse" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(fg), which applies because § 940.295(1)(ad) provides: "'Abuse' has the meaning given in s. 46.90(1)(a)." "Physical abuse" is listed in s. 46.90(1(a)1. and defined in s. 46.90(1)(fg).

11. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4) and in § 46.90(1)(aj). The term may also be used as part of the fourth element.

12. The definition of "emotional abuse" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(cm), which applies because § 940.295(1)(ad) provides: "'Abuse' has the meaning given in s. 46.90(1)(a)." "Emotional abuse" is listed in s.

46.90(1(a)2. and defined in s. 46.90(1)(cm).

13. The definition of "sexual abuse" is a paraphrase of the one provided in § 46.90(1)(gd), which applies because cross referenced in § 940.285(1)(ag)3. Section 46.90(1)(gd) states: "'Sexual abuse' means a violation of s. 940.225(1), (2), (3), or (3m)." Definition of the applicable sexual assault offense should be included.

14. The definition of "treatment without consent" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(h), which applies because § 940.295(1)(ad) provides: "'Abuse' has the meaning given in s. 46.90(1)(a)." "Treatment without consent" is listed in s. 46.90(1(a)4. and defined in s. 46.90(1)(h). Select the part of the definition that applies to the case.

15. The definition of "unreasonable confinement or restraint" is the one provided in § 46.90(1)(i), which applies because § 940.295(1)(ad) provides: "'Abuse' has the meaning given in s. 46.90(1)(a)." "Unreasonable confinement or restraint" is listed in s. 46.90(1(a)5. and defined in s. 46.90(1)(i). Select the part of the definition that applies to the case.

16. This is based on the general definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3).

17. This definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.295(1)(o). It differs from the general definition of "recklessness" in § 939.24 in two respects. First, it refers only to an "unreasonable" risk; § 939.24 requires an unreasonable "and substantial" risk. Second, it refers to "conscious disregard for the safety . . ."; § 939.24 refers to being "aware of the risk." The latter is not believed to be a substantive difference – "conscious disregard" was used in the definition of reckless homicide before the revision in 1989 when it was changed to clarify that a subjective mental state was required.

18. The instruction paraphrases s. 940.295(3)(a)3. which refers to the negligence alternative as "abuses, with negligence." "Negligence" is then defined in sub. (1)(km) in manner that is consistent with the regular Criminal Code definition of "criminal negligence." The approach used in the instruction is the same as that used in Wis JI-Criminal 1268. No change in meaning is intended.

19. Here insert the appropriate level of harm from the options provided in § 940.295(3)(b). The different levels and the associated penalties are summarized in the Comment preceding footnote 1.

If the case is based on the defendant knowingly permitting another to abuse a patient or resident, the sixth element should be changed to read as follows:

> 6. The defendant knowingly permitted another person to [intentionally] [recklessly] [negligently] abuse (name of victim) under circumstances that [caused death] [(caused) (were likely to cause) great bodily harm] [(caused) (were likely to cause) bodily harm].

20. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

21. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

22. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4) and in § 46.90(1)(aj).

23. The penalties set forth in subs. (3)(b)1g. and 1m. apply where death or great bodily harm is caused to an "individual at risk." The Committee concluded that this could be most efficiently handled by presenting the issue as a special question for the jury to consider if they find the defendant guilty of the basic offense. The definitions of "individual at risk" are those provided in sub. (1)(ag), (cr), and (hr) of § 940.295.

24. Section 940.295(1)(hr) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk." Section 940.295(1)(cr) provides that "'elder adult at risk' has the meaning in s. 46.90(1)(br)." The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 46.90(1)(br) without change.

25. Section 940.295(1)(hr) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk." Section 940.295(1)(ag) provides that "'adult at risk' has the meaning given in s. 55.01(1e)." The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 55.01(1e) without change.

1271 EXAMPLE ABUSE OF PATIENTS AND RESIDENTS: RECKLESS PHYSICAL ABUSE CAUSING GREAT BODILY HARM TO AN INDIVIDUAL AT RISK — § 940.295(3)(b)1m.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Abuse of patients and residents, as defined in § 940.295 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one employed in an adult care center who recklessly abuses a resident of that facility under circumstances that cause great bodily harm.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was employed in The Fairview Care Center.
2. (Name of victim) was a resident The Fairview Care Center.
3. The Fairview Care Center was an adult day care center.[1]
4. The defendant subjected (name of victim) to physical abuse.

   "Physical abuse" means the intentional or reckless infliction of bodily harm. "Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.
5. The defendant acted recklessly.

"Recklessly" means conduct that creates a situation of unreasonable risk of death or harm to and demonstrates a conscious disregard for the safety of the resident.

6. The defendant recklessly abused (name of victim) under circumstances that caused great bodily harm.

"Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing great bodily harm.

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) an individual at risk?

"Individual at risk" means an adult who has a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs his or her ability to care for his or her needs and who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1271 EXAMPLE was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2006; it reflected changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388.

This instruction attempts to illustrate how the general model provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1271 would be applied to a violation of § 940.295 involving reckless abuse under circumstances causing great bodily harm to an individual at risk. This offense is a Class E felony – see § 940.295(3)(a)2. and (3)(b)1m. Reducing the general model to this example required electing the appropriate material from the many alternatives set forth in brackets and parentheses in the model instruction.

1. There is not a cross-reference in s. 940.295 to a definition of "adult day care center." However, a definition of that term is provided in s. 49.45(4).

1272 NEGLECT OF PATIENTS AND RESIDENTS — § 940.295

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Neglect of patients and residents, as defined in § 940.295 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one [(in charge of) (employed in)] (name type of facility)[1] who [intentionally neglects] [recklessly neglects] [neglects][2] a [(patient) (resident)] of that [(facility) (program)] (or who knowingly permits another person to do so)[3] under circumstances that (are likely to) cause [death] [great bodily harm] [bodily harm].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (in charge of) (employed in) (name of facility).[4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (patient)[5] (resident)[6] of (name of facility).[7]

3. (Name of facility) was a (type of facility)[8].

   [(Type of facility) means (use the applicable statutory definition, if any).]

4. The defendant [intentionally neglected] [recklessly neglected] [neglected] (name of victim).[9]

   "Neglect" means creating significant risk to the physical or mental health of an individual by the failure of a caregiver to endeavor to secure or maintain[10] adequate care, services, or supervision for that individual.

IF INTENTIONAL NEGLECT IS ALLEGED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to neglect (name of victim).[11]

IF RECKLESS NEGLECT IS ALLEGED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

["Recklessly" means that the defendant's conduct created a situation of unreasonable risk of harm to, and demonstrated a conscious disregard for the safety of, the (patient) (resident).][12]

5. The defendant [intentionally neglected] [recklessly neglected] [neglected] (name of victim) under circumstances that [(were likely to cause) (caused)] [death] [great bodily harm] [bodily harm].[13]

["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing (death) (great bodily harm) (bodily harm)].[14]

["Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death or which causes serious permanent disfigurement or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ or other serious bodily injury.][15]

["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][16]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE DEFENDANT IS CHARGED WITH ABUSE OF A PATIENT OR RESIDENT WHO IS AN "INDIVIDUAL AT RISK":[17]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) an individual at risk?

CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING DEFINITIONS

["Individual at risk" means a person age 60 or older who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][18]

["Individual at risk" means an adult who has a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs his or her ability to care for his or her needs and who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation.][19]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was an individual at risk, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1272 was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2003, 2007, 2008 and 2011. The 2007 revision reflected changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388. The 2008 revision updated statutory references in footnotes 17-19 to reflect changes made by 2007 Wisconsin Act 45. The 2011 revision added reference to 2011 Wisconsin Act 2 to the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it amended the definition of "neglect" under element four to mirror § 46.90(1)(f).

This instruction is drafted for offenses involving intentional, reckless or neglect of patients or residents. The statute also prohibits intentional, reckless or negligent abuse. If a case involves a charge of abuse as opposed to neglect, use Wis JI-Criminal 1271.

Section 940.295 recognizes a variety of harms and a variety of mental states. The Committee concluded that the best way to address the considerable complexity that has resulted is to provide a single model instruction which can be modified to refer to the appropriate mental state and degree of harm. This has resulted in the use of many brackets and parentheses. To illustrate that the instruction becomes simpler when proper selection of alternatives is made, an example is provided at Wis JI-Criminal 1271 EXAMPLE.

Section 940.295, as amended by 2005 Wisconsin Acts 264 and 388, defines the following offenses involving neglect of patients or residents.

Offense	Penalty
Intentionally or recklessly neglect a patient or resident and cause death to an individual at risk	Class C felony
Simply* neglect a patient or resident and cause death to an individual at risk	Class D felony [sub. (3)(b)1g.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or simply* neglect a patient or resident and cause great bodily harm to an individual at risk	Class E felony [sub. (3)(b)1m.]
Intentionally neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that cause great bodily harm [to other than an individual at risk]	Class F felony [sub. (3)(b)1r.]
Intentionally neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause great bodily harm	Class G felony [sub. (3)(b)1r.]
Intentionally neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that cause bodily harm	Class H felony [sub. (3)(b)2.]
Intentionally neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause bodily harm	Class I felony [sub. (3)(b)2.]
Recklessly or simply* neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that cause great bodily harm [to other than an individual at risk]	Class H felony [sub. (3)(b)3.]
Recklessly or simply* neglect a patient or resident under circumstances that are likely to cause bodily harm	Class A misdr. [sub. (3)(b)4.]
Intentionally, recklessly, or simply* neglect a patient or resident under circumstances not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm	Class B misdr. [sub. (3)(b)5.]

* "Simply" is used to refer to offenses under sub. (3)(a)3. alleging only "neglect" in order to distinguish them from offenses requiring "intentional neglect" or "reckless neglect." This approach is based on reading sub. (3)(a)3. with "negligently" modifying only "abuses," not "neglects." Thus, the instruction presents three options: "intentionally neglects"; "recklessly neglects"; or, "neglects."

Because the statute defines so many different offenses, there is the potential for a variety of lesser included offense questions. One potential question is easily resolved: a special subsection of § 939.66 provides that all less serious violations of § 940.295 are included offenses of more serious violations. See § 939.66(6e).

Two general categories of variables govern the lesser included offense possibilities. First, there may be a different mental state. The statute provides three alternatives: intentionally, recklessly, or simply neglecting a patient or resident. Second, the abuse may have occurred under circumstances involving different levels of harm. Causing death, great bodily harm or bodily harm; likely to cause great bodily harm or bodily harm; and, not causing and not likely to cause bodily harm.

Presenting lesser included offenses in a way that will be understandable to the jury is a challenge. One approach would be the traditional long form, whereby a complete instruction on the charged offense would be followed by a complete instruction on each applicable lesser included offense. This has the serious disadvantage of resulting in a set of instructions that might be very long and repetitious. However, depending on the lessers and the complexity of their relationship to the charged crime, this may be the most effective way to approach the problem. The other approach would be use the shorter form described in Wis JI-Criminal 112A: specifying the difference between the charged crime and the lesser included crime and instructing the jury on that difference.

2011 Wisconsin Act 2 amended § 940.295 to add an exception to the version of the offense defined in sub. (3)(a)3.: abuses, with negligence, or neglects a patient or resident. Subsection (3)(am) is created to read:

(3)(am) Paragraph (a)3. does not apply to a health care provider acting within the scope of his or her practice or employment who commits an act or omission of mere inefficiency, unsatisfactory conduct, or failure in good performance as the result of inability, incapacity, inadvertency, ordinary negligence, or good faith error in judgment or discretion.

"Health care provider" is defined in one other Criminal Code statute. Section 940.20(7)(a)3. provides: "'Health care provider' means any person who is licensed, registered, permitted or certified by the department of health services or the department of regulation and licensing to provide health care services in this state." The usual practice in Wisconsin is to treat statutory exceptions like affirmative defenses: If there is some evidence of the exception, the burden is on the state to prove that the exception does not apply. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon, which recommends adding an element where there is a claim that the defendant was a peace officer; peace officers are subject to an exception from the ban on carrying concealed weapon in § 941.23.

1. Here specify the type of facility involved, such as "an adult day care center." The facilities covered by the statute are listed in sub. (2) of § 940.295:

(2) Applicability. This section applies to any of the following types of facilities or programs:

(a) An adult day care center.
(b) An adult family home.
(c) A community-based residential facility.
(d) A foster home.
(e) A group home.
(f) A home health agency.
(g) A hospice.
(h) A inpatient health care facility.
(I) A program under § 51.42(2).
(j) The Wisconsin Educational Services Program for the Deaf and Hard of Hearing under § 115.52 and the Wisconsin Center for the Blind and Visually Impaired under § 115.525.
(k) A state treatment facility.
(l) A treatment facility.
(m) A residential care center for children and youth operated by a child welfare agency licensed under § 48.60 or an institution operated by a public agency for the care of neglected, dependent, or delinquent children.
(n) Any other health facility or care-related facility or home, whether publicly or privately owned.

2. The bracketed material is intended to allow choice of the relevant alternatives which are described as follows in sub. (3)(a):

- intentionally abuses or intentionally neglects [(a)1.]
- recklessly abuses or recklessly neglects [(a)2.]
- negligently abuses or neglects [(a)3.]

This approach is based on reading the last alternative with "negligently" modifying only "abuses," not "neglects." Thus, the instruction presents three options: "intentionally neglects"; "recklessly neglects"; or, "neglects."

3. Read the phrase in parentheses if the case is based on the defendant permitting another to neglect a patient or resident. In that case, the fourth and fifth elements must be modified. Footnote 9 suggests a modification of the fourth element for "knowingly permits" case. Footnote 13 suggests a modification for the fifth element.

4. Here specify the name of the facility, for example: "The Fairview Care Center."

5. An extensive definition of "patient" is provided in § 940.295(1)(L). If a definition of that term is believed to be necessary, the applicable part of the statutory definition should be added to the instruction.

6. "Resident" is defined as follows in § 940.295(1)(p): "'Resident' means any person who resides in a facility under sub. (2)."

7. Here specify the name of the facility, for example: "The Fairview Care Center."

8. The name of the facility should be used in the first blank; the type of facility listed in sub. (2) should be used in the second blank. For example: "3. The Fairview Care Center was an adult day care center."

The second sentence allows for providing a definition of the type of facility involved. Cross-references to statutory definitions for many of the types of facilities are provided in sub. (1) of § 940.295:

Facility	Definition
- adult family home	§ 50.01(1)
- community-based residential facility	§ 50.01(1g)
- foster home	§ 48.02(6)
- group home	§ 48.02(7)
- home health agency	§ 50.49(1)(a)
- hospice	§ 50.90(1)
- inpatient health care facility	§ 50.135(1)
- state treatment facility	§ 51.01(15)
- treatment facility	§ 51.01(19)

"Adult day care center" is defined in § 49.45(4), although that definition is not cross-referenced in § 940.295.

9. If the case is based on the defendant knowingly permitting another to neglect a patient or resident, the fourth element should be changed to read as follows:

> 4. The defendant knowingly permitted another person to [intentionally neglect] [recklessly neglect] [neglect] (name of victim).

10. This definition is based on the one provided in s. 46.90(1)(f), which applies because it is cross referenced in s. 940.295(1)(k). Section 46.90(1)(f) provides:

> (f) "Neglect" means the failure of a caregiver, as evidenced by an act, omission, or course of conduct, to endeavor to secure or maintain adequate care, services, or supervision for an individual, including food, clothing, shelter, or physical or mental health care, and creating significant risk or danger to the individual's physical or mental health. "Neglect" does not include a decision that is made to not seek medical care for an individual, if that decision is consistent with the individual's previously executed declaration or do not resuscitate order under ch. 154, a power of attorney for health care under ch. 155, or as otherwise authorized by law.

This definition was addressed in an unpublished single-judge opinion concluding that the term "neglect," as provided in s. 940.295(3)(a)3. does not contain a mens rea requirement. State v. Murphy, 2020 WI App 70, 394 Wis.2d 523, ¶18, 950 N.W.2d 691.

11. This applies the common definition of criminal intent – mental purpose to cause the result – to the potentially confusing concept of "intentional neglect." The Committee interpreted this to mean that the defendant must act with the purpose to neglect a patient or resident, with "neglect" given its statutory meaning.

12. This definition of "recklessly" is the one provided in § 940.295(1)(o). It differs from the general definition of "recklessness" in § 939.24 in two respects. First, it refers only to an "unreasonable" risk; § 939.24 requires an unreasonable "and substantial" risk. Second, it refers to "conscious disregard for the safety . . ."; § 939.24 refers to being "aware of the risk." The latter is not believed to be a substantive difference – "conscious disregard" was used in the definition of reckless homicide before the revision in 1989 when it was changed to clarify that a subjective mental state was required.

13. Here insert the appropriate level of harm from the options provided in § 940.295(3)(b). The different levels and the associated penalties are summarized in the Comment preceding footnote 1.

If the case is based on the defendant knowingly permitting another to abuse a patient or resident, the fifth element should be changed to read as follows:

> 5. The defendant knowingly permitted another person to [intentionally] [recklessly] [negligently] abuse (name of victim) under circumstances that [caused death] [(caused) (were likely to cause) great bodily harm] [(caused) (were likely to cause) bodily harm].

14. If a more extensive definition of "cause" is necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 901.

15. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

16. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(4) and in § 46.90(1)(aj).

17. The penalties set forth in subs. (3)(b)1g. and 1m. apply where death or great bodily harm is caused to an "individual at risk." The Committee concluded that this could be most efficiently handled by presenting the issue as a special question for the jury to consider if they find the defendant guilty of the basic offense. The definitions of "individual at risk" are those provided in sub. (1)(ag), (cr), and (hr) of § 940.295.

18. Section 940.295(1)(hr) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk." Section 940.295(1)(cr) provides that "'elder adult at risk' has the meaning given in s. 46.90(1)(br)." The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 46.90(1)(br) without change.

19. Section 940.295(1)(cr) provides: "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk." Section 940.295(1)(ag) provides that "'adult at risk' has the meaning given in s. 55.01(1e)." The definition in the instruction is the definition provided in s. 55.01(1e) without change.

1273 LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER[1] — FAILURE TO RENDER AID — § 940.291

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Failure to render aid by a law enforcement officer, as defined in § 940.291 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a peace officer[2] who, while acting in the course of employment or under the authority of employment, [intentionally fails to render or make arrangements for any necessary first aid[3]] [knowingly permits another person to intentionally fail to render or make arrangements for any necessary first aid] for any person in his or her actual custody if bodily harm results from the failure.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a peace officer acting (in the course of) (under the authority of) employment.
2. The defendant had (name of victim) in his or her actual custody. [4]

   "Custody" means that a person's freedom of movement is restricted either by the use of physical force by a peace officer or by the assertion of authority by a peace officer to which the person has submitted. [5]

3. The defendant [intentionally failed to (render) (make arrangements for) any necessary first aid] [knowingly permitted another person to intentionally fail to (render) (make arrangements for) any necessary first aid] to (name of victim).[6]

The term "intentionally" means that the defendant knew (name of victim) had a need for first aid and purposely failed to (render) (make arrangements for) the necessary first aid.[7]

IF FAILURE TO RENDER AID IS ALLEGED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

["Intentionally failed to render aid" requires that the defendant had the knowledge and the ability to render the first aid that was necessary.]

4. The failure to render or make arrangements for first aid resulted in bodily harm to (name of victim).

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment or physical condition. [8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1273 was approved by the Committee in February 2020.

Section 940.291 was created by 1983 Wisconsin Act 27 (effective date: July 13, 1983).

1. Although the title of the statute uses the term "law enforcement officer," the Committee concluded that the term "peace officer" more accurately reflects the intent of the legislature as it is the term utilized within the actual text of the statute. Section 990.001(6) provides: "The titles to subchapters, sections, subsections, paragraphs and subdivisions of the statutes and history notes are not part of the statutes."

2. "Peace officer" is defined in Wis. Stat. § 939.22(22) as follows:

"'Peace officer' means any person vested by law with a duty to maintain public order or to make arrests for crime, whether that duty extends to all crimes or is limited to specific crimes."

3. "A violation for intentionally failing to render first aid under this subsection applies only to first aid which the officer has the knowledge and ability to render." Wis. Stat. § 940.291(1).

4. "This subsection applies whether the custody is lawful or unlawful and whether the custody is actual or constructive." Wis. Stat. § 940.291(1).

5. The definition of "custody" is adapted from decisions of the Wisconsin Supreme Court and Court of Appeals. These decisions held that the proper definition of custody was broader than being in the "physical control" of a police officer or institution guard. Rather, it is enough if freedom of movement has been restricted. State v. Adams, 152 Wis.2d 68, 447 N.W.2d 90 (Ct. App. 1989); State v. Hoffman, 163 Wis.2d 752, 472 N.W.2d 558 (Ct. App. 1991); State v. Swanson, 164 Wis.2d 437, 475 N.W.2d 437 (1991). See footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1772 for complete discussion of these cases.

6. This offense is essentially based on a failure to act, i.e., an omission. The offense definition incorporates the equivalents of the common law requirements for omission liability: a legal duty, knowledge of facts giving rise to the duty, ability to act, and failure to act as the duty requires. For a full discussion, see Wis JI-Criminal 905.

7. The word "intentionally" is defined to include two aspects: knowledge and purpose. The knowledge requirement is based on § 939.23(3) which provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires that the actor must have knowledge of those facts which apply to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word "intentionally." The purpose requirement is based on one of the two definitions of intent provided in § 939.23(3). The first is mental purpose to cause the result. The other is being aware that one's conduct is practically certain to cause the result. See Wis Criminal JI 923A.

The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply in situations consisting of purposeful dereliction of duty. However, there may be scenarios that require the practically certain to cause the result alternative. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

1275 FALSE IMPRISONMENT — § 940.30

Statutory Definition of the Crime

False imprisonment, as defined in § 940.30 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally confines or restrains another without the person's consent and with knowledge that (he) (she) has no lawful authority to do so.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant confined or restrained (name of victim).
2. The defendant confined or restrained (name of victim) intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to confine or restrain (name of victim).[1]
3. (Name of victim) was confined or restrained without (his) (her) consent.[2]
4. The defendant had no lawful authority to confine or restrain (name of victim).[3]
5. The defendant knew that (name of victim) did not consent and knew that (he) (she) did not have lawful authority to confine or restrain (name of victim).[4]

Meaning of "Confined" or "Restrained"

Although this requires genuine restraint or confinement, it does not require that it be in a jail or prison. If the defendant deprived (name of victim) of freedom of movement,[5] or compelled (him) (her) to remain where (he) (she) did not wish to remain, then (name of victim) was confined or restrained. The use of physical force is not required. One may be confined or restrained by acts or words or both.[6]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE ISSUE OF "ESCAPE" IS RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE:[7]

[A person is not confined or restrained if (he) (she) knew (he) (she) could have avoided it by taking reasonable action.]

[A reasonable opportunity to escape does not change confinement or restraint that has occurred.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE:[8]

[Meaning of "Without Consent"]

["Without consent" means that there was no consent in fact or that consent was given by (name of victim) because of fear caused by the defendant's use or threat of imminent use of physical violence on ((name of victim)) (on another person in the presence of (name of victim)) (on a member of (name of victim) 's immediate family).]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1275 was originally published in 1971 and revised in 1990 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2014; it added to footnote 8.

In State v. Baldwin, 62 Wis.2d 521, 215 N.W.2d 541 (1974), the Wisconsin Supreme Court declared that false imprisonment is "a crime of a continuous nature and exists so long as the confinement of the person without his consent continues uninterrupted." 62 Wis.2d 521, 526. The court upheld a conviction for false imprisonment in Milwaukee County after a previous conviction for the same offense in Waukesha County based on the same course of conduct. The court stated that it did not "hold that a continuous imprisonment in an automobile by the same actor constitutes a separate crime in each county through which the auto passes. Here, the actor's participation changed [from aider to principal], the cars changed, and the restraint changed." 62 Wis.2d 521, 525.

In Geitner v. State, 59 Wis.2d 128, 207 N.W.2d 837 (1973), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that false imprisonment was not a lesser included offense of kidnapping under § 940.31 because it requires proof of a fact which that more serious crime does not: that the defendant knew he had no lawful authority for the confinement or restraint.

1. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "with intent to." It is the other alternative that changed from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

2. This offense requires that the confining or restraint was without the consent of the person confined or restrained. Compare § 948.31, which applies to interference with the custody of a child where there may be similar restraint of a child but requires lack of consent by the legal custodian. See Wis JI-Criminal 2166-2168.

3. Several statutes recognize privileges that may be relevant to a claim of lawful authority to restrain or to confine another. See, for example, § 939.48, self-defense, and § 939.49, defense of property. Subsections 939.49(2) and § 943.50(3) specifically address the restraint of persons suspected of retail theft. Where there is evidence of a privilege, its absence is something the state must prove. The Committee recommends integrating the absence of the privilege into the instruction on the false imprisonment. See Wis JI-Criminal 1220A for an example combining battery and self-defense.

Other statutes, such as those defining the authority of police, may also be relevant. See, for example, §§ 968.24 and 968.25 defining the authority to "stop and question," and § 968.07, dealing with arrest.

Privileges or authority not specifically recognized in statutes may also be relevant. In State v. Teynor, 141 Wis.2d 187, 414 N.W.2d 76 (Ct. App. 1987), the court held that the false imprisonment statute could be applied to a parent charged with restraint of his children. The court found that > . . . the legislature did not intend that the lawful authority which a parent has to confine or restrain his or her child makes the parent immune from prosecution under the statute for the nonconsensual restraint or confinement of the child. . . . The parental status affords only a privilege which may be asserted as a defense . . . if the conduct is reasonable discipline of a child.

The Teynor court concluded that the entry of an order granting temporary custody of the children to his wife deprived Teynor of the lawful authority a parent has to direct the activities of his children, except when exercising lawful visitation.

4. The basis for the knowledge requirement in the fifth element is the provision in § 939.23(3) which states that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'."

5. The original version of the instruction (8 1971) used "liberty" instead of "freedom of movement." The Committee concluded that the latter term better describes the nature of the offense because it is less abstract. The "essence of false imprisonment" has been referred to as protection of the "interest in freedom from restraint of movement" and "restraint by one person of the physical liberty of another." Herbst v. Wuennenberg, 83 Wis.2d 768, 774, 266 N.W.2d 391 (1978).

6. The reference to "acts or words or both" has been in the instruction since its original publication in 1971, with citation to Am Jur. The current citation is to 32 Am Jur.2d False Imprisonment, § 17 (1982). Also see Hammer and Donohoo, Substantive Criminal Law in Wisconsin, p. 397 (PESI 1988): "mere words could be sufficient if they actually impose a restraint upon the person to whom they are directed." (Citing, R. Perkins and R. Boyce, Criminal Law, 225 (3rd ed. 1982).)

7. One or both of the bracketed paragraphs should be used only when the issue of "escape" is raised by the evidence. They replace a statement in the 1971 version of the instruction to the effect that "if there is some reasonable means of escape, there is no confinement or restraint." The Committee concluded that this statement was potentially confusing if literally applied. The word "escape" implies leaving a situation of confinement or restraint. Yet once there is confinement or restraint, that aspect of the crime of false imprisonment is complete, and a later escape would not affect it. This is the concept expressed in the second bracketed paragraph.

In the Committee's judgment, the relevance of escape is more accurately expressed in terms of actions that could reasonably have been taken to avoid confinement or restraint. This is the concept expressed in the first bracketed paragraph.

The "reasonable means of escape" issue was discussed in State v. C.V.C., 153 Wis.2d 145, 450 N.W.2d 463 (Ct. App. 1989). The court relied on a standard from the Restatement of Torts to determine whether a victim had a "reasonable means of escape":

> Since the actor has intended to imprison the other, the other is not required to run any risk of harm to his person or to his chattels or of subjecting himself to any substantial liability to a third person in order to relieve the actor from a liability to which his intentional misconduct has subjected him. So too, even though there may be a perfectly safe avenue of escape, the other is not required to take it if the circumstances are such as to make it offensive to a reasonable sense of decency or personal dignity.

Restatement (Second) of Torts, sec. 36 comment a. (1978).

The standard had previously been applied in a civil case. Herbst v. Wuennenberg, 83 Wis.2d 768, 778-79, 266 N.W.2d 391 (1978). In C.V.C., the court concluded that "the victim was not required to take steps dangerous to herself or offensive to a reasonable sense of decency or personal dignity to free herself in order for the state to prove restraint or confinement. . . ." 153 Wis.2d 145, 150. Also see the Comment to § 340.25 in Volume V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 71 (February 1953).

8. "Without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48). The material in brackets reflects the rule stated in § 939.22(48)(a) and has been included because the use of force, often involved in the crime of false imprisonment, may be relevant to the consent issue as well. When the bracketed material is used, additional explanation is recommended, especially where consent was given because of threats to a third person or family member. Subsections (b) through (d) of § 939.22(48) identify other situations where consent in fact is not to be considered as "consent" under the Criminal Code.

In State v. Long, 2009 WI 36, 317 Wis.2d 92, 765 N.W.2d 557, ¶¶31 and 32, the Wisconsin Supreme Court suggested that the definition of "without consent" in § 940.225(4) should be applied to the false imprisonment statute. Because the decision did not acknowledge that "without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48) – a definition that generally applies to Chapters 939 to 948 "unless the context of a specific section manifestly requires a different construction" § 939.22(48) intro. – the Committee concluded that the definition used in the instruction need not be changed.

1276 HUMAN TRAFFICKING — § 940.302(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Human trafficking, as defined in § 940.302 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly engages in trafficking for the purpose of [labor or services] [a commercial sex act] and does so by [CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING][1]

[causing or threatening to cause bodily harm to any individual.]

[causing or threatening to cause financial harm to any individual.]

[restraining or threatening to restrain any individual.]

[violating or threatening to violate a law.]

[destroying, concealing, removing, confiscating, or possessing, or threatening to destroy, conceal, remove, confiscate, or possess, any actual or purported passport or any other actual or purported official identification document of any individual.]

[using or threatening to use force or violence on any individual.]

[causing or threatening to cause any individual to do any act against the individual's will or without the individual's consent.]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly engaged in trafficking.

   "Trafficking" means that the defendant [(recruited) (enticed) (harbored) (transported) (provided) (obtained)] [attempted to (recruit) (entice) (harbor) (transport) (provide) (obtain)] (name of victim) .[3]

2. The defendant (use the term selected in element 1.) (name of victim) for the purpose of [labor or services] [a commercial sex act].[4]

   ["Services" means activities performed by one individual at the request, under the supervision, or for the benefit of another person.][5]

   ["Commercial sex act" means (sexual contact) (sexual intercourse) (sexually explicit performance) (any conduct done for the purpose of sexual humiliation, degradation, arousal, or gratification) for which anything of value is given to, promised, or received, directly or indirectly, by any person.][6]

3. The defendant engaged in trafficking by (use the term or terms selected in the introductory paragraph).[7]

Deciding About Knowledge and Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge and purpose. Knowledge and purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1276 was originally published in 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014; it reflects changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.302, Human trafficking, which was created by 2007 Wisconsin Act 116 [effective date: April 3, 2008]. The statute was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date April 25, 2014]. For an example showing how the instruction would read when typical alternatives are selected, see Wis JI-Criminal 1276 EXAMPLE.

Subsection (2)(b) of § 940.302 provides: "Whoever benefits in any manner from a violation of par. (a) is guilty of a Class D felony if the person knows or reasonably should have known that the benefits come from or are derived from an act or scheme described in par. (a)." This instruction does not address this means of violating the statute.

Subsection (2)(c) of sec. § 940.302 was created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362, by renumbering and revising what formerly was sub. (2) of § 944.33. An instruction is being drafted for violations of sub. (2)(c).

2007 Wisconsin Act 116 also created § 939.46(1m) which provides an affirmative defense for any offense committed by a trafficking victim as a direct result of the violation of the trafficking statute.

2007 Wisconsin Act 116 also created § 948.051, Trafficking of a child – see Wis JI-Criminal 2124.

1. The applicable term should be selected. The alternatives are those provided in sub. (2)(a)2.a. - L. of § 940.302.

2. Section 940.302(1)(b) defines "debt bondage" as follows: "the condition of a debtor arising from the debtor's pledge of services as a security for debt if the reasonable value of those services is not applied toward repaying the debt or if the length and nature of the services are not defined."

3. The Committee recommends selecting the applicable alternative from the choices in the brackets and parentheses. The choices are those provided in the definition of "trafficking" provided in § 940.302(1)(d).

4. For example, if element 1. involved selecting the "entice" alternative, the second element should read as follows: "The defendant enticed (name of victim) for the purpose of labor or services."

5. This is the definition of "services" provided in § 940.302(1)(c).

6. This is the definition provided in § 940.302(1)(a), as amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362. For a definition of "sexual contact" see Wis JI-Criminal 934 and § 939.22(34). The definition in § 939.22(34) applies to this offense; the other "sexual contact" definitions in § 940.225(5)(c) and § 948.01(5) apply to violations of § 940.225 and Chapter 948, respectively.

7. The applicable term should be selected. The alternatives are those provided in sub. (2)(a)2.a. - L. of § 940.302.

1276 EXAMPLE HUMAN TRAFFICKING — § 940.302(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Human trafficking, as defined in § 940.302 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly engages in trafficking for the purpose of a commercial sex act and does so by causing or threatening to cause bodily harm to any individual.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly engaged in trafficking.

   "Trafficking" means that the defendant recruited (name of victim).

2. The defendant recruited (name of victim) for the purpose of a commercial sex act.

   "Commercial sex act" means sexual contact for which anything of value is given to, promised, or received, directly or indirectly, by any person.

3. The defendant engaged in trafficking by causing or threatening to cause bodily harm to any individual.

Deciding About Knowledge and Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge and purpose. Knowledge and purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and purpose.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1276 EXAMPLE was originally published in 2011. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2014.

This instruction provides an example showing how Wis JI-Criminal 1276, which applies to violations of § 940.302, Human trafficking, would read when typical alternatives are selected:

- trafficking by recruiting a person;
- for the purpose of a commercial sex act;
- trafficking by causing or threatening to cause bodily harm.

1277 HUMAN TRAFFICKING — § 940.302(2)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Human trafficking, as defined in § 940.302(2)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly receives compensation from the earnings of debt bondage, a prostitute, or a commercial sex act.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant received compensation from the earnings of [debt bondage] [a prostitute] [a commercial sex act].

   ["Debt bondage" means the condition of a debtor arising from the debtor's pledge of services as a security for debt if the reasonable value of those services is not applied toward repaying the debt or if the length and nature of the services are not defined.][1]

   ["Prostitute" means a person who intentionally engages in sexual intercourse or other sexual acts for anything of value.][2]

["Commercial sex act" means (sexual contact) (sexual intercourse) for which anything of value is given to, promised, or received, directly or indirectly, by any person.][3]

2. The defendant received that compensation knowingly. This requires that the defendant knew that the compensation was from the earnings of [debt bondage] [a prostitute] [a commercial sex act].

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1277 was approved by the Committee in June 2015.

This instruction is drafted for violations of sub. (2)(c) of § 940.302, Human trafficking, which are Class F felonies. The substance of subsection (2)(c) formerly appeared at § 944.30(2); it was amended and moved to § 940.302 by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014].

For violations of sub. (2)(a) of § 940.302 see Wis JI-Criminal 1276 and Wis JI-Criminal 1276 EXAMPLE.

Subsection (2)(b) of § 940.302 provides: "Whoever benefits in any manner from a violation of par. (a) is guilty of a Class D felony if the person knows or reasonably should have known that the benefits come from or are derived from an act or scheme described in par. (a)." An instruction has not been drafted to address this means of violating the statute.

Section 939.46(1m) provides an affirmative defense for any offense committed by a trafficking victim as a direct result of the violation of the trafficking statute.

For violations of § 948.051, Trafficking of a child, see Wis JI-Criminal 2124.

1. This is the definition provided in § 940.302(1)(b).

2. This is based on part of the definition of "practice prostitution" in Wis JI-Criminal 1562.

3. This is based on the definition provided in § 940.302(1)(a), as amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362. The portions of that definition relating to "sexually explicit performance" and "any conduct done for the purpose of sexual humiliation, degradation, arousal, or gratification" are excluded – see § 940.302(1)(a)3. For a definition of "sexual contact" see Wis JI-Criminal 934 and § 939.22(34). The definition in § 939.22(34) applies to this offense; the other "sexual contact" definitions in § 940.225(5)(c) and § 948.01(5) apply to violations of § 940.225 and Chapter 948, respectively.

1278 TAKING A HOSTAGE — § 940.305

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Taking a hostage, as defined in § 940.305 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by force or threat of imminent force, seizes, confines, or restrains a person without the person's consent and with intent to use the person as a hostage in order to influence another person to perform or not to perform some action demanded by the defendant [and does not release the person held as a hostage without bodily harm prior to the time of arrest].[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (five) (six)[2] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (seized) (confined) (restrained)[3] (name of victim) .
2. The defendant (seized) (confined) (restrained) (name of victim) without (his) (her) consent.
3. The defendant (seized) (confined) (restrained) (name of victim) forcibly.
4. The defendant (seized) (confined) (restrained) (name of victim) with intent to use[4] (name of victim) as a hostage in order to influence a person to perform (or not to perform) some action demanded by the defendant.

5. The defendant demanded by conduct or statements that another person (not) perform some action.[5]

[6. The defendant did not release (name of victim) without bodily harm prior to the defendant's arrest. Bodily harm means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[6]][7]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[8]

[Meaning of "Without Consent"]

["Without consent," as used here, means that there was no consent in fact or that consent was given by (name of victim) because of fear caused by the defendant's use or threat of imminent use of physical violence on ((name of victim)) (on another person in the presence of (name of victim)) (on a member of (name of victim) 's immediate family).]

Meaning of "Forcibly"

"Forcibly" means that the defendant actually used force or threatened the use of imminent force to overcome or to prevent (name of victim) 's resistance to being (seized) (confined) (restrained).[9] "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[10]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[11]

["Forcibly" includes the (use of) (threat to use) force directed at a (third person in the presence of) (member of the immediate family of) (name of victim) if that (use of) (threat to use) force results in the (seizing) (confining) (restraining) of (name of victim) .]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all [five] [six] elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.[12]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1278 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1990 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2015; it involved a nonsubstantive change to the text.

Section 940.305 was created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1979, and was intended to fill a gap in the kidnapping statute, § 940.31, which fails to cover the situation where a person is kidnapped and held not for money ransom but for the purpose of making someone else do something.

The offense defined by § 940.305 is punishable as a Class B felony if the defendant does not release the hostage without bodily harm prior to his arrest. If this aggravating factor is not present, the crime is a Class C felony. The instruction is drafted for use with either crime; the material in brackets constituting the sixth element is to be included if the Class B felony is charged.

The constitutionality of § 940.305 was upheld in the face of a variety of challenges in State v. Bertrand, 162 Wis.2d 411, 469 N.W.2d 873 (Ct. App. 1991).

1. Read this bracketed material if the defendant is charged with a Class B felony, which involves the additional element of failing to release the hostage without injury prior to the defendant's arrest. If this aggravating factor is not present, the offense is punished as a Class C felony. If the Class B felony is charged, it may often be appropriate to submit the Class C felony as a lesser included offense. In that event, the Committee suggests that the procedure described in footnote 12, below, be followed.

2. Read "five elements" if the Class C felony is charged; read "six elements" if the Class B felony is charged. See note 1, supra.

3. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives be elected but does not conclude that an instruction joining the three alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Clark v. State, 92 Wis.2d 617, 642, 286 N.W.2d 344 (1979), and discussion at note 9, below.

4. Under § 939.23(4), "with intent that" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

5. Whether this element is required is open to question because the statute is ambiguous. Section 940.305, in relevant part, reads as follows:

> Whoever by force or threat of imminent force seizes, confines or restrains a person without the person's consent and with intent to use the person as a hostage in order to influence a person to perform or not to perform some action demanded by the actor is guilty. . . .
> (Emphasis added.)

Is the underlined phrase intended to mean "some action to be demanded" or does it mean "some action that has been demanded?" It can be argued that the underlined phrase is superfluous since the statute would make sense without it: the defendant must have the intent to influence another to perform or not to perform some action. On the other hand, it is a standard rule of statutory construction that a law should be so construed that no word or phrase is rendered surplusage or superfluous. Donaldson v. State, 93 Wis.2d 306, 286 N.W.2d 817 (1980); State v. Wacksmuth, 73 Wis.2d 318, 243 N.W.2d 410 (1976). Further, "taking hostages" is a serious crime, constituting a Class B felony if the hostage is not released without injury.

Given the ambiguity of the statute and the seriousness of the offense, the Committee determined that the ambiguity must be resolved in favor of the defendant. Thus, the fifth element of the instruction requires that an actual demand must have been made by the defendant. Like all other facts, however, the making of a demand may be established circumstantially by consideration of all the conduct and statements of the defendant.

6. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

7. Read the sixth element only if the Class B felony is charged. See notes 1 and 2, supra.

8. "Without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48). The material in brackets reflects the rule stated in § 939.22(48)(a) and has been included because the use of force, required as an element of the crime of taking a hostage, will often be relevant to the consent issue as well. When the bracketed material is used, additional explanation is recommended, especially where consent was given because of threats to a third person or family member.

9. This paragraph restates the statutory requirements that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." The Committee has concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the seizing or confining of the victim and the defendant's use of force. The Committee has concluded that it is not necessary to elect between the "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979).

10. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from the one provided in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th ed., 1981).

11. The seizing, confining, or restraining of the victim must be accomplished by force or threat of imminent force. The Committee has concluded that this element may be satisfied when the use or threat of force is directed at a third person or family member as well as if it is directed at the victim. This is based on analogy with the definition of "without consent" in § 939.22(48), see note 8, supra.

12. If the Class B felony is submitted to the jury and an instruction on the Class C felony is appropriate as a lesser included offense, the Committee suggests using the alternative approach for submitting a lesser included offense illustrated in Wis JI-Criminal 112A. That approach highlights the difference between the greater and the lesser offense by focusing on the single element that is different. Here that element is the sixth, requiring that the defendant did not release the victim without bodily harm prior to arrest.

1280 KIDNAPPING — § 940.31(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Kidnapping, as defined in § 940.31(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by force or threat of imminent force, carries another person from one place to another without consent and with intent to cause (him) (her) to be secretly confined or imprisoned or to be carried out of this state or to be held to service against (his) (her) will.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant transported[1] (name of victim) from one place to another.[2]
2. The defendant transported (name of victim) without (his) (her) consent.
3. The defendant transported (name of victim) from one place to another forcibly.
4. The defendant transported (name of victim) from one place to another with intent that[3] (name of victim) be (secretly confined) (secretly imprisoned) (transported out of this state) (held to service against (his) (her) will).[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[5]

[Meaning of "Without Consent"]

["Without consent," as used here, means that there was no consent in fact or that consent was given by (name of victim) because of fear caused by the defendant's use or threat of imminent use of physical violence on ((name of victim)) (on another person in the presence of (name of victim)) (on a member of (name of victim) 's immediate family).]

Meaning of "Forcibly"

"Forcibly" means that the defendant actually used force or threatened the use of imminent force to overcome or to prevent (name of victim) 's resistance to being transported.[6] "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[7]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[8]

["Forcibly" includes the (use of) (threat to use) force directed at a (third person in the presence of) (member of the immediate family of) (name of victim) if that (use of) (threat to use) force results in the transporting of (name of victim) from one place to another.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[9] IF DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 940.31(2): COMMITTING THE OFFENSE WITH INTENT TO CAUSE

ANOTHER TO TRANSFER PROPERTY TO OBTAIN THE VICTIM'S RELEASE.

If you find the defendant guilty of kidnapping, you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property[10] in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) . You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts and words and statements, if any, bearing on his intent.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) , you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

ADD THE FOLLOWING[11] IF THERE IS SOME EVIDENCE IN THE CASE THAT THE VICTIM WAS RELEASED WITHOUT PERMANENT PHYSICAL INJURY.

If you answer the first question "yes," you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?"[12]

The burden is on the State to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the first witness being sworn at trial).[13] If you are so satisfied, you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1280 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1990 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2012; it involved nonsubstantive changes to the text and an addition to footnote 4.

Section 940.31 defines the offense of kidnapping and provides that it may be committed in three ways, see subsections (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c). This instruction deals with an offense under subsection (1)(a). For violations of subsection (1)(b), see Wis JI-Criminal 1281. For violations of subsection (1)(c), see Wis JI-Criminal 1282.

Basic violations of § 940.31 are Class C felonies. This instruction also deals with the aggravating and mitigating factors provided for in subsection (2). The penalty classification for the offense is increased to a Class B felony if committed for ransom. The penalty classification for the aggravated offense is reduced back to a Class C felony if the victim is released without injury prior to trial. The Committee recommends handling both the aggravating and mitigating factors by submitting separate questions to the jury, see notes 9 and 11, below.

In State v. Simplot, 180 Wis.2d 383, 509 N.W.2d 338 (Ct. App. 1993), the court addressed the application of the kidnapping statute to a defendant who claimed to be acting as an agent of the parent of the child who was kidnapped. The defendant claimed he had a defense because a parent is immune from prosecution for kidnapping and he shared the same immunity when acting as the parents' agent. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals rejected this argument, adopting what the court characterized as the minority view which refuses to extend the parent's immunity to an agent.

Although kidnapping is sometimes referred to as "aggravated false imprisonment" (see, for example, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, page 72), false imprisonment is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Geitner v. State, 59 Wis.2d 128, 207 N.W.2d 837 (1973).

1. The Committee believes the word "transport" is preferable to "carries" used in § 940.31.

2. Section 940.31(1)(a) requires that the victim be carried "from one place to another." One question that may arise is, how far must the victim be moved to sustain a charge of kidnapping? The question arises in at least two situations: 1) in determining whether an attempt or a completed crime has been committed; and 2) in determining whether the crime of kidnapping has been committed in addition to another offense which involved some movement of the victim. Most of the attention has focused on the latter situation, as where a robbery victim is forced to move from one place to another during the course of the robbery. The problem may not be as difficult in Wisconsin as it appears to be elsewhere, because the Wisconsin statute requires that the carrying "from one place to another" be done with intent that the victim be "secretly confined or imprisoned or to be carried out of his state or to be held to service . . . ." It may be that movement incidental to another criminal offense would not meet the intent requirements under our statute. However, the same questions may arise with regard to the nature of the confinement or imprisonment as with the movement: Is it extensive enough to constitute "kidnapping" or is it just a natural incident of the commission of another crime?

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals addressed this issue in State v. Simpson, 118 Wis.2d 454, 347 N.W.2d 920 (Ct. App. 1984). (Simpson was remanded on other grounds which were addressed in a decision reported at 125 Wis.2d 575, 373 N.W.2d 673 (Ct. App. 1985).) The case involved the defendant getting into the victim's car and driving into the country where a sexual assault was committed. Simpson appealed his convictions for kidnapping under § 940.31(1)(a) and sexual assault. One of his contentions was that the evidence was insufficient to support the kidnapping charge because any movement of the victim was "incidental" to the acts constituting the sexual assault.

Simpson based his argument on case law from several other states requiring that the "asportation of a kidnapping victim be non-incidental to any offense other than kidnapping." See 118 Wis.2d 454, 458, and cases cited. The court of appeals rejected the argument, finding that the Wisconsin Supreme Court had rejected it earlier in a case involving charges of abduction and sexual perversion. See Harris v. State, 78 Wis.2d 357, 254 N.W.2d 291 (1977). Rather than apply a special rule about "incidental" movement, the Wisconsin approach treats this problem like any other involving acts which form the basis for violation of more than one statute. Kidnapping and sexual assault are separate crimes for purposes of charging and conviction under §§ 939.65 and 939.71. So the test is whether the evidence establishes the facts necessary to constitute each crime. The court in Simpson found the evidence sufficient to establish the facts necessary to constitute kidnapping. 118 Wis.2d 454, 462-63.

The 1980 version of this instruction included the suggestion that a statement be added which in effect adopted the rule requiring "non-incidental" movement of the kidnapping victim. In light of Simpson and Harris, this suggestion was removed in the 1990 revision.

Also see, State v. Wagner, 191 Wis.2d 322, 328, 528 N.W.2d 85 (Ct. App. 1995), for a summary of cases discussing the "from one place to another" requirement.

3. Under § 939.23(4), "with intent that" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

4. In State v. Clement, 153 Wis.2d 287, 450 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1989), the court held that the word "service" in the phrase "hold to service against his will" is unambiguous on its face: it "includes acts done at the command of another. It clearly embraces sexual acts performed at the command of another." 153 Wis.2d 287, 293. Also see, State v. Wagner, 191 Wis.2d 322, 329, 528 N.W.2d 85 (Ct. App. 1995). In State v. Denton, 2009 WI App 78, 319 Wis.2d 718, 768 N.W.2d 250, the court applied the Clement standard in rejecting the defendant's argument that "held to service" for purposes of kidnapping should be limited to "forced labor or involuntary servitude." The word "service" includes "acts done at the command of another." 319 Wis.2d 718, 739.

5. "Without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48). The material in brackets reflects the rule stated in § 939.22(48)(a) and has been included because the use of force, required as an element of the crime of kidnapping, will often be relevant to the consent issue as well. When the bracketed material is used, additional explanation is recommended, especially where consent was given because of threats to a third person or family member.

6. This paragraph restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." The Committee has concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the transporting of the victim and the defendant's use of force. The Committee has concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979).

7. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from the one provided in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th ed., 1981).

8. The seizing, confining, or restraining of the victim must be accomplished by force or threat of imminent force. The Committee has concluded that this element may be satisfied when the use or threat of force is directed at a third person or family member as well as if it is directed at the victim. This is based on analogy with the definition of "without consent" in § 939.22(48), see note 5, supra.

9. Section 940.31(2) provides for an increased penalty (from a Class C to a Class B felony) if the offense is committed for ransom. Where the aggravated offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if they find the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another to transfer money or other form or property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?

10. The statute refers simply to the transfer of "property"; the Committee concluded that since money will be involved in most cases, it is proper to refer directly to "money" in the instruction. If further definition of "property" is required, see §§ 943.20(2) and 990.01(27) and (31).

11. Section 940.31(2) provides that where the defendant committed the offense for ransom (see note 9, supra), the penalty may be reduced back to the penalty for simple kidnapping (Class C felony) if the victim was released without permanent physical injury prior to the first witness being sworn at trial. This mitigating circumstance operates only if the defendant is found guilty of committing the offense for ransom.

The Committee recommends that the issue be handled by submitting a separate question to the jury if they find the defendant guilty of the aggravated offense of kidnapping for ransom. The following should be added to the verdict form (as amended, see note 9, supra):

If you answer this question "yes," answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?

The Committee recommends the phrase in parentheses should be included only when the time of the release is an issue in the case, see note 12, below.

The additional instruction on the mitigating factor should be given whenever there is some evidence in the case that the victim was released without permanent physical injury. This evidence may be part of the state's case or may be presented by the defendant. The question is phrased in terms of the defendant's failure to release the victim in order to avoid any problems in shifting the burden of proof to the defendant. Once there is some evidence of a mitigating factor, the burden is on the state to prove the absence of that factor.

12. The Committee believes that the precise time of release of the victim will seldom be an issue and that the phrase in parentheses need not be read to the jury in most cases.

13. See note 12, supra.

1281 KIDNAPPING — § 940.31(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Kidnapping, as defined in § 940.31(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by force or threat of imminent force, seizes or confines another person without consent and with intent to cause (him) (her) to be secretly confined or imprisoned or to be carried out of this state or to be held to service against (his) (her) will.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (seized) (confined)[1] (name of victim) .
2. The defendant (seized) (confined) (name of victim) without (his) (her) consent.
3. The defendant (seized) (confined) (name of victim) forcibly.
4. The defendant (seized) (confined) (name of victim) with intent that[2] (name of victim) be (secretly confined) (secretly imprisoned) (transported out of this state) (held to service against (his) (her) will).[3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[4]

Meaning of "Confined" or "Restrained"[5]

Although this requires genuine restraint or confinement, it does not require that it be in a jail or prison. If the defendant deprived (name of victim) of freedom of movement, or compelled (him) (her) to remain where (he) (she) did not wish to remain, then (name of victim) was confined or restrained. The use of physical force is not required. One may be confined or restrained by acts or words or both.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE ISSUE OF "ESCAPE" IS RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE:[6]

[A person is not confined or restrained if (he) (she) knew (he) (she) could have avoided it by taking reasonable action.]

[A reasonable opportunity to escape does not change confinement or restraint that has occurred.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[7]

[Meaning of "Without Consent"]

["Without consent," as used here, means that there was no consent in fact or that consent was given by (name of victim) because of fear caused by the defendant's use or threat of imminent use of physical violence on ((name of victim)) (on another person in the presence of (name of victim)) (on a member of (name of victim) 's immediate family).]

Meaning of "Forcibly"

"Forcibly" means that the defendant actually used force or threatened the use of imminent force to overcome or to prevent (name of victim) 's resistance to being (seized) (confined).[8] "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[9]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE.[10]

["Forcibly" includes the (use of) (threat to use) force directed at a (third person in the presence of) (member of the immediate family of) (name of victim) if that (use of) (threat to use) force results in the (seizing) (confining) of (name of victim) .

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[11] IF DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 940.31(2): COMMITTING THE OFFENSE WITH INTENT TO CAUSE ANOTHER TO TRANSFER PROPERTY TO OBTAIN THE VICTIM'S RELEASE.

If you find the defendant guilty of kidnapping, you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property[12] in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) . You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts and words and statements, if any, bearing on his intent.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) , you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

ADD THE FOLLOWING[13] IF THERE IS SOME EVIDENCE IN THE CASE THAT THE VICTIM WAS RELEASED WITHOUT PERMANENT PHYSICAL INJURY.

If you answer the first question "yes," you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?"[14]

The burden is on the State to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the first witness being sworn at trial).[15] If you are so satisfied, you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1281 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1990 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2015; it involved a nonsubstantive change to the text and additions to footnotes 3 and 6.

Section 940.31 defines the offense of kidnapping and provides that it may be committed in three ways, see subsections (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c). This instruction deals with an offense under subsection (1)(b). For violations of subsection (1)(a), see Wis JI-Criminal 1280. For violations of subsection (1)(c), see Wis JI-Criminal 1282.

Basic violations of §940.31 are Class C felonies. This instruction also deals with the aggravating and mitigating factors provided for in subsection (2). The penalty classification for the offense is increased to a Class B felony if committed for ransom. The penalty classification for the aggravated offense is reduced back to a Class C felony if the victim is released without injury prior to trial. The Committee recommends handling both the aggravating and mitigating factors by submitting separate questions to the jury, see notes 11 and 13, below.

In State v. Simplot, 180 Wis.2d 383, 509 N.W.2d 338 (Ct. App. 1993), the court addressed the application of the kidnapping statute to a defendant who claimed to be acting as an agent of the parent of the child who was kidnapped. The defendant claimed he had a defense because a parent is immune from prosecution for kidnapping and he shared the same immunity when acting as the parents' agent. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals rejected this argument, adopting what the court characterized as the minority view which refuses to extend the parent's immunity to an agent.

Although kidnapping is sometimes referred to as "aggravated false imprisonment" (see, for example, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, page 72), false imprisonment is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Geitner v. State, 59 Wis.2d 128, 207 N.W.2d 837 (1973).

1. The Committee recommends that one of the alternatives be elected but does not conclude that an instruction joining the two alternatives in the disjunctive would be error. See Clark v. State, 92 Wis.2d 617, 642, 286 N.W.2d 344 (1979), and discussion at note 8, below.

2. Under § 939.23(4), "with intent that" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

3. In State v. Clement, 153 Wis.2d 287, 450 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1989), the court held that the word "service" in the phrase "hold to service against his will" is unambiguous on its face: it "includes acts done at the command of another. It clearly embraces sexual acts performed at the command of another." 153 Wis.2d 287, 293. Also see, State v. Wagner, 191 Wis.2d 322, 329, 528 N.W.2d 85 (Ct. App. 1995). In State v. Denton, 2009 WI App 78, 319 Wis.2d 718, 768 N.W.2d 250, the court applied the Clement standard in rejecting the defendant's argument that "held to service" for purposes of kidnapping should be limited to "forced labor or involuntary servitude." The word "service" includes "acts done at the command of another." 319 Wis.2d 718, 739.

4. The basis for the knowledge requirement in the fifth element is the provision in § 939.23(3) which states that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'."

5. The definition of "confined or restrained" is the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1275 False Imprisonment. In State v. Burroughs, 2002 WI App 18, 250 Wis.2d 180, 640 N.W.2d 190, the court viewed "the false imprisonment statute as a cousin to Wis. Stat. s. 940.31(1), the kidnapping statute. . . . We therefore are satisfied that the definition of 'confine' as set forth in Wis JI-Criminal 1275 is also appropriate for cases alleging kidnapping pursuant to s. 940.31." ¶19.

6. As with the definition of "confined or restrained" – see footnote 5, supra – the bracketed paragraphs are based on Wis JI-Criminal 1275, False Imprisonment. One or both should be used only when the issue of "escape" is raised by the evidence. They replace a statement in the 1971 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1275 to the effect that "if there is some reasonable means of escape, there is no confinement or restraint." The Committee concluded that this statement was potentially confusing if literally applied. The word "escape" implies leaving a situation of confinement or restraint. Yet once there is confinement or restraint, that aspect of the crime of false imprisonment – or kidnapping – is complete, and a later escape would not affect it. This is the concept expressed in the second bracketed paragraph.

In the Committee's judgment, the relevance of escape is more accurately expressed in terms of actions that could reasonably have been taken to avoid confinement or restraint. This is the concept expressed in the first bracketed paragraph.

The "reasonable means of escape" issue as it applies to false imprisonment was discussed in State v. C.V.C., 153 Wis.2d 145, 450 N.W.2d 463 (Ct. App. 1989). The court relied on a standard from the Restatement of Torts to determine whether a victim had a "reasonable means of escape":

> Since the actor has intended to imprison the other, the other is not required to run any risk of harm to his person or to his chattels or of subjecting himself to any substantial liability to a third person in order to relieve the actor from a liability to which his intentional misconduct has subjected him. So too, even though there may be a perfectly safe avenue of escape, the other is not required to take it if the circumstances are such as to make it offensive to a reasonable sense of decency or personal dignity.

Restatement (Second) of Torts, sec. 36 comment a. (1978).

The standard had previously been applied in a civil false imprisonment case. Herbst v. Wuennenberg, 83 Wis.2d 768, 778-79, 266 N.W.2d 391 (1978). In C.V.C., the court concluded that "the victim was not required to take steps dangerous to herself or offensive to a reasonable sense of decency or personal dignity to free herself in order for the state to prove restraint or confinement. . . ." 153 Wis.2d 145, 150. Also see the Comment to § 340.25 in Volume V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 71 (February 1953).

7. "Without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48). The material in brackets reflects the rule stated in § 939.22(48)(a) and has been included because the use of force, required as an element of the crime of kidnapping, will often be relevant to the consent issue as well. When the bracketed material is used, additional explanation is recommended, especially where consent was given because of threats to a third person or family member.

8. This paragraph restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." The Committee has concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the transporting of the victim and the defendant's use of force. The Committee has concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 40, 284 N.W.2d 703 (Ct. App. 1979), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979).

9. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from the one provided in Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th ed., 1981).

10. The seizing, confining, or restraining of the victim must be accomplished by force or threat of imminent force. The Committee has concluded that this element may be satisfied when the use or threat of force is directed at a third person or family member as well as if it is directed at the victim. This is based on analogy with the definition of "without consent" in § 939.22(48), see note 7, supra.

11. Section 940.31(2) provides for an increased penalty (from a Class C to a Class B felony) if the offense is committed for ransom. Where the aggravated offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if they find the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another to transfer money or other form or property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?

12. The statute refers simply to the transfer of "property"; the Committee concluded that since money will be involved in most cases, it is proper to refer directly to "money" in the instruction. If further definition of "property" is required, see §§ 943.20(2) and 990.01(27) and (31).

13. Section 940.31(2) provides that where the defendant committed the offense for ransom (see note 11, supra), the penalty may be reduced back to the penalty for simple kidnapping (Class C felony) if the victim was released without permanent physical injury prior to the first witness being sworn at trial. This mitigating circumstance operates only if the defendant is found guilty of committing the offense for ransom.

The Committee recommends that the issue be handled by submitting a separate question to the jury if they find the defendant guilty of the aggravated offense of kidnapping for ransom. The following should be added to the verdict form (as amended, see note 11, supra):

If you answer this question "yes," answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?

The Committee recommends the phrase in parentheses should be included only when the time of the release is an issue in the case, see note 14, below.

The additional instruction on the mitigating factor should be given whenever there is some evidence in the case that the victim was released without permanent physical injury. This evidence may be part of the state's case or may be presented by the defendant. The question is phrased in terms of the defendant's failure to release the victim in order to avoid any problems in shifting the burden of proof to the defendant. Once there is some evidence of a mitigating factor, the burden is on the state to prove the absence of that factor.

14. The Committee believes that the precise time of release of the victim will seldom be an issue and that the phrase in parentheses need not be read to the jury in most cases.

15. See note 14, supra.

1282 KIDNAPPING — § 940.31(1)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Kidnapping, as defined in § 940.31(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who by deceit induces another person to go from one place to another with intent to cause (him) (her) to be secretly confined or imprisoned or to be carried out of this state or to be held to service against (his) (her) will.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant induced (name of victim) to go from one place to another.[1]

2. The defendant induced (name of victim) to go from one place to another by deceit.

   ["By deceit" requires that the defendant induced (name of victim) to go from one place to another by (making a false statement) (giving a false impression).][2]

3. The defendant induced (name of victim) to go from one place to another with intent that[3] (name of victim) be (secretly confined) (secretly imprisoned) (transported out of this state) (held to service against (his) (her) will).[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, ands statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING[5] IF DEFENDANT HAS BEEN CHARGED UNDER § 940.31(2): COMMITTING THE OFFENSE WITH INTENT TO CAUSE ANOTHER TO TRANSFER PROPERTY TO OBTAIN THE VICTIM'S RELEASE.

If you find the defendant guilty of kidnapping, you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property[6] in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?"

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) . You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts and words and statements, if any, bearing on his intent.

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed this offense with the intent to cause another person to transfer money or other form of property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim), you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

ADD THE FOLLOWING[7] IF THERE IS SOME EVIDENCE IN THE CASE THAT THE VICTIM WAS RELEASED WITHOUT PERMANENT PHYSICAL INJURY.

If you answer the first question "yes," you must consider the following question:

"Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?"[8]

The burden is on the State to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did not release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the first witness being sworn at trial).[9] If you are so satisfied, you should answer this question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer this question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1282 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2006 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 940.31 defines the offense of kidnapping and provides that it may be committed in three ways, see subsections (1)(a), (1)(b), and (1)(c). This instruction deals with an offense under subsection (1)(c). For violations of subsection (1)(a), see Wis JI-Criminal 1280. For violations of subsection (1)(b), see Wis JI-Criminal 1281.

Basic violations of §940.31 are Class C felonies. This instruction also deals with the aggravating and mitigating factors provided for in subsection (2). The penalty classification for the offense is increased to a Class B felony if committed for ransom. The penalty classification for the aggravated offense is reduced back to a Class C felony if the victim is released without injury prior to trial. The Committee recommends handling both the aggravating and mitigating factors by submitting separate questions to the jury, see notes 9 and 11, below.

In State v. Simplot, 180 Wis.2d 383, 509 N.W.2d 338 (Ct. App. 1993), the court addressed the application of the kidnapping statute to a defendant who claimed to be acting as an agent of the parent of the child who was kidnapped. The defendant claimed he had a defense because a parent is immune from prosecution for kidnapping and he shared the same immunity when acting as the parents' agent. The Wisconsin Court of Appeals rejected this argument, adopting what the court characterized as the minority view which refuses to extend the parent's immunity to an agent.

Although kidnapping is sometimes referred to as "aggravated false imprisonment" (see, for example, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, page 72), false imprisonment is not a lesser included offense of kidnapping. Geitner v. State, 59 Wis.2d 128, 207 N.W.2d 837 (1973).

1. Section 940.31(1)(c) requires that the victim be induced to move "from one place to another." A question may arise as to how far the victim must be moved to sustain a charge of kidnapping. See discussion of this issue at note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1280.

2. The term "deceit" as used in sec. 940.31(1)(c) was discussed in State v. Dalton, 98 Wis.2d 725, 298 N.W.2d 398 (Ct. App. 1980). Dalton appealed his conviction, claiming that he could not be convicted absent proof of express or implied misrepresentations. The court rejected his argument, holding that the use of "deceit," without further statutory definition shows legislative intent to avoid limiting it to express or implied misrepresentations. Rather, the legislature intended to proscribe "wily and cunning stratagems that are contrived to delude the victim and conceal the violator's intent to effectuate the crime" of kidnapping. 98 Wis.2d 725, 741.

At common law, "deceit" was generally used as an equivalent of "fraud" and typically had the following elements: a false representation; made with intent to induce another to act; relied on by another person; to the damage of that person. In general, see Wis JI-Civil 2401 and cases cited therein. Also see 37 Am.Jur.2d Fraud and Deceit (1968). This amounts to using a false representation or other deceptive practice. The Committee concluded the two alternatives in parentheses adequately cover the likely application of "by means of deceit." Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, 2d Edition (Oxford University Press 1995), defines deceit as the "act of giving a false impression."

3. Under § 939.23(4), "with intent that" is defined to mean "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion.

4. In State v. Clement, 153 Wis.2d 287, 450 N.W.2d 789 (Ct. App. 1989), the court held that the word "service" in the phrase "hold to service against his will" is unambiguous on its face: it "includes acts done at the command of another. It clearly embraces sexual acts performed at the command of another." 153 Wis.2d 287, 293. Also see, State v. Wagner, 191 Wis.2d 322, 329, 528 N.W.2d 85 (Ct. App. 1995).

5. Section 940.31(2) provides for an increased penalty (from a Class C to a Class B felony) if the offense is committed for ransom. Where the aggravated offense is charged, the Committee recommends that a separate question be submitted to the jury if they find the defendant committed the basic offense. The following should be added to the standard verdict form:

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant commit this offense with intent to cause another to transfer money or other form or property in order to obtain the release of (name of victim) ?

6. The statute refers simply to the transfer of "property"; the Committee concluded that since money will be involved in most cases, it is proper to refer directly to "money" in the instruction. If further definition of "property" is required, see §§ 943.20(2) and 990.01(27) and (31).

7. Section 940.31(2) provides that where the defendant committed the offense for ransom (see note 5, supra), the penalty may be reduced back to the penalty for simple kidnapping (Class C felony) if the victim was released without permanent physical injury prior to the first witness being sworn at trial. This mitigating circumstance operates only if the defendant is found guilty of committing the offense for ransom.

The Committee recommends that the issue be handled by submitting a separate question to the jury if they find the defendant guilty of the aggravated offense of kidnapping for ransom. The following should be added to the verdict form (as amended, see note 5, supra):

If you answer this question "yes," answer the following question "yes" or "no":

Did the defendant fail to release (name of victim) without permanent physical injury (prior to the time the first witness was sworn at trial)?

The Committee recommends the phrase in parentheses should be included only when the time of the release is an issue in the case, see note 8, below.

The additional instruction on the mitigating factor should be given whenever there is some evidence in the case that the victim was released without permanent physical injury. This evidence may be part of the state's case or may be presented by the defendant. The question is phrased in terms of the defendant's failure to release the victim in order to avoid any problems in shifting the burden of proof to the defendant. Once there is some evidence of a mitigating factor, the burden is on the state to prove the absence of that factor.

8. The Committee believes that the precise time of release of the victim will seldom be an issue and that the phrase in parentheses need not be read to the jury in most cases.

9. See note 8, supra.

1283A PLACING A GLOBAL POSITIONING DEVICE — § 940.315(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.315(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who places a global positioning device or a device equipped with global positioning technology on a vehicle owned or leased by another person without that person's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant placed [a global positioning device[1]] [a device equipped with global positioning technology] on a vehicle owned or leased by another person.
2. The defendant placed that device without the person's consent.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1283A was approved by the Committee in October 2015.

Wis JI-Criminal 1283A is drafted for a violation of § 940.315(1)(a) – a Class A misdemeanor. For violations of § 940.315(1)(b) see Wis JI-Criminal 1283B.

Section 940.315 was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 45 [effective date: July 3, 2015].

Subsection (2) of § 940.315 sets forth several situations where the prohibition of sub. (1) does not apply: installation of a device by a manufacturer, by law enforcement officers acting in an official capacity, parents tracking the location or movement of a minor child, etc. The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89,92, 250 N.W.2d 38 (1951). Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595(1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

1. Section 940.315 does not define "global positioning device." A definition of "global positioning system tracking" is provided at sub.(1)(b) of §§ 301.48 and 301.49.

2. For a definition of "without consent" see § 939.22(48) and Wis JI-Criminal 948.

1283B OBTAINING INFORMATION GENERATED BY A GLOBAL POSITIONING DEVICE — § 940.315(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 940.315(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who intentionally obtains information regarding another person's movement or location generated by a global positioning device or a device equipped with global positioning technology that has been placed without that person's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained information regarding another person's movement or location generated by [a global positioning device[1]] [a device equipped with global positioning technology].
2. The device was placed without the person's consent.[2]
3. The defendant knew that the device was placed without the other person's consent.[3]
4. The defendant acted intentionally.[4]

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to obtain information regarding another person's movement or location generated by [a global positioning device] [a device equipped with global positioning technology].

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose or knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

3. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) to require "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Here, this requires knowledge that the other person did not consent. Regarding the meaning of "intentionally" see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and B.

4. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) to require "a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." The Committee believes that the "mental purpose" alternative is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

1284 STALKING — § 940.32(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Stalking, as defined in § 940.32(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally engages in a course of conduct directed at a specific person that causes that person [to suffer serious emotional distress] [to fear bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)] and that would cause a reasonable person [to suffer serious emotional distress] [to fear bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)] and where the actor knows or should know that the conduct will [cause the person to suffer serious emotional distress] [place the person in reasonable fear of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally engaged in a course of conduct directed at (name of person).

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the purpose[2] to engage in a course of conduct directed at (name of person).

   "Course of conduct" means a series of two or more acts carried out over time, however short or long, that show a continuity of purpose.[3] Acts that you may find constitute a course of conduct are limited to: (identify acts listed in § 940.32(1)(a)1. 10 that are supported by the evidence.).[4]

2. The course of conduct would have caused a reasonable person [to suffer serious emotional distress] [to fear bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].

["Suffer serious emotional distress" means to feel terrified, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or tormented. This does not require that (name of person) received treatment from a mental health professional.][5]

["Member of a family" means a spouse, parent, child, sibling, or any other person who is related by blood or adoption to another.][6]

["Member of a household" means a person (who regularly resides in the household of another) (who within the previous 6 months regularly resided in the household of another).][7]

To determine whether this element is established, the standard is what effect the course of conduct would have had on a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence in the position of (name of person) under the circumstances that existed at the time of the course of conduct.

3. The defendant's acts[8] [caused (name of person) to suffer serious emotional distress] [induced fear in (name of person) of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].

4. The defendant knew or should have known that at least one of the acts constituting the course of conduct would [cause (name of person) to suffer serious emotional distress] [place (name of person) in reasonable fear of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1284 was originally published in 1994 and revised in 1999, 2003, 2004, 2010, 2011, and 2013. The 2013 revision added reference to State v. Hemmingway to the comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2021; it revised footnote 4 to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 28.

2003 Wisconsin Act 222 [effective date: April 27, 2004] amended § 940.32(2) to add causing a person to "suffer serious emotional distress" and changing the mental state requirement addressed in the fourth element from "intends" to "knows or should know."

Section 940.32 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 96 [effective date: December 25, 1993]. As originally enacted, it was adapted from a model "anti-stalking code for the states" prepared by the National Institute of Justice (NIJ) and the National Criminal Justice Association. The model and its development are described in an NIJ Research Report, "Project To Develop a Model Anti-Stalking Code for the States," October 1993 (NCJ 144477).

Section 940.32 was extensively amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, [effective date: July 30, 2002]. The revised statute defines two offenses: violations of sub. (2) are addressed by this instruction; violations of sub. (2e) are addressed by Wis JI Criminal 1284B. Subsections (2m) and (3) provide for an increase in the penalty if specified facts accompany a violation of sub. (2). See Wis JI Criminal 1284A.

The constitutionality of § 940.32 as originally enacted was upheld in State v. Ruesch, 214 Wis.2d 548, 571 N.W.2d 898 (Ct. App. 1997), the first published decision dealing with the stalking statute. Claims based on overbreadth, vagueness, and equal protection were all rejected.

The defendant in Ruesch also claimed that sub. (4) of § 940.32, which states that "[t]his section does not apply to conduct that is or acts that are protected by the person's right to freedom of speech or to peaceably assemble with others under the state and U.S. constitutions . . .," creates an element of the crime. The court disagreed, holding that "[b]ecause subsection (4) provides no elements of the crime of stalking, it plays no role in the State's burden of proof at trial." 214 Wis.2d 547, 555.

In State v. Hemmingway, 2012 WI App 133, 345 Wis.2d 297, 825 N.W.2d 303, the court of appeals addressed how freedom of speech relates to stalking charges. The court reversed a trial court order that had dismissed a stalking charge on the ground that the statute was overbroad. The court of appeals held: "The First Amendment does not protect intentional conduct designed to cause serious emotional distress or fear of bodily harm or death in a targeted victim." ¶1.

Section 947.013 defines similar offenses by penalizing violations of harassment restraining orders. See Wis JI Criminal 1910, 1911, and 1912.

1. The statement of the offense in the first paragraph of the instruction is a paraphrase of the statute, which begins: "whoever meets all the following criteria . . ." Those criteria are redundant and overlapping. In the Committee's judgment, the statute requires:

(a) a course of conduct directed at a specific person;
(b) the course of conduct would cause serious emotional distress or fear of bodily injury or death in a reasonable person;
(c) the acts caused serious emotional distress or fear of bodily injury or death in a specific person; and
(d) the defendant knew or should have known that at least one of the acts would cause that person to suffer serious emotional distress or place that person in reasonable fear.

2. "Intentionally" requires either mental purpose to cause the result specified or awareness that one's conduct is practically certain to cause the result. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI Criminal 923A and 923B for elaboration on the two alternatives.

3. The definition of "course of conduct" is the one provided in § 940.32(1)(a). 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 revised the definition to provide a list of different types of actions that the course of conduct "may include." Before the revision, "course of conduct" was defined as "maintaining a visual or physical proximity," an alternative that is retained in § 940.32(1)(a)1. For a case reviewing the sufficiency of the evidence on this factor, see State v. Sveum, 220 Wis.2d 396, 584 N.W.2d 137 (Ct. App. 1998).

4. Here specify the type of conduct alleged to be involved in the case and supported by the evidence, based on the list provided in subd. 1. through 9. of § 940.32(1)(a). The list of types of conduct is preceded by the statement: ". . . including any of the following: . . ." The Committee concluded that this means that acts constituting the course of conduct are limited to the types listed. Subdivision 10. of § 940.32(1)(a) extends the coverage of the statute to "causing a person to engage in any of the acts described in subds. 1. to 9."

2003 Wisconsin Act 222 added to the list in subds. 1. through 10 by creating subd. 6m.:

6m. Photographing, videotaping, audiotaping, or through any other electronic means, monitoring or recording the activities of the victim. This subdivision applies regardless of where the act occurs.

2021 Wisconsin Act 28 [effective date: April 25, 2021] amended subds. 6., 7., and 7m. It confirmed that electronic stalking is a violation of the statute. Specifically:

> (1)(a)6. Contacting the victim by telephone, text message, electronic message, electronic mail, or other means of electronic communication or causing the victim's telephone or electronic device or any other person's telephone or electronic device to ring or generate notifications repeatedly or continuously, regardless of whether a conversation ensues.
> (1)(a)7. Sending to the victim any physical or electronic material or contacting the victim by any means, including any message, comment, or other content posted on any Internet site or web application.
> (1)(a)7m. Sending to a member of the victim's family or household, or any current or former employer of the victim, or any current or former coworker of the victim, or any friend of the victim any physical or electronic material or contacting such person by any means, including any message, comment, or other content posted on any Internet site or web application for the purpose of obtaining information about, disseminating information about, or communicating with the victim.

In 2010, the Committee reviewed its conclusion that acts constituting the course of conduct were limited to the types listed. Usually, when a statute introduces a list with "including," that indicates that the list is non-exhaustive. But in this statute the meaning appeared to be ambiguous, especially in light of the overall introduction to the crime definition which begins "whoever meets all of the following criteria." The Committee reviewed the legislative history and found that it did not resolve the ambiguity; while it showed an intent to broaden the coverage of the statute it also showed that some options were considered and not included. Further, two sections of the statute clearly appear to be limited to acts enumerated in the list. Subdivision 10. of § 940.32(1)(a) extends liability to "causing a person to engage in any of the acts described in subds. 1. to 9." Subsection (2e) is also limited to one who "engages in any of the acts listed in sub. (1)(a)1. to 10." The review convinced the Committee to reaffirm the original conclusion.

5. The definition of "suffer serious emotional distress" is provided in § 940.32(1)(d), which was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 222. The statement that receiving treatment is not required is based on § 940.32(3m), was also created by Act 222, which reads as follows:

> (3m) A prosecutor need not need [sic] show that a victim received or will receive treatment from a mental health professional in order to prove that the victim suffered serious emotional distress under sub. (2)(c) or (2e)(c).

6. This is the definition provided in § 940.32(1)(cb).

7. This is the definition provided in § 940.32(1)(cd).

8. This element is based on § 940.32(2)(c) and thus refers to the defendant's "acts" rather than to "course of conduct," the phrase used in the other elements. Because the legislature used different terms in the different subsections, they are assumed to have different meanings. "[T]he evidence is sufficient to support a stalking conviction if the victim's knowledge of one of the actor's acts induces fear in the victim." State v. Sveum, 220 Wis.2d 396, 413 414, 584 N.W.2d 137 (Ct. App. 1998).

9. 2003 Wisconsin Act 222 amended § 940.32(2)(b) to require that the actor "knows or should know that at least one of the acts that constitute the course of conduct will cause the specific person to suffer serious emotional distress or place the specific person in reasonable fear . . ." Before that amendment, the statute had required that "the actor intends . . ." This restores § 940.32 to the way it read when originally enacted; it required that the defendant "knew or should have known . . ." 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 had amended § 940.32(2)(b) to substitute "intends."

1284A STALKING: PENALTY FACTORS — § 940.32(2m) and (3)

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1284 IF ONE OF THE PENALTY FACTORS SET FORTH IN SUBS. (2m) OR (3) IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE FACTOR IS ESTABLISHED.[1]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question(s):

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2m)(a)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime)[2]?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2m)(b)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for a crime?

Was the victim of that crime the victim of the crime in this case?

Did the crime in this case occur within 7 years after the previous conviction?][3]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2m)(c)

[Did the defendant intentionally (gain access to) (cause another person to gain access to) a record in electronic format that contained personally identifiable information regarding the victim in order to facilitate the crime in this case?][3]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2m)(d)

[Did the defendant violate [§ 968.31(1)] [§ 968.34(1)] in order to facilitate the crime in this case? Section [968.31(1)] [968.34(1)] is violated by one who (define the alleged crime).][4]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2m)(e)

[Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the crime?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(a)

[Did the act result in bodily harm to [(name of victim)] [a member of (name of victim)'s (family)[5] (household)[6]]?

"Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[7]]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(b)

[Did the defendant have a previous conviction for (identify the crime)[8]?]

Was the victim of that crime the victim of the crime in this case?

Did the crime in this case occur within 7 years after the previous conviction?]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(c)

[Did the defendant use a dangerous weapon in carrying out an act of (identify act listed in sub. (1)(a)1. to 9.)?

"Dangerous weapon" means (see Wis JI-Criminal 910).]

CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL CASES

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1284A was originally published in 2003 and revised in 2010. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2011; it involved updating the Comment and footnote 3.

This instruction addresses the penalty-increasing factors set forth in subs. (2m) and (3) of § 940.32. Both subsections were created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective date: July 30, 2001. Application of the penalty factors depends on a finding of guilt for a violation of sub. (2), the offense addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1284.

A violation of § 940.32(2) is a Class I felony. The facts listed in sub. (2m) increase the penalty to a Class H felony. The facts listed in sub. (3) increase the penalty to a Class F felony. These penalty classifications take effect February 1, 2003.

Penalty-increasing provisions in subsections (2m)(a), (2m)(b), and (3)(b) require proof of a prior conviction. In State v. Warbelton, 2009 WI 6, ¶3, 315 Wis.2d 253, 759 N.W.2d 557, the court held that the penalty-increasing provision in sub. (2m)(a) "is an element of the stalking crime, rather than a penalty enhancer." The Committee concluded that presenting the penalty-increasing fact as a special question, as done in this instruction, is not inconsistent with its status as an element of the crime. Warbelton also held that if a defendant stipulates to the existence of the prior conviction, the prior conviction element is still to be presented to the jury in the absence of a jury trial waiver on that element. In the Warbelton case, the parties stipulated to the fact of prior conviction. The stipulation was accepted, but the state refused to consent to a jury trial waiver on the prior conviction element. The supreme court held the trial court did not err in submitting the element to the jury. The court held that State v. Alexander, 214 Wis.2d 628, 571 N.W.2d 662 (1997), which allows withdrawal of the "status element" in a case involving a charge of operating with a prohibited alcohol concentration, is limited to prosecutions for driving while under the influence of an intoxicant or with a prohibited alcohol concentration. For a discussion of stipulations that go to elements of the crime and jury trial waivers in that context, see Wis JI-Criminal 162A, Law Note: Stipulations.

The facts must be found by the jury because they increase the statutorily-authorized penalty range. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of stalking under Wis. Stat. § 940.32, at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> [State the applicable question.]

1. The penalty-increasing facts set forth in sub. (2m) and (3) of § 940.32 apply to violations of § 940.32(2).

2. The applicable crimes are: a violent crime as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.; stalking under § 940.32; or, harassment under § 947.013(1r), (1t), (1v), or (1x).

3. In State v. Conner, 2009 WI App 143, 321 Wis.2d 449, 775 N.W.2d 105, the court addressed the defendant's challenges to a conviction for stalking under § 940.32(2m)(b) – a Class H felony for the second violation within 7 years. As to the 7-year time period, the court concluded:

> . . . the seven year time restriction specified in § 940.32(2m)(b) requires that only the final act charged as part of a course of conduct occur within seven years of the previous conviction, and does not restrict by time the other acts used to establish the underlying course of conduct element of sub. (2).

2009 WI App 143, ¶19.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed. State v. Conner, 2011 WI 8, ¶47, 331 Wis.2d 352, 795 N.W.2d 750, holding that the statute "was properly applied in this case because, in this case, the 'present violation' was a continuing course of conduct that included the acts on November 30, 2005, and that occurred within seven years after the 2003 convictions for crimes involving the same victim."

4. Sub. (1)(cg) of § 940.32 provides: "'Personally identifiable information' has the meaning given in s. 19.62(5)."

Sub. (1)(cr) of § 940.32 provides: "'Record' has the meaning given in s. 19.32(2)."

5. Section 968.31(1) provides a criminal penalty for violating the "wiretap" statute. Sections 968.34(1) does the same for unauthorized use of a "pen register." A definition of the alleged crime should be included in the penalty question. There are no uniform instructions for these violations.

6. "Member of a family" is defined in § 940.32(1)(cb).

7. "Member of a household" is defined in § 940.32(1)(cd).

8. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

9. The applicable crimes are: a violent crime as defined in § 939.632(1)(e)1.; stalking under § 940.32; or, harassment under § 947.013(1r), (1t), (1v), or (1x).

1284B STALKING — § 940.32(2e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Stalking, as defined in § 940.32(2e) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has been convicted of (specify applicable sexual assault or domestic abuse offense),[1] directs an act of (specify applicable act listed in § 940.32(1)(a)1. to 10.)[2] at the victim of that offense, causes that person [to suffer serious emotional distress] [to fear bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)] and where the actor knows or should know that the act will [cause the person to suffer serious emotional distress] [place the person in reasonable fear of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was convicted of (specify applicable sexual assault or domestic abuse offense).[3]

2. (Name of person) was the victim of that offense.

3. The defendant directed an act of (specify applicable act listed in § 940.32(1)(a)1. to 10.)[4] at (name of person).

4. The act [caused (name of person) to suffer serious emotional distress] [induced fear in (name of person) of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].

["Suffer serious emotional distress" means to feel terrified, intimidated, threatened, harassed, or tormented. This does not require that (name of person) received treatment from a mental health professional.][5]

["Member of a family" means a spouse, parent, child, sibling, or any other person who is related by blood or adoption to another.][6]

["Member of a household" means a person (who regularly resides in the household of another) (who within the previous 6 months regularly resided in the household of another).][7]

5. The defendant knew or should have known that the act would [cause (name of person) to suffer serious emotional distress] [place (name of person) in reasonable fear of bodily injury or death to (himself) (herself) (a member of (his) (her) (family) (household)].[8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1284B was originally published in 2003 and revised in 2004 and 2006. The 2006 revision revised footnote 1 to reflect changes made by 2005 Wisconsin Act 277. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2021; it revised footnote 2 to reflect changes made by 2021 Wisconsin Act 28.

2003 Wisconsin Act 222 [effective date: April 27, 2004] amended § 940.32(2e) to add causing a person to "suffer serious emotional distress" and changing the mental state requirement addressed in the fifth element from "intends" to "knows or should know."

Section 940.32(2e) was created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, [effective date: July 30, 2002]. Section 940.32, as revised by Act 109, defines two related offenses: violations of sub. (2e) are addressed by this instruction. Violations of sub. (2) are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1284. Subsections (2m) and (3) provide for increase in the penalty for violations of sub. (2) if specified facts are established. See Wis JI-Criminal 1284A.

1. Sub. (2e)(a) identifies the applicable prior offenses: sexual assault under § 940.225, sexual assault of a child under § 948.02, repeated sexual assault of a child under § 948.025, sexual assault of a child placed in substitute care under § 948.085, or a domestic abuse offense. § 940.32(1)(ap) provides: "'Domestic abuse offense' means an act of domestic abuse that constitutes a crime." § 940.32(1)(am) provides: "'Domestic abuse' has the meaning given in s. 813.12(1)(am)." That definition was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 to add reference to crimes committed "by an adult caregiver against an adult who is under the caregiver's care" and "by an adult against an adult with whom the individual has or had a dating relationship." 2005 Wisconsin Act 277 [effective date: April 20, 2006] amended the list of offenses in § 940.32(2e)(a) to include § 948.085, an offense created by Act 277.

2. Here specify the type of conduct alleged to be involved in the case and supported by the evidence, based on the list provided in subd. 1. through 10. of § 940.32(1)(a). The list of types of conduct is preceded by the statement: ". . . including any of the following: . . ." The Committee concluded that this means that acts constituting the course of conduct are limited to the types listed.

2003 Wisconsin Act 222 added to the list in subds. 1. through 10 by creating subd. 6m.:

> 6m. Photographing, videotaping, audiotaping, or through any other electronic means, monitoring or recording the activities of the victim. This subdivision applies regardless of where the act occurs.

2021 Wisconsin Act 28 [effective date: April 25, 2021] amended subds. 6., 7., and 7m. It confirmed that electronic stalking is a violation of the statute. Specifically:

> (1)(a)6. Contacting the victim by telephone, text message, electronic message, electronic mail, or other means of electronic communication or causing the victim's telephone or electronic device or any other person's telephone or electronic device to ring or generate notifications repeatedly or continuously, regardless of whether a conversation ensues.

(1)(a)7. Sending to the victim any physical or electronic material or contacting the victim by any means, including any message, comment, or other content posted on any Internet site or web application.

(1)(a)7m. Sending to a member of the victim's family or household, or any current or former employer of the victim, or any current or former coworker of the victim, or any friend of the victim any physical or electronic material or contacting such person by any means, including any message, comment, or other content posted on any Internet site or web application for the purpose of obtaining information about, disseminating information about, or communicating with the victim.

In 2010, the Committee reviewed its conclusion that acts constituting the course of conduct were limited to the types listed. Usually, when a statute introduces a list with "including," that indicates that the list is non-exhaustive. But in this statute the meaning appeared to be ambiguous, especially in light of the overall introduction to the crime definition which begins "whoever meets all of the following criteria." The Committee reviewed the legislative history and found that it did not resolve the ambiguity; while it showed an intent to broaden the coverage of the statute it also showed that some options were considered and not included. Further, two sections of the statute clearly appear to be limited to acts enumerated in the list. Subdivision 10. of § 940.32(1)(a) extends liability to "causing a person to engage in any of the acts described in subds. 1. to 9." Subsection (2e) is also limited to one who "engages in any of the acts listed in sub. (1)(a)1. to 10." The review convinced the Committee to reaffirm the original conclusion.

3. See note 1, supra. If the case involves a "domestic abuse offense" the state must prove that the defendant was convicted of a crime that involved "domestic abuse" as defined in § 813.12(1)(am). The conviction itself will be a matter of record, but that conviction must be shown to have involved "domestic abuse," which is not likely to be established by the mere fact of the conviction.

4. See note 2, supra.

5. The definition of "suffer serious emotional distress" is provided in § 940.32(1)(d), which was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 222. The statement that receiving treatment is not required is based on § 940.32(3m), was also created by Act 22, which reads as follows:

(3m) A prosecutor need not need [sic] show that a victim received or will receive treatment from a mental health professional in order to prove that the victim suffered serious emotional distress under sub. (2)(c) or (2e)(c).

6. This is the definition provided in § 940.32(1)(cb).

7. This is the definition provided in § 940.32(1)(cd).

8. 2003 Wisconsin Act 222 amended § 940.32(2e)(b) to require that the actor "knows or should know that the act will cause the specific person to suffer serious emotional distress or place the specific person in reasonable fear . . ." Before that amendment, the statute had required that "the actor intends . . ."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1290 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1987 and 1994. It was withdrawn in 2000 when Wis JI-Criminal 1292 was revised to apply to both misdemeanor and felony violations of §§ 940.42 and 940.43.

1292 INTIMIDATION OF A WITNESS — §§ 940.42 and 940.43

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Intimidation of a witness, as defined in § 940.42 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly and maliciously prevents or dissuades (or who attempts to so prevent or dissuade)[1] any witness from attending or giving testimony at any trial, proceeding, or inquiry authorized by law.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a witness.

   "Witness" means any person who has been called to testify or who is expected to be called to testify.[2]

2. The defendant (prevented) (dissuaded)[3] (attempted to prevent) (attempted to dissuade) (name of victim) from attending or giving testimony at a proceeding authorized by law.

   (A (name of proceeding) is a proceeding authorized by law.)[4]

3. The defendant acted knowingly and maliciously.[5]

This requires that the defendant knew (name of victim) was a witness and that the defendant acted with the purpose to prevent (name of victim) from (attending) (testifying).

Deciding About Knowledge and Purpose

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and purpose. Knowledge and purpose must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and purpose.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and answer the following question "yes" or "no"].[7]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT A PENALTY FACTOR SET FORTH IN § 940.43 IS ESTABLISHED:[8]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by (attempted) force or violence upon [(name of witness)] [(identify relative)[9] of (name of witness)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by damage to the property of [(name of witness)] [(identify relative)[10] of (name of witness)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by any express or implied threat of (name harm described in sub. (1) or (2) of § 940.43)?"][11]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (4)]

["Was the defendant's act in furtherance of any conspiracy?"][12]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (5)]

["Does the defendant have a prior conviction for (a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45) (an act which, if committed in this state, would be a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45)?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (6)]

["Did the defendant commit the act for monetary gain or for any other consideration acting on the request of any other person?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (7)][13]

[Did the defendant commit the act in connection with a trial, proceeding, or inquiry in a felony case in which he was charged?]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (8)][14]

[Was the proceeding a criminal trial where the crime charged was an act of domestic abuse[15] or one subject to a domestic abuse surcharge?][16]

[CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL FELONY CASES:]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (repeat the question), you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1292 was originally published in 1982 and revised in 1987, 1994, 1998, 2001, 2006, and 2010. The 2001 revision changed the instruction to apply to both misdemeanor and felony offenses; it also replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1290 and 1292A. The 2006 revision added reference to sub. (7) of § 940.43, which was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 280. See footnote 13. The 2020 revision added reference to sub. (8) of § 940.43, which was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. See footnote 14.

This instruction is drafted for use in both misdemeanor and felony charges under §§ 940.42 and 940.43. The definition of the three basic elements is based on § 940.42 and is to be used in both felony and misdemeanor prosecutions; for felony offenses, a question is to be added so that the jury makes a finding whether the fact presented in the question is proved. Each of the facts specified in subs. (1)-(8) increases the penalty to that for a Class G felony.

Sections 940.41 through 940.49, relating to intimidation of victims and witnesses, were created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981. They were based on a model statute proposed in 1979 by the Committee on Victims, American Bar Association Section of Criminal Justice.

Several other statutes define criminal offenses directed against a witness:

§ 940.201 Battery of Threat to Witness (See Wis JI-Criminal 1238 and 1239)
§ 943.011 Damage or Threat to Property of a Witness (See Wis JI-Criminal 1400B)
§ 946.61 Bribery of Witnesses

In State v. Moore, 2006 WI App 61, 292 Wis.2d 101, 713 N.W.2d 131, the court affirmed convictions for 14 counts of intimidating a witness. The evidence was sufficient to prove Moore attempted to intimidate the second witness/victim by letters written to the first witness/victim. Charging 14 counts based on 7 letters attempting to dissuade two witnesses did not violate the rules against multiplicity – there is no evidence of legislative intent to limit the number of charges.

1. Section 940.42 prohibits attempts to "prevent or dissuade" as well as the completed act. The material relating to attempts is drafted in parentheses throughout the instruction and should be included when the facts of the case support the attempt basis of liability.

Section 940.46, also created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981, further provides that attempts to violate §§ 940.42 to 940.45 may be prosecuted as a completed act. This section is redundant in light of the fact that the definition of each substantive offense already prohibits both the completed act and an attempt.

If an attempt case is charged, it may be advisable to define "attempt" for the jury. The following is suggested:

> Attempt requires that the defendant intended to (prevent) (dissuade) (name of victim) from attending or giving testimony and did acts which indicated unequivocally that the defendant had that intent and would have (prevented) (dissuaded) (name of victim) from attending or giving testimony except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

This definition is briefer than the full explanation of "attempt" found in Wis JI-Criminal 580 but is believed sufficient for most cases. See that instruction for a complete discussion of attempt.

2. The definition of "witness" in the instruction is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(3):

> (3) "Witness" means any natural person who has been or is expected to be summoned to testify; who by reason of having relevant information is subject to call or likely to be called as a witness, whether or not any action or proceeding has as yet been commenced; whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose; who has provided information concerning any crime to any peace officer or prosecutor; who has provided information concerning a crime to any employee or agent of a law enforcement agency using a crime reporting telephone hotline or other telephone number provided by the law enforcement agency; or who has been served with a subpoena issued under s. 885.01 or under the authority of any court of this state or of the United States.

Subsection 940.41(1g) provides that "law enforcement agency" has the meaning specified in § 165.83(1)(b).

Reading the statutory definition of "witness" in the context of the required elements of the crime led the Committee to conclude that the simplified version would be suitable for most cases. The facts of a particular situation may require more complete incorporation of the provisions of § 940.41(3).

3. "Dissuade" means "to advise against" or "to turn from by persuasion," Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

4. The Committee concluded that using the phrase "proceeding authorized by law" would cover the longer phrase used in the statute: "trial, proceeding or inquiry authorized by law." The broader term, "proceeding," would clearly include "trial" and "inquiry."

Most "proceedings authorized by law" will be authorized by a specific section of the statutes. When there is specific statutory authority, the Committee believes this may be communicated to the jury by stating, for example: "A John Doe hearing is a proceeding authorized by law."

5. Section 940.42 does not use any of the regular criminal code "intent" words, such as "intentionally" but rather contains the phrase "knowingly and maliciously." The terms "malice" and "maliciously" are not used anywhere else in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. "Maliciously" is defined in § 940.41(1r) as follows:

> (1r) "Malice" or "maliciously" means an intent to vex, annoy or injure in any way another person or to thwart or interfere in any manner with the orderly administration of justice.

This instruction reduces the mental purpose to that of preventing the witness from testifying because that purpose fits in best with the basic definition of the offense: attempting to prevent the witness from testifying. This kind of purpose is one that shows intent to interfere with the administration of justice.

6. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding knowledge and intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

7. Continue with the bracketed material if the felony offense is charged and add the appropriate question. For misdemeanor offenses, stop with "guilty" and read the next sentence, beginning with "If you are not so satisfied . . ."

8. Section 940.43 specifies eight different facts that increase the penalty for the basic misdemeanor offense to that for a Class G felony. A bracketed question is provided for each statutory option.

9. The penalty increase provided by § 940.43(1) applies to the following specified relatives of the witness: ". . . the spouse, child, stepchild, foster child, parent, sibling or grandchild of the witness or any person sharing a common domicile with the witness." Reference to "treatment foster child" was deleted by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28.

10. The same relatives are covered as under sub. (1) of the statute. See note 9, supra.

11. This is an abbreviated paraphrasing of the full subsection (3) of § 940.43, which provides: "Where the act is accompanied by any express or implied threat of force, violence, injury or damage described in sub. (1) or sub. (2)." The references to sub. (1) and (2) serve to broaden the coverage of the subsection to all threats to do personal injury or cause property damage to any witness or any relative of the witness. The appropriate description of the harm and the target of the threat should be inserted in the blank.

Subsection 940.43(3) refers to "any express or implied threat of force. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) The suggested instruction does not include "express or implied" because the Committee concluded it was unnecessary. There must in fact be a threat, regardless of whether that threat is communicated by an express statement or implied from conduct. If a case clearly involves a threat implied from conduct, it may be appropriate to advise the jury that the statute covers those threats. Care should be taken, however, to assure that it remains clear that the threat, however communicated, must be established by proof which satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

12. See Wis JI-Criminal 570 for a definition of the inchoate crime of conspiracy.

13. This option was added to reflect the alternative created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 280. [Effective date: April 20, 2006.] The question is a paraphrase of the statute, which reads as follows: "(7) Where the act is committed by a person who is charged with a felony in connection with a trial, proceeding, or inquiry for that felony."

14. This option was added to reflect the alternative created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. [Effective date: March 1, 2020.] The question is a paraphrase of the statute, which reads as follows: "(8) If the proceeding is a criminal trial, where the crime is an act of domestic abuse, as defined in s. 968.075(1)(a), that constitutes the commission of a crime or a crime that, following conviction, is subject to the surcharge in s. 973.055."

15. Subsection 968.075(1)(a) defines "domestic abuse" as follows:

> "Domestic abuse" means any of the following engaged in by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the person resides or formerly resided or against an adult with whom the person has a child in common:
> 1. Intentional infliction of physical pain, physical injury or illness.
> 2. Intentional impairment of physical condition.
> 3. A violation of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3).
> 4. A physical act that may cause the other person reasonably to fear imminent engagement in the conduct described under subd. 1., 2. or 3.

16. A person is subject to a domestic abuse surcharge of $100 if a person is convicted of knowingly violating a domestic abuse temporary restraining order or injunction, or is otherwise convicted of violating certain specified crimes and the court finds the conduct constituting the violation involved an act by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the adult person resides or formerly resided, or against an adult with whom the adult person has created a child. See § 973.055.

1296 INTIMIDATION OF A VICTIM — §§ 940.44 and 940.45

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Intimidation of a victim, as defined in § 940.44 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly and maliciously prevents or dissuades (or who attempts to so prevent or dissuade)[1] another person who has been the victim of any crime from making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a victim of a crime.

   "Victim" means a person against whom a crime has been committed or attempted in this state.[3]

   In this case, it is alleged that (name of victim) was a victim of (name of crime). (Name of crime), as defined in § _____ of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (refer to the uniform criminal jury instruction for a definition of the crime).[4] Before you may find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a victim, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was the victim of (name of crime).

2. The defendant (prevented) (dissuaded)[5] (attempted to prevent) (attempted to dissuade) (name of victim) from reporting the crime to any law enforcement agency.[6]

3. The defendant acted knowingly and maliciously.[7]

This requires that the defendant knew (name of victim) was a victim of a crime and that the defendant (acted with the intent to injure or annoy another) (or) (acted with an intent to interfere with the orderly administration of justice).

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and answer the following question "yes" or "no"].[9]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT A PENALTY FACTOR SET FORTH IN § 940.45 IS ESTABLISHED:[10]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by (attempted) force or violence upon [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[11] of (name of victim)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by damage to the property of [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[21] of (name of victim)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by any express or implied threat of (name harm described in sub. (1) or (2) of § 940.45)?"][13]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (4)]

["Was the defendant's act in furtherance of any conspiracy?"][14]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (5)]

["Does the defendant have a prior conviction for (a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45) (an act which, if committed in this state, would be a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45)?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (6)]

["Did the defendant commit the act for monetary gain or for any other consideration acting on the request of any other person?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (7)][15]

["Was the underlying crime an act of domestic abuse[16] or one subject to a domestic abuse surcharge?"[17]]

[CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL FELONY CASES:]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (repeat the question), you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1296 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1991, 1994, 1998, 2001, 2010, and 2020. The 2001 revision involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the comment. The revised instruction applies to both misdemeanor and felony offenses; it also replaces Wis JI-Criminal 1294. The Committee approved revisions in February 2022 and October 2022. The February 2022 revision corrected an inadvertent error in sub. (7) of § 940.45, which was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. See footnote 15. The October 2022 revision removed a "Reporter's Note" concerning issues relating to instructing the jury on a domestic abuse surcharge pursuant to s. 973.055(4).

This instruction is drafted for use in both misdemeanor and felony charges under §§ 940.44 and 940.45. A separate instruction is drafted for cases involving intimidation of a person acting on behalf of a victim. See Wis JI-Criminal 1296A.

The definition of the three basic elements is based on § 940.44 and is to be used in both felony and misdemeanor prosecutions; for felony offenses, a question is to be added so that the jury makes a finding whether the fact presented in the question is proved. Each of the facts specified in subs. (1)-(7) increases the penalty to that for a Class G felony.

Sections 940.41 through 940.49, relating to intimidation of victims and witnesses, were created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981. They were based on a model statute proposed in 1979 by the Committee on Victims, American Bar Association Section of Criminal Justice.

1. Section 940.44 prohibits attempts to "prevent or dissuade" as well as the completed act. The material relating to attempts is drafted in parentheses throughout the instruction and should be included when the facts of the case support the attempt basis of liability.

Section 940.46, also created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981, further provides that attempts to violate §§ 940.42 to 940.45 may be prosecuted as a completed act. This section is redundant in light of the fact that the definition of each substantive offense already prohibits both the completed act and an attempt.

If an attempt case is charged, it may be advisable to define "attempt" for the jury. The following is suggested:

> Attempt requires that the defendant intended to (prevent) (dissuade) (name of victim) from making a report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency and did acts which indicated unequivocally that the defendant had that intent and would have (prevented) (dissuaded) (name of victim) from making a report except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

This definition is briefer than the full explanation of "attempt" found in Wis JI-Criminal 580 but is believed sufficient for most cases. See that instruction for a complete discussion of attempt.

2. The concluding phrase of this paragraph, ". . . from making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency," is a simplified paraphrasing of subsec. (1) of 940.44. There are two other subsections that are not addressed by the instruction. The three subsections read as follows:

> (1) Making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or state, local or federal law enforcement or prosecuting agency, or to any judge.
> (2) Causing a complaint, indictment or information to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof. [See Wis JI-Criminal 1297.]
> (3) Arresting or causing or seeking the arrest of any person in connection with the victimization.

3. The definition of "victim" in the instruction is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(2):

> (2) "Victim" means any natural person against whom any crime as defined in s. 939.12 or under the laws of the United States is being or has been perpetrated or attempted in this state.

4. The statement in the first paragraph of the uniform instruction should usually be sufficient. It will virtually always be sufficient where the crime is also charged in the instant case. In other situations, it may be good practice to include a more complete definition of the crime, depending on the crime and the nature of the evidence.

In State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991), the court found that it was error to fail to instruct sufficiently on the crime committed against the victim:

> The jury instruction should have specified and defined the crime or crimes underlying the alleged victimization. Additionally, the jury should have been told that it could not find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a victim unless the state proved the elements of the underlying crime or crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. The reason is clear: a jury that is not told which crime is the predicate for the intimidation-of-a-victim charge and is not instructed on the elements of that crime may very well conclude that certain conduct constitutes a crime when it does not.

161 Wis.2d 616, 624.

In many cases, it is likely that the defendant will also be charged with committing the underlying crime against the victim as well as with trying to intimidate that victim. In those situations, Wis JI-Criminal 1294 would be given after the jury had been instructed on the essential facts of the underlying crime and detailed recapitulation of those facts ought not to be necessary in Wis JI-Criminal 1294. If the jury has not been instructed on the underlying crime, a more detailed explanation may be required in order to satisfy the requirements of the Thomas case.

Acquittal on the underlying crime does not prevent conviction on the charge of intimidating the victim of that crime. State v. Thomas, supra.

5. "Dissuade" means "to advise against" or "to turn from by persuasion," Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

6. This statement substitutes "reporting the crime" for the statute's "report of the victimization" on the grounds that it means the same thing and will be more understandable. The second element reflects one alternative of several that are possible under the statute. See note 2, supra.

7. Section 940.44 does not use any of the regular criminal code "intent" words, such as "intentionally" but rather contains the phrase "knowingly and maliciously." The terms "malice" and "maliciously" are not used anywhere else in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. "Maliciously" is defined in § 940.41(1r) as follows:

> (1r) "Malice" or "maliciously" means an intent to vex, annoy or injure in any way another person or to thwart or interfere in any manner with the orderly administration of justice.

This instruction reduces the mental purpose to that of preventing the witness from testifying because that purpose fits in best with the basic definition of the offense: attempting to prevent the witness from testifying. This kind of purpose is one that shows intent to interfere with the administration of justice.

8. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding knowledge and intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly JI 923.1].

9. Continue with the bracketed material if the felony offense is charged and add the appropriate question. For misdemeanor offenses, stop with "guilty" and read the next sentence, beginning with "If you are not so satisfied . . ."

10. Section 940.45 specifies seven different facts that increase the penalty for the basic misdemeanor offense to that for a Class G felony. A bracketed question is provided for each statutory option.

11. The penalty increase provided by § 940.45(1) applies to the following specified relatives of the witness: ". . . the spouse, child, stepchild, foster child, parent, sibling or grandchild of the witness or any person sharing a common domicile with the witness." Reference to "treatment foster child" was deleted by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28.

12. The same relatives are covered as under sub. (1) of the statute. See note 11, supra.

13. This is an abbreviated paraphrasing of the full subsection (3) of § 940.43, which provides: "Where the act is accompanied by any express or implied threat of force, violence, injury or damage described in sub. (1) or sub. (2)." The references to sub. (1) and (2) serve to broaden the coverage of the subsection to all threats to do personal injury or cause property damage to any witness or any relative of the witness. The appropriate description of the harm and the target of the threat should be inserted in the blank.

Subsection 940.43(3) refers to "any express or implied threat of force. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) The suggested instruction does not include "express or implied" because the Committee concluded it was unnecessary. There must in fact be a threat, regardless of whether that threat is communicated by an express statement or implied from conduct. If a case clearly involves a threat implied from conduct, it may be appropriate to advise the jury that the statute covers those threats. Care should be taken, however, to assure that it remains clear that the threat, however communicated, must be established by proof which satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

14. See Wis JI-Criminal 570 for a definition of the inchoate crime of conspiracy.

15. This option was added to reflect the alternative created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. [Effective date: March 1, 2020.] The question is a paraphrase of the statute, which reads as follows: "(7) Where the underlying crime is an act of domestic abuse, as defined in s. 968.075(1)(a), that constitutes the commission of a crime or a crime that, following a conviction, is subject to the surcharge in s. 973.055."

16. Subsection 968.075(1)(a) defines "domestic abuse" as follows:

> "Domestic abuse" means any of the following engaged in by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the person resides or formerly resided or against an adult with whom the person has a child in common:
> 1. Intentional infliction of physical pain, physical injury or illness.
> 2. Intentional impairment of physical condition.
> 3. A violation of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3).
> 4. A physical act that may cause the other person reasonably to fear imminent engagement in the conduct described under subd. 1., 2. or 3..

For an instruction on committing a domestic abuse crime, see Wis JI-Criminal 984.

17. A person is subject to a domestic abuse surcharge if that person is convicted of knowingly violating a domestic abuse temporary restraining order or injunction, or is otherwise convicted of violating certain criminal offenses or municipal ordinances specified under § 973.055(a)1 and the court finds the conduct constituting the violation involved an act by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the adult person resides or formerly resided, or against an adult with whom the adult person has created a child. See § 973.055.

1296A INTIMIDATION OF A PERSON ACTING ON BEHALF OF A VICTIM — §§ 940.44 and 940.45

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Intimidation of a person acting on behalf of a victim, as defined in § 940.44 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly and maliciously prevents or dissuades (or who attempts to so prevent or dissuade)[1] a person who is acting on the behalf of the victim of any crime from making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim)[3] was a victim of a crime.

   "Victim" means a person against whom a crime has been committed or attempted in this state.[4]

   In this case, it is alleged that (name of crime victim) was a victim of (name of crime). (Name of crime), as defined in § ____ of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (refer to the uniform criminal jury instruction for a definition of the crime).[5] Before you may find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a person acting on behalf of a victim, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of crime victim) was the victim of (name of crime).

2. (Name of person acting on behalf of crime victim)[6] was acting on behalf of (name of crime victim).

3. The defendant (prevented) (dissuaded)[7] (attempted to prevent) (attempted to dissuade) (name of person acting on behalf of crime victim) from reporting the crime to any law enforcement agency.[8]

4. The defendant acted knowingly and maliciously.[9]

This requires that the defendant knew (name of crime victim) was a victim of a crime and knew that (name of person acting on behalf of crime victim) was acting on behalf of (name of crime victim). This also requires that the defendant (acted with the intent to injure or annoy another) (or) (acted with an intent to interfere with the orderly administration of justice).

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and answer the following question "yes" or "no"].[11]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT A PENALTY FACTOR SET FORTH IN § 940.45 IS ESTABLISHED:[12]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by (attempted) force or violence upon [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[13] of (name of victim)]?"][14]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by damage to the property of [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[15] of (name of victim)]?"][16]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by any express or implied threat of (name harm described in sub. (1) or (2) of § 940.45)?"][17]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (4)]

["Was the defendant's act in furtherance of any conspiracy?"][18]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (5)]

["Does the defendant have a prior conviction for (a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45) (an act which, if committed in this state, would be a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45)?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (6)]

["Did the defendant commit the act for monetary gain or for any other consideration acting on the request of any other person?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (7)][19]

["Was the underlying crime an act of domestic abuse[20] or one subject to a domestic abuse surcharge?"[21]]

[CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL FELONY CASES]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (repeat the question), you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1296A was originally published in 2001 and revised in 2010 and 2020. The Committee approved revisions in February 2022 and October 2022. The February 2022 revision corrected an inadvertent error in sub. (7) of § 940.45, which was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. See footnote 19. The October 2022 revision removed a "Reporter's Note" concerning issues relating to instructing the jury on a domestic abuse surcharge pursuant to s. 973.055(4).

This instruction adapts Wis JI-Criminal 1296 for charges alleging intimidation of a person acting on behalf of a crime victim. It is drafted for use in both misdemeanor and felony charges under §§ 940.44 and 940.45. The definition of the four basic elements is to be used in both situations; for felony offenses, a question is to be added so that the jury makes a finding as to whether the fact embodied in the question is proved. Each of the facts increases the penalty to that for a Class G felony.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1296 for general information about §§ 940.41 940.49.

1. Section 940.44 prohibits attempts to "prevent or dissuade" as well as the completed act. The material relating to attempts is drafted in parentheses throughout the instruction and should be included when the facts of the case support the attempt basis of liability.

Section 940.46, also created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981, further provides that attempts to violate §§ 940.42 to 940.45 may be prosecuted as a completed act. This section is redundant in light of the fact that the definition of each substantive offense already prohibits both the completed act and an attempt.

If an attempt case is charged, it may be advisable to define "attempt" for the jury. The following is suggested:

> Attempt requires that the defendant intended to (prevent) (dissuade) (name of victim) from making a report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency and did acts which indicated unequivocally that the defendant had that intent and would have (prevented) (dissuaded) (name of victim) from making a report except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

This definition is briefer than the full explanation of "attempt" found in Wis JI-Criminal 580 but is believed sufficient for most cases. See that instruction for a complete discussion of attempt.

2. The concluding phrase of this paragraph, ". . . from making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency," is a simplified paraphrasing of subsec. (1) of 940.44. There are two other subsections that are not addressed by the instruction. The three subsections read as follows:

(1) Making any report of the victimization to any peace officer or state, local or federal law enforcement or prosecuting agency, or to any judge.
(2) Causing a complaint, indictment or information to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof. [See Wis JI-Criminal 1297.]
(3) Arresting or causing or seeking the arrest of any person in connection with the victimization.

3. Where the instruction calls for the "name of crime victim" use the name of the person who is alleged to be the victim of the underlying crime. The victim of the offense defined in this instruction is indicated by blanks labeled "name of person acting on behalf of the crime victim." See note 4, below.

4. The definition of "victim" in the instruction is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(2):

> (2) "Victim" means any natural person against whom any crime as defined in s. 939.12 or under the laws of the United States is being or has been perpetrated or attempted in this state.

5. The statement in the first paragraph of the uniform instruction should usually be sufficient. It will virtually always be sufficient where the crime is also charged in the instant case. In other situations, it may be good practice to include a more complete definition of the crime, depending on the crime and the nature of the evidence.

In State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991), the court found that it was error to fail to instruct sufficiently on the crime committed against the victim:

> The jury instruction should have specified and defined the crime or crimes underlying the alleged victimization. Additionally, the jury should have been told that it could not find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a victim unless the state proved the elements of the underlying crime or crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. The reason is clear: a jury that is not told which crime is the predicate for the intimidation-of-a-victim charge and is not instructed on the elements of that crime may very well conclude that certain conduct constitutes a crime when it does not.

161 Wis.2d 616, 624.

In many cases, it is likely that the defendant will also be charged with committing the underlying crime against the victim as well as with trying to intimidate that victim. In those situations, Wis JI-Criminal 1296A would be given after the jury had been instructed on the essential facts of the underlying crime and detailed recapitulation of those facts ought not to be necessary in Wis JI-Criminal 1296A. If the jury has not been instructed on the underlying crime, a more detailed explanation may be required in order to satisfy the requirements of the Thomas case.

Acquittal on the underlying crime does not prevent conviction on the charge of intimidating the victim of that crime. State v. Thomas, supra.

6. Where the instruction calls for the "name of person acting on behalf of crime victim" use the name of the person who is alleged to be the victim of the crime defined by this instruction. The victim of the underlying crime is referred to in the instruction as the "crime victim." See note 3, supra.

7. "Dissuade" means "to advise against" or "to turn from by persuasion," Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

8. This statement substitutes "reporting the crime" for the statute's "report of the victimization" on the grounds that it means the same thing and will be more understandable. The second element reflects one alternative of several that are possible under the statute. See note 2, supra.

9. Section 940.44 does not use any of the regular criminal code "intent" words, such as "intentionally" but rather contains the phrase "knowingly and maliciously." The terms "malice" and "maliciously" are not used anywhere else in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. "Maliciously" is defined in § 940.41(1r) as follows:

> (1r) "Malice" or "maliciously" means an intent to vex, annoy or injure in any way another person or to thwart or interfere in any manner with the orderly administration of justice.

This instruction reduces the mental purpose to that of preventing the witness from testifying because that purpose fits in best with the basic definition of the offense: attempting to prevent the witness from testifying. This kind of purpose is one that shows intent to interfere with the administration of justice.

10. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding knowledge and intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly JI 923.1].

11. Continue with the bracketed material if the felony offense is charged and add the appropriate question. For misdemeanor offenses, stop with "guilty" and read the next sentence, beginning with "If you are not so satisfied . . ."

12. Section 940.45 specifies seven different facts that increase the penalty for the basic misdemeanor offense to that for a Class G felony. A bracketed question is provided for each statutory option.

13. The penalty increase provided by § 940.45(1) applies the following specified relatives of the witness: ". . . the spouse, child, stepchild, foster child, parent, sibling or grandchild of the witness or any person sharing a common domicile with the witness." Reference to "treatment foster child" was deleted by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28.

14. The Committee concluded that the aggravating factors described in subs. (1), (2), and (3) apply only to acts against the victim of the underlying crime and not to acts against the person acting on behalf of the crime victim.

15. The same relatives are covered as under sub. (1) of the statute. See note 13, supra.

16. The Committee concluded that the aggravating factors described in subs. (1), (2), and (3) apply only to acts against the victim of the underlying crime and not to acts against the person acting on behalf of the crime victim.

17. This is an abbreviated paraphrasing of the full subsection (3) of § 940.43, which provides: "Where the act is accompanied by any express or implied threat of force, violence, injury or damage described in sub. (1) or sub. (2)." The references to sub. (1) and (2) serve to broaden the coverage of the subsection to all threats to do personal injury or cause property damage to any witness or any relative of the witness. The appropriate description of the harm and the target of the threat should be inserted in the blank.

Subsection 940.43(3) refers to "any express or implied threat of force. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) The suggested instruction does not include "express or implied" because the Committee concluded it was unnecessary. There must in fact be a threat, regardless of whether that threat is communicated by an express statement or implied from conduct. If a case clearly involves a threat implied from conduct, it may be appropriate to advise the jury that the statute covers those threats. Care should be taken, however, to assure that it remains clear that the threat, however communicated, must be established by proof which satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

The Committee concluded that the aggravating factors described in subs. (1), (2) and (3) apply only to acts against the victim of the underlying crime and not to acts against the person acting on behalf of the crime victim.

18. See Wis JI-Criminal 570 for a definition of the inchoate crime of conspiracy.

19. This option was added to reflect the alternative created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. [Effective date: March 1, 2020.] The question is a paraphrase of the statute, which reads as follows: "(7) Where the underlying crime is an act of domestic abuse, as defined in s. 968.075(1)(a), that constitutes the commission of a crime or a crime that, following a conviction, is subject to the surcharge in s. 973.055."

20. Subsection 968.075(1)(a) defines "domestic abuse" as follows:

"Domestic abuse" means any of the following engaged in by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the person resides or formerly resided or against an adult with whom the person has a child in common:

1. Intentional infliction of physical pain, physical injury or illness.
2. Intentional impairment of physical condition.
3. A violation of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3).
4. A physical act that may cause the other person reasonably to fear imminent engagement in the conduct described under subd. 1., 2. or 3.

For an instruction on committing a domestic abuse crime, see Wis JI-Criminal 984.

21. A person is subject to a domestic abuse surcharge if that person is convicted of knowingly violating a domestic abuse temporary restraining order or injunction, or is otherwise convicted of violating certain criminal offenses or municipal ordinances specified under § 973.055(a)1 and the court finds the conduct constituting the violation involved an act by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the adult person resides or formerly resided, or against an adult with whom the adult person has created a child. See § 973.055.

1297 INTIMIDATION OF A VICTIM — §§ 940.44(2) and 940.45

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Intimidation of a victim, as defined in § 940.44(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly and maliciously prevents or dissuades (or who attempts to so prevent or dissuade)[1] another person who has been the victim of any crime from causing a complaint, indictment, or information to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a victim of a crime.

   "Victim" means a person against whom a crime has been committed or attempted in this state.[2]

   In this case, it is alleged that (name of victim) was a victim of (name of crime). (Name of crime), as defined in § _____ of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who (refer to the uniform criminal jury instruction for a definition of the crime).[3] Before you may find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a victim, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (name of victim) was the victim of (name of crime).

2. The defendant (prevented) (dissuaded)[4] (attempted to prevent) (attempted to dissuade) (name of victim) from [causing a (complaint) (indictment) (information) to be sought] (or) [causing a (complaint) (indictment) (information) to be prosecuted] (or) [assisting in the prosecution of a (complaint) (indictment) (information)].[5]

3. The defendant acted knowingly and maliciously.[6]

This requires that the defendant knew (name of victim) was a victim of a crime and that the defendant (acted with the intent to injure or annoy another) (or) (acted with an intent to interfere with the orderly administration of justice).

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. They must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty [and answer the following question "yes" or "no"].[8]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT A PENALTY FACTOR SET FORTH IN § 940.45 IS ESTABLISHED:[9]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (1)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by (attempted) force or violence upon [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[10] of (name of victim)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (2)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by damage to the property of [(name of victim)] [(identify relative)[11] of (name of victim)]?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)]

["Was the defendant's act accompanied by any express or implied threat of (name harm described in sub. (1) or (2) of § 940.45)?"][12]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (4)]

["Was the defendant's act in furtherance of any conspiracy?"][13]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (5)]

["Does the defendant have a prior conviction for (a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45) (an act which, if committed in this state, would be a violation under §§ 940.42 to 940.45)?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (6)]

["Did the defendant commit the act for monetary gain or for any other consideration acting on the request of any other person?"]

[FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (7)][14]

["Was the underlying crime an act of domestic abuse[15] or one subject to a domestic abuse surcharge?"[16]]

[CONTINUE WITH THE FOLLOWING IN ALL FELONY CASES:]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that (repeat the question), you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1297 was originally published in 2010 and revised in 2016 and 2020. The Committee approved revisions in February 2022 and October 2022. The February 2022 revision corrected an inadvertent error in sub. (7) of § 940.45, which was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. See footnote 14. The October 2022 revision removed a "Reporter's Note" concerning issues relating to instructing the jury on a domestic abuse surcharge pursuant to s. 973.055(4).

This instruction is drafted for use for both misdemeanor and felony charges under §§ 940.44(2) and 940.45. For violations of § 940.44(1) see Wis JI-Criminal 1296. A separate instruction is drafted for cases involving intimidation of a person acting on behalf of a victim. See Wis JI-Criminal 1296A.

Section 940.44(2) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 14 [effective date: April 10, 2015] to codify the interpretation of the statute in State v. Freer, 2010 WI App 9, 323 Wis.2d 29, 779 N.W.2d 12. The text of the instruction already reflected the Freer interpretation so it was not affected by Act 14. See footnote 5, below.

The definition of the three basic elements is based on § 940.44(2) and is to be used in both felony and misdemeanor prosecutions; for felony offenses, a question is to be added so that the jury makes a finding whether the fact presented in the question is proved. Each of the facts specified in subs. (1)-(6) increases the penalty to that for a Class G felony.

Sections 940.41 through 940.49, relating to intimidation of victims and witnesses, were created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981. They were based on a model statute proposed in 1979 by the Committee on Victims, American Bar Association Section of Criminal Justice.

1. Section 940.44 prohibits attempts to "prevent or dissuade" as well as the completed act. The material relating to attempts is drafted in parentheses throughout the instruction and should be included when the facts of the case support the attempt basis of liability.

Section 940.46, also created by Chapter 118, Laws of 1981, further provides that attempts to violate §§ 940.42 to 940.45 may be prosecuted as a completed act. This section is redundant in light of the fact that the definition of each substantive offense already prohibits both the completed act and an attempt.

If an attempt case is charged, it may be advisable to define "attempt" for the jury. The following is suggested:

> Attempt requires that the defendant intended to (prevent) (dissuade) (name of victim) from making a report of the victimization to any peace officer or law enforcement agency and did acts which indicated unequivocally that the defendant had that intent and would have (prevented) (dissuaded) (name of victim) from making a report except for the intervention of another person or some other extraneous factor.

This definition is briefer than the full explanation of "attempt" found in Wis JI-Criminal 580 but is believed sufficient for most cases. See that instruction for a complete discussion of attempt.

2. The definition of "victim" in the instruction is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(2):

> (2) "Victim" means any natural person against whom any crime as defined in s. 939.12 or under the laws of the United States is being or has been perpetrated or attempted in this state.

3. The statement in the first paragraph of the uniform instruction should usually be sufficient. It will virtually always be sufficient where the crime is also charged in the instant case. In other situations, it may be good practice to include a more complete definition of the crime, depending on the crime and the nature of the evidence.

In State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991), the court found that it was error to fail to instruct sufficiently on the crime committed against the victim:

> The jury instruction should have specified and defined the crime or crimes underlying the alleged victimization. Additionally, the jury should have been told that it could not find the defendant guilty of intimidation of a victim unless the state proved the elements of the underlying crime or crimes beyond a reasonable doubt. The reason is clear: a jury that is not told which crime is the predicate for the intimidation-of-a-victim charge and is not instructed on the elements of that crime may very well conclude that certain conduct constitutes a crime when it does not.

161 Wis.2d 616, 624.

In many cases, it is likely that the defendant will also be charged with committing the underlying crime against the victim as well as with trying to intimidate that victim. In those situations, Wis JI-Criminal 1294 would be given after the jury had been instructed on the essential facts of the underlying crime and detailed recapitulation of those facts ought not to be necessary in Wis JI-Criminal 1294. If the jury has not been instructed on the underlying crime, a more detailed explanation may be required in order to satisfy the requirements of the Thomas case.

Acquittal on the underlying crime does not prevent conviction on the charge of intimidating the victim of that crime. State v. Thomas, supra.

4. "Dissuade" means "to advise against" or "to turn from by persuasion," Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

5. Subsection (2) of § 940.44 reads as follows: "Causing a complaint, indictment or information to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof." The instruction provides for three alternatives as set forth in State v. Freer, 2010 WI App 9, 323 Wis.2d 29, 779 N.W.2d 12, which concluded that the statute was ambiguous because "'and' in the statutes is not always interpreted as a conjunctive term." The court relied on an LRB analysis of the bill to interpret the statute as though it read "or" instead of "and":

> In light of the LRB analysis, we conclude that the legislature intended the victim intimidation statute to prohibit any act of intimidation that seeks to prevent or dissuade a crime victim from assisting in the prosecution. Accordingly, we read "and" in the phrase "causing a complaint . . . to be sought and prosecuted and assisting in the prosecution thereof" in the disjunctive, and thereby conclude that Wis. Stat. § 940.44(2) prohibits knowingly or maliciously preventing or dissuading a crime victim from providing any one or more of the following forms of assistance to prosecutors: (1) causing a complaint, indictment or information to be sought; (2) causing a complaint to be prosecuted; or (3) assisting in the prosecution.
> 2010 WI App 9, ¶24.

Section 940.44(2) was amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 14 [effective date: April 10, 2015] to codify the interpretation of the statute in Freer. The text of the instruction already reflected the Freer interpretation so it was not affected by Act 14.

6. Section 940.44 does not use any of the regular criminal code "intent" words, such as "intentionally" but rather contains the phrase "knowingly and maliciously." The terms "malice" and "maliciously" are not used anywhere else in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. "Maliciously" is defined in § 940.41(1r) as follows:

> (1r) "Malice" or "maliciously" means an intent to vex, annoy or injure in any way another person or to thwart or interfere in any manner with the orderly administration of justice.

This instruction reduces the mental purpose to that of preventing the witness from testifying because that purpose fits in best with the basic definition of the offense: attempting to prevent the witness from testifying. This kind of purpose is one that shows intent to interfere with the administration of justice.

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding knowledge and intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

8. Continue with the bracketed material if the felony offense is charged and add the appropriate question. For misdemeanor offenses, stop with "guilty" and read the next sentence, beginning with "If you are not so satisfied . . ."

9. Section 940.45 specifies seven different facts that increase the penalty for the basic misdemeanor offense to that for a Class D felony. A bracketed question is provided for each statutory option.

10. The penalty increase provided by § 940.45(1) applies to the following specified relatives of the witness: ". . . the spouse, child, stepchild, foster child, parent, sibling or grandchild of the witness or any person sharing a common domicile with the witness." Reference to "treatment foster child" was deleted by 2009 Wisconsin Act 28.

11. The same relatives are covered as under sub. (1) of the statute. See note 10, supra.

12. This is an abbreviated paraphrasing of the full subsection (3) of § 940.43, which provides: "Where the act is accompanied by any express or implied threat of force, violence, injury or damage described in sub. (1) or sub. (2)." The references to sub. (1) and (2) serve to broaden the coverage of the subsection to all threats to do personal injury or cause property damage to any witness or any relative of the witness. The appropriate description of the harm and the target of the threat should be inserted in the blank.

Subsection 940.43(3) refers to "any express or implied threat of force. . . ." (Emphasis supplied.) The suggested instruction does not include "express or implied" because the Committee concluded it was unnecessary. There must in fact be a threat, regardless of whether that threat is communicated by an express statement or implied from conduct. If a case clearly involves a threat implied from conduct, it may be appropriate to advise the jury that the statute covers those threats. Care should be taken, however, to assure that it remains clear that the threat, however communicated, must be established by proof which satisfies the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.

13. See Wis JI-Criminal 570 for a definition of the inchoate crime of conspiracy.

14. This option was added to reflect the alternative created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 112. [Effective date: March 1, 2020.] The question is a paraphrase of the statute, which reads as follows: "(7) Where the underlying crime is an act of domestic abuse, as defined in s. 968.075(1)(a), that constitutes the commission of a crime or a crime that, following a conviction, is subject to the surcharge in s. 973.055."

15. Subsection 968.075(1)(a) defines "domestic abuse" as follows:

> "Domestic abuse" means any of the following engaged in by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the person resides or formerly resided or against an adult with whom the person has a child in common:
> 1. Intentional infliction of physical pain, physical injury or illness.
> 2. Intentional impairment of physical condition.
> 3. A violation of s. 940.225 (1), (2) or (3).

4. A physical act that may cause the other person reasonably to fear imminent engagement in the conduct described under subd. 1., 2. or 3.

For an instruction on committing a domestic abuse crime, see Wis JI-Criminal 984.

16. A person is subject to a domestic abuse surcharge if that person is convicted of knowingly violating a domestic abuse temporary restraining order or injunction, or is otherwise convicted of violating certain criminal offenses or municipal ordinances specified under § 973.055(a)1 and the court finds the conduct constituting the violation involved an act by an adult person against his or her spouse or former spouse, against an adult with whom the adult person resides or formerly resided, or against an adult with whom the adult person has created a child. 1300 NEGLIGENT OPERATION OF A VEHICLE — § 941.01

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Negligent operation of a vehicle, as defined in § 941.01 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who endangers another's safety by a high degree of negligence in the operation of a vehicle, not upon a highway.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated a vehicle,[2] not upon a highway.[3]

   A vehicle is operated when it is set in motion[4]

2. The defendant operated a vehicle in a manner constituting a high degree of negligence.

3. The defendant's high degree of negligence endangered the safety of another person.

The Meaning of "High Degree of Negligence"

"High degree of negligence" means:[5]

- the defendant's operation of a vehicle created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and

- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation of a vehicle created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925.[6]

IF EVIDENCE OF VIOLATION OF A SAFETY STATUTE THAT APPLIES TO VEHICLES "NOT ON A HIGHWAY" HAS BEEN RECEIVED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[7]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant violated section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, which provides that (summarize the statute). Violating this statute does not necessarily constitute a high degree of negligence. You may consider this along with all the other evidence in determining whether the defendant's conduct constituted a high degree of negligence.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1300 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1986, 1988, 1995, and 2007. The 2007 revision involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it added a definition of "operated" to the instructions and amended footnote 4 of the comment.

Section 941.01 was modified by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. Former subsection (2) was repealed. It had defined the term "high degree of negligence." It was apparently intended that the definition of "criminal negligence" in § 939.25, also created by the homicide revision, apply to violations of § 941.01, although no specific cross reference was included. The Judicial Council Note to § 941.01 in 1987 Senate Bill 191 provided: "See s. 939.25, stats., and the NOTE thereto." Section 939.25 is the statute defining "criminal negligence."

Since the statute continues to use "high degree of negligence," the instruction follows the statutory language. The definition of the term is essentially the same as the definition used for "criminal negligence," since it appears clear that the use of the definition was intended. In any event, the change is not believed to be a substantively significant one. The only difference between the definition for "criminal negligence" under the revised statute and "high degree of negligence" under prior law is the substitution of "substantial" for "high probability of" in the phrase, "substantial and unreasonable risk of death or great bodily harm."

Related offenses are defined in § 346.62, Reckless Driving. They apply to offenses committed on a highway. See Wis JI-Criminal 2650 2654.

1. Section 941.01 applies to "the operation of a vehicle, not upon a highway as defined in § 340.01." This distinguishes the offense from reckless driving under § 346.62, which requires that the vehicle be operated "on a highway" or on "premises held out to the public for use of their vehicles. . . ." See § 346.61 and Wis JI-Criminal 2600, Sec. I.

"Highway" includes the entire platted or dedicated right of way of a public road; it is not limited to the paved portion or the paved portion plus the shoulder. E.J.H. v. State, 112 Wis.2d 439, 234 N.W.2d 77 (1983).

2. If there is a question whether a device is a "vehicle," add the following which is adapted from § 939.22(44):

> "Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether such device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.

3. Regarding the "not upon a highway" requirement, see note 1, supra.

4. This instruction uses "set in motion" as the definition of "operated." This same definition was used in operating under the influence cases before 1977. See Milwaukee v. Richards, 269 Wis. 570, 69 N.W.2d 445 (1955); State v. Hall, 271 Wis. 450, 73 N.W.2d 585 (1955); and Monroe County v. Kruse, 76 Wis.2d 126, 250 N.W.2d 375 (1977).

In 1977, the definition of "operate" for operating under the influence cases was changed. Subsection 346.63(3)(b) defines "operate" as follows: "the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a motor vehicle necessary to put it in motion." Because this definition is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," the Committee determined that it applies only to matters covered under section 346.63, "Operating under influence of intoxicant or other drug."

Subsection 340.01(41), applicable to all motor vehicle code offenses, does define "operator" as "a person who drives or is in actual physical control of a vehicle."

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. III.

5. The definition of "high degree of negligence" uses the definition of "criminal negligence" provided in § 939.25. See the Comment preceding note 1, supra.

The Committee concluded that this definition, which highlights the three significant components of the statutory definition, is preferable to the one formerly used, which began by defining "ordinary negligence." See Wis JI-Criminal 925 for a complete discussion of the Committee's rationale for adopting this definition and for optional material that may be added if believed to be necessary.

6. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

7. The suggested instruction on the effect of violation of a safety statute is intended to comply with the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Dyess, 124 Wis.2d 525, 370 N.W.2d 222 (1985). See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1170. To be applicable to this offense, it must be established that the safety statute does apply to operating "not on a highway."

1302 HIGHWAY OBSTRUCTION — § 941.03

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1302 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1980. It was withdrawn in 1988.

This instruction is withdrawn because § 941.03 was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide and related statutes. The effective date of the repeal is January 1, 1989.

The conduct prohibited by § 941.03 is now covered by § 941.30, Recklessly Endangering Safety. (Judicial Council Note to § 941.03, 1987 Senate Bill 191.) Wis JI-Criminal 1345 and 1347 apply to violations of § 941.30.

1310 NEGLIGENT HANDLING OF BURNING MATERIAL — § 941.10

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Negligent handling of burning material, as defined in § 941.10 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who handles burning material in a highly negligent manner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant handled burning material.
2. The defendant did so in a manner constituting criminal negligence.[1]

The Meaning of "Criminal Negligence"

"Criminal negligence" means:

- the defendant's handling of burning material created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) handling of burning material created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925.[2]

IF EVIDENCE OF VIOLATION OF A SAFETY STATUTE HAS BEEN RECEIVED, ADD THE FOLLOWING:[3]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant violated section _____ of the Wisconsin Statutes, which provides that (summarize the statute) . Violating this statute does not necessarily constitute a criminal negligence. You may consider this along with all the other evidence in determining whether the defendant's conduct constituted criminal negligence.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1310 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1989 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2006 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 941.01 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The offense was redefined to require either "criminal negligence" or the creation of a substantial and unreasonable risk of serious damage to property. "Criminal negligence" is defined in new § 939.25 in essentially the same way as "high degree of negligence" was defined under prior law. The only change was the substitution of "substantial" for "high probability of" in the phrase "substantial and unreasonable risk of death or great bodily harm."

1. The instruction defines the offense in terms of "criminal negligence" being the conduct alleged. The statute provides an alternative: "or under circumstances in which the person should realize that a substantial and unreasonable risk of serious damage to another's property is created." If that alternative is used, the second element should be rephrased as follows:

2. The defendant did so under circumstances in which the defendant should have realized that a substantial and unreasonable risk of serious damage to another's property is created.

2. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs.

3. The suggested instruction on the effect of violation of a safety statute is intended to comply with the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Dyess, 124 Wis.2d 525, 370 N.W.2d 222 (1985). See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1170.

1316 GIVING A FALSE ALARM — § 941.13

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Giving a false alarm, as defined in § 941.13 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally gives a false alarm to any public officer or employee, whether by means of a fire alarm system or otherwise.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant gave an alarm to a public (officer) (employee) by means of fire alarm system or otherwise.[1]
2. The alarm was false.
3. The defendant intentionally gave the false alarm.

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[2] to give a false alarm to a public (officer) (employee). It further requires that the defendant knew that the person was a public (officer) (employee) and knew the alarm was a false alarm.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

Interfering with a fire alarm system, as defined in § 941.12(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally interferes with the proper functioning of a fire alarm system.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

Interference with fire fighting, as defined in § 941.12(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally interferes with the lawful efforts of fire fighters to extinguish a fire.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

2. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires knowledge of those facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. Here, this requires knowledge that those with whom the defendant interfered were fire fighters and knew that they were engaged in lawful efforts to extinguish a fire.

1319 INTERFERENCE WITH FIRE FIGHTING EQUIPMENT — § 941.12(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Interference with fire fighting equipment, as defined in § 941.12(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally[1] (interferes with) (tampers with) (removes)[2] any (fire extinguisher) (fire hose) (fire fighting equipment)[3] without authorization.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (interfered with) (tampered with) (removed) (a fire extinguisher) (a fire hose) (fire fighting equipment).
2. The defendant did so without authorization.
3. The defendant intentionally[4] (interfered with) (tampered with) (removed) (a fire extinguisher) (a fire hose) (fire fighting equipment).

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1319 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. The statement of the definition of the offense includes "intentionally" even though sec. 941.12(2) does not include the word. When the instruction was reviewed in 2007, the Committee decided not to delete the reference to "intentionally" – and its definition in element 4. – because it had been included in the instruction since its original publication in 1974.

2. Use only the term which appropriately describes the form of action alleged or indicated by the evidence. Continue to do so throughout the instruction.

3. Use only the description which appropriately describes the item involved. Continue to do so throughout the instruction.

4. The instruction includes an element defining "intentionally" even though sec. 941.12(2) does not include the word. See sec. 939.23(3) and note 1, supra.

5. The knowledge element flows from the Committee's conclusion that "intentionally" should be included in the offense definition despite its absence from the offense definition. See sec. 939.23(3) and note 1, supra.

1320 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: NEGLIGENT OPERATION OR HANDLING — § 941.20(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who endangers another's safety by the negligent operation or handling of a dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant operated or handled a dangerous weapon.
2. The defendant operated or handled a dangerous weapon in a manner constituting criminal negligence.
3. The defendant's operation or handling of a dangerous weapon in a criminally negligent manner endangered the safety of another.

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[1]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[2]]

[any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is likely to produce death or great bodily harm.[3] "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[4]]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Meaning of "Criminal Negligence"

"Criminal negligence" means:[5]

- the defendant's operation or handling of a dangerous weapon created a risk of death or great bodily harm; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant should have been aware that (his) (her) operation or handling of a dangerous weapon created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.

[IF REFERENCE TO ORDINARY NEGLIGENCE IS BELIEVED TO BE HELPFUL OR NECESSARY SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 925.][6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1321 in 1969 and revised in 1988. It was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1320 in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2004 and involved adoption of a new format and a change in the definition of "criminal negligence."

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.20(l)(a), as amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The amended statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1321 (8 1969) for offenses committed on or after that date. For a discussion of the homicide revision generally, and of the offense covered by this instruction, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI-Criminal 1000.

In addition to changing the title of § 941.20 from "reckless use of weapons" to "endangering safety by the use of a dangerous weapon," the homicide revision made two substantive changes in subsection (l)(a):

1) it changed the culpability requirement from reckless conduct to criminal negligence; and,
2) it amended the list of instrumentalities by striking "firearm, airgun, knife or bow and arrow" and replacing those terms with "dangerous weapon."

1. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based in the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in § 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

2. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete definition of "great bodily harm."

3. A potential problem in instructing on this part of the definition of dangerous weapon is illustrated by State v. Tomlinson, 2002 WI 91, 254 Wis.2d 502, 648 N.W.2d 367. Tomlinson was charged with being party to the crime of first degree reckless homicide while using a dangerous weapon. In instructing on the dangerous weapon penalty enhancer the court stated: "'Dangerous weapon' means a baseball bat." The supreme court held that the instruction was error, concluding that it created a "mandatory conclusive presumption because it requires the jury to find that Tomlinson used a 'dangerous weapon' . . . if it first finds . . . that he used a baseball bat." 2002 WI 91, ¶62.

In light of Tomlinson, the Committee concluded that the definition of "dangerous weapon" in the instructions should be revised to include all the statutory alternatives in the text of the instruction. The alternative to be used in a case like Tomlinson would be the following:

> "Dangerous weapon" means any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.

If instructing the jury in terms tailored to the facts of the case is believed to be desirable, a different approach for a baseball bat case might be as follows:

> The state alleges that a baseball bat was a dangerous weapon. A baseball bat may be considered to be a dangerous weapon if, in the manner it was used, it was calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

4. The Committee concluded that defining "great bodily harm" as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete definition of "great bodily harm."

5. The definition of "criminal negligence" is based on the one provided in § 939.25. The Committee concluded that this definition, which highlights the three significant components of the statutory definition, is preferable to the one formerly used, which began by defining "ordinary negligence." See Wis JI-Criminal 925 for a complete discussion of the Committee's rationale for adopting this definition and for optional material that may be added if believed to be necessary.

6. Wis JI-Criminal 925 includes two additional paragraphs: one describing "ordinary negligence" and one explaining how "criminal negligence" differs. It also includes material relating to violation of a safety statute.

1321 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: OPERATING OR GOING ARMED WITH A FIREARM WHILE UNDER THE INFLUENCE OF AN INTOXICANT — § 941.20(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who operates or goes armed with a firearm while (he) (she) is under the influence of an intoxicant.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (operated) (went armed with) a firearm.

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[1]

   The phrase "went armed" means that a firearm must have been on the defendant's person or that a firearm must have been within the defendant's reach.[2] In addition, the defendant must have been aware of the presence of the firearm.[3]

2. The defendant was under the influence of an intoxicant at the time (he) (she) (operated) (went armed with) a firearm.

Definition of "Under the Influence of an Intoxicant"

"Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the defendant's ability to handle a firearm was materially impaired because of consumption of an alcoholic beverage.[4]

Not every person who has consumed alcoholic beverages is "under the influence" as that term is used here. What must be established is that the person has consumed a sufficient amount of alcohol to cause the person to be less able to exercise the clear judgment and steady hand necessary to handle a firearm.

It is not required that impaired ability to operate be demonstrated by particular unsafe acts. What is required is that the person's ability to safely handle the firearm be materially impaired.

[IF APPROPRIATE, INSTRUCT ON THE EVIDENTIARY SIGNIFICANCE OF ALCOHOL TEST RESULTS. SEE WIS JI CRIMINAL 230 AND 232.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1305 in 1971 and revised in 1988. It was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1321 in 1995 and revised in 2005, 2014 and 2019. [Former Wis JI-Criminal 1321 was republished as Wis JI-Criminal 1320.] This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2021; it added to the Comment.

Section 941.20 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The title of the statute was changed from "reckless use of weapons" to "endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon." That is the only change that affected the subsection addressed by the instruction. The effective date of the statutory change is January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1305 (© 1971) for offenses committed on or after that date.

This instruction is drafted for cases involving the influence of an intoxicant. For models tailored to Motor Vehicle Code offenses involving the influence of a controlled substance or the combined influence of an intoxicant and a controlled substance, see Wis JI-Criminal 2664 and 2664A. For a discussion of issues relating to the definition of "under the influence," see Wis JI-Criminal 2600 Introductory Comment, Sec. VIII.

2003 Wisconsin Act 97 created § 941.20(1)(bm) to provide that no person may operate or go armed with a firearm "while he or she has a detectable amount of a restricted controlled substance in his or her blood." The statute applies to offenses committed on or after the Act's effective date: December 19, 2003. Wis JI Criminal 2664B is drafted for operating a motor vehicle with a "detectable amount . . . ." and should provide a model for violations of sub. (l)(bm).

The original version of this instruction included language in element number one, that "one is not armed with a firearm unless it is loaded." After the instruction was originally published, the Committee received several inquiries asking why the offense, unlike those for other violations of § 941.20 (see Wis JI-Criminal 1322 through 1324), required that the firearm be loaded. The footnote addressing this point in the original version of this instruction (© 1971) provided:

> The use of the term "firearm" in § 941.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code distinguishes it from the Criminal Code definition of a "dangerous weapon," which includes an unloaded firearm. Wis Criminal Code § 939.22(10) (1969). The danger at which § 941.20(1)(b) is directed is the highly dangerous combination of an intoxicated person operating or going armed with a loaded weapon. If the individual is not intoxicated or the weapon is not loaded, the statute is not violated.

A review of the Committee's records indicated that the last two sentences of the original footnote were added at the specific request of Assistant Attorney General William Platz. As a member of the committee that drafted Wisconsin's Criminal Code, his interpretation of the Code was given great weight. Other members of the Criminal Jury Instructions Committee in 1971 had also been members of the Criminal Code Advisory Committee, making it likely that the instruction would have accurately reflected the intent of the legislature. Furthermore, the Wisconsin Supreme Court recognized that views of Mr. Platz (see State v. Hoyt, 21 Wis.2d 284, 299-300, 124 N.W.2d 47, 128 N.W.2d 645 (1964)) and of other members of the Criminal Code Advisory Committee "can properly be considered as 'an authoritative statement of legislative intention.'" State v. Genova, 77 Wis.2d 141, 151,252 N.W.2d 380 (1977), citation omitted.

In 2019, the Committee conducted a review of updated case law pertaining to the definition of "firearm" in order to reassess the requirement that the firearm be loaded. It was determined that at the time the instruction was published, no statutory definition of the term "firearm" existed, nor does one currently exist. However, in State v. Rardon, 185 Wis. 2d 701, 518 N.W.2d 330 (Ct. App. 1994) the court of appeals did provide its own definition of the term "firearm" as "a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder to fire a projectile irrespective of whether it is inoperable due to disassembly. This conclusion furthers the legislature's intention that those convicted of a felony not be allowed to possess any firearms -- operable, inoperable, assembled or disassembled." Although Rardon concerned Wis. Stat § 941.29(2) "Possession of a firearm," the Committee determined that decision provided persuasive authority as to the defined term. Therefore, the Committee concluded that the requirement that the firearm be loaded be removed from the first element of the instruction.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court, applying intermediate scrutiny, refused to recognize a Second Amendment right to go armed with a firearm while intoxicated in one's home. State v. Christen, 2021 WI 39, 396 Wis. 2d 705, 958 N.W.2d 746. "The State has important governmental interests in public safety, preventing gun violence, protecting human life, and protecting people from the harm the combination of firearms and alcohol causes." Id. ¶ 60. The means the legislature chose to further these important objectives is substantially related to the important governmental objectives. Id.

1. Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

2. This is the definition of "went armed" used in Wis JI Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon. See note 2 of that instruction for cases discussing "went armed."

3. The "aware of the presence" requirement was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Asfoor, where the court stated that "[c]oncealing or hiding a weapon precludes inadvertence." 75 Wis.2d 411, 415, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976). The concept is similar to that involved for offenses requiring "possession." See Wis JI Criminal 920. For cases identifying "aware of the presence" as an element of the crime, see note 3 of Wis JI-Criminal 1335. The 1995 revision of that instruction added "aware of the presence" as a separate element.

4. The definition in the instruction paraphrases the full definition provided in § 939.22(42):

> "Under the influence of an intoxicant" means that the actor's ability to operate a vehicle or handle a firearm or airgun is materially impaired because of his or her consumption of an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, or of a controlled substance or controlled substance analog under ch. 961, of any combination of an alcohol beverage, hazardous inhalant, controlled substance and controlled substance analog, or of an alcohol beverage and any other drug.

Note: "hazardous inhalant" was added to the definition in § 939.22(42) by 2013 Wisconsin Act 83 [effective date: Dec. 14, 2013]. Act 83 also created a definition of "hazardous inhalant" in § 939.22(15).

1322 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: INTENTIONALLY POINTING A FIREARM AT ANOTHER — § 941.20(1)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally points a firearm at or toward another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant pointed a firearm at or toward another.

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[1] It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.[2]

2. The defendant pointed the firearm at or toward another intentionally.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant was aware that (he) (she) was holding a firearm and was aware that (he) (she) was pointing it at or toward another person.[3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1323 in 1979 and revised in 1983 and 1988. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1322 in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2004.

As revised by 2003 Wisconsin Act 190 [effective date: April 22, 2004], § 940.21(1)(c) begins: "Except as provided in sub. (1m) . . ." Subsection (1m) was created by Act 190 and applies to pointing a firearm at a law enforcement officer, firefighter, etc. See Wis JI-Criminal 1322A.

Section 941.20 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The title of the statute was changed from "reckless use of weapons" to "endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon." That is the only change that affected the subsection addressed by the instruction. The effective date of the statutory change was January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1323 (© 1983) for offenses committed on or after that date.

In State v. Smith, 55 Wis.2d 304, 198 N.W.2d 630 (1972), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that reckless use of a weapon, pointing a firearm, under § 941.20(1)(c), is not a lesser included offense of armed robbery.

1. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

2. Volume V. 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 83 (February 1953).

3. This is the explanation of the meaning of "intentionally" in the context of this offense provided in the 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 83 (February 1953). For a discussion of the word "intentionally" as defined in § 939.23, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1322A ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: INTENTIONALLY POINTING A FIREARM AT A LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER, FIRE FIGHTER, ETC. — § 941.20(lm)

THIS INSTRUCTION IS DRAFTED FOR A CASE WHERE THE ALLEGED VICTIM IS A LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER. THE STATUTE ALSO APPLIES TO OFFENSES AGAINST FIRE FIGHTERS, EMERGENCY MEDICAL SERVICES PRACTITIONERS,[1] EMERGENCY MEDICAL RESPONDERS,[2] AMBULANCE DRIVERS,[3] AND COMMISSION WARDENS.[4] SUBSTITUTE THE APPROPRIATE TERM AS REQUIRED.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally points a firearm at or toward a law enforcement officer who is acting in an official capacity and who the person knows or has reason to know is a law enforcement officer.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant pointed a firearm at or toward (name of victim) .

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[5] It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.[6]

2. The defendant pointed the firearm at or toward (name of victim) intentionally.

"Intentionally" means that the defendant was aware that (he) (she) was holding a firearm and was aware that (he) (she) was pointing it at or toward another person.[7]

3. (Name of victim) was a law enforcement officer.

[A (insert title, e.g., sheriff) is a law enforcement officer.][8]

4. (Name of victim) was acting in an official capacity.

(Insert title, e.g., sheriffs) act in an official capacity if they perform duties that they are employed to perform. A (insert title, e.g., sheriff) who performs acts for personal reasons that are not within the responsibilities of a (insert title, e.g., sheriff) does not act in an official capacity.[9] (The responsibilities of a (insert title, e.g., sheriff) include: _____.)[10]

5. The defendant knew or had reason to know that (name of victim) was a law enforcement officer.[11]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent or knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1322A was originally published in 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2017; it reflects changes in terminology made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 12.

This instruction is for the felony offense defined by § 941.20(1m), which was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 190. [Effective date: April 22, 2004.]

2017 Wisconsin Act 12 [effective date: June 23, 2017] changed the terminology used in the statute from "emergency medical technician" to "emergency medical services practitioner" and from "first responder" to "emergency medical responder."

The instruction is drafted for a case where a law enforcement officer is the alleged victim. The statute also applies to offenses against fire fighters, emergency medical services practitioners, emergency medical responders, ambulance drivers, and commission wardens. For cases involving alleged victims other than law enforcement officers, the appropriate term should be substituted throughout.

1. Section 941.20(1m)(a)2. provides: "'Emergency medical services practitioner' has the meaning given in s. 256.01(5)."

2. Section 941.20(1m)(a)1t. provides: "'Emergency medical responder' has the meaning given in s. 256.01(4p)."

3. Section 941.20(1m)(a)1. provides: "'Ambulance' has the meaning given in s. 256.01(1t)."

4. Section 939.22(5) provides: "'Commission warden' means a conservation warden employed by the Great Lakes Indian Fish and Wildlife Commission."

5. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

6. Volume V. 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 83 (February 1953).

7. This is the explanation of the meaning of "intentionally" with regard to the offense defined in § 941.20(1)(c). See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1322.

8. The bracketed sentence is to be used only when a law enforcement officer is the alleged victim.

In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a sheriff is a law enforcement officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, for example, the victim was a sheriff.

"Law enforcement officer" is defined in § 102.475(8)(c):

> (c) "Law enforcement officer" means any person employed by the state or any political subdivision for the purpose of detecting and preventing crime and enforcing laws or ordinances and who is authorized to make arrests for violations of the laws or ordinances the person is employed to enforce, whether that enforcement authority extends to all laws or ordinances or is limited to specific laws or ordinances.

See notes 1-3, supra, for references to statutory definitions for victims other than law enforcement officers.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

10. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some public officers, officials, and employees are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes or Administrative Code. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, 306 Wis.2d 572, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, 306 Wis.2d 598, 743 N.W.2d 823.

11. The mental element – "knows or has reason to know" – is set forth in the definition of the offense in § 941.20(1m)(b).

1323 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: DISCHARGING A FIREARM WITHIN 100 YARDS OF BUILDING — § 941.20(1)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(1)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who while on the lands of another discharges a firearm within 100 yards of any building devoted to human occupancy situated on and attached to the lands of another without the express permission of the owner or occupant of the building.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant discharged a firearm.

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[1] To "discharge a firearm" simply means to shoot a gun.
2. The defendant shot the gun while on lands belonging to someone else.
3. The defendant shot the gun within 100 yards of a building[2] devoted to human occupancy and situated on and attached to the lands of another.
4. The defendant shot the gun without the express permission of the (owner) (occupant) of the building.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1322 in 1983 and revised in 1988 and 1990. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1323 in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2004 and involved adoption of a new format.

Section 941.20 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The title of the statute was changed from "reckless use of weapons" to "endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon." That is the only change that affected the subsection addressed by the instruction. The effective date of the statutory change was January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1322 (© 1983) for offenses committed on or after that date.

1. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

2. Section 941.20(1)(d) was revised by 1989 Wisconsin Act 131 (effective date: March 31, 1990) to include "house trailer or mobile home" within the definition of "building." The revised definition provides: "'Building' as used in this paragraph includes any house trailer or mobile home, but does not include any tent, bus, truck, vehicle or similar portable unit."

1324 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: DISCHARGING A FIREARM INTO A VEHICLE OR BUILDING — § 941.20(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally discharges a firearm into a vehicle or building under circumstances in which (he) (she) should realize there might be a human being present therein.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant discharged a firearm into[1] a (building)[2] (vehicle).

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.[3] To "discharge a firearm" simply means to shoot a gun.

2. The defendant did so intentionally.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the purpose to shoot the gun and to shoot it into the (building) (vehicle).[4]

3. Under the circumstances, the defendant should have realized that there might be a human being present in the (building) (vehicle).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1324 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1988, 1995, and 2005. This revision made non-substantive editorial corrections.

Section 941.20 was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The title of the statute was changed from "reckless use of weapons" to "endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon." That is the only change that affected the subsection addressed by the instruction. The effective date of the statutory change was January 1, 1989, and this instruction replaced Wis JI-Criminal 1322 (© 1983) for offenses committed on or after that date.

1. In State v. Grady, 175 Wis.2d 553, 558, 499 N.W.2d 285 (Ct. App. 1993), the court approved the following trial court instruction on the meaning of "into":

> "Into" means from the outside to the inside of, advancing or continuing forward.
> A shooting into a house occurs when a bullet penetrates the outside of the house or building, however slight the penetration. It does not require that there be any set distance of penetration.

Grady's conviction was affirmed where the evidence showed that bullets he fired were embedded in the house's outside wall.

2. Section 941.20(1)(d), which defines an offense very much like this one, includes the following: "'Building' as used in this paragraph includes any house trailer or mobile home, but does not include any tent, bus, truck, vehicle or similar portable unit."

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns.

4. Under the Criminal Code, the word "intentionally" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1325 was originally published in 1974.

Wis JI-Criminal 1326 was originally published in 1974 and was revised in 1980.

Both instructions were withdrawn in 1989 because the statute with which they deal was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. Roughly equivalent offenses are defined in § 948.60. See Wis JI-Criminal 2176 and 2177.

1327 ENDANGERING SAFETY BY USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON: INTENTIONALLY DISCHARGING A FIREARM FROM A VEHICLE — § 941.20(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Endangering safety by use of a dangerous weapon, as defined in § 941.20(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally discharges a firearm from a vehicle while on a highway[1] at or toward (another person) (any building) (another vehicle).[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant discharged a firearm from a vehicle[3] while on a highway.[4]

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. To "discharge a firearm" simply means to shoot a gun.[5]

2. The defendant shot the gun at or toward (another person) (a building) (another vehicle).[6]

3. The defendant shot the gun intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to discharge the firearm at or toward (another person) (a building) (another vehicle).

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1327 was originally published in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2004.

Sub. (3) of § 941.20 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 94 (effective date: Dec. 25, 1993). Violations of sub. (3), referred to as "drive-by shootings," are closely related to offenses defined in § 941.20(1)(d), discharging a firearm within 100 yards of a building devoted to human occupancy, and in § 941.20(2), discharging a firearm into a vehicle or building.

1. The statute also applies to the discharge of a firearm "on a vehicle parking lot that is open to the public." If a parking lot is involved, the instruction would have to be modified to substitute that phrase wherever "on a highway" appears.

2. The phrases in parentheses are adapted from the alternatives found in sub. (3)(a)1. and 2. Sub. (3)(a) refers to discharging a firearm "under any of the following circumstances . . . : 1. The person discharges the firearm at or toward another. 2. The person discharges the firearm at or toward any building or other vehicle." Thus, the firearm must be discharged at or toward another person, any building, or another vehicle, as reflected in the instruction.

3. "Vehicle" is defined in § 939.22(44).

4. The statutory definition of the offense explicitly refers to "a highway, as defined in s. 340.01(22)." The Committee concluded that it was not necessary to include that definition in the instruction for the usual case. If definition of "highway" is needed, obviously the one provided in § 340.01(22) should be used.

The statute also applies to violations that take place "on a vehicle parking lot that is open to the public." See note 1, supra.

5. These definitions are those used for other violations of § 941.20. See Wis JI-Criminal 1322.

6. See note 2, supra.

1328 DISARMING A PEACE OFFICER — § 941.21

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Disarming a peace officer, as defined in § 941.21 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally disarms a peace officer who is acting in an official capacity by taking a dangerous weapon[1] from the officer without consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a peace officer.

   [A (insert title, e.g., – "sheriff ") is a peace officer.][2]

2. (Name of victim) was acting in an official capacity.

   (Insert title, e.g., – "sheriffs")[3] act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed to perform.[4] [The duties of a (insert title, e.g., – "sheriff") include: _____.][5]

3. The defendant disarmed (name of victim) by taking a dangerous weapon from (him) (her).

   (This applies to any dangerous weapon that the officer was carrying or that was in an area within the officer's immediate presence.)[6]

4. (Name of victim) did not consent to the taking of the dangerous weapon.

5. The defendant committed the acts intentionally.

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose of taking the dangerous weapon from a peace officer.[7] It further requires that the defendant knew that (name of victim) was a peace officer acting in an official capacity and knew that (name of victim) did not consent to the taking of the dangerous weapon.[8]

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[9]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[10]]

[any device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[11]][12]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1328 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1994, 1996, and 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2008; it revised the definition of "official capacity."

1. Section 941.21 was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 339 (effective date: June 1, 1996) to refer not only to any dangerous weapon but also to "any device or container described under s. 941.26(1)(b) or (4)(a)." The reference to § 941.26(1)(b) is to containers of tear gas. The reference to § 941.26(4)(a) is to containers of oleoresin of capsicum, commonly referred to as "pepper spray." If either of these options is presented, the instruction must be modified. The Committee suggests simply substituting "tear gas container" or "container of oleoresin of capsicum" for "dangerous weapon" and not defining the term further. This is the approach used in the instructions for "pepper spray" offenses defined by § 941.26(4); see Wis JI-Criminal 1341, 1341A, and 1341B.

2. "Peace officer" is defined in § 939.22(22) as follows:

> 'Peace officer' means any person vested by law with a duty to maintain public order or to make arrests for crime, whether that duty extends to all crimes or is limited to specific crimes.

In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a sheriff is a peace officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the particular case, the victim was a sheriff.

3. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriffs," "police officers," etc.

4. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

5. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some peace officers are set forth in the Wisconsin Statutes. When that is the case, the Committee suggests using the sentence in brackets and describing the duties in the blank. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed of the law that declares what a person's official duties are without running the risk of directing a verdict on an element of the crime. It is still for the jury to determine whether the person was performing the duty in the particular case. But see, State v. Jensen, 2007 WI App 256, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 468; and, State v. Schultz, 2007 WI App 257, ___ Wis.2d ___, 743 N.W.2d 823.

6. The statement "that the officer was carrying or that was in an area within the officer's immediate presence" is taken verbatim from § 941.21.

7. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3) as having the mental purpose to cause the result or being "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result." The Committee believes that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3).

9. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based on the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in s. 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

10. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of that term, as defined in § 939.22(14).

11. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 914 for a complete discussion of that term, as defined in § 939.22(14).

12. A potential problem in instructing on this part of the definition of "dangerous weapon" is illustrated by State v. Tomlinson, 2002 WI 91, 254 Wis.2d 502, 648 N.W.2d 367. The supreme court found that the trial court erred in instructing that "Dangerous weapon means a baseball bat." A baseball bat may be a dangerous weapon, if used in a manner likely to produce death or great bodily harm. See the discussion in note 5, Wis JI-Criminal 910.

1335 CARRYING A CONCEALED WEAPON — § 941.23

USE THIS INSTRUCTION FOR CASES IN WHICH THERE IS NO EVIDENCE OF ANY EXCEPTION TO THE APPLICABILITY OF SEC. 941.23. IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF AN EXCEPTION, SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1335B.[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Carrying a concealed weapon, as defined in § 941.23 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who carries a concealed and dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant carried[2] a dangerous weapon.

   "Carried" means went armed with.

2. The defendant was aware of the presence of the weapon.[3]

3. The weapon was concealed.

Meaning of "Went Armed"

The phrase "went armed" means that the weapon must have been either on the defendant's person or that the weapon must have been within the defendant's reach.[4]

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[5]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any device or instrumentality which in the manner it is used or intended to be used is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Meaning of "Concealed"

"Concealed" means hidden from ordinary observation. The weapon does not have to be completely hidden.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal JI-Criminal 1335 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1989, 1996, 2003, 2006, 2012, and 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2018; it added to the Comment and footnote 4.

The 2012 revision addressed changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. The previously published instruction included reference to exceptions to the applicability of § 941.23, which are eliminated here; see Wis JI-Criminal 1335B for an instruction to use when evidence of an exception is in the case.

In State v. Cole, 2003 WI 112, 264 Wis.2d 520, 665 N.W.2d 328, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that § 941.23 remains constitutional on its face despite the adoption of a state constitutional amendment guaranteeing "the right to keep and bear arms for security, defense, hunting, recreation or any other lawful purpose." Wis. Const. art. I, § 25. However, whether the statute is constitutional as applied must be determined on a case-by-case basis: ". . . only if the public benefit in this exercise of the police power is substantially outweighed by an individual's need to conceal a weapon in the exercise of the right to bear arms will an otherwise valid restriction on that right be unconstitutional as applied." State v. Hamdan, 2003 WI 113, ¶46. For cases involving this "constitutional defense," see Wis JI-Criminal 1335A which provides a separate instruction.

Hamdan also held that prior case law interpreting § 941.23 continues to be viable authority after the adoption of the constitutional amendment, specifically endorsing the interpretations of the "going armed" element. 2003 WI 113, ¶¶21-28. See footnote 2, below.

Hamdan also reaffirmed the decisions in cases considering generally applicable privileges or defenses. 2003 WI 113, ¶37. While a privilege like self-defense may potentially apply to charges under § 941.23, as a practical matter it may be difficult for the facts of a particular case to support them. State v. Dundon, 226 Wis.2d 654, 594 N.W.2d 780 (1999); and, State v. Nollie, 2002 WI 4, 249 Wis.2d 538, 638 N.W.2d 280. Dundon also declined to adopt a special privilege, like the one recognized for possession of a firearm by a felon in State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 199, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996).

In a decision that preceded the "right to bear arms amendment" the court of appeals had concluded that the creation of an exception for tavern owners in § 941.237, Carrying handgun where alcohol beverages may be sold and consumed, does not preclude the application of § 941.23 to a tavern owner who carries a concealed handgun on the tavern premises. State v. Mata, 199 Wis.2d 315, 544 N.W.2d 528 (Ct. App. 1996). In Hamdan, the court noted that "[i]n light of Article I, Section 25, this analysis in Mata is suspect." Hamdan, supra, at footnote 32.

In 2005, the Committee received an inquiry about the relationship between carrying a concealed weapon in violation of § 941.23 and the rules relating to carrying cased guns. At that time § 167.31(2)(b) provided that "no person may place, possess, or transport a firearm . . . in or on a vehicle unless the firearm is unloaded and encased . . ." This implied that a person may possess a firearm in a vehicle if it is unloaded and encased, but that may conflict with the interpretation of § 941.23 in State v. Walls, 190 Wis.2d 65, 71-72, 526 N.W.2d 765 (Ct. App. 1994), where the court held that:

> A person is guilty of carrying a concealed weapon in an automobile where: (1) the weapon is located inside a vehicle and is within the defendant's reach; (2) the defendant is aware of the presence of the weapon; and (3) the weapon is concealed, or hidden from ordinary view – meaning it is indiscernible from ordinary observation of a person located outside and within the immediate vicinity of the vehicle.

The Committee concluded that resolving this conflict was beyond the scope of the jury instructions. The Wisconsin Supreme Court addressed this issue in State v. Grandberry, 2018 WI 29, 380 Wis.2d 541, 910 N.W.2d 214, concluding that there is no conflict. During a traffic stop, Grandberry disclosed to police that he had a handgun in the glove compartment of his vehicle. He was charged with and convicted of carrying a concealed weapon. He appealed on the ground that was in compliance with § 167.31. The supreme court affirmed the conviction: "We hold that the Concealed Carry Statute and the Safe Harbor Statute are not in conflict because Grandberry could have complied with both by either obtaining a license to carry a concealed weapon pursuant to Wis. Stat. § 175.60 . . . or by placing his loaded handgun out of reach." 2018 WI 29, ¶3. The court also held that the alleged conflict between the two statute did not make the prohibition on carrying a concealed weapon unconstitutionally vague: " . . . a person of ordinary intelligence has sufficient notice that carrying a concealed and dangerous weapon is unlawful unless one of the exceptions in the Concealed Carry Statute applies." ¶4.

Section 167.31 was amended by 2011 Wisconsin Acts 35 and 51. An exception was created that applies where "the firearm is unloaded or is a handgun." § 167.31(2)(b)1.

1. This instruction is drafted for a case where there is no evidence of an exception to the applicability of § 941.23. The statute has always had an exception for peace officers. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 created four additional exceptions – see § 941.23(2)(a)-(e):

- a peace officer – sub. (a)
- a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer – sub. (b)
- a former officer – sub. (c)
- a licensee or out-of-state licensee – sub. (d)
- an individual who carries in his or her own dwelling or place of business or on land that he or she owns, leases, or legally occupies – sub. (e).

See Wis JI-Criminal 1335B for a model to use where there is evidence that an exception may apply.

2. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 changed the definition of this offense from "goes armed with" a dangerous weapon to "carries" a dangerous weapon. Section 941.23(1)(ag) provides that "'carry' has the meaning given in s. 175.60(1)(ag)." Section 175.60(1)(ag) defines "carry" as "to go armed with."

3. The original version of Wis JI-Criminal 1335, published in 1966, included the "aware of the presence" requirement. An instruction including that statement was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Asfoor, where the court stated that "[c]oncealing or hiding a weapon precludes inadvertence." 75 Wis.2d 411, 415, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976). The concept is similar to that involved for offenses requiring "possession." See Wis JI-Criminal 920. For cases identifying "aware of the presence" as an element of the crime, see State v. Fry and State v. Keith, note 3, below. The 1995 revision of the instruction added "aware of the presence" as a separate element.

4. In Mularkey v. State, 201 Wis. 429, 230 N.W. 76 (1930), the court affirmed the conviction of a driver who had a revolver within his reach on a shelf back of the seat of his automobile but did not have the weapon on his person.

The Mularkey "within his reach" test was reaffirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Fry, 131 Wis.2d 153, 388 N.W.2d 565 (1986). In Fry, the court found sufficient evidence to support a conviction for carrying a concealed weapon where the gun was in the glove compartment of the vehicle the defendant was driving.

In State v. Walls, 190 Wis.2d 65, 526 N.W.2d 765 (Ct. App. 1994), the court affirmed a conviction for carrying a concealed weapon where a handgun was lying on the front seat of an automobile. The court held that:

> . . . the statute evinces a strong rationale to prevent the carrying of weapons in automobiles, as well as on a person. . . . A person is guilty of carrying a concealed weapon in an automobile where: (1) the weapon is located inside a vehicle and is within the defendant's reach; (2) the defendant is aware of the presence of the weapon; and (3) the weapon is concealed, or hidden from ordinary view – meaning it is indiscernible from ordinary observation of a person located outside and within the immediate vicinity of the vehicle.

190 Wis.2d 65, 71-72.

In State v. Keith, 175 Wis.2d 75, 498 N.W.2d 865 (Ct. App. 1993), the court affirmed a conviction where the defendant had a gun in her purse on the porch of her home. The court rejected Keith's argument that to "go armed, you have to go somewhere." The court held that "there is no separate element requiring that a person actually go somewhere." 175 Wis.2d 75, 79.

In State v. Hamdan, the court rejected the argument that Keith was wrongly decided, stating that "[we] continue to adhere to prior interpretations of the 'goes armed' language." 2003 WI 113, ¶24.

The definition of "went armed" was discussed in State v. Grandberry, 2018 WI 29, 380 Wis.2d 541, 910 N.W.2d 214, but no change was adopted.

5. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based in the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in § 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

2015 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 8, 2016] created § 941.23(1)(ap): "Notwithstanding s. 939.22(10), 'dangerous weapon' does not include a knife."

6. The "hidden from ordinary observation" requirement is adapted from State v. Mularkey, 201 Wis. 429, 230 N.W.2d 76 (1930). Also see, State v. Asfoor, 75 Wis.2d 411, 433, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976), which approved an instruction that included this requirement.

1335A CARRYING A CONCEALED WEAPON: UNLAWFUL PURPOSE — § 941.23

USE THIS INSTRUCTION FOR CASES IN WHICH THE COURT HAS DETERMINED THAT THE DEFENSE BASED ON THE STATE CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHT TO BEAR ARMS APPLIES.[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Carrying a concealed weapon, as defined in § 941.23 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by any person who carries a concealed and dangerous weapon for an unlawful purpose.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant carried[2] a dangerous weapon.

   "Carried" means went armed with.

2. The defendant was aware of the presence of the weapon.[3]

3. The weapon was concealed.

4. The defendant went armed with the weapon for an unlawful purpose.

Meaning of "Went Armed"

The phrase "went armed" means that the weapon must have been either on the defendant's person or that the weapon must have been within the defendant's reach.[4]

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[5]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any device or instrumentality which in the manner it is used or intended to be used is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Meaning of "Concealed"

"Concealed" means hidden from ordinary observation. The weapon does not have to be completely hidden.[6]

Meaning of "Unlawful Purpose"

"Unlawful purpose" means intent to use the weapon in furtherance of the commission of (name intended crime).[7]

The crime of (name intended crime) is committed by one who

> [DEFINE THE CRIME, REFERRING TO THE ELEMENTS AND DEFINITIONS IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION FOR THAT OFFENSE][8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1335A was originally published in 2004 and revised in 2006 and 2012. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2016; it updated footnote 5 to reflect changes made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 109.

This instruction was drafted to address the "constitutional defense" recognized by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Hamdan, 2003 WI 113, 264 Wis.2d 433, 665 N.W.2d 785.

In a case decided the same day as Hamdan, the court held that § 941.23 is constitutional on its face despite the adoption of a state constitutional amendment guaranteeing "the right to keep and bear arms for security, defense, hunting, recreation or any other lawful purpose." Wis. Const. art. I, § 25. State v. Cole, 2003 WI 112, 264 Wis.2d 520, 665 N.W.2d 328. However, whether the statute is constitutional as applied must be determined on a case-by-case basis: ". . . only if the public benefit in this exercise of the police power is substantially outweighed by an individual's need to conceal a weapon in the exercise of the right to bear arms will an otherwise valid restriction on that right be unconstitutional as applied." State v. Hamdan, 2003 WI 113, ¶46.

Because the defense is based on the amendment to the state constitution, it applies only to offenses committed after the amendment's effective date, which was November 30, 1998. State v. Cole, supra, ¶9; State v. Gonzales, 2002 WI 59, 253 Wis.2d 134, 645 N.W.2d 264.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court applied Cole and Hamdan in State v. Fisher, 2006 WI 44, 290 Wis.2d 121, 714 N.W.2d 495. In Fisher, the trial court dismissed a charge of carrying a concealed weapon against a tavern owner who kept a loaded gun in the center console of his vehicle. Fisher was arrested at about 4 p.m. while running personal errands. The supreme court reversed, concluding "that § 941.23 is constitutional as applied to Fisher because his interest in exercising his right to keep and bear arms for purposes of security by carrying a concealed weapon in his vehicle does not substantially outweigh the state's interest in enforcing § 941.23." Fisher, ¶3.

Procedure for determining whether the defense is raised.

Hamdan held that a defendant seeking to raise a "constitutional defense" to a charge under § 941.23 must raise the issue by pretrial motion and show two things:

1) that under the circumstances, the defendant's interest in concealing the weapon to facilitate exercise of his or her right to keep and bear arms substantially outweighed the State's interest in enforcing the concealed weapons statute; and,

2) that the defendant concealed his or her weapon because concealment was the only reasonable means under the circumstances to exercise his or her right to bear arms.

Hamdan did not provide a complete delineation of the scope of these requirements, but did hold that:

. . . the right to keep and bear arms for purposes of security is at its apex when undertaken to secure one's home or privately owned business. Conversely, the State's interest in prohibiting concealed weapons is least compelling in these circumstances. . . .

If the constitutional right to keep and bear arms for security is to mean anything, it must, as a general matter, permit a person to possess, carry, and sometimes conceal arms to maintain the security of his private residence or privately operated business, and to safely move and store weapons within these premises.
Hamdan, supra, ¶¶67 and 68.

If the trial court finds that the defendant has satisfied both requirements, the state must, still at the pretrial stage, assert and show probable cause to believe that the defendant had an unlawful purpose at the time he or she carried the concealed weapon. If supported by evidence at trial, the issue of unlawful purpose is to be submitted to the jury. Hamdan, ¶¶86-88.

Submitting the defense to the jury.

For cases involving the constitutional defense recognized by Hamdan, Wis JI-Criminal 1335A provides a separate instruction with an additional element: the state must disprove the constitutional defense by proving that the defendant went armed with a concealed weapon for an unlawful purpose. The Committee concluded that this was the most effective way to address the question, even though the Hamdan decision suggested a different procedure:

¶87. . . . Whether the defendant had an unlawful purpose, defined as an intent to use the weapon in furtherance of the commission of a crime, is a question of fact. The question should be submitted to the trier of fact along with separate, traditional instructions on the crime of carrying a concealed weapon.

¶88. If a jury answers that the defendant did not intend the unlawful purpose specifically alleged by the State, then it will not need to reach the questions posed in the jury instructions for a CCW offense as the defendant's conduct remains constitutionally protected. If any unlawful purpose is proven, then the defendant can be found guilty of carrying a concealed weapon upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of the elements of carrying a concealed weapon. See Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

These paragraphs could be read to authorize submitting this issue as a separate verdict question. The Committee concluded that presenting the unlawful purpose issue first as a separate question could create a problem in that it would assume that the defendant "went armed" with a concealed weapon, facts that must be established as elements of the crime. The Committee concluded that it is preferable to have a separate instruction for a case in which the defense is raised, which includes the absence of the defense as an additional element of the crime. This is consistent with the way other defenses are usually addressed.

1. This instruction is drafted for a case where there is no evidence of an exception to the applicability of § 941.23. The statute has always had an exception for peace officers. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 created four additional exceptions – see § 941.23(2)(a)-(e):

- a peace officer – sub. (a)
- a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer – sub. (b)
- a former officer – sub. (c)
- a licensee or out-of-state licensee – sub. (d)
- an individual who carries in his or her own dwelling or place of business or on land that he or she owns, leases, or legally occupies – sub. (e).

See Wis JI-Criminal 1335B for a model to use where there is evidence that an exception may apply.

2. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 changed the definition of this offense from "goes armed with" a dangerous weapon to "carries" a dangerous weapon. Section 941.23(1)(ag) provides that "carry" has the meaning given in § 175.60(1)(ag). Section 175.60(1)(ag) defines "carry" as "to go armed with."

3. See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

4. See note 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

5. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based in the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in § 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

2015 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 8, 2016] created § 941.23(1)(ap): "Notwithstanding s. 939.22(10), 'dangerous weapon' does not include a knife."

6. See note 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

7. The definition of "unlawful purpose" used in the instruction is the one required by the Hamdan decision:

> . . . Whether the defendant had an unlawful purpose, defined as an intent to use the weapon in furtherance of the commission of a crime, is a question of fact. The question should be submitted to the trier of fact along with separate, traditional instructions on the crime of carrying a concealed weapon. State v. Hamdan, 2003 WI 113, ¶87.

8. The Committee concluded that the elements of the alleged intended crime should be included in the instruction, as they are for attempts. See Wis JI-Criminal 580. Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 1795, Bail Jumping, which has been modified to reflect the decision in State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W. 698, holding that where a bail jumping charge is based on committing a new crime, the jury must be instructed on the elements of that crime.

1335B CARRYING A CONCEALED WEAPON: EVIDENCE OF EXCEPTION — § 941.23

USE THIS INSTRUCTION FOR CASES IN WHICH THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE LICENSEE EXCEPTION TO THE APPLICABILITY OF SEC. 941.23. USE IT AS A MODEL IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF ONE OF THE OTHER EXCEPTIONS.[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Carrying a concealed weapon, as defined in § 941.23 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who is not (a licensee) (an out-of-state licensee)[2] who carries a concealed and dangerous weapon.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four[3] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant carried[4] a dangerous weapon.

   "Carried" means went armed with.

2. The defendant was aware of the presence of the weapon.[5]

3. The weapon was concealed.

4. The defendant was not (a licensee) (an out-of-state licensee).[6]

   ("Licensee" means an individual holding a valid license to carry a concealed weapon issued under section 175.60 of the Wisconsin Statutes.)[7]

("Out-of-state licensee" means an individual who is 21 years of age or over, who is not a Wisconsin resident, and who has been issued an out-of-state license to carry a concealed weapon.)[8]

Meaning of "Went Armed"

The phrase "went armed" means that the weapon must have been either on the defendant's person or that the weapon must have been within the defendant's reach.[9]

Meaning of "Dangerous Weapon"

"Dangerous weapon" means[10]

[any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded. A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.]

[any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any device or instrumentality which in the manner it is used or intended to be used is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

[any electric weapon. An electric weapon is a device designed or used to immobilize or incapacitate a person by the use of electric current.]

Meaning of "Concealed"

"Concealed" means hidden from ordinary observation. The weapon does not have to be completely hidden.[11]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1335 in 1966 and revised in 1988, 1996, 2003, and 2006. In 2011, Wis JI-Criminal 1335 was revised to eliminate reference to exceptions to the applicability of § 941.23 and Wis JI-Criminal 1335B was created for use when evidence of an exception is in the case. It reflects changes made to § 941.23 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1335 for discussion of case law upholding the constitutionality of § 941.23 after the adoption of a state constitutional amendment guaranteeing "the right to keep and bear arms for security, defense, hunting, recreation or any other lawful purpose." Wis. Const. art. I, § 25.

Also see the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 1335 for a discussion of the relationship between carrying a concealed weapon in violation of § 941.23 and the rules relating to carrying cased guns in § 167.31(2).

1. This instruction can be used as a model for cases where one of the other exceptions to § 941.23 applies. The first paragraph of the instruction would be modified to replace "not a licensee" with an equivalent statement that the person is not covered by the exception raised in the case. And the fourth element would be changed to include the same statement.

This instruction is drafted for the case where there is evidence of the licensee exception to the applicability of § 941.23. The statute has always had an exception for peace officers. 2011 Wisconsin Act created four additional exceptions – see § 941.23(2)(a)-(e):

- a peace officer – sub. (a)
- a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(g) – sub. (b)
- a former officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(c) – sub. (c)
- a licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(d) or out-of-state licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(g) – sub. (d)
- an individual who carries in his or her own dwelling or place of business or on land that he or she owns, leases, or legally occupies – sub. (e).

In State v. Williamson, 58 Wis.2d 514, 206 N.W.2d 613 (1973), the Wisconsin Supreme Court confirmed that the question whether a defendant is a peace officer is one that must be raised by the defendant as an affirmative defense. The court noted that a long list of officials qualify as "peace officers," making it difficult for the state to establish that the defendant was not one of the identified individuals. The court recognized that an exception to the general rule imposing the burden on the state to disprove defenses exists where "evidence of the exempting fact lies especially within the control of the defendant or peculiarly within his knowledge." 58 Wis.2d at 524.

Several years after Williamson was decided, Wisconsin law relating to defenses was clarified in Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979). Moes was concerned with the statutorily recognized defense of coercion – see § 939.46. The statute defines the defense but does not address the procedure for litigating a coercion claim. Moes concluded that the common law rule in Wisconsin for "affirmative defenses" is that a burden of production can be placed on defendant; if the burden of production is satisfied, the state has the burden to prove the defense does not apply [by the beyond a reasonable doubt standard]. While the United States Constitution allows imposing a burden of persuasion on the defendant for true affirmative defenses [those that do not negate an element of the crime], the common law rule applies as a matter of state law unless the legislature has specifically provided to the contrary. 91 Wis.2d 756, 768. As to the rule under federal due process analysis, see Patterson v. New York, 432 U.S. 197 (1977).

In the Committee's judgment, statutory exceptions are therefore best addressed as follows. The question whether an exception applies is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of that fact. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the exception does not apply. See the text of the instruction at note 6.

2. See footnote 1, supra.

3. The instruction treats the absence of the exception as an element that the state must prove. See note 1, supra. The absence of the exception becomes an element only when raised by the evidence. If there is no evidence of an exception, only three elements must be proved. Wis JI-Criminal 1335 is the instruction to use in that case.

4. 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 changed the definition of this offense from "goes armed with" a dangerous weapon to "carries" a dangerous weapon. Section 941.23(1)(ag) provides that "'carry' has the meaning given in s. 175.60(1)(ag)." Section 175.60(1)(ag) defines "carry" as "to go armed with."

5. The original version of Wis JI-Criminal 1335, published in 1966, included the "aware of the presence" requirement. An instruction including that statement was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Asfoor, where the court stated that "[c]oncealing or hiding a weapon precludes inadvertence." 75 Wis.2d 411, 415, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976). The concept is similar to that involved for offenses requiring "possession." See Wis JI-Criminal 920. For cases identifying "aware of the presence" as an element of the crime, see State v. Fry and State v. Keith, note 9, below. The 1995 revision of the instruction added "aware of the presence" as a separate element.

6. This element must be changed if one of the other exceptions to the applicability of § 941.23 is raised in the case. The exceptions are listed in footnote 1, supra.

7. This is the definition of "licensee" provided in § 175.60(1)(d).

8. This is the definition of "out-of-state licensee" provided in § 175.60(1)(g), with the addition of the last phrase: "to carry a concealed weapon." "Out-of-state-license" is defined in § 175.60(1)(f).

9. In Mularkey v. State, 201 Wis. 429, 230 N.W. 76 (1930), the court affirmed the conviction of a driver who had a revolver within his reach on a shelf back of the seat of his automobile but did not have the weapon on his person.

The Mularkey "within his reach" test was reaffirmed by the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Fry, 131 Wis.2d 153, 388 N.W.2d 565 (1986). In Fry, the court found sufficient evidence to support a conviction for carrying a concealed weapon where the gun was in the glove compartment of the vehicle the defendant was driving.

In State v. Walls, 190 Wis.2d 65, 526 N.W.2d 765 (Ct. App. 1994), the court affirmed a conviction for carrying a concealed weapon where a handgun was lying on the front seat of an automobile. The court held that:

> . . . the statute evinces a strong rationale to prevent the carrying of weapons in automobiles, as well as on a person. . . . A person is guilty of carrying a concealed weapon in an automobile where: (1) the weapon is located inside a vehicle and is within the defendant's reach; (2) the defendant is aware of the presence of the weapon; and (3) the weapon is concealed, or hidden from ordinary view B meaning it is indiscernible from ordinary observation of a person located outside and within the immediate vicinity of the vehicle.

190 Wis.2d 65, 71-72.

In State v. Keith, 175 Wis.2d 75, 498 N.W.2d 865 (Ct. App. 1993), the court affirmed a conviction where the defendant had a gun in her purse on the porch of her home. The court rejected Keith's argument that to "go armed, you have to go somewhere." The court held that "there is no separate element requiring that a person actually go somewhere." 175 Wis.2d 75, 79.

In State v. Hamdan, the court rejected the argument that Keith was wrongly decided, stating that "[we] continue to adhere to prior interpretations of the 'goes armed' language." 2003 WI 113, ¶24.

10. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. They are based in the definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in § 939.22(10). See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

11. The "hidden from ordinary observation" requirement is adapted from State v. Mularkey, 201 Wis. 429, 230 N.W.2d 76 (1930). Also see, State v. Asfoor, 75 Wis.2d 411, 433, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976), which approved an instruction that included this requirement.

1336 CARRYING A CONCEALED KNIFE — § 941.231

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.231 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who goes armed with a concealed knife that is a dangerous weapon if that person has been convicted of a felony.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant went armed with a concealed knife.

   "Went armed" means that the knife must have been either on the defendant's person or that the knife must have been within the defendant's reach.[2]

   "Concealed" means hidden from ordinary observation. The knife does not have to be completely hidden.[3]

2. The concealed knife was a dangerous weapon.

   A knife is a dangerous weapon if[4]

   [it is designed as a weapon and is capable of producing death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.]

   [in the manner in which it is used or intended to be used, it is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm. "Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.][5]

3. The defendant had been convicted of a felony before (date of offense).

[(Name of felony) is a felony in Wisconsin.][6]

[The parties have agreed that the defendant was convicted of a felony before (date of offense) and you must accept this as conclusively proved.][7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1336 was approved by the Committee in 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2021; it added to the comment.

Section 941.231, Carrying a Concealed Knife, was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 149 [effective date: February 8, 2016]. Act 149 also repealed former § 941.24, Possession of a Switchblade Knife.

The statutory text of § 941.231 provides that "[a]ny person who is prohibited from possessing a firearm under s. 941.29 [Possession of a Firearm] who goes armed with a concealed knife that is a dangerous weapon is guilty of a Class A misdemeanor." If the instruction were to use this statutory text, both the Statutory Definition of the Crime and the list of Elements of the Crime would refer to § 941.29. Referring to § 941.29 would require defining why the defendant is prohibited from possessing a firearm under that statute. The Committee concluded that it would be simpler and more direct to omit the reference to the defendant being "prohibited from possessing a firearm under section 941.29 of the Wisconsin Statutes" and state the status element in terms of the reason why the defendant is prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 941.29.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving going armed with a concealed knife that is a dangerous weapon by a person convicted of a felony, which is the most common basis for the prohibition on firearm possession under § 941.29. See § 941.29(1m)(a), (b), and (bm). However, the prohibition in § 941.231 applies to other categories of persons who are prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 941.29. See § 941.29(1m)(c) to (g). For cases involving subs. (1)(c) through (g), the instruction must be modified. For cases involving subs. (1m)(f) and (g), the modification may be based on Wis JI-Criminal 1344, Possession of a Firearm by a Person Subject to an Injunction.

2. The definition of "went armed" in the instruction is based on the one articulated in case law under the old carrying a concealed weapon statute. See State v. Mularkey, 201 Wis. 429, 432, 230 N.W. 76 (1930), and other cases cited in footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1335.

3. The "hidden from ordinary observation" requirement is adapted from State v. Mularkey, 201 Wis. 429, 432, 230 NW 76 (1930). Also see, State v. Asfoor, 75 Wis.2d 411, 433, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976), which approved an instruction that included this requirement.

4. Choose the alternative supported by the evidence. These are two of the four alternatives in the standard definition of "dangerous weapon." See § 939.22(10). Eliminated are those relating to firearms and electric weapons, which would not apply to a knife. See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for footnotes discussing each alternative.

5. This instruction uses the standard definition of "dangerous weapon" provided in § 939.22(10), in which a knife is applicable. However, 2015 Wisconsin Act 149 also created subsection 941.23(1)(ap) which provides that "Notwithstanding s. 939.22(10), 'dangerous weapon' does not include a knife." Because § 941.23(1)(ap) is prefaced by the phrase "in this section," the exclusion applies only to offenses provided in § 941.23.

6. The prohibition on firearm possession in § 941.29 applies to person convicted of a felony in Wisconsin and also to persons convicted of crimes in other jurisdictions that would be felonies in Wisconsin. In the Committee's judgment, the way the third element is phrased should be suitable for handling either alternative. See footnote 7, Wis JI-Criminal 1343, for additional considerations relating to out of state convictions.

The Committee also concluded that the statute need not be interpreted to require that the defendant "know he was convicted of a felony" or know that he was prohibited from carrying a concealed knife that is a dangerous weapon. A person may fairly be held to know the nature of a crime of which he was convicted and to know the disabilities that may attend that conviction.

7. Defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of their felon status. The bracketed statement in the instruction includes the standard statement on the effect of a stipulation found in Wis JI-Criminal 162, Agreed Facts. The effect of a stipulation in a prosecution for violating § 941.29 has been described as follows:

> . . . where prior conviction of a felony is an element of the offense with which the defendant is charged and the defendant is willing to stipulate that he or she is a convicted felon, evidence of > the nature of the felony is irrelevant if offered solely to establish the felony conviction element of the offense. The trial court therefore abused its discretion in allowing the prosecutor to inform the jury as to the nature of McAllister's crime.

State v. McAllister, 153 Wis.2d 523, 525, 451 N.W.2d 764 (Ct. App. 1989). The Committee concluded the effect of a stipulation to felon status should be the same in a prosecution under § 941.231.

The fact of felon status may still be revealed; it is the nature of the felony that is not to be disclosed. State v. Nicholson, 160 Wis.2d 803, 804, 467 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1991).

Care must be taken where a stipulation goes to an element of a crime. A waiver should be obtained. See Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations. An example of a complete waiver inquiry is provided in footnote 8, Wis JI-Criminal 1343.

1337 CARRYING A FIREARM IN A PUBLIC BUILDING — § 941.235

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.235 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by any person[1] who goes armed with a firearm in any building owned or leased by the state or any political subdivision of the state.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant went armed with a firearm.

   The phrase "went armed" means that a firearm must have been on the defendant's person or that a firearm must have been within the defendant's reach.[2] In addition, the defendant must have been aware of the presence of the firearm.[3]

   The term "firearm" means a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[4]

2. The defendant went armed with a firearm in a building owned or leased by (the state.) (a political subdivision of the state. _____ is a political subdivision of the state.)[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1337 was originally published in 1995 and revised in 2007 and 2011. The 2011 revision updated footnote 1 to refer to changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2019; it added the material at footnote 3.

1. Subsection (2)(a) of § 941.235 provides that the statute does not apply:

> . . . to peace officers or armed forces or military personnel who go armed in the line of duty or to any person duly authorized by the chief of police of any city, village or town, the chief of the capitol police or the sheriff of any county to possess a firearm in any building under sub.(1).

2011 Wisconsin Act 35 amended § 941.235(2) by creating subsecs. (2)(c)-(e), which recognize three additional exceptions:

- a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(g) – sub. (2)(c)
- a former officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(c) – sub. (2)(d)
- a licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(d), or an out-of-state licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(g) – sub. (2)(e).

The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W.2d 595 (1925).

These situations are best handled, in the Committee's judgment, in the same manner as "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schultz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

2. This is the definition of "went armed" used in Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon. See note 2 of that instruction for cases discussing "went armed."

3. The "aware of the presence" requirement was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Asfoor, where the court stated that "[c]oncealing or hiding a weapon precludes inadvertence." 75 Wis.2d 411, 415, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976). The concept is similar to that involved for offenses requiring "possession." See Wis JI Criminal 920. For cases identifying "aware of the presence" as an element of the crime, see note 3 of Wis JI-Criminal 1335. The 1995 revision of that instruction added "aware of the presence" as a separate element.

4. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes airguns.

5. Whether a particular entity is a "political subdivision" of the state is a question of law that may be communicated to the jury. Over twenty Wisconsin statutes define the term, the most common being as follows: "'Political subdivision' means a county, city, town or village." See, for example, § 560.60(13). Subsection 102.475(8)(d) refers to "counties, municipalities and municipal corporations." Subsection 144.442(9m)(a) adds "public inland lake protection and rehabilitation districts." Subsection 166.08(2)d), dealing with emergency government, adds "special districts, authorities and other public corporations and entities whether organized and existing under charter or general law."

The title of § 941.235 uses the term "public building" but that term is not used in the text. That term may have a broader meaning in general usage, referring to buildings that are open to the public. See, for example, § 101.01(2)(g). The Wisconsin Supreme Court discussed the meaning of "public building" in City of Milwaukee v. K.F., 145 Wis.2d 24, 426 N.W.2d 329 (1988), where the majority concluded that the Milwaukee War Memorial was a public building even when rented by a group for private use. The majority relied in part on the definition in § 101.01(2)(g). A dissenting opinion argued that a public building could lose its public character when a private event is held there and cautioned against incorporating definitions from civil statutes into the criminal setting.

Section 941.235 avoids some potential difficulties by referring to buildings owned by a "political subdivision" but does not define that term as do most other statutes which use it.

1338 CARRYING A HANDGUN ON PREMISES WHERE ALCOHOL BEVERAGES ARE CONSUMED — § 941.237

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.237 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally goes armed with a handgun on any premises licensed for the sale and consumption of alcohol beverages.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant went armed with a handgun.

   The phrase "went armed" means that a firearm must have been on the defendant's person or that a firearm must have been within the defendant's reach.[2] In addition, the defendant must have been aware of the presence of the firearm.[3]

   ["Handgun" means any weapon designed or redesigned, or made or remade, and intended to be fired while held in one hand and to use the energy of an explosive to expel a projectile through a smooth or rifled bore.][4]

2. The defendant went armed with a handgun on a premises licensed for the sale and consumption of alcohol beverages.[5]

3. The defendant acted intentionally.

This requires that the defendant knew that (he) (she) was armed with a handgun and knew that the premises was licensed for the sale and consumption of alcohol beverages.[6]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1338 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2007, 2011, and 2019. The 2019 revision amended the definition of "went armed" defined under element 1 and updated notes 2 and 3 in the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It addressed the repeal of subsection 941.237(4) and the introduction of Wis JI-Criminal 1338A, which concerns the exceptions set forth in § 941.237(3)(a) – (j).

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.237, created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 95, effective date: December 25, 1993. The offense is defined in sub. (2): "Whoever intentionally goes armed with a handgun on any premises for which a Class "B" or "Class B" license or permit has been issued under ch. 125 is guilty of a Class A misdemeanor." As to Class "B" and "Class B" licenses, see note 1 below.

Numerous exceptions are provided in § 941.237(3)(a) through (j). 2011 Wisconsin Act 35 amended

§ 941.237(3) by creating subds. (cr)-(cx), which recognize three additional exceptions:

- a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(g) – sub. (3)(cr)
- a former officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(c) – sub. (3)(ct)
- a licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(d), or an out-of-state licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(g) if the licensee is not consuming alcohol on the premises – sub. (3)(cx).

See Wis JI-Criminal 1338A for a corresponding instruction concerning the exceptions set forth in § 941.237(3)(a) – (j).

2011 Wisconsin Act 35 repealed subsection (4) of section 941.237. This subsection stated that "[T]he state does not have to negate any exception under sub. (3). Any party that claims that an exception under sub. (3) is applicable has the burden of proving the exception by a preponderance of the evidence."

Prior to the enactment of 2011 Wisconsin Act 35, it appears that the burden of disproving an exception under sub. (3) never shifted to the State, regardless of whether the defendant successfully demonstrated the exception by a preponderance of the evidence. However, the repeal of sub. (4) without any replacement language brought about two significant changes.

First, the removal of sub. (4) relieved the defendant from the burden of proving the exception by a preponderance of the evidence. The Committee believes it is now sufficient for the defendant to simply point to or produce "some evidence" in support of an exception under sub. (3) in order to fulfill their required burden.

Evidence satisfies the "some evidence" quantum of evidence even if it is "weak, insufficient, inconsistent, or of doubtful credibility" or "slight." State v. Schuman, 226 Wis. 2d 398, 404, 595 N.W.2d 86 (Ct. App. 1999). Though the burden of producing "some evidence" of a defense is commonly referred to as the defendant's burden, that is not literally correct. The source of the evidence may be facts presented by the prosecution; facts elicited from prosecution witnesses by defense cross-examination or evidence affirmatively presented by the defense. State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 199, 214, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996).

Secondly, in the event that the defendant meets the "some evidence" standard, the Committee believes that the burden shifts to the State to disprove the exception beyond a reasonable doubt. See Wis JI-Criminal 1338A.

1. This phrase is used in place of the following statutory language: ". . . premises for which a Class "B" or "Class B" license or permit has been issued under ch. 125." The Class "B" license is described in § 125.26(1); it "authorizes retail sales of fermented malt beverages to be consumed either on the premises where sold or off the premises." The Class "B" permit is described in § 125.27(1); it applies to country clubs and similar clubs not open to the general public and "authorizes retail sales of fermented malt beverages to be consumed on the premises where sold." The "Class B" license is described in § 125.51(3); it "authorizes the retail sale of intoxicating liquor for consumption on the premises where sold by the glass and not in the original package or container."

In addition to avoiding the inherent difficulty in communicating to a jury the difference between a "Class B" license and a Class "B" license, the phrase used in the instruction is believed to address the core conduct the statute was intended to address: carrying a handgun into a tavern. Though not used in subsection

(2), which defines the offense, "tavern" does appear in some of the exceptions listed in subsection (3). And it is defined as follows in subsection (1)(fm): "'Tavern' means an establishment, other than a private club or fraternal organization, in which alcohol beverages are sold for consumption on the premises."

2. This is the definition of "went armed" used in Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon. See note 2 of that instruction for cases discussing "went armed."

3. The "aware of the presence" requirement was approved as a correct statement of the law in State v. Asfoor, where the court stated that "[c]oncealing or hiding a weapon precludes inadvertence." 75 Wis.2d 411, 415, 249 N.W.2d 529 (1976). The concept is similar to that involved for offenses requiring "possession." See Wis JI-Criminal 920. For cases identifying "aware of the presence" as an element of the crime, see note 3 of Wis JI-Criminal 1335. The 1995 revision of that instruction added "aware of the presence" as a separate element.

4. This is the definition of "handgun" provided in § 175.35(1)(b). That definition is adopted by cross-reference in § 941.237(1)(d).

5. See note 1, supra.

6. The Committee concluded that in this statute, the significance of the use of the word "intentionally" is to require knowledge that one is armed and knowledge that the premises is a licensed one. See § 939.23(3).

1338A CARRYING A HANDGUN ON PREMISES WHERE ALCOHOL BEVERAGES ARE CONSUMED — EXCEPTIONS UNDER § 941.237(3)(a) – (j)[1]

Carrying a Handgun on Premises Where Alcohol Beverages are consumed Under Wis. Stat. § 941.237(2)

The defendant's possession of a handgun on a premises licensed for the sale and consumption of alcohol beverages is an issue in this case. The law allows an individual to intentionally go armed with a handgun on a premises licensed for the sale and consumption of alcohol beverages[3] if [CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING][4]

[the individual is a peace officer.][5]

[the individual is a correctional officer while going armed in the line of duty.][6]

[the individual is a member of the U.S. armed forces or national guard while going armed in the line of duty.]

[the individual is a private security person meeting all of the following criteria:

1. The private security person is covered by a license or permit issued under s. 440.26.

2. The private security person is going armed in the line of duty.

3. The private security person is acting with the consent of the person specified in par. (d).][7]

[the individual is a qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer, as defined in s.

[(1) the individual is a (licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(d)[10]) (out-of-state licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(g)[11]) and, (2) is not consuming alcohol on the premises.]

[the individual is the licensee, owner, or manager of the premises, or any employee or agent authorized to possess a handgun by the licensee, owner, or manager of the premises.]

[the individual is in possession of a handgun that is unloaded and encased in a vehicle in any parking lot area.]

[the individual is in possession or use of a handgun at a public or private gun or sportsmen's range or club.]

[the individual is in possession or use of a handgun on the premises if authorized for a specific event of limited duration by the owner or manager of the premises who is issued the Class "B" or "Class B" license or permit under ch. 125 for the premises.]

[the individual is in possession of any handgun that is used for decoration if the handgun is encased, inoperable or secured in a locked condition.]

[the individual is in possession of a handgun in any portion of a hotel other than the portion of the hotel that is a tavern.]

[the individual is in possession of a handgun in any portion of a combination tavern and store devoted to other business if the store is owned or operated by a firearms dealer, the other business includes the sale of handguns and the handgun is possessed in a place other than a tavern.]

State's Burden of Proof

The State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the exception of (insert the applicable statutory exception) did not apply to the defendant.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of carrying a handgun on premises where alcohol beverages are consumed have been proved and that the exception of (insert the applicable statutory exception) did not apply to the defendant, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1338A was approved by the Committee in October 2023.

This instruction is drafted for the exceptions set forth in § 941.237(3)(a) – (j).

2011 Wisconsin Act 35 [effective date: November 1, 2011] created a process to obtain a license to carry a concealed weapon. A person who is licensed or who is an out-of-state licensee is exempted from the crime that prohibits carrying a handgun where alcohol beverages are sold and consumed if the person is not consuming alcohol on the premises.

2011 Wisconsin Act 35 repealed subsection (4) of section 941.237. This subsection stated that "[T]he state does not have to negate any exception under sub. (3). Any party that claims that an exception under sub. (3) is applicable has the burden of proving the exception by a preponderance of the evidence."

The Committee believes that prior to the enactment of 2011 Wisconsin Act 35, the burden of disproving an exception under sub. (3) never shifted to the state, regardless of whether the defendant successfully demonstrated the exception by a preponderance of the evidence. However, the repeal of sub. (4) without any replacement language resulted in two significant changes.

First, the removal of sub. (4) relieved the defendant from the burden of proving the exception by a preponderance of the evidence. The Committee believes it is now sufficient for the defendant to simply point to or produce "some evidence" in support of an exception under sub. (3) in order to fulfill their required burden.

Evidence satisfies the "some evidence" quantum of evidence even if it is "weak, insufficient, inconsistent, or of doubtful credibility" or "slight." State v. Schuman, 226 Wis. 2d 398, 404, 595 N.W.2d 86 (Ct. App. 1999). Though the burden of producing "some evidence" of a defense is commonly referred to as the defendant's burden, that is not literally correct. The source of the evidence may be facts presented by the prosecution; facts elicited from prosecution witnesses by defense cross-examination or evidence affirmatively presented by the defense. State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 199, 214, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996).

Secondly, in the event that the defendant meets the "some evidence" standard, the Committee believes that the burden shifts to the State to disprove the exception beyond a reasonable doubt.

1. Subsections 941.237(3)(a)–(j) set forth a list of statutory exceptions. The jury instructions typically treat these exceptions like an affirmative defense. That is, the state need not anticipate them in the charging document, and they are not issues in the case until supported by "some evidence." If so supported, the state must prove the inapplicability of the exception beyond a reasonable doubt. See, e.g., Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979). See also Wis JI-Criminal 700, Sec. II, 3.

§ 941.237(3) provides that subsection (2) does not apply to any of the following:

(a) A peace officer.
(b) A correctional officer while going armed in the line of duty.
(c) A member of the U.S. armed forces or national guard while going armed in the line of duty.
(cm) A private security person meeting all of the following criteria:
    1. The private security person is covered by a license or permit issued under s. 440.26.
    2. The private security person is going armed in the line of duty.
    3. The private security person is acting with the consent of the person specified in par. (d).
(cr) A qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(g), to whom s. 941.23(2)(b)1. to 3. applies.
(ct) A former officer, as defined in s. 941.23(1)(c), to whom s. 941.23(2)(c)1. to 7. applies.
(cx) A licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(d), or an out-of-state licensee, as defined in s. 175.60(1)(g), if the licensee or out-of-state licensee is not consuming alcohol on the premises.
(d) The licensee, owner, or manager of the premises, or any employee or agent authorized to possess a handgun by the licensee, owner, or manager of the premises.

(e) The possession of a handgun that is unloaded and encased in a vehicle in any parking lot area.
(f) The possession or use of a handgun at a public or private gun or sportsmen's range or club.
(g) The possession or use of a handgun on the premises if authorized for a specific event of limited duration by the owner or manager of the premises who is issued the Class "B" or "Class B" license or permit under ch. 125 for the premises.
(h) The possession of any handgun that is used for decoration if the handgun is encased, inoperable or secured in a locked condition.
(i) The possession of a handgun in any portion of a hotel other than the portion of the hotel that is a tavern.
(j) [in] The possession of a handgun in any portion of a combination tavern and store devoted to other business if the store is owned or operated by a firearms dealer, the other business includes the sale of handguns and the handgun is possessed in a place other than a tavern.

2. The Committee recommends that all instructions on defensive matters be combined with the instruction on the underlying offense. Combining the instructions will help the jury understand the issues and clarify the allocation of the burden of persuasion.

3. "Alcohol beverages" is defined as follows in §125.02(1)

"Alcohol beverages" means fermented malt beverages and intoxicating liquor.

4. The applicable statutory exception should be selected. The alternatives are those provided in sub. (3)(a) – (j) of § 941.237.

5. "Peace officer" is defined as follows in § 939.22(22):

"Peace officer" means any person vested by law with a duty to maintain public order, whether that duty extends to all crimes or is limited to specific crimes.

6. "Correctional officer" is defined as follows in § 941.237(1)(b):

"Correctional officer" means any person employed by the state or any political subdivision as a guard or officer whose principal duties are the supervision and discipline of inmates.

7. "Private security person" is defined as follows in §440.26 (1m):

"Private security person" means any private police, guard, or any person who stands watch for security purposes.

8. "Qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer" is defined as follows in § 941.23:

"Qualified out-of-state law enforcement officer" means a law enforcement officer to whom all of the following apply:

1. The person is employed by a state or local government agency in another state.

2. The agency has authorized the person to carry a firearm.
3. The person is not the subject of any disciplinary action by the agency that could result in the suspension or loss of the person's law enforcement authority.
4. The person meets all standards established by the agency to qualify the person on a regular basis to use a firearm.
5. The person is not prohibited under federal law from possessing a firearm.

"Law enforcement officer" is defined as a person who is employed by a law enforcement agency for the purpose of engaging in, or supervising others engaging in, the prevention, detection, investigation, or prosecution of, or the incarceration of any person for, any violation of law and who has statutory powers of arrest. See § 175.49(1)(g).

"Law enforcement agency" means an agency that consists of one or more persons employed by the federal government, including any agency described under 18 USC 926C (e) (2); a state, or a political subdivision of a state; the U.S. armed forces; or the national guard, that has as its purposes the prevention and detection of crime and the enforcement of laws or ordinances, and that is authorized to make arrests for crimes. See § 175.49(1)(f).

9. "Former law enforcement officer" is defined as follows in § 175.49(1)(d):

> "Former law enforcement officer" means a person who separated from service as a law enforcement officer at a state or local law enforcement agency in Wisconsin.

"Law enforcement officer" is defined as a person who is employed by a law enforcement agency for the purpose of engaging in, or supervising others engaging in, the prevention, detection, investigation, or prosecution of, or the incarceration of any person for, any violation of law and who has statutory powers of arrest. See § 175.49(1)(g).

"Law enforcement agency" means an agency that consists of one or more persons employed by the federal government, including any agency described under 18 USC 926C (e) (2); a state, or a political subdivision of a state; the U.S. armed forces; or the national guard, that has as its purposes the prevention and detection of crime and the enforcement of laws or ordinances, and that is authorized to make arrests for crimes. See § 175.49(1)(f).

10. "Licensee" is defined as follows in § 175.60(1)(d):

> "Licensee" means an individual holding a valid license to carry a concealed weapon issued under this section.

11. "Out-of-state licensee" is defined as follows in § 175.60(1)(g):

> "Out-of-state licensee" means an individual who is 21 years of age or over, who is not a Wisconsin resident, and who has been issued an out-of-state license.

1339 CARRYING A WEAPON BY LICENSEE WHERE PROHIBITED — § 175.60(16)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 175.60(16) of the Wisconsin Statutes provides that it is unlawful for any (licensee) (out-of-state licensee) to knowingly carry (a concealed weapon) (a weapon that is not concealed) (a firearm that is not a weapon) in a place where carrying a weapon is prohibited.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (a licensee) (an out-of-state licensee).

   ("Licensee" means an individual holding a valid license to carry a concealed weapon issued under section 175.60 of the Wisconsin Statutes.)[1]

   ("Out-of-state licensee" means an individual who is 21 years of age or over, who is not a Wisconsin resident, and who has been issued an out-of-state license to carry a concealed weapon.)[2]

2. The defendant knowingly carried (a concealed weapon) (a weapon that is not concealed) (a firearm that is not a weapon).

"Carried" means "went armed with."[3]

The phrase "went armed" means that the (weapon) (firearm) must have been either on the defendant's person or that the (weapon) (firearm) must have been within the defendant's reach.[4]

"Knowingly" requires that the defendant knew the (weapon) (firearm) was on (his) (her) person or within (his) (her) control.

["Concealed" means hidden from ordinary observation. The weapon does not have to be completely hidden.][5]

["Weapon" means (a handgun) (an electric weapon) (a knife other than a switchblade knife) (a billy club).][6]

FOR CASES INVOLVING "A FIREARM THAT IS NOT A WEAPON," ADD THE FOLLOWING.

["A firearm that is not a weapon" means a firearm other than a handgun.

"Firearm" means a device that acts by the force of gunpowder.][7]

3. The defendant carried the (concealed weapon) (weapon that was not concealed) (firearm that was not a weapon) in (specify a place listed in § 175.60(16)(a) 1. through 8.).[8]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1339 was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 5401 in 2012. It was renumbered and republished without substantive change in January 2024.

This instruction is for violations of § 175.60(16)(a), a statute created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. Effective date: November 1, 2011. The penalty is a fine of $500 or imprisonment for 30 days or both. See § 175.60(17)(b).

Note that this statute applies only to persons licensed to carry a concealed weapon by Wisconsin or by another state whose licensees are recognized in Wisconsin. Persons who are not licensees would be prosecuted under the regular criminal statutes, such as those prohibiting carrying a concealed weapon [§ 941.23] or carrying a firearm in a public building [§ 941.235].

Subsection (b) of § 175.60(16) provides that the "prohibitions under par. (a) do not apply to any of the following:

1. A weapon in a vehicle driven or parked in a parking facility located in a building that is used as, or any portion of which is used as, a location under par. (a).

2. A weapon in a courthouse or courtroom if a judge who is a licensee is carrying the weapon or if another licensee or out-of-state licensee, whom a judge has permitted in writing to carry a weapon, is carrying the weapon.

3. A weapon in a courthouse or courtroom if a district attorney, or an assistant district attorney, who is a licensee is carrying the weapon."

1. This is the definition of "licensee" provided in § 175.60(1)(d).

2. This is the definition of "out-of-state licensee" provided in § 175.60(1)(g), with the addition of the last phrase: "to carry a concealed weapon." "Out of state license" is defined in § 175.60(1)(f).

3. Section 175.60(1)(ag) defines "carry" as "to go armed with."

4. See footnote 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1335 for an explanation of the derivation of the definition of "went armed."

5. This is the definition of "concealed" used in Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon. It is to be included in the instruction only if the "concealed weapon" option is selected for the second element.

6. This is the definition of "weapon" provided in § 175.60(1)(j).

"Handgun" is defined as follows in § 175.60(1)(bm): ". . . any weapon designed or redesigned, or made or remade, and intended to be fired while held in one hand and to use the energy of any explosive to expel a projectile through a smooth or rifled bore. 'Handgun' does not include a machine gun, as defined in s. 941.27(1), a short-barreled rifle, as defined in s. 941.28(1)(b), or a short-barreled shotgun, as defined in s. 941.28(1)(c)."

"Electric weapon" is defined in § 941.295(1c)(a).

7. Section 175.60(16)(a) refers to three categories of weapons: a concealed weapon; a weapon that is not concealed; and, a firearm that is not a weapon. "Weapon" is defined in § 175.60(1)(j) as a handgun, electric weapon, a knife other than a switchblade, or a billy club. "Handgun" is defined in § 175.60(1)(bm) to exclude machine guns and short-barreled rifles or shotguns. [See footnote 6, which contains the complete definition.] The latter would still qualify as firearms, because they operate by force of gunpowder. Thus, in the Committee's judgment, the statutory reference to "a firearm that is not a weapon" would include machine guns and short-barreled rifles or shotguns.

The definition of firearm is the standard one used in the instructions [see Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892)], modified to refer to "device" in place of the usual reference to "weapon."

8. Section 175.60(16)(a) prohibits carrying a weapon or a firearm that is not a weapon in the following places.

1. Any portion of a building that is a police station, sheriff's office, state patrol station, or the office of division of criminal investigation special agent of the department.
2. Any portion of a building that is a prison, jail, house of correction, or secured correctional facility.
3. The facility established under s. 46.055. [The secure mental health facility for sexually violent persons.]
4. The facility established under s. 46.056. [The Wisconsin Resource Center.]
5. Any secured unit or secured portion of a mental health institute under s.51.05, including a facility designated as the Maximum Security Facility at Mendota Mental Health Institute.
6. Any portion of a building that is a county, state, or federal courthouse.
7. Any portion of a building that is a municipal courtroom if court is in session.
8. A place beyond a security checkpoint in an airport.

1340 POSSESSION OF A SWITCHBLADE KNIFE — § 941.24

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1240 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1987, 1995, and 2007. Its withdrawal was approved by the Committee in February 2016.

This instruction was withdrawn because the statute prohibiting possession of a switchblade knife was repealed by 2015 Wisconsin Act 149. [Effective Date: February 8, 2016.] Act 149 also created § 941.231 Carrying a concealed knife, which applies only to those who are prohibited from possessing a firearm under § 941.29 – e.g., convicted felons. See Wis JI-Criminal 1336.

Shortly before the enactment of Act 149, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals found that § 941.24 violated the constitutional right to bear arms in self defense when applied to a person who possessed a switchblade in his home. State v. Herrmann, 2015 WI App 97, 366 Wis.2d 312, 873 N.W.2d 257.

1341A POSSESSION OF A MACHINE GUN OR OTHER FULL AUTOMATIC FIREARM — § 941.26(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.26(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses a machine gun or other full automatic firearm.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a firearm.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control of a firearm.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge[4]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge

2. The firearm was a [machine gun] [full automatic firearm].

   A [machine gun] [full automatic firearm] is any weapon that shoots automatically more than one shot, without manual reloading, by a single function of the trigger.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1340A in 1996. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1341A in 2007. The 2007 revision involved the adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. The instruction was revised in 2009. The 2009 revision restored material in footnote 2 that was inadvertently dropped in 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.26(1)(a). Possession of "any machine gun or other full automatic firearm" is prohibited. "Machine gun" is defined in § 941.27(1) in a way that includes any full automatic firearm. Thus, the instruction can be used with reference to either "machine gun" or "full automatic firearm," depending on the way the offense is charged. Both terms are defined in the same way.

Note that there are several exceptions set forth in subsection (3) of § 941.26 and in subsection (2) of § 941.27. For example, "possession of a machine gun not usable as a weapon and possessed as a curiosity, ornament or keepsake" is not prohibited. See, § 941.27(2). It is the Committee's judgment that statutory exceptions are best handled as follows. The question of whether an exception applies is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of that fact. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the exception is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

1. Section 941.26(1)(a) provides that "no person may sell, possess, use or transport any machine gun or other full automatic firearm." The instruction is drafted for a case involving "possession" because that appeared to the Committee to be the most likely charge and because "possess" is the most inclusive term.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

4. The Committee concluded that what is required for this offense is knowing possession of a firearm that is a machine gun or full automatic weapon, not knowledge that the firearm has characteristics that make it a machine gun or full automatic weapon. This is because § 941.26(1)(a) does not include any "intent words" that indicate knowledge of the nature of the weapon is required. See § 939.23(1). Note, however, that in interpreting federal statutes defining a similar offense, the United States Supreme Court concluded that knowledge of the nature of the weapon was required. In United States v. Staples, 511 U.S. 600 (1994), the court held that in a prosecution for violation 26 USC § 5861(d), the government "should have been required to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that [Staples] knew the weapon he possessed had the characteristics that brought it within the statutory definition of a machine gun." The decision involved statutory construction; the court found that the language of the statute was not helpful because it is silent on "mens rea" and concluded:

> . . . absent a clear statement from Congress that mens rea is not required, we should not apply the public welfare offense rationale to interpret any statute defining a felony offense as dispensing with mens rea.

The Committee concluded that Staples is not binding on the construction of the Wisconsin statute since federal statutes do not incorporate a rule regarding "intent words" like the one provided in § 939.23(1). Though not always consistent on this issue, Wisconsin appellate courts typically find that the absence of an "intent word" in a statute in the criminal code indicates legislative intent that no knowledge element is required. See, for example, State v. Stanfield, 105 Wis.2d 553, 560, 314 N.W.2d 339 (1982), interpreting what is now § 951.02, cruelty to animals; State v. Stoehr, 134 Wis.2d 66, 396 N.W.2d 177 (1986), interpreting § 946.13, private interest in public contract; and, State v. Neumann, 179 Wis.2d 687, 708, 508 N.W.2d 54 (Ct. App. 1993), interpreting § 940.225(2)(a). However, a mental element has been read into criminal statutes outside the criminal code. See State v. Collova, 79 Wis.2d 473, 255 N.W.2d 581 (1977), adopting a mental element for operating after revocation, and State v. Christel, 61 Wis.2d 143, 211 N.W.2d 801 (1973), adopting a knowledge element for controlled substance offenses.

The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 2, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 941.26(1)(a) does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing a machine gun. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1)

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,'

the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

5. This is based on the definition provided in § 941.27(1)(a). Subsections (b) and (c) of the same statute extend the definition to include the frame or receiver or other part designed for use in converting a weapon to an automatic one [sub. (b)] and to a combination of parts from which an automatic weapon could be assembled [sub. (c)]. The instruction obviously must be modified if one of those options is involved.

1341B USING OLEORESIN OF CAPSICUM (PEPPER SPRAY)[1] OR CS GEL TO CAUSE BODILY HARM OR DISCOMFORT — § 941.26(4)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.26(4)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one[2] who intentionally uses a device or container of (oleoresin of capsicum)[3] (CS gel) to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to another person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used a device or container of (oleoresin of capsicum) (CS gel)[4] to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm or discomfort.[5]

   ["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][6]

2. The defendant acted intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[7]

It also requires that the defendant knew that the device or container contained (oleoresin of capsicum) (CS gel).[8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1341 in 1994. It was revised and renumbered as Wis JI-Criminal 1341B in 2007 and revised again in 2014 to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 77. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2019; it reflects changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 52.

This instruction is for one of several offenses contained in § 941.26(4) as amended by 1993 Wisconsin Act 91. Act 91 was enacted in December 1993 but with a delayed effective date of October 1, 1994. The criminal offenses involving "pepper spray" therefore apply only to conduct occurring on or after October 1, 1994.

The substance CS gel was added to the language of § 941.26 (4)(a) by 2019 Wisconsin Act 52 [effective date November 24, 2019].

See Wis JI-Criminal 1341C for violations of § 941.26(4)(d), using "pepper spray" to cause bodily harm or discomfort to a police officer.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1341D for violations of § 941.26(4)(L), possession of "pepper spray" by a convicted felon.

1993 Wisconsin Act 91 also required the Department of Justice to enact administrative rules relating to the sale and distribution of oleoresin of capsicum products. Those rules are found in Chapter Jus 14, Wisconsin Administrative Code. 2013 Wisconsin Act 77 [effective date: December 13, 2013] created § 941.26(4m) to read: "The department of justice may not promulgate or enforce any rule that regulates a device or container described under para. (a)."

1. The statute uses the term "oleoresin of capsicum" to refer to the substance commonly known as "pepper gas," "pepper spray," or "pepper mace." Not all material commonly referred to by these terms may meet the requirements of § 941.26(4)(a), which provides, in effect, that the offenses defined in sub. (4) apply to "a device or container that contains a combination of oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel and inert ingredients but does not contain any other gas or substance that will cause bodily discomfort." § 941.26(4)(a). Thus, the instruction uses the statutory term "oleoresin of capsicum" throughout.

2. Subsection (4)(c) of § 941.26 provides that the criminal offense defined in subsec. (4)(b) does "not apply to any of the following:"

1. "Any person acting in self-defense or defense of another, as allowed under s. 939.48."

2. "Any peace officer acting in his or her official capacity."

3. "Any armed forces or national guard personnel acting in the line of duty."

The general rule in Wisconsin is that an exception which appears in a separate section of the statute is a matter of defense which the prosecution need not anticipate in the pleadings. State v. Harrison, 260 Wis. 89, 92, 150 N.W.2d 38 (1951); Kreutzer v. Westfahl, 187 Wis. 463, 477, 204 N.W. 595 (1925).

Factual disputes about the applicability of an exception would likely be determined by pretrial motion. If a factual dispute is raised at trial, the Committee concluded that they are best handled in the same manner as most "affirmative defenses." That is, they are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of their existence. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the defense, or the exception, is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

3. See note 1, supra.

4. "'CS gel' means nonatomizing, gel-form chlorobenzalmalononitrile. § 941.26(1c)(a)."

5. The Committee concluded that the "substantial factor" definition of "cause" is sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

6. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

7. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. The knowledge requirement is included because the statute uses the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that this requires "purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified . . ." and "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The Committee concluded that the container or device being one that contains oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel is one of those facts. The Committee also concluded that is sufficient that the defendant know the substance by a common name, like "pepper spray," and not that the defendant know the exact chemical composition of the substance.

1341C USING OLEORESIN OF CAPSICUM (PEPPER SPRAY)[1] OR CS GEL TO CAUSE BODILY HARM TO A PEACE OFFICER — § 941.26(4)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.26(4)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally uses a device or container of (oleoresin of capsicum)[2] (CS gel) to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to a peace officer and knows, or has reason to know, that the person is a peace officer acting in an official capacity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used a device or container of (oleoresin of capsicum) (CS gel)[3] to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to (name of victim).

   "Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing bodily harm or discomfort.[4]

   ["Bodily harm" means physical pain or injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.][5]

2. The defendant acted intentionally.

This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to cause bodily harm or bodily discomfort to (name of victim) or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[6]

It also requires that the defendant knew that the device or container contained (oleoresin of capsicum) (CS gel).[7]

3. (Name of victim) was a peace officer acting in an official capacity.

A (name type of officer) is a peace officer.[8]

(Name type of officer)[9] act in an official capacity when they perform duties that they are employed to perform. A (name type of officer) who performs acts for personal reasons that are not within the responsibilities of a (name type of officer) does not act in an official capacity.[10] [The responsibilities of a (name type of officer) include: _____.][11]

4. The defendant knew, or had reason to know, that (name of victim) was a peace officer acting in an official capacity.[12]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

4. The Committee concluded that the "substantial factor" definition of "cause" is sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

There may be more than one cause of bodily harm. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two or more persons might jointly produce it.

Also see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

5. This is the definition of "bodily harm" provided in § 939.22(4).

6. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

7. The knowledge requirement is included because the statute uses the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that this requires "purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified . . ." and "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The Committee concluded that the container or device being one that contains oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel is one of those facts. The Committee also concluded that is sufficient that the defendant know the substance by a common name, like "pepper spray," and not that the defendant know the exact chemical composition of the substance.

8. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a sheriff is a peace officer. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was a sheriff.

9. Use the plural form in the blank, e.g., "sheriff," "police officers," etc.

10. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

11. The duties, powers, or responsibilities of some peace officers are set forth in the Wisconsin statutes. Where applicable, reference to such statutes may be helpful in attempting to define the responsibilities of such officers.

12. This is taken directly from § 941.26(4)(d), which refers to causing harm to "a person who the actor knows, or has reason to know, is a peace officer who is acting in an official capacity."

1341D POSSESSION OF OLEORESIN OF CAPSICUM (PEPPER SPRAY)[1] OR CS GEL BY A CONVICTED FELON — § 941.26(4)(L)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.26(4)(L) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses a device or container of (oleoresin of capsicum)[2] (CS gel)[3] and has been convicted of a felony.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a device or container.

   "Possess" means that the defendant knowingly[4] had actual physical control of a device or container.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge[6]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

2. The device or container contained (oleoresin of capsicum) (CS gel).[7]

3. The defendant had been convicted of a felony before (date of offense).[8]

(Name of felony) is a felony in Wisconsin.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1341B in 1995. It was revised and renumbered as Wis JI-Criminal 1341D in 2007. The instruction was revised in 2019. The 2019 revision reflected changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 52. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

This instruction is for an offense created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 25 [effective date: July 20, 1995]. Section 2 of 1995 Wisconsin Act 25 provides that it "first applies to the possession of a device or container on the effective date of this subsection, regardless of the date that the prior felony or crime, as described in section 941.26(4)(L) of the statutes, as created by this act, occurred." The statute does not apply if the person has received a pardon. § 941.26(4)(L).

The substance CS gel was added to the language of § 941.26 (4)(a) by 2019 Wisconsin Act 52 [effective date November 24, 2019].

Other offenses involving oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1341B and 1341C.

1. The statute uses the term "oleoresin of capsicum" to refer to the substance commonly known as "pepper spray" or "pepper mace." It may help the understandability of the instruction if the common name is used, but the statutory term is used throughout this model. The full statutory description is "a device or container that contains a combination of oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel and inert ingredients but does not contain any other gas or substance that will cause bodily discomfort." § 941.26(4)(a).

2. See note 1, supra.

3. "'CS gel' means nonatomizing, gel-form chlorobenzalmalononitrile. § 941.26(1c)(a)."

4. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

5. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

6. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 4, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 941.26(4)(L) does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing the designated substances. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

7. Because the offense definition does not use the word "intentionally," the Committee concluded that knowledge that the device or container contained oleoresin of capsicum or CS gel is not required. Compare footnote 8 in Wis JI-Criminal 1341B.

8. The date of the offense should be inserted in this blank.

9. See note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 1343, which discusses the application of a similar statute to felony convictions from other states, stipulating to the fact of the felony conviction, and similar issues.

1342 POSSESSION OF A SHORT-BARRELED SHOTGUN OR RIFLE[1] — § 941.28

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.28 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who possesses a short-barreled (rifle) (shotgun).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a (rifle)[2] (shotgun).[3]

   "Possess" means that the defendant knowingly[4] had actual physical control[5] of a (rifle) (shotgun).

Deciding About Knowledge[6]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

2. The (rifle) (shotgun) was short-barreled.[7]

   ["Short-barreled rifle" means a rifle having one or more barrels having a length of less than 16 inches measured from closed breech or bolt face to muzzle or a rifle having an overall length of less than 26 inches.][8]

["Short-barreled shotgun" means a shotgun having one or more barrels having a length of less than 18 inches measured from closed breech or bolt face to muzzle or a shotgun having an overall length of less than 26 inches.][9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1342 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1985, 1987, 1995, and 2007. The 2007 revision involved the adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

In State v. Johnson, 171 Wis.2d 175, 491 N.W.2d 110 (Ct. App. 1992), the court held that § 941.28 applies to a shotgun whose firing pin has been removed. The court noted its agreement with the trial court's conclusion that the statute does not require "that the shotgun be capable of being fired at the time it was possessed." 171 Wis.2d 175, 178.

1. This instruction is for a violation of § 941.28, created by Chapter 115, Laws of 1979 (effective date May 1, 1979). The statute prohibits not only "possession" but also "selling," "offering to sell," "transporting," "purchasing," or "going armed with" a short-barreled rifle or shotgun. The instruction is written in terms of "possession" because the Committee concluded that "possession" would be the most commonly charged type of offense. Further, "possession" is a broad enough term to cover most of the other prohibited activities; one must possess something in order to transport it, or to sell it, or to go armed with it.

2. "Rifle" is defined by § 941.28(1)(a):

> "Rifle" means a firearm designed or redesigned, made or remade, and intended to be fired from the shoulder or the hip and designed or redesigned and made or remade to use the energy of a propellant in a metallic cartridge to fire through a rifled barrel a single projectile for each pull of the trigger.

3. "Shotgun" is defined by § 941.28(1)(d):

> "Shotgun" means a weapon designed or redesigned, made or remade, and intended to be fired from the shoulder or the hip and designed or redesigned and made or remade to use the energy of a propellant in a fixed shotgun shell to fire through a smooth bore either a number of ball shot or a single projectile for each single pull of the trigger.

4. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

5. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

6. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 4, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 941.28 does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing a short-barreled rifle or shotgun. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

7. The statutory definitions of "rifle" and "shotgun" require that it be "designed or redesigned, made or remade, and intended to be fired from the shoulder or hip. . . ." The weapon that is the subject of a charge covered by this instruction must have originally been "intended to be fired from the shoulder or hip" and later modified to be "short-barreled." The weapon so modified need not be "intended to be shot from the shoulder or hip."

The court of appeals reached a conclusion consistent with this analysis in State v. Johnson, supra at 182.

> . . . the pertinent intent is that of the fabricator and not that of the possessor. . . Thus, a weapon is within the scope of section 941.28(1)(d) if it was either "designed" or "redesigned" and either "made" or "remade" "to be fired from the shoulder or hip" and intended by the designer or redesigner and the maker or remaker to be so operated.

The Johnson court rejected the argument that "the statute's prohibition could be defeated by the possessor's professed subjective intent to not fire the weapon from his or her shoulder or hip." 171 Wis.2d 175, 183.

Because the offense definition does not use the word "intentionally," the Committee concluded that knowledge that the rifle or shotgun was short-barreled is not required.

8. This is the definition provided in § 941.28(1)(b).

9. This is the definition provided in § 941.28(1)(c).

1343 POSSESSION OF A FIREARM [BY AN ADULT CONVICTED OF A FELONY][1] — § 941.29(1m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.29(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses a firearm if that person has been convicted of a felony.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a firearm.

"Firearm" means a weapon which acts by the force of gunpowder.[3]

[It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.][4]

"Possess" means that the defendant knowingly[5] had actual physical control of a firearm.[6]

Deciding About Knowledge[7]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his or her possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The defendant had been convicted of a felony before (date of offense).[8]

[(Name of felony) is a felony in Wisconsin.][9]

[The parties have agreed that the defendant was convicted of a felony before (date of offense) and you must accept this as conclusively proved.][10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1343 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1984, 1986, 1987, 1993, 1996, 1999, 2007, 2011, 2016, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2021; it added to the Comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

Section 941.29 was revised by 2015 Wisconsin Act 109. The offense definition did not change but is now found in sub. (1m); the instruction was revised to reflect that change. In addition, Act 109 repealed former sub. (2) and created sub. (4m) to require a minimum sentence for cases involving persons with a prior record relating to a "violent felony" or a "violent misdemeanor." Those terms are defined in new sub. (1g). [The effective date of Act 109 is November 13, 2015; but § 941.29(4m)(b) states: "This subsection does not apply to sentences imposed after July 1, 2020."]

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343A for material to add to this instruction in cases where the narrow defense of privilege recognized in State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 199, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996) is raised.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343B for violations of § 941.29(4), furnishing a firearm to a felon.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343D for violations of § 941.29(1m)(bm) through (em), possession of a firearm by a person who has been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be a felony if committed by an adult in the state, found not guilty of a felony due to mental disease or defect, found not guilty or not responsible for a felony in another jurisdiction due to insanity or mental disease, defect, or illness, committed for treatment under s. 51.20 (13) (a) and ordered not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 2007 stats., or who has been ordered not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 51.45 (13) (i) 1., 54.10 (3) (f) 1., or 55.12 (10) (a).

See Wis JI-Criminal 1344 for violations of § 941.29(1m)(f) and (g), possession of a firearm by a person subject to an injunction.

The state has jurisdiction to enforce § 941.29 on tribal reservations. State v. Jacobs, 2007 WI App 155, 302 Wis.2d 675, 735 N.W.2d 535.

The right to bear arms amendment to the state constitution did not invalidate § 941.29. State v. Thomas, 2004 WI App 115, 274 Wis.2d 513, 683 N.W.2d 497. The statute is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad and it does not deny the equal protection of the laws. Id.

Wisconsin's possession of a firearm by a felon law is not unconstitutional as applied to a defendant convicted of a non-violent felony. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that prohibiting all felons from possessing firearms under § 941.29, even those convicted of non-violent offenses is substantially related to the important governmental objectives of public safety and the prevention of gun violence. State v. Roundtree, 2021 WI 1, 395 Wis.2d 94, 952 N.W.2d 765. Accordingly, § 941.29 is constitutional as applied to all felons, regardless of the nature or age of the underlying felony conviction. Id.

Section 2 of Chapter 141, Laws of 1981, related to the applicability of the law and was not printed in the statutes. It provided: "This act applies to persons regardless of the date the crime specified under § 941.29(1) of the statutes, as created by this act, is committed." However, for the statute to apply, the possession of the firearm would have had to occur after the statute's effective date, which was March 31, 1982.

Section 973.033, effective March 31, 1990, requires that whenever a defendant is sentenced for a felony, "the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under s. 941.29." This does not add a requirement to a charge under § 941.29 that the required advice was given. State v. Phillips, 172 Wis.2d 391, 493 N.W.2d 238 (Ct. App. 1992). Phillips confirmed that the offense has two elements: being a convicted felon and possessing a firearm. 172 Wis.2d 391, 354.

In State v. Thiel, 188 Wis.2d 695, 524 N.W.2d 641 (1994), the court upheld the application of § 941.29 to a person whose felony conviction occurred in 1970, eleven years before § 941.29 was enacted. The court concluded that "the statute was not enacted with the intent to punish convicted felons and as such is not an ex post facto law as applied to [Thiel]." 188 Wis.2d 695, 697.

1. A trial judge has the authority to determine whether to include, exclude, or modify the title of an instruction when submitting it to the jury. The title of § 941.29 addresses "Possession of a firearm." However, this instruction only applies to adults who are prohibited from possessing firearms because of a previous felony conviction. The bracketed language "by an adult felon" is optional and can be included to distinguish between individuals who are prohibited from possessing firearms under § 941.29(1m)(a) and (b) due to being an adult convicted of a felony, and other groups of people who are prohibited from possessing firearms, such as those who have been adjudicated delinquent, found not guilty of a felony by reason of mental illness or defect, or are subject to an injunction.

2. The instruction is drafted for cases involving possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a felony. However, the statute also applies to other categories of individuals. See § 941.29(1m)(a) through (g). This instruction is suitable for use in cases involving subs. (1m)(a) and (b). (See discussion in note 7.) For cases involving subs. (1m)(bm) through (em), see Wis JI-Criminal 1343D. For cases involving subs. (1m)(f) and (g), see Wis JI-Criminal 1344.

The statement of the elements in the instruction is a substantial shortening of the full statutory definition. Note that there are exceptions to the coverage of the statute in subsections (5) through (9) of § 941.29. The exception in subsection (5)(b) was added by 1985 Wisconsin Act 259. The cited provision, 18 U.S.C. § 925(c), allows the secretary of the treasury to grant relief from the disabilities relating to possession of firearms if the person's conviction did not involve a firearm offense and the secretary is satisfied "that the applicant will not be likely to act in a manner dangerous to public safety and that the granting of the relief will not be contrary to the public interest." However, § 925(c), and by extension (5)(b), no longer provide a functional mechanism for relief from the firearms disability imposed on felons in Wisconsin. This is because "since 1992, Congress has provided in each ATF appropriations bill that none of the appropriated funds are to be used to investigate or act upon applications for relief from federal firearms disabilities." Moran v. Wisconsin Department of Justice, 2019 WI App 206, ¶19, 388 Wis. 2d 193, 932 N.W.2d 430.

Subsection (5)(a) contains two prerequisites for lawful possession of a firearm by a felon: the individual must have received a pardon, and they must have been expressly authorized to possess a firearm under 18 U.S.C. app 1203. However, it is important to note that the latter requirement was repealed in 1986. Moran, 388 Wis. 2d 193, ¶17. Wisconsin law distinguishes between a pardon and a restoration of rights. A pardon alone will restore a felon's firearm rights. Id. ¶¶ 23-26. Where the removal of a felon's political disabilities imposed as a result of an out-of-state conviction restores the felon's right to possess a firearm in that state, a pardon is still required for the felon to possess firearms in Wisconsin. Moran v. Wisconsin Department of Justice, 2019 WI App 38, 388 Wis.2d 193, 932 N.W.2d 430.

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

4. Possession of a disassembled and inoperable firearm is a violation of § 941.29. The "term 'firearm' is appropriately defined as a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder to fire a projectile irrespective of whether it is inoperable due to disassembly." State v. Rardon, 185 Wis.2d 701, 706, 518 N.W.2d 330 (Ct. App. 1994), citing Wis JI-Criminal 1343 with approval. Also see State v. Johnson, 171 Wis.2d 175, 491 N.W.2d 110 (Ct. App. 1992), reaching a similar conclusion with respect to the definition of "shotgun" under § 941.28.

5. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

6. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another:

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

In State v. Black, 2001 WI 31, 242 Wis.2d 126, 624 N.W.2d 363, the court suggested that "handling" a firearm was sufficient to satisfy the "possession" element. The court concluded that a criminal complaint alleging that the defendant handled a firearm provided a sufficient factual basis to support a guilty plea to violating § 941.29.

7. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 5, supra. The Committee concluded that subsections (1m)(a) through (g) do not require proof that defendants know their enumerated status or know of the prohibition against possessing a firearm. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute. In the context of Wis. Stat. § 941.29(1m), the absence of the intent word "knowingly" is particularly significant, indicating that proof of intent is not required. See also State v. Phillips, 172 Wis.2d 391, 451 N.W.2d 238 (Ct. App. 1989), which concluded that the statute requiring sentencing courts to inform defendants convicted of felonies about the prohibition on firearm possession did not create an extra element for the crime of illegal firearm possession by a felon.

8. The date of the offense should be inserted in this blank.

9. The statute applies to persons convicted of a felony in Wisconsin and also to persons convicted of crimes in other states that would be felonies in Wisconsin. In the Committee's judgment, the way the second element is phrased should be suitable for handling either alternative. Where the crime committed in another state has a name not used in Wisconsin, it may be helpful to add a sentence to the effect that the offense would have been a felony if committed in this state. The Committee concluded that the statutory elements of the crime of which the defendant was convicted in the other state should be compared with the statutory elements of the comparable Wisconsin offense. One must be able to say that those elements "would be a felony if committed in this state."

Compare § 941.29 with its federal counterpart, 18 USC 924(a)(2), which refers to one who "knowingly" violates the federal prohibition in 18 USC 922(g) on firearm possession. 18 USC 924(a)(2) was interpreted in Rehaif v. United States, 139 S.CT. 2191 [No. 17-9560, decided June 21, 2019] to require that the defendant knew he possessed a firearm and knew that he was an alien unlawfully in the country and thus prohibited from possessing a firearm under 18 USC 922(g). Because it is a decision interpreting a federal statute and is not constitutionally based, Rehaif has no direct application to § 941.29.

Where the out-of-state conviction is under a statute that is broader than its Wisconsin counterpart, courts should evaluate whether the conduct that led to the conviction would be considered a felony if committed in Wisconsin. If it would, the out-of-state conviction can be the basis for the application of § 941.29. State v. Campbell, 2002 WI App 20, 250 Wis.2d 238, ¶¶7-6, 642 N.W.2d 230.

10. Defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of their felon status. The bracketed statement in the instruction includes the standard statement on the effect of a stipulation found in Wis JI-Criminal 162, AGREED FACTS. The effect of a stipulation in a prosecution for violating § 941.29 has been described as follows:

> . . . where prior conviction of a felony is an element of the offense with which the defendant is charged and the defendant is willing to stipulate that he or she is a convicted felon, evidence of the nature of the felony is irrelevant if offered solely to establish the felony-conviction element of the offense. The trial court therefore abused its discretion in allowing the prosecutor to inform the jury as to the nature of McAllister's crime.

State v. McAllister, 153 Wis.2d 523, 525, 451 N.W.2d 764 (Ct. App. 1989).

The fact of felon status may still be revealed; it is the nature of the felony that is not to be disclosed. State v. Nicholson, 160 Wis.2d 803, 804, 467 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1991).

Care must be taken where a stipulation goes to an element of a crime. A waiver should be obtained. See Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations.

An example of a complete waiver inquiry is as follows:

TO THE DEFENDANT:

1. Do you understand that one of the elements of the crime of felon in possession of a firearm is that you have been convicted of a felony before the date of this offense?

2. Do you understand that you have the right to have a jury, that is, twelve people, decide whether or not the state has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that you have been convicted of a felony before the date of this offense?

3. Do you understand that the State has to convince each member of the jury that you have been convicted of a felony before the date of this offense?

4. Do you understand that with this stipulation, you are agreeing that I tell the jury that you have been convicted of a felony before the date of this offense and that they are to accept this fact as conclusively proved?

5. Has your attorney explained the pros and cons, that is, the advantages and disadvantages of entering into this agreement?

6. Have you had enough time to talk all of this over with your attorney?

7. Has anyone pressured you or threatened you in any way, or made any promises to you, to get you to enter into this agreement?

8. Are you entering into this agreement of your own free will?

9. Have you had enough time to make your decision?

TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

1. Are you satisfied that your client thoroughly understands (his) (her) right to enter into this agreement regarding (his) (her) prior conviction or to not enter into this agreement?

2. Are you satisfied that your client is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly?

FINDING: The court is also satisfied that the defendant is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly. The court, therefore, accepts the stipulation.

Also see State v. Aldazabal, 146 Wis.2d 267, 430 N.W.2d 614 (Ct. App. 1988), where the defendant, charged with violating § 941.29, stipulated that he had been convicted of a felony. The stipulation was not formally admitted into evidence, but the court of appeals held that the mentioning of the stipulation during the prosecutor's opening statement was sufficient to support the conviction.

1343A POSSESSION OF A FIREARM BY A FELON: PRIVILEGE

[INSERT THE FOLLOWING INTO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1343 AFTER THE ELEMENTS OF THE CRIME ARE DEFINED IN PLACE OF THE TWO CONCLUDING PARAGRAPHS.]

The law allows a person convicted of a felony to possess a firearm under certain circumstances.

The state must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the circumstances permitting the defendant to possess a firearm did not exist in this case.

The law allows the defendant to possess a firearm if all the following circumstances are present:

(1) the defendant reasonably believed (he) (she) was under an unlawful threat of imminent death or great bodily harm;[1]

(2) the defendant reasonably believed (he) (she) had no alternative way to avoid the threatened harm other than by possessing a firearm;[2]

(3) the defendant did not recklessly or negligently place (himself) (herself) in a situation in which it was probable that (he) (she) would be forced to possess a firearm; and,

(4) the defendant possessed the firearm only for the time necessary to prevent the threatened harm.[3]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knowingly possessed a firearm, that the defendant had previously been convicted of a felony and that the circumstances permitting the defendant to possess a firearm did not exist, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1343A was approved by the Committee in May 1997 and republished without substantive change in 2008.

This instruction was drafted to implement the decision in State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 198, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996), where the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that "a narrow defense of privilege exists to a charge of felon in possession of a firearm." However, the court agreed with the state that the generally applicable defenses like coercion, self defense, defense of others, and defense of property should not apply. Rather, a special privilege, based on U.S. v. Gant, 691 F.2d 1159 (5th Cir. 1982), was adopted:

> In order to be entitled to the defense, the defendant must prove:
> (1) the defendant was under an unlawful, present, imminent, and impending threat of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily injury, or the defendant reasonably believes he or she is under such a threat;
> (2) the defendant did not recklessly or negligently place himself or herself in a situation in which it was probable that he or she would be forced to possess a firearm;
> (3) the defendant had no reasonable, legal alternative to possessing a firearm, or reasonably believed that he or she had no such alternative; in other words, the defendant did not have a chance to refuse to possess the firearm and also to avoid the threatened harm, or reasonably believed he or she did not have such a chance;
> (4) a direct causal relationship may be reasonably anticipated between possessing the firearm and the avoidance of the threatened harm;
> (5) the defendant did not possess the firearm for any longer than reasonably necessary.

206 Wis.2d 198, 209-10.

The Committee concluded that the substance of this five-part test could be captured in the four factors that are used in the instruction. See notes 1-3, below. No change in meaning was intended.

The Coleman decision was ambiguous on the crucial issue of the allocation of the burden of persuasion. The quoted material above was introduced by the phrase: "the defendant must prove." Later however, the court refers to the defendant "bear[ing] the burden of producing sufficient evidence" and noted that "the source of such evidence may be facts produced by the defense or by the state." And, in two other instances, the court noted that "Coleman presented sufficient evidence in support of the privilege" because the jury "could have determined that Coleman had satisfied the five-part test."

In the absence of more specific direction, the Committee concluded that this instruction should be drafted to reflect the typical Wisconsin approach to privileges: the defendant bears the burden of production which may be satisfied by producing or pointing to "some evidence" of the privilege; upon that showing, the burden switches to the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the privilege does not apply. With a multi-part privilege like this one, that burden can be satisfied by proving that any part of the privilege is not present.

1. This is a paraphrase of the first factor in the test adopted in Coleman, which was stated as follows: ". . . the defendant was under an unlawful, present, imminent, and impending threat of such a nature as to induce a well-grounded apprehension of death or serious bodily injury, or the defendant reasonably believes he or she is under such a threat. . . ." No change in meaning is intended.

2. The Committee believes this captures the substance of the third part of the test adopted in Coleman, which was stated as follows: "the defendant had no reasonable, legal alternative to possessing a firearm, or reasonably believed that he or she had no such alternative; in other words, the defendant did not have a chance to refuse to possess the firearm and also to avoid the threatened harm, or reasonably believed he or she did not have such a chance; . . ." No change in meaning is intended.

3. The Committee concluded that this captures the substance of the fourth and fifth parts of the test adopted in Coleman, which provided: "(4) a direct causal relationship may be reasonably anticipated between possessing the firearm and the avoidance of the threatened harm; and, (5) the defendant did not possess the firearm for any longer than reasonably necessary." No change in meaning is intended.

1343B FURNISHING A FIREARM TO A FELON — § 941.29(4)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1343B was originally published in 2008 and revised in 2016. It was withdrawn in 2018 when § 941.29(4) was repealed by 2017 Wisconsin Act 145 [effective date: March 30, 2018]. Act 145 also created § 941.2905 which defines a similar offense – Straw Purchasing Of A Firearm. See Wis JI-Criminal 1343C.

1343C STRAW PURCHASING OF A FIREARM — § 941.2905

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.2905 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who intentionally furnishes, purchases, or possesses a firearm for another person, knowing that the other person has been convicted of a felony.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally [furnished][2] [purchased] [possessed] a firearm for (name of felon).

   "Firearm" means a weapon which acts by the force of gunpowder.[3] [It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.][4]

   ["Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly had actual physical control of the firearm.][5]

2. (Name of felon) had been convicted of a felony before (date of offense).[6]

   [(Name of felony) is a felony in Wisconsin.][7]

3. The defendant knew that the object was a firearm and knew that (name of felon) had been convicted of a felony.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1343C was approved by the Committee in October 2018.

This instruction is for violations of § 941.2905 which provides: "Whoever intentionally furnishes, purchases or possesses a firearm for a person, knowing that the person is prohibited from possessing a firearm under s. 941.29(1m), is guilty of a Class G felony." Section 941.2905 was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 145 [effective date: March 30, 2018].

The instruction is drafted for intentionally furnishing, purchasing, or possessing a firearm for a person convicted of a felony, the most common type of individual prohibited from possessing a firearm under s. 941.29(1m). The full list follows:

(a) The person has been convicted of a felony in this state.
(b) The person has been convicted of a crime elsewhere that would be a felony if committed in this state.
(bm) The person has been adjudicated delinquent for an act committed on or after April 21, 1994, that if committed by an adult in this state would be a felony.
(c) The person has been found not guilty of a felony in this state by reason of mental disease or defect.
(d) The person has been found not guilty of or not responsible for a crime elsewhere that would be a felony in this state by reason of insanity or mental disease, defect or illness.
(e) The person has been committed for treatment under s. 51.20 (13) (a) and is subject to an order not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 2007 stats.
(em) The person is subject to an order not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 51.45 (13) (i) 1., 54.10 (3) (f) 1., or 55.12 (10) (a).
(f) The person is subject to an injunction issued under s. 813.12 or 813.122 or under a tribal injunction, as defined in s. 813.12 (1)(e), issued by a court established by any federally recognized Wisconsin Indian tribe or band, except the Menominee Indian tribe of Wisconsin, that includes notice to the respondent that he or she is subject to the requirements and penalties under this section and that has been filed under s. 813.128 (3g).
(g) The person is subject to an order not to possess a firearm under s. 813.123 (5m) or 813.125 (4m).

Exceptions to the application of § 941.2905 are set forth in sub.(2)(a) through (f). In the Committee's judgment, evidence of exceptions is best addressed as follows. The question whether an exception applies is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of that fact. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the exception does not apply. See Wis JI-Criminal 1335B for a more complete discussion of this issue; JI 1335B provides a model for integrating the absence of a statutory exception in the instruction for carrying a concealed weapon in violation of § 941.23.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving furnishing, purchasing, or possessing a firearm to a person convicted of a felony. However, the statute also applies to other categories of individuals. See §941.29(1m)(a) through (g). This instruction is suitable for use in cases involving subs. (1m)(a) and (b). (See discussion in note 7.) For cases involving subs. (1m)(c) through (g), the instruction must be modified.

2. "Furnish" does not have a statutory definition and therefore should be given its plain and ordinary meaning. A typical definition is: "To equip with what is needed; to supply, give." The American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, Third Edition.

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

4. Volume V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 83 (February 1953).

Possession of a disassembled and inoperable firearm is a violation of § 941.29. The "term 'firearm' is appropriately defined as a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder to fire a projectile irrespective of whether it is inoperable due to disassembly." State v. Rardon, 185 Wis.2d 701, 706, 518 N.W.2d 330 (Ct. App. 1994), citing Wis JI-Criminal 1343 with approval. Also see State v. Johnson, 171 Wis.2d 175, 491 N.W.2d 110 (Ct. App. 1992), reaching a similar conclusion with respect to the definition of "shotgun" under § 941.28.

5. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

6. The date of the offense should be inserted in this blank.

7. The statute applies to persons convicted of a felony in Wisconsin and also to persons convicted of crimes in other states that would be felonies in Wisconsin. In the Committee's judgment, the way the second element is phrased should be suitable for handling either alternative. Where the crime committed in another state has a name not used in Wisconsin, it may be helpful to add a sentence to the effect that the offense would have been a felony if committed in this state. The Committee concluded that the statutory elements of the crime of which the person was convicted in the other state should be compared with the statutory elements of the comparable Wisconsin offense. One must be able to say that those elements "would be a felony if committed in this state."

8. Subsection (1) of § 941.2905 defines this offense as applying to one who "intentionally furnishes . . . a firearm for a person, knowing that the person is prohibited from possessing a firearm under s. 941.29(1m)." As applied to this instruction, this requires that the defendant knew the person was a felon. Further, the Committee concluded that the defendant must know the item was a firearm, because the offense definition begins with the word "intentionally." See § 939.23(3).

1343D POSSESSION OF A FIREARM [OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES][1] — § 941.29(1m)(bm) – (em)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.29(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses a firearm if that person [CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING][2]

[has been adjudicated delinquent for an act that, if committed by an adult in Wisconsin, would be a felony.]

[has been found not guilty of a felony in Wisconsin by reason of mental disease or defect.]

[has been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere that would be a felony in Wisconsin by reason of (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness).]

[has been committed for treatment under Wis. Stat. § 51.20 (13) (a) and is subject to an order not to possess a firearm under § 51.20 (13) (cv) 1.]

[is subject to an order not to possess a firearm under § (51.20 (13) (cv) 1.) (51.45(13) (i) 1.) (54.10 (3) (f) 1.) (55.12 (10) (a)).][3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a firearm.

"Firearm" means a weapon which acts by the force of gunpowder.[4]

[It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.][5]

"Possess" means that the defendant knowingly[6] had actual physical control of a firearm.[7]

Deciding About Knowledge[8]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in their possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The defendant, [CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING].[9]

[before (date of offense), had been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult.[10]

(Name of act), if committed by an adult in this state, would be a felony.)]

[before (date of offense), had been found not guilty of a felony in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect.][11]

[before (date of offense), had been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness).[12]

(Name of felony) is a felony in Wisconsin.][13]

[had been committed for treatment under Wis. Stat. § 51.20 (13) (a) and was subject to an order not to possess a firearm under § 51.20 (13) (cv) 1. on (date of offense)][14]

[was subject to an order not to possess a firearm under § (51.20 (13) (cv) 1.) (51.45(13) (i) 1.) (54.10 (3) (f) 1.) (55.12 (10) (a)) on (date of offense)][15]

[The parties have agreed that [CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING], and you must accept this as conclusively proved.][16]

[before (date of offense), the defendant was adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult]

[before (date of offense), the defendant was found not guilty of a felony in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect]

[before (date of offense), the defendant was found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness)]

[on (date of offense), the defendant was committed for treatment under s. 51.20 (13) (a) and was subject to an order not to possess a firearm]

[on (date of offense), the defendant was subject to an order not to possess a firearm under § 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 51.45(13) (i) 1., 54.10 (3) (f) 1., or 55.12 (10) (a).]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1343D was approved by the Committee in August 2023.

Section 941.29 was revised by 2015 Wisconsin Act 109. The offense definition did not change but is now found in sub. (1m). In addition, Act 109 repealed former sub. (2) and created sub. (4m) to require a minimum sentence for cases involving persons with a prior record relating to a "violent felony" or a "violent misdemeanor." Those terms are defined in the new sub. (1g). [The effective date of Act 109 is November 13, 2015, but § 941.29(4m)(b) states: "This subsection does not apply to sentences imposed after July 1, 2020."]

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343 for violations § 941.29(1m) possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a felony.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343A for material to add to this instruction in cases where the narrow defense of privilege recognized in State v. Coleman, 206 Wis.2d 198, 556 N.W.2d 701 (1996) is raised.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343B for violations of § 941.29(4), furnishing a firearm to a felon.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1344 for violations of § 941.29(1m)(f) and (g), possession of a firearm by a person subject to an injunction.

The state has jurisdiction to enforce § 941.29 on tribal reservations. State v. Jacobs, 2007 WI App 155, 302 Wis.2d 675, 735 N.W.2d 535.

The right to bear arms amendment to the state constitution did not invalidate § 941.29. State v. Thomas, 2004 WI App 115, 274 Wis.2d 513, 683 N.W.2d 497. The statute is not unconstitutionally vague or overbroad, and it does not deny the equal protection of the laws. Id.

Wisconsin's possession of a firearm by a felon law is not unconstitutional as applied to a defendant convicted of a non-violent felony. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has held that prohibiting all felons from possessing firearms under § 941.29, even those convicted of non-violent offenses is substantially related to the important governmental objectives of public safety and the prevention of gun violence. State v. Roundtree, 2021 WI 1, 395 Wis.2d 94, 952 N.W.2d 765. Accordingly, § 941.29 is constitutional as applied to all felons, regardless of the nature or age of the underlying felony conviction. Id.

Section 2 of Chapter 141, Laws of 1981, is related to the applicability of the law. However, it was not printed in the statutes. It provided: "This act applies to persons regardless of the date the crime specified under § 941.29(1) of the statutes, as created by this act, is committed." However, for the statute to apply, the possession of the firearm would have had to occur after the statute's effective date, which was March 31, 1982.

Section 973.033, effective March 31, 1990, requires that whenever a defendant is sentenced for a felony, "the court shall inform the defendant of the requirements and penalties under s. 941.29." This does not add a requirement to a charge under § 941.29 that the required advice was given. State v. Phillips, 172 Wis.2d 391, 493 N.W.2d 238 (Ct. App. 1992). Phillips confirmed that the offense has two elements: being a convicted felon and possessing a firearm. 172 Wis.2d 391, 354.

In State v. Thiel, 188 Wis.2d 695, 524 N.W.2d 641 (1994), the court upheld the application of § 941.29 to a person whose felony conviction occurred in 1970, eleven years before § 941.29 was enacted. The court concluded that "the statute was not enacted with the intent to punish convicted felons and as such is not an ex post facto law as applied to [Thiel]." 188 Wis.2d 695, 697.

1. A trial judge has the authority to determine whether to include, exclude, or modify the title of an instruction when submitting it to the jury. The title of § 941.29 addresses "Possession of a firearm." However, this instruction only applies to individuals who are prohibited from possessing firearms because they were adjudicated delinquent or found not guilty of a felony by reason of mental illness or defect. The bracketed language "other circumstances" is optional and can be included to distinguish between those individuals restricted from firearm possession under § 941.29(1m)(bm) - (em) and other types of individuals who are also banned from possessing firearms, such as adult felons or persons subject to an injunction at the time of the offense.

2. The applicable term should be selected. The alternatives are those provided in sub. (1m)(bm) – (em) of § 941.29.

3. This instruction is drafted to address cases concerning the possession of a firearm by an individual falling under one of the categories provided in subs. 941.29(1m)(bm) through (em). [Subsection (1m)(em) was created by 2009 Wisconsin Act 258.] It is important to note that the statute extends to other categories of individuals as well. See § 941.29(1m)(a) through (g). For cases involving possession of a firearm by a person convicted of a felony, see Wis JI-Criminal 1343. That instruction is also suitable for use in cases involving subs. (1m)(a) and (b). For cases involving subs. (1m)(f) and (g), see Wis JI-Criminal 1344.

The statement of the elements in the instruction is a substantial shortening of the full statutory definition. Note that there are exceptions to the coverage of the statute in subsections (5) through (9) of § 941.29. The exception in subsection (5)(b) was added by 1985 Wisconsin Act 259. The cited provision, 18 U.S.C. § 925(c), allows the secretary of the treasury to grant relief from the disabilities relating to possession of firearms if the person's conviction did not involve a firearm offense and the secretary is satisfied "that the applicant will not be likely to act in a manner dangerous to public safety and that the granting of the relief will not be contrary to the public interest." However, § 925(c), and by extension (5)(b), no longer provide a functional mechanism for relief from the firearms disability imposed on felons in Wisconsin. This is because "since 1992, Congress has provided in each ATF appropriations bill that none of the appropriated funds are to be used to investigate or act upon applications for relief from federal firearms disabilities." Moran v. Wisconsin Department of Justice, 2019 WI App 206, ¶19, 388 Wis. 2d 193, 932 N.W.2d 430.

Subsection (5)(a) contains two prerequisites for lawful possession of a firearm by a felon: the individual must have received a pardon, and they must have been expressly authorized to possess a firearm under 18 U.S.C. app 1203. However, it is important to note that the latter requirement was repealed in 1986. Moran, 388 Wis. 2d 193, ¶17. Wisconsin law distinguishes between a pardon and a restoration of rights. A pardon alone will restore a felon's firearm rights. Id. ¶¶ 23-26. Where the removal of a felon's political disabilities imposed as a result of an out-of-state conviction restores the felon's right to possess a firearm in that state, a pardon is still required for the felon to possess firearms in Wisconsin. Moran v. Wisconsin Department of Justice, 2019 WI App 38, 388 Wis.2d 193, 932 N.W.2d 430.

An individual who has been adjudicated delinquent for a felony, as defined in Wis. Stat. § 941.29(1m)(bm), has the option to petition for the restoration of their firearm possession rights under Wis. Stat. § 941.29(8). That section provides the following:

> This section does not apply to any person specified in sub. (1m)(bm) if a court subsequently determines that the person is not likely to act in a manner dangerous to public safety. In any action or proceeding regarding this determination, the person has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she is not likely to act in a manner dangerous to public safety.

To initiate this process, individuals can make use of a specific court form called the "Petition for Removal of Firearm Restriction" (JD-1771).

4. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

5. Possession of a disassembled and inoperable firearm is a violation of § 941.29. The "term 'firearm' is appropriately defined as a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder to fire a projectile irrespective of whether it is inoperable due to disassembly." State v. Rardon, 185 Wis.2d 701, 706, 518 N.W.2d 330 (Ct. App. 1994), citing Wis JI-Criminal 1343 with approval. Also see State v. Johnson, 171 Wis.2d 175, 491 N.W.2d 110 (Ct. App. 1992), reaching a similar conclusion with respect to the definition of "shotgun" under § 941.28.

6. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

7. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. The first sentence should be given in all cases. The bracketed optional paragraphs are intended for use where the evidence shows that the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or that possession is shared with another.

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

In State v. Black, 2001 WI 31, 242 Wis.2d 126, 624 N.W.2d 363, the court suggested that "handling" a firearm was sufficient to satisfy the "possession" element. The court concluded that a criminal complaint alleging that the defendant handled a firearm provided a sufficient factual basis to support a guilty plea to violating § 941.29.

8. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 6, supra. The Committee concluded that subsections (1m)(bm) through (em) do not require proof that defendants know their enumerated status or know of the prohibition against possessing a firearm. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1).

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute. In the context of Wis. Stat. § 941.29(1m), the absence of intent word "knowingly" is particularly significant, indicating that proof of intent is not required. See also, State v. Phillips, 172 Wis.2d 391, 451 N.W.2d 238 (Ct. App. 1989), which concluded that the statute requiring sentencing courts to inform defendants convicted of felonies about the prohibition on firearm possession did not create an extra element for the crime of illegal firearm possession by a felon.

9. The applicable term should be selected. The alternatives are those provided in sub. (1m)(bm) – (em) of § 941.29.

10. The language in brackets is an abbreviated version of the complete statutory definition. See § 941.29(1m)(bm) for the complete language.

11. See § 941.29(1m)(c)

12. The language in brackets is an abbreviated version of the complete statutory definition. See § 941.29(1m)(d) for the complete language.

13. The statute applies to persons found not guilty of a felony in Wisconsin by reason of mental disease or defect and also persons found not guilty of or not responsible for a crime by reason of insanity or mental disease, defect, or illness in another state that would be a felony in Wisconsin.

In the Committee's judgment, the way the second element is phrased should be suitable for handling either alternative. Where the crime committed in another state has a name not used in Wisconsin, it may be helpful to add a sentence to the effect that the offense would have been a felony if committed in this state. The Committee concluded that the statutory elements of the crime of which the defendant was convicted in the other state should be compared with the statutory elements of the comparable Wisconsin offense. One must be able to say that those elements "would be a felony if committed in this state."

14. The language in brackets is an abbreviated version of the complete statutory definition. See § 941.29(1m)(e) for the complete language.

15. The language in brackets is an abbreviated version of the complete statutory definition. See § 941.29(1m)(em) for the complete language.

Compare § 941.29 with its federal counterpart, 18 USC 924(a)(2), which refers to one who "knowingly" violates the federal prohibition in 18 USC 922(g) on firearm possession. 18 USC 924(a)(2) was interpreted in Rehaif v. United States, 139 S.CT. 2191 [No. 17-9560, decided June 21, 2019] to require that the defendant knew he possessed a firearm and knew that he was an alien unlawfully in the country and thus prohibited from possessing a firearm under 18 USC 922(g). Because it is a decision interpreting a federal statute and is not constitutionally based, Rehaif has no direct application to § 941.29.

When an out-of-state criminal charge is based on a statute broader than its Wisconsin equivalent, courts should determine whether the underlying conduct resulting in the adjudication or finding of not guilty due to mental disease or defect would qualify as a felony under Wisconsin law. If it would, the out-of-state criminal conduct can be the basis for the application of § 941.29. State v. Campbell, 2002 WI App 20, 250 Wis.2d 238, ¶¶7-6, 642 N.W.2d 230.

16. Defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of their adjudication status. The bracketed statement in the instruction includes the standard statement on the effect of a stipulation found in Wis JI-Criminal 162, AGREED FACTS.

There is authority recognizing that defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of a prior felony conviction when the charge is possession of a firearm by a felon under § 941.29(1m)(a). The effect of a stipulation in a prosecution for violating § 941.29(1m)(a) has been described as follows:

> . . . where prior conviction of a felony is an element of the offense with which the defendant is charged and the defendant is willing to stipulate that he or she is a convicted felon, evidence of the nature of the felony is irrelevant if offered solely to establish the felony-conviction element of the offense. The trial court therefore abused its discretion in allowing the prosecutor to inform the jury as to the nature of McAllister's crime.

State v. McAllister, 153 Wis.2d 523, 525, 451 N.W.2d 764 (Ct. App. 1989).

The fact of felon status may still be revealed; it is the nature of the felony that is not to be disclosed. State v. Nicholson, 160 Wis.2d 803, 804, 467 N.W.2d 139 (Ct. App. 1991).

The same concerns may lead to offers to stipulate to the fact of a prior adjudication addressed by this instruction. Care must be taken where a stipulation goes to an element of a crime. A waiver should be obtained. See Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations.

An example of a complete waiver inquiry is as follows:

TO THE DEFENDANT:

1. Do you understand that one of the elements of the crime of possession of a firearm by a person (adjudicated delinquent) (found not guilty of a felony in Wisconsin by reason of mental disease or defect) (subject to an order not to possess a firearm) is that you (have been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be considered a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult) (have been found not guilty of a felony charge in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect) (have been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be considered a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness)) (have been committed for treatment and were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) (were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) before the date of this offense?

2. Do you understand that you have the right to have a jury, that is, twelve people, decide whether or not the State has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that you (have been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be considered a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult) (have been found not guilty of a felony charge in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect) (have been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be considered a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness)) (have been committed for treatment and were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) (were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) before the date of offense?

3. Do you understand that the State has to convince each member of the jury that you (have been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be considered a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult) (have been found not guilty of a felony charge in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect) (have been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be considered a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness)) (have been committed for treatment and were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) (were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) before the date of offense?

4. With this stipulation, you are agreeing that I tell the jury that you (have been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be considered a felony in Wisconsin if committed by an adult) (have been found not guilty of a felony charge in Wisconsin due to mental disease or defect) (have been found (not guilty of) (not responsible for) a crime elsewhere, which would be considered a felony in Wisconsin, due to (insanity) (mental disease, defect, or illness)) (have been committed for treatment and were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) (were subject to an order not to possess a firearm) before the date of offense, and that they are to accept this fact as conclusively proved?

5. Has your attorney explained the pros and cons, that is, the advantages and disadvantages of entering into this agreement?

6. Have you had enough time to talk all of this over with your attorney?

7. Has anyone pressured you or threatened you in any way or made any promises to you to get you to enter into this agreement?

8. Are you entering into this agreement of your own free will?

9. Have you had enough time to make your decision?

TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

1. Are you satisfied that your client thoroughly understands their right to enter into this agreement regarding their (prior adjudication for an act considered a felony) (prior finding of not guilty of a felony charge due to mental disease or defect) (previously being subjected to an order that prohibits firearm possession) or to not enter into this agreement?

2. Are you satisfied that your client is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly?

FINDING: The court is also satisfied that the defendant is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly. The court, therefore, accepts the stipulation.

Also see State v. Aldazabal, 146 Wis.2d 267, 430 N.W.2d 614 (Ct. App. 1988), where the defendant, charged with violating § 941.29, stipulated that he had been convicted of a felony. The stipulation was not formally admitted into evidence, but the court of appeals held that the mentioning of the stipulation during the prosecutor's opening statement was sufficient to support the conviction.

1344 POSSESSION OF A FIREARM [BY A PERSON SUBJECT TO AN INJUNCTION][1] — § 941.29(1m)(f) or (g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.29 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses a firearm if that person is subject to (an injunction issued under (§ 813.12) (§ 813.122)) (a tribal injunction) (an order not to possess a firearm issued under (§ 813.123(5m)) (§ 813.125(4m)).[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a firearm.

   A firearm is a weapon which acts by the force of gunpowder.[3]

   [It is not necessary that the firearm was loaded or capable of being fired.][4]

   "Possess" means that the defendant knowingly[5] had actual physical control of a firearm.

Deciding About Knowledge[6]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[7]

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his or her possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The defendant was subject to (an injunction issued under (§ 813.12) (§ 813.122)) (a tribal injunction) (an order not to possess a firearm issued under (§ 813.123(5m)) (§ 813.125(4m)) before (date of offense).[8]

An injunction is a court order prohibiting specified conduct.[9]

[The parties have agreed that an injunction was issued to the defendant under subsection ((§ 813.12) (§ 813.122)) (a tribal injunction) (an order not to possess a firearm issued under (§ 813.123(5m)) (§ 813.125(4m)) before (date of offense) and you must accept this as conclusively proved.][10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1344 was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2008, 2015, and 2018. The 2018 revision made changes in the comment and non-substantive changes in the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

Section 941.29 was revised by 2015 Wisconsin Act 109. The offense definition did not change but is now found in sub. (1m); the instruction was revised in 2016 to reflect that change. In addition, Act 109 repealed former sub. (2) and created sub. (4m) to require a minimum sentence for cases involving persons with a prior record relating to a "violent felony" or a "violent misdemeanor." Those terms are defined in sub. (1g). [The effective date of Act 109 is November 13, 2015; but § 941.29(4m)(b) states: "This subsection does not apply to sentences imposed after July 1, 2020."]

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.29(1m)(f) or (g) – by a person subject to an injunction. It is modeled after Wis JI-Criminal 1343, Possession of a Firearm, defined by § 941.29(1m)(a).

See Wis JI-Criminal 1343D for violations of § 941.29(1m)(bm) through (em), possession of a firearm by a person who has been adjudicated delinquent for an act that would be a felony if committed by an adult in the state, found not guilty of a felony due to mental disease or defect, found not guilty or not responsible for a felony in another jurisdiction due to insanity or mental disease, defect, or illness, committed for treatment under s. 51.20 (13) (a) and ordered not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 2007 stats., or who has been ordered not to possess a firearm under s. 51.20 (13) (cv) 1., 51.45 (13) (i) 1., 54.10 (3) (f) 1., or 55.12 (10) (a).

Section 941.29(4)(f) applies to persons enjoined under § 813.12 (domestic abuse) and § 813.122 (child abuse) and to an injunction or order "issued by a tribal court under a tribal domestic abuse ordinance adopted in conformity with this section." § 813.12(1)(e). The tribal injunction must include notice that the respondent is subject to the requirements and penalties of § 941.29. Section 941.29(4)(g) applies to persons ordered not to possess a firearm under § 813.123(5m) (vulnerable adult injunctions) or § 813.125(4m) (harassment injunctions). Those statutes require specific findings to support the firearm prohibition.

Note that there are several exceptions set forth in subsections (5) through (10) of § 941.29. See note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1343, Possession Of A Firearm.

1. A trial judge has the authority to determine whether to include, exclude, or modify the title of an instruction when submitting it to the jury. The title of § 941.29 addresses "Possession of a firearm." However, this instruction only applies to individuals who are prohibited from possessing firearms because they were subject to an injunction on the date of the offense. The bracketed language "by a person subject to an injunction" is optional and can be included to distinguish between those individuals restricted from firearm possession under § 941.29(1m)(f) or (g) and other types of individuals who are also banned from possessing firearms, such as those who have been adjudicated delinquent, found not guilty of a felony by reason of mental illness or defect, or are adult felons.

2. Here, select the number of the statute under which the injunction or order was issued. All injunctions issued under §§ 813.12 and 812.122 include a prohibition against possession of a firearm. A tribal injunction that satisfies § 813.12(1(e) is covered if it "includes notice to the respondent that he or she is subject to the requirements and penalties under this section and that has been filed under s. 813.128(3g)." § 941.29(1m)(f). Injunctions under §§ 813.123 and § 813.125 may include an order prohibiting firearm possession if a specific finding is made by the court. See § 813.123(5m) and § 813.125(4m).

3. The term "firearm" is considered to mean a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder. See, for example, Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892). This definition excludes air guns. See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1305.

4. Volume V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 83 (February 1953).

Possession of a disassembled and inoperable firearm is a violation of § 941.29. The "term 'firearm' is appropriately defined as a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder to fire a projectile irrespective of whether it is inoperable due to disassembly." State v. Rardon, 185 Wis.2d 701, 706, 518 N.W.2d 330 (Ct. App. 1994), citing Wis JI-Criminal 1343 with approval. Also see State v. Johnson, 171 Wis.2d 175, 491 N.W.2d 110 (Ct. App. 1992), reaching a similar conclusion with respect to the definition of "shotgun" under § 941.28.

5. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

6. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 5, supra. The Committee concluded that subsections (1m)(f) and (g) do not require proof that defendants know they were subject to an injunction or order or know of the prohibition against possessing a firearm. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1)

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

7. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

In State v. Black, 2001 WI 31, 242 Wis.2d 126, 624 N.W.2d 363, the court suggested that "handling" a firearm was sufficient to satisfy the "possession" element. The court concluded that a criminal complaint alleging that the defendant handled a firearm provided a sufficient factual basis to support a guilty plea to violating § 941.29.

8. Compare § 941.29 with its federal counterpart, 18 USC 924(a)(2), which refers to one who "knowingly" violates the federal prohibition in 18 USC 922(g) on firearm possession. 18 USC 924(a)(2) was interpreted in Rehaif v. United States, 139 S.CT. 2191 [No. 17-9560, decided June 21, 2019] to require that the defendant knew he possessed a firearm and knew that he was an alien unlawfully in the country and thus prohibited from possessing a firearm under 18 USC 922(g). Because it is a decision interpreting a federal statute and is not constitutionally based, Rehaif has no direct application to § 941.29.

Section 941.29(1m)(f) provides the following:

> The person is subject to an injunction issued under s. 813.12 or 813.122 or under a tribal injunction, as defined in s. 813.12 (1) (e), issued by a court established by any federally recognized Wisconsin Indian tribe or band, except the Menominee Indian tribe of Wisconsin, that includes notice to the respondent that he or she is subject to the requirements and penalties under this section and that has been filed under s. 813.128 (3g). [Emphasis added.]

Based on the language of this subsection, the Committee believes that the notice provision is exclusively applicable to tribal injunctions. Circuit court orders under sections 813.12 and 813.122 have explicit notice requirements concerning section 941.29. Conversely, tribal injunctions may not have the same requirement. Given that a tribal injunction must fulfill certain criteria, such as originating from a federally recognized Wisconsin tribe (excluding Menominee), containing notice regarding the requirements and penalties outlined in section 941.29, and being filed in the circuit court, it is logical to ensure that a respondent receives actual notice regarding the requirements and penalties specified in § 941.29(1m)(f) for a tribal injunction. This interpretation aligns with the original enactment of this provision in 1995 and subsequent amendments over the years. It has consistently been the case that the later provisions, including the notice requirement, have always been applicable to tribal injunctions.

9. This is the definition of "injunction" used in Wis JI-Criminal 2040.

10. Defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of an injunction having been issued under § 813.12 or § 813.122 or under a tribal injunction, as defined in § 813.12 (1) (e). The bracketed statement in the instruction includes the standard statement on the effect of a stipulation found in Wis JI-Criminal 162, AGREED FACTS.

There is authority recognizing that defendants may offer to stipulate to the fact of a prior felony conviction when the charge is possession of a firearm by a felon under § 941.29(1m)(a). The effect of a stipulation in a prosecution for violating § 941.29(1m)(a) has been described as follows:

> . . . where prior conviction of a felony is an element of the offense with which the defendant is charged and the defendant is willing to stipulate that he or she is a convicted felon, evidence of the nature of the felony is irrelevant if offered solely to establish the felony-conviction element of the offense. The trial court therefore abused its discretion in allowing the prosecutor to inform the jury as to the nature of McAllister's crime.

State v. McAllister, 153 Wis.2d 523, 525, 451 N.W.2d 764 (Ct. App. 1989).

The same concerns may lead to offers to stipulate to the fact of an injunction having been issued under the subsection addressed by this instruction. Care must be taken where a stipulation goes to an element of a crime. A waiver should be obtained. See Wis JI-Criminal 162A Law Note: Stipulations.

An example of a complete waiver inquiry is as follows:

TO THE DEFENDANT:

1. Do you understand that one of the elements of the crime of possession of a firearm by a person subject to an injunction is that an injunction was issued to you under subsection ((§ 813.12) (§ 813.122)) (a tribal injunction) (an order not to possess a firearm issued under (§ 813.123(5m)) (§ 813.125(4m)) before the date of this offense?

2. Do you understand that you have the right to have a jury, that is, twelve people, decide whether or not the state has proved beyond a reasonable doubt that an injunction issued to you before the date of this offense?

3. Do you understand that the State has to convince each member of the jury that an injunction was issued to you before the date of this offense?

4. Do you understand that with this stipulation, you are agreeing that I tell the jury that an injunction under ((§ 813.12) (§ 813.122)) (a tribal injunction) (an order not to possess a firearm issued under (§ 813.123(5m)) (§ 813.125(4m)) was issued to you before the date of this offense, and that they are to accept this fact as conclusively proved?

5. Has your attorney explained the pros and cons, that is, the advantages and disadvantages of entering into this agreement?

6. Have you had enough time to talk all of this over with your attorney?

7. Has anyone pressured you or threatened you in any way, or made any promises to you, to get you to enter into this agreement?

8. Are you entering into this agreement of your own free will?

9. Have you had enough time to make your decision?

TO DEFENSE COUNSEL:

1. Are you satisfied that your client thoroughly understands (his) (her) right to enter into this agreement regarding an injunction being issued to (him) (her) before the date of this offense or to not enter into this agreement?

2. Are you satisfied that your client is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly?

FINDING: The court is also satisfied that the defendant is entering into this agreement freely, voluntarily, intelligently, and knowingly. The court, therefore, accepts the stipulation.

Also see State v. Aldazabal, 146 Wis.2d 267, 430 N.W.2d 614 (Ct. App. 1988), where the defendant, charged with violating § 941.29, stipulated that he had been convicted of a felony. The stipulation was not formally admitted into evidence, but the court of appeals held that the mentioning of the stipulation during the prosecutor's opening statement was sufficient to support the conviction.

1344A POSSESSION OF AN ELECTRIC WEAPON — § 941.295

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.295 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses an electric weapon.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a device.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control of a device.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge[4]

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

2. The device was an electric weapon.

An electric weapon is any device that is designed, redesigned, used or intended to be used, offensively or defensively, to immobilize or incapacitate persons by the use of electric current.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published in 2010 and revised in 2011. The 2011 revision updated the Comment to reflect changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it incorporated a paragraph about "Deciding About Knowledge" and added to the comment.

Note that there are several exceptions set forth in subsection (2) of § 941.295. In the Committee's judgment, statutory exceptions are best handled as follows. The question of whether an exception applies is not an issue in the case until there is some evidence of that fact. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the exception is not present. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981).

A second set of exceptions was created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 35:

> (2g) The prohibition in sub. (1m) on possessing or going armed with an electric weapon does not apply to any of the following:
> (a) A licensee or an out-of-state licensee.
> (b) An individual who goes armed with an electric weapon in his or her own dwelling or place of business or on land that he or she owns, leases, or legally occupies.

Section 941.295(1c)(b) provides that "'licensee' has the meaning given in s. 175.60(1)(d)," which is: ". . . an individual holding a valid license to carry a concealed weapon issued under this section." Section 941.295(1c)(c) provides that "out-of-state licensee" has the meaning given in s. 175.60(1)(g).

1. Section 941.295(1m) applies to "whoever sells, transports, manufactures, possesses, or goes armed with any electric weapon." The instruction is drafted for a case involving "possession" because that appeared to the Committee to be the most likely charge and because "possess" is the most inclusive term.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927), Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). The Committee concluded that knowledge of the characteristics that make the weapon an electric weapon is not required. For an analogous situation, see Wis JI-Criminal 1341A, Possession Of

A Machine Gun, note 2.

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

4. The knowledge requirement described here relates to the knowledge inherent in the concept of possession. See note 2, supra. The Committee concluded that sec. 941.295 does not require proof that defendants know of the prohibition against possessing an electric weapon. This conclusion is based on sec. 939.23(1)

This conclusion is based on Section 939.23(1), which states, "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chapters 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally,' the phrase 'with intent to,' the phrase 'with intent that,' or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe.'" Therefore, the Committee determined that proof of intent is not mandated unless one of these terms is present within the statute.

5. This is the definition provided in § 941.295(1c)(a).

1345 FIRST DEGREE RECKLESSLY ENDANGERING SAFETY — § 941.30(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

First degree recklessly endangering safety, as defined in § 941.30(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly endangers the safety of another human being under circumstances that show utter disregard for human life.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of first degree recklessly endangering safety, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant endangered the safety of another human being.

2. The defendant endangered the safety of another by criminally reckless conduct.

"Criminally reckless conduct" means:[1]

- the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm to another person; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant was aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.[2]

"Great bodily harm" means injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury.[3]

3. The circumstances of the defendant's conduct showed utter disregard[4] for human life.

In determining whether the circumstances of the conduct showed utter disregard for human life, consider these factors: what the defendant was doing; why the defendant was engaged in that conduct; how dangerous the conduct was; how obvious the danger was; whether the conduct showed any regard for life; and, all other facts and circumstances relating to the conduct.[5]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENDANT'S AFTER-THE-FACT CONDUCT HAS BEEN ADMITTED.[6]

[Consider also the defendant's conduct after the act alleged to have endangered safety to the extent that it helps you decide whether or not the circumstances showed utter disregard for human life at the time the act alleged to have endangered safety occurred.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense were present, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1345 was originally published in 1962 and revised in 1989, 1993, 2002, 2003, 2009, 2012, and 2015. The 2012 revision added the material at footnote 6. The 2015 revision revised footnote 2 to reflect 2013 Wisconsin Act 307. The Comment was updated in April 2019. A "Reporter's Note" was removed in 2020.

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.30(1), as amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The amended statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989. For a brief overview of the homicide revision, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI-Criminal 1000. A comprehensive outline and discussion of the changes can be found in "The Importance of Clarity in the Law of Homicide: The Wisconsin Revision," by Walter Dickey, David Schultz, and James L. Fullin, Jr., 1989 Wisconsin Law Review 1325.

First degree recklessly endangering safety replaces what was called "endangering safety by conduct regardless of life" under prior law.

The homicide revision also created § 941.30(2), Second Degree Recklessly Endangering Safety. See Wis JI-Criminal 1347.

In State v. Kloss, 2019 WI App 13, 386 Wis.2d 314, 925 N.W.2d 563, the court of appeals held that solicitation of first-degree recklessly endangering safety is a crime and that it is a lesser included offense of solicitation of first-degree reckless injury. Therefore convicting the defendant of both offenses was multiplicitous.

1. "Criminal recklessness" is defined as follows in § 939.24(1):

> . . . 'criminal recklessness' means that the actor creates an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being and the actor is aware of that risk.

The Judicial Council Note to § 939.24, 1987 Senate Bill 191, explains that "[r]ecklessness requires both the creation of an objectively unreasonable and substantial risk of human death or great bodily harm and the actor's subjective awareness of that risk."

2. The statutory definition of "recklessness" clarifies that subjective awareness of the risk is required. That raises the possibility that intoxication could, as a factual matter, negate awareness of the risk. For that reason, the original definition of recklessness provided that if voluntary intoxication prevented the actor from being aware of the risk, it was not a defense. This rule was set forth in § 939.24(3):

> (3) A voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness if, had the actor not been in that condition, he or she would have been aware of creating an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being.

The Judicial Council Note to subsection (3) explains it as follows:

> Subsection (3) continues the present rule that a voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness. Ameen v. State, 51 Wis.2d 175, 185, 186 N.W.2d 206 (1971). Patterned on s. 2.08 of the model penal code, it premises liability on whether the actor would have been aware if not in such condition of the risk of death or great bodily harm. The commentaries to s. 2.08, model penal code, state the rationale of this rule in extended fashion.

Note to § 939.24(3), 1987 Senate Bill 191.

Section 939.42, the statute codifying both voluntary and involuntary intoxication defenses, was revised by 2013 Wisconsin Act 307 [effective date: April 18, 2014]. Reference to voluntary intoxication was eliminated; as amended, the statute refers only to involuntary intoxication. Act 307 also repealed former sub. (3) of § 939.24, thus getting rid of the special rule excluding voluntary intoxication as a defense to the "aware of the risk" element. For cases arising before the effective date of Act 307, the suggestion included in the previous version of this Comment would still apply: "In a case where there is evidence of intoxication, it may be helpful to advise the jury of the rule provided in subsection (3). The Committee concluded that simply reading the statute is the best way to provide the necessary information.

3. See § 939.22(14) and Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

4. The statutory definition of "recklessness" clarifies that subjective awareness of the risk is required. However, if voluntary intoxication prevents the actor from being aware of the risk, such intoxication is not a defense. Section 939.24(3) provides:

> (3) A voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness if, had the actor not been in that condition, he or she would have been aware of creating an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being.

The Judicial Council Note to subsection (3) explains it as follows:

> Subsection (3) continues the present rule that a voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness. Ameen v. State, 51 Wis.2d 175, 185, 186 N.W.2d 206 (1971). Patterned on s. 2.08 of the model penal code, it premises liability on whether the actor would have been aware if not in such condition of the risk of death or great bodily harm. The commentaries to s. 2.08, model penal code, state the rationale of this rule in extended fashion.
> Note to § 939.24(3), 1987 Senate Bill 191.

In a case where there is evidence of intoxication, it may be helpful to advise the jury of the rule provided in subsection (3). The Committee concluded that simply reading the statute is the best way to provide the necessary information.

5. "Under circumstances which show utter disregard for human life" is the factor that distinguishes this offense from second degree reckless homicide. The Judicial Council Note to § 940.02 provides that it is intended to reflect the substance of case law defining "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life":

> First-degree reckless homicide is analogous to the prior offense of 2nd-degree murder. The concept of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life" has been a difficult one for modern juries to comprehend. To avoid the mistaken connotation that a clinical mental disorder is involved, the offense has been recodified as aggravated reckless homicide. The revision clarifies that a subjective mental state, i.e., criminal recklessness, > is required for liability. See s. 939.24, stats. The aggravating element, i.e., circumstances which show utter disregard for human life, is intended to codify judicial interpretations of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life." State v. Dolan, 44 Wis.2d 68, 170 N.W.2d 822 (1969); State v. Weso, 60 Wis.2d 404, 210 N.W.2d 442 (1973).

> Note to § 940.02, 1987 Senate Bill 191.

The Dolan and Weso cases do not contain significant definitions themselves but rather cite with approval Wis JI-Criminal 1345 (© 1962), which used the phrase "utter lack of concern for the life and safety of another."

The Committee concluded that no further definition of the phrase "utter disregard" was necessary. The jury should be able to give the phrase a common sense meaning in determining whether the conduct is such that it amounts to aggravated reckless homicide offense.

A phrase with essentially the same meaning is used in the Model Penal Code. Section 2.02(1)(b) provides that criminal homicide constitutes murder when it is "committed recklessly under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to the value of human life." The Commentary to § 2.02(1)(b) explains that whether conduct demonstrates "extreme indifference" "is not a question . . . that can be further clarified." Attempts to explain the term by reference to common law concepts, says the Commentary, suffer from lack of clarity, and "extreme indifference" is simpler and more direct than other attempts to reformulate the common law.

The Judicial Council Committee considered the Model Penal Code formulation but opted for "utter disregard," apparently on the grounds that it would more clearly tie in with prior case law which could be referred to for examples of the kind of conduct that is intended to be covered by first degree reckless homicide under the revised statutes.

For discussions of "conduct evincing a depraved mind, regardless of human life" under prior law, see, e.g., Balistreri v. State, 83 Wis.2d 440, 265 N.W.2d 290 (1978); Wagner v. State, 76 Wis.2d 30, 250 N.W.2d 331 (1977); and, Seidler v. State, 64 Wis.2d 456, 219 N.W.2d 320 (1974). In State v. Geske, 2012 WI App 15, 339 Wis.2d 170, 810 N.W.2d 226, the defendant, convicted of first degree reckless homicide, challenged the sufficiency of the evidence on the "utter disregard" element. Relying on the Wagner and Balistreri cases, she argued that her swerve just before the collision showed some regard for human life. The court held that the evidence of the swerve had to be considered in the context of all the circumstances: "A legally intoxicated person driving over eighty miles per hour through the city could not reasonably expect to avoid any collision by swerving at the last moment. Given the totality of the situation here, Geske's ineffectual swerve failed to demonstrate a regard for human life." ¶18.

The meaning of "utter disregard for human life" was discussed in State v. Jensen, 2000 WI 84, 236 Wis.2d 521, 613 N.W.2d 170. The court relied on Weso, supra, to conclude that the phrase identifies an objective standard. The court noted:

> Although "utter disregard for human life" clearly has something to do with mental state, it is not a sub-part of the intent element of this crime, and, as such, need not be subjectively proven. It can be (and often is) proven by evidence relating to the defendant's subjective state of mind-by the defendant's statements, for example, before, during and after the crime. But it can also be established by evidence of heightened risk, because of special vulnerabilities of the > victim, for example, or evidence of a particularly obvious, potentially lethal danger. However it is proven, the element of utter disregard for human life is measured objectively, on the basis of what a reasonable person in the defendant's position would have known. ¶17.

The Committee considered changing the instruction in response to Jensen, but concluded that the text accurately conveys a standard consistent with the decision. Jensen concluded that the standard could be understood and applied "without categorical rules being laid down by appellate courts on sufficiency of the evidence challenges." ¶29. The Committee concluded that the instruction could also be properly applied without attempting to articulate "categorical rules."

Also see, State v. Edmunds, 229 Wis.2d 67, 598 N.W.2d 290 (Ct. App. 1999), which, like Jensen, reviewed the application of the "utter disregard . . ." standard to a "shaken baby" case.

All the circumstances relating to the defendant's conduct should be considered in determining whether that conduct shows "utter disregard" for human life. These circumstances would include facts relating to the possible provocation of the defendant:

> Under prior law, adequate provocation mitigated 2nd-degree murder to manslaughter. State v. Hoyt, 21 Wis.2d 284, 124 N.W.2d 47 (1965). Under this revision, the analogs of those crimes, i.e., first-degree reckless and 2nd-degree intentional homicide, carry the same penalty; thus mitigation is impossible. Evidence of provocation will usually be admissible in prosecutions for crimes requiring criminal recklessness, however, as relevant to the reasonableness of the risk (and, in prosecutions under this section, whether the circumstances show utter disregard for human life). Since provocation is integrated into the calculus of recklessness, it is not an affirmative defense thereto and the burdens of production and persuasion stated in s. 940.01(3), stats., are inapplicable.
> Judicial Council Note to § 940.02, 1987 Senate Bill 191.

6. This material was added in 2011 in response to the decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court in State v. Burris, 2011 WI 32, 333 Wis.2d 87, 797 N.W.2d 430. The decision reversed a decision of the court of appeals which had reversed Burris' conviction for 1st degree reckless injury. The court of appeals reversed because the trial court's response to a jury question about whether after-the-incident conduct should be considered in evaluating whether "the circumstances show utter disregard for human life" was potentially misleading. The supreme court held:

> ¶7 We conclude that, in an utter disregard analysis, a defendant's conduct is not, as a matter of law, assigned more or less weight whether the conduct occurred before, during, or after the crime. We hold that, when evaluating whether a defendant acted with utter disregard for human life, a fact-finder should consider any relevant evidence in regard to the totality of the circumstances.

The court also held, that under the facts of the Burris case, "the supplemental instruction did not mislead the jury into believing that it could not consider Burris's relevant after-the-fact conduct in its determination on utter disregard for human life." ¶8.

The court recommended that the Committee address this issue in the jury instructions:

> ¶64 . . . [S]upplemental instructions such as the one given here, taken out of context from Jensen, do have the potential to be confusing. Thus, we recommend that the Criminal Jury Instruction Committee, in its comments to the "first-degree reckless" offense instructions, Wis JI-Criminal 1016-22, 1250, and the utter disregard for human life instruction, Wis

JI-Criminal 924A, advise against taking certain language directly from utter disregard cases such as Jensen without providing the necessary context to fully explain the proper inquiry. Additionally, we recommend that the Committee consider revising these instructions to more explicitly direct the jury that, in its utter disregard for human life consideration, it should consider the totality of the circumstances including any relevant evidence regarding a defendant's conduct before, during, and after the crime.

The addition to the instruction referring to after-the-fact conduct is intended to address the court's suggestions. The committee decided it was not necessary to include a reference to conduct before or during the act because the paragraph immediately preceding the addition calls the jury's attention to "what the defendant was doing" and "all the other facts and circumstances relating to the conduct." Juries will rarely have questions about the relevance of conduct before and during the act but they may have questions about the after-fact-conduct, as the jury in the Burris case did.

1347 SECOND DEGREE RECKLESSLY ENDANGERING SAFETY — § 941.30(2)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Second degree recklessly endangering safety, as defined in § 941.30(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who recklessly endangers the safety of another human being.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of second degree recklessly endangering safety, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant endangered the safety of another human being.

2. The defendant endangered the safety of another by criminally reckless conduct.

"Criminally reckless conduct" means:[2]

- the conduct created a risk of death or great bodily harm to another person; and
- the risk of death or great bodily harm was unreasonable and substantial; and
- the defendant was aware that (his) (her) conduct created the unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm.[3]

"Great bodily harm" means serious bodily injury.[4] [Injury which creates a substantial risk of death, or which causes serious permanent disfigurement, or which causes a permanent or protracted loss or impairment of the function of any bodily member or organ, or other serious bodily injury is great bodily harm.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense were present, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1347 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1993 and 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2015; it revised footnote 3 to reflect 2013 Wisconsin Act 307.

This instruction is for a violation of § 941.30(2), created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 as part of the revision of the homicide statutes. The amended statute applies to offenses committed on or after January 1, 1989. For a brief overview of the homicide revision generally, see the Introductory Comment at Wis JI-Criminal 1000. A comprehensive outline and discussion of the changes can be found in "The Importance of Clarity in the Law of Homicide: The Wisconsin Revision," by Walter Dickey, David Schultz, and James L. Fullin, Jr., 1989 Wisconsin Law Review 1325.

1. This offense was created by the 1989 homicide revision.

2. "Criminal recklessness" is defined as follows in § 939.24(1):

> . . . 'criminal recklessness' means that the actor creates an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being and the actor is aware of that risk.

The Judicial Council Note to § 939.24, 1987 Senate Bill 191, explains that "[r]ecklessness requires both the creation of an objectively unreasonable and substantial risk of human death or great bodily harm and the actor's subjective awareness of that risk."

3. The statutory definition of "recklessness" clarifies that subjective awareness of the risk is required. That raises the possibility that intoxication could, as a factual matter, negate awareness of the risk. For that reason, the original definition of recklessness provided that if voluntary intoxication prevented the actor from being aware of the risk, it was not a defense. This rule was set forth in § 939.24(3):

> (3) A voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness if, had the actor not been in that condition, he or she would have been aware of creating an unreasonable and substantial risk of death or great bodily harm to another human being.

The Judicial Council Note to subsection (3) explains it as follows:

> Subsection (3) continues the present rule that a voluntarily produced intoxicated or drugged condition is not a defense to liability for criminal recklessness. Ameen v. State, 51 Wis.2d 175, 185, 186 N.W.2d 206 (1971). Patterned on s. 2.08 of the model penal code, it premises liability on whether the actor would have been aware if not in such condition of the risk of death or great bodily harm. The commentaries to s. 2.08, model penal code, state the rationale of this rule in extended fashion.

Note to § 939.24(3), 1987 Senate Bill 191.

Section 939.42, the statute codifying both voluntary and involuntary intoxication defenses, was revised by 2013 Wisconsin Act 307 [effective date: April 18, 2014]. Reference to voluntary intoxication was eliminated; as amended, the statute refers only to involuntary intoxication. Act 307 also repealed former sub. (3) of § 939.24, thus getting rid of the special rule excluding voluntary intoxication as a defense to the "aware of the risk" element. For cases arising before the effective date of Act 307, the suggestion included in the previous version of this Comment would still apply: "In a case where there is evidence of intoxication, it may be helpful to advise the jury of the rule provided in subsection (3). The Committee concluded that simply reading the statute is the best way to provide the necessary information.

4. The Committee has concluded that defining great bodily harm as "serious bodily injury" is sufficient in most cases. The material in brackets is the remainder of the definition found in § 939.22(14) and should be used as needed. The definition was changed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 399 to substitute "substantial risk" for "high probability" in the phrase "substantial risk of death." See Wis JI-Criminal 914.

Whether or not an injury suffered amounts to "great bodily harm" is an issue of fact for the jury to resolve. See Flores v. State, 76 Wis.2d 50, 250 N.W.2d 227 720 (1976).

1350 POSSESSION OF EXPLOSIVES FOR AN UNLAWFUL PURPOSE — § 941.31(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of explosives for unlawful purpose, as defined in § 941.31(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who possesses[1] any explosive compound with intent to use the explosive to commit a crime.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed any explosive compound.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[3] had actual physical control[4] of the explosive compound.[5]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[6]

   [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

   [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The defendant possessed an explosive compound with the intent[7] to use the explosive to commit a crime.[8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1350 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1980, 1987, 1988, 1995, and 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for violations of subsection (1) of § 941.31, which are punishable as Class F felonies. The statute was amended by 1987 Wisconsin Act 234, effective date: April 21, 1988, by adding subsection (2) which makes it a Class H felony if a person "makes, buys, sells, transports, possesses, uses or transfers any improvised explosive device, or possesses materials or components with intent to assemble any improvised explosive device." Section 941.31(2)(b). Wis JI-Criminal 1351A and 1351B are drafted for violations of sub. (2).

1. The instruction is drafted for a violation of the statute involving "possession." The statute also applies to one who "makes, buys, transports, or transfers, or offers to do the same." If one of the other alternatives is involved, the instruction must be modified (though most necessarily will involve possession).

Section 939.22(40) defines "transfer" as follows: "Transfer means any transaction involving a change in possession of any property or a change of right, title, or interest to or in any property."

2. The statute provides an alternative to possession with intent to commit a crime: "knowing that another intends to use it to commit a crime." If this alternative is used, the instruction must be modified. See note 6 below.

3. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

4. The definition of "possession" is based on the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. That instruction also includes optional explanations for cases when an object is arguably under the defendant's control but not in his or her physical possession:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

5. In State v. Brulport, 202 Wis.2d 506, 551W.2d 824 (Ct. App. 1996), the court approved the use of Wisconsin Administrative Code definitions of "explosive compound" and "explosion" in a case involving a violation of § 941.31(1):

> "Explosive compound" means any chemical compound, mixture or device, the primary of common purpose of which is to function by explosion. [§ ILHR 7.04(18)]
> "Explosion" means the substantially instantaneous release of both gas and heat. [§ ILHR 7.04(18)]

Brulport argued on appeal that a plastic soda bottle containing aluminum foil and drain cleaner did not qualify as an "explosive compound" under § 941.31. The evidence showed that the combination of the ingredients produces a hydrogen gas which gradually, heats, expands and ultimately explodes. The court of appeals noted that "explosive compound" and "explosion" were not defined in the statutes and adopted definitions from the Wis. Administrative Code, Chapter ILHR 7. Applying these definitions, the court found that the devices in question qualified as an "explosive compound." The fact that a detonating or ignition mechanism is not required to trigger the explosion of these devices is not relevant; the definitions are satisfied if a "chemical compound, mixture or device" is present.

6. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

7. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A for a discussion of various issues relating to definition of "with intent to." "Knowing that another intends to use it to commit a crime" is an alternative mental element for this offense. The following may be a helpful explanation:

> "With the knowledge that another intended to use the explosive to commit a crime" means that the defendant believed another intended to so use the explosives. With respect to the defendant's knowledge, you cannot look into a person's mind to determine knowledge or belief. Knowledge or belief must be found, if found at all, from acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all of the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge or belief. To "know" that another intended to commit a crime requires merely that the defendant so believed.

8. A crime is conduct which is prohibited by state law and punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Conduct punishable only by a forfeiture is not a crime. Section 939.12.

1351A POSSESSION OF AN IMPROVISED EXPLOSIVE DEVICE — § 941.31(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of an improvised explosive device, as defined in § 941.31(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who possesses[1] any improvised explosive device.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a device.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had the device under (his) (her) actual physical control.

   ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[3]

   [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

   [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

   [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The device was an improvised explosive device.[4] This requires:

- that the device was explosive; that is, that it contained some type of explosive material[5] and a means of detonating that material; and
- that the device was destructive; that is, that it was capable of causing bodily harm or damage to property; and
- that the device was improvised; that is, that it was made by a person not engaged in the legitimate manufacture or use of explosives (or otherwise authorized by law to do so).[6]

["Improvised explosive device" does not include ammunition for any rifle, pistol, or shotgun.][7]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published Wis JI-Criminal 1351 in 1988. It was revised and renumbered 1351A in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for one type of violation of subsection (2) of § 943.31, which is a punishable as a Class H felony. The statute was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 234 (effective date: April 21, 1988). Possession of an improvised explosive device, also prohibited by § 941.31(2), is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1351A. Possession of an explosive compound with intent to use it to commit a crime is prohibited by § 943.31(1). See Wis JI-Criminal 1350.

Subsection (2)(c) of § 941.31 provides exceptions to the coverage of the statute:

> This subsection does not apply to the transportation, possession, use or transfer of any improvised explosive device by any armed forces or national guard personnel or to any peace officer in the line of duty or as part of a duty-related function or exercise. The restriction on transportation in this subsection does not apply to common carriers.

1. The instruction is drafted for a violation of the statute involving "possession." The statute also applies to one who "makes, buys, transports, uses or transfers . . . or possesses materials or components with intent to assemble any improvised explosive device." If one of the other alternatives is involved, the instruction must be modified (though most necessarily will involve possession).

Section 939.22(40) defines "transfer" as follows: "Transfer means any transaction involving a change in possession of any property or a change of right, title, or interest to or in any property."

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

4. The explanation of "improvised explosive device" is from the definition provided in § 941.31(2)(a). The statutory definition appears to require that the device have the three attributes emphasized in the instruction: that it be explosive, destructive, and improvised. The full statutory definition reads as follows:

> "Improvised explosive device" means a destructive explosive device capable of causing bodily harm, great bodily harm, death or property damage; with some type of explosive material and a means of detonating the explosive material, directly, remotely, or with a timer either present or readily capable of being inserted or attached; which may include a pipe or similar casing, with the ends of the pipe or casing capped, plugged or crimped, and a fuse or similar object sticking out of the pipe or casing; and made by a person not engaged in the legitimate manufacture or legitimate use of explosives, or otherwise authorized by law to do so. "Improvised explosive device" does not include ammunition for any rifle, pistol or shotgun.

5. In State v. Brulport, 202 Wis.2d 506,551 N.W.2d 824 (Ct. App. 1996), the court approved the use of Wisconsin Administrative Code definitions of "explosive compound" and "explosion" in a case involving a violation of § 941.31(1):

> "Explosive compound" means any chemical compound, mixture or device, the primary of common purpose of which is to function by explosion. [§ ILHR 7.04(18)]
> "Explosion" means the substantially instantaneous release of both gas and heat. [§ ILHR 7.04(18)]

Brulport held that a plastic soda bottle containing aluminum foil and drain cleaner qualified as an "explosive compound" under § 941.31. See footnote 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1350.

6. The phrase in parentheses is based on the definition found in § 941.31(2)(a). See note 3, supra.

7. See s. 941.31(2)(a), note 4, supra.

1351B POSSESSION OF MATERIALS OR COMPONENTS WITH INTENT TO ASSEMBLE AN IMPROVISED EXPLOSIVE DEVICE — § 941.31(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.31(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who possesses materials or components with intent to assemble an improvised explosive device.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed materials or components.

"Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[1] had actual physical control of materials or components.

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS THAT ARE SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[2]

[An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]

[It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]

[Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

2. The defendant possessed materials or components with intent to assemble an improvised explosive device.[3]

An "improvised explosive device" requires:

- that the device was explosive; that is, that it contained some type of explosive material[4] and a means of detonating that material; and
- that the device was destructive; that is, that it was capable of causing bodily harm or damage to property; and
- that the device was improvised; that is, that it was made by a person not engaged in the legitimate manufacture or use of explosives (or otherwise authorized by law to do so).[5]

["Improvised explosive device" does not include ammunition for any rifle, pistol, or shotgun.][6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

This instruction is for one type of violation of subsection (2) of § 943.31, which is punishable as Class H felonies. 2. The definition of "possess" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 920. See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

3. The explanation of "improvised explosive device" is from the definition provided in § 941.31(2)(a). The statutory definition appears to require that the device have the three attributes emphasized in the instruction: that it be explosive, destructive, and improvised. The full statutory definition reads as follows:

> "Improvised explosive device" means a destructive explosive device capable of causing bodily harm, great bodily harm, death or property damage; with some type of explosive material and a means of detonating the explosive material, directly, remotely, or with a timer either present or readily capable of being inserted or attached; which may include a pipe or similar casing, with the ends of the pipe or casing capped, plugged or crimped, and a fuse or similar object sticking out of the pipe or casing; and made by a person not engaged in the legitimate manufacture or legitimate use of explosives, or otherwise authorized by law to do so. "Improvised explosive device" does not include ammunition for any rifle, pistol or shotgun.

4. In State v. Brulport, 202 Wis.2d 506,551 N.W.2d 824 (Ct. App. 1996), the court approved the use of Wisconsin Administrative Code definitions of "explosive compound" and "explosion" in a case involving a violation of § 941.31(1):

> "Explosive compound" means any chemical compound, mixture or device, the primary of common purpose of which is to function by explosion. [§ ILHR 7.04(18)]

1352 ADMINISTERING A DANGEROUS OR STUPEFYING DRUG — § 941.32

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.32 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is violated by one who administers to another or causes another to take any poisonous, stupefying, overpowering, narcotic, or anesthetic substance with intent thereby to facilitate the commission of a crime.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [administered[1] a substance to (name of victim)] [caused (name of victim) to take a substance].
2. The substance was poisonous, stupefying, overpowering, narcotic, or anesthetic.
3. The defendant acted with the intent to[2] facilitate the commission of a crime.

"Facilitate" means to make easier or less difficult.[3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1352 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. If the definition of "administered" is an issue, consulting § 961.01(1r) may be helpful. It contains the definition for "administer" as used in the Uniform Controlled Substance Act. The committee concluded that with modification that definition can be used here. A suggested definition for "administered," based on § 961.01(1r) is:

> "Administered" as used here means the direct application of the substance, whether by injection, inhalation, ingestion or any other means to the body of the victim.

2. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4) to require the mental purpose to cause the result specified or awareness that conduct is practically certain to cause that result. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

3. Webster's Third New International Dictionary 812 (unabridged ed. 1961).

1354 PLACING FOREIGN OBJECTS IN EDIBLES — § 941.325

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Placing foreign objects in edibles, as defined in § 941.325 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who places objects, drugs, or other substances in candy or other liquid or solid edibles with the intent to cause bodily harm to another person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant placed (an object) (a drug) (a substance) in (candy) (a liquid or solid edible).

   ("Edible" means something that can be eaten.)[1]

2. The defendant committed that act with intent to cause bodily harm to another person.

   "Bodily harm" means physical pain, injury, illness, or any impairment of physical condition.[2]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1354 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. This definition is based on the dictionary definition of the term. See, for example, Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

The Wisconsin Court of Appeals has held that the statute also applies to "liquid food" or "liquid edibles." State v. Timm, 163 Wis.2d 894, 472 N.W.2d 593 (Ct. App. 1991). The court apparently approved a broader definition which equates "edible" with "food" as defined in Webster's Third International Dictionary 722 (1976): "material . . . taken or absorbed into the body . . . to sustain growth . . . and to furnish energy." 163 Wis.2d 894, 898.

In 1996, the statute was amended to add the following underlined language: ". . . or other liquid or solid edibles." 1995 Wisconsin Act 410.

2. Section 939.22(4).

1360 OBSTRUCTING EMERGENCY MEDICAL PERSONNEL — § 941.37(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Obstructing emergency medical personnel, as defined by § 941.37(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally interferes with any emergency medical personnel in the performance of duties relating to an emergency or rescue and who has reasonable grounds to believe that the interference may endanger another's safety.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant interfered with (identify appropriate category for the victim) [1] in the performance of duties relating to an emergency or rescue.

   (Identify appropriate category for the victim) are emergency medical personnel.[2]

   "Interfere" means to delay, prevent, hinder, or impede.

2. The defendant intentionally interfered with (a) (an) (identify appropriate category for the victim) .

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the purpose to interfere with (a) (an) (identify appropriate category for the victim) .[3] It also requires that the defendant knew that the person was (a) (an) (identify appropriate category for the victim) and knew that (he) (she) was performing duties relating to an emergency or rescue.[4]

3. The defendant had reasonable grounds to believe that the interference might endanger the safety of another person.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS E FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE PENALTY-INCREASING FACT IS PRESENT.[5]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Did the defendant's violation contribute to the death of another person?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1360 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1995 and 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2017; it reflects changes in terminology made by 2017 Wisconsin Act 12.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (3) of § 941.37, which is punishable as a Class I felony. The penalty increases to a Class E felony if the violation "contributes to the death of another." § 941.37(4). The instruction provides a special question to be added if the Class E felony is charged.

Subsection (2) of § 941.37 defines a misdemeanor offense which differs from the felony offense under sub. (3) in two ways: it requires "knowingly obstructs" rather than "intentionally interferes"; and it does not require that the actor have "reasonable grounds to believe that the interference may endanger another's safety." There is not a uniform instruction for violations of sub. (2).

2017 Wisconsin Act 12 [effective date: June 23, 2017] changed the terminology used in the statute from "emergency medical technician" to "emergency medical services practitioner" and from "first responder" to "emergency medical responder."

1. Sub. (1)(c) of § 941.37 defines "emergency medical personnel" as follows:

> ". . . an emergency medical services practitioner licensed under § 256.15, emergency medical responder certified under s. 256.15(8), peace officer or fire fighter, or other person operating or staffing an ambulance or an authorized emergency vehicle."

Section 256.15 is an extensive statute addressing several matters. Licensing of emergency medical technicians is addressed in sub. (5). Sub. (1)(a) of § 941.37 provides that "'ambulance' has the meaning specified in s. 256.01(1t)." Sub. (1)(b) of § 941.37 provides that "'authorized emergency vehicle' has the meaning specified in s. 340.01(3)."

2. Because § 941.37 specifically so provides, the Committee has concluded that the jury may be informed that, for example, "fire fighters are emergency medical personnel." It is for the jury to determine whether the individuals allegedly interfered with in the case were, in fact, fire fighters.

3. If appropriate, add or substitute: "or was aware his conduct was practically certain to cause that result." See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

4. See § 939.23(3).

5. Subsection (4) of § 941.37 provides that the penalty for violations of § 941.37(3) increases to a Class E felony if a person "violates sub. (3) and thereby contributes to the death of another . . ." If the offense is charged as a Class E felony, the special question should be added to assure a jury finding on the penalty-increasing fact. If the offense is charged as a Class I felony, the instruction should be given without the special question.

1365 THROWING OR EXPELLING A BODILY SUBSTANCE AT A PUBLIC SAFETY WORKER OR PROSECUTOR — § 941.375

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 941.375 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is violated by one who throws or expels a bodily substance[1] at or toward a (public safety worker) (prosecutor) under the following circumstances:

- the person intends that the bodily substance come into contact with the (public safety worker) (prosecutor); and,
- the (public safety worker) (prosecutor) does not consent to the substance being thrown or expelled at or toward (him) (her).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of victim) was a (public safety worker)[2] (prosecutor).[3]

["Public safety worker" means (an emergency medical services practitioner licensed under § 256.15) (an emergency medical responder certified under § 256.15(8)) (a peace officer) (a fire fighter) (a person operating or staffing an ambulance).[4]]

[A (e.g. district attorney) is a prosecutor.[5]]

2. The defendant threw or expelled a bodily substance at or toward (name of victim) with intent that the bodily substance come into contact with (name of victim).[6]

   (Identify substance) is a bodily substance.[7]

3. (Name of victim) did not consent to the substance being thrown or expelled at or toward (him) (her).[8]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1365 was originally published in 2007 and revised in 2012 and 2017. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2018; it reflects changes made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 340 and 2017 Wisconsin Act 12.

Section 941.375 was created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 190 [effective date: April 22, 2004]. 2011 Wisconsin Act 72 [effective date: December 2, 2011] amended § 941.375 by repealing former subsection (2)(b). That subsection required that the defendant throw the substance with the intent to cause bodily harm to the public safety worker. The change is reflected in the instruction by striking what was the third element, reducing the number of elements from four to three.

2015 Wisconsin Act 340 amended § 941.375 to include "prosecutor." [Effective date: April 1, 2016.]

2017 Wisconsin Act 12 [effective date: June 23, 2017] changed the terminology used in § 941.375 from "emergency medical technician" to "emergency medical services practitioner" and from "first responder" to "emergency medical responder."

1. "Bodily substance" is used in place of the following phrase in the statute: ". . . blood, semen, vomit, saliva, urine, feces or other bodily substance . . ." The instruction recommends naming the substance in element 2. See footnote 7.

2. These elements do not require that the public safety worker was acting in an official capacity or that the defendant knew that the victim was a public safety worker. However reasonable these elements might seem, the statute does not specify them and the Committee considered that the legislature did specify these elements in § 941.20(1m)(b), which criminalizes pointing a firearm at a very similar group of public workers: "Whoever intentionally points a firearm at or towards a law enforcement officer. . ." The inference that the legislature did not intend to include these elements in § 941.375(2) is particularly strong because both of these crimes were enacted in 2003 Wisconsin Act 190. The Committee recognizes that under the recommended elements, the law could be applied to circumstances in which a covered safety worker was not on duty and in which the defendant had no reason to be aware of the employment status of the victim. This could include an "emergency medical technician" or a "first responder" who was licensed but not then employed in that capacity.

3. See note 2, supra. The Committee reached the same conclusions with regard to the victim's status as a prosecutor. Prosecutors were added to the statute by 2015 Wisconsin Act 340.

4. The alternatives in brackets are those provided in § 941.375(1)(b). Section 941.375(1)(a) provides: "'Ambulance' has the meaning specified in s. 256.01(1t)."

"Emergency medical services practitioner" is defined in § 256.01(5). "Emergency medical responder" is defined in § 256.01(4p). Section 939.22(22) provides a definition of "peace officer."

5. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told, for example, that a district attorney is a prosecutor. It is still for the jury to be satisfied that, in the example, the victim was a district attorney. Section 941.375(1)(am) provides:

> "Prosecutor" means any of the following:
> 1. A district attorney, a deputy district attorney, an assistant district attorney, or a special prosecutor appointed under s. 978.045 or 978.05(8)(b).
> 2. The attorney general, a deputy attorney general, or an assistant attorney general.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. Section 941.375(2)(a).

7. Section 941.375 applies to the following: "blood, semen, vomit, saliva, urine, feces or other bodily substance." Because the statute specifies certain substances as "bodily substances," the Committee concluded that the jury may be told, for example, that "blood is a bodily substance."

8. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

1375 VIOLATING A NO CONTACT ORDER — § 941.39

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Violating a no contact order, as defined in § 941.39 of the Wisconsin Statutes, is committed by one who intentionally violates a court order issued under § 973.049(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. A no contact order was issued under § 973.049(2) of the Wisconsin Statutes as a result of a conviction for a (felony) (misdemeanor).

   (A felony is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the Wisconsin state prisons.[1] _____ is a felony.)[2]

   (A misdemeanor is a crime punishable by imprisonment in the county jail.[3] _____ is a misdemeanor.)[4]

2. The defendant committed an act that violated the no contact order.

3. The defendant intentionally violated the no contact order.

   This requires that the defendant knew that the no contact order had been issued and knew that (his) (her) acts violated the order.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1375 was originally published in 2007. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2012; it reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 267.

This instruction is for violations of § 941.39 Victim or co-actor contact, created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 32. Effective date: August 30, 2005.

2011 Wisconsin Act 267 amended § 941.39 to change the penalty [effective date: April 24, 2012]. The penalty is a Class A misdemeanor if the order resulted from a conviction for a misdemeanor; the penalty is a Class H felony if the order resulted from a conviction for a felony. The Committee concluded that because the nature of the conviction on which the order is based determines the penalty range, it is a fact that must be submitted to the jury. The penalty structure is like that for bail jumping under § 946.49; see Wis JI-Criminal 1975.

The offense is defined as violating a no contact order issued under § 973.049(2), which provides that a sentencing court "may" prohibit an individual who is being sentenced or placed on probation "from contacting victims of, or co-actors in, a crime considered at sentencing during any part of the individual's sentence or period of probation if the court determines that the prohibition would be in the interest of public protection."

Subsection (3) of § 973.049, as amended by 2011 Wisconsin Act 267, provides: "If a court issues an order under sub. (2), the court shall inform the individual of the prohibition and include the prohibition in the judgment of conviction for the crime." The Committee concluded that whether or not this requirement was met is not relevant in a prosecution for violating § 941.39.

1. See § 939.60.

2. In the Committee's judgment, the jury may be told that a certain crime is in fact a felony or a misdemeanor. The jury must find that the defendant was actually convicted of that crime.

3. See §§ 939.60 and 939.12. "County jail" includes the Milwaukee County House of Correction.

4. See note 2, supra.

5. The basis for the knowledge requirement in the third element is the provision in § 939.23(3) which states that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'."

1380 DEFAMATION — § 942.01

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Defamation, as defined in § 942.01 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to defame, communicates any defamatory matter to a third person without the consent of the person defamed.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following (five) (six)[1] elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant communicated some information or matter about (name of defamed person) .

   "Communicate" means to make something known, such as stating something, writing something, or even drawing a picture of something.[2]

2. This communication about (name of defamed person) was made to a third person.

   The crime of defamation is not committed if the matter or information is communicated only to the person allegedly defamed.[3]

3. The information or matter communicated about (name of defamed person) was defamatory matter.

"Defamatory matter" is anything which exposes a person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, degradation or disgrace in society, or injury in business or occupation.[4] With respect to the crime of defamation, it is not necessary that the reputation of the person defamed be actually harmed. It is necessary only that the matter or information communicated tends to have a defamatory effect.[5]

4. The defendant communicated this information or matter with the intent to defame (name of defamed person) .

The phrase "with the intent to" means that the defendant had the purpose to defame (name of defamed person) or was aware that this conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[6]

5. (Name of defamed person) did not consent to the communication.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF AN ORAL COMMUNICATION IS INVOLVED.

[6. Two other persons heard and understood the oral statement as defamatory.][7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE EXCEPTION[S] RECOGNIZED IN § 942.01(3):[8]

[You must also consider whether the defamatory matter was true and was communicated with good motives and for justifiable ends. The burden is on the State to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defamatory matter was not true or was not communicated with good motives and for justifiable ends.[9]]

[You must also consider whether the communication was privileged. A communication is privileged when (describe the privilege) . The burden is on the State to satisfy you beyond a reasonable doubt that the communication was not privileged.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all (five) (six)[10] elements of this offense have been proved [and that the defamatory matter was not true or was not communicated with good motives and for justifiable ends][11] [and that the communication was not privileged],[12] you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1380 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977 and 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Defamation, as defined in § 942.01, must be interpreted in light of Article 1, Section 3 of the Wisconsin Constitution, which provides:

> Free speech; libel. Every person may freely speak, write and publish his sentiments on all subjects, being responsible for the abuse of that right, and no laws shall be passed to restrain or abridge the liberty of speech or of the press. In all criminal prosecutions or indictments for libel, the truth may be given in evidence, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libel be true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted; and the jury shall have the right to determine the law and the fact.

Subsection (3) of § 942.01 recognizes an exception regarding a communication made "with good motives and for justifiable ends." See the instruction at footnote 8.

Subsection (4) of § 942.01 provides that "No person shall be convicted on the basis of an oral communication of defamatory matter except upon the testimony of 2 other persons that they heard and understood the oral statement as defamatory or upon a plea of guilty or no contest." See bracketed element 6 of the instruction.

1. Choose the appropriate number. Six elements are to be used if an oral communication is involved.

2. Volume V, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 91 (Wis. Legislative Council, February 1953).

3. Section 942.01(1); 1953 Judiciary Committee Report, supra note 4, p. 91.

4. Section 942.01(2).

5. 1953 Judiciary Committee Report, supra note 4, p. 91.

6. Section 939.23(4).

7. Include this element only if the defamatory matter was communicated through an oral statement. See § 942.01(4).

8. Subsection (3) of § 942.01 provides: "This section does not apply if the defamatory matter was true and was communicated with good motives and for justifiable ends or if the communication was otherwise privileged." [Note that the references to "true . . . with good motives and for justifiable ends" are based on Article I, Section 3 of the Wisconsin Constitution.] Thus, the subsection contains exceptions to the statute and reference to privileges. The Committee's recommended approach is to treat these matters as follows. The matters referred to are not issues in the case until there is some evidence of those facts. Once there is evidence sufficient to raise the issue, the burden is on the state to prove, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the exception or the privilege does not apply. See Moes v. State, 91 Wis.2d 756, 284 N.W.2d 66 (1979); State v. Schulz, 102 Wis.2d 423, 307 N.W.2d 151 (1981). In these cases, the appropriate bracketed material should be included in the instruction. The same material should also be added to the "Jury's Decision" paragraph. See notes 11 and 12, below.

Privileges available to a defendant under common law are in general the same as the privileges relating to civil defamation. 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 91 (Wis. Legislative Council, 1953). The 1953 Report referred to sections of the Restatement of Torts, found at §§ 582-612 of Restatement of Torts 2d (1977 ed.). A helpful summary of civil defamation law, including privileges, is provided at Wis JI-Civil 2500 Defamation: Law Note For Trial Judges.

In State v. Gilles, 173 Wis.2d 101, 496 N.W.2d 133 (Ct. App. 1992), the court confirmed that conditional privileges recognized in civil defamation cases also apply to the criminal charge. On the facts of that case, the court found that it was proper for the trial judge to refuse to submit the privilege issue to the jury because the evidence supporting it was insufficient as a matter of law.

In State v. Cardenas-Hernandez, 214 Wis.2d 71, 571 N.W.2d 406 (Ct. App. 1997), convictions for criminal defamation were reversed. The statements on which the charges were based were made during a John Doe proceeding. The court held that an absolute privilege applies to statements made in judicial proceedings.

9. The Committee concluded that the state may meet its burden of disproving the exception by proving either that the defamatory material was not true OR that it was not communicated with good motives and for justifiable ends.

10. Choose the appropriate number. Six elements are to be used if an oral communication is involved.

11. Add the bracketed material if the jury was instructed on the exception recognized in sec. 942.01(3).

12. Add the bracketed material if the jury was instructed on a privilege recognized in sec. 942.01(3).

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1390, 1391, and 1392 were originally published in 1974. They were withdrawn in 1992.

Wis JI-Criminal 1390-1392 were withdrawn because the offenses with which they dealt are no longer punished as crimes. The three instructions dealt with three types of violations under former 942.04, Denial of Rights. The offenses were punished as Class A misdemeanors.

Section 942.04 was renumbered and amended by 1989 Wisconsin Act 47, effective date: September 12, 1989. The substantive provisions addressed by the instructions are now found in § 101.22(9)(a)1., 3., and 4. Violations are punished as forfeitures. See § 101.22(6).

1392 INVASION OF PRIVACY: USE OF A SURVEILLANCE DEVICE — § 942.08(2)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Invasion of privacy, as defined in § 942.08(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly installs a surveillance device in any private place, or uses a surveillance device to observe in a private place, with the intent to observe any nude or partially nude person without the consent of that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly (installed a surveillance device in a private place) (used a surveillance device to observe in a private place).[1]
2. The defendant intended to use the surveillance device to observe any nude or partially nude person.
3. The defendant intended to observe a nude or partially nude person without the consent of that person.

Meaning of "Surveillance Device"

"Surveillance device" means any device that can be used to observe activities of another person. [It includes a peephole.][2]

Meaning of "Private Place"

"Private place" means a place where a person may reasonably expect to be safe from being observed without his or her knowledge and consent.[3]

Meaning of "Nude or Partially Nude Person"

"Nude or partially nude person" means [any human being who has less than fully and opaquely covered genitals, pubic area or buttocks] [any female human being who has less than a fully opaque covering over any portion of a breast below the top of the nipple] [any male human being with covered genitals in a discernibly turgid state].[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS I FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[5]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1392 was originally published in 2007 and revised in October 2016 to reflect changes made to § 942.08 by 2015 Wisconsin Acts 292 and 320. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2020; it added to the comment.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (2)(a) of §942.08. Three additional offenses are defined in subs. (2)(b), (c), and (d). See Wis JI-Criminal 1395 for violations of sub. (2)(d); uniform instructions have not been drafted for the other two offenses.

1. 2019 Wisconsin Act 72 [effective date: January 23, 2020] created a narrow exception in regard to the installation of a surveillance device by an owner of real estate in connection with the sale of the real estate. See § 995.60(2). This exception does not apply to surveillance devices installed in bathrooms or washrooms. § 995.60(3).

2. This is a simplification of the definition provided in s. 942.08(1)(c). The Committee concluded that referring to "device" covered the other terms used in the statutory definition: "instrument, apparatus, implement, mechanism or contrivance." While referring to a device that "can be used" is arguably broader than the statute's "used, designed to be used to observe, or capable of observing," any potential problem is cured by the second element of the offense, which requires that the defendant intended to use the device to observe a nude or partially nude person.

3. This is the definition provided in s. 942.08(1)(b).

4. This is the definition provided in s. 942.08(1)(a), without change, except for bracketing separable parts of the definition. The applicable bracketed definition should be selected.

5. 2015 Wisconsin Act 320 [effective date: April 1, 2016] changed the penalty structure for violations of sec. 942.08: the offense is a Class I felony if the victim had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense. See § 942.08(4). The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class I felony is charged. If the Class I felony is not charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

1395 INVASION OF PRIVACY: LOOKING INTO A DWELLING UNIT — § 942.08(2)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Invasion of privacy, as defined in §942.08(2)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who enters [another person's private property without that person's consent] [a common area of a multiunit dwelling or condominium][1] and looks into any individual's dwelling unit and all the following apply:

- (he)(she) looks into the dwelling unit for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification and with the intent to intrude upon or interfere with an individual's privacy; and,
- (he)(she) looks into a part of the dwelling unit in which an individual is present; and,
- the individual has a reasonable expectation of privacy in that part of the dwelling unit; and,
- the individual does not consent to (him)(her) looking into that part of the dwelling unit.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant entered [another person's private property without that person's consent] [a common area of a multiunit dwelling or condominium].[2]
2. The defendant looked into (name of individual) 's dwelling unit.

3. The defendant looked into the dwelling unit for the purpose of sexual arousal or gratification and with the intent to intrude upon or interfere with (name of individual) 's privacy.

4. The defendant looked into a part of the dwelling unit in which (name of individual) was present.

5. (Name of individual) had a reasonable expectation of privacy in that part of the dwelling unit.

6. (Name of individual) did not consent to the defendant looking into that part of the dwelling unit.

Meaning of "Reasonable Expectation of Privacy"[3]

"Reasonable expectation of privacy" requires

- that (name of individual) had an actual expectation of privacy in the part of the dwelling unit in question; and,
- that expectation of privacy was reasonable.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS I FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[4]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1395 was originally published in 2007 and revised in 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2016; it reflects changes made by 2015 Wisconsin Act 320.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (2)(d) of § 942.08. Three additional offenses are defined in subs. (2)(b), (c), and (d). See Wis JI-Criminal 1392 for violations of sub. (2)(a); uniform instructions have not been drafted for the other two offenses.

1. The second bracketed phrase was added by 2007 Wisconsin Act 198 – effective date April 11, 2008. The statute refers to "an enclosed or unenclosed common area." The Committee concluded that it was not necessary to include that reference in the instruction.

2. See footnote 1, supra.

3. The definition of "reasonable expectation of privacy" is based on one originally used in Wis JI-Criminal 1396, Representations Depicting Nudity – § 942.09. The note in that instruction stated that the definition was based on the one used for 4th Amendment purposes.

In State v. Nelson, 2006 WI App 124, 294 Wis.2d 578, 718 N.W.2d 168, the court of appeals acknowledged Wis JI-Criminal 1396 and the footnote referring to the 4th Amendment meaning of the term:

> The comment does not purport to be an analysis of whether "reasonable expectation of privacy" was intended by the legislature to import all Fourth Amendment case law applying this term, as Nelson argues. Moreover, there is no need to resort to Fourth Amendment case law, as opposed to the language of the statute, to arrive at the definition the comment refers to: the common and ordinary meaning of "a person who has a reasonable expectation of privacy" is that the person actually has an expectation of privacy and the expectation is a reasonable one.
> 2006 WI App 124, footnote 7.

The Committee believes the definition in the instruction is consistent with the Nelson decision.

4. 2015 Wisconsin Act 320 [effective date: April 1, 2016] changed the penalty structure for violations of sec. 942.08: the offense is a Class I felony if the victim had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense. See § 942.08(4). The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class I felony is charged. If the Class I felony is not charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

1395A INVASION OF PRIVACY: USE OF A DEVICE TO VIEW UNDER THE OUTER CLOTHING OF AN INDIVIDUAL — § 942.08(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Invasion of privacy, as defined in § 942.08(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly installs or uses any device[1] to intentionally view, broadcast, or record under the outer clothing of an individual that individual's genitals, pubic area, breast, or buttocks, including genitals, pubic area, breasts, or buttocks that are covered by undergarments, or to intentionally view, broadcast, or record a body part of an individual that is not otherwise visible, without that individual's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly (installed) (used) a device.
2. The defendant (installed) (used) the device to intentionally [(view) (broadcast) (record) under the outer clothing of an individual that individual's genitals, pubic area, breast, or buttocks, whether or not covered by undergarments] [(view) (broadcast) (record) a body part of an individual that is not otherwise visible].
3. (Name of victim) did not consent[2] to the (installation) (use) of the device.

4. The defendant knew (name of victim) did not consent to the (installation) (use) of the device.[3]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1395A was approved by the Committee in February 2016.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (3) of § 942.08, which was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 80 [effective date: November 13, 2015]. The offense is a Class I felony. Additional violation of § 942.08 are defined in subs. (2)(a) through (d). See Wis JI-Criminal 1392 for violations of sub. (2)(a) and Wis JI-Criminal 1395 for violations of sub. (2)(d); uniform instructions have not been drafted for the offenses defined in subs. (2)(b) or (2)(c).

1. The offense definition refers to "device, instrument, mechanism, or contrivance." The instruction refers only to "device," the Committee having concluded that the term is broad enough to include the other items referred to.

2. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

3. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally."

1396 REPRESENTATIONS DEPICTING NUDITY — § 942.09(2)(am)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 942.09(2)(am)1. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who captures an intimate representation without the consent of the person depicted under circumstances in which he or she has a reasonable expectation of privacy, if the person knows or has reason to know that the person who is depicted does not consent to the capture of the intimate representation.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant captured an intimate representation.

Meaning of "Captures a Representation"

"Captures a representation" means takes a photograph, makes a motion picture, videotape, recording, or other visual or audio representation, or records or stores in any medium data that represents a visual image.[1]

Meaning Of "Intimate Representation"

"Intimate representation" means (a representation of a nude or partially nude person) (a representation of clothed, covered, or partially clothed or covered genitalia or buttock that is not otherwise visible to the public) (a representation of a person urinating, defecating, or using a feminine hygiene product) (a representation of a person engaged in sexual intercourse or sexual contact).[2]

[Meaning of "Nude or Partially Nude Person"][3]

["Nude or partially nude person" means (any human being who has less than fully and opaquely covered genitals, pubic area or buttocks) (any female human being who has less than a fully opaque covering over any portion of a breast below the top of the nipple) (any male human being with covered genitals in a discernibly turgid state).]

2. The defendant captured the intimate representation without the consent of the person who is depicted.

Meaning Of "Without Consent"

"Without consent" means that (name) did not freely agree to the defendant capturing the intimate representation.[4]

3. The person was depicted under circumstances in which (he) (she) had a reasonable expectation of privacy.

Meaning of "Reasonable Expectation of Privacy"[5]

"Reasonable expectation of privacy" requires:

- that the person who was depicted nude had an actual expectation of privacy at the time in question; and

- that the expectation of privacy was reasonable.

4. The defendant knew or had reason to know that the person who is depicted did not consent to the capture of the intimate representation.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS H FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[6]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1396 was originally published in 2002 and revised in 2007, 2009, and twice in 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2016; it reflects changes made to § 942.09 by 2015 Wisconsin Acts 292, 320, and 370.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (2)(am)1. of § 942.09. Section 942.09 was formerly § 944.025, the original version of which was found to be unconstitutional in State v. Stevenson, 2000 WI 71, 236 Wis.2d 86, 613 N.W.2d 90. Section 944.025 was amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, but those changes were superseded by 2001 Wisconsin Act 33, which renumbered the statute § 942.09 [effective date: December 18, 2001].

Two other offenses are defined in § 942.09(2)(am): making a reproduction of a representation captured in violation of sub. (2)(a) [see sub. (2)(am)2.]; and, possessing, distributing, or exhibiting a representation captured in violation of sub. (2)(a) [see sub. (2)(am)3.]. Uniform instructions have not been drafted for those offenses.

For violations of §§ 942.09(3m)(a)1. and 2., see Wis JI-Criminal 1398A and 1398B.

Subsection (2)(bm) of § 942.09 creates an exception for representations of nude children, captured or possessed by parents, that do not constitute violations of § 948.05, Sexual Exploitation of a Child, or § 948.12, Possession of Child Pornography. Subsection (2)(cm) extends the exception to those who receive a representation covered by sub. (2)(am) in a non-commercial context. Both provisions were amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 370 [effective date: April 21, 2016]. Act 370 also created an exception to providers of an interactive computer service or an information service or telecommunications service if the representation is provided by a third party or the representation is provided to a person who posts or publishes a private representation that is newsworthy or of public importance. See § 942.09(2)(dm).

In State v. Adams, 2015 WI App 34, 361 Wis.2d 766, 863 N.W.2d 640, the defendant appealed his conviction for violating § 942.09(2)(am)1. He videotaped his sexual activity with a prostitute and argued that he had a legitimate reason for doing so – "to memorialize their illicit encounter in case she overdosed on drugs or later accused him of beating her up." ¶1. The court rejected the argument: "The victim did not relinquish her reasonable expectation of privacy by engaging in commercial sexual activity. Recording a nude person for legitimate reasons is not an element the state has to disprove and Adams's reasons are no defense to the crime." ¶1.

In State v. Schmucker, [No. 2014AP2165-CR] [Not published], the court of appeals affirmed a conviction for an attempt to violate § 942.09(2)(am)1., capturing a representation of nudity, based on taking a picture up a woman's skirt without consent. [Cited for informational purposes; see § 809.23(3)(b).] 2015 Wisconsin Act 80 [Eff. Date: Nov. 13, 2015] created § 942.08(3) to prohibit using a device to view under the outer clothing of an individual. Wis JI-Criminal 1395A has been approved as an instruction for this offense.

1. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(a), without change. The references to "recording" and "audio" representations were added by 2015 Wisconsin Act 292 [effective date: April 1, 2016].

2. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(ag), as created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 292 [effective date: April 1, 2016]. That definition provides a cross-reference to §§ 940.225(5)(b) and (c) for definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse." See Wis JI-Criminal 1200A [sexual contact] and 1200B [sexual intercourse].

3. Add this definition when the basis for the representation being an "intimate representation" is that it involved a nude or partially nude person. The definition is the one provided in § 942.08(1)(a), which applies to this offense because of a cross-reference in § 942.09(1)(am).

4. § 942.09(1)(ae) defines "consent":

> ... words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to the act. A person who has not attained the age of 18 is incapable of consent. The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of s. 972.11 (2):

1. A person suffering from a mental illness or defect that impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.

2. A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The statutory definition is modeled on the one provided in § 940.225(4) for sexual assault. The instruction defines "without consent" in essentially the same manner as the instructions for sexual assault under § 940.225. A complete explanation of that definition is provided in, for example, footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1201. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for the victim's not being competent to give informed consent, suffering from a mental illness or defect, or being unconscious.

5. The definition of "reasonable expectation of privacy" is based on one used in the 2002 version of this instruction. The note in that instruction stated that the definition was based on the one used for 4th Amendment purposes.

In State v Nelson, 2006 WI App 124, 294 Wis.2d 578, 718 N.W.2d 168, the court of appeals acknowledged Wis JI-Criminal 1396 and the footnote referring to the 4th Amendment meaning of the term:

> The comment does not purport to be an analysis of whether "reasonable expectation of privacy" was intended by the legislature to import all Fourth Amendment case law applying this term, as Nelson argues. Moreover, there is no need to resort to Fourth Amendment case law, as opposed to the language of the statute, to arrive at the definition the comment refers to: the common and ordinary meaning of "a person who has a reasonable expectation of privacy" is that the person actually has an expectation of privacy and the expectation is a reasonable one.
> 2006 WI App 124, footnote 7.

The Committee believes the definition in the instruction is consistent with the Nelson decision.

In State v. Jahnke, 2009 WI App 4, 316 Wis.2d 324, 762 N.W.2d 696, the defendant argued that because his girlfriend knowingly exposed her nude body to him while he was secretly videotaping her, she had no "reasonable expectation of privacy." The court of appeals rejected the argument, concluding that "the phrase 'reasonable expectation of privacy' in Wis. Stat. § 942.09(2)(am)1. means a reasonable expectation under the circumstances that one will not be recorded in the nude." 2009 WI App 4, ¶14.

In State v. Adams, 2015 WI App 34, 361 Wis.2d 766, 863 N.W.2d 640, the court of appeals rejected the defendant's argument that a prostitute did not have a reasonable expectation of privacy when engaged in sexual activity with him: "Permission to be viewed in the nude does not mean permission to be recorded in the nude . . . That Adams and the woman were engaged in the crime of prostitution does not mean that the woman relinquished her reasonable expectation of privacy under § 942.09(2)(am)1." ¶5.

6. 2015 Wisconsin Act 320 [effective date: April 1, 2016] changed the penalty structure for violations of sec. 942.09: the offense is a Class H felony if the victim had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense. See § 942.09(2)(dr). The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class H felony is charged. If the Class H felony is not charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

1398A PUBLISHING A PRIVATE REPRESENTATION DEPICTING NUDITY WITHOUT CONSENT — § 942.09(3m)(a)1.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 942.09(3m)(a)1. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who posts, publishes, or causes to be posted or published, a private representation if the actor knows that the person depicted does not consent to the posting or publication of the private representation.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [(posted) (published)][1] [(caused to be (posted) (published)] a private representation.
2. The defendant knew that the person who is depicted did not consent to the (posting) (publication) of the private representation.

Meaning of "Representation"

"Representation" means a photograph, exposed film, motion picture, videotape, recording, other visual or audio representation, or data that represents a visual image or audio recording.[2]

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"

"Did not consent" means that (name) did not freely agree to the (posting) (publishing) of the private representation.[3]

Meaning of "Private Representation"

"Private representation" means a representation depicting a nude or partially nude person or depicting a person engaging in sexually explicit conduct that is intended by the person depicted in the representation to be captured, viewed, or possessed only by the person who, with the consent of the person depicted, captured the representation or to whom the person depicted directly and intentionally gave possession of the representation.[4]

Meaning of "Nude or Partially Nude Person"

"Nude or partially nude person" means [any human being who has less than fully and opaquely covered genitals, pubic area or buttocks] [any female human being who has less than a fully opaque covering over any portion of a breast below the top of the nipple] [any male human being with covered genitals in a discernibly turgid state].[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS I FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[6]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1398A was originally published in 2015 and revised in 2017 and 2018. The 2017 revision reflected changes made to § 942.09 by 2015 Wisconsin Acts 292, 320, and 370. The 2018 revision made an editorial correction in the definition of "representation." This revision was approved by the Committee in 2019; it added to the Comment to reflect changes made by 2019 Wisconsin Act 16.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (3m)(a)1. of § 942.09 as created by 2013 Wisconsin Act 243 [effective date: April 10, 2014].

A second, very similar offense is defined in § 942.09(3m)(a)2. that applies to one who: "posts, publishes, or causes to be posted or published, a depiction of a person that he or she knows is a private representation, without the consent of the person depicted." See Wis JI-Criminal 1398B.

Exceptions to the applicability of sub. (3m) are set forth in sub. (3m)(b)1. through 4. Subdivision 1 was amended by 2015 Wisconsin Act 370 [effective date: April 21, 2016] The instruction does not address the exceptions.

1. Section 942.09(1)(bg) states: "'Post or publish' includes posting or publishing on a Web site on the Internet, if the Web site may be viewed by the general public."

2. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(c).

3. § 942.09(1)(ae) defines "consent":

> . . . words or overt actions by a person who is competent to give informed consent indicating a freely given agreement to the act. A person who has not attained the age of 18 is incapable of consent. The following persons are presumed incapable of consent but the presumption may be rebutted by competent evidence, subject to the provisions of s. 972.11(2):
> 1. A person suffering from a mental illness or defect that impairs capacity to appraise personal conduct.
> 2. A person who is unconscious or for any other reason is physically unable to communicate unwillingness to an act.

The statutory definition is modeled on the one provided in § 940.225(4) for sexual assault. The instruction defines "did not consent" in essentially the same manner as the instructions for sexual assault under § 940.225 define "without consent." A complete explanation of that definition is provided in, for example, footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1201. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 1200C, 1200D, and 1200E, which provide alternatives for the victim's not being competent to give informed consent, suffering from a mental illness or defect, or being unconscious.

4. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(bn).

If a definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is believed to be necessary, § 942.09(1)(d) provides that the definition of the term in § 948.01(7) applies:

"Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:

(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts. See Wis. Stat. 948.01(1t) for definition of this term.

5. This is the definition provided in § 942.08(1)(a), which applies to this offense because of a cross-reference in § 942.09(1)(am).

6. 2015 Wisconsin Act 320 [effective date: April 1, 2016] changed the penalty structure for violations of sec. 942.09: the offense is a Class I felony if the victim had not attained the age of 18 years at the time of the offense. See § 942.09(3m)(am). The instruction reflects this change by providing a special question to be used where the Class I felony is charged. If the Class I felony is not charged, the instruction should be used without the special question.

1398B PUBLISHING A DEPICTION THAT IS KNOWN TO BE A PRIVATE REPRESENTATION OF NUDITY WITHOUT CONSENT— § 942.09(3m)(a)2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 942.09(3m)(a)2. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who posts, publishes, or causes to be posted or published, a depiction of a person that he or she knows is a private representation without the consent the person depicted.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [(posted) (published)][1] [(caused to be (posted) (published)] a depiction of a person.
2. The defendant knew that the depiction was a private representation.
3. The person who is depicted did not consent to the (posting) (publication) of the private representation.

Meaning of "Representation"

"Representation" means a photograph, exposed film, motion picture, videotape, recording, other visual or audio representation, or data that represents a visual image or audio recording.[2]

Meaning of "Did Not Consent"

"Did not consent" means that (name) did not freely agree to the (posting) (publishing) of the private representation.[3]

Meaning of "Private Representation"

"Private representation" means a representation depicting a nude or partially nude person or depicting a person engaging in sexually explicit conduct that is intended by the person depicted in the representation to be captured, viewed, or possessed only by the person who, with the consent of the person depicted, captured the representation or to whom the person depicted directly and intentionally gave possession of the representation.[4]

Meaning of "Nude or Partially Nude Person"

"Nude or partially nude person" means [any human being who has less than fully and opaquely covered genitals, pubic area or buttocks] [any female human being who has less than a fully opaque covering over any portion of a breast below the top of the nipple] [any male human being with covered genitals in a discernibly turgid state].[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE OFFENSE WAS CHARGED AS A CLASS I FELONY AND THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE VICTIM HAD

NOT ATTAINED THE AGE OF 18 YEARS AT THE TIME OF THE OFFENSE.[6]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

Was (name of victim) under the age of 18 years at the time of the offense?

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

In State v. Culver, 2018 WI App 55, 384 Wis.2d 222, 918 N.W.2d 103, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held that § 942.09(3m)(a)2. was not overbroad in violation of the First Amendment and was unconstitutionally vague.

1399 SOLICITING AN INTIMATE OR PRIVATE REPRESENTATION — § 942.09(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 942.09(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who solicits an intimate or private representation from a person who the actor believes or has reason to believe has not attained the age of 18 years.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1399 was approved by the Committee in February 2018.

This instruction is for a violation of sub. (4) of § 942.09, which was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 129 [effective date: December 10, 2017]. The offense does not apply if the person soliciting the representation has not attained the age of 18 years. See sub. (4)(c). The offense is a Class I felony, unless the defendant is under age 21 and not more than three years older than the victim – then it is a Class A misdemeanor. See sub. (4)(b).

1. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(c).

2. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(ag), as created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 292 [effective date: April 1, 2016]. That definition provides a cross reference to §§ 940.225(5)(b) and (c) for definitions of "sexual contact" and "sexual intercourse." See Wis JI-Criminal 1200A [sexual contact] and 1200B [sexual intercourse].

3. This is the definition provided in § 942.09(1)(bn).

If a definition of "sexually explicit conduct" is believed to be necessary, § 942.09(1)(d) provides that the definition of the term in § 948.01(7) applies:

"Sexually explicit conduct" means actual or simulated:

(a) Sexual intercourse, meaning vulvar penetration as well as cunnilingus, fellatio or anal intercourse between persons or any other intrusion, however slight, of any part of a person's body or of any object into the genital or anal opening either by a person or upon the person's instruction. The emission of semen is not required;
(b) Bestiality;
(c) Masturbation;
(d) Sexual sadism or sexual masochistic abuse including, but not limited to, flagellation, torture or bondage; or
(e) Lewd exhibition of intimate parts.

4. Add this definition when the basis for the representation being an "intimate representation" or "private representation" is that it involved a nude or partially nude person. The definition is the one provided in § 942.08(1)(a), which applies to this offense because of a cross-reference in § 942.09(1)(am).

1400 CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY — § 943.01

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal damage to property, as defined in § 943.01 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes damage to the physical property of another person without the consent of that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused damage to physical property.

   The word "damage" includes anything from mere defacement to total destruction.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally caused the damage.

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to damage the property or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[2]

3. The property belonged to (name of owner, agent, etc.).[3]

4. The defendant caused the damage without the consent[4] of (name of owner, agent, etc.).

5. The defendant knew the property belonged to another and knew that the property owner did not consent to the damage.[5]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE PROPERTY WAS REDUCED IN VALUE BY MORE THAN $2,500.[6]

[Finding the Reduction in the Value of the Property]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Was the property reduced in value by more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no."

"Reduced in value" means what it would cost to repair or replace the property, whichever is less.[7] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was reduced in value by more than $2,500.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING DAMAGE TO MORE THAN ONE ITEM OF PROPERTY "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 943.01(3).[8]

[In determining the amount by which the value of the property was reduced, you may consider all damage that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt was caused by acts of the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1400 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1977, 1987, 1995, 1999, and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2020; it added to the comment.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.01. The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a Class H felony under circumstances specified in sub. (2k). The penalty increases to a Class I felony in six situations specified in sub. (2), one of which is addressed by this instruction: where the amount of property damage exceeds $2,500. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001.

The offense is a Class I felony if the property damaged is a coin or card operated machine damaged in the course of a theft. See Wis JI-Criminal 1400A.

The offense is a Class H felony if the property damaged is owned, leased, or operated by an energy provider [sub. (2k)]. See Wis JI-Criminal 1400B.

"Energy" provider means any of the following:

1. A public utility under s. 196.01 (5) (a) that is engaged in any of the following: (a) The production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, power, light, or water. (b)The transmission or delivery of natural gas.
2. A transmission company under s. 196.485 (1) (ge).
3. A cooperative association organized under ch. 185 for the purpose of producing or furnishing heat, light, power or water for its members.
4. A wholesale merchant plant under s. 196.491 (1) (w), except that "wholesale merchant plant" includes an electric generating facility or an improvement to an electric generating facility that is subject to a leased generation contract, as defined in s.196.52 (9) (a) 3.
5. A decommissioned nuclear power plant.
6. A company that operates a gas, oil, petroleum, refined petroleum product, renewable fuel, water, or chemical generation, storage transportation, or delivery system that is not a service station, garage, or other place where gasoline or diesel fuel is sold at retailer offered for sale at retail.

The court should inquire whether the parties agree that the entity whose property is at issue is a qualified energy provider. If there is no agreement, the court should require the state designate under which subsection they are proceeding.

The offense is also a Class I felony where the property damaged:

- is a vehicle or highway and the damage is of a kind which is likely to cause injury to a person or further property damage [sub. (2)(a)2.]

- belongs to a public utility or common carrier and the damage is of a kind which is likely to impair the services of the public utility or common carrier [sub. (2)(c)]

- belongs to a person who is or was a grand or petit juror and the damage was caused by reason of any verdict or indictment assented to by the owner [sub. (2)(c)]

- is on state-owned land and is listed on the registry under sub. (5) [sub. (2)(e)]

- is a rock art site listed on the national register of historic places in Wisconsin [sub. (2)(f)2.]

- plant material used in research [sub. (2d), as created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16; effective date: September 1, 2001]

If one of the above is alleged, the Committee recommends handling it with a special question, in the same manner that the value question is handled in this instruction.

"Common carrier" is defined in § 194.01. Also see Brockway v. Travelers Ins. Co., 107 Wis.2d 636, 638, 321 N.W.2d 332 (Ct. App. 1982): "Two elements characterize a carrier as a common carrier: (1) The service is for hire, and (2) the carrier holds itself out to the public."

There are other statutes which provide special criminal damage to property provisions for certain situations:

- § 943.01(2k) Criminal damage to property: energy provider property. See Wis JI-Criminal 1400B.

- § 943.011 Criminal damage or threat to property of witness. See Wis JI-Criminal 1400C.

- § 943.012 Criminal damage to religious and other property. See Wis JI-Criminal 1401.

- § 943.013 Criminal damage; threat; property of judge. See Wis JI-Criminal 1402A.

- § 943.015 Criminal damage; threat; property of department of revenue employee. See Wis JI-Criminal 1402B.

1. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

2. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923.1.

3. Section 939.22(28) provides the following definition of "property of another": "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the property."

In State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 131, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996), the court held that § 939.22(48) "unambiguously means that a person can be convicted of criminal damage to property even though he or she has an ownership interest if someone else also has an ownership interest." Thus, the defendant's conviction was affirmed where the charge was based on his damaging his own marital home, because his wife also had an ownership interest in the home.

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. See § 939.23(3).

6. A misdemeanor charge requires no finding as to reduction in value. This instruction and the verdict question need be given only if a felony is charged and the evidence would support a finding of damage exceeding $2,500. The value level was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 2001, effective date: September 1, 2001.

7. § 943.01(2)(d).

8. This material deals with the issue addressed by § 943.01(3) which provides:

> Where more than one item of property is damaged under a single intent and design, the damage to all the property may be prosecuted as a single forfeiture offense or crime.

The Committee's research on the issue of whether this need be submitted to the jury can be summarized as follows: (1) there is no case law dealing with subsec. (3) of the criminal damage to property statute; (2) § 943.01(3) was modeled after the provision applicable to theft cases, now found at § 971.36; (3) an instructive case, State v. Spraggin, dealt with a similar situation in the context of receiving stolen property; and (4) while there may be equally effective ways of dealing with the issue, the Committee concluded that the question of whether all property was damaged pursuant to a single intent and design must be submitted to the jury.

No reported appellate opinion could be found that dealt with the multiple items of property issue. Subsection (3) of § 943.01 was not part of the criminal damage to property statute included in the 1953 draft of the Criminal Code. It was added during the 1954-55 review by the advisory committee and was modeled after the statute then in effect and applicable to theft cases. That statute (formerly § 355.31) now appears, virtually without change, as § 971.36. No cases were found that discuss § 971.36 or its predecessor.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 943.01(3) or § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (71 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal. App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury should include damage to "all property which you find, beyond a reasonable doubt, to have been damaged pursuant to a single intent or design."

1400A CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY: VENDING AND OTHER MACHINES — § 943.01(2g)

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1400, CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY.[1]

Determining Damage to Coin- or Card- Operated Machines

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Did the defendant commit the crime of criminal damage to property under all of the following circumstances:

1) the property damaged was a machine operated by the insertion of coins, currency, debit cards or credit cards; and,

2) the defendant acted with the intent to commit a theft from the machine; and,

3) the property was reduced in value by more than $500 but not more than $2,500."

"Intent to commit theft" requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to take and carry away property of another without consent and with the intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession of that property.[2]

Property is "reduced in value" by the amount that it would cost to repair or replace it, whichever is less, plus other monetary losses associated with the damage.[3]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of criminal damage to property under all these circumstances, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1400A was originally published in 1997 and revised in 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2016; it updated the Comment.

The instruction was revised in 2001 to reflect the change in the value level that determines the penalty: it was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective September 1, 2001.

This instruction addresses subsection (2g) of § 943.01, created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 133. [Effective date: January 6, 1996]. Committing criminal damage to property under the circumstances specified in subsection (2g) increases the penalty to a Class I felony. As with similar provisions, the Committee recommends submitting this issue as a special question, to be considered by the jury if it reaches a guilty verdict on the criminal damage to property charge. The instruction assumes a case involving conduct which falls into the special niche created by § 943.01(2g): damage to a vending or other machine amounting to more than $500 but less than $2,500. See note 1, below.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of criminal damage to property, under Wis. Stat. § 943.01, at the time and place charged in the information.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
>
> "Did the defendant commit the crime of criminal damage to property under all of the following circumstances:
> 1) the property damaged was a machine operated by the insertion of coins, currency, debit cards or credit cards; and,
> 2) the defendant acted with the intent to commit a theft from the machine; and,
> 3) the property was reduced in value by more than $500 but not more than $2,500."

1. This instruction should be given after the basic instruction on criminal damage to property, Wis JI-Criminal 1400, in place of the value question that is provided at the end of that instruction. This assumes that the case is charged as one falling into the special niche created by § 943.01(2g): damage to a vending or other machine amounting to more than $500 but less than $2.500. Damage to a vending machine that exceeded $2,500 could, of course, be charged under the regular penalty provisions and would also be a Class I felony. In that case, the value question at the end of Wis JI-Criminal 1400 should be used.

2. The statute uses the term "intent to commit theft." The definition provided here is what has been used to define "intent to steal." See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1421, Burglary With Intent To Steal. For a complete definition of the crime of theft as defined in § 943.20(1)(a), see Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

3. This is the definition of "reduced in value" provided in § 943.01(2g)(c). Note that it differs from the standard for determining value provided in § 943.01(2)(d) in that it allows consideration of "other monetary losses associated with the damage."

1400B CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY: ENERGY PROVIDER PROPERTY — § 943.01(2k)

THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1400, CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO PROPERTY. [1]

Determining Damage to Energy Provider Property

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Did the defendant commit the crime of criminal damage to property under all of the following circumstances:

1) the property damaged was owned, leased, or operated by an energy provider; and,

2) the defendant intended to or did cause substantial interruption or impairment of any service or good provided by the energy provider."

[A decommissioned nuclear power plant is an energy provider.][2]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of criminal damage to property under all these circumstances, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1400B was approved by the Committee in February 2019.

This instruction addresses subsection (2k) of § 943.01, created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 158. [Effective date: March 2, 2016]. Committing criminal damage to property under the circumstances specified in subsection (2k) increases the penalty to a Class H felony. As with similar provisions, the Committee recommends submitting this issue as a special question, to be considered by the jury if it reaches a guilty verdict on the criminal damage to property charge. The instruction assumes a case involving conduct which falls into the special niche created by § 943.01(2k): damage to energy provider property. See note 1, below.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of criminal damage to property, under Wis. Stat. § 943.01, at the time and place charged in the information.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant commit the crime of criminal damage to property under all of the following circumstances:

1) the property damaged was owned, leased, or operated by an energy provider; and,

2) the defendant intended to or did cause substantial interruption or impairment of any service or good provided by the energy provider.

1. This instruction should be given after the basic instruction on criminal damage to property, Wis JI-Criminal 1400, in place of the value question that is provided at the end of that instruction. This assumes that the case is charged as one falling into the special niche created by § 943.01(2k): damage to energy provider property. Damage to energy provider property that exceeded $2,500 could, of course, be charged under the regular penalty provisions and would be a Class D felony. In that case, the value question at the end of Wis JI-Criminal 1400 should be used.

2. "Specify the applicable category of energy provider." Section 943.143(1)(a) provides:

"Energy provider" means any of the following:

1. A public utility under s. 196.01 (5) (a) that is engaged in any of the following: (a) The production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, power, light, or water. (b) The transmission or delivery of natural gas.
2. A transmission company under s. 196.485 (1) (ge).
3. A cooperative association organized under ch. 185 for the purpose of producing or furnishing heat, light, power or water for its members.
4. A wholesale merchant plant under s. 196.491 (1) (w), except that "wholesale merchant plant" includes an electric generating facility or an improvement to an electric generating facility that is subject to a leased generation contract, as defined in s.196.52 (9) (a) 3.
5. A decommissioned nuclear power plant.
6. A company that operates a gas, oil, petroleum, refined petroleum product, renewable fuel, water, or chemical generation, storage transportation, or delivery system that is not a service station, garage, or other place where gasoline or diesel fuel is sold at retail or offered for sale at retail.

The court should inquire whether the parties agree that the entity whose property is at issue is a qualified energy provider. If there is no agreement, the court should require that the state designate under which subsection they are proceeding.

1400C DAMAGE OR THREAT TO PROPERTY OF A WITNESS — § 943.011

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.011 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) damage to any physical property owned by a person who is or was a witness by reason of the owner having attended or testified as a witness and without the owner's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to physical property that belonged to (name of victim).

   The word "damage" includes anything from mere defacement to total destruction.[1]

   IF THE CASE INVOLVES CAUSING DAMAGE, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

   ["Cause" means that the defendant's conduct was a substantial factor in producing damage.][2]

   IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

[A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][3]

2. (Name of victim) was a witness.

["Witness" means any person who has attended a proceeding to testify or who has testified.][4]

[A [insert proper term from the definition in § 940.41(3)] is a witness.]

3. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to physical property owned by (name of victim) because[5] the person attended or testified as a witness.

4. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to the property without the consent[6] of (name of victim).

5. The defendant acted intentionally.[7] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) damage to property owned by (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result, and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[8]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1400C was originally published in 1998 and revised in 2004 and 2020. The 2004 revision involved adoption of a new format, adding a definition of "true threat," and nonsubstantive changes in the text. The instruction was previously designated as Wis JI-Criminal 1400B and was renumbered JI 1400C in 2020. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

This instruction is for violations of § 943.011(2)(a), which was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 143, effective date: May 5, 1998. Causing criminal damage to the property of a witness was formerly addressed by increasing the penalty for violations of § 943.01, Criminal Damage To Property. Act 143 deleted reference to witnesses from § 943.01 and expanded the scope of the statute by including threats to damage property and, in sub. (2)(b), threats to cause and causing of damage to property owned by family members of a witness. If damage to the property of a family member of a witness is involved, the instruction must be modified.

1. The definition of "damage" is the one provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1400, Criminal Damage To Property. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

2. The Committee concluded that the simple "substantial factor" definition of cause should be sufficient for most cases. Where there is evidence of more than one possible cause, something like the following might be added:

> There may be more than one cause of damage. The act of one person alone might produce it, or the acts of two more persons might jointly produce it.

Also, see Wis JI-Criminal 901, Cause.

3. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

4. The definition of "witness" in the first set of brackets is a simplified version of the definition provided in § 940.41(3), which applies to violations of § 943.011. If that statement does not fit the status of the victim, the definition in the second set of brackets should be used, selecting the proper alternative from the full definition, which reads as follows:

> (3) "Witness" means any natural person who has been or is expected to be summoned to testify; who by reason of having relevant information is subject to call or likely to be called as a witness, whether or not any action or proceeding has as yet been commenced; whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose; who has provided information concerning any crime to any peace officer or prosecutor; who provided information concerning a crime to any employee or agent of a law enforcement agency using a crime reporting telephone hotline or other telephone number provided by the law enforcement agency; or who has been served with a subpoena issued under § 885.01 or under the authority of any court of this state or of the United States.

5. The instruction uses "because" in place of the statutory language "by reason of . . ." The Committee intended no substantive change and believed the instruction will be easier for a jury to understand if "because" is used.

6. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

7. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 940.207, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

8. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1401A CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO RELIGIOUS OR CEMETERY PROPERTY — § 943.012(1) & (2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal damage to property, as defined in [§ 943.012(1)] [§ 943.012(2)] of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes damage[1] to [religious] [cemetery] property[2] of another person without the person's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused damage to property of another.[3]

   The word "damage" includes anything from mere defacement to total destruction.[4]

2. The defendant intentionally caused the damage.

   The term "intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to damage the property or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[5]

3. The defendant caused the damage without the consent[6] of (name of owner, agent, etc.) .

4. The property was [religious] [cemetery] property.

["Religious property" means any church, synagogue, or other building, structure, or place primarily used for religious worship or another religious purpose.][7]

["Cemetery property" means any cemetery, mortuary, other facility used for burial or memorializing the dead.][8]

5. The defendant knew the property was [religious] [cemetery] property, knew the property belonged to another person, and knew that the other person did not consent to the damage.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1402 in 1989. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1402 in 1995. This revision renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 1401A, was approved by the Committee in December 2002 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is for violations of subs. (1) and (2) § 943.012, a statute created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 348. That Act also created § 939.645, which provides an increased penalty for crimes committed against certain persons or property. See Wis JI-Criminal 996 and 996.1.

Subsection (1) of § 943.012 prohibits damage to "religious property;" subsection (2) prohibits damage to "any cemetery, mortuary or other facility used for burial or memorializing the dead." The latter is referred to as "cemetery property" in the instruction. For violations of subsec. (3) – damage to schools and other facilities associated with religious and other groups – see Wis JI-Criminal 1401B. For violations of sub. (4) – damage to personal property contained in property covered by subs. (1) through (3) – see Wis JI-Criminal 1401C.

1. The instruction refers only to "damage," but the statute also applies to one who "intentionally marks, draws or writes with ink or another substance on or intentionally etches into" any physical property. If a case involves conduct prohibited by the statute that is not covered by the general term "damage," the instruction must be modified.

2. This instruction is for violations of subs. (1) and (2) of § 943.012, which prohibit damage to "any church, synagogue or other building, structure or place primarily used for religious worship or another religious purpose" and to "any cemetery, mortuary or other facility used for burial or memorializing the dead." The instruction refers to the former as "religious property" and to the latter as "cemetery property." Definitions are provided in element 4.

3. Section 939.22(38) provides the following definition of "property of another": "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the property." Also see, State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 131, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996), regarding damage to marital property, discussed in note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1400.

4. The definition of "damage" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1400, Criminal Damage To Property. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

5. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

6. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

7. "Religious property" is a shorthand reference to the category of property covered by sub. (1) of § 943.012. See note 2, supra. The definition of the term is based on the full description of that category of property.

8. "Cemetery property" is a shorthand reference to the category of property covered by sub. (2) of § 943.012. See note 2, supra. The definition of the term is based on the full description of that category of property.

9. The three aspects of the knowledge requirement come from applying § 939.23(3): "intentionally" requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and appearing after the "intentionally" in the statute. Further, § 943.012 specifically requires "knowledge of the character of the property."

1401B CRIMINAL DAMAGE TO FACILITIES ASSOCIATED WITH DESIGNATED GROUPS — § 943.012(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal damage to property, as defined in § 943.012(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally causes damage[1] to property of another person without the person's consent, where the property is a school, educational facility, or community center publicly identified as associated with a group of persons of a particular race, religion, color, disability, sexual orientation, national origin, or ancestry, or by an institution of any such group.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant caused damage to property of another.[2]

   The word "damage" includes anything from mere defacement to total destruction.[3]

2. The defendant intentionally caused the damage.

   The term "intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to damage the property or was aware that the conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[4]

3. The defendant caused the damage without the consent[5] of (name of owner, agent, etc.) .

4. The property was a (school) (educational facility) (community center) publicly identified as associated with a group of persons of a particular (race) (religion) (color) (disability) (sexual orientation) (national origin or ancestry) (or by an institution of any such group).

5. The defendant knew the property belonged to another person, knew that the other person did not consent to the damage, and knew that the property was a (school) (educational facility) (community center) publicly identified as associated with a group of persons of a particular (race) (religion) (color) (disability) (sexual orientation) (national origin or ancestry) (or by an institution of any such group).[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1401B was approved by the Committee in December 2002.

This instruction is for violations of sub. (3) of § 943.012, a statute created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 348. That Act also created § 939.645, which provides an increased penalty for crimes committed against certain persons or property. See Wis JI-Criminal 996 and 996.1.

For violations of subsecs. (1) and (2), damage to religious and cemetery property, see Wis JI-Criminal 1401A. For violations of sub. (4) – damage to personal property contained in property covered by subs. (1) through (3) – see Wis JI-Criminal 1401C.

1. The instruction refers only to "damage," but the statute also applies to one who "intentionally marks, draws or writes with ink or another substance on or intentionally etches into" any physical property. If a case involves conduct prohibited by the statute that is not covered by the general term "damage," the instruction must be modified.

2. Section 939.22(38) provides the following definition of "property of another": "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the property." Also see, State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 131, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996), regarding damage to marital property, discussed in note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1400.

3. The definition of "damage" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1400, Criminal Damage To Property. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

4. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. The three aspects of the knowledge requirement come from applying § 939.23(3): "intentionally" requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and appearing after the "intentionally" in the statute. Further, § 943.012 specifically requires "knowledge of the character of the property."

COMMENT

This instruction was approved by the Committee in December 2002.

This instruction is for violations of sub. (4) of § 943.012, a statute created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 348. That Act also created § 939.645, which provides an increased penalty for crimes committed against certain persons or property. See Wis JI-Criminal 996 and 996.1.

For violations of subsecs. (1) and (2), damage to religious and cemetery property, see Wis JI-Criminal 1401A. For violations of sub. (3), damage to facilities belonging to certain groups, see Wis JI-Criminal 1401B.

1. The instruction refers only to "damage," but the statute also applies to one who "intentionally marks, draws or writes with ink or another substance on or intentionally etches into" any physical property. If a case involves conduct prohibited by the statute that is not covered by the general term "damage," the instruction must be modified.

2. This instruction is for violations of sub. (4) of § 943.012, which prohibits damage to "any personal property contained in any property under subs. (1) to (3)." The instruction refers to the "religious property" and "cemetery property" which are shorthand terms for the property specified in subs. (1) and (2). The instruction provides a blank in which to describe the type of property specified in sub. (3). See note 3, below. Definitions are provided in element 4.

3. Here describe the applicable type of property from those designated in sub. (3) of § 943.012, which refers to "any school, educational facility or community center publicly identified as associated with a group of persons of a particular race, religion, color, disability, sexual orientation, national origin or ancestry or by an institution of any such group."

4. Section 939.22(38) provides the following definition of "property of another": "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the property." Also see, State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 131, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996), regarding damage to marital property, discussed in note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1400.

5. The definition of "damage" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1400, Criminal Damage To Property. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

6. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

7. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

8. "Religious property" is a shorthand reference to the category of property covered by sub. (1) of § 943.012. See note 2, supra. The definition of the term is based on the full description of that category of property.

9. "Cemetery property" is a shorthand reference to the category of property covered by sub. (2) of § 943.012. See note 2, supra. The definition of the term is based on the full description of that category of property.

10. This is the property described in sub. (3) of § 943.012.

11. Subsection (4) refers to "group of persons of a particular race, religion, color, disability, sexual orientation, national origin or ancestry." The applicable term should be used in the "describe group" blank.

12. See note 3, supra.

13. The three aspects of the knowledge requirement come from applying § 939.23(3): "intentionally" requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and appearing after the "intentionally" in the statute. Further, § 943.012 specifically requires "knowledge of the character of the property."

1402A CRIMINAL DAMAGE OR THREAT TO PROPERTY OF A JUDGE — § 943.013

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.013 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) damage to any physical property that belongs to a (judge) (family member of a judge) where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[1] that the person whose property is (damaged) (threatened) is a (judge) (family member of a judge), [the judge is acting in an official capacity] [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity],[2] and there is no consent by the person whose property is (damaged) (threatened).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to physical property that belonged to (name of victim).

   The word "damage" includes anything from mere defacement to total destruction.[3]

   IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT, ADD THE FOLLOWING:

   [A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm, and the person making the statement is aware that others could regard the statement as a threat and delivers it anyway. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][4]

2. (Name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., circuit court judge) is a judge.][5]

   [For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][6]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat), the defendant knew[7] that (name of victim) was a (judge) (family member of a judge).

4. [The judge was acting in an official capacity at the time of the (act) (threat).] [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity.][8]

   Judges act in an official capacity if they perform duties that they are employed[9] to perform. A judge who performs acts that are not within the responsibilities of a judge does not act in an official capacity.[10] (The duties of a judge include: _____.)[11]

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to the property without the consent[12] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[13] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) damage to property owned by

(name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[14]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1403.1 in 1994. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1402A and revised in 1995, 2003, and 2004. The 2004 revision amended the definition of "true threat." This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 943.013 was created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 50 (effective date: November 25, 1993).

1. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contains the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (2)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the judge's official capacity. That is, the threat or act must be committed either when the judge is acting in an official capacity or in response to an action taken in the judge's official capacity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

3. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

4. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

5. Section 943.013(1)(b), as amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 61, provides:

> "Judge" means a supreme court justice, court of appeals judge, circuit court judge, municipal judge, temporary or permanent reserve judge or circuit, supplemental, or municipal court commissioner.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. Section 943.013(1)(a) provides:

> "Family member" means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, foster child or treatment foster child.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

7. See note 1, supra.

8. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

9. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

10. The definition of "official capacity' is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

11. It may be helpful to set forth the applicable duty or responsibility here, which may be specifically set forth in statutes or case law.

12. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

13. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 943.013, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

14. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1402B CRIMINAL DAMAGE OR THREAT TO PROPERTY OF A DEPARTMENT OF REVENUE EMPLOYEE — § 943.015

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.015 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally (causes) (threatens to cause) damage to any physical property that belongs to a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee) where at the time of the (act) (threat), the person knows[1] that the person whose property is (damaged) (threatened) is a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee), [the Department of Revenue employee is acting in an official capacity], [the (act) (threat) is in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity],[2] and there is no consent by the person whose property is (damaged) (threatened).

2. (Name of victim) was a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee).

[For the purpose of this offense, a (e.g., child) is a family member.][5]

3. At the time of the (act) (threat), the defendant knew[6] that (name of victim) was a (Department of Revenue employee) (family member of a Department of Revenue employee).

4. [The Department of Revenue employee was acting in an official capacity at the time of the (act) (threat).] [The (act) (threat) was in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity.][7]

Department of Revenue employees act in an official capacity if they perform duties that they are employed[8] to perform. A Department of Revenue employee who performs acts that are not within the responsibilities of a judge does not act in an official capacity.[9] (The duties of a Department of Revenue employee include:_____.)[10]

5. The defendant (caused) (threatened to cause) damage to the property without the consent[11] of (name of victim).

6. The defendant acted intentionally.[12] This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to (cause) (threaten to cause) damage to property owned by (name of victim), or was aware that his or her conduct was practically certain to cause that result and knew that (name of victim) did not consent.[13]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1403.2 in 1994. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1402B and revised in 1995, 2003, and 2004. The 2004 revised the definition of "true threat." This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2023. It amended the definition of a "true threat" according to Counterman v. Colorado, 600 US --- (2023), to clarify that the assessment of the threat requires consideration of both the speaker's perspective (recklessness standard) and the victim's perspective (reasonable person standard).

Section 943.015 was created by 1985 Wisconsin Act 29.

1. Neither the summary of the offense here nor the third element contains the alternative "or should have known" that is provided in the statute [see subsec. (2)(a)]. The Committee believed the phrase would be inapplicable in virtually all cases because a connection is required between the act or threat and the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity. That is, the threat or act must be committed either when the Department of Revenue employee is acting in an official capacity or in response to an action taken in the Department of Revenue employee's official capacity. In either situation, it may be confusing to instruct the jury on the "should have known" alternative. Of course, if that alternative fits the facts of the case, it should be added to the instruction.

2. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

3. See Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 97 (February 1953).

4. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, ¶28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. Perkins held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of a statute criminalizing threatening language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, ¶43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, ¶29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in content and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, ¶23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

5. Section 943.015(1) provides:

"In this section, family member" means a parent, spouse, sibling, child, stepchild, foster child or treatment foster child.

The applicable term should be inserted in the blank.

6. See note 1, supra.

7. One of the alternatives in brackets should be selected.

8. "Employed" is used here in the general sense of being engaged in the performance of a duty.

9. The definition of "official capacity" is taken from Wis JI-Criminal 915. See the Comment to that instruction for further discussion.

10. It may be helpful to set forth the applicable duty or responsibility here, which may be specifically set forth in statutes or case law.

11. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

12. "Intentionally" requires either a mental purpose to cause the result or awareness that the conduct is practically certain to cause it. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

"Intentionally" also generally requires knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. § 939.23(3). This general rule appears to be countered by the drafting style of § 943.015, which divides the facts necessary to constitute the crime among several subsections of the statute. The Committee concluded that the knowledge requirement that usually accompanies the use of "intentionally" does not carry over to the three facts set forth in (2)(a), through (b) and (c). Sub. (2)(a) has its own mental state – "knows or should know" – and thereby breaks the connection between "intentionally" used in sub. (2) proper and the other facts that follow.

13. The requirement that the defendant know there is no consent is based on the definition of "intentionally" in § 939.23(3): ". . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word intentionally.

1403 GRAFFITI — § 943.017(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.017(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally marks, draws or writes with paint, ink or another substance on or intentionally etches into the physical property of another without the other person's consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (marked) (drew) (wrote) with paint, ink or another substance on physical property.[1]
2. The physical property belonged to another person.[2] [_____ is a person for purposes of this element.][3]
3. The defendant (marked) (drew) (wrote) on the property without the consent of (name of owner, agent, etc.) .
4. The defendant acted intentionally. The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to (mark) (draw) (write) on the property.[4]
5. The defendant knew the property belonged to another person and knew that the other person did not consent to (marking) (drawing) (writing) on the property.[5]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE PROPERTY WAS REDUCED IN VALUE BY MORE THAN $2,500.[6]

[Finding the Reduction in the Value of the Property]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Was the property reduced in value by more than $2,500?"

"Reduced in value" means what it would cost to repair or replace the property, or to remove the (marking) (drawing) (writing), whichever is less.[7] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was reduced in value by more than $2,500.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING DAMAGE TO MORE THAN ONE ITEM OF PROPERTY "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 943.017(3).[8]

[In determining the amount by which the value of the property was reduced, you may consider all damage that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt was caused by acts of the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1403 was originally published in 1995 and revised in 1998 and 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2009 and involved updating to reflect the renumbering of the statute's subsections.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.017(1), Graffiti, created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 24 [effective date: July 20, 1995]. The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a Class I felony in five situations specified in sub. (2), one of which is addressed by this instruction: where the value of the property is reduced by more than $2,500. See sub. (2)(d). This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001.

The offense is also a Class I felony where the property damaged:

- is a vehicle or highway and the damage is of a kind which is likely to cause injury to a person or further property damage [sub. (2)(a)]

- belongs to a public utility or common carrier and the damage is of a kind which is likely to impair the services of the public utility or common carrier [sub. (2)(b)]

- belongs to a person who is or was a witness or a grand or petit juror and the damage was caused by reason of the owner's having attended or testified as a witness or by reason of any verdict or indictment assented to by the owner [sub. (2)(c)]

- is on state-owned land and is listed on the registry under § 943.01 [sub. (2)(e)].

If one of the above is alleged, the Committee recommends handling it with a special question, in the same manner that the value question is handled in this instruction.

1995 Wisconsin Act 24 also amended § 943.012, Criminal damage to religious and other property, to include damage caused by "graffiti." See Wis JI-Criminal 1402.

Subsection (2m) of § 947.017 defines offenses against property of witnesses and family members of witnesses. There is no uniform instruction for those offenses.

1. The statute applies to one who "intentionally marks, draws or writes with paint, ink or another substance on or intentionally etches into the physical property of another." The instruction uses the alternative terms, "marks," "draws," or "writes." In a case that involves "etching into," the phrase "etched into physical property" should be substituted throughout the instruction.

2. Section 939.22(28) provides the following definition of "property of another": "'Property of another' means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the property."

3. In many cases, the property is likely to belong to a government unit, a business or similar entity. In those cases, it would be helpful to the jury to state that, for example, "The City of Milwaukee is a person for purposes of this element." See § 990.01(26): "Person" includes all partnership, associations and bodies politic or corporate."

4. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" definition of "intentionally" is most likely to apply to this offense. "Intentionally" also includes being "practically certain that his or her conduct will cause that result." See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

5. See Wis. Stat. § 939.23(3).

6. A misdemeanor charge requires no finding as to reduction in value. This instruction and the verdict question need be given only if a felony is charged and the evidence would support a finding of damage exceeding $2,500. The value level was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 2001, effective date: September 1, 2001.

7. § 943.017(2)(d).

8. See § 947.013(4). This states the same rule as that applicable to criminal damage to property under § 943.01. See note 8, Wis JI-Criminal 1400.

1404 ARSON OF A BUILDING OF ANOTHER — § 943.02(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Arson, as defined in § 943.02(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by means of fire, intentionally damages any building of another without consent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally damaged a building[1] by means of fire.

   "Damaged" means injured, charred, defaced, and includes smoke damage.[2]

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to damage the building of another by means of fire or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause damage to the building of another.[3]

2. The building belonged to another person.[4]

3. The defendant damaged the building without the owner's[5] consent.

   "Without consent" means that there was no consent in fact.[6]

4. The defendant knew that the building belonged to another person and knew that the other person did not consent to the damage of the building.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1404 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1977, 1991, and 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. This instruction has never included a definition of "building." In State v. Kuntz, 160 Wis.2d 722, 467 N.W.2d 531 (1991), the court held it was error for the trial court to state that "a mobile home is a building." The court said this created a "mandatory conclusive presumption . . . regarding an element of the arson offense." However, the court further held that the error was harmless because it played no role in the jury's verdict:

> We conclude that no rational juror could plausibly find that the structure in question was a mobile home without also finding that the structure was a building. . . . If the jury found this structure to be a mobile home, as that term is commonly understood, this finding would be the 'functional equivalent' of finding that the structure was a building.

160 Wis.2d 722, 740.

Kuntz was decided as the 1992 revision of Wis JI-Criminal 1404 was being prepared for publication. The Committee will be pursuing the issues raised by the decision in the hope of developing a rationale for addressing them. At the present time, a trial court obviously must avoid a statement like the one reviewed in Kuntz. If a definition of "building" is necessary, resort to a standard dictionary may be helpful. For example, Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary provides that a "building" refers to "a usually roofed and walled structure built for permanent use (as for a dwelling)."

Wisconsin appellate courts have addressed the meaning of "building" on two occasions that are not directly on point but may be of some usefulness. In Clark v. State, 69 Wis. 203, 33 N.W. 436 (1887), the issue was whether an unfinished house from which tools were taken was covered by § 4409 R.S. which made it a burglary to break "and enter in the night-time any office, shop, or any other building not adjoining or occupied with any dwelling house, or any ship, steamboat, vessel, railroad freight car or passenger car, with intent to commit the crime of larceny or other felony." The court held that the unfinished house was a "building" for purposes of burglary and defined the term as follows:

> . . . an edifice or structure erected upon land, and so far completed that it may be used temporarily or permanently for the occupation or shelter of man or beast, or for the storage of tools or other personal property for safe-keeping. . . . "The well-understood meaning of the word is a structure which has a capacity to contain, and is designed for the habitation of man or animals, or the sheltering of property."

69 Wis. 203, 206-07

A more recent case discusses "building" in connection with zoning rules prohibiting "mobile homes" but allowing "modular homes" and other buildings. The person's home had been mobile once, but at the site was affixed to a foundation and attached to utilities with steel undercarriage and trailer hitch removed. The court of appeals used the county's own definition of "building" and found that the home in question qualified:

> . . . the county relies on the terms "building" and "mobile home" to classify structures. A building is "any structure used, designed or intended to be used for the protection, shelter or enclosure of persons, animals or property." It is clear that Hansman's structure is intended for the protection, shelter and enclosure of persons.

Hansman v. Oneida Co., 123 Wis.2d 511, 513, 366 N.W.2d 901 (Ct. App. 1985).

2. "The word 'damage' includes, in addition to what is thought of as damage in the narrow sense, anything from mere defacement and mutilation to total destruction." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 97 (Wis. Legislative Council, 1953). The quoted material referred to "damage" as used in the criminal damage to property statute; the meaning of "damage" was considered to be the same for arson, which was called "Criminal Damage By Fire or Explosives" in the original 1953 draft of the Criminal Code. Ibid, p. 99. The name of the offense was changed to "arson" before the draft was enacted. The recodification of the arson statutes was not intended to change the substantive law, although "by means of fire, intentionally damages," was substituted for "sets fire to or burns or causes to be burned" under the pre-1956 law. Bill Platz commented on this change in his law review article on the Criminal Code revision.

> This change is not intended to produce any different result, although conceivably the new language could be construed to include smoke damage without actual charring. However, such cases should be prosecuted under Code § 943.01 [criminal damage to property], or as attempted arson under Code § 939.32 depending on the facts.

Platz, "The Criminal Code: Thumbnail History of the Code" 1956 Wis. Law Rev. 350, 374

The Committee concluded that any damage, including smoke damage, is sufficient under the arson statutes as long as the damage is caused "by means of fire."

3. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3). See also Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of "intentionally."

The footnote to the 1980 version of this instruction provided as follows: "The defendant may set fire to furniture with mental purpose to damage only the furniture; he may be found guilty of arson of the building though indifferent to that result." This statement was cited and applied in State v. Thompson, 146 Wis.2d 554, 431 N.W.2d 716 (Ct. App. 1988). The court found that the defendant's actions of placing crumpled newspapers against a wall under drapes and igniting them "manifest an intent to damage the building." 146 Wis.2d 554, 563. Also see State v. Dunn, 121 Wis.2d 389, 359 N.W.2d 151 (1984), discussing the sufficiency of the evidence at a preliminary examination to show intent to damage the building.

4. If it is necessary to define "building of another," the Committee suggests the following: "A building in which a person other than the defendant has a legal or equitable interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal or equitable interest in the building." This is based on the definition provided in § 943.02(2). "Another" under this definition includes a mortgagee. State v. Phillips, 99 Wis.2d 46, 289 N.W.2d 239 (1980). (The state had to rely on the mortgagee in the Phillips case because the owner of the building would not complain.)

5. The instruction refers to damage caused without consent of the "owner," but the statute does apply to damage caused without consent of any other person who has a right in the building superior to that of the defendant. In a case involving someone other than the owner, this part of the instruction would have to be modified.

6. If further definition of "without consent" is necessary, see § 939.22(48)(a)-(c) and Wis JI-Criminal 948.

In State v. Shoffner, 31 Wis.2d 412, 143 N.W.2d 354 (1958), the defendant contended that proof was lacking on the "without consent" element because the state produced the testimony of the owner but not that of his wife, who owned the property jointly with her husband. The court rejected the claim, finding that it was sufficient to show that one co-owner did not consent, since "the only reasonable inference which can be drawn from the undisputed facts in this case is that Shoffner acted without the consent of any owner." 31 Wis.2d 412, 430.

1405 ARSON OF A BUILDING WITH INTENT TO DEFRAUD AN INSURER — § 943.02(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Arson, as defined in § 943.02(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by means of fire, intentionally damages any building with intent to defraud an insurer of that building.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally damaged a building[1] by means of fire.

   "Damaged" means injured, charred, defaced, and includes smoke damage.[2]

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to damage the building by means of fire or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause damage to the building.[3]

2. The defendant damaged the building with intent to defraud an insurer of that building.

   The intent to defraud is the mental purpose to deceive an insurer of the building, and thereby induce an insurer to make payment under a fire insurance policy.[4] This intent must have been formed at some time before the fire started and must have continued to exist at the time the fire started.[5]

ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH WHEN THE VALIDITY OR EXISTENCE OF AN INSURANCE POLICY IS QUESTIONED:

[Whether in fact there was insurance coverage on the building is immaterial. It is sufficient that the defendant believed there was such coverage on the building.][6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

4. Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, p. 101.

Section 943.02(2) provides that recovery or attempt to recover on an insurance policy is not an essential element of the crime but is relevant on the issue of intent to defraud.

5. If the fire was not directly set by the defendant, it should be made clear that the intent to defraud an insurer must have existed when the accomplice was hired to set it. In such a case, this instruction would need to be modified, and the jury would also have to be instructed on the appropriate basis of party-to-crime liability under § 939.05.

1408 ARSON OF PROPERTY OTHER THAN A BUILDING — § 943.03

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Arson, as defined in § 943.03 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by means of fire, intentionally damages any property of another without the person's consent if the property is not a building and has a value of $100 or more.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally damaged (describe property) [1] by means of fire.

   "Damaged" means injured, charred, defaced, and includes smoke damage.[2]

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to damage the property of another by means of fire or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause damage to the property.[3]

2. The (describe property) was the property of another.

   ["Property of another" means property in which a person other than the defendant has a legal interest which the defendant has no right to defeat or impair, even though the defendant may also have a legal interest in the property.[4] A _____ is a legal interest in property.][5]

3. The defendant damaged the property by fire without the owner's consent[6] (or the consent of the owner's authorized agent).

4. The value of the (describe property) was $100 or more.

5. The defendant knew that:

· that the (describe property) belonged to another person; and

· that the other person did not consent to the damage of the property; and

· that the value of the property was $100 or more.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1408 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1977, 1983, 1992, and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2011 and involved correcting an inadvertent error in element 5 and nonsubstantive changes in footnotes.

Section 943.03 was amended by 1999 Wisconsin Act 85 [effective date: May 6, 2000] to read as follows:

943.03 Arson of property other than building. Whoever, by means of fire, intentionally damages any property of another without the person's consent, if the property is not a building and has a value of $100 or more, is guilty of a Class E felony.

1. The property, which must be property "other than a building" for this offense, should be identified in this blank by referring, for example, to "the boat" or "the automobile," etc.

2. "The word 'damage' includes, in addition to what is thought of as damage in the narrow sense, anything from mere defacement and mutilation to total destruction." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 97 (Wis. Legislative Council, 1953). The quoted material referred to "damage" as used in the criminal damage to property statute; the meaning of "damage" was considered to be the same for arson, which was called "Criminal Damage By Fire or Explosives" in the original 1953 draft of the Criminal Code. Ibid, p. 99. The name of the offense was changed to "arson" before the draft was enacted. The recodification of the arson statutes was not intended to change the substantive law, although "by means of fire, intentionally damages," was substituted for "sets fire to or burns or causes to be burned" under the pre-1956 law. Bill Platz commented on this change in his law review article on the Criminal Code revision.

> This change is not intended to produce any different result, although conceivably the new language could be construed to include smoke damage without actual charring. However, such cases should be prosecuted under Code § 943.01 [criminal damage to property], or as attempted arson under Code § 939.32 depending on the facts.

Platz, "The Criminal Code: Thumbnail History of the Code" 1956 Wis. Law Rev. 350, 374

The Committee concluded that any damage, including smoke damage, is sufficient under the arson statutes as long as the damage is caused "by means of fire."

3. This is the definition of "intentionally" provided in § 939.23(3). See also Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of "intentionally."

4. This paragraph should be included only if the defendant had an interest in the property. The definition of "property of another" is based on the one provided in § 939.22(28). Also see State v. Sevelin, 204 Wis.2d 127, 554 N.W.2d 521 (Ct. App. 1996), affirming a conviction for criminal damage to property where the charge was based on the defendant damaging his own marital home – the defendant's wife also had an ownership interest in the home, qualifying it as "property of another."

5. The Committee concluded that a trial judge may inform the jury that a particular interest is a legal interest in property as long as there is legal authority to support that statement. For example, § 401.201(37) defines and provides examples of "security interest."

6. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

In State v. Shoffner, 31 Wis.2d 412, 143 N.W.2d 354 (1958), the defendant contended that proof was lacking on the "without consent" element because the state produced the testimony of the owner but not that of his wife, who owned the property jointly with her husband. The court rejected the claim, finding that it was sufficient to show that one co-owner did not consent, since "the only reasonable inference which can be drawn from the undisputed facts in this case is that Shoffner acted without the consent of any owner." 31 Wis.2d 412, 430.

7. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3).

1410 ARSON (OF PROPERTY OTHER THAN A BUILDING) WITH INTENT TO DEFRAUD — § 943.04

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Arson, as defined in § 943.04 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, by means of fire, damages any property other than a building with intent to defraud an insurer of that property.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant damaged (describe property)[2] by means of fire.

   "Damaged" means injured, charred, defaced, and includes smoke damage.[3]

2. The defendant damaged (describe property), by means of fire, with intent to defraud an insurer of the (describe property).

   The intent to defraud is the mental purpose to deceive an insurer of the property, and thereby induce an insurer to make payment under a fire insurance policy.[4] This intent must have been formed at any time before the fire started and must have continued to exist at the time the fire started.[5]

   GIVE THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH WHEN THE VALIDITY OR EXISTENCE OF AN INSURANCE POLICY IS QUESTIONED:

[Whether in fact there was insurance coverage on the property is immaterial. It is sufficient that the defendant believed there was insurance coverage on the property.][6]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1410 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1992. This revision was approved by the Committee in and involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the comment.

1. Note that, unlike the other arson statutes, § 943.04 does not use the word "intentionally." Thus, the instruction also does not include it.

2. The property, which must be property "other than a building" for this offense, should be identified in this blank by referring, for example, to "the boat" or "the automobile," etc.

3. See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1404.

4. Volume V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 101 (February 1953).

5. If the fire was not directly set by the defendant, it should be made clear that the intent to defraud an insurer must have existed when the accomplice was hired to set it. The instruction would need to be modified, and the jury would also have to be instructed on the appropriate basis of party-to-crime liability under § 939.05.

1417 MOLOTOV COCKTAILS[1] (FIREBOMBS): POSSESSION[2] — § 943.06

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.06 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who possesses a firebomb.[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed an object.

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[4] had the object under (his) (her) actual physical control.[5]

2. The object was a firebomb.

   "Firebomb" means a breakable container containing a flammable liquid with a flashpoint of 150 degrees Fahrenheit or less, having a wick or similar device capable of being ignited. The term "firebomb" does not mean a device commercially manufactured primarily for the purpose of illumination.[6]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1417 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1987 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007.

1. The statutory title for this offense uses the term "molotov cocktail," though that term is not used elsewhere in the statute. The American Heritage Dictionary provides the following definition:

> Molotov cocktail: A makeshift bomb made of a breakable container filled with flammable liquid and provided with a usually rag wick that is lighted just before being hurled.

It is named after Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov (1890 - 1986), a Soviet politician who was head of the Council of People's commissars (1930-41) and foreign minister (1939-49 and 1953-56).

2. Section 943.06(2) applies to whoever "possesses, manufactures, sells, offers for sale, gives or transfers a firebomb." This instruction is drafted for a case involving "possession." Wis JI-Criminal 1418 is drafted for cases involving the other alternatives.

3. Subsection (3) of § 943.06 provides an exception for authorized possession of a firebomb by a member of the armed services, a fireman, or a law enforcement officer.

4. Generally, § 943.06 appears to be a "strict liability" statute, and the presence or absence of criminal intent or knowledge on the part of the defendant is immaterial. See Wis JI-Criminal 1418, note 2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession," however, is the element of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927). Knowing or conscious possession is accordingly included as an element that must be alleged and proved by the state, notwithstanding the "strict liability" interpretation given § 943.06 in Wis JI-Criminal 1418.

5. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

6. This is the definition provided in § 943.06(1).

1418 MOLOTOV COCKTAILS[1] (FIREBOMBS): MANUFACTURE, SALE, OFFER TO SELL, GIFT OR TRANSFER — § 943.06

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.06 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who manufactures, sells, offers for sale, gives, or transfers a firebomb.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant (manufactured) (sold) (offered for sale) (gave) (transferred) a firebomb.[2]

"Firebomb" means a breakable container containing a flammable liquid with a flash point of 150 degrees Fahrenheit or less, having a wick or similar device capable of being ignited. The term "firebomb" does not mean a device commercially manufactured primarily for the purpose of illumination.[3]

["Transfer" means any transaction involving a change in possession of a firebomb or a change of right, title, or interest to or in a firebomb.][4]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant (manufactured) (sold) (offered for sale) (gave) (transferred) a firebomb, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1418 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. The statutory title for this offense uses the term "molotov cocktail," though that term is not used elsewhere in the statute. The American Heritage Dictionary provides the following definition:

> Molotov cocktail: A makeshift bomb made of a breakable container filled with flammable liquid and provided with a usually rag wick that is lighted just before being hurled.

It is named after Vyacheslav Mikhailovich Molotov (1890 - 1986), a Soviet politician who was head of the Council of People's commissars (1930-41) and foreign minister (1939-49 and 1953-56).

2. Section 943.06(2) does not contain any of the words or phrases outlined in § 939.23 which indicate that knowledge or criminal intent is an element of a crime. Accordingly, although it remains an arguable issue inasmuch as the Wisconsin Supreme Court has not construed or interpreted § 943.06, it appears that § 943.06 is a "strict liability" statute and that knowledge or criminal intent does not have to be alleged or proved by the state in order to obtain a conviction under it. This appears to be the case, at least regarding a person who manufactures, sells, offers for sale, gives, or transfers a firebomb. With respect to a person who is charged with possession of a firebomb, see Wis JI-Criminal 1417.

3. This is the definition provided in § 943.06(1).

4. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(40). Insert this sentence when transfer of a firebomb is charged.

1421 BURGLARY WITH INTENT TO STEAL[1] — § 943.10(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Burglary, as defined in § 943.10 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters a building[2] without the consent of the person in lawful possession and with intent to steal.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered a building.[3]
2. The defendant entered the building without the consent[4] of the person in lawful possession.[5]
3. The defendant knew that the entry was without consent.[6]
4. The defendant entered the building with intent to steal.[7]

"Intent to steal" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to take and carry away[8] movable property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the property.[9] [It requires that the defendant knew the property belonged to another and knew the person did not consent to the taking of the property.][10]

When Must Intent Exist?

The intent to steal must be formed before entry is made. The intent to steal, which is an essential element of burglary, is no more or less than the mental purpose to steal formed at any time before the entry, which continued to exist at the time of the entry.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[11]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF ONE OF THE AGGRAVATING FACTORS SET FORTH IN § 943.10(2) IS CHARGED AND SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE, ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1425A, 1425B, OR 1425C.[12]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1421 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1984, 1991, 1993, 1996, 2001, and 2020. The 2020 revision added to footnote 2 of the comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it updated footnote 10 to correct the referenced section in the statutory citation.

Criminal trespass to dwelling under § 943.14 is not a lesser included offense of burglary with intent to steal. Raymond v. State, 55 Wis.2d 482, 198 N.W.2d 351 (1972).

1. This instruction is drafted for burglary with the "intent to steal." If "intent to commit a felony" is charged, see Wis JI-Criminal 1424. For burglary offenses committed "while armed" or under other aggravating circumstances as prohibited by § 943.10(2), see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A, 1425B, and 1425C.

2. The model instruction is drafted for a case involving entry into a "building." It must be modified if entry involved any of the other places listed in § 943.10(1)(a) through (f): any building or dwelling; an enclosed railroad car; an enclosed portion of any ship or vessel; a locked enclosed cargo portion of a truck or trailer; a motor home or other motorized type of home or a trailer home, whether or not any person is living in any such home; or a room in any of the above.

The instruction has never included a definition of "building." The meaning of the term has been considered to be the same for burglary and arson cases. In an arson case, State v. Kuntz, 160 Wis.2d 722, 467 N.W.2d 531 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held it was error for the trial court to state that "a mobile home is a building." The court said this created a "mandatory conclusive presumption . . . regarding an element of the arson offense." However, the court further held that the error was harmless because it played no role in the jury's verdict:

> We conclude that no rational juror could plausibly find that the structure in question was a mobile home without also finding that the structure was a building. . . . If the jury found this structure to be a mobile home, as that term is commonly understood, this finding would be the 'functional equivalent' of finding that the structure was a building.

160 Wis.2d 722, 740.

In United States of America v. Franklin, 2019 WI 64, 387 Wis.2d 259, 272, 928 N.W.2d 545, the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that the locational alternatives provided in Wis. Stat. § 943.01(1m)(a)-(f) are alternative factual means of committing one element of burglary. Providing context to this holding, the court referenced an example previously incorporated in State v. Pinder, 2018 WI 106, ¶60, 384 Wis. 2d 416, 919 N.W.2d 568. Although the issue in Pinder concerned the validity of a search warrant issued for the placement and use of a GPS tracking device on a motor vehicle, the court did make a ruling in which it denied an ineffective assistance of counsel claim for failure to object to the burglary jury instruction Wis. JI-Criminal 1421. Addressing this claim, the court emphasized the latitude afforded in the crafting of a burglary jury instruction so as to comport with the evidence of the case, noting that:

> "[w]hile the circuit court could have used the phrase 'a room within a building' instead of the words 'office' or 'building,' the facts adduced would not confuse the jury as to what it was called upon to decide regardless of which of these words might be used." Id. at 456.

The court in Franklin cited the analysis of the statutory text, the legislative history and context of the statute, along with the nature of the conduct, and the appropriateness of multiple punishments in its conclusion that Wis. Stat. § 943.01 "identifies alternative means of committing one element of the crime of burglary under § 943.01 (1m)(a)-(f)." Franklin at 273. Furthermore, the court found that the crime of burglary does not include a separate locational element and jury unanimity on finding guilt beyond a reasonable doubt as to locational alternatives provided in § 943.01(1m)(a)-(f) is not necessary to convict. Id. 273.

If a definition of "building" is necessary, resort to a standard dictionary may be helpful. For example, Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary provides that a "building" refers to "a usually roofed and walled structure built for permanent use (as for a dwelling)."

In Clark v. State, 69 Wis. 203, 33 N.W. 436 (1887), the issue was whether an unfinished house from which tools were taken was covered by § 4409 R.S. which made it a burglary to break "and enter in the night-time any office, shop, or any other building not adjoining or occupied with any dwelling house, or any ship, steamboat, vessel, railroad freight car or passenger car, with intent to commit the crime of larceny or other felony." The court held that the unfinished house was a "building" for purposes of burglary and defined the term as follows:

> . . . an edifice or structure erected upon land, and so far completed that it may be used temporarily or permanently for the occupation or shelter of man or beast, or for the storage of tools or other personal property for safe-keeping. . . . "The well-understood meaning of the word is a structure which has a capacity to contain, and is designed for the habitation of man or animals, or the sheltering of property."

69 Wis. 203, 206-07

A more recent case discusses "building" in connection with zoning rules prohibiting "mobile homes" but allowing "modular homes" and other buildings. The person's home had been mobile once, but at the site was affixed to a foundation and attached to utilities with steel undercarriage and trailer hitch removed. The court of appeals used the county's own definition of "building" and found that the home in question qualified:

> . . . the county relies on the terms "building" and "mobile home" to classify structures. A building is "any structure used, designed or intended to be used for the protection, shelter or enclosure of persons, animals or property." It is clear that Hansman's structure is intended for the protection, shelter and enclosure of persons.

Hansman v. Oneida Co., 123 Wis.2d 511, 513, 366 N.W.2d 901 (Ct. App. 1985).

3. The offense of burglary is complete upon the slightest entry by the defendant into any one of the places described in § 943.10(1)(a)-(f) without the consent of the person in lawful possession, when such entry is made with the required intent. The least entry with any part of the body is sufficient. State v. Barclay, 54 Wis.2d 651, 655n.10, 196 N.W.2d 745 (1972).

The crime of burglary is completed once "the defendant jimmied the lock and pushed against the door, pushing it inward, [and making] entry onto the premises. . . . Whether he stepped in or, as he testified, later reached in to close the door, would not matter. It is not how or why the door was closed that matters. It is the fact that it was opened by a person with intent to steal that furnishes both entry and intent, the prerequisite for the crime of burglary." Morones v. State, 61 Wis.2d 544, 548-49, 213 N.W.2d 31 (1973).

4. The defendant's entry into the place involved was without consent if the person in lawful possession did not consent in fact or if consent was given under the circumstances provided by Wis. Criminal Code § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). "Consent to enter which is obtained by the use or threat of force or by pretense of legal authority is in legal effect entry 'without consent.' The same ordinarily is true of consent obtained because the person giving the consent is mistaken as to the nature of the thing to which he consents. . . ." 1953 Legislative Council Committee Report on the Criminal Code, page 102.

Entry into a place when it is open to the public is not "without consent," see § 943.10(3). Thus, entry into a hotel lobby open to the public, although done with the intent to steal, is not burglary. Champlin v. State, 84 Wis.2d 621, 267 N.W.2d 295 (1978).

However, one who enters with consent may remain "at a time or place beyond his authority. 'Entry' in § 943.10(1)(a), Stats., must be construed to mean not only the simple act of passing through the outer wall of a structure but also the result of such action, namely, presence within the structure." Levesque v. State, 63 Wis.2d 412, 217 N.W.2d 317 (1974). Thus, an otherwise lawful entry became unlawful when Levesque hid himself in the false ceiling of the men's room and remained there until after the restaurant was closed.

State v. Schantek, 120 Wis.2d 79, 353 N.W.2d 832 (Ct. App. 1984), involved an entry of a gas station by an employee after regular business hours. The station closed at 9:00 p.m., and Schantek entered at around 11:30 p.m., using his own key. He took money from a cash box. The court upheld the conviction for burglary, stating that the extent of consent under these circumstances must be determined on the facts of each case:

> The task in most cases will be to determine the limits of such consent and the defendant's knowledge or lack of it.
> . . . . We do conclude, however, that the arrangement between Schantek and his employer clearly rendered certain presence inappropriate and thus beyond the limits of the employer's consent and Schantek's knowledge. A fair reading of the evidence does not allow for the strained conclusion that Benco gave Schantek all-encompassing consent to enter the premises at all times for all purposes – including criminal adventure. Nor does the evidence remotely allow for Schantek's claim of knowledge of such all-encompassing consent. We therefore conclude under the facts of this case that the employer did not give Schantek consent to enter the premises, and Schantek had knowledge of such nonconsent.

120 Wis.2d 79, 85.

The Schantek approach was applied in State v. Karow, 154 Wis.2d 375, 453 N.W.2d 181 (Ct. App. 1990). In Karow, the defendant claimed the entry was with consent because the victim allowed him to come into the house and use the telephone. After entering, Karow and accomplices killed the victim. The court of appeals affirmed the burglary conviction, finding that the entry was "without consent" because of an "implied limitation on the scope of the invitation to enter":

> We hold that an implied limitation on the scope of the consent to enter may be recognized, and we recognize it here. The record supports an inference, not patently incredible, that the consent Brown granted to Karow, a stranger, was limited to a specific area and a single purpose. That consent can in no way be reasonably construed to extend beyond the purpose for which it was granted.

154 Wis.2d 375, 384.

5. Under § 943.10, the question is one of lawful possession and not legal title. Ordinarily, the question of who is in lawful possession, while presenting a mixed question of law and fact, can be decided by the court as a matter of law on admitted or undisputed facts.

6. Knowledge that the entry is without consent is an element of the offense of burglary because of the standard interpretation of criminal statutes required by § 939.23(3): Where the word "intentionally" is used, "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The decision in Hanson v. State, 52 Wis.2d 396, 190 N.W.2d 129 (1971), is sometimes cited for the contrary position. However, Hanson involved a defendant's postconviction challenge to the validity of his guilty plea and simply held that there was an adequate factual basis for a finding that there was no consent in fact to the defendant's entry. Under such circumstances, said the court, there was no additional burden on the state to show that the defendant did not "purport to be acting under legal authority," one of the alternatives to "no consent in fact" provided in the statutory definition of without consent, § 939.22(48). Recent decisions have reaffirmed that knowledge that entry is without consent is an essential element of burglary. See State v. Schantek, supra, note 4, and State v. Wilson, 160 Wis.2d 774, 467 N.W.2d 130 (Ct. App. 1991).

7. The problem of circumstantially proving intent to steal has received considerable attention from the Wisconsin Supreme Court. The present rule provides that while "intent to steal will not be inferred from the fact of entry alone," "'additional circumstances such as time, nature of the place entered, method of entry, identity of the accused and other circumstances, without proof of actual larceny, can be sufficient to permit a reasonable person to conclude the defendant entered with an intent to steal.'" State v. Barclay, 54 Wis.2d 651, 654, 196 N.W.2d 745 (1972), citing Strait v. State, 41 Wis.2d 552, 562, 164 N.W.2d 505 (1969). Also see State v. Holmstrom, 43 Wis.2d 465, 168 N.W.2d 574 (1969), and Bethards v. State, 45 Wis.2d 606, 173 N.W.2d 634 (1970), overruling State v. Kennedy, 15 Wis.2d 600, 113 N.W.2d 372 (1962). For a complete review of prior cases, see State v. Bowden, 93 Wis.2d 574, 288 N.W.2d 139 (1980).

8. The instruction uses "take and carry away" since it is the most common type of theft and the one that would most often be involved in a burglary case. In a proper case, the other alternatives in the theft statute ("use, transfer, conceal, or retain possession of . . .") should be substituted.

9. "Intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession" is used as the most common type of "intent to steal." It is possible that a burglary offense could involve mental states for other types of stealing. See, for example, theft under § 943.20(1)(b), which involves "intent to convert to his own use" and theft under § 943.10(1)(c), which requires intent to deprive a pledgee or other person having a superior right of possession.

10. The bracketed material should be added if there is evidence that, for example, the defendant believed he was reclaiming his own property. Referred to as "right to recapture," "claim of right," or "self-help," this defensive matter tends to negate either the "property of another" or the "knew it was property of another" elements. The rule applies to burglary, see State v. Pettit, 171 Wis.2d 627, 492 N.W.2d 633 (Ct. App. 1992), and is discussed at Wis JI-Criminal 710, Law Note: Right to Recapture.

11. Evidence of the defendant's possession of recently stolen property may often be offered to support a finding of intent to steal. If an instruction on the effect of such evidence is requested, see Wis

JI-Criminal 170, Circumstantial Evidence, and 173, Possession of Recently Stolen Property.

12. Burglary, as defined in § 943.10(1m), is punished as a Class F felony. The penalty increases to a Class E felony if a burglary is committed under any of the circumstances defined in subsec. (2). The Committee recommends handling these penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the basic burglary instruction is given. Instructions are provided for three of the four factors identified in subsec. (2): while armed (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A); while unarmed, but the person arms himself or herself while in the enclosure (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425B); while in the enclosure, the person uses explosives to open a depository (there is no instruction for this alternative); and, while in the enclosure, the person commits a battery upon a person lawfully therein (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425C).

1422 BURGLARY WITH INTENT TO STEAL; WHILE ARMED WITH A DANGEROUS WEAPON[1] — § 943.10(1), (2)(a)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1422 was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1991 and 1993. It was withdrawn in 1996.

This instruction was withdrawn and replaced by Wis JI-Criminal 1425A. Instead of creating separate instructions for "armed burglary," the Committee concluded that it was more efficient to provide "special question" instructions to address the penalty-enhancing provisions found in subsec. (2) of § 943.10. These are provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1425A, 1425B and 1425C and can be added to either of the general burglary instructions: Wis JI-Criminal 1421, Burglary With Intent To Steal; or, Wis JI-Criminal 1424, Burglary With Intent To Commit A Felony.

1. This instruction is drafted for burglary with the "intent to steal," committed while armed with a dangerous weapon. If "intent to commit a felony" is charged, combine the explanation of "while armed . . ." in this instruction with Wis JI-Criminal 1424. This instruction may also be useful as a model for other aggravated offenses defined in subsec. (2) of § 943.10.

1424 BURGLARY WITH INTENT TO COMMIT A FELONY[1] – § 943.10(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Burglary, as defined in § 943.10 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters a building[2] without the consent of the person in lawful possession and with intent to commit a felony therein.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered a building.[3]
2. The defendant entered the building without the consent[4] of the person in lawful possession.[5]
3. The defendant knew that the entry was without consent.[6]
4. The defendant entered the building with intent to commit (state felony)[7], [that is, that the defendant intended to commit (state felony) at the time the defendant entered the building].[8]

   [IF THE JURY IS ALSO INSTRUCTED ON THE INTENDED FELONY, IT IS SUFFICIENT TO REFER TO THAT INSTRUCTION AND NOT REPEAT IT HERE.]

[IF THE INTENDED FELONY IS NOT CHARGED, DEFINE THE CRIME, REFERRING TO THE ELEMENTS AND DEFINITIONS IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION FOR THAT OFFENSE.]

When Must Intent Exist?

The intent to commit a felony must be formed before entry is made. The intent to commit (state felony) which is an essential element of burglary is no more or less than the mental purpose[9] to commit (state felony) formed at any time before the entry, which continued to exist at the time of the entry.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF ONE OF THE AGGRAVATING FACTORS SET FORTH IN § 943.10(2) IS CHARGED AND SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE, ADD WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1425A, 1425B, OR 1425C.[10]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1421 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1985, 1991, 1994, 1995, 1998, 2001, 2020, and 2021. The 2020 revision added to footnote 2 of the comment. The 2021 revision added footnote 7 to the comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it updated footnote 10 to correct the referenced section in the statutory citation. It also added to the comment.

1. This instruction is drafted for burglary with the "intent to commit a felony." If "intent to steal" is charged, see Wis JI-Criminal 1421. For burglary offenses committed "while armed" or under aggravating circumstances as prohibited by § 943.10(2), see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A, 1425B, and 1425C.

In State v. O'Neill, 121 Wis.2d 300, 359 N.W.2d 906 (1984), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that ". . . the legislature intended to include only offenses against persons and property within the felonies which could form the basis of a burglary charge" under subsec. 943.10(1)(a). O'Neill involved a burglary charge against a campus police supervisor who allegedly conducted an illegal entry and search of an apartment. The theory of prosecution was that the illegal entry and search constituted misconduct in public office which could serve as the underlying felony for the burglary charge. The supreme court reversed the burglary conviction, holding that "misconduct in public office is not the type of felony contemplated by sec. 943.10(1)."

The text of the instruction has not been changed to accommodate the O'Neill decision because the Committee concluded that the question of whether a particular felony could form the basis for a burglary charge would be one of law for the trial court rather than one of fact for the jury.

In State v. Semrau, 2000 WI APP 54, 233 Wis.2d 508, 608 N.W.2d 376, the court applied O'Neill and concluded that bail jumping could be the intended felony upon which a burglary charge can be based.

"Felon in possession of a firearm" in violation of § 941.29 is a crime against persons or property and can be the basis for the intent to commit a felony element of burglary. State v. Steele, 2001 WI APP 34, ¶ 21, 241 Wis.2d 269, 625 N.W.2d 595.

2. The model instruction is drafted for a case involving entry into a "building." It must be modified if entry involved any of the other places listed in § 943.10(1)(a) through (f): any building or dwelling; an enclosed railroad car; an enclosed portion of any ship or vessel; a locked enclosed cargo portion of a truck or trailer; a motor home or other motorized type of home or a trailer home, whether or not any person is living in any such home; or a room in any of the above.

The instruction has never included a definition of "building." The meaning of the term has been considered to be the same for burglary and arson cases. In an arson case, State v. Kuntz, 160 Wis.2d 722, 467 N.W.2d 531 (1991), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held it was error for the trial court to state that "a mobile home is a building." The court said this created a "mandatory conclusive presumption . . . regarding an element of the arson offense." However, the court further held that the error was harmless because it played no role in the jury's verdict:

> We conclude that no rational juror could plausibly find that the structure in question was a mobile home without also finding that the structure was a building. . . . If the jury found this structure > to be a mobile home, as that term is commonly understood, this finding would be the 'functional equivalent' of finding that the structure was a building.

160 Wis.2d 722, 740.

In United States of America v. Franklin, 2019 WI 64, 387 Wis.2d 259, 272, 928 N.W.2d 545, the Wisconsin Supreme Court concluded that the locational alternatives provided in Wis. Stat. § 943.01(1m)(a)-(f) are alternative factual means of committing one element of burglary. Providing context to this holding, the court referenced an example previously incorporated in State v. Pinder, 2018 WI 106, ¶60, 384 Wis. 2d 416, 919 N.W.2d 568. Although the issue in Pinder concerned the validity of a search warrant issued for the placement and use of a GPS tracking device on a motor vehicle, the court did make a ruling in which it denied an ineffective assistance of counsel claim for failure to object to the burglary jury instruction Wis. JI-Criminal 1421. Addressing this claim, the court emphasized the latitude afforded in the crafting of a burglary jury instruction so as to comport with the evidence of the case, noting that:

> "[w]hile the circuit court could have used the phrase 'a room within a building' instead of the words 'office' or 'building,' the facts adduced would not confuse the jury as to what it was called upon to decide regardless of which of these words might be used." Id. at 456.

The court in Franklin cited the analysis of the statutory text, the legislative history and context of the statute, along with the nature of the conduct, and the appropriateness of multiple punishments in its conclusion that Wis. Stat. § 943.01 "identifies alternative means of committing one element of the crime of burglary under § 943.01 (1m)(a)-(f)." Franklin at 273. Furthermore, the court found that the crime of burglary does not include a separate locational element, and jury unanimity on finding guilt beyond a reasonable doubt as to locational alternatives provided in § 943.01(1m)(a)-(f) is not necessary to convict. Id. 273.

If a definition of "building" is necessary, resort to a standard dictionary may be helpful. For example, Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary provides that a "building" refers to "a usually roofed and walled structure built for permanent use (as for a dwelling)."

In Clark v. State, 69 Wis. 203, 33 N.W. 436 (1887), the issue was whether an unfinished house from which tools were taken was covered by § 4409 R.S. which made it a burglary to break "and enter in the night-time any office, shop, or any other building not adjoining or occupied with any dwelling house, or any ship, steamboat, vessel, railroad freight car or passenger car, with intent to commit the crime of larceny or other felony." The court held that the unfinished house was a "building" for purposes of burglary and defined the term as follows:

> . . . an edifice or structure erected upon land, and so far completed that it may be used temporarily or permanently for the occupation or shelter of man or beast, or for the storage of tools or other personal property for safe-keeping. . . . "The well-understood meaning of the word is a structure which has a capacity to contain, and is designed for the habitation of man or animals, or the sheltering of property."

69 Wis. 203, 206-07

A more recent case discusses "building" in connection with zoning rules prohibiting "mobile homes" but allowing "modular homes" and other buildings. The person's home had been mobile once, but at the site was affixed to a foundation and attached to utilities with steel undercarriage and trailer hitch removed. The court of appeals used the county's own definition of "building" and found that the home in question qualified:

> . . . the county relies on the terms "building" and "mobile home" to classify structures. A building is "any structure used, designed or intended to be used for the protection, shelter or enclosure of persons, animals or property." It is clear that Hansman's structure is intended for the protection, shelter and enclosure of persons.

Hansman v. Oneida Co., 123 Wis.2d 511, 513, 366 N.W.2d 901 (Ct. App. 1985).

3. The offense of burglary is complete upon the slightest entry by the defendant into any one of the places described in § 943.10(1)(a)-(f) without the consent of the person in lawful possession, when such entry is made with the required intent. The least entry with any part of the body is sufficient. State v. Barclay, 54 Wis.2d 651, 655n.10, 196 N.W.2d 745 (1972).

The crime of burglary is completed once "the defendant jimmied the lock and pushed against the door, pushing it inward, [and making] entry onto the premises. . . . Whether he stepped in or, as he testified, later reached in to close the door, would not matter. It is not how or why the door was closed that matters. It is the fact that it was opened by a person with intent to steal that furnishes both entry and intent, the prerequisite for the crime of burglary." Morones v. State, 61 Wis.2d 544, 548-49, 213 N.W.2d 31 (1973).

4. The defendant's entry into the place involved was without consent if the person in lawful possession did not consent in fact or if consent was given under the circumstances provided by Wis. Criminal Code § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). "Consent to enter which is obtained by the use or threat of force or by pretense of legal authority is in legal effect entry 'without consent.' The same ordinarily is true of consent obtained because the person giving the consent is mistaken as to the nature of the thing to which he consents. . . ." 1953 Legislative Council Committee Report on the Criminal Code, page 102.

Entry into a place when it is open to the public is not "without consent," see § 943.10(3). Thus, entry into a hotel lobby open to the public, although done with the intent to steal, is not burglary. Champlin v. State, 84 Wis.2d 621, 267 N.W.2d 295 (1978).

However, one who enters with consent may remain "at a time or place beyond his authority. 'Entry' in § 943.10(1)(a), Stats., must be construed to mean not only the simple act of passing through the outer wall of a structure but also the result of such action, namely, presence within the structure." Levesque v. State, 63 Wis.2d 412, 217 N.W.2d 317 (1974). Thus, an otherwise lawful entry became unlawful when Levesque hid himself in the false ceiling of the men's room and remained there until after the restaurant was closed.

State v. Schantek, 120 Wis.2d 79, 353 N.W.2d 832 (Ct. App. 1984), involved an entry of a gas station by an employee after regular business hours. The station closed at 9:00 p.m. and Schantek entered at around 11:30 p.m., using his own key. He took money from a cash box. The court upheld the conviction for burglary, stating that the extent of consent under these circumstances must be determined on the facts of each case:

> The task in most cases will be to determine the limits of such consent and the defendant's knowledge or lack of it.
> . . . . We do conclude, however, that the arrangement between Schantek and his employer clearly rendered certain presence inappropriate and thus beyond the limits of the employer's consent and Schantek's knowledge. A fair reading of the evidence does not allow for the strained conclusion that Benco gave Schantek all-encompassing consent to enter the premises at all times for all purposes – including criminal adventure. Nor does the evidence remotely allow for Schantek's claim of knowledge of such all-encompassing consent. We therefore conclude under the facts of this case that the employer did not give Schantek consent to enter the premises, and Schantek had knowledge of such nonconsent.

120 Wis.2d 79, 85.

The Schantek approach was applied in State v. Karow, 154 Wis.2d 375, 453 N.W.2d 181 (Ct. App. 1990). In Karow, the defendant claimed the entry was with consent because the victim allowed him to come into the house and use the telephone. After entering, Karow and accomplices killed the victim. The court of appeals affirmed the burglary conviction, finding that the entry was "without consent" because of an "implied limitation on the scope of the invitation to enter":

> We hold that an implied limitation on the scope of the consent to enter may be recognized, and we recognize it here. The record supports an inference, not patently incredible, that the consent Brown granted to Karow, a stranger, was limited to a specific area and a single purpose. That consent can in no way be reasonably construed to extend beyond the purpose for which it was granted.

154 Wis.2d 375, 384.

5. Under § 943.10, the question is one of lawful possession and not legal title. Ordinarily, the question of who is in lawful possession, while presenting a mixed question of law and fact, can be decided by the court as a matter of law on admitted or undisputed facts.

6. Knowledge that the entry is without consent is an element of the offense of burglary because of the standard interpretation of criminal statutes required by § 939.23(3): Where the word "intentionally" is used, "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" The decision in Hanson v. State, 52 Wis.2d 396, 190 N.W.2d 129 (1971), is sometimes cited for the contrary position. However, Hanson involved a defendant's postconviction challenge to the validity of his guilty plea and simply held that there was an adequate factual basis for a finding that there was no consent in fact to the defendant's entry. Under such circumstances, said the court, there was no additional burden on the state to show that the defendant did not "purport to be acting under legal authority," one of the alternatives to "no consent in fact" provided in the statutory definition of without consent, § 939.22(48). Recent decisions have reaffirmed that knowledge that entry is without consent is an essential element of burglary. See State v. Schantek, supra, note 4, and State v. Wilson, 160 Wis.2d 774, 467 N.W.2d 130 (Ct. App. 1991).

7. If multiple felonies are alleged, identify and define each felony. A defendant is not entitled to a unanimity instruction regarding the felonies that form the basis of their intent to enter a dwelling. In State

v. Hammer, 216 Wis. 2d 214, 576 N.W.2d 285 (Ct. App. 1997) the court of appeals considered whether, in order to support a conviction for burglary, the jury had to be unanimous as to the predicate felony that the defendant intended to commit when entering a dwelling. The circuit court had instructed the jury that three different acts (first-degree sexual assault, armed robbery, and battery causing substantial bodily harm) were felonies but declined to instruct the jury that the verdict had to be unanimous as to the predicate felony that the defendant intended to commit. Id. at 217-18. Affirming Hammer's conviction, the court concluded that the language of Wis. Stat. § 943.10(1) "indicates that the crime is one single offense with multiple modes of commission." Id. at 220. Although there are different ways to satisfy the intent element of the crime of burglary, "the different ways do not create separate and distinct offenses." Id. at 220. Furthermore, the statute focuses on the intent to commit a felony, not any particular felony. Therefore, all the felonies are conceptually similar for the purposes of unanimity. Id. at 222.

8. The intent to commit the felony must exist at the time the defendant entered the place. It is not sufficient that the defendant formed an intent to commit the felony after entry. Such intent, however, is usually proved circumstantially by what defendant did after he entered the place.

Care must be taken to assure that the crime intended was a felony. In State v. Gilbertson, 69 Wis.2d 587, 230 N.W.2d 874 (1975), a burglary conviction was reversed because there was insufficient proof of intent to commit a felony. The underlying crime was alleged to be criminal damage to property which becomes a felony only if there is intent to reduce the property's value by the requisite felony level. The insufficiency of the evidence on this point required reversal.

A defendant's intention to endanger the safety of others through criminally reckless conduct is enough to satisfy element four's requirement that a defendant enter a building with the intent to commit a felony. See State v. Mays, 2022 WI App 24, 402 Wis.2d 162, 975 N.W.2d 649. In Mays, the Wisconsin Court of Appeals held the defendant's conviction for the crime of felony murder, with the underlying crime of armed burglary, predicated on his intent to commit second-degree recklessly endangering safety, was valid under Wisconsin law.

9. Under the Criminal Code, the phrase "with intent to" means that the defendant either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. Subsection 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

10. Burglary, as defined in § 943.10(1m), is punished as Class F felony. The penalty increases to a Class E felony if a burglary is committed under any of the circumstances defined in subsec. (2). The Committee recommends handling these penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the basic burglary instruction is given. Instructions are provided for three of the four factors identified in subsec. (2): while armed (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A); while unarmed, but the person arms himself or herself while in the enclosure (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425B); while in the enclosure, the person uses explosives to open a depository (there is no instruction for this alternative); and, while in the enclosure, the person commits a battery upon a person lawfully therein (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425C).

1425A BURGLARY WHILE ARMED — § 943.10(1), (2)(a)

[THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1421 or 1424.]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of burglary but also that the defendant committed that crime while armed with a dangerous weapon.[1]

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant commit the crime of burglary while armed with a dangerous weapon?"

"Dangerous weapon" means _____.[2]

"Armed" means that at the time of the entry, the weapon must have been either on the defendant's person or within the defendant's reach. In addition, the defendant must have been aware of the presence of the weapon.[3]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of burglary while armed with a dangerous weapon, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1425A was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved nonsubstantive editorial corrections.

Burglary, as defined in § 943.10(1), is punished as a Class C felony. The penalty increases to a Class B felony if a burglary is committed under any of the circumstances defined in subsec. (2): while armed (covered by this instruction); while unarmed, but the person arms himself or herself while in the enclosure (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425B); while in the enclosure, the person uses explosives to open a depository

(there is no instruction for this alternative); and while in the enclosure, the person commits a battery upon a person lawfully therein (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425C).

The Committee recommends handling these penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the basic burglary instruction is given. Thus, this instruction, or Wis JI-Criminal 1425B or Wis JI-Criminal 1425C, would be added to Wis JI-Criminal 1421, Burglary With Intent To Steal, or to Wis JI-Criminal 1424, Burglary With Intent To Commit A Felony.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of burglary, as defined in § 943.10, Wis. Stats., at the time and place charged in the information.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

> Did the defendant commit the crime of burglary while armed with a dangerous weapon?

Proof of a "nexus" between the weapon and the underlying burglary is not required. State v. Gardner, 230 Wis.2d 32, 601 N.W.2d 670 (Ct. App. 1999).

1. Subsection 943.10(2)(a) was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 288 (effective date: May 10, 1996) to refer not only to dangerous weapons but also to "a device or container described under s. 941.26(4)(a)." The reference is to containers of oleoresin of capsicum, commonly referred to as "pepper spray." If that option is presented, the instruction must be modified. The Committee suggests simply substituting "container of oleoresin of capsicum" for "dangerous weapon" and not defining the term further. This is the approach used in the instructions for violations of § 941.26(4); see Wis JI-Criminal 1341, 1341A, and 1341B.

2. The Committee suggests using the part of the statutory definition that applies to the facts of the case. "Dangerous weapon" is defined as follows in § 939.22(10):

> (10) "Dangerous weapon" means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded; any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm; any electric weapon, as defined in § 941.295(4); or any other device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

For example, if the evidence shows a firearm was used, the sentence at note 1 would read: "'Dangerous weapon' means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded." Similar statements should be used for the other alternatives provided by the statutory definition. See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for suggested instructions for the other alternatives and a discussion of some of the substantive issues relating to "dangerous weapons."

3. The definition of "armed" is adapted from that used in other uniform instructions for offenses having "armed" as an element. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon. The Committee concluded that for purposes of the enhancement of penalty for committing the crime "while armed," the defendant must have been armed at the time of entry. For cases where the defendant arms himself or herself after entry, see Wis JI-Criminal 1425B.

1425B BURGLARY: ARMING ONESELF WITH A DANGEROUS WEAPON WHILE IN THE ENCLOSURE — § 943.10(1), (2)(b)

[THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1421 or 1424.]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of burglary but also that the defendant armed (himself) (herself) with a dangerous weapon[1] while in the enclosure.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant arm (himself) (herself) with a dangerous weapon while in the enclosure?"

"Dangerous weapon" means _____.[2]

"Armed" means that the defendant knowingly took physical control of a dangerous weapon.[3]

"Enclosure" means the building or room where the burglary was committed.[4]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of burglary and that the defendant armed (himself) (herself) with a dangerous weapon while in the enclosure, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

Wis JI-Criminal 1425B was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved nonsubstantive editorial corrections.

Burglary, as defined in § 943.10(1), is punished as a Class C felony. The penalty increases to a Class B felony if a burglary is committed under any of the circumstances defined in subsec. (2): while armed (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A); while unarmed, but the person arms himself or herself while in the enclosure (covered by this instruction); while in the enclosure, the person uses explosives to open a depository (there is no instruction for this alternative); and, while in the enclosure, the person commits a battery upon a person lawfully therein (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425C).

The Committee recommends handling these penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the basic burglary instruction is given. Thus, this instruction, or Wis JI-Criminal 1425A or Wis JI-Criminal 1425C, would be added to Wis JI-Criminal 1421, Burglary With Intent To Steal, or to Wis JI-Criminal 1424, Burglary With Intent To Commit A Felony.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of burglary, as defined in § 943.10, Wis. Stats., at the time and place charged in the information.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> > Did the defendant arm (himself) (herself) with a dangerous weapon while in the enclosure?

This charge requires proof that the defendant armed himself while in the enclosure but does not require any further proof of a "nexus" between the weapon and the burglary offense. State v. Norris, 214 Wis.2d 25, 571 N.W.2d 857 (Ct. App. 1997).

1. Subsection 943.10(2)(a) was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 288 (effective date: May 10, 1996) to refer not only to dangerous weapons but also to "a device or container described under s. 941.26(4)(a)." The reference is to containers of oleoresin of capsicum, commonly referred to as "pepper spray." If that option is presented, the instruction must be modified. The Committee suggests simply substituting "container of oleoresin of capsicum" for "dangerous weapon" and not defining the term further. This is the approach used in the instructions for violations of § 941.26(4); see Wis JI-Criminal 1341, 1341A, and 1341B.

2. The Committee suggests using the part of the statutory definition that applies to the facts of the case. "Dangerous weapon" is defined as follows in § 939.22(10):

> (10) "Dangerous weapon" means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded; any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm; any electric weapon, as defined in § 941.295(4); or any other device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

For example, if the evidence shows a firearm was used, the sentence at note 1 would read: "'Dangerous weapon' means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded." Similar statements should be used for the other alternatives provided by the statutory definition. See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for suggested instructions for the other alternatives and a discussion of some of the substantive issues relating to "dangerous weapons."

3. The definition of "armed" is adapted from that used in other uniform instructions for offenses having "armed" as an element. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1335, Carrying A Concealed Weapon.

It differs from those other definitions in that it requires that the defendant actually take physical control of a weapon. The Committee concluded that such a requirement was necessary in the context of this offense – simply being aware of the presence of the weapon is not sufficient.

4. The definition assumes the burglary took place in a building or dwelling. Other alternatives are possible, such as enclosed railroad cars, enclosed portions of a ship or vessel, etc. See § 943.10(1)(b) - (e) and note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1421. If other than a building is involved, this definition should be eliminated or modified.

1425C BURGLARY: COMMITTING A BATTERY WHILE IN THE ENCLOSURE — § 943.10(1), (2)(d)

[THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1421 or 1424.]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of burglary but also that the defendant committed a battery upon a person who was lawfully present in the enclosure.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant commit a battery upon a person who was lawfully present in the enclosure?"

"Battery" is committed by one who causes bodily harm to another person, with intent to cause bodily harm and without the consent of the other person, and who knows that the person does not consent to the bodily harm.[1]

"Enclosure" means the building or room where the burglary was committed.[2]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of burglary and that the defendant committed a battery upon a person who was lawfully present in the enclosure, you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

Wis JI-Criminal 1425C was originally published in 1996 and revised in 2001. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2004 and involved nonsubstantive editorial corrections.

> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> > Did the defendant commit a battery upon a person who was lawfully present in the enclosure?

1. The definition of "battery" is based on the one provided in § 940.19(1). If additional instruction on the elements of simple battery is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 1220.

2. The definition assumes the burglary took place in a building or dwelling. Other alternatives are possible, such as enclosed railroad cars, enclosed portions of a ship or vessel, etc. See § 943.10(1)(b) - (e) and note 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1421. If other than a building is involved, this definition should be eliminated or modified.

1425E BURGLARY: PERSON LAWFULLY PRESENT IN THE ENCLOSURE — § 943.10(1), (2)(e)

[THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION SHOULD BE GIVEN IMMEDIATELY AFTER WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1421 or 1424.]

The information alleges not only that the defendant committed the crime of burglary, but also that the enclosure was a (dwelling) (boat) (motor home) and another person was lawfully present in the enclosure.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Was the enclosure a (dwelling) (boat)[1] (motor home)[2] and was another person lawfully present in the enclosure?"

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant committed the crime of burglary and that the enclosure was a (dwelling) (boat) (motor home) and another person was lawfully present in the enclosure you should answer the question "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1425E was approved by the Committee in June 2004.

Burglary, as defined in § 943.10(1), is punished as a Class C felony. The penalty increases to a Class B felony if a burglary is committed under any of the circumstances defined in subsec. (2): while armed (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425A); while unarmed, but the person arms himself or herself while in the enclosure (see Wis JI-Criminal 1425B); while in the enclosure, the person uses explosives to open a depository (there is no instruction for this alternative); while in the enclosure, the person commits a battery upon a person lawfully therein see Wis JI-Criminal 1425C); and, where the enclosure is a dwelling, boat, or motor home and another person was lawfully present in the enclosure (covered by this instruction).

The penalty-increasing fact addressed by this instruction is set forth in § 943.10(2)(e), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 189. Effective date: April 22, 2004.

The Committee recommends handling these penalty-increasing factors by submitting an additional question after the basic burglary instruction is given. Thus, this instruction, or Wis JI-Criminal 1425A, Wis JI-Criminal 1425B, or Wis JI-Criminal 1425C would be added to Wis JI-Criminal 1421, Burglary With Intent To Steal, or to Wis JI-Criminal 1424, Burglary With Intent To Commit A Felony.

The following form is suggested for the guilty verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of burglary, as defined in § 943.10, Wis. Stats., at the time and place charged in the information.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "Was the enclosure a (dwelling) (boat) (motor home) and was another person lawfully present in the enclosure?"

1. "Boat" is defined in § 943.10(lg) (a) as "any ship or vessel that has sleeping quarters."

2. Subsection 943.10(1g)(b) provides that "'motor home' has the meaning given in s. 340.01(33m)." That definition provides:

> "Motor home" means a motor vehicle designed to be operated upon a highway for use as a temporary or recreational dwelling and having the same internal characteristics and equipment as a mobile home."

1426 ENTRY INTO A LOCKED VEHICLE — § 943.11

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Entry into a locked vehicle, as defined in § 943.11 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters the locked and enclosed portion or compartment of the vehicle of another without consent and with intent to steal.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered[1] the locked and enclosed portion or compartment of the vehicle of another.

   ["Vehicle" means any self-propelled device for moving persons or property or pulling implements from one place to another, whether the device is operated on land, rails, water, or in the air.][2]

2. The defendant intentionally entered without the consent of a person authorized to give consent.[3]

3. The defendant knew that the vehicle belonged to another person and knew that the entry was without consent.[4]

4. The defendant entered the (vehicle) (compartment) with intent to steal.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to take and carry away movable property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the property. This intent to steal must be formed before entry into the vehicle is made. The intent to steal, which is an essential element of this offense, is no more or less than a mental purpose to steal, formed at any time before the entry, which continued to exist at the time of entry.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1426 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1984 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. As with burglary, the slightest entry should be sufficient. See note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1421.

2. This is the definition provided in § 939.22(44). A trailer, for example, is not "a vehicle" within this definition. However, entry of a house trailer or the cargo portion of a nonself-propelled vehicle is a burglary under § 943.10(1)(d).

3. "Without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48). Also wee Wis JI-Criminal 948. Unlike the statutes defining related offenses, § 943.11 does not specify that the entry be "without consent of the owner" (e.g., § 943.15) or "without consent of the person in lawful possession" (e.g., § 943.10). The instruction uses "without consent of a person authorized to give consent" as a helpful elaboration consistent with the common sense meaning of "without consent."

4. Knowledge that the vehicle belonged to another and that the entry was without consent is an element because of the standard interpretation of criminal statutes required by § 939.23(3): Where the word "intentionally" is used, "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make the conduct criminal, and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'"

1431 POSSESSION OF BURGLARIOUS TOOLS — § 943.12

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of burglarious tools, as defined in § 943.12 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has in personal possession any device or instrumentality intended, designed, or adapted for use in breaking into any depository designed for the safekeeping of any valuables or into any building or room with intent to use such device or instrumentality to break into a depository, building, or room and to steal therefrom.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had possession[1] of a tool or device.

   "Possession" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control[3] of the tool or device.

2. The tool or device was suitable for use[4] in breaking into a building.[5] This may include common and special tools and devices.

3. The defendant intended to use the tool or device to break into a building with intent to steal.

This means that the defendant must have possessed the tool or device for the purpose of using it to break into a building with the intent to take and carry away movable property of another without consent and with intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession of such property.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1431 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1979, 1984, 1987, and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

In Dumas v. State, 90 Wis.2d 518, 280 N.W.2d 310 (Ct. App. 1979), the court affirmed convictions for both burglary and possession of burglarious tools where the defendant was apprehended inside the burglarized building, while the burglary was in progress, with a tire iron and a crowbar in his possession.

1. A change made in § 943.12 by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, was to "in personal possession" from "in his possession." The Committee has concluded that this change was intended only to eliminate the use of the masculine pronoun in the statute and not to change the substance of the offense.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called constructive possession.

4. The Committee concluded that "suitable for use" was an appropriate substitute for the statutory language "intended, designed, or adapted." Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, introduced the latter language for the previously existing "designed and adapted." This substantially broadened the coverage of the statute (and was accompanied by a substantial reduction in the maximum penalty – from 10 to 2 years). The broader concept seems to be equivalent to "suitable for use," a construction that should be easier for the jury to understand (and which had been used in the 1953 draft of the proposed Criminal Code revision).

"The clear legislative intent [of § 943.12] was to make criminal the possession of any device designed for the criminal purpose of an illegal entry when that possession was coupled with the intent to use a device for the prohibited purpose." Perkins v. State, 61 Wis.2d 341, 350-51, 212 N.W.2d 141 (1973) (affirming a conviction based on the possession of a homemade key used to open parking meters). Also see Hansen v. State, 64 Wis.2d 541, 219 N.W.2d 246 (1974), finding the evidence sufficient to support a conviction based on the possession of a crowbar, gloves, and socks.

5. The instruction is drafted in terms of "breaking into a building," but the statute also covers a "room" and "any depository designed for the safekeeping of any valuables." If a "room" or "depository" is involved, that term should be substituted for "building" throughout the instruction.

6. Evidence of prior burglary convictions was held to be admissible as relevant to the intent issue in State v. Vanlue, 96 Wis.2d 81, 291 N.W.2d 467 (1980).

1433 ENTRY INTO LOCKED COIN BOX — § 943.125

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Entry into a locked coin box, as defined in § 943.125 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters a locked coin box of another without consent and with intent to steal.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered a locked coin box of another.

   "Coin box" means any device or receptacle designed to receive money or any other thing of value. [A (name item specified in § 943.125(3)) is a coin box.][1]

2. The defendant intentionally entered a locked coin box without the consent[2] of the owner.

3. The defendant knew that the coin box belonged to another and knew that the entry was without the consent of the owner.[3]

4. The defendant entered the coin box with intent to steal.

   "Intent to steal" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to take and carry away movable property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the property.[4]

When Must Intent Exist?

The intent to steal must be formed before entry is made. The intent to steal, which is an essential element of this offense, is no more or less than the mental purpose to steal formed at any time before the entry, which continued to exist at the time of the entry.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1433 was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2004 and involved adoption of a new format and non-substantive changes in the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 943.125(1). Subsection (2) of the statute makes it a crime to possess "any device or instrumentality" for use in breaking into a coin box. There is no standard instruction for violations of sub. (2).

1. The Committee has concluded that the jury may be advised that a particular device is listed in the statutory definition of "coin box" in § 943.125(3). It is for the jury to determine whether the device in the case is, in fact, one of the listed devices or receptacles. If the device in the case is not listed in the statute, the statement in brackets should not be used.

The definition in § 943.125(3) provides:

> (3) In this section, "coin box" means any device or receptacle designed to receive money or any other thing of value. The term includes a depository box, parking meter, vending machine, pay telephone, money changing machine, coin-operated phonograph and amusement machine if they are designed to receive money or other thing of value.

2. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

3. Knowledge that the coin box belonged to another and that the entry was without consent is required because the definition of this offense begins with the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute.

4. This is intended to be a summary of the necessary components of "intent to steal." See Wis JI-Criminal 1441, Theft.

1437 CRIMINAL TRESPASS TO DWELLINGS — § 943.14

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal trespass to a dwelling, as defined in § 943.14 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally (enters) (remains in)[1] the dwelling of another without the consent of some person lawfully upon the premises,[2] under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (entered) (remained in) the dwelling of another.

   "Dwelling" means a structure that is used or intended to be used as a home or residence by one or more persons to the exclusion of all others [whether or not currently occupied by a resident].[3]

2. The defendant (entered) (remained in) the dwelling without the consent[4] of someone lawfully upon the premises.

3. The defendant (entered) (remained in) the dwelling under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace.

   It is not necessary that an actual breach of the peace occurred as a result of defendant's conduct.

The term "breach of the peace" includes all violations of peace and order.[5]

[It may consist of an act of violence or an act likely to produce violence. It may consist of profane and abusive language by one toward another.]

[It may consist of acts that put (name of victim) in fear of bodily harm or otherwise disturb or disrupt the peace and sanctity of the home.][6]

4. The defendant knew that (the entry into) (remaining in) the dwelling was without consent and under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace and knew that it was the dwelling of another.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1437 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1985, 1993, 2002, and 2016. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2016; it reflects the amendment of § 943.14 by 2015 Wisconsin Act 176.

". . . [W]here a person enters a dwelling which is another person's residence, that person violates § 943.14 if acting without consent, other statutory authority or court order and regardless of any ownership rights in the property." State v. Carls, 186 Wis.2d 533, 534, 521 N.W.2d 181 (Ct. App. 1994). In Carls, the defendant and his wife were in the process of divorce. The wife had obtained an injunction prohibiting the defendant from entering the house that was their joint marital property. The defendant's entry without consent was held to violate § 943.14: although he "jointly owned the home, he no longer lived there. . . Therefore, according to the plain meaning of the statute, the home was not [the defendant's] dwelling but the dwelling of another. . ." 186 Wis.2d 533, 536.

1. The "remains in" alternative was added to the statute by 2015 Wisconsin Act 176 [effective date: March 2, 2016].

2. 2015 Wisconsin Act 176 also added the following to the offense definition: ". . . or, if no person is lawfully upon the premises, without the consent of the owner of the property that includes the dwelling." If a case involves this option, the Committee suggests substituting the following: "without the consent of the owner of the dwelling." A similar change will be required in element 2. See footnote 4.

3. The definition of "dwelling" is the one provided in s. 943.14(1), as created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 176 [effective date: March 2, 2016]. The definition also provides: "For the purposes of this section, a dwelling meets the definition regardless of whether the dwelling is currently occupied by a resident." If the facts of the case so require, the statement in brackets should be added.

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

2015 Wisconsin Act 176 also added the following to the offense definition: ". . . or, if no person is lawfully upon the premises, without the consent of the owner of the property that includes the dwelling." If a case involves this option, the Committee suggests substituting the following: "without the consent of the owner of the dwelling."

5. This description of "tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace" was adopted in 1994 as a substantial shortening of that provided in the earlier version of the instruction. For more detail, see Wis JI-Criminal 1900, Disorderly Conduct, and the Comment to that instruction.

Also see State v. Givens, 28 Wis.2d 109, 135 N.W.2d 780 (1965), upholding the constitutionality of Wisconsin's disorderly conduct statute and discussing the type of conduct required to constitute conduct engaged in under circumstances "tending to provoke or cause a disturbance."

6. State v. Van Loh, 157 Wis.2d 91, 99, 458 N.W.2d 556 (Ct. App. 1990).

7. The knowledge element is based on the rule of construction provided in § 939.23(3): "'Intentionally' means that . . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Because "dwelling of another," "without consent," and "under circumstances tending . . ." all follow the word "intentionally" in § 943.14, the instruction requires knowledge of those facts.

1438 ENTRY INTO A LOCKED DWELLING — § 943.15

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Entry into a locked dwelling, as defined in § 943.15 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who enters the locked and enclosed dwelling of another without the consent of the owner or person in lawful possession of the premises.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant entered the dwelling of another.

   The term "dwelling" means the (apartment) (room) (building) or other structure in which a person makes a home.[1]

2. The defendant entered the dwelling when it was locked and enclosed.

3. The defendant entered the dwelling of another without the consent[2] of the owner or person in lawful possession of the premises.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1438 was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is for a violation of § 943.15 which prohibits entry without consent into a "locked and enclosed building, dwelling or room of another." The model instruction is drafted for charges involving entry into a dwelling. The statute also prohibits entry into a locked or posted construction site.

1. The definition of "dwelling" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1437 Criminal Trespass to Dwellings. Regarding what constitutes "entry" for the purposes of burglary, see note 3, Wis JI-Criminal 1421.

2. Entry is "without consent" if there was no consent in fact or if the consent was given under the circumstances identified in § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). Also see, Wis JI-Criminal 948.

1439 CRIMINAL TRESPASS TO A MEDICAL FACILITY — § 943.145

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal trespass to a medical facility, as defined in § 943.145 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters a medical facility without the consent of some person lawfully upon the premises, under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered a medical facility.

   "Medical facility" means a hospital or a clinic or office that is used by a licensed physician.[1]

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the purpose of entering a medical facility.[2]

2. The defendant entered a medical facility without the consent of someone lawfully upon the premises.

   The phrase "without consent" means that there was no consent in fact.[3]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE

[The general consent given to the public to enter a business premise is not for all things and all purposes but is conditioned by the purpose of doing business in the area set aside for that purpose.][4]

3. The defendant entered a medical facility under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace.

It is not necessary that an actual breach of the peace occurred as a result of defendant's conduct. The term "breach of the peace" includes all violations of peace and order. It may consist of an act of violence or an act likely to produce violence. It may consist of profane and abusive language by one toward another. To constitute criminal trespass to a medical facility, the entry must be done under circumstances tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace.[5]

4. The defendant knew that the entry into a medical facility was made without consent and under circumstances likely to provoke a breach of the peace.[6]

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1439 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 943.145 was created by 1985 Wisconsin Act 56, the "Abortion Prevention and Family Responsibility Act of 1985." The constitutionality of § 943.145 was upheld in State v. Migliorino, 150 Wis.2d 513, 525-35, 442 N.W.2d 36 (1989).

State v. Horn, 139 Wis.2d 473, 407 N.W.2d 854 (1987), involved a protest at a facility providing abortions and other medical services that took place before the enactment of § 943.145. Horn and others were charged with criminal trespass to land under § 943.13 for their conduct protesting the performance of abortions at the Fox Valley Reproductive Health Care Center. The supreme court held that the trial court correctly refused to instruct the jury on or allow evidence in support of a "free speech" defense. Neither the First Amendment nor the Wisconsin Constitution protects free speech on private property (see Jacobs v. Major, 139 Wis.2d 492, 407 N.W.2d 832 (1987)), so there was no legal basis for the defense.

1. The suggested definition is based on the one provided in § 943.145(1), see below, which includes cross-references to the definition of "hospital" under § 50.33(2), also below. The § 943.145(1) definition also includes cross-references to the licensing requirements for physicians found in Chapter 448 and the rules of the medical examining board which apply to clinics and offices.

Regarding the cross-reference to "rules of the medical examining board," see State v. Migliorino, 150 Wis.2d 513, 522-24, 442 N.W.2d 36 (1989).

2. Section 939.23(3).

3. Section 939.22(48). Also see Wis JI-Criminal 948.

4. In State v. Migliorino, 170 Wis.2d 576, 592, 489 N.W.2d 678 (Ct. App. 1992), the court approved an addition to the definition of "without consent" like the one provided in brackets. The court held that the rule reflected in the instruction, based on the rule applicable in burglary cases, also applies to § 943.145. 150 Wis.2d 513, 535-37 (citing Levesque v. State, 63 Wis.2d 412, 217 N.W.2d 317 (1974), a case involving "entry without consent" under the burglary statute). See the discussion in note 4, Wis JI-Criminal 1421.

5. This description of "tending to create or provoke a breach of the peace" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1437, Criminal Trespass to Dwellings. For more detail, see Wis JI-Criminal 1900, Disorderly Conduct, and the Comment to that instruction.

The focus of this element is on the circumstances at the time of the entry and requires a case-by-case analysis. State v. Migliorino, 170 Wis.2d 576, 592, 489 N.W.2d 678 (Ct. App. 1992) (citing with approval the elements set forth in this instruction and also concluding that the standards applicable to disorderly conduct offenses apply to this offense as well).

Also see State v. Givens, 28 Wis.2d 109, 135 N.W.2d 780 (1965), upholding the constitutionality of Wisconsin's disorderly conduct statute and discussing the type of conduct required to constitute conduct engaged in under circumstances which "tends to provoke or cause a disturbance."

6. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires a purpose to achieve the result specified and knowledge of all facts necessary to make the conduct criminal and which follow the word "intentionally" in the statute. Section 939.23(3).

1440 CRIMINAL TRESPASS TO AN ENERGY PROVIDER PROPERTY — § 943.143

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal trespass to an energy provider property, as defined in § 943.143 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally enters an energy provider property without the consent of the energy provider that owns, leases, or operates the property.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally entered an energy provider property.

("Energy provider property" means property that is part of an electric, natural gas, oil, petroleum, refined petroleum product, renewable fuel, water, or chemical generation, transmission, or distribution system and that is owned, leased, or operated by an energy provider.)[2]

(A decommissioned nuclear power plant is an energy provider.)[3]

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the purpose of entering an energy provider property.[4]

2. The defendant entered an energy provider property without the lawful authority and consent of the energy provider.

The phrase "without consent" means that there was no consent in fact.[5]

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1440 was approved by the Committee in February 2020.

Section 943.143 was created by 2015 Wisconsin Act 158. The statute was modified by 2019 Wisconsin Act 33 to expand the scope of the enhanced penalty for intentionally causing damage and trespassing to include property owned, leased, or operated by public water utilities, cooperative associations producing or furnishing water, and companies that operate gas, oil, petroleum, refined petroleum product, renewable fuel, water, or chemical generation storage transportation or delivery system.

1. Section 943.143(3) does not apply to any of the following:

(a) Any person who is:

1. Monitoring compliance with public or worker safety laws, wage and hour requirements, or other statutory requirements.
2. Engaging in picketing occurring at the workplace that is otherwise lawful and arises out of a bona fide labor dispute including any controversy concerning any of the following:

wages or salaries; hours; working conditions; benefits, including welfare, sick leave, insurance, pension or retirement provisions; or the managing or maintenance of collective bargaining agreements and the terms to be included in those agreements.

3. Engaging in union organizing or recruitment activities that are otherwise lawful including attempting to reach workers verbally, in writing, and in the investigation of non-union working conditions.

(b) An exercise of a person's right of free speech or assembly that is otherwise lawful.

2. Select qualifying business activity.

3. "Specify the applicable category of energy provider." Section 943.143(1)(a) provides:

"Energy provider" means any of the following:

1. A public utility under s. 196.01 (5) (a) that is engaged in any of the following: (a) The production, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of heat, power, light, or water. (b) The transmission or delivery of natural gas.
2. A transmission company under s. 196.485 (1) (ge).
3. A cooperative association organized under ch. 185 for the purpose of producing or furnishing heat, light, power or water for its members.
4. A wholesale merchant plant under s. 196.491 (1) (w), except that "wholesale merchant plant" includes an electric generating facility or an improvement to an electric generating facility that is subject to a leased generation contract, as defined in s.196.52 (9) (a) 3.
5. A decommissioned nuclear power plant.
6. A company that operates a gas, oil, petroleum, refined petroleum product, renewable fuel, water, or chemical generation, storage transportation, or delivery system that is not a service station, garage, or other place where gasoline or diesel fuel is sold at retailer offered for sale at retail.

The court should inquire whether the parties agree that the entity whose property is at issue is a qualified energy provider. If there is no agreement, the court should require that the state designate under which subsection they are proceeding.

1441 THEFT — § 943.20(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally (takes and carries away) (uses) (transfers) (conceals) (retains possession of)[1] movable property of another without consent and with intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the property.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took and carried away movable property of another.[2]

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to take and carry away property.[3]

   "Movable property" means property whose physical location can be changed.[4]

2. The owner of the property did not consent[5] to taking and carrying away the property.

3. The defendant knew that the owner did not consent.[6]

4. The defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of the possession of the property.

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of theft have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[8]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of property stolen more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[9]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[10]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1441 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1977, 1987, 1991, 1999, 2000, 2002, 2003, 2006, 2009, and 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 10 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(a). The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. See footnote 8, below. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. The penalty increases to a Class D felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

For a general discussion of past and current Wisconsin theft statutes, see Melli & Remington, "Theft

A Comparative Analysis," 1954 Wis. L. Rev. 253; Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin—Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253 (1960 61).

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

Charging ten counts of theft and five counts of concealing stolen property for taking ten firearms during a burglary and concealing five of them does not violate rules prohibiting multiple charges. State v. Trawitzki, 2001 WI 77, 244 Wis.2d 523, 628 N.W.2d 801. "[T]he theft and concealment of each firearm increases the danger posed to society. Accordingly, it is appropriate to punish the taking and the concealing of each firearm separately." 2001 WI 77 ¶36.

1. One of the five alternatives in parentheses should be selected. The rest of the instruction is drafted for a case where the act is alleged to be "takes and carries away," which, in the Committee's judgment, is the most commonly charged alternative.

In State v. Genova, 77 Wis.2d 141, 252 N.W.2d 380 (1977), the Wisconsin Supreme Court approved the construction of the theft statute adopted in this instruction. A theft charge had been dismissed on the basis that the complaint charged only that the defendant had transferred property and not that he had taken the property and transferred it. The supreme court held that the complaint had been sufficient in charging only "transfer." The statute should be read as though the following "or"" appeared in it: takes and carries away, or uses, or transfers, or conceals, or retains. A violation of the statute need not include a taking from the owner.

2. Define "property of another" if necessary. The term is defined as follows in §§ 939.22(28) and 943.20(2)(c):

> 939.22(28) "Property of another" means property in which a person other than the actor has a legal interest which the actor has no right to defeat or impair, even though the actor may also have a legal interest in the property.
> 943.20(2)(c) "Property of another" includes property in which the actor is a co owner and property of a partnership of which the actor is a member, unless the actor and the victim are husband and wife.

3. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

4. This is based on the definition of "movable property" in § 943.20(2)(a) which provides:

(a) "Movable property" is property whose physical location can be changed, without limitation including electricity and gas, documents which represent or embody intangible rights, and things growing on, affixed to or found in land.

Section 943.20(2) defines "property" as follows:

(b) "Property" means all forms of tangible property, whether real or personal, without limitation including electricity, gas and documents which represent or embody a chose in action or other intangible rights.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. Knowledge that the taking was without consent is required because the definition of this offense begins with the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute.

7. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

8. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000 2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000 but not $100,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

2007 Wisconsin Act 64 [effective date: March 26, 2008] added the following to § 943.20(2)(d): "If the property stolen is scrap metal, as defined in s. 134.405(1)(f), 'value' also includes any costs that would be incurred in repairing or replacing any property damaged in the theft or removal of the scrap metal."

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the penalty categories; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

9. This is the most often used part of the definition of "value" provided in § 943.20(2)(d). The full definition as amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 64 and 2011 Wisconsin Act 194, reads as follows:

> Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, "value" means the market value at the time of the theft or the cost to the victim of replacing the property within a reasonable time after the theft, whichever is less. If the property stolen is a document evidencing a chose in action or other intangible right, "value" means either the market value of the chose in action or other right or the intrinsic value of the document, whichever is greater. If the property stolen is scrap metal, as defined in s. 134.405(1)(f), or "plastic bulk merchandise container" as defined in s. 134.405(1)(em), "value" also includes any costs that would be incurred in repairing or replacing any property damaged in the theft or removal of the scrap metal or plastic bulk merchandise container. If the thief gave consideration for, or had a legal interest in, the stolen property, the amount of such consideration or value of such interest shall be deducted from the total value of the property.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court in Sartin v. State, 44 Wis.2d 138, 170 N.W.2d 727 (1969), a theft case, refused to adopt either a retail or wholesale value definition of the term "value." It is felt that in the theft statute, "[t]he statutory scheme clearly contemplates a determination of the cost of replacement to the victim." Sartin at 149.

10. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme.
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it. or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1441A was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1989 and 1992. It was withdrawn in 2001 when the questions relating to determining value were added to the instructions for the theft offenses.

1441B THEFT: PENALTY FACTORS — § 943.20(3)(d) and (3)(e)

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING QUESTIONS IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT A PENALTY FACTOR SET FORTH IN SUB. (3)(d) OR (3)(e) IS ESTABLISHED.

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(d)1.

["Was the property taken a domestic animal?"][1]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(d)3.

["Was the property taken from a building which has been destroyed or left unoccupied because of physical disaster, riot, bombing or the proximity of battle?"][2]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(d)4.

["Was the property taken after physical disaster, riot, bombing or the proximity of battle has necessitated its removal from a building?"][3]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(d)5.

["Was the property taken a firearm?"[4]

"Firearm" means a weapon that acts by the force of gunpowder.]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(d)6.

["Was the property taken from (an individual at risk) (a patient or resident of a (name type of facility under s. 940.295(2)))?"][5]

FOR CHARGES UNDER SUB. (3)(e).

["Was the property taken from (the person of another) (a corpse)?"][6]

[This requires that the property was taken from the body of the person in possession of the property, or that the person had immediate control over the property.][7]

Before you may answer the question "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to the question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1441B was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2002, 2003, 2008, and 2018. The 2018 revision made an editorial correction and added to footnote 6. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2019; it added language to the bracketed requirement for charges under sub. (3)(e), and added footnote 7.

This instruction addresses the six penalty-increasing factors set forth in § 943.20(3)(d) and (e). Theft from person – set forth in subdiv. (3)(e) – was formerly covered by a separate instruction, Wis JI-Criminal 1442, but that instruction has been withdrawn in favor of including all the factors together in this instruction. Each of the factors in sub. (3)(d) increases the penalty to a Class H felony; theft from person under sub. (3)(e) is a Class G felony. Section 943.20(3)(d), as amended by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

As with the value question in theft cases, see Wis JI-Criminal 1441, the Committee recommends that these factors be presented to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

> We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of theft under Wis. Stat. § 943.20, at the time and place charged in the information.
> We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.
>
> If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":
> "Was the property taken (repeat the essential facts in the question)?"

1. This is the factor in subdiv. 1. of § 943.20(3)(d). "Domestic animal" is defined as follows for the purposes of Chapter 174: "'Domestic animal' includes livestock, dogs, and cats." § 174.001(2g).

2. This is the factor set forth in subdiv. 3. of § 943.20(3)(d).

3. This is the factor set forth in subdiv. 4. of § 943.20(3)(d).

4. This is the factor in subdiv. 5. of § 943.20(3)(d). The definition of "firearm" in the next sentence is the standard one used in the uniform instructions. It is based on Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

5. These are the factors set forth in subdiv. 6. of § 943.20(3)(d). The facilities "under s. 940.295(2)" include a variety of facilities, most of which involve providing health care or related services. See note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1271. 2005 Wisconsin Act 388 changed the reference to "individual at risk" from "vulnerable adult." "Individual at risk" is defined as follows in § 940.20(2)(ae): "'Individual at risk' means an elder adult at risk or an adult at risk." Section 943.20(2)(a) provides that "'Adult at risk' has the meaning given in s. 55.01(1e)." Section 943.20(2)(ad) provides that "'Elder adult at risk' has the meaning provided in s. 46.90(1)(br)." Definitions based on those cross references, which also apply to violations of § 940.285, are provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1268.

6. These are the factors in § 943.20(3)(e). The explication of "from the person" in the next sentence is what was formerly provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1442, Theft From Person. In State v. Hughes, 218 Wis.2d 538, 548, 582 N.W.2d 49 (Ct. App. 1998), the court concluded that "theft 'from the person' encompasses the taking of property from the wheelchair of one sitting in the wheelchair at the time of the taking." Hughes did not state a generally applicable definition of "from the person" and expressly provided that the court "refrain[ed] from embracing either a narrow or broad standard that would necessarily apply to other factual situations." 218 Wis.2d 538, 548, note 10. Also see, State v. Graham, 2000 WI App 138, 237 Wis.2d 620, 614 N.W.2d 504, finding the evidence sufficient to prove "theft from person"; and State v. Tidwell, 2009 WI App 153, 321 Wis.2d 596, 774 N.W.2d 650, finding the evidence sufficient to prove "attempted theft from person."

"'Corpse' means the dead body of a human being." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, 3rd Edition, 1992.

7. In State v. Tidwell, 321 Wis.2d 596, 774 N.W.2d 650, 2009 WI App 153, the defendant argued that the evidence was insufficient to find him guilty on the charge of attempted theft from a person as the property he attempted to steal, a cash register on a counter, was not connected in any way to the victim's person. After reviewing the legislative history of § 943.20(3) the court of appeals disagreed and concluded that the intent of the "from the person" penalty enhancer was to "cove[r] circumstances which made stealing particularly dangerous and undesirable." It was the victim's constructive possession of the property which made the attempted theft particularly dangerous and undesirable. Id. at ¶¶8-12.

The Committee concluded that acts of theft in which the victim has immediate control over the property in question fall into the category of particularly dangerous and undesirable circumstances, and therefore constitutes theft from a person.

See JI 920 Possession.

1442 THEFT FROM PERSON — § 943.20(1)(a) and (3)(d)2.

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1442 was originally published in 1981 and revised in 1991. It was withdrawn in 1999 when theft from person was included in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B, an instruction that adds a special question for use when any of the penalty-increasing factors in § 943.20(3)(d) are involved.

1443 THEFT BY CONTRACTOR — §§ 779.02(5) and 943.20(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft by contractor, as defined in § 779.02(5) of the Wisconsin Construction Lien Law and in § 943.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, under an agreement for the improvement of land, receives money from the owner, and who, without consent of the owner, contrary to his or her authority, intentionally uses any of the money for any purpose other than the payment of claims due or to become due from the defendant for labor or materials used in the improvements before all claims[1] are paid[2] [in full] [or] [proportionally in cases of deficiency].[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant entered into an oral or written agreement for the improvement of land.

   (Building) (Repairing) (Altering) (_____) a (house) (garage) (_____) is an improvement of land.[4]

2. The defendant received money from the owner under the agreement for the improvement of land.[5]

["Owner" means the owner of any interest in land who, personally or through an agent, enters into a contract for the improvement of the land.]

3. The defendant intentionally used any of the money for a purpose other than the payment of claims due or to become due from the defendant for labor or materials used in the improvements before all claims were paid [in full][6] [proportionally in cases of deficiency].[7]

4. The use of the money was without the consent of the owner of the land and contrary to the defendant's authority.

5. The defendant knew that the use of the money was without the consent of the owner of the land and contrary to the defendant's authority.[8]

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of theft by contractor have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD

SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[10]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the money used more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[11]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1443 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1985, 1991, 1994, 2002, 2003, 2006, 2007, 2014, and 2019. The 2014 revision added references to proportional payment in cases of deficiency to the text at footnotes 3 and 7. The 2019 revision updated the text and footnote 10 to reflect a new penalty category. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 11 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of §§ 779.02(5) and 943.20(1)(b). The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the money used exceeds specified levels. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 10, below.

Section 779.02(5) provides that any use by a contractor of money paid for improvements except to pay the claims of those who furnished labor and materials is theft and is "punishable under sec. 943.20." Longstanding Wisconsin case law has interpreted this offense and the reference to sec. 943.20 as not simply a reference to the penalty provision but rather to the definition of theft by trustee under sec. 943.20(1)(b), thereby incorporating the elements of that offense. Pauly v. Keebler, 175 Wis. 428, 185 N.W.2d 554 (1921); State v. Halverson, 32 Wis.2d 503, 145 N.W.2d 749 (1966).

The history and development of this offense were traced in footnote 9 to the 1976 version of JI-1443. It explained the early cases as follows:

> 9. This instruction on the nature of theft by a contractor demonstrates that it is a sophisticated cousin of ordinary embezzlement. The relationship between a misappropriation by a contractor and ordinary embezzlement was first made clear in Pauly v. Keebler (1921), 175 Wis. 428, 185 N.W. 554. At that time the misappropriation by a contractor was called "embezzlement" (Wis. Stat. § 3315(3) (1921)), which corresponded to the terminology used in the criminal code at the time. Wis. Stat. § 4418 (1921).
> In Pauly, supra, the court indicated that the elements which are essential to an ordinary embezzlement conviction may be implied into this statute, outside the criminal code, making misappropriations by contractors illegal. 175 Wis. at 436. In that particular case, the court implied the element of wrongful intent into the contractors statute because such intent was part of the ordinary embezzlement provisions of the criminal code. Since that case, nothing has happened which indicates that the court or the legislature intended any result other than the inclusion of all essential elements of the criminal embezzlement offense in the offense of theft by a contractor. In fact, the available evidence tends to reaffirm the view expressed in Pauly. In 1955, the legislature passed a complete revision of the criminal code to be effective July 1, 1956. Chapter 696, Laws of Wisconsin (Vol. II, 1955). In section 943.20 of the code revision act, the old embezzlement statute was revised by removing the word "embezzlement" and replacing it with the word "theft," and by merging it with other misappropriation laws to make one multiparagraph section on criminal misappropriation. Section I (943.20(1)(b)), Chapter 696, Laws of Wisconsin (Vol. II, 1955). In an effort to keep the close relationship between the old embezzlement law and the embezzlement by contractors provision constant, the legislature also amended section 289.02(4) to change the word "embezzlement" to "theft" in the contractors statute. Section 55 (289.02(4), Chapter 696, Laws of Wisconsin (Vol. II, 1955). Furthermore, in State v. Halverson, (1966) 32 Wis.2d 503, 154 N.W.2d 739, the court stated that the statutes > governing what used to be known as embezzlement in the criminal code and a statute nearly identical to the theft by contractors one involved here (Wis. Stat. § 235.701 (1965)) were to be read together. In the Halverson case, the court also indicated that the trustee referred to in the criminal code provision on misappropriation would include a contractor who held funds advanced to him pursuant to the trust created by the statute in his hands. Wis. Stat. §§ 289.02(5) or 706.11(3).

More recent cases indicate that "criminal intent," rather than "intent to defraud" is sufficient to constitute the crime, and Wis JI-Criminal 1443 now reflects this conclusion. See discussion at note 6, below.

1. Section 779.02 applies only to claims that are "not the subject of a bona fide dispute." If there is evidence of a bona fide dispute about the claims, the phrase "not the subject of a bona fide dispute" should be added immediately after the word "claims." Also see note 6, below.

2. The statement of the definition of the offense is a slightly simplified version of the full statutory text. No change in meaning is intended.

In cases involving mortgages, "proceeds of any mortgage" may be used in place of "money" and "mortgagee" used in place of or in addition to "owner." The changes would be necessary throughout the instruction.

3. Use the first phrase in brackets when there is no issue relating to proportional payment in a case involving a deficiency. Use the second phrase in brackets when there is an issue relating to proportional payment; see note 7, below. Use both phrases, connected with "or," when there is conflicting evidence about whether the case involves a deficiency.

4. If a more formal definition of "improvement" is needed, see sec. 779.01(2)(a) which provides as follows:

> (a) "Improve" or "improvement" includes any building, structure, erection, fixture, demolition, alteration, excavation, filling, grading, tiling, planting, clearing or landscaping which is built, erected, made or done on or to land for its permanent benefit. This enumeration is intended as an extension rather than a limitation of the normal meaning and scope of "improve" and "improvement."

5. This definition is adapted from the one found in sec. 779.01(2)(c).

6. The third element was affirmed as a correct statement of the law in State v. Sobkowiak, 173 Wis.2d 327, 336-39, 496 N.W.2d 620 (Ct. App. 1992): "The intent establishing the violation is the intent to use moneys subject to a trust for purposes inconsistent with the trust." No further intent – to defraud or to permanently deprive – is required. See note 8, below, which Sobkowiak cited with apparent approval.

If there is evidence in the case that the unpaid claims, or portions of the unpaid claims, were the subject of a bona fide dispute, add the following as a second paragraph of the definition of the third element:

The third element also requires that the claims for labor or materials were not the subject of a bona fide dispute. The state must prove either that there was no bona fide dispute about the claim or, that aside from any bona fide dispute, the defendant failed to pay claims that were not disputed. A "bona fide dispute" means a dispute based on a reasonable belief about the basis for or the amount of a claim.

7. Use this bracketed material when the case involves a deficiency in the amount available to pay the lienholders. In this situation, § 779.02(5) requires that the trust fund money be paid proportionally. See, State v. Keyes, 2008 WI 54, 309 Wis.2d 516, 750 N.W.2d 30, at ¶24-34.

8. In State v. Hess, 99 Wis.2d 22, 298 N.W.2d 111 (Ct. App. 1980), the court held that theft by contractor requires only "criminal intent" and not "intent to defraud." Hess seems to indicate the "criminal intent" boils down to knowledge that the defendant is in the position of trustee and that he or she intentionally uses the money for some other purpose than paying the suppliers. Wis JI-Criminal 1443 is drafted on the premise that using the funds for any purpose other than paying off the lien claimants is theft by contractor. This position is consistent with Hess, and with other recent cases: State v. Blaisdell, 85 Wis.2d 172, 270 N.W.2d 69 (1978); State v. Wolter, 85 Wis.2d 353, 270 N.W.2d 230 (Ct. App. 1978).

The 1976 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1443 included a sixth element which emphasized that the defendant must act with intent to convert the funds to his own personal use. This element has been eliminated as possibly confusing in light of the Hess, Blaisdell, and Wolter decisions discussed above. The matter is not as clear as one would like, since Hess and Wolter both cite the 1976 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1443 with approval while reaching conclusions that are arguably inconsistent with the instruction's emphasis on "personal use." The Committee takes the position that using the trust fund money for any purpose other than paying off the lienholders is "personal use" and thus the sixth element in the 1976 instruction was redundant.

This note was cited with apparent approval in State v. Sobkowiak, note 6, supra.

In Tri-Tech Corp. v. Americomp Services, 2002 WI 88, 254 Wis.2d 418, 646 N.W.2d 822 – a civil case – the court referred to the "six elements" of theft by contractor without referring to this instruction or to State v. Sobkowiak, (see note 6, supra). The Committee concluded that this reference did not require a change in the conclusion that the offense can be defined with five elements as described above.

9. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal-923A.

10. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). [In the context of this offense, the "property" is the money used for purposes other than paying the claims due.] While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

11. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1443A THEFT BY CONTRACTOR: DEFENDANT IS A CORPORATE OFFICER — §§ 779.02(5) and 943.20(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft by contractor, as defined in § 779.02(5) of the Wisconsin Construction Lien Law and in § 943.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who is (an officer) (a director) (an agent) of a corporation which, under an agreement for the improvement of land, receives money from the owner, and which, without consent of the owner, contrary to its authority, intentionally uses any of the money for any purpose other than the payment of claims due or to become due from the corporation for labor or materials used in the improvements before all claims[1] are paid[2] [in full] [or] [proportionately in cases of deficiency].[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (an officer) (a director) (an agent) of (name) corporation.
2. The (name) corporation entered into an oral or written agreement for the improvement of land.

   (Building) (Repairing) (Altering) (_____) a (house) (garage) (_____) is an improvement of land.

3. The (name) corporation received money from the owner under the agreement for the improvement of land.

["Owner" means the owner of any interest in land who, personally or through an agent, enters into a contract for the improvement of the land.][5]

4. The (name) corporation misappropriated money received from the owner.

"Misappropriate" means intentionally use any of the money for a purpose other than the payment of claims due or to become due from the corporation for labor or materials used in the improvements before all claims were paid[6] [in full] [or] [proportionately in cases of deficiency].[7]

5. The defendant was responsible for the misappropriation.

6. The misappropriation was without the consent of the owner of the land and contrary to the corporation's authority.

7. The defendant knew that the use of the money was without the consent of the owner of the land and contrary to the corporation's authority.[8]

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[9]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of theft by contractor have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[10]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the money used more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[11]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1443A was originally published in 2008 and revised in 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 11 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is drafted for violations of §§ 779.02(5) and 943.20(1)(b) that involve the third sentence of § 779.02(5) which provides for liability of corporate officers, etc., if the prime contractor is a corporation:

> If the prime contractor or subcontractor is a corporation, limited liability company, or other legal entity other than a sole proprietorship, such misappropriation also shall be deemed theft by any officers, directors, members, partners, or agents responsible for the misappropriation.

The instruction is drafted for violations involving an officer, director, or agent of a corporation. The statute also applies to "members" and "partners" of a "limited liability company, or other legal entity other than a sole proprietorship." If other alternatives are involved, the instruction must be modified accordingly.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the money used exceeds specified levels. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 10, below.

Section 779.02(5) provides that any use by a contractor of money paid for improvements except to pay the claims of those who furnished labor and materials is theft and is "punishable under sec. 943.20." Longstanding Wisconsin case law has interpreted this offense and the reference to sec. 943.20 as not simply a reference to the penalty provision but rather to the definition of theft by trustee under sec. 943.20(1)(b), thereby incorporating the elements of that offense. Pauly v. Keebler, 175 Wis. 428, 185 N.W.2d 554 (1921); State v. Halverson, 32 Wis.2d 503, 145 N.W.2d 749 (1966).

The history and development of this offense are discussed in the Comment, Wis JI-Criminal 1443.

1. Section 779.02 applies only to claims that are "not the subject of a bona fide dispute." If there is evidence of a bona fide dispute about the claims, the phrase "not the subject of a bona fide dispute" should be added immediately after the word "claims." Also see note 6, below.

2. The statement of the definition of the offense is a slightly simplified version of the full statutory text. No change in meaning is intended.

In cases involving mortgages, "proceeds of any mortgage" may be used in place of "money" and "mortgagee" used in place of or in addition to "owner." The changes would be necessary throughout the instruction.

3. Use the first phrase in brackets when there is no issue relating to proportional payment in a case involving a deficiency. Use the second phrase in brackets when there is an issue relating to proportional payment; see note 7, below. Use both phrases, connected with "or," when there is conflicting evidence about whether the case involves a deficiency.

4. If a more formal definition of "improvement" is needed, see sec. 779.01(2)(a) which provides as follows:

> (a) "Improve" or "improvement" includes any building, structure, erection, fixture, demolition, alteration, excavation, filling, grading, tiling, planting, clearing or landscaping which is built, erected, made or done on or to land for its permanent benefit. This enumeration is intended as an extension rather than a limitation of the normal meaning and scope of "improve" and "improvement."

5. This definition is adapted from the one found in sec. 779.01(2)(c).

6. This element was affirmed as a correct statement of the law in State v. Sobkowiak, 173 Wis.2d 327, 336-39, 496 N.W.2d 620 (Ct. App. 1992): "The intent establishing the violation is the intent to use moneys subject to a trust for purposes inconsistent with the trust." No further intent – to defraud or to permanently deprive – is required. See note 8, below, which Sobkowiak cited with apparent approval.

If there is evidence in the case that the unpaid claims, or portions of the unpaid claims, were the subject of a bona fide dispute, add the following as a second paragraph of the definition of the third element:

> The third element also requires that the claims for labor or materials were not the subject of a bona fide dispute. The state must prove either that there was no bona fide dispute about the claim or, that aside from any bona fide dispute, the defendant failed to pay claims that were not disputed. A "bona fide dispute" means a dispute based on a reasonable belief about the basis for or the amount of a claim.

7. Use this bracketed material when the case involves a deficiency in the amount available to pay the lienholders. In this situation, § 779.02(5) requires that the trust fund money be paid proportionally. See, State v. Keyes, 2008 WI 54, 309 Wis.2d 516, 750 N.W.2d 30, at ¶24-34.

8. In State v. Hess, 99 Wis.2d 22, 298 N.W.2d 111 (Ct. App. 1980), the court held that theft by contractor requires only "criminal intent" and not "intent to defraud." Hess seems to indicate the "criminal intent" boils down to knowledge that the defendant is in the position of trustee and that he or she intentionally uses the money for some other purpose than paying the suppliers. Wis JI-Criminal 1443 is drafted on the premise that using the funds for any purpose other than paying off the lien claimants is theft by contractor. This position is consistent with Hess, and with other recent cases: State v. Blaisdell, 85 Wis.2d 172, 270 N.W.2d 69 (1978); State v. Wolter, 85 Wis.2d 353, 270 N.W.2d 230 (Ct. App. 1978).

The 1976 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1443 included a sixth element which emphasized that the defendant must act with intent to convert the funds to his own personal use. This element has been eliminated as possibly confusing in light of the Hess, Blaisdell, and Wolter decisions discussed above. The matter is not as clear as one would like, since Hess and Wolter both cite the 1976 version of Wis JI-Criminal 1443 with approval while reaching conclusions that are arguably inconsistent with the instruction's emphasis on "personal use." The Committee takes the position that using the trust fund money for any purpose other than paying off the lienholders is "personal use" and thus the sixth element in the 1976 instruction was redundant.

This note was cited with apparent approval in State v. Sobkowiak, note 6, supra.

In Tri-Tech Corp. v. Americomp Services, 2002 WI 88, 254 Wis.2d 418, 646 N.W.2d 822 – a civil case – the court referred to the "six elements" of theft by contractor without referring to this instruction or to State v. Sobkowiak, (see note 6, supra). The Committee concluded that this reference did not require a change in the conclusion that the offense can be defined with five elements as described above.

9. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

10. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957).

[In the context of this offense, the "property" is the money used for purposes other than paying the claims due.] While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class

G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

11. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1444 THEFT BY EMPLOYEE, TRUSTEE, OR BAILEE (EMBEZZLEMENT) — § 943.20(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who,[1] by virtue of his or her employment, has possession of money belonging to another and intentionally uses[2] the money without the owner's consent, contrary to his or her authority, and with intent to convert it to [his or her own use] [the use of another].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had possession of money belonging to another because of (his) (her) employment.[3]
2. The defendant intentionally used the money without the owner's consent and contrary to the defendant's authority.

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to use the money without the owner's consent[4] and contrary to the defendant's authority.[5]
3. The defendant knew that the use of the money was without the owner's consent and contrary to the defendant's authority.[6]

4. The defendant intended to convert the money to [(his) (her) own use] [the use of any other person].[7]

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[9]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the money used more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[10]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1444 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1991, 1994, 2002, 2003, 2006, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated the text and footnote 10 to reflect a new sub category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(b). For theft by contractor offenses involving the combination of § 943.20(1)(b) with § 779.02(5), see Wis JI-Criminal 1443.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the money used exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 9, below.

The four elements used in this instruction have been cited as a correct breakdown of this offense. See, State v. Halverson, 32 Wis.2d 503, 509, 145 N.W.2d 739 (1966); State v. Blaisdell, 85 Wis.2d 172, 176, 270 N.W.2d 69 (1978).

The essential distinction between a violation of section 943.20(1)(a) and section 943.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code is that, under subsection (1)(a), the intention to return the property is a defense; whereas, under subsection (1)(b), an intention to return the property is not a defense since an intent to deprive the owner permanently is not essential to constitute the offense. Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin – Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 275 (1960-1961). A distinction between theft under subsection (1)(b) and subsection (1)(d) is that, under the former section, the defendant has obtained only possession of the property; whereas, under the latter section, the defendant has obtained title to the property by false pretenses. See State v. Burke, 189 Wis. 641, 207 N.W. 406 (1926).

1. The summary of this offense in the first paragraph, and the elements of the instruction, represent a considerable simplification of a rather complex statutory definition. "By virtue of his employment" could be replaced by any of the following: "by virtue of his office"; "by virtue of his business"; "as a trustee"; or "as a bailee." "Having possession" is a choice over "having possession or custody." "Money" is one of several options, the others being "negotiable security," "instrument," "paper," or "other negotiable writing of another." If the theft of something other than money is involved, it may be necessary to define "value." See § 943.20(2)(d). "Uses" was selected rather than "transfers," "conceals," or "retains possession of." But see note 4, below. Finally, the statute also provides an alternative to "convert to his own use": "to the use of any other person except the owner." Rather than carry all these alternatives in parentheses throughout the instruction, the Committee concluded it was more efficient to select the simpler statement that ought to be general enough to cover the most common cases.

2. If the charge does not specify one of the alternatives in the statute – "use, transfer, conceal or retain possession of" – the jury instruction should either elect one of the alternatives or advise the jury they must unanimously agree if more than one alternative is submitted. In State v. Seymour, 183 Wis.2d 683, 515 N.W.2d 874 (1994), the Wisconsin Supreme Court held that it was error to instruct the jury in the disjunctive – "used, transferred, concealed or retained possession of . . ." – without requiring the jury to agree unanimously on which alternative applied. Rather, the statute "uses words which were intended to describe independent offenses rather than simply delineating methods by which the same offense may be committed." 183 Wis.2d 683, 685. This affirmed the court of appeals, which had reached the same conclusion. See 177 Wis.2d 305, 502 N.W.2d 591 (Ct. App. 1993). [See Wis JI-Criminal 517 for a suggested instruction requiring jury agreement.].

3. The Committee concluded that the general phrase, "because of (his) (her) employment," will be preferable in most cases to using one of the more specific statutory terms – "office," "business," "trustee," or "bailee." See note 1, supra.

However, in a case involving a bailment, it may be necessary for the court to give the jury additional instruction in the light of the particular facts of the case. The situations here are so varied that the Committee has not attempted to set forth a standard definition, and the necessity and form for an instruction in that respect must be determined on a case-by-case basis. See Burns v. State, 145 Wis. 373, 380, 128 N.W. 987 (1911). Whether the relationship of bailee or trustee or the like is created does, however, sometimes present a question of fact. No particular ceremony is necessary for the creation of such a relationship under the Criminal Code. In Burns v. State, supra, the supreme court said, in part, at page 380:

> It seems to be thought that a bailment was not established by the evidence because some sort of contract inter partes was essential thereto. No particular ceremony or actual meeting of minds is necessary to the creation of a bailment. If one, without the trespass which characterizes ordinary larceny, comes into possession of any personalty of another and is in duty bound to exercise some degree of care to preserve and restore the thing to such other or to some person for that other, or otherwise account for the property as that of such other, according to circumstances, – he is a bailee. It is the element of lawful possession, however created, and duty to account for the thing as the property of another, that creates the bailment, regardless of whether such possession is based on contract in the ordinary sense or not.

What constitutes a "bailment" was discussed in State v. Kuhn, 178 Wis.2d 428, 504 N.W.2d 405 (Ct. App. 1993). Kuhn affirmed the conviction of the owner of an auction gallery who took in goods consignment, sold them, and then failed to pay the person who consigned the goods to her. Her business was failing, and she apparently used the full sale proceeds to pay off debts. The court held that this consignment arrangement did constitute a "bailment" for purpose of § 943.20(1)(b), rejecting the defendant's argument that the formal definition of "bailment" in the Uniform Commercial Code should apply.

4. The defendant accused of this offense has by definition been given consent to hold or use the property for some purpose. It is the use beyond the scope of this consent that is the essence of this crime. Consent to the use of property may be expressed or implied and may result from words or from conduct involving a course of dealings between the parties. See Boyd v. State, 217 Wis. 149, 258 N.W. 330 (1935).

Liabilities growing out of a debtor-creditor relationship cannot be made the basis of the charge of theft. See Hanser v. State, 217 Wis. 587, 592, 259 N.W. 418 (1935). Also see Peters v. State, 42 Wis.2d 541, 167 N.W.2d 250 (1969), where the evidence was found to be sufficient to establish that a loan did not exist.

5. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

In State v. Bryzek, 2016 WI App 48, 370 Wis.2d 237, 882 N.W.2d 483, the trial court added to the standard instruction to include a definition of "power of attorney" in connection with the "contrary to the defendant's authority" element. The court of appeals reversed the conviction because the statute upon which the definition was based was not enacted until after the date of the offense.

6. The word "intentionally," as defined by § 939.23(3), requires "knowledge of those facts necessary to make the conduct criminal" and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

7. Under section 943.20(1)(b), an intent to pay back the money or restore the property at a later time is not a defense even though such intent existed contemporaneously with the act of conversion. Boyd v. State, supra; McGeever v. State, 239 Wis. 87, 93-94, 300 N.W. 486 (1941).

The evidence was found sufficient to establish "intent to convert to one's own use" in State v. Doss, 2008 WI 93, ¶¶57-64, 312 Wis.2d 570, 754 N.W.2d 150. Also see State v. Kuhn, 178 Wis.2d 426, 505 N.W.2d 405 (Ct. App. 1993).

The jury is under no obligation to accept direct evidence of intent furnished by the defendant, and it may infer intent from such of the defendant's acts as objectively evidence his state of mind. State v. Kuenzli, 208 Wis. 340, 346, 242 N.W. 147 (1932). In Boyd v. State, supra, the supreme court said ". . . acts intentionally committed under circumstances such as to constitute a crime are not justified by the claim of innocent intent." Boyd, 217 Wis. at 163.

Section 943.20(1)(b) includes a provision establishing refusal to deliver the property upon demand as "prima facie evidence" of intent to convert to his own use. The last sentence of that subsection provides:

> A refusal to deliver any money or a negotiable security, instrument, paper or other negotiable writing, which is in his possession or custody by virtue of his office, business or employment, or as trustee or bailee, upon demand of the person entitled to receive it, or as required by law, is prima facie evidence of an intent to convert to his own use within the meaning of this paragraph.

Wis JI-Criminal 225 provides a recommended model for implementing "prima facie evidence" provisions.

The definition of "conversion" is discussed in the context of a civil case in Kozak v. United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co., 120 Wis.2d 462, 355 N.W.2d 362 (Ct. App. 1984).

8. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

9. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

10. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser > included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1450 THEFT BY ONE HAVING AN UNDISPUTED INTEREST IN PROPERTY FROM ONE HAVING SUPERIOR RIGHT OF POSSESSION — § 943.20(1)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(c) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, having a legal interest in movable property, intentionally and without consent, takes the property out of the possession of a person having a superior right of possession[1] with intent thereby to deprive that person permanently of possession of the property.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took movable property out of the possession of (name person who had possession).

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to take movable property.[2]

   "Movable property" means property whose physical location can be changed.[3]

2. (Name person who had possession) had a right of possession of the property superior to that of the defendant.

3. (Name person who had possession) did not consent[4] to the defendant taking the property.

4. The defendant knew that (name person who had possession) had a right of possession superior to defendant's and knew that (name person who had possession) did not consent to taking the property.[5]

5. The defendant took the property with intent thereby to deprive (name person who had possession) permanently of the possession of the property.

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[6]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[7]

[Finding Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of property stolen more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[8]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[9]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1450 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1992, 2002, 2006, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated the text and footnote 9 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(c). The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 7, below. The penalty increases to a Class D felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

1. The instruction does not include the statutory alternative of "pledgee," assuming that the broader statement is sufficient in most cases. If a pledge situation is involved, the term should be defined for the jury. No standard definition is offered because the facts of each case will need to be included.

2. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

3. This is based on the definition of "movable property" in § 943.20(2)(a) which provides:

> (a) "Movable property" is property whose physical location can be changed, without limitation including electricity and gas, documents which represent or embody intangible rights, and things growing on, affixed to or found in land.

Section 943.20(2) defines "property" as follows:

> (b) "Property" means all forms of tangible property, whether real or personal, without limitation including electricity, gas and documents which represent or embody a chose in action or other intangible rights.

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. Knowledge that the other person had a superior right of possession and that the taking was without consent is required because the definition of this offense begins with the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute.

6. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

7. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

8. This is the most often used part of the definition of "value" provided in § 943.20(2)(d). The full definition follows:

"Value" means that market value at the time of the theft or the cost to the victim of replacing the property within a reasonable time after the theft, whichever is less, but if the property stolen is a document evidencing a chose in action or other intangible right, value means either the market value of the chose in action or other right or the intrinsic value of the document, whichever is greater. If the thief gave consideration for, or had a legal interest in, the stolen property, the amount of such consideration or value of such interest shall be deducted from the total value of the property.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court in Sartin v. State, 44 Wis.2d 138, 170 N.W.2d 727 (1969), a theft case, refused to adopt either a retail or wholesale value definition of the term "value." It is felt that in the theft statute, "[t]he statutory scheme clearly contemplates a determination of the cost of replacement to the victim." Sartin at 149.

9. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1453 THEFT BY FRAUD — § 943.20(1)(d)

INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1453 was originally published in 1967 and revised in 1977, 1983, 1988, 1991, and 2003.

In 2003, the instruction was divided into two versions: Wis JI-Criminal 1453A and 1453B. Wis JI-Criminal 1453 should have been withdrawn at that time but was mistakenly republished. It is now withdrawn.

1453A THEFT BY FRAUD: REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO THE OWNER, DIRECTLY OR BY A THIRD PERSON — § 943.20(1)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who obtains title to property of another person by intentionally deceiving that person with a false representation which is known to be false, made with intent to defraud, and which does defraud the person to whom it is made.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following seven elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name) was the owner of property.

2. The defendant made a false representation to the owner.

   This requires that the false representation be one of past or existing fact. It does not include expressions of opinions or representations of law.[1]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE ALLEGED REPRESENTATION WAS MADE TO A THIRD PERSON.[2]

   [It is not required that the defendant directly communicated with the owner. The defendant is responsible for a statement made to a third person if the defendant intended or had reason to expect that the statement would be repeated to, or its substance communicated to, the owner and that it would influence the owner's conduct in the transaction.]

IF THERE WAS A PROMISE IN ADDITION TO THE REPRESENTATION OF PAST OR EXISTING FACT, ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH USING "ALSO INCLUDES." IF THE ONLY REPRESENTATION WAS A PROMISE, STRIKE THE PREVIOUS TWO SENTENCES AND GIVE THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH INSTEAD, USING "IN THIS CASE MEANS."

[A false representation (also includes) (in this case means) a promise made with intent not to perform it, if the promise is a part of a false and fraudulent scheme.][3]

3. The defendant knew the representation was false.

4. The defendant made the representation with intent to deceive and to defraud the owner.

This requires that the defendant made the representations with the purpose to deceive and defraud the owner or that the defendant was practically certain that (his) (her) representations would deceive and defraud the owner.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[It is not required that the defendant knew the identity of the owner.][4]

5. The defendant obtained title[5] to the property of the owner by the false representation.

IF MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Money is property. Title to money is obtained by gaining possession.]

IF PROPERTY OTHER THAN MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Title to property may be obtained by [execution and delivery of a (deed) (bill of sale) (conditional sales contract) (land contract) (assignment) (other instrument transferring ownership)] [sale and delivery of the property] [gift] [gaining possession of property through a lease.][6]

6. The owner was deceived by the representation.

"Deceived" means "misled."

7. The owner was defrauded by the representation.

This requires that the owner did in fact part with title to property in reliance (at least in part) on the false representation.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all seven elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE OR OTHER FACT MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE

QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[9]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[10]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[11]

[In determining the value of the property obtained, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

This instruction is based on Wis JI-Criminal 1453, which was originally published in 1967 and revised in 1977, 1983, 1988, 1991, 2003, 2006, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 11 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(d) that involve representations made to the owner of the property. If representations were made to an agent of the owner, see Wis JI-Criminal 1453B. Representations communicated via a third person do not necessarily involve an agency relationship. See State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, discussed in footnote 2, below.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 9, below. The penalty increases to a Class H felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

Multiple counts of theft by fraud were found to be appropriate when each required proof of a fact the other did not. State v. Swinson, 2003 WI App 45, 261 Wis.2d 633, 660 N.W.2d 12.

It is lawful to charge theft by fraud in violation of § 943.20(1)(d) where a more specific statute may apply – in this case, § 98.15(1), which makes it a misdemeanor to manipulate the quality of milk samples. State v. Ploeckelman, 2007 WI App 31, 199 Wis.2d 251, 729 N.W.2d 784.

1. It is generally held that the representation must be one of fact (Corscott v. State, 178 Wis. 661, 671, 190 N.W. 465 (1922)) and that a representation of law or an opinion does not fall within the statute. 32 Am. Jur. False Pretenses §§ 15 and 17 (1939). The difficulty, however, is in drawing the distinction between representation of "facts" and representations of "opinions" or "law." Declarations of value, it has been held, can be fraud (United States v. Rowe, 56 F.2d 747, 749 (2d Cir. 1932)) and whether a statement is one of fact or of law may be a close question. See Melli and Remington, "Theft - A Comparative Analysis," 1954 Wis. L. Rev. 253, 263-65; Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin - Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 282-87 (1960-61).

Conduct can constitute a "representation" under the theft by fraud statute. State v. Ploeckelman 2007 WI App 31, 199 Wis.2d 251, 729 N.W.2d 784.

"[P]roviding fictitious business names and stolen personal identifying information to a phone company as a way of avoiding payment falls within the meaning of 'false representation.'" State v. Steffes, 2013 WI 33, ¶4, 347 Wis.2d 683, 832 N.W.2d 101.

2. This material is intended to reflect the decision in State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, which held that the theft by fraud statute applies in a case where the defendant did not communicate directly with the victim of his fraudulent scheme. Communication was achieved via a third person, whom, the court concluded, was not the agent of the defendant or the victim. The court relied on the Restatement (Second) of Torts which recognizes "civil liability for misrepresentation where it is foreseeable and intended that a fraudulent misrepresentation will be repeated to third parties and acted upon by them." 2002 WI App 304, ¶ 31. Though the decision addressed plea withdrawal, it appears to be clear authority for the proposition that the same rule is sufficient for criminal liability.

3. Section 943.20(1)(d) changed old case law to the effect that a false promise was not sufficient to satisfy the statute. See, e.g., State ex rel. Labuwi v. Hathaway, 168 Wis. 518, 170 N.W. 654 (1919). The false promise must be part of a "false and fraudulent scheme." This means that the defendant must have made the promise without any intention of carrying the promise out and for the purpose of causing the victim to part with his property. The mere failure to carry out the promise alone is, necessarily, not sufficient to support a conviction. See Melli and Remington, "Theft – A Comparative Analysis," 1954 Wis. L. Rev. 253, 271; Platz, "The Criminal Code," 1956 Wis. L. Rev. 350, 374-75; Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin – Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 283-84 (1960-61). One example that the drafters of the Criminal Code had in mind was that of unscrupulous building contractors who accepted a down payment on a house they did not intend to build. See 1953 Report on the Criminal Code, p. 112. The contractor's failure to act (failure to build the house) may be considered in trying to decide whether the contractor intended not to perform the promise (to build the house) at the time the promise was made. It would be appropriate to add a reference to "failure to act" to "Deciding About Intent" paragraph of the instruction.

4. The Committee concluded that the defendant need not know the identity of the person who was ultimately defrauded, as where, for example, the fraudulent representations are not made directly to the ultimate victim. See, for example, State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, discussed in footnote 2, supra.

5. It is the opinion of the Committee that it is unnecessary that the defendant obtain full legal title to support a conviction under this section, although the section does specifically refer to obtaining "title." Obtaining property under a conditional sales contract, for example, would support a conviction under this section. See Whitmore v. State, 238 Wis. 79, 298 N.W. 194 (1941); Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin - Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 280-81 (1960-61). Also see note 6, below.

"Property" is defined in § 943.20(2)(b). In State v. Steffes, 2013 WI 33, ¶¶8 and 26, 347 Wis.2d 683, 832 N.W.2d 101, the court answered "yes" to the following question: "[W]hether the applied electricity that AT&T uses to power its network is included in the definition of 'property' under § 943.20(2)(b)."

"Property of another" is defined by §§ 939.22(28) and 943.20(2)(d).

The proper construction of "obtains title" was discussed by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. O'Neil, 141 Wis.2d 535, 416 N.W.2d 77 (Ct. App. 1987). The O'Neil decision held that the defendant need not personally receive title to the property to satisfy the statute's requirement that title be "obtained." The court noted that the version of Wis JI-Criminal 1453 then in effect was inconsistent with this holding since it defined the fourth element as requiring that "there must have been a transfer of title from the owner to the defendant." The 1988 revision of the instruction deletes that phrase.

In the O'Neil case, the defendant was the interim director of a corporation that did business with Eau Claire County. Based on records altered by the defendant, the county was overbilled. The funds so obtained were deposited in the corporation's account. The court of appeals held that O'Neil "obtained" the money even though she did not directly receive it herself:

> If a person induces another to part with money by fraudulent misrepresentations, then title to that property has been obtained within the meaning of the statute. The crime is complete when the title has been obtained. 141 Wis.2d 535, 536-37.

For a case like O'Neil, a definition of "obtains" would apparently be acceptable if it provided: "'Obtains' means to induce another to part with title to property." In the Committee's judgment, depending on the facts of the case, that definition might not go far enough. The common meaning of "obtains" appears to have two aspects: relinquishing of title by the owner and receipt by someone else. It is the receipt aspect that O'Neil leaves open. It was not a problem in O'Neil because of the defendant's close connection with the actual recipient of the money (director of the corporation). It could be argued that a complete definition ought to include an expression of the required relationship between the defendant and the actual recipient.

6. In State v. Meado, 163 Wis.2d 789, 472 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1991), the court concluded that "the phrase 'obtains title to property,' as used in § 943.20(1)(d), Stats., is intended to include cases where a person induces another to part with property under a lease agreement by fraudulent representation." 163 Wis.2d 789, 799. Meado had obtained a van from a dealer under a lease agreement. He gave the dealer a check as the down payment and the check bounced. The check was written on an account that was closed before the check was written; Meado had also given a false home address to the dealer. The court said that Meado had gained the benefit of the van through false representation, thereby violating "the leading idea" of the statute which is "to prohibit the deprivation of the owner's property by fraudulent, non-violent means." 163 Wis.2d 789, 798.

7. Section 943.20(1)(d) requires that the defendant obtain title to the property by deceiving the victim and that the victim be defrauded by the false representation. See Frank v. State ex rel. Meiers, 244 Wis. 658, 660, 12 N.W.2d 923 (1944); Palotta v. State, 184 Wis. 290, 199 N.W. 72 (1924). The victim is not under a duty to investigate the truth of the representations, and any negligence by the victim in not discovering the fraud is not a defense. See State v. Lambert, 73 Wis.2d 590, 243 N.W.2d 524 (1976); State v. Lunz, 86 Wis.2d 695, 273 N.W.2d 767 (1979); and Palotta v. State, supra.

What now appears at elements 6 and 7 was revised in 1983 as suggested by State v. Kennedy, 105 Wis.2d 625, 314 N.W.2d 884 (Ct. App. 1981). Kennedy also held that an ultimate financial loss by the victim is not required: ". . . the victim's final accounting is irrelevant." 105 Wis.2d at 640.

8. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A. If the case involves a promise made with intent not to perform it, it is appropriate to add reference to "failure to act" to this paragraph. See footnote 3, supra.

9. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

10. Section 943.20(2)(d).

11. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.
> 71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1453B THEFT BY FRAUD: REPRESENTATIONS MADE TO AN AGENT — § 943.20(1)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who obtains title to property of another person by intentionally deceiving an agent of that person with a false representation which is known to be false, made with intent to defraud, and which does defraud the owner of the property.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following eight elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name) was the owner of property.

2. (Name) was the agent of the owner.

   An agent is a person authorized to act on the owner's behalf.[1]

3. The defendant made a false representation to the agent.

   This requires that the false representation be one of past or existing fact. It does not include expressions of opinions or representations of law.[2]

   IF THERE WAS A PROMISE IN ADDITION TO THE REPRESENTATION OF PAST OR EXISTING FACT, ADD THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH USING "ALSO INCLUDES." IF THE ONLY REPRESENTATION WAS A PROMISE, STRIKE THE

PREVIOUS TWO SENTENCES AND GIVE THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPH INSTEAD, USING "IN THIS CASE MEANS."

[A false representation (also includes) (in this case means) a promise made with intent not to perform it, if the promise is a part of a false and fraudulent scheme.][3]

4. The defendant knew the representation was false.

5. The defendant made the representation with intent to deceive the agent and to defraud the owner.

This requires that the defendant made the representation with the purpose to deceive the agent and defraud the owner or that the defendant was practically certain that (his) (her) representation would deceive the agent and defraud the owner.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE:

[It is not required that the defendant knew the identity of the owner.][4]

6. The defendant obtained title[5] to the property of the owner by making the false representation to the agent.

IF MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Money is property. Title to money is obtained by gaining possession.]

IF PROPERTY OTHER THAN MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

[Title to property may be obtained by [execution and delivery of a (deed) (bill of sale) (conditional sales contract) (land contract) (assignment) (other instrument transferring ownership)] [sale and delivery of the property] [gift] [gaining possession of property through a lease.][6]

7. The agent was deceived by the representation.

"Deceived" means "misled."

8. The owner was defrauded by the representation.

This requires that the owner of property did in fact part with title to property in reliance (at least in part) on the false representation.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all eight elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE OR OTHER FACT MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[9]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property obtained more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[10] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[11]

[In determining the value of the property obtained, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

This instruction is based on Wis JI-Criminal 1453, which was originally published in 1967 and revised in 1977, 1983, 1988, 1991, 2003, 2006, 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 11 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(d) that involve representations made to the agent of the owner of the property. If representations were made directly to the owner, see Wis JI-Criminal 1453A. Representations communicated via a third person do not necessarily involve an agency relationship. See State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, discussed in footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1453A.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 9, below. The penalty increases to a Class H felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

Multiple counts of theft by fraud were found to be appropriate when each required proof of a fact the other did not. State v. Swinson, 2003 WI App 45, 261 Wis.2d 633, 660 N.W.2d 12.

1. A fraudulent representation may be communicated via a third person without that third person being an agent of the defendant or the owner. See, for example, State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, discussed in footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1453A.

2. A false representation to an agent of the owner is within the statute. The Committee is of the opinion that if the representation is made in writing, addressed to a corporation or a partnership, etc., it is made directly to the owner, but if addressed to an officer or employee, it is made to an agent of the owner.

3. See § 943.20(1)(d). The statute changes old case law to the effect that a false promise was not sufficient to satisfy the statute. See, e.g., State ex rel. Labuwi v. Hathaway, 168 Wis. 518, 170 N.W. 654 (1919). The false promise must be part of a "false and fraudulent scheme." § 943.20(1)(d). This means that the defendant must have made the promise without any intention of carrying the promise out and for the purpose of causing the victim to part with his property. The mere failure to carry out the promise alone is, necessarily, not sufficient to support a conviction. See Melli and Remington, "Theft – A Comparative Analysis," 1954 Wis. L. Rev. 253, 271; Platz, "The Criminal Code," 1956 Wis. L. Rev. 350, 374-75; Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin – Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 283-84 (1960-61).

4. The Committee concluded that the defendant need not know the identity of the person who was ultimately defrauded, as where, for example, the fraudulent representations are not made directly to the ultimate victim. See, for example, State v. Timblin, 2002 WI App 304, 259 Wis.2d 299, 657 N.W.2d 89, discussed in footnote 2, Wis JI-Criminal 1453A.

5. It is the opinion of the Committee that it is unnecessary that the defendant obtain full legal title to support a conviction under this section, although the section does specifically refer to obtaining "title." Obtaining property under a conditional sales contract, for example, would support a conviction under this section. See Whitmore v. State, 238 Wis. 79, 298 N.W. 194 (1941); Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin - Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 280-81 (1960-61). Also see note 6, below.

"Property of another" is defined by §§ 939.22(28) and 943.20(2)(d).

The proper construction of "obtains title" was discussed by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. O'Neil, 141 Wis.2d 535, 416 N.W.2d 77 (Ct. App. 1987). The O'Neil decision held that the defendant need not personally receive title to the property to satisfy the statute's requirement that title be "obtained." The court noted that the version of Wis JI-Criminal 1453 then in effect was inconsistent with this holding since it defined the fourth element as requiring that "there must have been a transfer of title from the owner to the defendant." The 1988 revision of the instruction deletes that phrase.

In the O'Neil case, the defendant was the interim director of a corporation that did business with Eau Claire County. Based on records altered by the defendant, the county was overbilled. The funds so obtained were deposited in the corporation's account. The court of appeals held that O'Neil "obtained" the money even though she did not directly receive it herself:

> If a person induces another to part with money by fraudulent misrepresentations, then title to that property has been obtained within the meaning of the statute. The crime is complete when the title has been obtained. 141 Wis.2d 535, 536-37.

For a case like O'Neil, a definition of "obtains" would apparently be acceptable if it provided: "'Obtains' means to induce another to part with title to property." In the Committee's judgment, depending on the facts of the case, such a definition might not go far enough. The common meaning of "obtains" seems to have two aspects: relinquishing of title by the owner and receipt by someone else. It is the receipt aspect that O'Neil leaves open. It was not a problem in O'Neil because of the defendant's close connection with the actual recipient of the money (director of the corporation). It could be argued that a complete definition ought to include an expression of the required relationship between the defendant and the actual recipient.

6. In State v. Meado, 163 Wis.2d 789, 472 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1991), the court concluded that "the phrase 'obtains title to property,' as used in § 943.20(1)(d), Stats., is intended to include cases where a person induces another to part with property under a lease agreement by fraudulent representation." 163 Wis.2d 789, 799. Meado had obtained a van from a dealer under a lease agreement. He gave the dealer a check as the down payment and the check bounced. The check was written on an account that was closed before the check was written; Meado had also given a false home address to the dealer. The court said that Meado had gained the benefit of the van through false representation, thereby violating "the leading idea" of the statute which is "to prohibit the deprivation of the owner's property by fraudulent, non-violent means." 163 Wis.2d 789, 798.

7. Section 943.20(1)(d) requires that the defendant obtain title to the property by deceiving the victim and that the victim be defrauded by the false representation. See Frank v. State ex rel. Meiers, 244 Wis. 658, 660, 12 N.W.2d 923 (1944); Palotta v. State, 184 Wis. 290, 199 N.W. 72 (1924). The victim is not under a duty to investigate the truth of the representations, and any negligence by the victim in not discovering the fraud is not a defense. See State v. Lambert, 73 Wis.2d 590, 243 N.W.2d 524 (1976); State v. Lunz, 86 Wis.2d 695, 273 N.W.2d 767 (1979); and Palotta v. State, supra.

What now appears at elements 6 and 7 was revised in 1983 as suggested by State v. Kennedy, 105 Wis.2d 625, 314 N.W.2d 884 (Ct. App. 1981). Kennedy also held that an ultimate financial loss by the victim is not required: ". . . the victim's final accounting is irrelevant." 105 Wis.2d at 640.

8. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A. If the case involves a promise made with intent not to perform it, it is appropriate to add reference to "failure to act" to this paragraph. See footnote 3, supra.

9. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

10. Section 943.20(2)(d).

11. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;

(b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or

(c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.

(d) If The property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1453C THEFT BY FRAUD: FAILURE TO DISCLOSE AS A REPRESENTATION – § 943.20(1)(d)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(d) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who obtains title to property of another person by intentionally deceiving that person by failing to disclose a fact that (he) (she) had a duty to disclose, done with intent to defraud, and which does defraud that person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained title[1] to the property of (name of victim).

   IF MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

   [Money is property. Title to money is obtained by gaining possession.]

   IF PROPERTY OTHER THAN MONEY WAS OBTAINED, USE THE FOLLOWING:

   [Title to property may be obtained by [execution and delivery of a (deed) (bill of sale) (conditional sales contract) (land contract) (assignment) (other instrument transferring ownership)] [sale and delivery of the property] [gift] [gaining possession of property through a lease.][2]

2. The defendant obtained title to the property of (name of victim) by failing to disclose a fact to (name of victim).

3. The defendant had a duty to disclose that fact.

A duty to disclose a fact exists under the following circumstances:[3]

• the fact is material to the transaction; and,

• the defendant knew that (name of victim) was about to enter into the transaction under a mistake as to the fact; and,

• the fact was peculiarly and exclusively within the knowledge of the defendant, and (name of victim) could not reasonably be expected to discover it; and,

• (name of victim) reasonably expected disclosure of the fact.

4. The defendant failed to disclose the fact with intent to deceive and to defraud (name of victim).

This requires that the defendant failed to disclose the fact with the purpose to deceive and defraud (name of victim) or that the defendant was practically certain that (his) (her) failure to disclose the fact would deceive and defraud (name of victim).

5. (Name of victim) was deceived by the failure to disclose the fact.

"Deceived" means "misled."

6. (Name of victim) was defrauded by the failure to disclose the fact.

This requires that (name of victim) did part with title to property in reliance (at least in part) on the failure to disclose.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE OR OTHER FACT MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[6]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the money used more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the money used more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[7] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[8]

[In determining the value of the property obtained, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1453C was originally published in 2008 and revised in 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 8 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(d) that involve failure to disclose facts to the owner of the property. See State v. Ploeckelman, 2007 WI App 31, 299 Wis.2d 251, 729 N.W.2d 784, discussed in footnote 3. For cases involving an agent of the owner, see Wis JI-Criminal 1453B for possible changes in the instruction. Representations communicated via a third person do not necessarily involve an agency relationship.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 7, below. The penalty increases to a Class H felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

Multiple counts of theft by fraud were found to be appropriate when each required proof of a fact the other did not. State v. Swinson, 2003 WI App 45, 261 Wis.2d 633, 660 N.W.2d 12.

1. It is the opinion of the Committee that it is unnecessary that the defendant obtain full legal title to support a conviction under this section, although the section does specifically refer to obtaining "title." Obtaining property under a conditional sales contract, for example, would support a conviction under this section. See Whitmore v. State, 238 Wis. 79, 298 N.W. 194 (1941); Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin - Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 280-81 (1960-61).

"Property of another" is defined by §§ 939.22(28) and 943.20(2)(d).

The proper construction of "obtains title" was discussed by the Wisconsin Court of Appeals in State v. O'Neil, 141 Wis.2d 535, 416 N.W.2d 77 (Ct. App. 1987). The O'Neil decision held that the defendant need not personally receive title to the property to satisfy the statute's requirement that title be "obtained." The court noted that the version of Wis JI-Criminal 1453 then in effect was inconsistent with this holding since it defined the fourth element as requiring that "there must have been a transfer of title from the owner to the defendant." The 1988 revision of Wis JI-Criminal 1453 deleted that phrase.

In the O'Neil case, the defendant was the interim director of a corporation that did business with Eau Claire County. Based on records altered by the defendant, the county was overbilled. The funds so obtained were deposited in the corporation's account. The court of appeals held that O'Neil "obtained" the money even though she did not directly receive it herself:

> If a person induces another to part with money by fraudulent misrepresentations, then title to that property has been obtained within the meaning of the statute. The crime is complete when the title has been obtained. 141 Wis.2d 535, 536-37.

For a case like O'Neil, a definition of "obtains" would apparently be acceptable if it provided: "'Obtains' means to induce another to part with title to property." In the Committee's judgment, depending on the facts of the case, that a definition might not go far enough. The common meaning of "obtains" appears to have two aspects: relinquishing of title by the owner and receipt by someone else. It is the receipt aspect that O'Neil leaves open. It was not a problem in O'Neil because of the defendant's close connection with the actual recipient of the money (director of the corporation). It could be argued that a complete definition ought to include an expression of the required relationship between the defendant and the actual recipient.

2. In State v. Meado, 163 Wis.2d 789, 472 N.W.2d 567 (Ct. App. 1991), the court concluded that "the phrase 'obtains title to property,' as used in § 943.20(1)(d), Stats., is intended to include cases where a person induces another to part with property under a lease agreement by fraudulent representation." 163 Wis.2d 789, 799. Meado had obtained a van from a dealer under a lease agreement. He gave the dealer a check as the down payment and the check bounced. The check was written on an account that was closed before the check was written; Meado had also given a false home address to the dealer. The court said that Meado had gained the benefit of the van through false representation, thereby violating "the leading idea" of the statute which is "to prohibit the deprivation of the owner's property by fraudulent, non-violent means." 163 Wis.2d 789, 798.

3. This definition is based on the standard adopted in State v. Ploeckelman, 2007 WI App 31, 299 Wis.2d 251, 729 N.W.2d 784:

> ¶18. A representation can be acts or conduct. In Kaloti Enters., Inc. v. Kellogg Sales Co., 2005 WI 111, our supreme court laid out the circumstances where a failure to disclose can constitute a representation. The court concluded:
> A party to a business transaction has a duty to disclose a fact where: (1) the fact is material to the transaction; (2) the party with knowledge of that fact knows that the other party is about to enter into the transaction under a mistake as to the fact; (3) the fact is peculiarly and exclusively within the knowledge of one party, and the mistaken party could not reasonably be expected to discover it; and (4) on account of the objective circumstances, the mistaken party would reasonably expect disclosure of the fact.

If a duty to disclose exists, the failure to disclose is a representation.

4. Section 943.20(1)(d) requires that the defendant obtain title to the property by deceiving the victim and that the victim be defrauded by the false representation. See note 7, Wis JI-Criminal 1453A.

5. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

6. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957).

[In the context of this offense, the "property" is the money used for purposes other than paying the claims due.] While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,

- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

7. Section 943.20(2)(d). The "value of the property" is the value of the property the defendant received due to the failure to disclose. Note the final sentence of sec. 943.20(2)(d): "If the thief gave consideration for, or had a legal interest in, the stolen property, the amount of such consideration or value of such interest shall be deducted from the total value of the property."

8. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme;
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it; or
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State

v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1455 THEFT BY FAILURE TO RETURN LEASED OR RENTED PROPERTY — § 943.20(1)(e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft, as defined in § 943.20(1)(e) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally fails to return any personal property which is in his or her possession or under his or her control by virtue of a written lease or written rental agreement within 10 days after the lease or rental agreement has expired.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had personal property in (his) (her) possession or under (his) (her) control by virtue of a written lease or written rental agreement.
2. The defendant failed to return the property within 10 days after the lease or rental agreement expired.[1]
3. The defendant intentionally failed to return the property.

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have the mental purpose not to return the property within 10 days after the lease or rental agreement expired.

4. The defendant knew that the property belonged to another person and knew that the written lease or rental agreement had expired.

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge and intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION. SEE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1441B FOR OTHER PENALTY-INCREASING FACTS.[3]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of property stolen more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[4]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM THE SAME OWNER "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(a).[5]

[In determining the value of the property stolen, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1455 was originally published in 1976 and revised in 1992, 2002, 2003, 2006 and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2022; it updated footnote 5 to reflect a new sub-category pursuant to 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.20(1)(e). The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001, and changed again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. See footnote 3, below. The penalty increases to a Class D felony in six situations specified in sub. (3)(d), which are addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

See §§ 971.32, 971.33, and 971.36 with respect to pleading, evidence, subsequent prosecutions, and what constitutes "ownership" and "possession" in theft cases. Prosecuting more than one theft as a single crime under § 971.36(3) is addressed in connection with the determination of the value of stolen property in bracketed material at the end of the instruction.

In State v. Roth, 115 Wis.2d 163, 339 N.W.2d 807 (Ct. App. 1983), the court held that § 943.20(1)(e) does not allow unconstitutional imprisonment for debt. The court also held that "intent to defraud" is not an element of the crime.

The essence of this offense is an omission – the failure to return the property. Criminal liability for an omission generally requires the ability to perform the required acts. See State v. Williquette, 129 Wis.2d 239, 251, 385 N.W.2d 145 (1986), citing LaFave and Scott, Criminal Law, sec. 28 at 182. See Wis JI-Criminal 905 Liability For Failure To Act – Criminal Omissions.

1. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

2. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

3. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003].

A new category – value exceeding $100,000 – was added by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18. 2018]. The penalties provided in subs. (3) (a) through (cm) are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

The other facts that increase the penalty to the felony level are addressed in Wis JI-Criminal 1441B.

4. This is the most often used part of the definition of "value" provided in § 943.20(2)(d). The full definition follows:

> "Value" means that market value at the time of the theft or the cost to the victim of replacing the property within a reasonable time after the theft, whichever is less, but if the property stolen is a document evidencing a chose in action or other intangible right, value means either the market value of the chose in action or other right or the intrinsic value of the document, whichever is greater. If the thief gave consideration for, or had a legal interest in, the stolen property, the amount of such consideration or value of such interest shall be deducted from the total value of the property.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court in Sartin v. State, 44 Wis.2d 138, 170 N.W.2d 727 (1969), a theft case, refused to adopt either a retail or wholesale value definition of the term "value." It is felt that in the theft statute, "[t]he statutory scheme clearly contemplates a determination of the cost of replacement to the victim." Sartin at 149.

5. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime under certain circumstances:

> (3) In any case of theft involving more than one theft, all thefts may be prosecuted as a single crime if one of the following applies:
>
> (a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme.
>
> (b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it.
>
> (c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.
> (d) If the property is mail, as defined in § 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a).

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(a): more than one theft from the same owner, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36. However, the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis.2 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1457 MAIL THEFT — § 943.204

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.204 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally takes or receives the mail[1] of another from a residence or other building or the curtilage of a residence or other building without the other's consent and with intent to deprive the other permanently of possession of such mail.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (took) (received) mail intended for (name of victim(s)) from a (residence) (building) (curtilage of a residence) (curtilage of a building).[2]

   The term "intentionally" means that the defendant must have had the mental purpose to take possession of the mail.[3]

2. (Name of victim(s)) did not consent[4] to the (taking) (receiving) of the mail.

3. The defendant knew that (name of victim(s)) did not consent.[5]

4. The defendant intended to deprive (name of victim(s)) permanently of the possession of the mail.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY MAIL THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF THE AMOUNT OF MAIL MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE AMOUNT OF MAIL WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[6]

[Determining Amount of Mail Taken]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following questions:

("Was the amount of mail taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct at least 30 pieces?"

Answer: "yes" or "no".)

(Was the amount of mail taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct at least 10 pieces?

Answer: "yes" or "no".)

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the amount of mail taken or received was at least the amount stated in the question.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE THEFT FROM ONE OR MORE OWNERS "DURING A COURSE OF CONDUCT," AS PROVIDED IN § 971.36(3)(d).[7]

In determining the amount of mail taken or received, you may consider all thefts that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from one or more owners and committed by the defendant during a course of conduct[8].

IF FELONY MAIL THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF THE VICTIM STATUS MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VICTIM WAS AN ADULT AT RISK OR AN ELDER ADULT AT RISK.[9]

[Determining Victim Status]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

("Was the mail taken or received addressed to an (adult at risk) (elder adult at risk?))[10]

Answer: "yes" or "no".)

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the mail taken or received was addressed to an (adult at risk) (elder adult at risk).

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1457 was approved by the Committee in August 2022.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.204, created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 144 [effective date: March 5, 2020]. Act 144 also created new provisions relating to charging violations as a single crime if the property was mail and it was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in § 947.013(1)(a) [new § 971.36(3)(d)].

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the number of pieces of mail taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct exceeds a specific amount. See footnote 5, below. The penalty also increases to a felony if the mail taken or received was addressed to an adult at risk or and elder adult at risk. See footnote 8, below.

1. Mail is defined as follows in § 943.204(d):

> "Mail" means a letter, flat, postcard, package, bag, or other sealed article that is delivered by the U.S. postal service, a common carrier, or a delivery service and is not yet received by the addressee or that has been left to be collected for delivery by the U.S. postal service, a common carrier, or a delivery service.

2. Wis. Stat. § 943.204 does not define "curtilage." Additionally, nothing in the legislative history indicates the intended scope of the term, and Wisconsin law does not sufficiently address this topic. Therefore, the Committee concluded that further definition in the instruction could not be provided with substantial assurance of accuracy.

However, if theft from the curtilage of a residence or a building is alleged, the term may need to be defined for the jury. If requested, the definition of "curtilage" included in similar "theft of mail" statutes from other jurisdictions may provide guidance as to the term's meaning. For example, in T.C.A. § 39-14-129 "mail theft," the Tennessee legislature defines "curtilage" as follows:

> "Curtilage" means the area surrounding a dwelling that is necessary, convenient and habitually used for family purposes and for those activities associated with the sanctity of a person's home.

Additionally, trial courts may gain some guidance by reviewing Wisconsin case law decisions that consider what constitutes "curtilage" for Fourth Amendment purposes. The Committee notes, however, that any factors that bear upon this consideration may not be ideally suited for defining the term in the context of criminal liability.

In State v. Dumstrey, 2016 WI 3, ¶32, 366 Wis.2d 64, 873 N.W.2d 502, the Wisconsin Supreme Court reviewed the term "curtilage" as applied for Fourth Amendment purposes. The court noted the four factors set forth by the United States Supreme Court in United States v. Dunn, 480 U.S. 294, 301, 107 S.Ct. 1134, 94 L.Ed.2d 326 (1987) that it previously adopted as relevant to analyzing whether an area constitutes curtilage of a home.

(1) "the proximity of the area claimed to be curtilage to the home";
(2) "whether the area is included within an enclosure surrounding the home";
(3) "the nature of the uses to which the area is put [;] and"

(4) "the steps taken by the resident to protect the area from observation by people passing by."

However, the court noted that it does not "mechanically" apply these factors as part of a "finely tuned formula." Dumstrey, supra, at ¶32. Instead, these factors "'are useful analytical tools only to the degree that, in any given case, they bear upon the centrally relevant consideration—whether the area in question is so intimately tied to the home itself that it should be placed under the home's 'umbrella' of Fourth Amendment protection." Id.

3. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

4. If the definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. Knowledge that the taking was without consent is required because the definition of this offense begins with the word "intentionally." Section 939.23(3) provides that the word "intentionally" requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make [the] conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'" in the statute.

6. The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (c) are as follows:

- If fewer than 10 pieces of mail are taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct, a Class A misdemeanor.
- If at least 10 but fewer than 30 pieces of mail are taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct, a Class I felony.
- If 30 or more pieces of mail are taken or received from one or more individuals in a course of conduct, a Class H felony.

While the number of pieces of mail taken or received may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to pieces of mail taken or received.

7. Section 971.36 sets forth a number of rules relating to the pleading and prosecution of theft cases. Subsection (3) allows the prosecution of more than one theft as a single crime if one of the following applies:

(a) The property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme.

(b) The property belonged to the same owner and was stolen by a person in possession of it.

(c) The property belonged to more than one owner and was stolen from the same place pursuant to a single intent and design.

(d) If the property is mail, as defined in s. 943.204(1)(d), the property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct, as defined in 947.013(1)(a).

The legislature in § 971.36(3)(a) has explicitly provided prosecutors with discretion to charge multiple thefts as a single crime when "the property belonged to the same owner and the thefts were committed pursuant to a single intent and design or in execution of a single deceptive scheme." See State v. Jacobsen, 2014 WI App 13, 352 Wis. 2d 409, ¶20, 842 N.W.2d 365, 13-0830.

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (3)(d): property was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 971.36.

Reading § 943.20(1)(a), the statute concerning theft of movable property, in conjunction with § 971.36(3)(a) and (4), the court of appeals in State v. Elverman, 2015 WI App 91, 367 Wis. 2d 126, ¶30, 876 N.W.2d 511 saw no other reasonable interpretation but that multiple acts of theft occurring over a period of time may, in certain circumstances, constitute one continuous offense that is not complete until the last act is completed.

The Committee's research on the issue of whether this need be submitted to the jury can be summarized as follows: (1) there is no case law dealing with § 943.204; (2) an instructive case, State v. Spraggin, dealt with a similar situation in the context of receiving stolen property; and (3) while there may be equally effective ways of dealing with the issue, the Committee concluded that the question of whether all mail was stolen from one or more owners during a course of conduct must be submitted to the jury.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 971.36, so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25 inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (71 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal. App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616 17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple pieces of mail decision question alone. The instruction can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any item of mail," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining the number of pieces of mail taken or received, the jury should include "all thefts which you find, beyond a reasonable doubt, were from one or more owners and committed by the defendant during a course of conduct."

8. "Course of conduct" means a pattern of conduct composed of a series of acts over a period of time, however short, evidencing a continuity of purpose. See § 947.013(1)(a).

9. The special question addresses the penalty-increasing facts in § 943.204(3)(d). A violation of § 943.204(3)(d) is a Class H felony.

10. § 943.204(3)(d) provides a penalty enhancement if the mail that is taken or received is addressed to an adult at risk or an elder adult at risk. The definitions of "adult at risk" and "elder adult at risk" provided in other statutes. The cross-referenced definitions are as follow:

- "Adult at risk" means any adult who has a physical or mental condition that substantially impairs his or her ability to care for his or her needs and who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation. See § 55.01(1e).

- "Elder adult at risk" means any person age 60 or older who has experienced, is currently experiencing, or is at risk of experiencing abuse, neglect, self-neglect, or financial exploitation. See § 46.90(1)(br).

1458 UNAUTHORIZED USE OF AN INDIVIDUAL'S PERSONAL IDENTIFYING INFORMATION OR DOCUMENTS — § 943.201(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.201(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally uses, attempts to use, or possesses with intent to use any personal identifying information or personal identification document of an individual, including a deceased individual, [to obtain credit, money, goods, services, employment or anything else of value or benefit] [to avoid civil or criminal process or penalty] [to harm the reputation, property, person, or estate of the individual] without the authorization or consent of the individual and by representing that [he or she is the individual] [he or she is acting with the authorization or consent of the individual] [that the information or document belongs to him or her].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That The State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally [(used) (attempted to use) (possessed with intent to use)][1] [(personal identifying information) (a personal identification document)][2] of (name of individual).[3]

CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING.

[(Insert term from § 943.201(1)(b) 1. through 15.) is "personal identifying information."][4]

["Personal identification document" means:

(a document containing personal identifying information.)

(an individual's card or plate that can be used to obtain money, goods, services, or any other thing of value or benefit or to initiate a transfer of funds.)

(any device that is unique to, assigned to, or belongs to an individual and is intended to be used to access services, funds, or benefits of any kind to which the individual is entitled.)][5]

2. The defendant intentionally [(used) (attempted to use) (possessed with intent to use)] [(personal identifying information) (a personal identification document)] of (name of individual) [to obtain credit, money, goods, services, employment or anything else of value or benefit] [to avoid civil or criminal process or penalty] [to harm the reputation, property, person, or estate of the individual].[6]

3. The defendant acted without the authorization or consent of (name of individual) and knew that (name of individual) did not give authorization or consent.[7]

4. The defendant intentionally represented[8] that [(he) (she) was (name of individual)] [(he) (she) was acting with the authorization or consent of (name of individual))] [the information or document belonged to him or her].[9]

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[10] to obtain credit, money, goods, services, employment or anything else of value or benefit by using (personal identifying information) (a personal identification document) of (name of individual) without (name of individual)'s consent or authorization.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1458 was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2000 and 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2018; it added to the Comment and footnotes.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.201(2), created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 101 (effective date: April 27, 1998). Significant changes were made by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36 (effective date: August 8, 2003). Among the changes made by Act 36 are the following:

- changed the title to refer to "unauthorized use" rather than "misappropriation" and to "an individual's" personal identifying information;
- added to the list of material and information that is covered;
- added "possesses with intent to use" as a prohibited act;
- extended coverage to information of a deceased person;
- added two prohibited purposes – to avoid civil or criminal process or penalty and to harm the reputation, property, person or estate of an individual; and,
- added an affirmative defense that the defendant was authorized by law to engage in the conduct. [See sub. (3) of § 943.201.]

In addition to amending § 940.201, Act 36 created two new criminal statutes:

- § 943.203 Unauthorized use of an entity's identifying information or documents;
- § 946.79 False statements to financial institutions.

See Wis JI-Criminal 1459 for violations of § 943.203.

There is no uniform instruction for violations of § 946.79.

Act 36 also created new provisions relating to jurisdiction [new § 939.03(1)(e)], venue [new § 971.19(11)], and charging violations as a single crime if committed pursuant to a single intent and design [new § 971.366].

Section 943.203(2)(a), the companion statute addressing identity theft from an entity, was interpreted in State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, 383 Wis.2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188, in the context of finding that there was a factual basis for a guilty plea. The charges were based on Stewart's presenting forged documents to the writer of a presentence report in a previous criminal proceeding – purported diplomas and a letter from the VA. First, the court found that the facts showed that Stewart represented that the use of the documents was authorized. "The statute does not require an express or verbal representation from the offeror that the document is authorized." ¶22. "...[B]y the act of presenting the documents to show the PSI writer his personal history and character, Stewart was implicitly saying they were real and he had consent to use them." ¶23. Second, he acted with the purpose to receive something of value or benefit – a more favorable sentencing result. The statute is not limited to things of commercial or financial value. ¶26.

Section 940.201(3) provides:

It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under this section that the defendant was authorized by law to engage in the conduct that is the subject of the prosecution. A defendant who raises this affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

In State v. Ramirez, 2001 WI App 158, ¶17, 246 Wis.2d 802, 633 N.W.2d 656, the court of appeals held that § 943.201 defines a "continuing offense" in the sense that the statute is violated when something of value is obtained even if the personal information was put to an unauthorized use at an earlier date.

1. Choose one of the alternatives: "used," "attempted to use," or "possessed with intent to use."

2. Choose one of the alternatives: "personal identifying information" or "personal identification document."

3. An "individual" includes a deceased individual. See sub. (2) of § 943.201 as amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36.

4. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term. For example: "An individual's social security number is 'personal identifying information.'" The full list of possible terms is found in § 943.201(2)(b), which was extended to a list of 15 items by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36.

5. This list is based on § 943.201(1)(a)1.-3., as amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36.

6. 2003 Wisconsin Act 36 added "employment" as one of the items that could be obtained and added "or benefit" to the phrase "anything else of value."

Interpreting § 943.201 before the revisions of Act 36, the Wisconsin Supreme Court held: "A defendant who misappropriates another's identity and uses it during an arrest and in bail proceedings to obtain lower bail has stolen that identity to obtain credit or money, or both, within the meaning of the identify theft statute." State v. Peters, 2003 WI 88, ¶2, 263 Wis.2d 475, 665 N.W.2d 171.

Use of another's social security number to get a job allowed the defendant to obtain compensation and other economic benefits that resulted from employment and amounted to obtaining something of value under § 943.201. State v. Ramirez, 2001 WI App 158, ¶7, 246 Wis.2d 802, 633 N.W.2d 656. Obtaining employment is specifically covered by the statute as amended by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36.

In interpreting § 943.203, the companion statute addressing identity theft from an entity, the court of appeals held: "Anything of value or benefit" is not limited to things of commercial or financial value. State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, ¶26, 383 Wis 2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188 [Citing State v. Peters, supra. [Stewart is discussed above in the Comment preceding footnote 1.].

7. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. In addition, . . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Based on the latter requirement, the instruction includes the requirement that the defendant must know the victim did not consent to or authorize the use of the information or document.

8. State v. Mason, 2018 WI App 57, ¶26, 384 Wis.2d 111, 918 N.W.2d 78, concluded that using a stolen debit/credit card is sufficient to satisfy the "representing" requirement.

In interpreting § 943.203, the companion statute addressing identity theft from an entity, the court of appeals held: "The statute does not require an express or verbal representation from the offeror that the document is authorized. Rather, it requires that the user 'represent' that the user is 'acting with the authorization or consent of the entity.' See Wis. Stat. 943.203(2)." State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, ¶22, 383 Wis 2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188 [Stewart is discussed above in the Comment preceding footnote 1.].

9. Choose one of the alternatives: "(he) (she) was (name of victim)," "(he) (she) was acting with the authorization or consent of (name of victim)," or, "that the information or documents to (him) (her)." The latter was added to the statute by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36.

10. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" alternative for intent is most likely to apply to this offense. For further discussion of the full definition of "intentionally," see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1459 UNAUTHORIZED USE OF AN ENTITY'S IDENTIFYING INFORMATION OR DOCUMENTS — § 943.203(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.203(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally uses, attempts to use, or possesses with intent to use any identifying information or identification document of an entity [to obtain credit, money, goods, services, or anything else of value or benefit] [to harm the reputation or property of the entity] without the authorization or consent of the entity and by representing that [he or she is the entity] [he or she is acting with the authorization or consent of the entity].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements are present.

Elements of the Crime That The State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally [(used) (attempted to use) (possessed with intent to use)][1] [(identifying information) (an identification document)][2] of an entity. (A corporation) (A partnership) (An association) (A body politic) is an entity.[3]

   CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING.

   [(Insert term from § 943.203(1)(c) 1. through 8.) is "identifying information."][4]

   ["Identification document" means:

(a document containing identifying information.)

(an entity's card or plate that can be used to obtain money, goods, services, or any other thing of value or benefit[5] or to initiate a transfer of funds.)

(any device that is unique to, assigned to, or belongs to an entity and is intended to be used to access services, funds, or benefits of any kind to which the entity is entitled.)][6]

2. The defendant intentionally [(used) (attempted to use) (possessed with intent to use)] [(identifying information) (an identification document)] of the entity [to obtain credit, money, goods, services, or anything else of value or benefit] [to harm the reputation or property of the entity].
3. The defendant acted without the authorization or consent of the entity and knew that the entity did not give authorization or consent.[7]
4. The defendant intentionally represented[8] that [(he) (she) was the entity] [(he) (she) was acting with the authorization or consent of the entity)].[9]

"Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[10] to obtain credit, money, goods, services, or anything else of value or benefit by using (identifying information) (an identification document) of the entity without the entity's consent or authorization.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1459 was originally published in 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2018; it added to the Comment and footnotes.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.203(2), created by 2003 Wisconsin Act 36 (effective date: August 8, 2003).

Wis JI-Criminal 1458 provides a model for the related offense of "identity theft" from an individual, defined in § 943.201.

Act 36 also created § 946.79 False statements to financial institutions. There is no uniform instruction for this offense.

Act 36 also created new provisions relating to jurisdiction [new § 939.03(1)(e)], venue [new § 971.19(11)], and charging violations as a single crime if committed pursuant to a single intent and design [new § 971.366].

Section 943.203(2)(a) was interpreted in State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, 383 Wis 2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188, in the context of finding that there was a factual basis for a guilty plea. The charges were based on Stewart's presenting forged documents to the writer of a presentence report in a previous criminal proceeding – purported diplomas and a letter from the VA. First, the court found that the facts showed that Stewart represented that the use of the documents was authorized. "The statute does not require an express or verbal representation from the offeror that the document is authorized." ¶22. "...[B]y the act of presenting the documents to show the PSI writer his personal history and character, Stewart was implicitly saying they were real and he had consent to use them." ¶23. Second, he acted with the purpose to receive something of value or benefit – a more favorable sentencing result. The statute is not limited to things of commercial or financial value. ¶26.

Section 940.203(3) provides:

> It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under this section that the defendant was authorized by law to engage in the conduct that is the subject of the prosecution. A defendant who raises this affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence.

In State v. Ramirez, 2001 WI App 158, ¶17, 246 Wis.2d 802, 633 N.W.2d 656, the court of appeals held that the related offense under § 943.201 defines a "continuing offense" in the sense that the statute is violated when something of value is obtained even if the personal information was put to an unauthorized use at an earlier date.

1. Choose one of the alternatives: "used," "attempted to use," or "possessed with intent to use."

2. Choose one of the alternatives: "identifying information" or "identification document."

3. This statement is derived from the statutory definitions of "entity" and "person." Section 943.203(1)(a) provides: "'Entity' means a person other than an individual." Section 990.01(26) provides: "'Person' includes all partnerships, associations, and bodies politic and corporate."

4. The Committee recommends inserting the appropriate term. For example: "An entity's name is 'identifying information.'" The full list of possible terms is found in § 943.203(1)(c)1. through 8.

5. "Anything of value or benefit" is not limited to things of commercial or financial value. State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, ¶26, 383 Wis 2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188 [Citing State v. Peters, 2003 WI App 88, 263 Wis 2d , ¶¶16-17, 665 N.W.2d 171.] [Stewart is discussed above in the Comment preceding footnote 1.]

6. The alternatives in parentheses are based on § 943.203(1)(b)1.-3.

7. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires "that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified, or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. In addition, . . . the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his or her conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" Based on the latter requirement, the instruction includes the requirement that the defendant must know the victim did not consent to or authorize the use of the information or document.

8. "The statute does not require an express or verbal representation from the offeror that the document is authorized. Rather, it requires that the user 'represent' that the user is 'acting with the authorization or consent of the entity.' See Wis. Stat. 943.203(2)." State v. Stewart, 2018 WI App 41, ¶22, 383 Wis 2d 546, 916 N.W.2d 188 [Stewart is discussed above in the Comment preceding footnote 1.] Stewart relied on State v. Mason, 2018 WI App 57, ¶26, 384 Wis.2d 111, 918 N.W.2d 78, which concluded that using a stolen debit/credit card is sufficient to satisfy the "representing" requirement under § 943.201, the companion statute addressing theft of identifying information from an individual.

9. Choose one of the alternatives: "(he) (she) was the entity," or "(he) (she) was acting with the authorization or consent of the entity."

10. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" alternative for intent is most likely to apply to this offense. For further discussion of the full definition of "intentionally," see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

1460 FAILURE TO DISCLOSE MANUFACTURER OF RECORDING – § 943.209

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.209 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, for commercial advantage or private financial gain [knowingly advertises, offers for sale or rent, sells, rents or transports a recording that does not contain the name and address of the manufacturer in a prominent place on the cover, jacket or label of the recording] [possesses with intent to advertise, offer for sale or rent, sell, rent or transport a recording that does not contain the name and address of the manufacturer in a prominent place on the cover, jacket or label of the recording].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [knowingly (advertised) (offered for sale or rent) (sold) (rented) (transported)] [possessed[1] with intent to (advertise) (offer for sale or rent) (sell) (rent) (transport] a recording.[2]
2. The recording did not contain the name and address of the manufacturer[3] in a prominent place on the cover, jacket or label of the recording.
3. The defendant acted for commercial advantage or private financial gain.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IN CLASS H FELONY CASES AND INCLUDE THE QUESTION IN THE STANDARD VERDICT FORM][4]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Did the defendant [knowingly (advertise) (offer for sale or rent) (sell) (rent)[5] (transport)] [possess with intent to (advertise) (offer for sale or rent) (sell) (rent) (transport)] 100 or more recordings during a 180-day period?"

Answer "yes" or "no."

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."]

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IN CLASS I FELONY CASES AND INCLUDE THE QUESTION IN THE STANDARD VERDICT FORM][6]

[If you find the defendant guilty, also answer the following question "yes" or "no."

"Did the value of the recordings exceed $2,500?"

Answer "yes" or "no."

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer is "yes."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1460 was approved by the Committee in June 2013.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 940.209, which are punished as a Class A misdemeanor or as Class I or H felonies, depending on the number of recordings involved and their value. See § 940.209(2). The instruction can be used for either misdemeanor or felony offenses – the basic elements are the same; answers to two special questions at the end will determine which penalty applies.

1. For definition of "possess" see Wis JI-Criminal 920.

2. "'Recording' means a medium on or in which sounds or images or both are stored." Section § 943.206(5).

3. "'Manufacturer' means a person who transfers sounds to a recording." Section 943.206(1).

4. The number of recordings involved, along with their value, determines the penalty:

• fewer than 100 recordings valued at less than $2,500 – Class A misdemeanor
• fewer than 100 recordings valued at more than $2,500 – Class I felony.
• more than 100 recordings – Class H felony.

The offense is also a Class H felony if the violation occurs after the person has been convicted under § 940.209. That option is not addressed by the instruction.

The Committee recommends that an extra question be added to determine which penalty applies.

The following form is suggested for the verdict in a case where the Class H felony is charged based on more than 100 recordings being involved:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of failure to disclose the manufacturer of a recording under § 943.209 at the time and place charged in the information."

"We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

[Add the question as adapted in the text of the instruction.]"

5. "[T]he number of recordings that a person rents shall be the sum of the number of times that each individual recording is rented." Section 943.209(3).

6. The number of recordings involved, along with their value, determines the penalty:

• fewer than 100 recordings valued at less than $2,500 – Class A misdemeanor
• fewer than 100 recordings valued at more than $2,500 – Class I felony.
• more than 100 recordings – Class H felony.

The Committee recommends that an extra question be added to determine which penalty applies.

The following form is suggested for the verdict in a case where the Class I felony is charged based on the recordings having a value that exceeds $2,500:

"We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of failure to disclose the manufacturer of a recording under § 943.209 at the time and place charged in the information."

"We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the value of the recordings exceed $2,500?"

1461 FRAUD ON HOTEL OR RESTAURANT KEEPER — § 943.21(1m)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fraud on a hotel or restaurant keeper, as defined in § 943.21 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has obtained any beverage, food, lodging, ticket or other means of admission, or other service or accommodation at any campground, hotel, motel, boarding or lodging house, restaurant or recreational attraction and intentionally absconds without paying for it.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained _____[1] at a _____.[2]
2. The defendant knew (he) (she) was obligated to pay for the _____.[3]
3. The defendant intentionally absconded without paying.

   "Intentionally absconded" requires that the defendant left with the mental purpose[4] to avoid paying[5] for the _____.[6]

GIVE THE FOLLOWING WHEN SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[7]

[One who absentmindedly leaves without paying or who leaves temporarily without intending to terminate the relationship with the restaurant is not guilty of fraud on a restaurant keeper.]

[If the person who provided the food consented to the defendant's leaving without paying or extended credit, the defendant is not guilty of fraud on a restaurant keeper.]

Deciding About Knowledge and Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge or intent. Knowledge and intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge and intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF THE FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE FOOD OR SERVICES WAS MORE THAN $2,500.[8]

[Finding the Value of the (Food) (Services)]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Was the value of (food) (services) more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no."

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value was more than $2,500.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1461 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1989, 1992, 1996, 2002, and 2005. The 2005 revision reflected changes made in § 943.21 by 2003 Wisconsin Act 252. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2010.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.21(1m)(a). Related offenses are defined in subs. (1m)(b), (c), and (d), for which there are no suggested uniform instructions. The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a Class I felony if the value of the beverage, food, etc., exceeds $2,500. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001.

2003 Wisconsin Act 80 created sub. (1m)(d) which prohibits absconding without paying for gasoline, etc. However, that offense is classified as a Class D forfeiture and thus is not addressed by the uniform jury instructions.

2003 Wisconsin Act 252 amended the statute to apply to tickets or other means of admission to a recreational attraction. Effective date: April 28, 2004.

1. Insert the term describing what was obtained: beverage, food, lodging, ticket or other means of admission, or other service.

2. Insert the term describing the place where the food, etc., was obtained: campground, hotel, motel, boarding or lodging house, restaurant, or recreational attraction. "Recreational attraction" is defined in § 943.21(1c).

3. Insert the term describing what was obtained: beverage, food, lodging, ticket or other means of admission, or other service.

4. "Intentionally" also is satisfied if the person "is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause [the] result." In the context of this offense, it is unlikely that the "practically certain" alternative will apply so it has been left out of the text of the instruction. See Wis JI-Criminal 923B for an instruction that includes that alternative.

Subsections (2) and (2g) of § 943.21 provide that certain facts are prima facie evidence of an intent to defraud and of an intent to abscond without payment. Wis JI-Criminal 225 provides a suggested framework for implementing statutory "prima facie" provisions.

5. The 2010 revision changed the definition of "intentionally absconded" from "the mental purpose not to pay" to "the mental purpose to avoid paying." The Committee concluded that this captures the sense of "absconds" most applicable to this offense.

"Abscond" was defined as "to depart clandestinely" in State v. Croy, 32 Wis.2d 118, 121-22, 145 N.W.2d 118 (1966). The Committee has concluded that "departing clandestinely" without paying is one way to commit this offense, but that the statute is also violated, for example, by one who leaves openly without paying by deceiving the proprietor about his having paid for what was received. In the latter case, it is the intent to avoid paying that constitutes the offense, notwithstanding the fact that the actor did not clandestinely depart the premises. This interpretation is consistent with other provisions in § 943.21.

For example, subsec. (2)(a) provides that "the refusal of payment upon presentation when due . . . constitute[s] prima facie evidence of an intent to abscond without payment." Also see subsecs. (2g), (2m), and (2r) which contain similar prima facie provisions. All relate to behavior that does not involve "departing clandestinely."

6. Insert the term describing what was obtained: beverage, food, lodging, ticket or other means of admission, or other service.

7. The statute is not violated if credit has been extended, if the actor simply forgets to pay before leaving, or if the actor leaves with intent to return immediately and pay the bill. See Comment to § 343.22, p. 117, 1953 Report on the Criminal Code.

8. This offense is like theft in that the jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

1462 ABSCONDING WITHOUT PAYING RENT — § 943.215(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Absconding without paying rent, as defined in § 943.215(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, after being a tenant of residential property, intentionally absconds without paying all current and past due rent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had obtained tenancy of residential property.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally absconded.

   "Intentionally abscond" means that the defendant left with the mental purpose to avoid paying all current and past due rent.[2]

3. Current or past due rent actually was owed by the defendant.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF AN AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE UNDER § 943.215(2) OR (3), USE WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1462A HERE IN PLACE OF THE LAST TWO PARAGRAPHS.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1462 was originally published in 1999 and revised in 2008. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2009.

1. The following definition of "tenancy" is provided in § 704.01(4): "'Tenancy' includes a tenancy under a lease, a periodic tenancy, or a tenancy at will."

"Lease" is defined in sub. (1) of § 704.01, "periodic tenant" in sub. (2), and "tenancy at will" in sub. (5).

2. The 2010 revision changed the definition of "intentionally absconded" from "the mental purpose not to pay" to "the mental purpose to avoid paying." The Committee concluded that this captures the sense of "absconds" most applicable to this offense.

The definition is adapted from the one used in the instruction for violations of § 943.21, Fraud on a hotel or restaurant keeper . . . See Wis JI-Criminal 1461. For that offense, case law had defined "absconds" as "to depart clandestinely." State v. Croy, 32 Wis.2d 118, 121-22, 145 N.W.2d 118 (1966). The Committee concluded that "departing clandestinely" without paying is one way to commit this offense, but that the statute is also violated, for example, by one who leaves openly without paying by deceiving the proprietor about his having paid for what he received. In the latter case, it is the intent to avoid paying that constitutes the offense, notwithstanding the fact that the actor did not clandestinely depart the premises. On the other hand, the statute is not violated if credit has been extended, if the actor simply forgets to pay before leaving, or if the actor leaves with intent to return immediately and pay the bill. See Comment to § 343.22, p. 117, 1953 Report on the Criminal Code. Also see footnote 6, Wis JI-Criminal 1461.

The Committee concluded that the same analysis applies to violations of § 943.215.

1462A ABSCONDING WITHOUT PAYING RENT: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE — § 943.215(2) OR (3)

ADD THE FOLLOWING TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1462 IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE DEFENSES RECOGNIZED IN § 943.215(2) OR (3).

[Wisconsin law provides that it is a defense to this crime if the defendant had provided the landlord with a security deposit that equaled or exceeded the amount owed to the landlord regarding rent and damage to property, if any.[1]]

[Wisconsin law (also) provides that it is a defense to this crime if, within five days after the day he or she vacates the rental premises, he or she pays all current and past rent due or provides to the landlord, in writing, a complete and accurate forwarding address.[2]]

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, and also are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that [this defense did not exist] [neither of these defenses existed], you should find the defendant guilty.[3]

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1462A was originally published in 1999. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2007 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction should be added to Wis JI-Criminal 1461, Fraud on Hotel or Restaurant Keeper, when there is evidence of the defenses provided in § 943.215(2) and (3). The instruction is drafted to allow submission of either or both defenses through selection of the appropriate bracketed material.

1. Section 943.215(2).

2. Section 943.215(3).

3. Section 943.215(4) provides that if the existence of a defense has been placed in issue, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the facts constituting the defense do not exist.

1463 CARJACKING [TAKING A VEHICLE BY USE OR THREAT OF FORCE][1] — § 943.231(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection 943.231(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, while possessing a dangerous weapon and by the use of, or threat of the use of, force or the weapon against another, intentionally takes any vehicle without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took a vehicle[2] without the consent[3] of the owner.
2. The defendant knew that the owner did not consent to the taking.[4]
3. The defendant took the vehicle while possessing a dangerous weapon.
4. The defendant took the vehicle by the [(use) (threat of the use)][5] of [(force) (a dangerous weapon)] against another.

Meaning of Dangerous Weapon

A dangerous weapon is (any firearm, whether loaded or not) (any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm) (any device or instrumentality which in the manner it is used or intended to be used is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm).[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1465 in 1994 and revised and renumbered as Wis JI-Criminal 1463 in June 2000. The instruction underwent another revision in 2003, which incorporated the modifications introduced by the 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023, it reflects changes made by 2023 Wisconsin Act 10 [effective date: May 12, 2023].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.231(1), which addresses the offense of carjacking. The 2003 revision deleted text presenting a special question asking whether death or great bodily harm was caused. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003] repealed sub. (1m) which provided for an increased penalty in those situations while adding violations of § 943.231(1) as a possible predicate felony for felony murder under § 940.03. 2023 Wisconsin Act 10 [effective date: May 12, 2023] increased the penalty from a Class C felony to a Class B felony. It also reorganized the offenses commonly referred to as "carjacking" into a new statutory section titled "carjacking."

1. A trial judge has the authority to determine whether to include, exclude, or modify the title of an instruction when submitting it to the jury. Prior to May 2023, this instruction was titled "Taking a Vehicle by Use or Threat of Force." However, with the enactment of 2023 Wisconsin Act 10, this offense was restructured and now falls under a new statutory section called "carjacking." Therefore, the accurate statutory title is "carjacking," but it might be helpful to include the bracketed language to distinguish this specific offense from other carjacking offenses.

2. For the definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

4. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the taking was without consent.

5. While the instruction recommends selecting the applicable alternative, the Committee did not conclude that the alternatives are so distinct that the election of one or other, or jury agreement on which alternative applies, should be required. This is similar to the result under the robbery statute, which this offense closely resembles. See Wis JI-Criminal 1479, footnote 1.

6. The definition of "dangerous weapon" is based on the one provided in § 939.22(10). The applicable alternative should be selected. See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for suggested instructions for all the statutory alternatives and a discussion of some of the substantive issues relating to the definition of "dangerous weapon."

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For a longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly JI 923.1].

1463A CARJACKING [TAKING A VEHICLE BY USE OR THREAT OF FORCE][1] — § 943.231(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection § 943.231(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who by the use of, or threat of the use of, force against another, intentionally takes any vehicle without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took a vehicle[2] without the consent[3] of (name of owner).
2. The defendant knew that (name of owner) did not consent to the taking of the vehicle.[4]
3. The defendant took the vehicle by the (use) (threat of the use) of force against another.

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1463A was approved by the Committee in December 2018. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023, it reflects changes made by 2023 Wisconsin Act 10 [effective date: May 12, 2023].

This instruction is for violations of § 943.231(2) that provides: "Whoever, by use of force against another or by the threat of the use of force against another, intentionally takes any vehicle without the consent of the owner is guilty of a Class E felony." Section 943.23(1r) was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 311 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. 2023 Wisconsin Act 10 [effective date: May 12, 2023] renumbered section 943.23(1r) as section 943.231(2). It also reorganized the offenses commonly referred to as "carjacking" into a new statutory section titled "carjacking."

1. A trial judge has the authority to determine whether to include, exclude, or modify the title of an instruction when submitting it to the jury. Prior to May 2023, this instruction was titled "Taking a Vehicle by Use or Threat of Force." However, with the enactment of 2023 Wisconsin Act 10, this offense was restructured and now falls under a new statutory section called "carjacking." Therefore, the accurate statutory title is "carjacking," but it might be helpful to include the bracketed language to distinguish this specific offense from other carjacking offenses.

2. For a definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. See Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

4. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the taking was without consent.

5. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For a longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

1464 TAKING AND DRIVING A (VEHICLE) (COMMERCIAL MOTOR VEHICLE) WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT – § 943.23(2), § 943.23(2g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Taking and driving a (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the owner's consent, as defined in § 943.23(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally takes and drives any (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took[1] a (vehicle)[2] (commercial motor vehicle)[3] without the consent of (name of owner).[4]

   ["Commercial motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle designed or used to transport passengers or property and having one or more of the following characteristics (identify a characteristic provided in s. 340.01(8)(a) – (d)).]

2. The defendant intentionally drove the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the consent of (name of owner).

   "Drive" means to exercise physical control over the speed and direction of a vehicle while it is in motion.[5]

3. The defendant knew that (name of owner) did not consent to taking and driving the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle).[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE UNDER SUB. (3m), ADD THE MATERIAL FROM WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1465.[8]

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1467 in 1982 and revised in 1989, 1994, 2002, 2003, and 2006. The 2002 revision renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 1464. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it added the category of "commercial motor vehicle" to the offense.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.23(2) and § 943.23(2g), which respectively prohibits "taking and driving" a vehicle or commercial motor vehicle without the owner's consent. Section 943.23(2g), which provides; "Except as provided in sub. (3m), whoever intentionally takes and drives any commercial motor vehicle without the consent of the owner is guilty of a Class G felony." was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018].

The 2003 revision reflects changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, which created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, recognizing an affirmative defense: abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking. The defense is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1465A, which should be added to this instruction if applicable. See footnote 7, below. The effective date of the Act 109 changes is February 1, 2003. If the misdemeanor offense is charged, this instruction can be used as drafted, without any reference to the affirmative defense. By charging the misdemeanor, the State is conceding that the affirmative defense can be established. To prove that the misdemeanor was committed, the elements of the felony must be proved.

1. Wisconsin case law interpreting § 943.23 prior to its 1988 amendment had concluded that it did not require that the driver of the vehicle be the one who actually took the vehicle from the rightful owner. Edwards v. State, 46 Wis.2d 249,251, 174 N.W.2d 269 (1970). Also see State v. Robbins, 43 Wis.2d 478, 168 N.W.2d 544 (1969), and Bass v. State, 29 Wis.2d 201, 138 N.W.2d 154 (1965).

For example, in the Bass case, a conviction was upheld where the automobile in question was left at a service station overnight to be repaired in the morning. The defendant, an employee of the service station, drove the car after business hours to go to a friend's house to pick up his sleeping bag. He was arrested during this trip and claimed he had limited permission to use the car and therefore there was not a taking without the consent of the owner. His argument was that if one has lawful possession in the first instance, one cannot be convicted of a crime where an essential element is the taking without the consent of the owner. The Wisconsin Supreme Court rejected this argument, holding that the leaving of the car at the station overnight does not constitute implied permission to use the car. When Bass drove the vehicle for his own purposes, not connected with the purposes for which the vehicle had been entrusted to the owner of the station, he committed the offense of operating without the owner's consent.

In the Robbins case, the conviction was affirmed where the defendant was incarcerated in the Milwaukee County House of Correction on the date the vehicle was actually taken from the owner. The defendant was arrested for operating the vehicle some 10 days after the original taking. There was no argument in this case that the defendant did not satisfy the "take and drive" element of the crime, since the court indicated that the only issue in the case was criminal intent.

In the Edwards case, the car in question had been taken from the lot of an auto dealer by the defendant's uncle. The defendant was later arrested for driving that vehicle. Again, the court raised no question about whether the defendant satisfied the "take and drive" requirement. The court stated that "the statutory language 'intentionally takes and drives any vehicle without the consent of the owner' does not require that the driver of the stolen vehicle be the person who actually took the vehicle from the rightful owner."

Each of these cases was decided at the time when the statute had a single section which prohibited "taking and driving without consent." Under the revised statute, of course, there is a second type of offense: "driving or operating without consent." Was the creation of the new offense intended to change the prior case law to require that the defendant charged with "taking and driving" be the one who took the vehicle from the owner? The bill that revised the statute in 1988 gives little guidance as to what the intent of the legislature was. The changes in § 943.23 were part of a bill that made a number of changes in the provisions relating to junked or destroyed vehicles, fraudulent insurance claims, etc. See 1987 Assembly Bill 748.

So, one is left with a situation where the only difference between a Class H and Class I felony is that the more serious crime requires that the defendant "take," as well as "drive," a vehicle without the consent of the owner. The Committee struggled with this matter at great length and finally concluded that it must have been the intent of the legislature that the Class I felony was created to cover the situation where a person is lawfully in possession of a vehicle but operates it in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner. Interpreted in this way, prior law to the effect that the defendant need not be the one who takes the vehicle from the owner would remain intact. One gap in the prior statute, however, would be covered by the new Class I felony offense. That is the situation presented in State v. Mularkey, 195 Wis. 549,218 N.W. 809 (1928). In the Mularkey case, the defendant rented a car from the owner, but drove it beyond the area specified, did not return it at the time designated, and abandoned the car. The Wisconsin Supreme Court held that the defendant had not violated the operating without consent statute, because "the mere unauthorized or extended use of such a vehicle by one who has lawfully obtained the consent of the owner to its taking for use and operation upon the public highway is not a violation of this statute." Because Mularkey's original possession and use was with the express knowledge and consent of the owner, he was not guilty under the prior statute. This is because the "taking" was not unlawful even though the ultimate use may have been. In the Committee's judgment, a person in the Mularkey situation would be guilty of the Class I felony under the current statute. Defendants in situations like those in the Bass, Edwards, and Robbins cases would be guilty of the Class H felony because they did not gain possession of the car with the consent of the owner. When they asserted control over it without the owner's consent, they "took" within the meaning of the statute, both the prior and the revised versions.

2. For the definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. For definition of "commercial vehicle," see § 340.01(8). At least one of the following characteristics provided in § 340.01(8)(a) through § 340.01(8)(d) must be chosen in order for the vehicle to classify as a "commercial motor vehicle":

(a) The vehicle is a single vehicle with a gross vehicle weight rating of 26,001 or more pounds or the vehicle's registered weight or actual gross weight is more than 26,000 pounds.

(b) The vehicle is a combination vehicle with a gross combination weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of 26,001 or more pounds inclusive of a towed unit with a gross vehicle weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of more than 10,000 pounds.

(c) The vehicle is designed to transport or is actually transporting the driver and 15 or more passengers. If the vehicle is equipped with bench type seats intended to seat more than one person, the passenger carrying capacity shall be determined under s. 340.01 (31) or, if the vehicle is a school bus, by dividing the total seating space measured in inches by 13.

(d) The vehicle is transporting hazardous materials requiring placarding or any quantity of a material listed as a select agent or toxin under 42 CFR 73.

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis Il-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 943.23(l)(a).

6. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the taking and driving was without consent. Also see State v. Edwards, note 1, supra at 252, for a discussion of "intentionally" in the context of this offense.

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

8. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, which recognizes an affirmative defense: abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking reduces felony offenses under subs. (2) or (3) offenses to Class A misdemeanors. The statute places the burden of persuasion on the defendant to prove it by a preponderance of the evidence. The Committee concluded that the defense is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question, which is provided by Wis Il-Criminal 1465A.

1464A TAKING AND DRIVING A (VEHICLE) (COMMERCIAL MOTOR VEHICLE) WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT: DRIVING OR OPERATING WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT AS A LESSER INCLUDED OFFENSE – § 943.23(2), (2g) AND (3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Taking and driving a vehicle without the owner's consent, as defined in § 943.23(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally takes and drives any (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally took[1] a (vehicle)[2] (commercial motor vehicle)[3] without the consent[4] of the owner.

   ["Commercial motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle designed or used to transport passengers or property and having one or more of the following characteristics (identify a characteristic provided in s. 340.01(8)(a) – (d)).]

2. The defendant intentionally drove the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the consent of the owner.

   "Drive" means to exercise physical control over the speed and direction of a vehicle while it is in motion.[5]

3. The defendant knew that the owner of the vehicle did not consent to taking and driving the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle).[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty of the charged crime.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty of taking and driving a vehicle without the owner's consent, and you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of driving or operating a vehicle without the owner's consent in violation of § 943.23 (3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, which is a lesser included offense of the charged crime.[8]

Make Every Reasonable Effort to Agree

You should make every reasonable effort to agree unanimously on your verdict on the crime charged before considering the lesser included offense. However, if after full and complete consideration of the evidence, you conclude that further deliberation would not result in unanimous agreement on the crime charged, you should consider whether the defendant is guilty of the lesser included offense.

The Difference Between the Two Crimes

There is a difference between the two crimes. The charged crime requires that the defendant intentionally took and drove the vehicle without the owner's consent, knowing that it was without consent. The lesser included offense requires only that the defendant intentionally drove or operated the vehicle without the owner's consent, knowing that it was without consent.

[A person may drive or operate a vehicle without the owner's consent even though the owner consented to the original taking.][9]

["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it into motion.][10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant intentionally operated a vehicle without the consent of the owner and that the defendant knew that the owner did not consent to the operation, you should find the defendant guilty of the lesser included crime.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

You are not, in any event, to find the defendant guilty of more than one offense.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1467.1 in 1982 and revised in 1989, 1994, 2002, and 2018. The 2002 revision renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 1464A. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018 and reflects changes made in the statute by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 and 2017 Wisconsin Act 311.

This instruction is for cases where a violation of § 943.23(2) is charged, involving "taking and driving" a vehicle without the owner's consent and where a violation of § 943.23(3), involving "driving or operating" without the owner's consent is submitted as a lesser included offense. The 2003 revision reflects changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, which created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, recognizing an affirmative defense to violations of sub. (2) of (3): abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking. The defense is addressed by Wis Il-Criminal 1465A, which should be added to this instruction if applicable. See footnote 10, below. The effective date of the Act 109 changes is February l, 2003.

Section 943.23(3g) was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. It provides: "Except as provided in sub. (3m), whoever intentionally drives or operates any commercial motor vehicle without consent of the owner is guilty of a class H felony."

1. See note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1464.

2. For definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. For definition of "commercial motor vehicle," see § 340.01(8). At least one of the following characteristics provided in § 340.01(8)(a) through § 340.01(8)(d) must be chosen in order for the vehicle to classify as a "commercial motor vehicle":

(a) The vehicle is a single vehicle with a gross vehicle weight rating of 26,001 or more pounds or the vehicle's registered weight or actual gross weight is more than 26,000 pounds.

(b) The vehicle is a combination vehicle with a gross combination weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of 26,001 or more pounds inclusive of a towed unit with a gross vehicle weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of more than 10,000 pounds.

(c) The vehicle is designed to transport or is actually transporting the driver and 15 or more passengers. If the vehicle is equipped with bench type seats intended to seat more than one person, the passenger carrying capacity shall be determined under s. 340.01 (31) or, if the vehicle is a school bus, by dividing the total seating space measured in inches by 13.

(d) The vehicle is transporting hazardous materials requiring placarding or any quantity of a material listed as a select agent or toxin under 42 CFR 73.

4. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

5. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 943.23(1)(a).

6. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the taking and driving was without consent. Also see State v. Edwards, note 1, supra at 252, for a discussion of "intentionally" in the context of this offense.

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

8. This material that follows builds in the usual transitional instruction on moving from the charged crime to the lesser included offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 112 and 112A.

9. The sentence in brackets may be helpful where the evidence might raise a question about whether a person who had consent to the original taking may be guilty of the Class I felony. It is the Committee's conclusion that the Class I felony applies where a person is lawfully in possession of a vehicle but operates it in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner. See Wis JI-Criminal 1464, note 1.

10. This is the definition of "operate" provided by § 943.23(1)(c).

11. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, which recognizes an affirmative defense: abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking reduces felony offenses under subs. (2) or (3) offenses to Class A misdemeanors. The statute places the burden of persuasion on the defendant to prove it by a preponderance of the evidence. 1465 DRIVING OR OPERATING A (VEHICLE) (COMMERCIAL MOTOR VEHICLE) WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT – § 943.23(3), § 943.23(3g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Driving or operating a (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the owner's consent, as defined in § 943.23(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally drives or operates a (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (drove) (operated) a (vehicle)[1] (commercial motor vehicle)[2] without the consent of the owner.[3]

   ["Drive" means to exercise physical control over the speed and direction of a vehicle while it is in motion.][4]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it into motion.][5]

   ["Commercial motor vehicle" means a motor vehicle designed or used to transport passengers or property and having one or more of the following characteristics (identify a characteristic provided in s. 340.01(8)(a) – (d)).]

[A person (drives) (operates) without consent even though the owner consented to the original taking if the person (drives) (operates) the vehicle in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner.][6]

2. The defendant knew that the owner of the vehicle did not consent to (driving) (operating) the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle).[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE UNDER SUB. (3m), ADD THE MATERIAL FROM WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1465A.[9]

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1467.2 in 1989 and revised in 1994, 2002, 2003, 2007, and 2016. The 2002 revision renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 1465. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it added the option of "commercial motor vehicle" to the offense.

This instruction is drafted for a case where the offense defined in § 943.23(3) is charged: "driving or operating" a vehicle without the owner's consent. See the discussion in note 1, Wis JI-Criminal 1464, for an explanation of the Committee's approach to this statute.

Section 943.23(3g) was created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 287 [effective date: April 18, 2018]. It provides: "Except as provided in sub. (3m), whoever intentionally drives or operates any commercial motor vehicle without consent of the owner is guilty of a class H felony."

The 2003 revision reflects changes made in the statute by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, which created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, recognizing an affirmative defense: abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking. The defense is addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1465A, which should be added to this instruction if applicable. See footnote 9, below. The effective date of the Act 109 changes is February 1, 2003. If the misdemeanor offense is charged, this instruction can be used as drafted, without any reference to the affirmative defense. By charging the misdemeanor, the State is conceding that the affirmative defense can be established. To prove that the misdemeanor was committed, the elements of the felony must be proved.

1. For definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

2. For definition of "commercial motor vehicle," see § 340.01(8). At least one of the following characteristics provided in § 340.01(8)(a) through § 340.01(8)(d) must be chosen in order for the vehicle to classify as a "commercial motor vehicle":

(a) The vehicle is a single vehicle with a gross vehicle weight rating of 26,001 or more pounds or the vehicle's registered weight or actual gross weight is more than 26,000 pounds.

(b) The vehicle is a combination vehicle with a gross combination weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of 26,001 or more pounds inclusive of a towed unit with a gross vehicle weight rating, registered weight or actual gross weight of more than 10,000 pounds.

(c) The vehicle is designed to transport or is actually transporting the driver and 15 or more passengers. If the vehicle is equipped with bench type seats intended to seat more than one person, the passenger carrying capacity shall be determined under s. 340.01 (31) or, if the vehicle is a school bus, by dividing the total seating space measured in inches by 13.

(d) The vehicle is transporting hazardous materials requiring placarding or any quantity of a material listed as a select agent or toxin under 42 CFR 73.

3. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

4. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 943.23(1)(a).

5. This is the definition of "operate" provided by § 943.23(1)(c).

6. The sentence in brackets may be helpful if there is a question whether a person who had consent to the original taking of the vehicle may be guilty of this offense. The Committee concluded that a person "drives or operates a vehicle without the owner's consent" where that person may have been lawfully in possession of a vehicle but operates it in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner. A complete explanation of this conclusion is provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1464, footnote 1.

7. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the driving or operating was without consent.

8. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

9. 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 created sub. (3m) of § 943.23, which recognizes an affirmative defense: abandoning the vehicle without damage within 24 hours of the taking reduces felony offenses under subs. (2) or (3) offenses to Class A misdemeanors. The statute places the burden of persuasion on the defendant to prove it by a preponderance of the evidence. The Committee concluded that the defense is best handled by submitting it to the jury as a special question, which is provided by Wis JI-Criminal 1465A.

1465A OPERATING WITHOUT OWNER'S CONSENT: AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE – § 943.23(2), (3), (3m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

ADD THE FOLLOWING AT THE END OF WIS JI-CRIMINAL 1464, 1464A, OR 1465 IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF THE AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSE PROVIDED IN SUB. (3m) OF § 943.23

If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

"Did the defendant abandon the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) without damage within 24 hours after the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) was taken from the possession of the owner?"

"Abandon" means that the defendant must have freely, voluntarily, and permanently given up possession of the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle).[1]

USE THE FOLLOWING PARAGRAPHS IF RAISED BY THE EVIDENCE:[2]

[The giving up of possession is not free and voluntary if it is done because of fear of immediate capture by police.]

[A person who sells or gives the (vehicle) (commercial motor vehicle) to another person has not abandoned it within the meaning of the statute.]

You must answer the question "yes" if the defendant proves by evidence which satisfies you to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence that the answer is "yes."[3]

If you are not so satisfied, you should answer the question "no."[4]

Evidence has greater weight when it has more convincing power than the evidence opposed to it. Credible evidence is evidence which in the light of reason and common sense is worthy of belief.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1465A was approved by the Committee in April 2003. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2018; it adds the option of "commercial motor vehicle" to the language of the instruction.

This instruction addresses the affirmative defense set forth in sub. (3m) of § 943.23, as created by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. Effective date: February 1, 2003. The defense reduces violations of sub. (2) or (3) to Class A misdemeanor. The statute provides that "the defendant who raises this affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence."

A similar defense existed in § 943.23 until it was repealed by 1993 Wisconsin Act 92. The Committee concluded that the interpretation of that provision applies to the current statute. See the discussion in footnote 1, below.

The Committee concluded that although not specifically enumerated in § 943.23(3m), this affirmative defense applies to "commercial motor vehicles" based on the language provided in § 943.23(2g) and (3g).

The Committee recommends that the affirmative defense be presented to the jury in the form of a special question. The following form is suggested for the verdict:

We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of operating without the owner's consent under Wis. Stat. § 943.23, at the time and place charged in the information.

We, the jury, find the defendant not guilty.

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question "yes" or "no":

"Did the defendant abandon the vehicle without damage within 24 hours after the vehicle was taken from the possession of the owner?"

1. This definition was included in the uniform instruction for a similar defense recognized by the version of the statute in effect until 1993. The Committee believed this to be consistent with State v. Olson, 106 Wis.2d 572, 587, 317 N.W.2d 448 (1982), which held that the term "abandons" requires "voluntary relinquishment of possession." Abandonment does not exist where a defendant leaves the vehicle only when arrest and apprehension appears imminent. 106 Wis.2d 572, 586.

2. The two paragraphs in brackets are believed to be consistent with the discussion of abandonment in State v. Olson, supra, which interpreted the similar defense that applied to § 943 .23 until being repealed in 1993:

> ... Under the defendant's construction of the term "abandons," any person operating a vehicle without the owner's consent who had the foresight to leave the vehicle when his apprehension and arrest appeared imminent would fall under the lesser misdemeanor penalty although he had no intention of relinquishing possession of the vehicle if not for his imminent apprehension. Such a result is clearly contrary to the intent of the statute.
> Certainly, if, after a chase and after being ordered to pull over to the side of the road, the driver steps out of the vehicle and hands the keys over to the law enforcement officer, it would be ludicrous for the defendant to argue that a party has abandoned a vehicle.
> State v. Olson, 106 Wis.2d 572 ·at 586.

3. Section 943 .23 (3m) provides: "A defendant who raises this affirmative defense has the burden of proving the defense by a preponderance of the evidence." The instruction uses the generally-accepted statement of the civil burden: "to a reasonable certainty by the greater weight of the credible evidence."

If the jury answers the question "yes," the defense is established and the defendant should be found guilty of the misdemeanor offense.

4. If the jury answers the question "no," the defense is not established and the defendant should be found guilty of one of the felony offenses, depending on the jury's original finding.

1466 INTENTIONALLY ACCOMPANYING A PERSON WHO OPERATES A VEHICLE WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT — § 943.23(4m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection 943.23(4m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who knows that the owner does not consent to the driving or operation of a vehicle and intentionally accompanies, as a passenger in the vehicle, another person who intentionally drives or operates any vehicle without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of person)[1] intentionally (drove) (operated) a vehicle[2] without the consent[3] of the owner.[4]

   This requires that (name of person) acted with the purpose to (drive) (operate) a vehicle and knew that the owner did not consent to the (driving) (operation).[5]

   ["Drive" means to exercise physical control over the speed and direction of a vehicle while it is in motion.][6]

   ["Operate" means the physical manipulation or activation of any of the controls of a vehicle necessary to put it into motion.][7]

[A person (drives) (operates) without consent even though the owner consented to the original taking if the person (drives) (operates) the vehicle in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner.][8]

2. The defendant intentionally accompanied (name of person) as a passenger in the vehicle.

3. The defendant knew that the owner did not consent to the (driving) (operating) of the vehicle.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1467.4 in 1994. It was revised in 2001 to renumber it as Wis JI-Criminal 1466 and to adopt a new format, make nonsubstantive changes to the text, and update the comment. The instruction underwent another revision in 2016, which added to the text of element 1 at footnote 8. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2023; it reflects changes made by 2023 Wisconsin Act 10 [effective date: May 12, 2023].

This offense, a Class A misdemeanor, is one of the so-called carjacking crimes created by 1993 Wisconsin Act 92 [effective date: Dec. 25, 1993]. It applies to one who accompanies a person who violates sub. (2), (3), or (3m) of § 943.23. The first two subsections are the previously existing "operating without the owner's consent" offenses. The instruction uses a violation of sub. (3) as the underlying offense: "intentionally drives or operates any vehicle without the consent of the owner. . ." That violation was selected because it was the simplest and required importing the fewest factual issues into the definition of this offense. Conduct that violates the other subsections will always violate sub. (3).

1. This blank and those that follow call for the name of the person who drove the vehicle and whom the defendant is charged with accompanying.

2. For a definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. If a definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948, which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

4. The first element contains the elements for the direct violation of § 943.23(3), "intentionally driving or operating a vehicle without the consent of the owner." This is the simplest of the several different offenses that may serve as predicates for violations of § 943.23(4m). See the discussion preceding note 1, supra.

5. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the driving or operating was without consent. In the context of this offense, the person actually driving or operating the vehicle must be shown to have had the required purpose and knowledge.

6. This is the definition of "drive" provided in § 943.23(1)(a).

7. This is the definition of "operate" provided by § 943.23(1)(c).

8. The sentence in brackets may be helpful if there is a question about whether a person who had consent to the original taking of the vehicle may be guilty of this offense. The Committee concluded that a person "drives or operates a vehicle without the owner's consent" where that person may have been lawfully in possession of a vehicle but operates it in a manner that goes beyond the scope of the use authorized or permitted by the owner. A complete explanation of this conclusion is provided in Wis JI-Criminal 1464, footnote 1.

9. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the driving or operating was without consent. In the context of this element, the defendant — who is charged with accompanying the driver or operator of the vehicle — must be shown to have had the required knowledge.

10. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For a longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

1467 REMOVING A MAJOR PART OF A VEHICLE WITHOUT THE OWNER'S CONSENT — § 943.23(5)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection 943.23(5) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally removes a major part of a vehicle without the consent of the owner.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally removed a major part of a vehicle.[2]

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to remove a (name of part).

   [A (name of part) is a major part of a vehicle.]

   [A major part is a part that has a value[4] of more than $500.]

2. The defendant removed the (name of part) without the consent of the owner[5] of the vehicle.

3. The defendant knew that the owner did not consent to the removal.[6]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1467.5 in 1994. This revision, which renumbered the instruction as Wis JI-Criminal 1467, was approved by the Committee in June 2000 and involved adoption of a new format, nonsubstantive changes to the text, and updating of the comment.

1. This instruction is for the Class E felony offense defined in § 943.23(5): intentionally removing a major part of a vehicle without the owner's consent. That subsection also defines a Class A misdemeanor offense which applies to intentionally removing "any other part or component of a vehicle" without the consent of the owner. This instruction can easily be modified for the misdemeanor charge by substituting "any part or component of a vehicle" for "major part of a vehicle" and by inserting the same phrase where the instruction calls for naming the major part.

Section 943.23(5) was created by 1987 Wisconsin Act 349. There are no reported appellate decisions interpreting the statute.

2. For definition of "vehicle," see § 939.22(44).

3. Subsection (1)(b) of § 943.23 provides that "major part" means any one of eleven listed parts of a vehicle: the engine; the transmission; each door of the passenger compartment; the hood; the grille; each bumper; each front fender; the deck lid, tailgate or hatchback; each rear quarter panel; the trunk floor pan; and, the frame, or the supporting structure which serves as the frame in the case of unitized body. The Committee recommends simply inserting the name of the "major part" involved in the case. Whether a particular part is a "major part" under the statute is a legal conclusion. Whether in fact such a part was involved in the case is for the jury to determine.

Subsection (1)(b)12. of § 943.23(5) provides that the following is also a "major part": "any part not listed under subds. 1 to 11 which has a value exceeding $500." If this option is charged, the second bracketed sentence should be used.

4. "Value" is not specially defined for purposes of § 943.23(5). If a definition is needed, the Committee concluded that the definition provided in § 943.20(2)(d) should be usable.

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948 which provides an instruction based on the definition provided in § 939.22(48). That definition provides that "without consent" means "no consent in fact" or that consent was given because of fear, a claim of legal authority by the defendant, or misunderstanding.

6. When "intentionally" is used in a criminal statute, it requires, in addition to a mental purpose to cause the result specified, that "the actor must have knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make his conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally.'" § 939.23(3). Thus, the instruction requires knowledge that the owner did not consent.

7. This is the shorter version used to describe the process of finding intent. The Committee concluded that it is suitable for use in most cases. For the longer description of the intent-finding process, see Wis JI-Criminal 923A [formerly Wis JI-Criminal 923.1].

1468 ISSUE OF A WORTHLESS CHECK: MISDEMEANOR — § 943.24(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Issue of a worthless check, as defined in § 943.24(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who issues any check or other order for the payment of money which, at the time of issuance, he or she intends shall not be paid.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant issued a check.[1]

   A check is an unconditional order to pay money.[2]

   A check is issued when it is signed and delivered to another.[3]

2. At the time the check was issued, the defendant intended that it not be paid.

   This requires that the defendant issued the check knowing or believing that it would not be paid.[4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

READ THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE OF ONE OF THE STATUTORILY-RECOGNIZED "PRIMA FACIE" CASES.[5]

[Evidence has been received that at the time the defendant issued the check, there was not enough money in the checking account on which the check was drawn and that the defendant failed to pay the check within five days after receiving written notice that the check was not paid, delivered by regular mail to either the person's last known address or the address provided on the check.

If you find beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant issued a check and that at the time of issuance there was not enough money in the checking account on which the check was drawn and that the defendant failed to pay the check within five days after receiving written notice that the check was not paid, delivered by regular mail to either the person's last known address or the address provided on the check, you may find that (he) (she) intended that it not be paid. You should not so find unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence that at the time the defendant issued the check (he) (she) intended that it would not be paid.][6]

READ ONE OF THE FOLLOWING WHEN SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE.[7]

[The statute does not apply to a check given for a past consideration, that is, a check given for a preexisting obligation or debt. Before you may find the defendant guilty, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the check was not given for a past consideration.]

[The statute does not apply to a postdated check.[8] Before you may find the defendant guilty, you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the check was not a postdated check.]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1468 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1984, 1986, 1990, 1992, and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2004 and involved updating the text following footnote 5.

This instruction is for the misdemeanor offense under § 943.24(1). A check or series of checks totaling $2,500 or more is made a felony by § 943.24(2). See Wis JI-Criminal 1469A and 1469B. The amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001.

1. The instruction is drafted for the typical case where a check is involved. However, the statute also applies to any "other order for the payment of money."

2. The definition of "check" is adapted from that used in the Uniform Commercial Code, § 403.104(2)(b).

3. The definition of "issue" is adapted from that used in the Uniform Commercial Code, § 403.102(1)(b): "'Issue' means the first delivery of an instrument to a holder or remitter." The phrase in the instruction — "signed and delivered to another" — is believed to be a more easily understood equivalent of the statutory definition. The delivery must be of a signed check, though the defendant need not be the person who signed it.

4. The explanation of the required intent is adapted from § 939.23(4):

> 'With intent to' or 'with intent that' means that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result.

The instruction defines intent as "knowing or believing that it [the check] would not be paid." This is believed to be the equivalent of having the mental purpose or being aware that it is practically certain that the check would not be paid. The two alternatives for defining "with intent that" are discussed at Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

5. The model paragraphs are drafted for one of the three "prima facie" cases set forth in subsection (3) of § 943.24, namely, that found in (3)(b). If a case involves no account (subsec. (3)(a)) or insufficient funds at the time of presentment (subsec. (3)(c)), the paragraphs must be modified.

The model paraphrases the words of the statute by substituting "enough money in his checking account" for "sufficient funds or credit with the drawer" and "that the check was not paid" for "of nonpayment or dishonor." These paragraphs must be modified for cases involving orders other than checks.

The reference to “written” notice “delivered by regular mail . . .” was added to reflect changes made to § 943.23(3)(b) by 2003 Wisconsin Act 138, effective date: July 1, 2004.

6. This paragraph treats the "prima facie" case as a permissive inference and instructs the jury in the manner suggested by § 903.03. See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for discussion of the Committee's approach to instructing on "presumptions" and "prima facie cases."

7. The following paragraphs provide for the exceptions recognized by subsection (4) of § 943.24: postdated checks and checks given for past consideration (except a payroll check).

8. "Postdated checks are not included in view of the fact that some merchants encourage the giving of postdated checks when the customer does not have sufficient funds on hand to pay for the purchase. The person who takes a postdated check is put on notice that there may not be sufficient funds in the account of the issuer." 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on The Criminal Code, p. 119 (Wis. Legislative Council, February 1953).

1469A ISSUE OF A WORTHLESS CHECK: FELONY: ONE CHECK FOR $2,500 OR MORE — § 943.24(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Issue of a worthless check, as defined in § 943.24(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who issues any check or other order for the payment of $2,500 or more which, at the time of issuance, he or she intends shall not be paid.

Wis JI-Criminal 1469A was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1992 and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2004 and involved changing the text following footnote 5.

1469B ISSUE OF A WORTHLESS CHECK: FELONY: SERIES OF CHECKS TOTALING $2,500 OR MORE — § 943.24(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Issue of a worthless check, as defined in § 943.24(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who issues any checks or other orders for the payment of money within a 90-day period totaling $2,500 or more which, at the time of issuance, he or she intends shall not be paid.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Wis JI-Criminal 1469B was originally published in 1984 and revised in 1992 and 2002. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2004 and involved changing the time period from 15 to 90 days and changing the text following footnote 5.

This instruction is for the felony offense under § 943.24(2) where a series of checks totaling $2,500 or more is issued in a 90-day period. The time period was changed from 15 days to 90 days by 2003 Wisconsin Act 306, effective date: May 7, 2004. > 'With intent to' or 'with intent that' means that the actor either has a purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result.

1470 TRANSFER OF ENCUMBERED PERSONAL PROPERTY WITH INTENT TO DEFRAUD — § 943.84(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fraudulent transfer of encumbered personal property, as defined in § 943.84(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to defraud, (conceals) (removes) (transfers) any personal property in which he knows another has a security interest.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (removed) (transferred) (concealed) personal property.

   [To "remove" means to change the location of property permanently.][1]

   [To "transfer" means to change possession or title of any property.][2]

   [To "conceal" means to hide the property or to do something else which prevents or makes more difficult the discovery of the property.][3]

2. Another party held a security interest in the property.

   A security interest is an interest in property which secures payment or other performance of an obligation.[4]

3. The defendant knew[5] that another held a security interest in the property.

4. The defendant (transferred) (removed) (concealed) the property with intent to defraud.

This requires that when the defendant (transferred) (removed) (concealed) the property, (he) (she) had a purpose to cause someone pecuniary loss[6] or was aware that (his) (her) conduct was practically certain to cause that result.[7]

WHEN EVIDENCE WARRANTS AND WHERE THE HOLDER OF SECURITY INTEREST IS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN DEFRAUDED, GIVE THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTION.[8]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant knew that a security interest existed and (removed) (sold) the property without (the consent of the secured party) (authorization by the security agreement). Evidence has also been received that the defendant failed to return the property within 72 hours of written demand (or, if return of the property is not possible, failed to make full disclosure to the secured party of all information concerning the disposition, location, and possession of the property). If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all these facts are established, you may find from this evidence alone that the defendant (transferred) (removed) (concealed) the property with intent to defraud. But you are not required to do so, and you must not so find unless you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case that the defendant acted with the intent to defraud.]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[9]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of property stolen more than $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of property stolen more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property at the time of the theft or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[10]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1740 was originally published in 1969 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in August 2007 and involved adoption of a new format, reflection of the renumbering of the statutes, and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.84(2). The offense was formerly defined in § 943.25, which was renumbered by 2005 Wisconsin Act 212 and moved to the subchapter dealing with crimes against financial institutions.

1. In Jameson v. State, 74 Wis.2d 176, 181, 246 N.W.2d 501 (1976), the court held that "remove" as used in § 943.25(2) [now § 943.84(2)] means more than moving from place to place; it requires "some permanent change in situs."

2. This is based on § 939.22(40) which defines "transfer" as follows: ". . . any transaction involving a change in possession of any property, or a change of right, title or interest to or in any property."

3. See Wis JI-Criminal 1481, Receiving Stolen Property, text at note 5.

4. Section 943.84(4) defines "security interest" as ". . . an interest in property which secures payment or other performance of an obligation." Also see Wis. Uniform Commercial Code 401.201(37). The perfection of the security interest "is not necessary to the creation of a security interest valid between the original parties." State v. Tew, 54 Wis.2d 361, 365, 195 N.W.2d 615 (1972).

In 26 Op. Att'y Gen. 105, 107 (1937), it is stated that the security interest must be an enforceable one.

5. Section 939.23(2) states that "'know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified fact exists."

6. The 1953 Report on the Criminal Code points out that the meaning of "intent to defraud" varies with the context in which it is used and states that for this offense, "it is used in the sense of intent to cause pecuniary loss either to the person whose security interest is endangered or defeated or to the innocent purchaser who has only constructive notice of the security interest." 1953 Report, page 120.

This view was adopted for purposes of subsection (1) of § 943.25 [now § 943.84] in State v. Alles, 106 Wis.2d 368, 382, 316 N.W.2d 378 (1982).

7. Section 939.23(3). See discussion of the two alternative meanings of "intent" in Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

8. Subsection (3) of § 943.84 sets forth a lengthy set of facts that is to provide "prima facie" evidence of intent to defraud. Providing an understandable instruction on this "prima facie evidence" provision is difficult. The paragraph in brackets is based on the Committee's standard approach to instructing on "prima facie cases," described at Wis JI-Criminal 225.

The prima facie evidence provision was discussed in Jameson v. State, cited in note 1, supra, 74 Wis.2d 176, 183.

9. The penalty for this offense depends on the value of the property involved, see § 943.91:

• value does not exceed $500	Class A misdemeanor
• value does not exceed $500 and defendant has prior theft-type conviction	Class I felony
• value exceeds $500 but does not exceed $10,000	Class H felony
• value exceeds $10,000 but does not exceed $100,000	Class G felony
• value exceeds $100,000	Class E felony

The questions in the instruction adopt the approach used in theft cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

10. This is the definition of value used for theft cases. See § 943.20(2)(d) and Wis JI-Criminal 1441, footnote 9.

1472A LOAN SHARKING (EXTORTIONATE EXTENSION OF CREDIT) — § 943.28(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Loan sharking, as defined in § 943.28(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who makes any extortionate extension of credit.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant, (name of defendant) , made an extortionate extension of credit.

An "extortionate extension of credit" is any extension of credit made with the understanding of the person making the loan and the person borrowing that delay in making repayment or failure to make repayment could result in the use of violence or other criminal means to cause harm to any person or to the reputation or property of any person.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant made an extortionate extension of credit, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1472A was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

1. Section 943.28(2) also makes it a crime to conspire to make any extortionate extension of credit. Conspiracy is a crime in itself under § 939.31. See Wis JI-Criminal 570.

2. This is based on the definition provided in § 943.28(1)(b). The "phrase 'at the time it is made' found in the § 943.28(1)(b) definition of 'extortionate extension of credit' encompasses credit extensions and renewal as well as the initial loan transaction between the parties." State v. Green, 208 Wis.2d 290, 294, 560 N.W.2d 295 (Ct. App. 1997).

1472B LOAN SHARKING (ADVANCEMENTS FOR EXTORTIONATE EXTENSIONS OF CREDIT) — § 943.28(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Loan sharking, as defined in § 943.28(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who advances money or property for the purpose of making extortionate extensions of credit.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant advanced (money) (property) to another.

   "Advanced" as used here means the supplying or furnishing of money or property before something of equivalent value has been received.[1]

2. The defendant advanced (money) (property) for the purpose of making an extortionate extension of credit.

   An "extortionate extension of credit" is any extension of credit made with the understanding of the person making the loan and the person borrowing that delay in making repayment or failure to make repayment could result in the use of violence or other criminal means to cause harm to any person or to the reputation or property of any person.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1472C LOAN SHARKING (USE OF EXTORTIONATE MEANS) — § 943.28(4)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Loan sharking, as defined in § 943.28(4) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly participates in any way in the use of any extortionate means (to collect any extension of credit) (to attempt to collect any extension of credit) (to punish any person for the nonpayment of any extension of credit).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant participated in the use of extortionate means.

   An "extortionate means" as used here is any means which involves the use, or an express or implicit threat of use, of violence or other criminal means to cause harm to any person or to the reputation or property of any person.[1]

2. The defendant participated in the use of extortionate means (to collect an extension of credit) (to attempt to collect an extension of credit) (to punish (name of victim) for the nonpayment of an extension of credit).

   ["To collect an extension of credit" means to induce in any way any person to make repayment thereof.[2]]

3. The defendant knew or believed[3] that (he) (she) was participating in the use of extortionate means (to collect an extension of credit) (to attempt to collect an extension of credit) (to punish (name of victim) for the nonpayment of an extension of credit).

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

1473A EXTORTION: ACCUSE OR THREATEN TO ACCUSE — § 943.30(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.30(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who (verbally) (by written communication) (by printed communication) maliciously (accuses) (threatens to accuse) (accuses) another of any crime or offense with intent thereby [to extort money] [to compel the person to (do any act against the person's will) (omit to do any lawful act)].[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (verbally) (by written communication) (by printed communication) (accused) (threatened to accuse) another of a crime or offense.[2]

   [The person threatened need not be the one from whom (money) (the doing of an act) (the failure to do a lawful act) is being sought.][3]

2. The defendant made the (accusation) (threat) maliciously.

   This does not mean that the person (accusing) (threatening) must have a feeling of ill will towards the person (accused) (threatened). (An accusation) (A threat) is made "maliciously" if it is made willfully and with an illegal intent.[4]

3. The defendant acted with intent [to extort money] [to compel (name of person) to do any act against the person's will] [to compel (name of person) to omit to do any lawful act].

["To extort" means to obtain from another by coercion or intimidation.][5]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1473A was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977 and 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2004 and involved adoption of a new format.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.30(1) involving threats or accusations that another committed a crime. For violations involving injury or threats to injure the person, property, or business of another, see Wis JI-Criminal 1473B.

In State v. Dauer, 174 Wis.2d 418, 497 N.W.2d 766 (Ct. App. 1993), the court of appeals held that extortion is not a lesser included offense robbery because it requires proof of facts in addition to those required for robbery: proof of a threat made by verbal, printed, or written communication.

1. This summary of the offense is a substantial shortening of the full statutory definition. The instruction refers to "intent to extort money," deleting the statute's "or any pecuniary advantage whatever," and would need to be modified if money was not involved.

2. The terms "crime" and "offense" are synonymous. State v. Slowe, 230 Wis. 406, 410, 284 N.W. 4 (1939). If the definition of crime is at issue, § 939.12 should be consulted. It provides:

> A crime is conduct which is prohibited by state law and punishable by fine or imprisonment or both. Conduct punishable only by forfeiture is not a crime.

3. The Committee concluded that threats to do harm to a third person are covered by the statute. Thus, for example, if the defendant has threatened injury to John Smith's son if John Smith does not perform a certain act, the defendant's conduct falls within the statute.

This result is consistent with the conclusion reached in the previously published versions of this instruction, which cited the following as authority: Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin – Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 443 (1961). This article referred to the version of the extortion statute in effect in 1961, describing it as a codification of the common law version of the crime, in roughly the same terms used in Wisconsin dating back to 1849. The article concluded, without citation to other authority, that "it is not required that the threat be to injure the person from whom the property, advantage or other action is demanded."

The statute was revised in 1969, 1977, 1979, and 1981. The 1977 changes came as part of the legislation which created the criminal penalty classification system and amended the statute to read essentially as it does today. The revisions at one time clarified the threat to harm others issue by treating it in a separate subsection. See § 943.30(2), 1969 Wis. Stats. But that section was merged with present sub. (1) by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, leaving the matter unclear.

The Committee concluded that the present statute is very much like the 1961 version, which had been interpreted to cover threats to harm third persons. In the absence of any indication of legislative intent to change that interpretation, the present version of the instruction preserves the statement that the person threatened with harm need not be the person from whom the doing of an act or the payment of money is being sought.

4. State v. Compton, 77 Wis. 460, 466, 46 N.W. 535 (1890).

Historically, the meaning of the word "maliciously" was unclear: "Maliciously" . . . hardly ever means what it seems to say, i.e., spite or ill-will, yet it continues to clutter up many penal statutes. . . ." Remington and Helstad, "The Mental Element in Crime – A Legislative Problem," 1952 Wis Law Review 644, 667. Use of the term was generally avoided in the 1956 Criminal Code Revision, but the extortion statute was recodified using its common law terminology. The Committee believes that the essence of the offense is making a threat to get something to which the person is not lawfully entitled. This point is clarified in the definitions of some other offenses. See, for example, § 946.67, Compounding Crime, where subsec. (2) provides that the criminal prohibition does not apply of the person "reasonably believes that he is legally entitled to the property received."

5. This is the definition provided in the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (3rd Edition 1992).

1473B EXTORTION: INJURE OR THREATEN TO INJURE — § 943.30(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.30(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who (injures) ((verbally) (by written communication) (by printed communication) threatens to injure) the person, property, or business of another, with intent thereby (to extort money) (to compel the person to (do any act against the person's will) (omit to do any lawful act)).[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (injured) (threatened to injure) the person, property,[2] or business of another person.

   [A "threat" is an expression of intention to do harm and may be communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct. This element requires a true threat. "True threat" means that a reasonable person making the threat would foresee that a reasonable person would interpret the threat as a serious expression of intent to do harm. It is not necessary that the person making the threat have the ability to carry out the threat. You must consider all the circumstances in determining whether a threat is a true threat.][3]

[The person threatened need not be the one from whom (money) (the doing of an act) (the failure to do a lawful act) is being sought.][4]

2. The defendant acted with intent [to extort money] [to compel (name of person) to do any act against the person's will] [to compel (name of person) to omit to do any lawful act].

["To extort" means to obtain from another by coercion or intimidation.][5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1473B was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977, 1994, 2004, and 2005. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2022; it added a definition of "true threat."

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.30(1) involving injury or threats to injure the person, property, or business of another. For violations involving threats or accusations that another committed a crime see Wis JI-Criminal 1473A.

In State v. Dauer, 174 Wis.2d 418, 497 N.W.2d 766 (Ct. App. 1993), the court of appeals held that extortion is not a lesser included offense robbery because it requires proof of facts in addition to those required for robbery: proof of a threat made by verbal, printed, or written communication.

1. This summary of the offense is a substantial shortening of the full statutory definition. The instruction refers to a threat or injury to the "person, property, or business," omitting the following that is included in the statute: ". . . calling or trade, or the profits and income of any business, profession, calling or trade . . ." It also refers to "intent to extort money," deleting the statute's "or any pecuniary advantage whatever." The instruction must be modified if the omitted alternatives are involved.

Finally, the word "maliciously" is not used in this instruction. The Committee reads the statute as connecting "maliciously" only with the "threatens to accuse or accuses another of any crime or offense" alternative. The Committee concluded that two alternatives are possible under the statute: "maliciously threatening to accuse or accusing of crime" and "threatening or committing any injury. . . ." The blameworthiness of the conduct covered by this instruction is provided by the requirement that the threat or injury to be done with the intent to extort money or to make the person do an act against the person's will.

2. In State v. Manthey, 169 Wis.2d 673, 689, 487 N.W.2d 44 (Ct. App. 1992), the court held that "property" under § 943.30(1) is "broad enough to encompass an interest in a lawsuit." Thus, a complaint charging extortion was sufficient where it alleged that the defendant threatened to testify falsely unless paid.

Threats "to do everything he could to ensure that the student would have to end his studies in the United States and return to Panama" could constitute threats to the student's profession or to the student's "calling." State v. Kittilstad, 231 Wis.2d 245, ¶ 49-51, 603 N.W.2d 732 (1999).

3. This definition is based on one of the descriptions of "true threat" in State v. Perkins, 2001 WI 46, 28, 243 Wis.2d 141, 626 N.W.2d 762. In Perkins, the court held that "Only a 'true threat' is constitutionally punishable under statutes criminalizing threats." Id. at ¶ 17. Perkins additionally held that a jury instruction for a threat to a judge in violation of § 940.203 was an incomplete statement of the law because it did not define "threat" as "true threat." This created an unacceptable risk that "the jury may have used the common definition of 'threat,' thereby violating the defendant's constitutional right to freedom of speech." 2001 WI 46, ¶43. The court stated: "The common definition of threat is an expression of an intention to inflict injury on another. The definition of threat for the purposes of the statute criminalizing language is much narrower." 2001 WI 46, 43.

The following is the most complete definition of "true threat" offered by the court in Perkins:

> A true threat is a statement that a speaker would reasonably foresee that a listener would reasonably interpret as a serious expression of a purpose to inflict harm, as distinguished from hyperbole, jest, innocuous talk, expressions of political views, or other similarly protected speech. It is not necessary that the speaker have the ability to carry out the threat. In determining whether a statement is a true threat, the totality of the circumstances must be considered. 2001 WI 46, 29.

The Committee concluded that the definition in the instruction is equivalent in context and will be more understandable to the jury. In a case decided at the same time as Perkins, the court used a definition much like the one used in the instruction. See State v. A.S., 2001 WI 48, 23, 243 Wis.2d 173, 626 N.W.2d 712.

Perkins involved an orally communicated threat. The instruction is drafted more broadly to be applicable whether the threat is communicated orally, in writing, or by conduct.

In Elonis v. United States, 575 U.S. 723, 135 S.Ct. 2001 (2015), the United States Supreme Court interpreted a federal statute making it a crime to transmit in interstate commerce "any communication containing any threat … to injure the person of another." 18 USC § 875(c). Because the statute was not clear as to what mental state was required, there was a split in the federal circuits on that issue. Elonis was convicted under instructions that required the jury to find that he communicated what a reasonable person would regard as a threat. The Supreme Court concluded that this was not sufficient: "Federal criminal liability generally does not turn solely on the results of an act without considering the defendant's mental state." The decision did not specify what mental state is required. The decision was based on constitutional requirements – it was a matter of interpreting a federal statute – so it has no direct impact on Wisconsin law. The committee concluded that the definition of "true threat" used in this instruction is sufficient to meet any requirements that may be implied from the decision in Elonis, especially in light of element 2 which requires that "the defendant acted with intent [to extort money]…"

4. The Committee concluded that threats to do harm to a third person are covered by the statute. Thus, for example, if the defendant has threatened injury to John Smith's son if John Smith does not perform a certain act, the defendant's conduct falls within the statute.

This result is consistent with the conclusion reached in the previously published versions of this instruction, which cited the following as authority: Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin – Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 443 (1961). This article referred to the version of the extortion statute in effect in 1961, describing it as a codification of the common law version of the crime, in roughly the same terms used in Wisconsin dating back to 1849. The article concluded, without citation to other authority, that "it is not required that the threat be to injure the person from whom the property, advantage or other action is demanded."

The statute was revised in 1969, 1977, 1979, and 1981. The 1977 changes came as part of the legislation which created the criminal penalty classification system and amended the statute to read essentially as it does today. The revisions at one time clarified the threat to harm others issue by treating it in a separate subsection. See § 943.30(2), 1969 Wis. Stats. But that section was merged with present sub. (1) by Chapter 173, Laws of 1977, leaving the matter unclear.

The Committee concluded that the present statute is very much like the 1961 version, which had been interpreted to cover threats to harm third persons. In the absence of any indication of legislative intent to change that interpretation, the present version of the instruction preserves the statement that the person threatened with harm need not be the person from whom the doing of an act or the payment of money is being sought.

5. This is the definition provided in the American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language (3rd Edition 1992).

1474 THREATS TO COMMUNICATE DEROGATORY INFORMATION — § 943.31

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.31 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who maliciously threatens, [with intent to extort money or any pecuniary advantage whatever] [or] [with intent to compel the person so threatened to do any act against the person's will], to disseminate or to communicate to anyone information, whether true or false, that would humiliate or injure the reputation of the threatened person or another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant maliciously threatened (name threatened person) to disseminate or to communicate to anyone certain information about [(name threatened person)] [(name other person)]. [(Identify the information) is information.][1]
2. The defendant maliciously[2] threatened to disseminate or communicate information, whether true or false, that would humiliate or injure the reputation of [(name threatened person)] [(name other person)].

3. The defendant made the threat [with intent to extort money or any pecuniary advantage whatever] [with intent to compel the person threatened to do any act against the person's will].

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 474 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1985, 1995, and 2004. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2016; it reflects significant changes made to § 943.31 by 2015 Wisconsin Act 335 [effective date: April 1, 2016].

1. Section 943.31 provides in part: "For the purpose of this section, 'information' includes any photograph, exposed film, motion picture, videotape, or data that represents a visual image, a sound recording, or any data that represents or produces an audio signal." The Committee recommends inserting the applicable term in the blank in the instruction.

2. A definition of "maliciously" is found in Wis JI-Criminal 1473A Extortion: Accuse Or Threaten To Accuse. It states: "A threat is made 'maliciously' if it is made willfully and with an illegal intent." See footnote 4 of that instruction for an explanation of the derivation of the definition.

1479 ROBBERY BY THE USE OR THREAT OF FORCE[1] — § 943.32(1)(a) and (b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Robbery, as defined in § 943.32(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with the intent to steal, takes property from the person or presence of the owner by [using force against the person of the owner with intent to overcome physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property] [or] [by threatening the imminent use of force against the person[2] of the owner with intent to compel the owner to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name) was the owner of property.[3]

   "Owner" means a person in possession of property.[4]

2. The defendant took and carried away[5] property from the person or from the presence[6] of (name).

3. The defendant took the property with the intent to steal.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[7] to take and carry away property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive (name) permanently of possession of the property.

[It further requires that the defendant knew that the property belonged to another and knew that the person did not consent to the taking of the property.][8]

4. The defendant acted forcibly.[9]

Forcibly means that the defendant [actually used force against (name) with the intent to overcome or prevent (his) (her) physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property][10] [or] [threatened the imminent use of force against (name) [11] with the intent to compel (name) to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property. "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening"[12]].

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1479 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1983, 1988, and 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

In 2008, separate instructions for use of force [Wis JI-Criminal 1475] and threat of force [Wis JI-Criminal 1477] were withdrawn and this instruction adapted for use in any one of three possible cases: 1) those alleging robbery by the use of force; 2) those alleging robbery by the threat of force; and, 3) those alleging robbery by the use or threat of force. See footnotes 1 and 9, below.

1. This instruction is for cases where either or both of the alternative ways of committing "unarmed robbery" are submitted. Thus, the instruction is phrased in terms of "use of force" or "threat of imminent force." While election of one alternative or the other is preferable, in some cases election may not be possible. In those cases, submitting both alternatives is not error, and it is not essential for the jury to agree on one alternative as opposed to the other. Manson v. State, 101 Wis.2d 413, 304 N.W.2d 729 (1981). Cheers v. State, 102 Wis.2d 367, 306 N.W.2d 676 (1981). The instruction tries to tie the two alternatives together by relating them to the concept of acting "forcibly." See note 9, below.

2. This instruction is drafted for threats against the person of the one in possession of the property. The statute also prohibits threats against others who are present. In cases where threats are against another, the introductory paragraph and the fourth element of the instruction will have to be modified to make it clear that force is threatened against someone else to compel the person in possession of the property to submit to the taking or carrying away.

3. "Property" for the purposes of robbery is the same as "property" for the purposes of theft; which is defined in § 943.20(2)(a). See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations In Wisconsin — Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 450 (1961). The value of the property is immaterial.

4. "The person who has possession of the property" is the definition of owner provided in § 943.32(3).

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that a person qualifies as an "owner" if his possession of the property is "actual or constructive," citing § 971.33. In Mosely, all employees of a restaurant were held to be "owners" of the restaurant's money kept in an office desk since each had dominion and control over it. As to jewelry and a purse on an office shelf, only the person to whom they actually belonged was an "owner," since only she had any control over or interest in the property.

5. On several occasions, Wisconsin appellate courts have held that "asportation" or "carrying away" is required for a taking to constitute robbery. In State v. Johnson, 207 Wis.2d. 240, N.W.2d (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the reversal of an armed robbery conviction on the ground that there was no "asportation":

> We hold that a person may not be convicted of armed robbery when the property at issue is an automobile and the person does not move the automobile. 207 Wis.2d. 240, 249.

Johnson declined to overrule prior decisions establishing the asportation requirement. In State v. Moore, 55 Wis.2d 1, 197 N.W.2d 820 (l972), the court first interpreted the armed robbery statute to require asportation. That holding came in the context of justifying the conclusion that theft from person was a lesser included offense of robbery. Three court of appeals decisions have relied on Moore. In State v. Dauer, 174 Wis.2d 418, 497 N.W.2d 766 (Ct. App. 1993), the court relied on the asportation requirement to support its conclusion that convictions for robbery and extortion based on the same conduct were not barred by double jeopardy principles. In Ryan v. State, 95 Wis.2d 83, 289 N.W.2d 349 (Ct. App. 1980), the court found the evidence sufficient to support asportation where the defendant abandoned the stolen purse shortly after taking it from the victim. And in State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979), the court relied on the asportation element to support a conclusion that a robbery continued during the "carrying away" because it was at that point that a weapon was used. See note 8, below.

6. When there is a dispute on the facts as to precisely from where the property was taken – the person or the presence of the one in possession – then add this sentence: "It is immaterial whether the property is taken from the person or the presence of the one in possession." "Presence of the owner" means such a proximity to the owner as will enable the defendant when he takes the property to use or threaten the imminent use of force. See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations," supra, 447-48. In certain cases, property may be taken from both the person and the presence of the one in possession. Then the words "or both" should be added at this point.

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that "from his person or presence" did not require that the victim actually be aware of the taking: ". . . where the victim has been intimidated or placed in fear by use or threat of force . . . and the property is taken from an area sufficiently close and under his control that, but for the robber's intimidation or force he could have prevented the taking, the taking is from his "presence" under § 943.32(1); and this conclusion is not defeated by an unawareness of the taking as it occurs." 102 Wis.2d at 649.

7. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one part of the definition. It is the other alternative that changes from "believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

8. The bracketed material should be added if there is evidence that, for example, the defendant believed he was reclaiming his own property. Referred to as "right to recapture," "claim of right," or "self-help," this defensive matter tends to negate either the "property of another" or the "knew it was property of another" elements. The rule applies to robbery. Edwards v. State, 49 Wis.2d 105, 181 N.W.2d 383 (1970); Austin v. State, 86 Wis.2d 213, 271 N.W.2d 668 (1978).

The 1993 revision of this instruction substituted the bracketed material for the following phrase: ". . . knew he had no right to take it." The Committee concluded that the present version is a more accurate statement of the law.

The "right to recapture" is discussed in detail at Wis JI-Criminal 710, Law Note: Right To Recapture.

9. This paragraph restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." The Committee concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the taking of the property and the defendant's use of force. The Committee concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case, election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, and Cheers v. State, cited in note 1, supra. As to jury unanimity generally, also see State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); compare United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

10. It is robbery if force is used to accomplish the "carrying away" of the property as well as the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979).

11. See note 2, supra.

In State v. Johnson, 231 Wis.2d 58, 604 N.W.2d 902 (Ct. App. 1999), the court held that the statute does not require express threats of bodily harm – "the element is met 'if the taking of the property [is] attended with such circumstances of terror, or such threatening by menace, word, or gesture as in common experience is likely to create an apprehension of danger and induce a [person] to part with property for [his or her] safety.'" 231 Wis.2d 58, 69, citing Washington v. Collinsworth, 966 F.2d 905, 907 (Wash. Ct. App. 1997).

12. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th Edition, 1951).

1480 ARMED ROBBERY: BY USE OR THREAT OF USE OF A DANGEROUS WEAPON — § 943.32(2)[1]

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Armed robbery, as defined in § 943.32(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with the intent to steal and by use or threat of use of a dangerous weapon, takes property from the person or presence of the owner by [using force against the person of the owner with intent to overcome physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property] [or] [by threatening the imminent use of force against the person[2] of the owner with intent to compel the owner to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property].[3]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence that satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name) was the owner of property.[4]

   "Owner" means a person who has possession of property.[5]

2. The defendant took and carried away[6] property from the person or from the presence[7] of (name).

3. The defendant took the property with the intent to steal.

"Intent to steal" means that the defendant had the mental purpose[8] to take and carry away property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive the owner permanently of possession of the property.[9] [It further requires that the defendant knew that the property belonged to another and knew that the person did not consent to the taking of the property.][10]

4. The defendant acted forcibly.[11]

"Forcibly" means that the defendant [used force against _(name)_ with the intent to overcome or prevent physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property] [or] [threatened the imminent use of force against _(name)_ [12] with the intent to compel _(name)_ to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property].[13]

"Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening."[14]

5. At the time of the taking or carrying away,[15] the defendant used or threatened to use a dangerous weapon.[16]

A "dangerous weapon" is (any firearm, whether loaded or not) (any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm) (any device or instrumentality which in the manner it is used or intended to be used is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm).[17]

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE CASE INVOLVES A THREAT TO USE A WEAPON AND NO WEAPON OR OTHER ARTICLE IS ACTUALLY DISPLAYED:[18]

[This element does not require that a defendant actually display or possess a dangerous weapon. It is sufficient if (name of victim) reasonably believed the defendant had a dangerous weapon at the time of the threat. Whether (name of victim) reasonably believed[19] that the defendant was armed with a dangerous weapon is to be determined from the standpoint of (name of victim) at the time of the alleged offense. The standard is what a person of ordinary intelligence and prudence would have believed under the circumstances that existed at that time.]

Deciding About Intent

The intent to steal and [the intent to overcome resistance] [or] [the intent to compel the one in possession to submit to the taking or carrying away] must be found as facts before you can find the defendant guilty of armed robbery. You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of armed robbery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1480 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1974, 1980, 1983, 1988, 1990, 1993, 1997, 1999, and 2009. This revision was approved the Committee in June 2015; it involved nonsubstantive changes to the text and added to footnote 18.

1. This instruction is for cases where a robbery is alleged to have been committed by the use or threat of use of a dangerous weapon. If the case involves "an article used or fashioned in a manner to lead the victim reasonably to believe it is a dangerous weapon," Wis JI-Criminal 1480A should be used.

Section 943.32(2) was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 288 (effective date: May 10, 1996) to refer not only to a dangerous weapon but also to "a device or container described under s. 941.26(4)(a)." The reference is to containers of oleoresin of capsicum, commonly referred to as "pepper spray." If that option is presented, the instruction must be modified. The Committee suggests simply substituting "container of oleoresin of capsicum" for "dangerous weapon" and not defining the term further. This is the approach used in the instructions for violations of § 941.26(4); see Wis JI-Criminal 1341, 1341A, and 1341B.

2. This instruction is drafted for threats against the person of the one in possession of the property. The statute also prohibits threats against others who are present. In cases where threats are against another, the introductory paragraph and the definition of "forcibly" will have to be modified to make it clear that force is threatened against someone else to compel the person in possession of the property to submit to the taking or carrying away.

3. The instruction is drafted for a case where both alternative ways of committing robbery are submitted. That is, the instruction is phrased in terms of "use of force" or "threat of imminent force." If only one of the alternatives is indicated by the evidence, only one should be submitted. While election of one alternative or the other is preferable, in some cases election may not be possible. In those cases, submitting both alternatives is not error, and it is not essential for the jury to agree on one alternative as opposed to the other. Manson v. State, 101 Wis.2d 413, 304 N.W.2d 729 (1981). Cheers v. State, 102 Wis.2d 367, 306 N.W.2d 676 (1981). This instruction tries to tie the two alternatives together by relating them to the concept of acting "forcibly."

4. "Property" for the purposes of robbery is the same as "property" for the purposes of theft; the latter is defined in § 943.20(2)(a). See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations In Wisconsin – Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 450 (1961). The value of the property is immaterial.

5. "The person who has possession of the property" is the definition of owner provided in § 943.32(3).

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that a person qualifies as an "owner" if his possession of the property is "actual or constructive," citing § 971.33. In Mosely, all employees of a restaurant were held to be "owners" of the restaurant's money kept in an office desk since each had dominion and control over it. As to jewelry and a purse on an office shelf, only the person to whom they actually belonged was an "owner," since only she had any control over or interest in the property.

6. On several occasions, Wisconsin appellate courts have held that "asportation" or "carrying away" is required for a taking to constitute robbery. In State v. Johnson, 207 Wis.2d. 240, N.W.2d (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the reversal of an armed robbery conviction on the ground that there was no "asportation":

> We hold that a person may not be convicted of armed robbery when the property at issue is an automobile and the person does not move the automobile. 207 Wis.2d. 240, 249.

Johnson declined to overrule prior decisions establishing the asportation requirement. In State v. Moore, 55 Wis.2d 1, 197 N.W.2d 820 (l972), the court first interpreted the armed robbery statute to require asportation. That holding came in the context of justifying the conclusion that theft from person was a lesser included offense of robbery. Three court of appeals decisions have relied on Moore. In State v. Dauer, 174 Wis.2d 418, 497 N.W.2d 766 (Ct. App. 1993), the court relied on the asportation requirement to support its conclusion that convictions for robbery and extortion based on the same conduct were not barred by double jeopardy principles. In Ryan v. State, 95 Wis.2d 83, 289 N.W.2d 349 (Ct. App. 1980), the court found the evidence sufficient to support asportation where the defendant abandoned the stolen purse shortly after taking it from the victim. And in State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979), the court relied on the asportation element to support a conclusion that a robbery continued during the "carrying away" because it was at that point that a weapon was used. See note 8, below.

7. When there is a dispute on the facts as to precisely from where the property was taken – the person or the presence of the one in possession – then add this sentence: "It is immaterial whether the property is taken from the person or the presence of the one in possession." "Presence of the owner" means such a proximity to the owner as will enable the defendant when he takes the property to use or threaten the imminent use of force. See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations," supra, 447-48. In certain cases, property may be taken from both the person and the presence of the one in possession. Then the words "or both" should be added at this point.

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that "from his person or presence" did not require that the victim actually be aware of the taking: ". . . where the victim has been intimidated or placed in fear by use or threat of force . . . and the property is taken from an area sufficiently close and under his control that, but for the robber's intimidation or force he could have prevented the taking, the taking is from his "presence" under § 943.32(1); and this conclusion is not defeated by an unawareness of the taking as it occurs." 102 Wis.2d at 649.

8. "With intent to" is defined in § 939.23(4). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one part of the definition. It is the other alternative that changes from "believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

9. This is intended to be a summary of the necessary components of "intent to steal." See Wis JI-Criminal 1441, THEFT.

10. The bracketed material should be added if there is evidence that, for example, the defendant believed he was reclaiming his own property. Referred to as "right to recapture," "claim of right," or "self-help," this defensive matter tends to negate either the "property of another" or the "knew it was property of another" elements. The rule applies to armed robbery. Edwards v. State, 49 Wis.2d 105, 181 N.W.2d 383 (1970); Austin v. State, 86 Wis.2d 213, 271 N.W.2d 668 (1978).

The 1993 revision of this instruction substituted the bracketed material for the following phrase: ". . . knew he had no right to take it." The Committee concluded that the present version is a more accurate statement of the law.

The "right to recapture" is discussed in detail at Wis JI-Criminal 710, Law Note: RIGHT TO RECAPTURE.

11. This restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." "Forcibly" is defined in the text preceding footnotes 16 and 17.

12. See note 2, supra.

13. It is robbery if force is used to accomplish either the "carrying away" of the property or the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 6, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979).

The Committee concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case, election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, and Cheers v. State, cited in note 3, supra. As to jury unanimity generally, also see State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); compare United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

14. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th Edition, 1951).

15. It is robbery if force is used to accomplish either the "carrying away" of the property or the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979).

16. This instruction is drafted for cases involving the use or threat of use of a dangerous weapon and is intended to cover one of several options possible under the present version of the armed robbery statute.

Prior to 1980, § 943.32(2) applied to violations of sub. (1) of the statute committed "while armed with a dangerous weapon." The Wisconsin Supreme Court had interpreted the statute to require that the defendant actually possess something that qualified as a "dangerous weapon." In Dickenson v. State, 75 Wis.2d 47, 248 N.W.2d 447 (1977), an armed robbery conviction was reversed because there was no evidence that the object in the waistband on his trousers was a firearm or was an object of such size that it could be used as a bludgeon. Also see Davis v. State, 93 Wis.2d 319, 286 N.W.2d 570 (1980); Beamon v. State, 93 Wis.2d 215, 286 N.W.2d 592 (1980); and McKissick v. State, 78 Wis.2d 176, 254 N.W.2d 218 (1977).

Section 943.32(2) was amended by Chapter 114, Laws of 1979 (effective date: March 1, 1980), to replace "while armed" with "by use or threat of use of a dangerous weapon or any article used or fashioned in a manner to lead the victim reasonably to believe that it is a dangerous weapon." Several points should be noted relating to how the statute is implemented in the instructions for armed robbery.

First, even if the defendant has possession of a weapon, he must use it or threaten to use it before the statute is violated. In State v. Moriarty, 107 Wis.2d 622, 321 N.W.2d 324 (Ct. App. 1982), the court held that it is no longer sufficient for the state to prove that a defendant was merely armed; rather, it must be proved that the defendant actually used or threatened to use the weapon during the robbery.

Second, the "use" or "threat of use" alternatives do not appear to be conceptually distinct and neither election of one alternative nor jury agreement on which applies should be required. This is consistent with the analysis of the "use of force" and "threat of imminent use of force" in subsecs. (1)(a) and (b) of § 943.32. See cases discussed in note 3, supra. There is no reason to require the jury to decide, for example, whether the display of a gun is "use" or just a "threat to use" that weapon.

Third, there appear to be at least two different types of "threat to use a weapon or article" cases. One is where the defendant has something in his possession that looks like a weapon but actually is not. Wis JI-

Criminal 1480A is intended for this kind of case and treats it as "use or threat of use of an article used or fashioned in a manner to lead the victim reasonably to believe that it is a dangerous weapon." The other type of threat case occurs where there is a pure verbal threat to use a weapon, but no weapon or article is present. This instruction addresses that problem at footnote 10, below.

A case which might be handled under either approach is State v. Hopson, 122 Wis.2d 395, 362 N.W.2d 166 (Ct. App. 1984). Hopson had shoplifted several packages of luncheon meat, which he had stuffed in the waistband of his trousers. The store manager stopped him near the door and asked if he had forgotten to pay for something. Hopson put his hand under his shirt and said, "I got a gun. You better move." The manager stepped aside and later testified that he could not tell whether Hopson actually had a gun because the meat "caused a considerable bulge" under Hopson's shirt. The court of appeals concluded that Hopson's conduct violated the statute, emphasizing "that a victim who is threatened with a supposed weapon which is concealed is put in the same degree of fear and feels as strongly compelled to comply with the robber's demands as a victim who is threatened with a weapon which is openly displayed." 122 Wis.2d 395, 403. The court characterized this as the "subjective" view of armed robbery, as distinguished from the "objective" view, which requires that the robber actually be armed with a dangerous weapon. The court says that the legislature rejected the objective view by amending the statute in 1979 and "see[s] no reason to partially reinstate the 'objective' approach . . . by construing sec. 943.32(2) to require that the robber produce and display to the victim a dangerous-appearing article." 122 Wis.2d 395, 404. The court concluded that sub. (2), as amended by Chapter 114, Laws of 1979, "should be construed to focus upon the reasonable perception of the victim that he or she was in danger and not upon the defendant's possession or display of dangerous weapons or other dangerous-appearing articles." 122 Wis.2d 395, 401-02.

Hopson could be considered a pure "verbal threat" case and Wis JI-Criminal 1480 could be used. Or, the bulge in the trousers could be considered an "article" and Wis JI-Criminal 1480A could be used. In either case, the important fact would be whether the victim reasonably believed that the defendant was armed.

17. The Committee suggests using the part of the statutory definition that applies to the facts of the case. The definition in the instruction does not include all the alternatives provided in § 939.22(10), which, as amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 127, defines "dangerous weapon" as follows:

> "Dangerous weapon" means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded; any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm; any ligature or other instrumentality used on the throat, neck, nose, or mouth of another person to impede partially or completely, breathing or circulation of blood; any electric weapon as defined in § 941.295(4); or any other device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

See Wis JI-Criminal 910 for suggested instructions for all the statutory alternatives and a discussion of some of the substantive issues relating to "dangerous weapons."

Section 943.32(2) was amended by 1995 Wisconsin Act 288 (effective date: May 10, 1996) to refer not only to a dangerous weapon but also to "a device or container described under s. 941.26(4)(a)." The reference is to containers of oleoresin of capsicum, commonly referred to as "pepper spray." See note 1, supra.

18. This material should be added when the case involves a verbal threat to use a weapon, but no weapon or other "article" is actually present. If the case involves an "article" that the victim believed to be a weapon, use Wis JI-Criminal 1480A. Also see the discussion at note 16, supra.

This paragraph is intended to reflect the rule recognized in State v. Witkowski, 143 Wis.2d 216, 420 N.W.2d 420 (Ct. App. 1988). The facts were as follows:

> Sharon Plambeck, a bartender at the Lean-To Tavern in Portage, served drinks and a meal to Witkowski while he sat at the bar. He appeared to be intoxicated. When she gave him the check, he told her that "he wanted all the money out of the [cash] register and that he had a gun and don't be cute." Plambeck backed slowly down the bar to where two other patrons, Gordon and Micki Kluth, were seated. She wrote a note stating "Man is holding me up now" and handed it to Micki Kluth who left the bar to call the police. Witkowski then approached Gordon Kluth, stating that "he was having trouble holding up this tavern." The telephone rang and Plambeck answered it, telling the caller to call the police. At that moment, Witkowski took some cash lying on the bar in front of Gordon Kluth and grabbed Micki Kluth's purse. Gordon Kluth struck Witkowski, knocking him to the floor. Shortly thereafter, the police arrived and searched Witkowski. The search did not reveal a gun or any weapon.
> Plambeck testified that she felt her "life was threatened" when Witkowski told her he had a gun and wanted the money, and she backed away from him because she was afraid to turn her back on him. She described herself as "very scared and nervous, shaking all over." She stated on cross-examination, however, that she did not comply with Witkowski's demands and had no intention of doing so "unless he pulled a gun out." Gordon Kluth was unaware of Witkowski's statement about a gun until the incident was over.
> The court affirmed the conviction for armed robbery, holding that:
> We believe that a victim may be threatened with the use of a weapon within the letter and the spirit of sec. 943.32(2), Stats., by verbal threats alone. We hold, therefore, that if, under all the circumstances, the victim could reasonably believe the defendant's verbal representation that he or she was armed, that representation, standing alone, may be enough to meet the "threat of use of a dangerous weapon" requirement of sec. 943.32(2), regardless of whether the representation is accompanied by physical gesture or other visual evidence indicating the presence of a weapon.

Also see State v. Rittman, 2010 WI App 41, 324 Wis.2d 273, 781 N.W.2d 545, where the court found the evidence sufficient to support a conviction for armed robbery despite the fact that no weapon was present and the defendant did not say he had one – under all the circumstances the victim could have reasonably believed that the defendant was armed with a dangerous weapon. Rittman also discusses the difference between this offense – threat to use a dangerous weapon – and the offense addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1480A – use or threat of use of an article reasonably believed to be a dangerous weapon. 324 Wis.2d 273, 281, footnote 2.

19. "Reasonably believes" is defined by § 939.22(32) to mean "that the actor believes that a certain fact situation exists and such belief under the circumstances is reasonable even though erroneous."

1480A ARMED ROBBERY: BY USE OF AN ARTICLE THE VICTIM REASONABLY BELIEVES IS A DANGEROUS WEAPON[1] — § 943.32(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Armed robbery, as defined in § 943.32(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with the intent to steal and by use or threat of use of an article used or fashioned in a manner to lead the victim reasonably to believe that it is a dangerous weapon, takes property from the person or presence of the owner by [using force against the person of the owner with intent to overcome physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property] [or] [by threatening the imminent use of force against the person[2] of the owner with intent to compel the owner to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name) was the owner of property.[3]

   "Owner" means a person in possession of property.[4]

2. The defendant took and carried away[5] property from the person or from the presence[6] of (name) .

3. The defendant took the property with the intent to steal.

This requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[7] to take and carry away property of another without consent and that the defendant intended to deprive (name) permanently of possession of the property.

[It requires that the defendant knew that the property belonged to another and knew that the person did not consent to the taking of the property.][8]

4. The defendant acted forcibly.[9]

Forcibly means that the defendant [actually used force against (name) with the intent to overcome or prevent (his) (her) physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property[10]] [or] [threatened the imminent use of force against (name) [11] with the intent to compel (name) to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property. "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening"[12]].

5. At the time of the taking or carrying away,[13] the defendant used or threatened to use an article used or fashioned in a manner to lead (name) reasonably to believe[14] it was capable of producing death or great bodily harm.[15]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of armed robbery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1480A was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1988, 1990, 1994, and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in June 2015; it updated footnote 1.

1. This instruction is for a case where a robbery is alleged to have been committed "by use or threat of use of any article used or fashioned in a manner to lead the victim reasonably to believe that it is a dangerous weapon." This alternative to "use of a dangerous weapon" was added to the armed robbery statute in 1980. If the case involves "use or threat of use of a dangerous weapon," Wis JI-Criminal 1480 should be used.

This instruction is for cases where either or both of the alternative ways of committing robbery are submitted. Thus, the instruction is phrased in terms of "use of force" or "threat of imminent force." While election of one alternative or the other is preferable, in some cases election may not be possible. In those cases, submitting both alternatives is not error, and it is not essential for the jury to agree on one alternative as opposed to the other. Manson v. State, 101 Wis.2d 413, 304 N.W.2d 729 (1981). Cheers v. State, 102 Wis.2d 367, 306 N.W.2d 676 (1981). The instruction tries to tie the two alternatives together by relating them to the concept of acting "forcibly." See note 9, below.

In State v. Rittman, 2010 WI App 41, 324 Wis.2d 273, 781 N.W.2d 545, discusses the difference between this offense – use or threat of use of an article reasonably believed to be a dangerous weapon – and the offense addressed by Wis JI-Criminal 1480A – threat to use a dangerous weapon. 324 Wis.2d 273, 281, footnote 2, citing this footnote with apparent approval.

2. This instruction is drafted for threats against the person of the one in possession of the property. The statute also prohibits threats against others who are present. In cases where threats are against another, the introductory paragraph and the fourth element of the instruction will have to be modified to make it clear that force is threatened against someone else to compel the person in possession of the property to submit to the taking or carrying away.

3. "Property" for the purposes of robbery is the same as "property" for the purposes of theft; which is defined in § 943.20(2)(a). See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations In Wisconsin – Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 450 (1961). The value of the property is immaterial.

4. "The person who has possession of the property" is the definition of owner provided in § 943.32(3).

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that a person qualifies as an "owner" if his possession of the property is "actual or constructive," citing § 971.33. In Mosely, all employees of a restaurant were held to be "owners" of the restaurant's money kept in an office desk since each had dominion and control over it. As to jewelry and a purse on an office shelf, only the person to whom they actually belonged was an "owner," since only she had any control over or interest in the property.

5. On several occasions, Wisconsin appellate courts have held that "asportation" or "carrying away" is required for a taking to constitute robbery. In State v. Johnson, 207 Wis.2d. 240, N.W.2d (1997), the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the reversal of an armed robbery conviction on the ground that there was no "asportation":

> We hold that a person may not be convicted of armed robbery when the property at issue is an automobile and the person does not move the automobile. 207 Wis.2d. 240, 249.

Johnson declined to overrule prior decisions establishing the asportation requirement. In State v. Moore, 55 Wis.2d 1, 197 N.W.2d 820 (l972), the court first interpreted the armed robbery statute to require asportation. That holding came in the context of justifying the conclusion that theft from person was a lesser included offense of robbery. Three court of appeals decisions have relied on Moore. In State v. Dauer, 174 Wis.2d 418, 497 N.W.2d 766 (Ct. App. 1993), the court relied on the asportation requirement to support its conclusion that convictions for robbery and extortion based on the same conduct were not barred by double jeopardy principles. In Ryan v. State, 95 Wis.2d 83, 289 N.W.2d 349 (Ct. App. 1980), the court found the evidence sufficient to support asportation where the defendant abandoned the stolen purse shortly after taking it from the victim. And in State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979), the court relied on the asportation element to support a conclusion that a robbery continued during the "carrying away" because it was at that point that a weapon was used. See note 8, below.

6. When there is a dispute on the facts as to precisely from where the property was taken – the person or the presence of the one in possession – then add this sentence: "It is immaterial whether the property is taken from the person or the presence of the one in possession." "Presence of the owner" means such a proximity to the owner as will enable the defendant when he takes the property to use or threaten the imminent use of force. See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations," supra, 447-48. In certain cases, property may be taken from both the person and the presence of the one in possession. Then the words "or both" should be added at this point.

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that "from his person or presence" did not require that the victim actually be aware of the taking: ". . . where the victim has been intimidated or placed in fear by use or threat of force . . . and the property is taken from an area sufficiently close and under his control that, but for the robber's intimidation or force he could have prevented the taking, the taking is from his "presence" under § 943.32(1); and this conclusion is not defeated by an unawareness of the taking as it occurs." 102 Wis.2d at 649.

7. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed, effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one part of the definition. It is the other alternative that changes from "believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

8. The bracketed material should be added if there is evidence that, for example, the defendant believed he was reclaiming his own property. Referred to as "right to recapture," "claim of right," or "self-help," this defensive matter tends to negate either the "property of another" or the "knew it was property of another" elements. The rule applies to robbery. Edwards v. State, 49 Wis.2d 105, 181 N.W.2d 383 (1970); Austin v. State, 86 Wis.2d 213, 271 N.W.2d 668 (1978).

The "right to recapture" is discussed in detail at Wis JI-Criminal 710, Law Note: Right To Recapture.

9. This paragraph restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat of imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." The Committee concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the taking of the property and the defendant's use of force. The Committee concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case, election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, and Cheers v. State, cited in note 1, supra. As to jury unanimity generally, also see State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); compare United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

10. It is robbery if force is used to accomplish the "carrying away" of the property as well as the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979).

11. See note 2, supra.

In State v. Johnson, 231 Wis.2d 58, 604 N.W.2d 902 (Ct. App. 1999), the court held that the statute does not require express threats of bodily harm – "the element is met 'if the taking of the property [is] attended with such circumstances of terror, or such threatening by menace, word, or gesture as in common experience is likely to create an apprehension of danger and induce a [person] to part with property for [his or her] safety.'" 231 Wis.2d 58, 69, citing Washington v. Collinsworth, 966 F.2d 905, 907 (Wash. Ct. App. 1997).

12. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th Edition, 1951).

13. It is robbery if force is used to accomplish the "carrying away" of the property as well as the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979).

14. "Reasonably believes" is defined by § 939.22(32) to mean "that the actor believes that a certain fact situation exists and such belief under the circumstances is reasonable even though erroneous."

15. The instruction recommends using the general part of the statutory definition of "dangerous weapon" in § 939.22(10) – anything which is capable of producing death or great bodily harm. If one of the specific items listed in the definition is alleged, that specific term should be used. Section 939.22(14) reads as follows, as amended by 2007 Wisconsin Act 127:

> "Dangerous weapon" means any firearm, whether loaded or unloaded; any device designed as a weapon and capable of producing death or great bodily harm; any ligature or other instrumentality used on the throat, neck, nose, or mouth of another person to impede partially or completely, breathing or circulation of blood; any electric weapon as defined in § 941.295(4); or any other device or instrumentality which, in the manner it is used or intended to be used, is calculated or likely to produce death or great bodily harm.

1481 RECEIVING STOLEN PROPERTY — § 943.34

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Receiving stolen property, as defined in § 943.34 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly or intentionally receives or conceals stolen property.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (knowingly) (intentionally) (received) (concealed)[1] the (describe property) .

   ["Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose to (receive) (conceal) the property.][2]

   ["Knowingly" requires that the defendant believed (he) (she) (received) (concealed) the property.][3]

   GIVE ONE OR BOTH OF THE FOLLOWING INSTRUCTIONS IN BRACKETS AS REQUIRED BY THE EVIDENCE:[4]

   ["To receive" means to acquire possession or control over the property.][5]

   ["To conceal" means to hide the property or to do something else which prevents or makes more difficult the discovery of the property.][6]

2. The (describe property) was stolen property.[7]

Property is stolen property when it has intentionally been taken from the owner without consent and with the intent to deprive the owner of its possession permanently.[8]

3. When the property was (received) (concealed), the defendant knew that it was stolen property.[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[10]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED BASED ON THE PROPERTY BEING A FIREARM, ADD THE FOLLOWING.[11]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Was the property a firearm?"

A firearm is a weapon that acts by force of gunpowder.[12]

Answer: "yes" or "no."]

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, BASED ON THE VALUE OF THE PROPERTY, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE.

ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[13]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the property more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the property more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the market value of the property or the replacement cost, whichever is less.[14] Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1481 was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1981, 1989, 1991, and 2003. The 2003 revision adopted a new format and made nonsubstantive changes in the text and reflected changes in the amount determining the penalty made by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2012; it reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 99.

2011 Wisconsin Act 99 [effective date: December 21, 2011] amended § 943.34(1) to refer to "knowingly or intentionally" receiving stolen property and amended § 943.34(1)(bm) to apply the Class H felony penalty to receiving a stolen firearm as well as to property whose value exceeds $5,000.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. See footnote 10, below.

The purpose of the 1989 revision was to reflect a change made in § 943.34 by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332. Effective July 1, 1989, § 943.34 is amended to eliminate receipt of stolen property from a child as a fact increasing the penalty for this offense. A separate statute now addresses that offense. See § 948.62 and Wis JI-Criminal 2180.

1. The Committee recommends that either "receives" or "conceals" be used in the instruction where the evidence makes that election possible. There is no authority specific to this statute requiring election of one alternative. However, cases interpreting the theft statute, § 943.20, address a closely comparable situation and hold that the statute identifies different ways of committing the offense: by taking and carrying way, or by using, by transferring, by concealing, or by retaining possession of property of another. The alternatives may not be charged in the disjunctive, Jackson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 1, 284 N.W.2d 685 (Ct. App. 1979); the jury must unanimously agree on the manner in which the statute was violated, State v. Seymour, 183 Wis.2d 682, 515 N.W.2d 874 (1994). See Wis JI-Criminal 517 for an instruction on jury agreement.

2. "Intentionally" is defined in § 939.23(3). The definition changed effective January 1, 1989, though both the old and new version have "mental purpose" as one definition of "intentionally." It is the other alternative that changed from "reasonably believes his act, if successful, will cause that result" to "is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. The Committee concluded that the "mental purpose" part of the definition is most likely to apply in the context of this offense.

3. This was added to the instruction as part of the 2012 revision because "knowingly" was added to § 943.34 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 99. See § 939.23(2): "'Know' requires only that the actor believes that the specified fact exists." Because "intentionally" already requires knowledge (see § 939.23(3)), the purpose of the change is not apparent to the Committee.

4. See note 1, supra.

5. Control over the property constitutes receipt within the meaning of the Code. 2 Wharton Criminal Law and Procedure (Anderson ed. 1957) § 569, pp. 287-88; Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin—Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 454 (1961).

6. The 2002 revision changed this definition to make it more understandable; no change in meaning was intended. As revised, the definition conforms to the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 2168 for violations of § 948.31(3)(a) involving concealing a child from a parent. That definition was termed "correct" in State v. Inglin, 224 Wis.2d 764, 592 N.W.2d 666 (Ct. App. 1999).

7. A prior theft or other misappropriation in violation of the Criminal Code is an essential element of the crime. Accordingly, the state must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that the property was stolen property. State v. Godsey, 272 Wis. 406, 75 N.W.2d 572 (1956). The term "stolen" is not defined in the Criminal Code. Necessarily, the term includes all forms of theft covered by § 943.20(1) of the Criminal Code. See note 8, below.

8. The definition of "stolen property" provided in the instruction is appropriate for the usual case where the property was obtained by theft under § 943.20(1)(a). The standard instruction must be modified if the property was obtained by fraudulent representation or other type of criminal misappropriation.

9. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used in a statute, it requires "knowledge of those facts which are necessary to make the conduct criminal and which are set forth after the word 'intentionally'." Also see, State v. Godsey, 272 Wis. 406, 75 N.W.2d 572 (1956); Oosterwyk v. State, 242 Wis. 398, 8 N.W.2d 346 (1943); Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1956); Meath v. State, 174 Wis. 80, 82, 83, 182 N.W. 334 (1921).

10. Evidence that the defendant was in "unexplained possession of recently stolen property" will often be offered as evidence tending to prove knowledge that the property was stolen. Caution should be exercised in instructing the jury on this issue, see Wis JI-Criminal 173, Circumstantial Evidence – Unexplained Possession of Recently Stolen Property, and the Comment to that instruction.

11. 2011 Wisconsin Act 99 [effective date December 21, 2011] amended § 943.34(1)(bm) to provide that a violation of the statute is a Class H felony "if the property is a firearm." Formerly, the Class H felony penalty applied only if the value of the property exceeded $5,000. The Committee has concluded that addressing these penalty-increasing facts by submitting a special question is the most efficient approach.

12. Harris v. Cameron, 81 Wis. 239, 51 N.W. 437 (1892).

13. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. The revised penalties are as follows:

- if the value of the property does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted. The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

14. This is based on the definition provided in § 943.20(2)(d). See note 9, Wis JI-Criminal 1441.

1485 FRAUDULENT WRITINGS: FALSIFYING A CORPORATE RECORD — § 943.39(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection 943.39(1) of the Wisconsin Criminal Code is violated by (a director) (an officer) (a manager) (an agent) (an employee) of a (corporation) (limited liability company) who, with intent to injure or defraud, CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING[1]

[falsifies a (record) (account) (document) belonging to the (corporation) (limited liability company) by (alteration) (false entry) (omission).]

[(makes) (circulates) (publishes) a written statement regarding the (corporation) (limited liability company) which the defendant knew was false].

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was (a director) (an officer) (a manager) (an agent) (an employee) of a (corporation) (limited liability company).[2]
2. The defendant CHOOSE ONE OF THE FOLLOWING:

[falsified any (record) (account) (document) belonging to the (corporation) (limited liability company). An item may be falsified by altering it, by making a false entry on it, or by omitting something that should be included.]

[(made) (circulated) (published) a written statement regarding the (corporation) (limited liability company) which the defendant knew was false].

3. The defendant acted with intent to (injure) (defraud).[3]

["Intent to injure" means that the defendant intended to cause harm of any kind.]

["Intent to defraud" means that the defendant intended to obtain property that (he) (she) was not entitled to receive.][4]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1485 was originally published in 2001. This revision updated footnote 3 and was approved by the Committee in October 2003.

This instruction is drafted for violations of sub. (1) of § 943.39. For violations of sub. (2) of that statute, see Wis JI-Criminal 1486, Fraudulent Writings: Obtaining A Signature By Means of Deceit. There is no uniform instruction for violations of § 943.39(3), which prohibits making a false written statement with knowledge that it is false and with intent that it shall ultimately appear to have been signed under oath.

1. One of the two alternatives in brackets should be selected. They state the two different ways of violating § 943.39(1).

2. One of the two alternatives in brackets should be selected. They paraphrase the two different ways of violating § 943.39(1).

3. The offense is defined as engaging in one of the prohibited acts "with intent to injure or defraud." The instruction puts the alternative intents in parentheses on the assumption that one or the other is likely to be supported by the evidence. However, the Committee concluded that it would be permissible to instruct on both types of intent, if supported by the evidence, and that jury agreement on the intent involved would not be required. In State v. Norman, 2003 WI 72, 262 Wis.2d 506, 664 N.W.2d 97, the Wisconsin Supreme Court noted that the Committee's conclusion does not "provide persuasive authority" on the jury agreement issue because it did not reflect a complete analysis. Id., at footnote 51. The proper method for a complete analysis is set forth in Norman at ¶¶ 59-64. Also see Wis JI-Criminal 517, Jury Agreement . . . , which collects the Wisconsin appellate decisions which have addressed the issue under specific statutes.

4. The definition of "intent to defraud" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1491, Forgery (By Making Or Altering A Check). See footnote 5 in that instruction, indicating that intent to defraud is "a term whose meaning varies according to the context in which it is used."

1486 FRAUDULENT WRITINGS: OBTAINING A SIGNATURE BY MEANS OF DECEIT — § 943.39(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Subsection 943.39(2) of the Wisconsin Criminal Code is violated by one who, with intent to injure or defraud, and by means of deceit, obtains a signature to a writing by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained a signature to a writing by means of deceit.

   ["By means of deceit" requires that the defendant obtained a signature by (making a false statement) (giving a false impression).][2]

2. The writing was one by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred.[3]

3. The defendant acted with intent to (injure) (defraud).[4]

   ["Intent to injure" means that the defendant intended to cause harm of any kind.]

   ["Intent to defraud" means that the defendant intended to obtain property that (he) (she) was not entitled to receive.][5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1486 was approved by the Committee in October 2000.

This instruction is drafted for violations of sub. (2) of § 943.39. For violations of sub. (1) of that statute, see Wis JI-Criminal 1485, Fraudulent Writings: Falsifying a Corporate Record. There is no uniform instruction for violations of § 943.39(3), which prohibits making a false written statement with knowledge that it is false and with intent that it shall ultimately appear to have been signed under oath.

1. The instruction uses the phrase "writing by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred" in place of the statute's "writing which is the subject of forgery under s. 943.38(1)." The phrase used is the most general part of the definition of writings that can be the subject of forgery under § 943.38(1). The other options: "any writing commonly relied upon in business or commercial transactions as evidence of debt or property rights" [sub. (1)(a)]; "a public record or a certified or authenticated copy thereof" [sub. (1)(b)]; "an official authentication or certification of a copy of a public record" [sub. (1)(c)]; and "an official return or certificate entitled to be received as evidence of its contents" [sub. (1)(d)].

2. The definition of "by means of deceit" was developed by the Committee after research indicated that there is no direct Wisconsin authority interpreting the term as used in § 943.39(2). The statute was created in the 1956 Criminal Code revision, recodifying the offense previously found in § 343.25. The revision substituted "by means of deceit" for "by privy or false token" that formerly appeared in § 343.25.

The term "deceit" is used in at least one other Criminal Code statute – § 940.31(1)(c), Kidnapping by deceit. State v. Dalton, 98 Wis.2d 725, 298 N.W.2d 398 (Ct. App. 1980). Dalton appealed his conviction, claiming that he could not be convicted absent proof of express or implied misrepresentations. The court rejected his argument, holding that the use of "deceit," without further statutory definition show legislative intent to avoid limiting it to express or implied misrepresentations. Rather, the legislature intended to proscribe "wily and cunning stratagems that are contrived to delude the victim and conceal the violator's intent to effectuate the crime" of kidnapping. 98 Wis.2d 725, 741.

At common law, "deceit" was generally used as an equivalent of "fraud" and typically had the following elements: a false representation; made with intent to induce another to act; relied on by another person; to the damage of that person. In general, see Wis JI-Civil 2401 and cases cited therein. Also see 37 Am.Jur.2d Fraud and Deceit (1968). As to the false representation aspect, the common law typically included not only false statements but also the suppression of facts by one who had a duty to disclose them. The elements of the common law concept overlap with or are covered by other elements of the crime defined in § 943.39(2): "made with intent to induce another to act" is covered by the intent to injure or defraud element; "relied on by another person" is covered by the requirement that a signature be obtained "by means of" deceit; "to the damage of that person" is covered by the statute's recognition that obtaining a signature on the required type of document is criminal conduct.

This leaves little more than using a false representation or other deceptive practice. The Committee concluded the two alternatives in parentheses adequately cover the likely application of "by means of deceit." Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, 2d Edition (Oxford University Press 1995), defines deceit as the "act of giving a false impression."

3. The instruction uses the phrase "writing by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred" in place of the statute's "writing which is the subject of forgery under s. 943.38(1)." The phrase used is the most general part of the definition of writings that can be the subject of forgery under § 943.38(1). The other options are set forth in note 1, supra.

This element does not require proof of a forgery; it requires only that the writing be one which, if falsely made, could be the basis for a forgery prosecution under § 943.38(1). State v. Weister, 125 Wis.2d 54, 58, 370 N.W.2d 278 (Ct. App. 1985). Weister involved obtaining a Shopko employee's signature on refund slips relating to shoplifted merchandise.

4. The offense is defined as engaging in one of the prohibited acts "with intent to injure or defraud." The instruction puts the alternative intents in parentheses on the assumption that one or the other is likely to apply. However, the Committee concluded that it would be permissible to instruct on both types of intent and that jury agreement on the intent involved would not be required. The Wisconsin Supreme Court has reached that conclusion with offenses under § 948.07, Child enticement. State v. Derango, 2000 WI 89, 236 Wis.2d 721, 613 N.W.2d 833.

5. The definition of "intent to defraud" is based on the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1491, Forgery (By Making Or Altering A Check). See footnote 5 in that instruction, indicating that intent to defraud is "a term whose meaning varies according to the context in which it is used."

1488 POSSESSION OF PROPERTY WITH ALTERED IDENTIFICATION MARKS — § 943.37(3)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of property with altered identification marks, as defined in § 943.37(3) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who possesses any personal property with knowledge that the manufacturer's identification number has been removed or altered and with intent to prevent the identification of the property.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed personal property.[1]

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had the property under (his) (her) actual physical control.[3]

2. The defendant possessed personal property on which the manufacturer's identification number had been removed or altered.

3. The defendant knew[4] that the manufacturer's identification number had been removed or altered.[5]

4. The defendant intended[6] to prevent the identification of the property.

[ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THERE IS EVIDENCE THAT THE DEFENDANT POSSESSED TWO OR MORE SIMILAR ITEMS OF PERSONAL PROPERTY WITH THE MANUFACTURER'S IDENTIFICATION NUMBER ALTERED OR REMOVED:[7]]

[Evidence has been received that the defendant possessed similar[8] items of personal property with the manufacturer's identification number altered or removed. If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant did possess similar items with the manufacturer's identification numbers altered or removed, you may find from that fact alone that the defendant knew that the numbers had been altered or removed and that he intended to prevent the identification of the property. But you are not required to do so. You are the sole judges of the facts, and you must not find that the defendant knew the identification numbers had been altered or removed or that the defendant intended to prevent the identification of the property unless you are so satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt from all the evidence in the case.]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent or knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent or knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1488 was originally published in 1990. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Section 943.37 has four subsections. This instruction is drafted for one of the two offenses defined in subsec. (3), which the Committee concluded was likely to be the most common type of offense. The crime is a Class A misdemeanor.

1. The Committee does not believe it is necessary to define "personal property" for the jury. A definition of the term is provided in § 990.01(27):

> "Personal property" includes money, goods, chattels, things in action, evidences of debt and energy.

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis.2d 414, 418, 212 N.W.2d 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains additional optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another.

4. Section 939.23(2) provides that "know" requires only that the defendant believes that the specified fact exists.

5. Section 943.37(3) provides a "prima facie evidence" provision relating to the knowledge element. See the text of the instruction at note 7, below.

6. If further definition of "intent" is necessary, defining intent as "mental purpose" is most likely to be accurate in the context of this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for complete discussion of the definition of "with intent to" under § 939.23(4).

7. Section 943.37(3) provides that "[p]ossession of two or more similar items of personal property with the manufacturer's identification number altered or removed is prima facie evidence of knowledge of the alteration or removal and of an intent to prevent identification of the property." The bracketed paragraph which follows in the instruction attempts to implement this provision in the manner required by § 903.03 of the Wis. Rules of Evidence, which applies to instructions on presumptions, inferences, and prima facie cases. See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for an explanation of the Committee's approach to these provisions. Especially note the two cautions discussed in the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 225: (1) the instruction should not be given unless the evidence, as a whole, would allow the jury to be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the ultimate fact (here, knowledge and intent) exists; and (2) no instruction should be given in a particular case unless, based on the facts of that case, the presumed fact (here, knowledge and intent) is "more likely than not" to follow from the basic fact (here, possession of two or more similar items with identification numbers altered or removed).

The prima facie evidence provision is essentially the same as one found in the 1953 Draft of the Criminal Code in § 343.31. The comment to that section described its purpose as follows:

> In subsection (2) possession of 2 or more similar items of personal property with the identification marks altered or removed is prima facie evidence of knowledge that this has been done and of an intent to prevent identification of the property. While a person may innocently have a refrigerator in his home with the serial number removed, there is an inference that a car dealer, who has a number of cars with the motor numbers filed off, is selling stolen cars.
> 1953 Legislative Council Report on the Criminal Code, p. 129.

8. In State v. Hamilton, 146 Wis.2d 426, 432 N.W.2d 108 (Ct. App. 1988), the court found that the word "similar" in § 943.37(3) "can be understood in different ways by reasonable people and that the statute is therefore ambiguous." The court then went on to define it: ". . . within the context of sec. 943.37(3), items must be comparable, substantially alike or capable of standing in the place of the other before they are similar." 146 Wis.2d 426, 433.

1491 FORGERY (BY MAKING OR ALTERING A CHECK) — § 943.38(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Forgery, as defined in § 943.38(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who with intent to defraud falsely makes or alters a writing or object whereby legal rights or obligations are created or transferred so that it purports to have been made (by another) (at another time) (with different provisions) (by authority of one who did not give such authority).

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The document in this case was a writing by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred.[1] A bank check is such a writing.[2]
2. The defendant falsely [(made) (altered)] [(the check) (an endorsement on the check).][3]

   The (check) (endorsement) must have been falsely (made) (altered) to appear to have been made (by another person) (at another time) (with different terms) (by authority of someone who did not give such authority).[4]

3. The defendant falsely [(made) (altered)] [(a check) (an endorsement)] with intent to defraud.

"Intent to defraud" means that the defendant had the purpose to obtain property that (he) (she) was not entitled to receive.[5]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of forgery have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal was originally published in 1966 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Under § 943.38(1) and (2), three forms of conduct are made felonies: the forging of a writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1491), the uttering of a forged writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1492), and the possession of a forged writing or object with intent to utter (Wis JI-Criminal 1493). Though these forms of conduct are distinct, they constitute only one offense, so that the person who both forges and utters an instrument is punishable for but one offense. State v. Nichols, 7 Wis.2d 126, 95 N.W.2d 765 (1959), cited in Little v. State, 85 Wis.2d 558, 562, 271 N.W.2d 105 (1978).

While the forgery statute and the statute defining credit card crimes (§ 943.41) overlap, they are not identical and have different elements. The existence of the credit card crime statute does not impliedly repeal the forgery statute nor does it deny equal protection to those who are charged with forgery for writing another's name on a credit card slip. Mack v. State, 93 Wis.2d 287, 286 N.W.2d 563 (1980).

A factual basis for guilty pleas to charges of forgery under § 943.38(1) was provided by evidence that the defendant opened checking accounts under a false name and issued worthless checks under that false name. State v. Mata, 2001 WI App 184, 247 Wis.2d 1, 632 N.W.2d 872.

1. The instruction is drafted for cases involving a "writing" (and is further limited to "checks," see note 2). But the forgery statute applies to a variety of items, defined in § 943.38(1)(a) as follows:

> A writing or object whereby legal rights or obligations are created, terminated or transferred, or any writing commonly relied upon in business or commercial transactions as evidence of debt or property rights.

Other public records and copies or authentications of public records are also included, see subsecs. (1)(b)-(d). This approach was intended to adopt a functional definition of what instruments could be forged, replacing a detailed list of writings in the original forgery statute, sec. 343.56, 1953 Stats. State v. Davis, 105 Wis.2d 690, 694-95, 314 N.W.2d 907 (Ct. App. 1981). Davis held that a receipt evidencing payment for a magazine subscription is a "writing" under the current statute. While the writing must be one that is commonly relied upon in business, forgery does not require that any specific person rely on the genuineness of the writing. Davis, 105 Wis.2d 690, 698.

2. Since bank checks are the writings used in most forgery cases, the rest of the uniform instruction uses only the term "check." If the offense involved a different kind of writing or an "object," the Committee suggests naming the writing or object and using that name whenever "check" appears in the instruction. Whether a particular writing or object is one by which "legal rights or obligations are created or transferred" is a question of fact for the jury to determine. Where the law establishes that a particular writing or object has that effect, it is permissible to communicate that legal rule to the jury. With regard to the definition of "check" and other instruments, see § 403.104.

State v. Perry, 215 Wis.2d 690, 631 N.W.2d 651 (1997), held that "Transchecks" used by truckers for unexpected expenses are writings covered by the forgery statute.

3. A forged endorsement of a check constitutes forgery. 37 C.J.S. Forgery, § 34. Federal forgery statutes referring to falsely making or altering any writing have been interpreted as covering the forgery of an endorsement. See, for example, United States v. Henderson, 298 F.2d 522 (7th Cir. 1962), citing Prussian v. United States, 282 U.S. 675 (1931).

4. The second element combines what might be separated into two elements: the requirement that the writing be falsely made or altered and the requirement that the altered writing purport to have been made by another or with different terms, etc. In the Committee's judgment, this is a single concept. The alternatives following "purports" describe specifically the necessary effects of the false making or altering. This analysis is supported by the legislative history. What is now § 943.38 was drafted as part of the 1950 and 1953 revisions of the Criminal Code. The 1950 draft did not include the word "falsely," explaining that the term "false making"

> . . . is not used here because it raises the problem of what is a false making. Instead the subsection describes just what effect the making or alteration must have in order to be a forgery. The writing must be made or altered so that it purports to have been made by another, at another time, with different terms, or by authority of one who did not give such authority.

1950 Report on the Criminal Code, p. 105.

The 1953 draft used the same construction, but "falsely" was added before the statute was enacted. Thus, "falsely" must be retained as part of the definition of the offense but in the Committee's judgment should be defined in terms of the more specific ways in which it must affect the document.

Examples of the kinds of conduct covered are given in the Volume V, 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, p. 131 (Wis. Legislative Council, February 1953).

> Signing a check with another's name (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made by another); raising a check (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made with different terms); filling in blanks over the signature of another either without authority or with unauthorized terms (an example of making a writing appearing to have been made by authority of one who did not give such authority).

"Falsely made" does not apply to writing someone else's name as the payer on a postal money order. "Wisconsin requires that a false making must relate to the genuineness of execution of a document, not to the genuineness of its contents." State v. Entringer, 2001 WI App 157, 246 Wis.2d 851, 631 N.W.2d 651.

5. "Intent to defraud" is a term whose meaning varies according to the context in which it is used. 1953 Report on the Criminal Code, page 130, citing United States v. Cohn, 270 U.S. 330 (1925). The Committee concluded that the most understandable explanation of "intent to defraud" in the context of the typical forgery case is "the purpose to obtain property he or she was not entitled to receive." However, the concept is substantially broader, as explained in the 1953 Report:

> In the context of this section, "intent to defraud" means an intent either to obtain property from another or to cause him to do some act or refrain from some act in reliance on the writing or object being genuine. For example, if someone signs another's name to a nomination petition intending that the officials believe it is a genuine one and count it in the number necessary to nominate a candidate, he does not intend to steal from the officials; but there would be no question that he intended that they be deceived and act on that signature.

In defining intent to defraud solely in terms of "purpose," the instruction uses only one of the two alternative definitions of "intent" provided in § 939.23(4). The other alternative, "or is aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result" could be used if raised by the facts of a particular case. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for further discussion of the definition of intent.

The sufficiency of the evidence on intent to defraud is discussed in State v. Christopherson, 36 Wis.2d 574, 153 N.W.2d 631 (1967).

1492 UTTERING A FORGED WRITING (CHECK) — § 943.38(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Uttering a forged writing, defined in § 943.38(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who utters as genuine a forged writing or object by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred, knowing that the writing or object was falsely made or altered.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The document in this case was a writing[1] by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred.

   (A bank check) (An endorsement on a bank check) is such a writing.[2]

2. The (check) (endorsement) was forged, that is, falsely (made) (altered).

   The check must have been falsely (made) (altered) to appear to have been made (by another person) (at another time) (with different terms) (by authority of someone who really did not give such authority).[3]

3. The (check) (endorsement) was uttered as genuine by the defendant.

"To utter (a check) (an endorsement) as genuine" simply means that the check is presented for payment (or cashed) with the representation that the (check) (endorsement) is genuine.[4]

4. The defendant knew the (check) (endorsement) was falsely (made) (altered) at the time it was presented.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of uttering a forged writing have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1492 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985 and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Under § 943.38(1) and (2), three forms of conduct are made felonies: the forging of a writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1491), the possession of a forged writing or object with intent to utter (Wis JI-Criminal 1493), and the uttering of a forged writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1492). Though these forms of conduct are distinct, they constitute only one offense, so that the person who both forges and utters an instrument is punishable for but one offense. State v. Nichols, 7 Wis.2d 126, 95 N.W.2d 765 (1959), cited in Little v. State, 85 Wis.2d 558, 562, 271 N.W.2d 105 (1978).

1. The instruction has been drafted using "writing" only. If the offense involved an "object," the Committee suggests naming the object and using that name in the instruction in place of "writing" and "check."

2. Since bank checks are the writings used in most forgery cases, the rest of the uniform instruction uses only the term "check." If the offense involved a different kind of writing or an "object," the Committee suggests naming the writing or object and using that name whenever "check" appears in the instruction. Whether a particular writing or object is one by which "legal rights or obligations are created or transferred" is a question of fact for the jury to determine. Where the law establishes that a particular writing or object has that effect, it is permissible to communicate that legal rule to the jury. With regard to the definition of "check" and other instruments, see § 403.104.

State v. Perry, 215 Wis.2d 690, 631 N.W.2d 651 (1997), held that "Transchecks" used by truckers for unexpected expenses are writings covered by the forgery statute.

3. Examples of the kinds of conduct covered are given in the Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 131 (February 1953):

> Signing a check with another's name (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made by another); raising a check (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made with different terms); filling in blanks over the signature of another either without authority or with unauthorized terms (an example of making a writing appearing to have been made by authority of one who did not give such authority).

The fact that the writing is nonnegotiable is immaterial. The absence of the maker's signature may mean the check is not a negotiable instrument, but presenting such a check for payment may constitute uttering a forged writing. See State v. Machon, 112 Wis.2d 47, 331 N.W.2d 665 (Ct. App. 1983).

"Falsely made" does not apply to writing someone else's name as the payer on a postal money order. "Wisconsin requires that a false making must relate to the genuineness of execution of a document, not to the genuineness of its contents." State v. Entringer, 2001 WI App 157, 246 Wis.2d 851, 631 N.W.2d 651.

4. "The virtually universal rule is that 'a forged instrument is uttered when it is offered as genuine by words or conduct indicating that it is genuine, without regard to whether it is accepted.' 2 Wharton's Criminal Law and Procedure, § 650, p. 441 (1957)." Little v. State, 85 Wis.2d 558, 564, 271 N.W.2d 105 (1978).

Depositing a forged check via an automated teller machine is "uttering," since it "introduced the forged check into the stream of financial commerce." State v. Tolliver, 149 Wis.2d 166, 440 N.W.2d 571 (Ct. App. 1989).

5. The Committee concluded that "intent to defraud" is not a statutorily-required element for a violation of sec. 943.38(2). Knowledge that the writing is forged and uttering it (or possessing it with intent to utter) is all that is required. The clearest support for this conclusion is the statutory language itself: "intent to defraud" appears in subsecs. (1) and (3), but not in (2). This difference between the subsections appears to be intentional: the parallel section in the 1953 draft of the proposed Criminal Code had "intent to defraud" as an element; as enacted in 1955, that element had been eliminated and the statute read essentially as it does today. (The 1953 version is found in the 1953 Report On The Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, 1953; the Code was enacted as Chapter 696, Laws of 1955.)

The interpretation in the instruction is consistent with a policy of penalizing those who introduce forged writings into the stream of commerce, which the Committee concluded is the likely purpose of sec. 943.38(2).

1493 POSSESSION OF A FORGED WRITING (CHECK) WITH INTENT TO UTTER — § 943.38(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Possession of a forged writing with intent to utter, as defined in § 943.38(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who possesses a writing or object by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred with intent to utter it as false or as genuine with knowledge that the writing or object has been falsely made or altered.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant possessed a writing.[1]

   "Possessed" means that the defendant knowingly[2] had actual physical control[3] of the writing.

2. The writing was one by which legal rights or obligations are created or transferred.

   (A bank check) (An endorsement on a bank check) is such a writing.[4]

3. The writing was falsely (made) (altered).

The (check) (endorsement) must have been falsely (made) (altered) to appear to have been made (by another person) (at another time) (with different terms) (by authority of someone who really did not give such authority).[5]

4. The defendant knew the writing was falsely (made) (altered).[6]

5. The defendant intended to utter the writing.

(It is immaterial whether the defendant intended to utter the writing as genuine or as false.)[7]

"To utter" simply means to (present it for payment)[8] (transfer it to another).[9]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent or knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1493 was originally published in 1980 and revised in 1985, 1987, and 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in April 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Under § 943.38(1) and (2), three forms of conduct are made felonies: the forging of a writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1491), the possession of a forged writing or object with intent to utter (Wis JI-Criminal 1493), and the uttering of a forged writing or object (Wis JI-Criminal 1492). Though these forms of conduct are distinct, they constitute only one offense, so that the person who both forges and utters an instrument is punishable for but one offense. State v. Nichols, 7 Wis.2d 126, 95 N.W.2d 765 (1959), cited in Little v. State, 85 Wis.2d 558, 562, 271 N.W.2d 105 (1978).

1. The instruction has been drafted using "writing" only. If the offense involved an "object," the Committee suggests naming the object and using that name in the instruction in place of "writing" and "check."

2. Inherent in the legal definition of "possession" is the concept of knowing or conscious possession. See Schwartz v. State, 192 Wis. 414, 418, 212 N.W. 664 (1927); Doscher v. State, 194 Wis. 67, 69, 214 N.W. 359 (1927).

3. The definition of "possess" is that found in Wis JI-Criminal 920 and requires "actual physical control." That instruction also contains the following optional paragraphs for use where the object is not in the physical possession of the defendant or where possession is shared with another:

> [An item is (also) in a person's possession if it is in an area over which the person has control and the person intends to exercise control over the item.]
> [It is not required that a person own an item in order to possess it. What is required is that the person exercise control over the item.]
> [Possession may be shared with another person. If a person exercises control over an item, that item is in his possession, even though another person may also have similar control.]

See the Comment to Wis JI-Criminal 920 for a discussion of various issues relating to "possession" in criminal cases, including so-called "constructive possession."

4. Since bank checks are the writings used in most forgery cases, the rest of the uniform instruction uses only the term "check." If the offense involved a different kind of writing or an "object," the Committee suggests naming the writing or object and using that name whenever "check" appears in the instruction. Whether a particular writing or object is one by which "legal rights or obligations are created or transferred" is a question of fact for the jury to determine. Where the law establishes that a particular writing or object has that effect, it is permissible to communicate that legal rule to the jury. With regard to the definition of "check" and other instruments, see § 403.104.

State v. Perry, 215 Wis.2d 690, 631 N.W.2d 651 (1997), held that "Transchecks" used by truckers for unexpected expenses are writings covered by the forgery statute.

5. Examples of the kinds of conduct covered are given in the Vol. V 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, page 131 (February 1953):

> Signing a check with another's name (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made by another); raising a check (an example of making a writing purporting to have been made with different terms); filling in blanks over the signature of another either without authority or with unauthorized terms (an example of making a writing appearing to have been made by authority of one who did not give such authority).

The fact that the writing is nonnegotiable is immaterial. The absence of the maker's signature may mean the check is not a negotiable instrument but presenting such a check for payment may constitute uttering a forged writing. See State v. Machon, 112 Wis.2d 47, 331 N.W.2d 665 (Ct. App. 1983).

"Falsely made" does not apply to writing someone else's name as the payer on a postal money order. "Wisconsin requires that a false making must relate to the genuineness of execution of a document, not to the genuineness of its contents." State v. Entringer, 2001 WI App 157, 246 Wis.2d 851, 631 N.W.2d 651.

6. The Committee concluded that "intent to defraud" is not a statutorily-required element for a violation of sec. 943.38(2). Knowledge that the writing is forged and uttering it (or possessing it with intent to utter) is all that is required. The clearest support for this conclusion is the statutory language itself: "Intent to defraud" appears in subsecs. (1) and (3), but not in (2). This difference between the subsections appears to be intentional: The parallel section in the 1953 draft of the proposed Criminal Code had "intent to defraud" as an element; as enacted in 1955, that element had been eliminated and the statute read essentially as it does today. (The 1953 version is found in the 1953 Report On The Criminal Code, Wisconsin Legislative Council, 1953; the Code was enacted as Chapter 696, Laws of 1955.)

The interpretation in the instruction is consistent with a policy of penalizing those who introduce forged writings into the stream of commerce, which the Committee concluded is the likely purpose of sec. 943.38(2).

7. The Committee recommends that the sentence in parentheses be read only when the facts of the case suggest that the defendant possessed the forged writing with intent to utter it as false. One example of such possession would be the "middleman" who passes forged checks to others who utter them as genuine. The middleman possesses the writings with intent to utter as false.

Section 943.38(2) prohibits the possession of a forged writing "with intent to utter as false or as genuine." (Emphasis added.) The reason for drafting the statute in this way is explained in the 1953 Judiciary Committee Report on the Criminal Code, at page 131: "The phrase to 'utter as true or false' does away with the necessity of proving that the actor possessed the forged article with intent to utter it as true."

Thus, there are two aspects to the mental purpose of the possessor of a forged writing under this statute: (1) the possessor must have the intent to utter the writing C to pass it along to someone else; but (2) whether or not the possessor intends to pass the writing along as a false writing or as genuine is immaterial. In the usual case where the possessor intends to utter the writing as genuine, the immateriality of the possessor's purpose need not be brought to the attention of the jury. But where the possessor intends to pass the writings along as false, the immateriality of the purpose should be brought to the jury's attention. This will carry out the intent of the statute to eliminate the defense that the possessor did not intend to present the writing as genuine.

8. The alternative "present it for payment" should be used where the facts show that the defendant intended to present the check for payment himself. This would be applicable to the most common situation, that where the defendant possessed the forged writing with intent to utter it as true.

9. The alternative "transfer it to another" should be used where the facts show that the defendant intended to transfer the check to another person, which other person would be expected to present the check for payment. In this situation, the common definition of "utter," presenting for payment, is not suitable, and the Committee suggests substituting the "transfer to another" definition. This alternative may apply in the case where the defendant is acting as a middleman, passing on forged writings to others who will eventually present them as genuine. Such a case would be one where the defendant possessed the writings "with intent to utter as false"; see note 7, supra.

1494 FRAUDULENT INSURANCE CLAIM: PRESENTING A FALSE OR FRAUDULENT CLAIM — § 943.395(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.395 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who presents a false or fraudulent claim to be paid under any contract or certificate of insurance, knowing the claim to be false or fraudulent.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant presented a claim to be paid under a contract or certificate of insurance.
2. The claim was false or fraudulent.
3. The defendant knew the claim was false or fraudulent.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE CLAIM WAS MORE THAN $2,500.[1]

[Determining the Value of the Claim]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

"Was the value of the claim more than $2,500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no."

"Value" means the amount of the entire claim.[2]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than $2,500.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1494 was originally published in 1996. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003; it involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes in the text.

This instruction is for violations of § 943.395(1)(a), which are punished as Class A misdemeanors if the amount of the false claim does not exceed $2,500 and as Class I felonies if the amount does exceed $2,500. This amount was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The felony class was changed to Class I by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective date: February 1, 2003.

1. By analogy to theft cases, the Committee concluded that the jury must make a finding of the value of the claim if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Regarding theft cases, see Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The felony class was changed to Class I by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109, effective date: February 1, 2003. While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

2. Whether the felony amount is exceeded is determined by reference to the value of the full claim. See State v. Briggs, 214 Wis.2d 281, 288-89, 571 N.W.2d 881 (Ct. App. 1997), where the court of appeals rejected the defendant's argument that the statute required that the false portion of the claim exceed the designated amount, which at the time of Briggs was $1,000.

1495 THEFT OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS SERVICE — § 943.45(1)(a) and (3)(c)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft of telecommunications service, as defined in § 943.45(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally obtains or attempts to obtain telecommunications service by charging the service to an existing telephone number or credit card number without the consent of the subscriber or legitimate holder and does so for direct or indirect commercial advantage or private financial gain.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following five elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (obtained) (attempted to obtain) telecommunications service.[1]
2. The defendant (obtained) (attempted to obtain) service by charging it to a (telephone number) (credit card number) belonging to another person.
3. The (subscriber) (holder) of the (telephone number) (credit card) did not consent to the charges alleged to have been made by the defendant.
4. The defendant acted intentionally.

This requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[2] to obtain telecommunications service without paying for it by charging that service to the (telephone number) (credit card) of another person without consent.

5. The defendant (obtained) (attempted to obtain) telecommunications service for (direct or indirect commercial advantage) (private financial gain).

["Private financial gain" requires that the defendant received a financial benefit beyond simply receiving telecommunications service without paying for it.][3]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all five elements of theft of telecommunications service have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1495 was originally published in 1992 and revised in 1999 and 2009. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2013. It updated the reference to penalties in the Comment.

This instruction is for violations of subsection (1)(a) of § 943.45. Four other violations are defined in subsections (1)(b) through (e). The penalties for violations of § 943.45(1)(a) are specified in sub. (3)(a)-d) as amended by 2013 Wisconsin Act 89:

- first offenses are Class C misdemeanors;
- second or subsequent offenses are Class B misdemeanors;
- offenses committed for "direct or indirect commercial advantage or private financial gain" are Class A misdemeanors; and,
- offenses committed for "direct or indirect commercial advantage or private financial gain" as second or subsequent offenses are Class I felonies.

This instruction may be used for Class A misdemeanors under sub. (3)(c) or Class I felonies under sub (3)(d). As to the latter, the Committee concluded that the fact of prior conviction need not be submitted to the jury. "Other than the fact of prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to a jury, and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. United States, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) [emphasis added.]

Subsection (2) of § 943.45 provides that the statute applies when the telecommunications service either originates or terminates in this state, or when it would have been billable by a provider of service in this state, except for the fraud involved in a violation of the statute.

1. The statute refers to "telecommunications service as defined in s. 196.01(9m)." That definition reads as follows:

> "Telecommunications service" means the offering for sale of the conveyance of voice, data or other information at any frequency over any part of the electromagnetic spectrum, including the sale of service for collection, storage, forwarding, switching and delivery incidental to such communication and including the regulated sale of customer premises equipment. "Telecommunications service" does not include cable television service or broadcast service.

2. See § 939.23(3), which defines "intentionally." That definition includes being "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain" to cause the prohibited result. That alternative was not included in the instruction because the Committee concluded that violations of § 943.45 will usually involve the "mental purpose" alternative. If an instruction on "practically certain" is needed, see Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

3. The definition of "private financial gain" is based on the one provided in § 943.46, Theft of Cable Television Service, which deals with conduct that is very similar to the conduct covered by § 943.45 and has the same penalty structure. Sub. (1)(b) of § 943.46 reads as follows:

> "Private financial gain" does not include the gain resulting to any individual from the private use in that individual's dwelling unit of any programming for which the individual has not obtained authorization.

While the statute's failure to provide that the same definition applies in § 943.45 can be interpreted in different ways, the Committee concluded that the more persuasive approach calls for using the definition. Because theft of telecommunications service is an offense [a Class C forfeiture] without a showing of "private financial gain," that term must require more than the benefit of receiving free service. The contrary interpretation would mean there would be no conduct that constitutes the forfeiture offense, making part of the statute meaningless. An interpretation that gives meaning and effect to all parts of a statute is preferred.

1496 THEFT OF A FINANCIAL TRANSACTION CARD — § 943.41(3)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft of a financial transaction card, as defined in § 943.41(3)(a)[1] of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who acquires a financial transaction card from the person, possession, custody, or control of another without the cardholder's consent and with intent to (use it) (sell it) (transfer it to a person other than the issuer).[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant acquired[3] a financial transaction card from the person, possession, custody, or control of another.

   A financial transaction card is an instrument or device issued by a business organization or financial institution for the use of the cardholder in (obtaining anything on credit) (certifying or guaranteeing the availability of funds sufficient to honor a draft or check) (gaining access to an account).[4]

2. The defendant acquired the card without the consent of the cardholder.[5]

   "Without consent" means that there was no consent in fact.[6]

3. The defendant acquired the card with intent to (use it) (sell it) (transfer it to a person other than the issuer).[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of theft of a financial transaction card have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1496 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.41(3)(a), which are Class A misdemeanors. For offenses involving fraudulent use of a card under sub. (5) see Wis JI Criminal 1497, 1497A, and 1497B.

1. This instruction is drafted for one type of offense defined in § 943.41(3)(a), which provides:

> (3) Theft by taking card. (a) No person shall acquire a financial transaction card from the person, possession, custody or control of another without the cardholder's consent or, with knowledge that it has been so acquired, receive the financial transaction card with intent to use it or sell it to or transfer it to a person other than the issuer. Acquiring a financial transaction card without consent includes obtaining it by conduct defined as statutory theft. . . .

2. One of the alternatives in parentheses should be selected. The alternatives appear at the end of the first sentence of § 943.41(3)(a). Although the statute is not explicit in this regard, the Committee has interpreted it as providing that the "with intent to use it or sell it . . ." phrase modifies both prohibited acts: acquiring a card without the cardholder's consent; or receiving a card acquired without the cardholder's consent.

3. Section 943.41(3)(a) provides that "[a]cquiring a financial transaction card without consent includes obtaining it by conduct defined as statutory theft." Wisconsin's theft statute identifies the following means of obtaining property: takes and carries away, uses, transfers, conceals, retains possession of property without consent and with intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession. See § 943.20(1)(a).

The last sentence of § 943.41(3)(a) provides:

> If a person has in his or her possession or under his or her control financial cards issued in the names of two or more other persons it is prima facie evidence that the person acquired them in violation of this subsection.

See Wis JI-Criminal 225 for a pattern instruction for implementing a statutory "prima facie evidence" provision.

4. This definition is adapted from the one provided in § 943.41(1)(em).

5. "Cardholder" is defined in § 943.41(1)(b) as "the person to whom or for whose benefit a financial transaction card is issued." In most cases, the cardholder is likely to be the owner of the card.

6. See § 939.22(48) for further definition of "without consent" appropriate where consent is given but is not legally effective because it resulted from coercion, purported legal authority, or lack of understanding.

7. See note 2, supra. "Issuer" is defined in § 943.41(1)(f) as "the business organization or financial institution which issues a financial transaction card or its duly authorized agent."

1497 FRAUDULENT USE OF A FINANCIAL TRANSACTION CARD — § 943.41(5)(a)1.a.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fraudulent use of a financial transaction card, as defined in § 943.41(5)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to defraud another,[1] uses a financial transaction card that is stolen[2] for the purpose of obtaining money, goods, services, or anything else of value.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used a financial transaction card.[3]

   A "financial transaction card" is an instrument or device issued by a business organization or financial institution for the use of the cardholder in (obtaining anything on credit) (certifying or guaranteeing the availability of funds sufficient to honor a draft or check) (gaining access to an account).[4]

2. The card was stolen.[5]

   [A "stolen" card is one that has been intentionally taken from its owner without consent and with intent permanently to deprive the owner of its possession.][6]

3. The defendant used the card for the purpose of obtaining (money) (goods) (service) (anything of value).

[Actual possession of the card is not required.][7]

4. The defendant acted with intent to defraud another.

"Another" includes the issuer of the card or any person or organization providing money, goods, services, or anything else of value.[8]

"Intent to defraud" is an intent to obtain something of value by deception or representation known to be false.[9]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[10]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $10,000?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $5,000?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $2,500?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the amount of the transaction(s).

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."].

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1497 was originally published in 1989 and revised in 1991. This revision was approved by the Committee in February 2003; it limited the instruction to violations of sub. (5)(a)1.a., adopted a new format, made nonsubstantive changes in the text, and reflected the penalty changes made by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109.

In State v. Shea, 221 Wis.2d 418, 585 N.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 943.41(5)(a)1.a. could be applied to a case where the defendant used a credit card number without authorization but did not have possession of the card itself. Conduct of that type might be a better fit under § 943.41(5)(a)1.b. C See Wis JI-Criminal 1497A.

1. The full statement in the statute is "intent to defraud the issuer, a person or organization providing money, goods or services or anything else of value or any other person." The general term "another" is used in the initial statement of the offense in the opening paragraph but all possible targets of the intent to defraud are included in the third element.

2. The statute defines many different types of fraudulent use. This instruction addresses what the Committee believed to be one of the most common situations C the use of a stolen card. It is based on that part of the statute which refers to a card "obtained or retained in violation of sub. (3)." The reference to "sub. (3)" is to subsection (3) of § 943.41 which defines the offense of "theft by taking card." See Wis JI-Criminal 1496 and note 5, below.

If the case involves the use of a card other than a stolen card, use a different characterization wherever the word "stolen" appears. Other alternatives would include, for example, a forged card, a revoked card, or an expired card (see § 943.41(5)(a)), or a card otherwise "acquired in violation of sub. (3)," see note 5, below.

3. In State v. Shea, 221 Wis.2d 418, 585 N.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 943.41(5)(a)1.a. could be applied to a case where the defendant used a credit card number without authorization but did not have possession of the card itself. Thus, the defendant did not "use" the card as required by this element. Conduct of that type might be a better fit under § 943.41(5)(a)1.b. – See Wis JI-Criminal 1497A.

4. The definition of "financial transaction card" is based on the one provided in § 943.41(1)(em).

5. See note 2, supra. In State v. Shea, 221 Wis.2d 418, 585 N.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 943.41(5)(a)1.a. could be applied to a case where the defendant used a credit card number without authorization but did not have possession of the card itself. Thus, the card was not "stolen" as required by this element. Conduct of that type might be a better fit under § 943.41(5)(a)1.b. – See Wis JI-Criminal 1497A.

6. The definition of "stolen" is based on the facts necessary to constitute theft under § 943.20(1)(a): an intentional taking, without consent, and with intent to deprive the owner permanently of possession. Use of a stolen card, with "stolen" defined in this manner, would constitute "use of a card obtained in violation of sub. (3)" as prohibited by § 943.41(5). See note 2, supra. However, a card could be "obtained in violation of sub. (3)" without having been obtained in a way that would make the card a "stolen" card under this definition. See Wis JI-Criminal 1496.

7. In State v. Shea, 221 Wis.2d 418, 585 N.W.2d 662 (Ct. App. 1998), the court held that § 943.41(5)(a)1.a. could be applied to a case where the defendant used a credit card number without authorization but did not have possession of the card itself.

8. This statement presents the alternative targets of the intent to defraud as set forth in § 943.41(5). See note 1, supra.

9. The definition of "intent to defraud" is based on those provided in other instructions, tailored for this defense. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1405 and 1470.

10. By analogy to theft cases, the Committee concluded that the jury must make a finding of the value of the claim if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Regarding theft cases, see Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. The revised penalties, determined by reference to a single transaction or separate transactions within a period of 6 months, are as follows:

- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;

- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The questions in the instruction omits the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

1497A FRAUDULENT USE OF A FINANCIAL TRANSACTION CARD — § 943.41(5)(a)1.b.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fraudulent use of a financial transaction card, as defined in § 943.41(5)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, with intent to defraud another,[1] obtains money, goods, services, or anything else of value by representing without consent of the cardholder that the person is the holder of a specified card.[2]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained (money) (goods) (service) (anything of value) by representing that (he) (she) was the holder of a financial transaction card.

   A "financial transaction card" is an instrument or device issued by a business organization or financial institution for the use of the cardholder in (obtaining anything on credit) (certifying or guaranteeing the availability of funds sufficient to honor a draft or check) (gaining access to an account).[3]

2. The defendant was not the person to whom the card was issued[4] and acted without that person's consent.[5]

3. The defendant acted with intent to defraud another.

"Another" includes the issuer of the card or any person or organization providing money, goods, services, or anything else of value, or any other person.[6]

"Intent to defraud" is an intent to obtain something of value by deception or representation known to be false.[7]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF A FELONY OFFENSE IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OBTAINED WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[8]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $10,000?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $5,000?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the (money) (goods) (service) (_____) obtained more than $2,500?" Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the amount of the transaction(s).

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to that question is "yes."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1497A was approved by the Committee in February 2003.

This instruction is for violations of sub. (5)(a)1.b. of § 943.41. For violations of sub. (5)(a)1.a., see Wis JI-Criminal 1497.

The penalty structure for § 943.41 was revised by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. The revised penalties, determined by reference to a single transaction or separate transactions within a period of 6 months, are as follows:

- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

1. The full statement in the statute is "intent to defraud the issuer, a person or organization providing money, goods or services or anything else of value or any other person." The general term "another" is used in the initial statement of the offense in the opening paragraph but all possible targets of the intent to defraud are included in the third element.

2. The statute also prohibits representing that one is the holder of a card when a card has not in fact been issued. That alternative is not addressed by this instruction.

3. The definition of "financial transaction card" is based on the one provided in § 943.41(1)(em).

4. This is based on the definition of "cardholder" provided in § 943.41(1)(b): "'Cardholder' means the person to whom or for whose benefit a financial transaction card is issued."

5. If definition of "without consent" is believed to be necessary, see Wis JI-Criminal 948.

6. This statement presents the alternative targets of the intent to defraud as set forth in § 943.41(5). See note 1, supra.

7. The definition of "intent to defraud" is based on those provided in other instructions, tailored for this defense. See, for example, Wis JI-Criminal 1405 and 1470.

8. By analogy to theft cases, the Committee concluded that the jury must make a finding of the value of the claim if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Regarding theft cases, see Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty were changed twice during the 2000-2001 legislative session. The amount making the offense a felony was increased to $2,500 by 2001 Wisconsin Act 16, effective date: September 1, 2001. The penalty structure was revised again by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109 [effective date: February 1, 2003]. The revised penalties, determined by reference to a single transaction or separate transactions within a period of 6 months, are as follows:

- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of goods, etc., obtained exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The questions in the instruction omits the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

1497B FINANCIAL TRANSACTION CARD FACTORING — § 943.41(6m)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.41(6m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by a person who is authorized to furnish goods, services, or anything else of value[1] upon presentation of a financial transaction card and who deposits, assigns, endorses, or presents for payment a financial transaction card transaction record if the person did not furnish or agree to furnish the goods, services, or anything else of value represented to be furnished by the transaction record.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant was a person authorized to furnish goods, services, or anything else of value upon presentation of a financial transaction card.

   A "financial transaction card" is issued by a business organization or financial institution for the use of the cardholder in obtaining anything on credit.[2]

2. The defendant (deposited) (assigned) (endorsed) (presented for payment) a record of the use of a financial transaction card.[3]

This requires that the defendant presented the record for payment to an issuer or to any other person authorized to acquire transaction records for presentation to an issuer.

"Issuer" means the business organization or financial institution which issues a financial transaction card (or its duly authorized agent).[4]

3. The defendant did not furnish or agree to furnish the goods, services, or anything else of value described by the transaction record.[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1497B was originally published as JI 1497.1 in 1994. This revision was approved by the Committee in May 2002; it renumbered the instruction, adopted a new format, and made nonsubstantive changes in the text.

Section 943.41(6m), which defines the offense of "credit card factoring" is very difficult to understand. The Committee's understanding was aided by the following example:

> A legitimate merchant has an account with a credit card company. A person without his own account wants to accept credit card charges for sales of his merchandise.
> Somehow, the person gets credit card charge slips and uses them for his sales. He then sells the slips to the merchant at a discount, say 90%. The merchant then forwards those slips for payment along with his own and receives say, 95% on the dollar from the regular issuer. He thus makes a 5% commission on the factoring.
>
> This merchant has violated the statute because:
> 1) he is authorized to accept credit cards;

2) he presented a credit card charge slip for payment;

3) he did not furnish the goods or services represented on the slip.

Note that sub. (6m)(b) provides several exceptions to the applicability of the prohibition on factoring, excluding certain franchisors, authorized general merchandise retailers, and issuers or organizations of issuers.

The instruction makes some substitutions for the statutory language in an attempt to simplify the explanation of the offense. Those changes are identified in the footnotes below.

This offense is a Class E felony regardless of the value involved.

1. The statute includes "money" in the list of that which might be furnished. The Committee decided not to include "money" in the instruction because an example of a factoring offense involving money could not be imagined. Promising to provide money and then failing to do so would be a different offense; see, for example, the offense defined in sub. (6)(b) of § 943.41.

2. This definition is adapted from the one provided in § 943.41(1)(em).

3. "A record of the use of a financial transaction card" is substituted for the statute's "financial transaction card transaction record."

4. This is the definition provided in § 943.41(1)(f).

5. "Described by the transaction record" is substituted for the statute's "represented to be furnished by the transaction record."

1498 RETAIL THEFT[1] — § 943.50(1m)(a) (e)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Retail theft, as defined in § 943.50(1m) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally (alters the indicated price or value of) (takes and carries away) (transfers) (conceals) (retains possession of)[2] merchandise held for resale[3] by a merchant without consent and with the intent to deprive the merchant permanently of possession or the full purchase price of such merchandise.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally (altered the indicated price or value of) (took and carried away) (transferred) (concealed) (retained possession of) (property involved).[4]
2. The (property involved) was merchandise held for resale[5] by a merchant.[6]
3. The defendant knew that (property involved) was merchandise held for resale[7] by a merchant.
4. The merchant did not consent[8] to (altering the indicated price or value of) (taking and carrying away) (transferring) (concealing) (retaining possession of) (property involved).

5. The defendant knew that the merchant did not consent.[9]

6. The defendant intended to deprive the merchant permanently of (possession) (any portion of its purchase price) of the merchandise.[10]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY RETAIL THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE MERCHANDISE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[11]

Determining Value

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

"Value" means the (merchant's stated price of the merchandise) (the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price).[12]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1498 was originally published in 1974 and revised in 1977, 1980, 1983, 1991, 1999, 2002, 2003, 2012, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2019; it adds to the comment.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. The amount distinguishing misdemeanors from felonies was decreased from $2,500 to $500 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. [Effective date: April 17, 2012.]

Act 174 also created ss. 943.50(4m) which provides that "[W]hoever violates sub. (1m) (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), or (f) is guilty of a Class I felony if all of the following apply:

(a) The value of the merchandise does not exceed $500.
(b) The person agree or combines with another to commit the violation.
(c) The person intends to sell the merchandise by means of the Internet."

2011 Wisconsin Act 110 amended § 943.50 to cover theft of services. See Wis JI-Criminal 1498C.

The 1999 revision reflected changes made in § 943.50 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 262, effective date: June 23, 1998. This instruction covers the alternative ways of committing retail theft that were prohibited by § 943.50 before the changes made by Act 262. These alternatives are defined in sub. (1m) (a) through (e) of the amended statute. New alternatives relating to "theft detection devices," "theft detection shielding devices" and "theft detection device removers" are defined in new subs. (1m)(f), (g), and (h). See Wis JI-Criminal 1498A and 1498B.

Act 262 also repealed former sub. (2) which had provided that intentional concealment of merchandise "beyond the last station for receiving payments," for example, was "evidence of intent. . . ." Paragraphs addressing those provisions [and treating them in the same way as "prima facie evidence" provisions] have been deleted from the instruction.

In State v. Lopez, 2019 WI 101, 389 Wis.2d 156, 936 N.W.2d 125, the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals decision in State v. Lopez, 2019 WI App 2, 385 Wis.2d 482, 922 N.W.2d 855, which held that the State may charge multiple acts of retail theft as one continuous offense pursuant to § 971.36(3)(a). Nothing in § 971.36(3)(a) indicates that the legislature intended to limit the provision to a specific type or types of theft, therefore the statute is applicable to various types of theft, including retail theft under § 943.50(1m)(a)-(e).

1. The title of § 943.50 was changed from "shoplifting" to "retail theft" by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981. The change was effective April 27, 1981. Additional changes made by Chapter 270 were: extending the statute's coverage "to include" property of the merchant; cross referencing the definition of "merchant" in the Uniform Commercial Code; providing a new definition of value; expanding the immunity of one who detains a suspected violator of the statute; and providing for the admission of photographs of the merchandise in lieu of producing the merchandise itself.

2011 Wisconsin Act 110 changed the title of § 943.50 to "Retail Theft; Theft of Services."

2. The Committee recommends using only the verb or verbs which appropriately describe the form of retail theft alleged or indicated by the evidence. There is no authority specific to this statute requiring election of one alternative. However, cases interpreting the theft statute, § 943.20, address a closely comparable situation and hold that the statute identifies different ways of committing the offense: by taking and carrying way, or by using, by transferring, by concealing, or by retaining possession of property of another. The alternatives may not be charged in the disjunctive, Jackson v. State, 92 Wis.2d 1, 284 N.W.2d 685 (Ct. App. 1979); the jury must unanimously agree on the manner in which the statute was violated, State v. Seymour, 183 Wis.2d 682, 515 N.W.2d 874 (1994). See Wis JI-Criminal 517 for an instruction on jury agreement.

3. The amendment of § 943.50 by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, extended the coverage of the statute to include "property of the merchant." In a case where the merchant's personal property was taken, substitute "property of the merchant" for "merchandise held for resale."

4. "Intentionally" requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to do the thing or cause the result specified "or is aware that his or her act is practically certain to cause that result." § 939.23(3). See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B. "Intentionally" also requires knowledge of those facts necessary to make the conduct criminal that follow the word in the statute. See § 939.23(3).

5. See note 3, supra.

6. Section 943.50(1), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides that "merchant" includes those identified in § 402.104(3) as well as any innkeeper, motelkeeper, or hotelkeeper.

Section 402.104(3) defines "merchant" as follows:

> "Merchant" means a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his or her employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having such knowledge or skill.

7. See note 4, supra.

8. The phrase "without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). That definition should be read to the jury at this point if consent is at issue. See Wis JI-Criminal 948.

9. See note 4, supra.

10. When appropriate add: "or is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

When appropriate add: "or creates a serious risk of permanent loss by acts which manifest a gross indifference to the permanent loss of the property," Sartin v. State, 44 Wis.2d 138, 147, 170 N.W.2d 727 (1969), citing Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations in Wisconsin—Part I," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 253, 267 (1960).

11. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty are set forth in § 943.50(4):

- if the value of the property does not exceed $500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The above reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. Only the threshold for the Class I felony was changed – it was reduced to $500 from $2,500.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

12. Section 943.50(1)(b), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides a definition of "value" for the purposes of "retail theft" cases:

> (b) "Value of merchandise" means:
> 1. For property of the merchant, the value of the property; or
> 2. For merchandise held for resale, the merchant's stated price of the merchandise or, in the event of altering, transferring or removing a price marking or causing a cash register or other sales devise to reflect less than the merchant's stated price, the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price.

1498A RETAIL THEFT: REMOVING A THEFT DETECTION DEVICE — § 943.50(1m)(f)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.50(1m)(f) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who, while anywhere in a merchant's store, intentionally removes a theft detection device from merchandise held for resale[1] without the merchant's consent and with intent to deprive the merchant permanently of possession[2] of the merchandise.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant, while in the merchant's store, intentionally removed a theft detection device from (property involved).

   "Theft detection device" means any tag or other device that is used to prevent or detect theft and that is attached to merchandise held for resale by a merchant.[3]

2. (Property involved) was merchandise held for resale by a merchant.[4]

3. The defendant knew that (property involved) was merchandise held for resale[5] by a merchant.

4. The merchant did not consent[6] to removal of a theft detection device.

5. The defendant knew that the merchant did not consent.

6. The defendant intended to deprive the merchant permanently of possession of the merchandise.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY RETAIL THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE MERCHANDISE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[9]

Determining Value

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

["Value" means the (merchant's stated price of the merchandise) (the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price).[10]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1498A was originally published in November 1998 and revised in 2003, 2012, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2019; it adds to the comment.

This instruction is for the offense defined in sub. (1m)(f) of § 943.50, which was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 262 [effective date: June 23, 1998].

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount distinguishing misdemeanors from felonies was decreased from $2,500 to $500 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. [Effective date: April 17, 2012.]

Act 174 also created ss. 943.50(4m) which provides that "[W]hoever violates sub. (1m) (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), or (f) is guilty of a Class I felony if all of the following apply:

(a) The value of the merchandise does not exceed $500.
(b) The person agree or combines with another to commit the violation.
(c) The person intends to sell the merchandise by means of the Internet."

In State v. Lopez, 2019 WI 101, 389 Wis.2d 156, 936 N.W.2d 125, the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals decision in State v. Lopez, 2019 WI App 2, 385 Wis.2d 482, 922 N.W.2d 855, which held that the State may charge multiple acts of retail theft as one continuous offense pursuant to § 971.36(3)(a). Nothing in § 971.36(3)(a) indicates that the legislature intended to limit the provision to a specific type or types of theft, therefore the statute is applicable to various types of theft, including retail theft under § 943.50(1m)(a) (e).

1. Section 943.50(1m)(f) prohibits removing a theft detection device "from merchandise held for resale by a merchant or property of a merchant." The instruction is drafted for an offense involving "property held for resale by a merchant" and must be modified if "property of a merchant" was involved.

2. The instruction does not include the following alternative from the statute: intent to deprive the merchant permanently of "the full purchase price" of the merchandise. The Committee concluded that a shielding device would be used only to steal the merchandise, not to reduce its stated price.

3. This is the definition provided in § 943.50(1)(ar).

4. Section 943.50(1), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides that "merchant" includes those identified in § 402.104(3) as well as any innkeeper, motelkeeper, or hotelkeeper.

Section 402.104(3) defines "merchant" as follows:

> "Merchant" means a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his or her employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having such knowledge or skill.

5. See note 1, supra.

6. The phrase "without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). That definition should be read to the jury at this point if consent is at issue. See Wis JI-Criminal 948.

7. When appropriate add: "or is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

8. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee has concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional, statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

9. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty are set forth in § 943.50(4):

- if the value of the property does not exceed $500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The above reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. Only the threshold for the Class I felony was changed – it was reduced to $500 from $2,500.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

10. Section 943.50(1)(b), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides a definition of "value" for the purposes of "retail theft" cases:

(b) "Value of merchandise" means:

1. For property of the merchant, the value of the property; or

2. For merchandise held for resale, the merchant's stated price of the merchandise or, in the event of altering, transferring or removing a price marking or causing a cash register or other sales devise to reflect less than the merchant's stated price, the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price.

1498B RETAIL THEFT: USING A THEFT DETECTION SHIELDING DEVICE — § 943.50(1m)(g)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 943.50(1m)(g) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who uses [or possesses with intent to use] a theft detection shielding device to shield merchandise held for resale[1] from being detected by a theft alarm sensor and does so without the merchant's consent and with intent to deprive the merchant permanently of possession[2] of the merchandise.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following six elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant used [or possessed with intent to use] a theft detection shielding device to shield (property involved) from being detected by a theft alarm sensor.

   "Theft detection shielding device" means any laminated or coated bag or device designed to shield merchandise held for resale by a merchant from being detected by an electronic or magnetic theft alarm sensor.[3]

2. (Property involved) was merchandise held for resale by a merchant.[4]

3. The defendant knew that (property involved) was merchandise held for resale[5] by a merchant.

4. The merchant did not consent[6] to use of [or possession with intent to use] a theft detection shielding device to shield (property involved) from being detected by a theft alarm sensor.
5. The defendant knew that the merchant did not consent.
6. The defendant intended to deprive the merchant permanently of possession of the merchandise.[7]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent or knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.[8]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all six elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY RETAIL THEFT IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE MERCHANDISE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[9]

Determining Value

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the merchandise more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

["Value" means the (merchant's stated price of the merchandise) (the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price).[10]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the property was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1498B was originally published in 1998 and revised in 2003, 2012, and 2019. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2019; it adds to the comment.

This instruction is for the offense defined in sub. (1m)(g) of § 943.50, which was created by 1997 Wisconsin Act 262 [effective date: June 23, 1998].

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. This amount distinguishing misdemeanors from felonies was decreased from $2,500 to $500 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. [Effective date: April 17, 2012.]

Act 174 also created ss. 943.50(4m) which provides that "[W]hoever violates sub. (1m) (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), or (f) is guilty of a Class I felony if all of the following apply:

(a) The value of the merchandise does not exceed $500.
(b) The person agree or combines with another to commit the violation.
(c) The person intends to sell the merchandise by means of the Internet."

In State v. Lopez, 2019 WI 101, 389 Wis.2d 156, 936 N.W.2d 125, the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals decision in State v. Lopez, 2019 WI App 2, 385 Wis.2d 482, 922 N.W.2d 855, which held that the State may charge multiple acts of retail theft as one continuous offense pursuant to § 971.36(3)(a). Nothing in § 971.36(3)(a) indicates that the legislature intended to limit the provision to a specific type or types of theft, therefore the statute is applicable to various types of theft, including retail theft under § 943.50(1m)(a) (e).

1. Section 943.50(1m)(g) prohibits using, or possessing with intent to use, a theft detection shielding device to shield "merchandise held for resale by a merchant or property of a merchant." The instruction is drafted for an offense involving "property held for resale by a merchant" and must be modified if "property of a merchant" was involved.

2. The instruction does not include the following alternative from the statute: intent to deprive the merchant permanently of "the full purchase price" of the merchandise. The Committee concluded that a shielding device would be used only to steal the merchandise, not to reduce its stated price.

3. This is the definition provided in § 943.50(1)(at).

4. Section 943.50(1), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides that "merchant" includes those identified in § 402.104(3) as well as any innkeeper, motelkeeper, or hotelkeeper.

Section 402.104(3) defines "merchant" as follows:

> "Merchant" means a person who deals in goods of the kind or otherwise by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having knowledge or skill peculiar to the practices or goods involved in the transaction or to whom such knowledge or skill may be attributed by his or her employment of an agent or broker or other intermediary who by his or her occupation holds himself or herself out as having such knowledge or skill.

5. See note 1, supra.

6. The phrase "without consent" is defined in § 939.22(48)(a)-(c). That definition should be read to the jury at this point if consent is at issue. See Wis JI-Criminal 948.

7. When appropriate add: "or is aware that his conduct is practically certain to cause that result." See § 939.23(4) and Wis JI-Criminal 923B.

8. This instruction on finding intent is a shorter version of a longer statement commonly used in the standard instructions. The Committee has concluded that this shorter version is appropriate for most cases. The complete, traditional, statement is found at Wis JI-Criminal 923A.

9. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty are set forth in § 943.50(4):

- if the value of the property does not exceed $500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the value of the property exceeds $500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the property exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the property exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The above reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. Only the threshold for the Class I felony was changed – it was reduced to $500 from $2,500.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I and Class H felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

10. Section 943.50(1)(b), as created by Chapter 270, Laws of 1981, provides a definition of "value" for the purposes of "retail theft" cases:

> (b) "Value of merchandise" means:
> 1. For property of the merchant, the value of the property; or
> 2. For merchandise held for resale, the merchant's stated price of the merchandise or, in the event of altering, transferring or removing a price marking or causing a cash register or other sales devise to reflect less than the merchant's stated price, the difference between the merchant's stated price of the merchandise and the altered price.

1498C THEFT OF SERVICES — § 943.50(1r)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Theft of services, as defined in § 943.50(1r) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who, having obtained a service from a service provider, absconds and intentionally fails or refuses to pay for the service and does so without the service provider's consent and with intent to deprive the service provider permanently of the full price of the service.[1]

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained a service from a service provider.

   "Service provider" means a merchant who provides a service to retail customers without a written contract with the expectation that the service will be paid for by the customer upon completion of the service.[2]

2. The defendant intentionally absconded without paying for the service.

   "Intentionally absconded" means that the defendant left with the mental purpose to avoid paying for the service.[3]

3. The service provider did not consent to the defendant leaving without paying for the service.

4. The defendant intended to deprive the service provider permanently of the full price of the service.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY THEFT OF SERVICES IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE OF THE SERVICE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[4]

Determining Value

If you find the defendant guilty, answer the following question:

("Was the value of the service more than $10,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the service more than $5,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the service more than $500?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

["Value" means the price that the service provider stated for the service before the service was provided.][5]

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the service was more than the amount stated in the question.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1498C was originally published by the Committee in 2012 and revised in 2019. This revision was approved in December 2019; it adds to the comment.

The crime of "theft of services" was created by 2011 Wisconsin Act 110 [effective date: December 21, 2011]. Act 110 added subsection (1r) to § 943.50, which is now titled: "Retail theft; theft of services."

As with other retail theft violations, the basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the stolen property exceeds specified amounts. The instruction provides for a jury finding of the amount for felony cases. See footnote 4 and the accompanying text. The amount distinguishing misdemeanors from felonies was reduced from $1,500 to $500 by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174.

Act 174 also created ss. 943.50(4m) which provides that "[W]hoever violates sub. (1m) (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), or (f) is guilty of a Class I felony if all of the following apply:

(a) The value of the merchandise does not exceed $500.
(b) The person agree or combines with another to commit the violation.
(c) The person intends to sell the merchandise by means of the Internet."

In State v. Lopez, 2019 WI 101, 389 Wis.2d 156, 936 N.W.2d 125, the Wisconsin Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeals decision in State v. Lopez, 2019 WI App 2, 385 Wis.2d 482, 922 N.W.2d 855, which held that the State may charge multiple acts of retail theft as one continuous offense pursuant to § 971.36(3)(a). Nothing in § 971.36(3)(a) indicates that the legislature intended to limit the provision to a specific type or types of theft, therefore the statute is applicable to various types of theft, including retail theft under § 943.50(1m)(a) (e).

1. This statement reorders the statutory language to make it more understandable for the jury; no change in meaning is intended.

2. This is the definition provided in § 943.50(1)(am).

3. The definition of "abscond" is adapted from the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1461, Fraud on Hotel or Restaurant Keeper. See footnote 5, Wis JI-Criminal 1461. For definition of "intentionally," see Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B.

4. The jury must make a finding of the value of the stolen property [or services] if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The amounts determining the penalty are set forth in § 943.50(4):

- if the value of the service does not exceed $500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;

- if the value of the service exceeds $500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the value of the service exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony; and,
- if the value of the service exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony.

The above reflects changes made by 2011 Wisconsin Act 174. Only the threshold for the Class I felony was changed – it was reduced to $500 from $2,500.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for the felony penalties; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

5. This is the definition provided in § 943.50(1)(b)3.

1499 CRIMINAL SLANDER OF TITLE — § 943.60

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Criminal slander of title, as defined in § 943.60 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who submits for filing, docketing, or recording any instrument relating to a security interest in or title to real or personal property, and who knows or should have known that the contents or any part of the contents of the instrument are false, a sham, or frivolous.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements[1] were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant submitted an instrument for (filing) (docketing) (recording) that related to (a security interest[2] in) (title to) real or personal property.

   "Instrument" means a document that appears to have some legal effect.[3]

   ["Real property" means real estate.]

2. The contents or any part of the contents of the instrument were false, a sham, or frivolous.

This requires that, while the instrument may have been represented to be a legal document, it had no proper legal significance either because its contents were false or because it related to no legitimate legal claim, interest, or remedy.[4]

3. The defendant knew or should have known[5] that the contents or any part of the contents of the instrument were false, a sham, or frivolous.

In determining what the defendant should have known, consider what an ordinary, reasonable, and prudent person would have known about the contents of the document under the same or similar circumstances.

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of criminal slander of title have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1499 was originally published in 1988 and revised in 1995, and 1998. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2008 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

The following changes were made in § 943.60 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 27 (effective date: October 14, 1997):

(1) the penalty was increased to a Class D felony [changed to a Class I felony by 2001 Wisconsin Act 109];

(2) "financing statement" was added to the list of instruments;

(3) the coverage was expanded to include instruments relating to a security interest in real or personal property; and,

(4) the mental element was changed to refer to "or should have known" that the contents of the instrument are false.

1. The three elements in the instruction are essentially the same as those set forth in State v. Leist, 141 Wis.2d 34, 414 N.W.2d 45 (Ct. App. 1987). However, the Leist summary of the elements included "intentionally" in the first element. See 141 Wis.2d 34 at 36. "Intentionally" is not included in the instruction because it does not appear in the statute defining the crime. Because that issue was not really before the court in Leist, the Committee concluded that the decision did not explicitly hold that "intentionally" does apply to violations of § 943.60.

2. "Security interest" was added to the statute by 1997 Wisconsin Act 27. The term is defined as follows in § 943.84(4): "'Security interest' means an interest in property which secures payment of or other performance of an obligation." Other definitions are provided in §§ 234.907(1)(h), 401.201(37), and 421.301.

3. The definition of "instrument" is based on dictionary definitions of the word. The Committee concluded that in the context of this offense, there was also the connotation of a written document purporting to have legal significance. See, on the latter point, Garner, A Dictionary of Modern Legal Usage, Second Edition, Oxford University Press, 1995. For general definitions, the Committee referred to Black's Law Dictionary and Webster's Third New International Dictionary (Unabridged).

4. The question whether the document was false, a sham, or frivolous must be left for the jury to determine:

> We agree that it is within the province of a trial court to define an element for the jury's enlightenment. In fact, the trial court here did just that when it defined a frivolous document as one "without legal significance." It is not within the province of the trial court, however, to determine as a matter of law that certain facts before the jury fit within the given definition. In that case, the trial court is applying the facts to the law, thus invading the province of the jury.
> . . . . We hold that the unambiguous intent of the legislature was to place upon the government the responsibility of convincing the jury that a document is without legal significance.

State v. Leist, 141 Wis.2d 34, 37, 38-39, 414 N.W.2d 45 (Ct. App. 1987), emphasis in original.

The definition of "false, sham, or frivolous" in the instruction is based on the one ("without legal significance") used in Leist, though it was adapted to directly recognize that while the document may purport to have legal significance (and in fact, is often filed precisely because it will have legal effect), it in fact does not have a legitimate legal effect.

5. The alternative "or should have known" was added to § 943.60 by 1997 Wisconsin Act 27.

COMMENT

Wis. Stat. §§ 944.01, 944.10, and 944.11 were repealed by Chapter 184, Laws of 1975. Wis JI Criminal 1500, 1502, 1503, 1520, 1522, 1525, 1527, and 1529 dealt with offenses under the repealed statutes and were withdrawn in 1980.

The repealed statutes were originally replaced by § 940.225, which defines sexual assault. See Wis JI Criminal 1200 through 1219 for instructions for offenses under § 940.225. Sexual offenses against children were moved to Chapter 948 in 1989. See Wis JI Criminal 2102, et al.

1504 COMPUTER CRIME — § 943.70(2)(a)1. - 5.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Computer crime, as defined by § 943.70(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who willfully, knowingly, and without authorization (modifies) (destroys) (accesses) (takes possession of) (copies) computer data or programs.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (modified) (destroyed) (accessed) (took possession of) (copied) computer data or programs.
2. The defendant had no authorization to (modify) (destroy) (access) (take possession of) (copy) computer data or programs.
3. The defendant acted intentionally.[1]

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose of (modifying) (destroying) (accessing) (taking possession of) (copying) computer data or programs. It further requires that the defendant knew that (he) (she) did not have authorization.

[Meaning of "Computer Program"]

["Computer program"[2] means an ordered set of instructions or statements that, when executed by a computer, causes the computer to process data.]

[Meaning of "Computer Data"]

["Computer data"[3] means a representation of information, knowledge, facts, concepts, or instructions that has been prepared or is being prepared in a formalized manner and has been processed, is being processed, or is intended to be processed in a computer system[4] or computer network.[5] Data may be in any form, including computer printouts, magnetic storage media, punched cards, and as stored in the memory of the computer.]

[Meaning of "Computer"]

["Computer"[6] means an electronic device that performs logical, arithmetic, and memory functions by manipulating electronic or magnetic impulses and includes all input, output, processing, storage, computer software,[7] and communications facilities that are connected or related to a computer in a computer system or computer network.]

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF A FACT INCREASING THE PENALTY AS SET FORTH IN § 943.70(2)(b)2., 3g., 3r., or 4. IS ALLEGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT IT IS PRESENT:[8]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

["Was the offense committed (to defraud) (to obtain property[9])?"][10]

["Did the offense result in damage valued at more than $2,500?"][11]

["Did the offense cause an interruption or impairment of (governmental operations) (public communication) (transportation) (a supply of water, gas, or other public service)?"][12]

["Did the offense create a situation of unreasonable risk and high probability of death or great bodily harm to another?"][13]

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to the question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1504 was originally published in 1987 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in October 2006 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text.

Wis JI Criminal 1504 is drafted for any of the offenses defined in Sec. 943.70(2)(a)1.-5. Those offenses are all the same except for the verb used. The instruction places the alternative verbs in parentheses. For a violation of § 943.70(2)(a)6., which defines a different type of act – disclosing restricted access codes or other restricted access information to unauthorized persons – see Wis JI Criminal 1505. For violations of § 943.70(3)(a)2., see Wis JI Criminal 1506.

Wisconsin's computer crime statute is apparently based on proposed legislation drafted by the National Association for State Information Systems Standing Committee on Security, Privacy, and Confidentiality (per Drafting File for 1981 Assembly Bill 744, Legislative Reference Bureau). For a general discussion of the statute, see Levy, "Criminal Liability for Computer Offenses and the New Wisconsin Computer Crimes Act," Wisconsin Bar Bulletin, March 1983.

In State v. Corcoran, 186 Wis.2d 616, 522 N.W.2d 226 (Ct. App. 1994), the court rejected constitutional challenges to § 943.70 based on claims of impairment of contract, involuntary servitude, vagueness, and overbreadth. Because it found that the defendant did not have the protected copyright interest he claimed, the court found it unnecessary to decide whether the federal Copyrights Act preempts the enforcement of § 943.70. 186 Wis.2d 616, 628.

1. The instruction substitutes the word "intentionally," which is well defined in the Wisconsin Criminal Code, for the statute's "willfully, knowingly." The meaning of "intentionally," which requires purpose and knowledge, ought to adequately cover the intended meaning of "willfully, knowingly." This is consistent with the approach taken in several cases where Wisconsin appellate courts have interpreted "willfully" as having the same meaning as "intentionally." See, for example, State v. Hurd, 135 Wis.2d 266, 400 N.W.2d 42 (Ct. App. 1986), and State v. Cissell, 127 Wis.2d 205, 378 N.W.2d 691 (1985).

2. This definition is the one provided in § 943.70(1)(c). Use when the case involves a "computer program."

3. This definition is the one provided in § 943.70(1)(f). Use when the case involves "computer data."

4. "Computer system" is defined in § 943.70(1)(e) as "a set of related computer equipment, hardware or software."

5. "Computer network" is defined in § 943.70(1)(b) as "the interconnection of communication lines with a computer through remote terminals or a complex consisting of 2 or more interconnected computers."

6. This is the definition provided in § 943.70(1)(a).

7. "Computer software" is defined in § 943.70(1)(d) as "a set of computer programs, procedures or associated documentation used in the operation of a computer system."

8. The basic penalty for a violation of § 943.70(2) is that of a Class A misdemeanor. But the penalty increases in seriousness if facts identified in § 943.70(2)(b)2.-4. are present. A violation is a Class I felony if the offense is committed to defraud or to obtain property B sub. (2)(b)2. A violation is a Class F felony if the damage is greater than $2,500 B sub. (2)(b)3g. B or if it causes an interruption or impairment of governmental operations or public communication, of transportation, or of a supply of water, gas, or other public service B sub. (2)(b)3r. B or if the offense creates a situation of unreasonable risk and high probability of death or great bodily harm to another B sub. (2)(b)4.

The instruction suggests handling these penalty-increasing facts by submitting special questions to the jury.

9. "Property," as it applies to this offense, is defined as follows in § 943.70(1)(h):

"Property" means anything of value, including but not limited to financial instruments, information, electronically produced data, computer software and computer programs.

10. See sub. (2)(b)2.

11. See sub. (2)(b)3g.

12. See sub. (2)(b)3r.

13. See sub. (2)(b)4.

1505 COMPUTER CRIME — § 943.70(2)(a)6.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Computer crime, as defined by § 943.70(2)(a)6. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who willfully, knowingly, and without authorization discloses restricted access codes or other restricted access information to unauthorized persons.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant disclosed restricted access codes or other restricted access information[1] to (name of person).
2. (Name of person) was not authorized to receive the restricted information.
3. The defendant had no authorization to disclose restricted access codes or other restricted access information to (name of person).
4. The defendant acted intentionally.[2]

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose of disclosing restricted access codes or other restricted access information to an unauthorized person. It further requires that the defendant knew that (he) (she) did not have authorization and knew that the disclosure was to an unauthorized person.

Deciding About Purpose and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find purpose and knowledge. Purpose and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon purpose and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

ADD ONE OF THE FOLLOWING IF A FACT INCREASING THE PENALTY AS SET FORTH IN § 943.70(2)(b)2., 3g., 3r., or 4. IS ALLEGED AND THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT IT IS PRESENT:[3]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

["Was the offense committed (to defraud) (to obtain property[4])?"][5]

["Did the offense result in damage valued at more than $2,500?"][6]

["Did the offense cause an interruption or impairment of (governmental operations) (public communication) (transportation) (a supply of water, gas, or other public service)?"][7]

["Did the offense create a situation of unreasonable risk and high probability of death or great bodily harm to another?"][8]

Before you may answer this question "yes," the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the answer to the question is "yes."

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1505 was approved by the Committee in October 2006. Non-substantive editorial corrections were approved in October 2008.

Wis JI Criminal 1505 is drafted for a violation of § 943.70(2)(a)6. For any of the offenses defined in Sec. 943.70(2)(a)1. 5. see Wis JI Criminal 1504. For violations of § 943.70(3)(a)2., see Wis JI Criminal 1506.

1. The Wisconsin Supreme Court interpreted the phrase "other restricted access information" as "referring to another type of information that is not 'data,' yet is critical to the protection of computers." Burbank Grease Services v. Sokolowski, 2006 WI 103, par. 37, 294 Wis.2d 274, 717 N.W.2d 781. The reference to "data" is to "data" as defined in s. 943.70(1)(f). "A plain reading of terms stated in the alternative leads us to conclude that subd. 6 was meant to prohibit disclosing information that would permit an unauthorized persons to access restricted or confidential information." Par. 38

2. The instruction substitutes the word "intentionally," which is well defined in the Wisconsin Criminal Code, for the statute's "willfully, knowingly." The meaning of "intentionally," which requires purpose and knowledge, ought to adequately cover the intended meaning of "willfully, knowingly." 1506 COMPUTER CRIME — § 943.70(3)(a)2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Computer crime, as defined by § 943.70(3)(a)2. of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who willfully, knowingly, and without authorization (destroys) (uses) (takes) (damages) a computer system or computer network.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

2. The defendant had no authorization to (destroy) (use) (take) (damage) the computer (system) (network).
3. The defendant acted intentionally.[1]

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose of (destroying) (using) (taking) (damaging) the computer (system) (network). It further requires that the defendant knew that (he) (she) did not have authorization.

[Meaning of "Computer System"]

1508 CRIMES AGAINST FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS: §§ 943.80 - 943.92

Subchapter IV, Chapter 943, comprises statutes defining crimes against financial institutions. It was created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 212. Effective date: April 11, 2006.

There are published instructions for four offenses in this subchapter:

JI 1512 Fraud Against A Financial Institution – § 943.82(1)

JI 1470 Transfer Of Encumbered Property – § 943.84

NOTE: This is former § 943.25, renumbered by 2005 Wisconsin Act 212.

JI 1522 Robbery Of A Financial Institution – § 943.87

JI 1524-26 Money Laundering – § 943.895

Most of the other crimes in the subchapter define conduct directed at financial institutions that is also prohibited by general criminal statutes for which there are published instructions.

The following crimes against financial institutions have counterparts in the referenced general criminal statutes:

943.81	Theft from a financial institution	943.20(1)(a) Theft Wis JI-Criminal 1441
943.82(2)	Fraud to obtain another's personal Identifying information	943.201 "Identity theft" Wis JI-Criminal 1458, 1459
943.83	Loan fraud	943.20(1)(a) Theft by fraud Wis JI-Criminal 1453 A & B
943.85	Bribery involving a financial institution	946.10 Bribery of public officers a and employees

		Wis JI-Criminal 1720, 1721, 1723
943.86	Extortion against a financial institution	943.30 Threat to injure or accuse of crime Wis JI-Criminal 1473B

CAUTION: Before using any of the general instructions referenced above, compare carefully the elements of the general crimes and the elements of the financial institution crimes. There are significant differences in some of the crime definitions. Further, a different penalty structure applies to the financial institution crimes. See § 943.91.

There are three crimes against financial institutions for which instructions have not been drafted that do not have counterparts in the general criminal statutes:

1512 FRAUD AGAINST A FINANCIAL INSTITUTION — § 943.82(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Fraud against a financial institution, as defined in § 943.82(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who obtains money, funds, credits, assets, securities, or other property owned by or under the custody or control of a financial institution by means of false pretenses, representations, or promises, or by use of any fraudulent device, scheme, artifice, or monetary instrument.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant obtained (money) (funds) (credits) (assets) (securities) (property) owned by or under the custody or control of a financial institution.[1]

   "Financial institution" means a (bank) (savings bank) (savings and loan association) (trust company) (credit union) (mortgage banker) (mortgage broker)[2] chartered under the laws of this state, another state or territory, or under the laws of the United States.[3]

2. The defendant obtained (specify what was obtained) [4] [by means of false (pretenses) (representations) (promises)] [by use of any fraudulent (device) (scheme) (artifice) (monetary instrument)].[5]

A person obtains (money) (specify what was obtained) [6] [by means of false (pretenses) (representations) (promises)] [by use of any fraudulent (device) (scheme) (artifice) (monetary instrument)] when [they are made] [it is used] with knowledge that [they are] [it is] false and with the intent to obtain money.[7]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1512 was approved by the Committee in October 2008.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.82(1), which is part of Subchapter IV, Chapter 943, created by 2005 Wisconsin Act 212. Effective date: April 11, 2006.

Penalties for violations of § 943.82(1) are provided in § 943.91. Note that the penalties are higher than for similar violations of § 943.2)(1)(d), the general theft by fraud statute.

1. The options in parentheses are those set forth in the offense definition. Choose the option that matches the evidence in the case.

2. The options in parentheses are the most common of the alternatives included in the definition of "financial institution" provided in § 943.80(2). The definition also includes "a company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control" of the specified institutions. The definition includes cross-references to other definitions for some of the specified institutions:

- bank – §214.01(1)(c)
- savings bank – §214.01(1)(t)

- credit union – §186.01(2)
- mortgage banker – §224.71(3)(a)
- mortgage broker – §224.71(4)(a)

3. Proof of chartered status was an issue in State v. Eady, 2016 WI App 12, 366 Wis.2d 711, 875 N.W.2d 139, which dealt with a violation of § 943.87. In Eady, the court of appeals apparently agreed with the defendant's contention that "chartered" status was an element of the crime, but found that it was established by circumstantial evidence.

4. Use the term selected for the first element.

5. Choose one of the two bracketed alternatives and choose one of the terms in parentheses from the bracket selected.

6. Use the term selected for the first element.

7. The Committee added this statement even though the statute does not specifically provide for it. Section 943.82(1) does not use the word "intentionally," or other "intent terms," as the regular theft by fraud statute does. Compare § 943.20(1)(d): "Obtains title to property of another person by intentionally deceiving the person with a false representation which is known to be false, made with intent to defraud, and which does defraud the person to whom it is made."

Section 939.23(1) provides: "When criminal intent is an element of a crime in chs. 939 to 951, such intent is indicated by the term 'intentionally', the phrase 'with intent to', the phrase 'with intent that', or some form of the verbs 'know' or 'believe'." The Committee generally applies the converse of this rule. That is, when one of the "intent terms" is not used, the statute does not require criminal intent as an element of the crime. However, that interpretation may lead to harsh results under § 943.82(1) in that inadvertent minor errors in, for example, a loan application, could be the basis for criminal liability.

In the Committee's judgment, the added statement assures that the "false representation" alternative is treated consistently with the fair implication of the other alternatives in the statute. There are two categories of conduct prohibited by § 943.82(1):

- obtaining funds, etc., "by means of false pretenses, representations, or promises. . ." "Pretense" is defined as "a false appearance or action intended to deceive." American Heritage Dictionary of the English Language, 3rd Ed. (1992). A "false promise" strongly implies a promise made with an intent to deceive. To be consistent, the "false representation" should also be construed to include knowledge that the representation was false and an intent to use it to obtain funds.

- obtaining funds, etc., "by use of any fraudulent device, scheme, artifice, or monetary instrument . . ." Preceding these alternatives with "fraudulent" indicates an intentional act done with intent to obtain funds.

There is a basis in the text of the statute for adding a mental element in that it applies to "one who obtains funds . . . by means of false . . . representations . . ." [Emphasis added.] This suggests a connection between the making of a false representation and obtaining the funds. In a roughly similar situation, appellate courts have required a connection [a "nexus"] between the possession of a dangerous weapon and the underlying crime for purposes of the dangerous weapon penalty enhancer under § 939.63.

See State v. Peete, 185 Wis.2d 4, 517 N.W.2d 149 (1994).

1522 ROBBERY OF A FINANCIAL INSTITUTION — § 943.87

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Robbery of a financial institution, as defined in section 943.87 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who by use of force or threat to use imminent force takes from an individual or in the presence of an individual money or property that is owned by or under the custody or control of a financial institution.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name financial institution) was a financial institution.

   "Financial institution" means a (bank) (savings bank) (savings and loan association) (trust company) (credit union) (mortgage banker) (mortgage broker)[1] chartered under the laws of this state, another state or territory, or under the laws of the United States.[2]

2. (Name financial institution) was the owner of or had the custody or control of [money] [property].[3]

   "Owner" means a person in possession of property.[4]

3. The defendant took and carried away[5] [money] [property] from an individual or from the presence[6] of an individual.

4. The defendant acted forcibly.[7]

"Forcibly" means that the defendant [actually used force against (name) with the intent to overcome or prevent (his) (her) physical resistance or physical power of resistance to the taking or carrying away of the property][8] [or] [threatened the imminent use of force against (name) with the intent to compel (name) to submit to the taking or carrying away of the property. "Imminent" means "near at hand" or "on the point of happening"[9]].

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all four elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1522 was approved by the Committee in July 2016.

This instruction is drafted for violations of § 943.87, Robbery of a financial institution. The offense definition is similar to that for unarmed robbery under § 943.32(1), but differs in at least one significant way: "intent to steal" is not required. In addition, a violation of § 943.87 is a Class C felony; a violation of § 943.32(1) is a Class E felony.

1. The options in parentheses are the most common of the alternatives included in the definition of "financial institution" provided in § 943.80(2). The definition also includes "a company that controls, is controlled by, or is under common control" of the specified institutions. The definition includes cross-references to other definitions for some of the specified institutions:

- bank – §214.01(1)(c)
- savings bank – §214.01(1)(t)

- credit union – §186.01(2)
- mortgage banker – §224.71(3)(a)
- mortgage broker – §224.71(4)(a)

2. Proof of chartered status was an issue in State v. Eady, 2016 WI App 12, 366 Wis.2d 711, 875 N.W.2d 139. In Eady, the court of appeals apparently agreed with the defendant's contention that "chartered" status was an element of the crime, but found that it was established by circumstantial evidence.

3. "Property" for the purposes of robbery under § 943.32 is the same as "property" for the purposes of theft; which is defined in § 943.20(2)(a). See Baldwin, "Criminal Misappropriations In Wisconsin – Part II," 44 Marq. L. Rev. 430, 450 (1961). The value of the property is immaterial. The Committee concluded that the definition should be carried over to this offense.

4. "The person who has possession of the property" is the definition of owner provided in § 943.32(3). The Committee concluded that the definition should be carried over to this offense.

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), a case dealing with robbery under § 943.32, the court held that a person qualifies as an "owner" if his possession of the property is "actual or constructive," citing § 971.33. In Mosely, all employees of a restaurant were held to be "owners" of the restaurant's money kept in an office desk since each had dominion and control over it. As to jewelry and a purse on an office shelf, only the person to whom they actually belonged was an "owner," since only she had any control over or interest in the property.

5. See Wis JI-Criminal 1480, the instruction for armed robbery under § 943.32, footnote 6, pointing out that case law has established that robbery requires "carrying away" – "asportation" is the term used. The Committee concluded that the requirement should be carried over to this offense.

6. When there is a dispute on the facts as to precisely from where the property was taken – the person or the presence of the one in possession – then add this sentence: "It is immaterial whether the property is taken from the person or the presence of the one in possession." "Presence of the owner" means such a proximity to the owner as will enable the defendant when he takes the property to use or threaten the imminent use of force. See Wis JI-Criminal 1480, footnote 7. In certain cases, property may be taken from both the person and the presence of the one in possession. Then the words "or both" should be added at this point.

In State v. Mosely, 102 Wis.2d 636, 307 N.W.2d 200 (1981), the court held that "from his person or presence" did not require that the victim actually be aware of the taking: ". . . where the victim has been intimidated or placed in fear by use or threat of force . . . and the property is taken from an area sufficiently close and under his control that, but for the robber's intimidation or force he could have prevented the taking, the taking is from his "presence" under § 943.32(1); and this conclusion is not defeated by an unawareness of the taking as it occurs." 102 Wis.2d at 649.

7. This paragraph restates the statutory requirement that the defendant act "by force or threat to use imminent force" by phrasing them as alternative ways of satisfying the core requirement that the defendant act "forcibly." This is how the use/threat of force issue is handled for purposes of robbery under

§ 943.32. The Committee concluded that it carried over to this offense. Footnote 13 to Wis JI-Criminal 1480 provides in part:

> The Committee concluded that this properly emphasizes the intent of the statute to require a link between the taking of the property and the defendant's use of force. The Committee concluded that it is not necessary to elect between "use of force" and "threat of imminent force" alternatives, although in the usual case, election would clarify the issue for the jury and should be done where possible. In support of the proposition that election is not necessary, see Manson v. State, and Cheers v. State, cited in note 1, supra. As to jury unanimity generally, also see State v. Baldwin, 101 Wis.2d 441, 304 N.W.2d 742 (1981), and Holland v. State, 91 Wis.2d 134, 280 N.W.2d 288 (1979); compare United States v. Gipson, 553 F.2d 453 (5th Cir. 1977).

8. It is robbery under § 943.32 if force is used to accomplish the "carrying away" of the property as well as the "taking." State v. Grady, 93 Wis.2d 1, 286 N.W.2d 607 (Ct. App. 1979). The Committee concluded the same rule applies here.

9. The definition of "imminent" is adapted from Black's Law Dictionary, p. 884 (4th Edition, 1951).

1524 MONEY LAUNDERING — § 943.895(2)(a)1 - 2.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Money laundering, as defined by § 943.895(2)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly [(receives or acquires) (conducts a transaction involving)] [(directs) (plans) (organizes) (initiates) (finances) (manages) (supervises) (facilitates) the transportation or transfer of] proceeds that the person knows are derived from unlawful activity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly [(received or acquired) (conducted a transaction[1] involving)] [(directed) (planned) (organized) (initiated) (financed) (managed) (supervised) (facilitated) the transportation or transfer of] proceeds.

   "Proceeds" means property or anything of value acquired or derived directly or indirectly from, produced through, realized through, or caused by an act or omission.[2]

2. The proceeds were derived from unlawful activity.[3]

   ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE ALLEGED UNLAWFUL ACTIVITY INVOLVES THE COMMISSION OF A CRIME AND A UNIFORM INSTRUCTION FOR THAT UNLAWFUL ACTIVITY EXISTS.

[The State alleges that the proceeds were derived from the unlawful activity of (insert unlawful activity). The State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the proceeds were derived from (insert unlawful activity).

(Insert unlawful activity) is committed by one who

LIST THE ELEMENTS OF THE UNLAWFUL ACTIVITY AS IDENTIFIED IN THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION. ADD DEFINITIONS FROM THE UNIFORM INSTRUCTION AS NECESSARY.][4]

3. The defendant knew that the proceeds were derived from unlawful activity.

Knowledge that the proceeds were derived from unlawful activity does not require knowledge of the specific nature of the unlawful activity involved.[5]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

IF FELONY MONEY LAUNDERING IS CHARGED, A JURY DETERMINATION OF VALUE MUST BE MADE. ADD THE FOLLOWING IF THE EVIDENCE WOULD SUPPORT A FINDING THAT THE VALUE WAS MORE THAN THE AMOUNT STATED IN THE QUESTION.[6]

[Determining Value]

[If you find the defendant guilty, you must answer the following question:

("Was the value of the proceeds involved in the transaction more $100,000?"

Answer: "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the proceeds involved in the transaction more than $10,000?"

Answer "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the proceeds involved in the transaction more than $5,000?"

Answer "yes" or "no.")

("Was the value of the proceeds involved in the transaction more than $2,500?"

Answer "yes" or "no.")

Before you may answer "yes," you must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that the value of the proceeds was more than the amount stated in the question.

If you are not so satisfied, you must answer the question "no."]

ADD THE FOLLOWING FOR FELONY CASES INVOLVING MORE THAN ONE VIOLATION "PURSUANT TO A SINGLE INTENT AND DESIGN," AS PROVIDED IN § 943.895(2)(c).[7]

[In determining the value of the total proceeds involved in the transaction, you may consider all violations that you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design.]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1524 was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

Section 943.895(2)(a) was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 161 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

Wis JI-Criminal 1524 was drafted for the offense defined in Sec. 943.895(2)(a)1 -2. For violations of § 943.895(2)(a)3., see Wis JI-Criminal 1525. For a violation of § 943.895(2)(a)4., see Wis JI-Criminal 1526.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the total proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds specific amounts. See footnote 4, below.

A financial institution that has complied with all applicable money laundering reporting requirements under federal law is not criminally liable under § 943.895(4).

1. Sec. 943.895(1)(a) provides that "'transaction' has the meaning given in § 946.79(1)(f)."

2. This is the definition of "proceeds" provided in § 943.895(1)(a).

3. The statute does not define "unlawful activity," and a review of the legislative history indicates that there was a decision not to do so. If a definition is requested, guidance as to its meaning may be gained from the Black's Law Dictionary (2nd ed.) definition, which in part defines the term as follows:

"An act that is contrary to or violates a law that exists."

The Committee concluded that the term clearly includes criminal conduct, and if criminal conduct is alleged as the unlawful activity the crime should be defined for the jury.

4. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "unlawful activity" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)]. In the absence of a uniform instruction, the court must develop and present the elements of the alleged unlawful activity.

5. See § 943.895(2)(b).

6. The jury must make a finding of the value of the proceeds if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (e) are as follows:

- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;

- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

7. Section 943.895(2)(c) sets forth the rule relating to the pleading and prosecution of money laundering cases. This subsection allows the prosecution of more than one violation as a single crime if "the violations were pursuant to a single intent and design."

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (2)(c): more than one violation, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 943.895(2)(c). But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 943.895(2)(c), so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

> Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see: People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1525 MONEY LAUNDERING — § 943.895(2)(a)3.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Money laundering, as defined by § 943.895(2)(a)3 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly (gives) (sells) (transfers) (trades) (invests) (conceals) (transports) or otherwise makes available proceeds that the person knows are intended to be used for the purpose of committing or furthering the commission of unlawful activity.

1526 MONEY LAUNDERING — § 943.895(2)(a)4.

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Money laundering, as defined by § 943.895(2)(a)4 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who knowingly conducts a transaction designed in whole or in part to [(conceal) (disguise) the nature, location, source, ownership, or control of proceeds obtained through unlawful activity] [avoid a transaction reporting requirement under federal law], and the person knows the proceeds are derived from unlawful activity.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following four elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant knowingly conducted a transaction[1] involving proceeds.

   "Proceeds" means property or anything of value acquired or derived directly or indirectly from, produced through, realized through, or caused by an act or omission.[2]

3. The defendant knew that the proceeds were derived from unlawful activity.

Knowledge that the proceeds were derived from unlawful activity does not require knowledge of the specific nature of the unlawful activity involved.[5]

4. The transaction made by the defendant was designed in whole or in part to [(conceal) (disguise) the nature, location, source, ownership, or control of the proceeds obtained through unlawful activity.] [avoid a transaction reporting requirement under federal law.]

Wis JI-Criminal 1526 was approved by the Committee in October 2022.

Section 943.895(2)(a) was created by 2019 Wisconsin Act 161 [effective date: March 5, 2020].

Wis JI-Criminal 1526 is drafted for the offense defined in Sec. 943.895(2)(a)4. For violations of § 943.895(2)(a)1-2., see Wis JI-Criminal 1524. For a violation of § 943.895(2)(a)3., see Wis JI-Criminal 1525.

The basic offense is a Class A misdemeanor. The penalty increases to a felony if the value of the total proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds specific amounts. See footnote 4, below.

A financial institution that has complied with all applicable money laundering reporting requirements under federal law is not criminally liable under § 943.895(4).

1. Sec. 943.895(1)(a) provides that "'transaction' has the meaning given in § 946.79(1)(f)."

2. This is the definition of "proceeds" provided in § 943.895(1)(a).

3. The statute does not define "unlawful activity," and a review of the legislative history indicates that there was a decision not to do so. If a definition is requested, guidance as to its meaning may be gained from the Black's Law Dictionary (2nd ed.) definition, which in part defines the term as follows:

"An act that is contrary to or violates a law that exists."

The Committee concluded that the term clearly includes criminal conduct, and if criminal conduct is alleged as the unlawful activity the crime should be defined for the jury.

4. The Committee recommends that a complete listing of the elements of the "unlawful activity" be provided. Decisions of the Wisconsin Court of Appeals have reached this conclusion with respect to bail jumping under § 946.49 [State v. Henning, 2003 WI App 54, ¶25, 261 Wis.2d 664, 660 N.W.2d 698], and intimidation of a victim under § 940.44 [State v. Thomas, 161 Wis.2d 616, 624, 468 N.W.2d 729 (Ct. App. 1991)]. In the absence of a uniform instruction, the court must develop and present the elements of the alleged unlawful activity.

5. See § 943.895(2)(b).

6. The jury must make a finding of the value of the proceeds if the felony offense is charged and if the evidence supports a finding that the required amount is involved. Heyroth v. State, 275 Wis. 104, 81 N.W.2d 56 (1957). While value may not, strictly speaking, be an element of the crime, it determines the range of permissible penalties and should be established "beyond a reasonable doubt." The Committee concluded that if the misdemeanor offense is charged, the jury need not make a finding as to value.

The penalties provided in subs. (3)(a) through (e) are as follows:

- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction does not exceed $2,500, the offense is a Class A misdemeanor;
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $2,500 but not $5,000, the offense is a Class I felony;
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $5,000 but not $10,000, the offense is a Class H felony;
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $10,000, the offense is a Class G felony; and,
- if the total value of the proceeds involved in the transaction exceeds $100,000, the offense is a Class F felony.

The questions in the instruction omit the upper limits of the categories for Class I, Class H, and Class G felonies; it is no defense that the value was actually greater than the amount alleged. More than one question may be presented to the jury, however. If the evidence would allow a reasonable jury to find, for example, that the value did not exceed $10,000 but did exceed $5,000, the two relevant questions could be submitted.

7. Section 943.895(2)(c) sets forth the rule relating to the pleading and prosecution of money laundering cases. This subsection allows the prosecution of more than one violation as a single crime if "the violations were pursuant to a single intent and design."

The material in the instruction addresses the situation defined in subsec. (2)(c): more than one violation, pursuant to a single intent and design. There is no Wisconsin case law interpreting this aspect of § 943.895(2)(c). But the Committee's conclusion that it may be dealt with most effectively as part of the value question is supported by the case law on related issues, as described below.

State v. Spraggin, 71 Wis.2d 604, 239 N.W.2d 297 (1976), dealt with the receipt of several articles of stolen property. Spraggin was charged with a felony offense, based on the receipt of multiple stolen articles (valued at more than $500) at one time. The applicable statute, § 943.34, did not have a provision like § 943.895(2)(c), so the court held that lumping multiple articles together was proper only if they were received at one time. If there were separate receipts, separate misdemeanor charges would have been required, and a felony charge could not be supported. The case was presented to the jury as a felony, but the jury found the value of the goods received as $180. The court entered judgment on the basis of the felony conviction, apparently relying on the prosecutor's contention that a 25-inch color TV was worth more than $500. The supreme court reversed, holding that, at most, two misdemeanors were committed.

The Spraggin court held that presenting the case to the jury solely as a felony "was in effect a decision on the grade of the offense, which is clearly an issue only for the jury." (81 Wis.2d 604, 615, citing State v. Heyroth, the case holding that finding value in a theft case is for the jury.) The court went on to point out that there are optional ways of proceeding in a case like this:

Since variances between the allegations and the proof may be beyond the control of the state, see:

People v. Smith (1945), 26 Cal.2d 854, 161 Pac.2d 941; State v. Niehuser (Or. App. 1975), 533 Pac.2d 834; People v. Roberts (1960), 182 Cal.App.2d 431, 6 Cal. Rptr. 161, one option is to charge in the alternative. Likewise, the defense could request, or the state on its own, could submit the alternative charges of a single or multiple receptions, when, as in cases of lesser included charges, see: Devroy v. State (1942), 239 Wis. 466, 1 N.W.2d 875; State v. Melvin (1970), 49 Wis.2d 246, 181 N.W.2d 490, a reasonable view of the evidence reveals that there is a reasonable basis for conviction on either. With the alternatives phrased in terms of separate or joint receptions of multiple stolen items, the jury may decide on the evidence and thereafter grade the offense through the establishment of value.

71 Wis.2d 604, 616-17.

Submitting the issue to the jury seems to be required by the Spraggin case because it goes to "the grade of the offense." This is consistent with the position the Committee has taken in similar situations in the past: if a fact determines whether a different range of penalties applies (e.g., changes a crime from a misdemeanor to a felony or from one class of felony to another), it is for the jury; if a fact only influences the length of possible sentence within a statutory range, it is for the judge.

The Committee concluded that it would be more effective, or at least more efficient, to leave the multiple item decision for the value question alone. The instruction for the offense can be used without change for either a misdemeanor or a felony charge. If satisfied that the offense was committed with regard to "any property," the jury should find the defendant guilty. Then, in determining value, the jury is instructed to "consider all thefts you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt were from the same owner and committed by the defendant pursuant to a single intent and design."

1530 ENTICING CHILDREN FOR IMMORAL PURPOSES — § 944.12)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1530 was originally published in 1966 and was revised in 1979, 1980, and 1983. It was withdrawn in 1989.

This instruction is withdrawn because the statute with which it deals was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. That Act created a new offense with the same name but differently defined. See§ 948.07 and Wis JI Criminal 2134.

1532 INCEST: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE BETWEEN BLOOD RELATIVES — § 944.06)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Incest, as defined in § 944.06 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has nonmarital sexual intercourse with a person (he) (she) knows is a blood relative and such relative is in fact related in a degree within which the marriage of the parties is prohibited by the law of this state.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name of victim).

REFER TO WIS JI-CRIMINAL 2101B FOR DEFINITION OF "SEXUAL INTERCOURSE" AND INSERT THE APPROPRIATE DEFINITION HERE.[1]

2. The defendant knew that (name of victim) was related to (him) (her) by blood.[2]

3. (Name of victim) was related to the defendant in a degree of kinship closer than second cousin.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

This instruction was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1510 in 1983 and was revised in 1989. It was renumbered Wis JI-Criminal 1532 and revised in 2007. It was revised again in 2008, 2010, and 2021. The 2010 revision changed the definition of "sexual intercourse" as described in footnote 1. The 2021 revision added the table showing degrees of kinship found at s. 990.001(16) of the Wisconsin Statutes to the comment. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added the paragraph "Deciding About Knowledge" to the main text of the instruction.

Wis JI-Criminal 1510 was originally drafted to apply to incest offenses involving father and daughter. The 2007 revision revised it to apply generally to all "blood relatives" as provided by the statute.

Incest offenses involving children as victims are covered by a separate statute – see § 948.06, Incest With A Child, and Wis JI-Criminal 2130 and 2131.

1. 2009 Wisconsin Act 13 amended§ 944.06 to provide that "sexual intercourse" has the meaning provided in § 948.01(6). Wis JI-Criminal 2101B provides definitions for the alternatives presented by the statutory definition.

2. The knowledge requirement is included in the statutory definition of the offense. Note that the knowledge required is that the defendant and the victim are "related." The statute further requires that they be related "in a degree closer than second cousin," but the knowledge requirement apparently does not extend to the degree of relation.

3. This restates the requirement of the statutory definition that refers to "related in a degree within which the marriage of the parties is prohibited by the law of this state." Section 765.03 provides that "[n]o marriage shall be contracted . . . between persons who are nearer of kin than second cousins . . ." "Second cousin" is defined in Black's Law Dictionary (7th Edition) as follows: "A person related to another by descending from the same great-grandfather or great-grandmother." For a chart showing the degrees of kinship see § 990.001(16) and the Comment of Wis JI-Criminal 2130.

Degree of Kinship

The following chart is based on the table showing degrees of kinship found at s. 990.001(16) of the Wisconsin Statutes. The column at the far right has been added to show how the various degrees of kinship compare to second cousins. The added column is based on the chart appearing at page 48, Decedents' Estates and Trusts, by Ritchie, Alford, and Effland, 4th Edition, © 1971, Foundation Press. Note that the degree of kinship of second cousins is indicated by the number "6." Thus, all those degrees indicated by the number "5" or less are "related in a degree closer than second cousin" and fall within the prohibition of s. 948.096(1).

1535 PUBLIC FORNICATION: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE IN PUBLIC — § 944.15

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Public fornication, as defined in § 944.15 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who has sexual intercourse in public.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant had sexual intercourse with (name other person).

   "Sexual intercourse" means the penetration of the penis of the male into the genital organ of the female. Only vulvar penetration, however slight, is required. Emission of semen is not required.[1]

2. The alleged act of sexual intercourse took place in public.

   "In public" means in a place where other people are present or where other people can observe the act.[2]

3. The defendant knew or had reason to know the alleged act was observable by or in the presence of others.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1535 was originally published in 1983 and revised in 1996, 2008, and 2016. The 2008 revision involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive changes to the text. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added the paragraph "Deciding About Knowledge" to the main text of the instruction.

This instruction is for the only remaining offense defined by § 944.15(2) sexual intercourse in public. An offense formerly covered by the same statute, sexual intercourse with a person 16 years old or older but younger than 18, is now defined in § 948.09, see Wis JI Criminal 2138.

Section 944.15 was created in roughly its present form by 1983 Wisconsin Act 17. The statute was revised by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332 to remove the offense involving minors to § 948.09. The statute reads as follows:

> 944.15 Public fornication.
> (1) In this section, "in public" means in a place where or in a manner such that the person knows or has reason to know that his or her conduct is observable by or in the presence of persons other than the person with whom he or she is having sexual intercourse.
> (2) Whoever has sexual intercourse in public is guilty of a Class A misdemeanor.

1. The definition of "sexual intercourse" is adapted from that found in § 939.22(36). The definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 940.225(5)(b) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944.

2. The definition of "in public" found in subsec. (1) of § 944.15, see above, appears to create two elements of this offense. One element is that the act take place in the presence of others or where observable by others. The second element is that the defendant know or have reason to know that the act is in the presence of or observable by others. Rather than lump the knowledge requirement in with the definition of "in public," the Committee decided it was preferable to treat it as a separate element.

The definition of "in public" used in the instruction is adapted from the statutory definition. No change in meaning is intended.

3. See note 2, supra.

1536 FORNICATION: SEXUAL INTERCOURSE WITH A PERSON YOUNGER THAN 18 YEARS — § 944.15)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1536 was originally published in 1983. It was withdrawn in 1989.

This instruction was withdrawn because the statute with which it deals was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. Essentially the same offense was recreated as § 948.09. See Wis JI Criminal 2138.

1537 SEXUAL GRATIFICATION IN PUBLIC — § 944.17(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Sexual gratification, as defined in § 944.17(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who commits an act of sexual gratification in public involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed an act of sexual gratification with (name other person) involving the sex organ of one person and the (mouth) (anus) of another.[1]
2. The alleged act of sexual gratification took place in public.

   "In public" means in a place where other people are present or where other people can observe the act.[2]
3. The defendant knew or had reason to know the alleged act was observable by or in the presence of others.[3]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1537 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1996, 1998, 2008, and 2020. This revision was approved by the Committee in December 2023; it added the paragraph "Deciding About Knowledge" to the main text of the instruction. Additionally, the statutory citation within the document was updated in accordance with the changes made by the 2019 Wisconsin Act 162.

This instruction is for the offense defined by § 944.17 — sexual gratification in public. Offenses involving acts of sexual gratification with a person younger than 18 were formerly covered by § 944.17(2)(b). That subsection was repealed by 1989 Wisconsin Act 332, which created Chapter 948, Crimes Against Children. Conduct formerly prohibited by § 944.17(2)(b) involving children under the age of 16 is likely to constitute sexual assault of a child under § 948.02. Offenses involving sexual gratification with an animal were formerly covered by § 944.17(2)(c) and (d). Those subsections were repealed by 2019 Wisconsin Act 162 [effective: March 5, 2020].

Section 944.17 was extensively revised by 1983 Wisconsin Act 17. Before the 1983 revision, § 944.17 (1981 82 Stat.) was titled "Sexual Perversion."

Section 944.17(3) was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 165 to read: "Subsection (2) does not apply to a mother's breast-feeding of her child." [Effective date: April 6, 1996.]

1. "Sexual gratification" is not defined in the instruction or in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. Guidance as to its meaning may be gained from the context in which it is used in other statutes. See, for example, §§ 940.225 and 944.31.

For the purposes of this offense, it should not be relevant for whose "sexual gratification" the act was committed. Committing the act "in public" is the key fact making the conduct criminal.

2. "In public" is defined as follows in subsec. (1) of 944.17:

(1) In this section, "in public" means in a place where or in a manner such that the person knows or has reason to know that his or her conduct is observable by or in the presence of persons other than the person with whom he or she is having sexual gratification.

This definition appears to create two separate elements. One element is that the act take place in the presence of others or where observable by others. The second element is that the defendant know or have reason to know that the act is in the presence of or observable by others. Rather than lump the knowledge requirement in with the definition of "in public," the Committee decided it was preferable to treat it as a separate element.

The definition of "in public" used in the instruction is adapted from the statutory definition. No change in meaning is intended.

3. See note 2, supra.

1538 SEXUAL GRATIFICATION WITH A PERSON YOUNGER THAN 18 YEARS — § 944.17(2)(b)

[INSTRUCTION WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1538 was originally published in 1985. It was withdrawn in 1989.

This instruction was withdrawn because the statute with which it deals was repealed by 1987 Wisconsin Act 332, effective July 1, 1989. The conduct formerly covered by this offense is covered by § 948.09, Sexual Intercourse With A Child Age 16 Or Older. The definition of "sexual intercourse" applicable to that offense is broad enough to include all conduct falling within former § 944.17(2)(b). See Wis JI Criminal 2138.

1544A LEWD AND LASCIVIOUS BEHAVIOR: INDECENT ACT OF SEXUAL GRATIFICATION WITH ANOTHER — § 944.20(1)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Lewd and lascivious behavior, as defined in § 944.20(1)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who commits an indecent act of sexual gratification with another with knowledge that they are in the presence of others.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant committed an act of indecent sexual gratification[1].

   This requires that the defendant's conduct offends the sense of decency of the community. It does not include conduct that is generally tolerated by the community at large, but that might disturb an overly sensitive person.

2. The defendant committed the act with another person.

3. The defendant committed the act with knowledge they were in the presence of others.

   This requires that the defendant knew or believed the act occurred in the presence of other persons.[2]

Deciding About Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find out knowledge. Knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1544A was approved by the Committee in December 2023.

This instruction is for the offense defined by § 944.20(1) — lewd and lascivious behavior — committing an indecent act of sexual gratification with another with knowledge that they are in the presence of others. For lewd and lascivious behavior — exposing genitals or pubic area, See Wis JI Criminal 1544B.

1. "Sexual gratification" is not defined in the instruction or in the Wisconsin Criminal Code. Guidance as to its meaning may be gained from the context in which it is used in other statutes. See, for example, §§ 940.225 and 944.31.

For the purposes of this offense, it should not be relevant for whose "sexual gratification" the act was committed.

2. This definition is adapted from the one provided for "in public" provided in §§ 944.15(1) and 944.17(1). Though that definition is not directly applicable to § 944.20, the Committee concluded that it was appropriate to refer to statutes in pari materia to define the common term.

1544B LEWD AND LASCIVIOUS BEHAVIOR: EXPOSING GENITALS OR PUBIC AREA — § 944.20(1)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Lewd and lascivious behavior, as defined in § 944.20(1)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who publicly and indecently exposes genitals or pubic area.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant exposed (genitals) (pubic area).

   "Expose" means to exhibit to the view of another person or persons.

2. The defendant exposed (genitals) (pubic area) publicly, that is, not in a hidden manner, but open to view.

   ["Publicly" means in such a place or manner that the person knows or has reason to know that the conduct is observable by or in the presence of other persons.][1]

3. The defendant exposed (genitals) (pubic area) indecently.

   IF THE COURT FINDS IT IS NECESSARY TO DEFINE "INDECENTLY," ADD THE FOLLOWING

[This requires that the defendant's conduct offends the sense of decency of the community. It does not include conduct that is generally tolerated by the community at large but that might disturb an overly sensitive person.][2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1544B was originally published as Wis JI-Criminal 1544 in 1987 and revised in 1989, 1998, and 2007. The instruction was renumbered and republished without substantive change in December 2023.

This instruction was revised in 1989 to reflect a change made in § 944.20 by 1989 Wisconsin Act 31, (section 2828m). The terms "genitals or pubic area" were substituted for "sex organ." The effective date of the change was August 9, 1989.

Section 944.20(2) was created by 1995 Wisconsin Act 165 to read: "Subsection (1) does not apply to a mother's breast-feeding of her child." [Effective date: April 6, 1996.]

1. The definition of "publicly" is adapted from the one provided for "in public" in §§ 944.15(1) and 944.17(1). Though that definition is not directly applicable to § 944.20, the Committee concluded that it was appropriate to refer to statutes in pari materia to define the common term.

2. The Committee concluded that a dictionary definition of "indecently" would not be helpful. If description of what "indecently" requires is believed to be necessary, the Committee concluded that the jury should be guided in applying a community standard. The material suggested is adapted from the description of "otherwise disorderly conduct" in Wis JI-Criminal 1900.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1545 was originally published in 1967. It was withdrawn by the Committee in June 1983. This note was republished in 1995.

This instruction was withdrawn because the statute with which it dealt, § 944.20(3), was repealed by 1983 Wisconsin Act 17. The effective date of the repeal was May 12, 1983.

1550-1553 COMMITMENT AND CONTINUANCE OF CONTROL UNDER THE SEX CRIMES LAW

[INSTRUCTIONS WITHDRAWN]

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1550 1553 dealt with commitment and continuance of control under the Sex Crimes Law, Chapter 975, Wis. Stats. They were withdrawn by the Committee in 1982. This note was republished in 1995.

Chapter 184, Laws of 1979, modified Chapter 975 with the effect that new commitments and new continuance proceedings could not be initiated after July 1, 1980.

Instructions for commitment as a "sexual predator" are found at Wis JI Criminal 2501-2503, Commitment as a Sexually Violent Person Under Chapter 980, Wis. Stats.

1560 PROSTITUTION: NONMARITAL SEXUAL INTERCOURSE — § 944.30(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Prostitution, as defined in § 944.30(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally has, offers to have, or requests to have nonmarital sexual intercourse for anything of value.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (had) (offered to have) (requested to have) nonmarital sexual intercourse[1] for anything of value.
2. The defendant acted intentionally.

"Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the purpose to have nonmarital sexual intercourse for anything of value.[2]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI Criminal 1560 was originally published in 1986 and revised in 1995 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2015; it involved adoption of a new footnote 1.

Wis JI Criminal 1560 is drafted for a violation of subsec. (1) of § 944.30, an offense involving sexual intercourse. Other subsections prohibit acts of sexual gratification (subsec. (2)), being an inmate of a place of prostitution (subsec. (3)), acts of masturbation (subsec (4)), and acts of sexual contact (subsec. (5)). Uniform instructions have not been prepared for violations of subsecs. (2) (5); it is assumed that Wis JI Criminal 1560 can easily be modified for those cases.

1. If a definition of sexual intercourse is necessary, the following definition provided in § 939.22(36) is suggested:

Sexual intercourse requires only vulvar penetration and does not require emission.

The definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 940.225(5)(c) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944. Likewise, the definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 948.01(6) applies only to offenses in Chapter 948.

2. The statute as originally enacted used the term "money." It was amended to refer to "anything of value" by Chapter 252, Laws of 1969, along with other changes intended to address the "suppression of organized crime."

1561 PROSTITUTION: ACT OF SEXUAL GRATIFICATION — § 944.30(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Prostitution, as defined in § 944.30(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who intentionally commits, offers to commit, or requests to commit an act of sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another for anything of value.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant (committed) (offered to commit) (requested to commit) an act of sexual gratification involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another for anything of value.
2. The defendant acted intentionally.

   "Intentionally" means that the defendant acted with the purpose to commit the act of sexual gratification for anything of value.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1561 was approved by the Committee in August 2005.

Wis JI Criminal 1561 is drafted for a violation of subsec. (2) of § 944.30, an offense involving an act of sexual gratification. Other subsections prohibit acts of sexual intercourse (subsec. (1) – see Wis JI Criminal 1560), being an inmate of a place of prostitution (subsec. (3)), acts of masturbation (subsec (4)), and acts of sexual contact (subsec. (5)). Uniform instructions have not been prepared for violations of subsecs. (3) (5); it is assumed that Wis JI Criminal 1560 or 1561 can easily be modified for those cases.

1564 PATRONIZING PROSTITUTES — § 944.31

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 944.31 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who enters or remains in any place of prostitution with intent to have nonmarital sexual intercourse or to commit an act of sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another, masturbation or sexual contact with a prostitute.

State's Burden of Proof

Before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant entered or remained in a place of prostitution.

   "Place of prostitution" means any place where persons habitually engage in or offer to engage in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact for anything of value.[1]

2. The defendant entered or remained in the place with intent to (have nonmarital sexual intercourse) (commit an act of sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (commit an act of masturbation) (to have sexual contact) with a prostitute.

A prostitute is a person who intentionally engages in sexual intercourse or other sexual acts for anything of value.[2]

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1564 was approved by the Committee in February 2018.

Wis JI Criminal 1564 is drafted for a violation of § 944.31, created by 2017 Wisconsin Act 131 [effective date: December 10, 2017]. First and second violations are Class A misdemeanors; third and subsequent violations are Class I felonies. In the Committee's judgment, the fact that the case involves a third or subsequent violation need not be submitted to the jury, even though it increases the penalty. "Other than the fact of a prior conviction, any fact that increases the penalty for a crime beyond the prescribed statutory maximum must be submitted to the jury and proved beyond a reasonable doubt." Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466, 490 (2000) (emphasis added).

1. "Place of prostitution" is defined in § 939.22(24) as "a place where a person habitually engages, in public or in private, in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse, sexual gratification . . ., masturbation, or sexual contact for anything of value." The Committee concluded that referring to "acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact" would make the instruction more understandable to the jury.

If further explanation is required, see § 939.22(36) for a definition of "sexual intercourse" and § 939.22(34) for a definition of "sexual contact."

While the "state must . . . prove 'habitual use' of the premises [as a place of prostitution] beyond a reasonable doubt . . . [it] need not be established by specifically proving a number of incidents beyond a reasonable doubt. Rather, what is required is that evidence be adduced at trial from which the jury can infer 'habitual use.'" Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 678, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977).

"Habitual" is defined as "customary . . . resorted to on a regular basis." Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

2. The definition of "prostitute" is the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1568A, which is in turn derived from the definition of "practice prostitution" in Wis JI-Criminal 1562.

1566 SOLICITING TO PRACTICE PROSTITUTION — § 944.32)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Soliciting to practice prostitution, as defined in § 944.32 of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally solicits or causes any person to practice prostitution.

State's Burden of Proof

Before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant solicited or caused a person to practice prostitution.

   "To solicit" means to command, encourage, or request another person to engage in specific conduct that constitutes the practice of prostitution.[1]

   "To practice" prostitution means intentionally engaging in sexual intercourse[2] or other sexual acts for anything of value on an ongoing basis.[3]

2. The defendant acted intentionally.

   This requires that the defendant engaged in solicitation intending that the crime of prostitution be committed.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1566 was originally published in 1986 and was revised in 1989 and 2006. This revision was approved by the Committee in July 2015; it involved adoption of a new footnote 2.

Wis JI Criminal 1566 is drafted for a violation of § 944.32, which prohibits soliciting the practice of prostitution. Also see § 948.08, Soliciting A Child For Prostitution, and Wis JI Criminal 2136.

Section 944.32 begins: "Except as provided in s. 948.08 . . ." This is not a reference to a real exception to the coverage of the statute; it refers to a separate statute that prohibits soliciting a child for prostitution. The Committee concluded that it need not be addressed in the instruction.

Section 944.32 applies to a person who solicits two other people to engage in acts of sexual intercourse for money on multiple occasions. The defendant need not be a direct participant in the sexual acts. State v. Kittilstad, 231 Wis.2d 245, 603 N.W.2d 732 (1999).

1. The definition of "solicit" is adapted from the one used in § 5.02(1), Model Penal Code.

2. If a definition of sexual intercourse is necessary, the following definition provided in § 939.22(36) is suggested:

Sexual intercourse requires only vulvar penetration and does not require emission.

The definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 940.225(5)(c) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944. Likewise, the definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 948.01(6) applies only to offenses in Chapter 948.

3. In State v. Johnson, 108 Wis.2d 703, 324 N.W.2d 447 (Ct. App. 1982), the court distinguishes the offense defined by § 944.32 from other prostitution crimes where "solicitation" may be involved:

> Section 944.32, Stats., therefore, proscribes solicitation of ongoing criminal conduct. By contrast, sec. 944.30, Stats., punishes a single act of prostitution, and sec. 939.30, Stats., punishes solicitation of a single felony. It is reasonable for the state to punish solicitation of repeated acts of prostitution more severely than it punishes one act of prostitution.

The definition of "practice prostitution" in the instruction attempts to explain this distinction.

1568 PANDERING — § 944.33(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Pandering, as defined in § 944.33(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who, with intent to facilitate another in [having nonmarital sexual intercourse] [or] [committing an act of (sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (or) (masturbation) (or) (sexual contact)] with a prostitute, directs or transports the person to a prostitute or directs or transports a prostitute to the person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant [directed or transported a person to a prostitute] [or] [directed or transported a prostitute to a person].

   A prostitute is a person who intentionally engages in sexual intercourse[1] or other sexual acts for anything of value.[2]

2. The defendant [directed or transported a person to a prostitute] [or] [directed or transported a prostitute to a person] with intent to facilitate the person in [having nonmarital intercourse] [or] [committing an act of (sexual gratification involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (or) (masturbation) (or) (sexual contact[3])] with a prostitute.

"With intent to facilitate" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[4] to assist the person in (use the term selected for element 2.) .[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1568 was originally published in 2012. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2015; it reflects changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362.

Wis JI Criminal 1568 is drafted for a violation of sub. (2) of § 944.33 which are Class A misdemeanors. Before 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014] sub. (2) of § 944.33 provided that the offense was a Class F felony if the defendant received compensation from the earnings of the prostitute. Act 362 revised that provision and moved it to § 940.302(2)(c), the statute addressing human trafficking. See Wis JI Criminal 1276.

1. If a definition of sexual intercourse is necessary, the following is suggested.

> Sexual intercourse means the penetration of the penis of the male into the genital organ of the female. Only vulvar penetration, however slight, is required. Emission of semen is not required.

The above is based on the definition provided in § 939.22(36). The definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 940.225(5)(c) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944.

2. This is based on part of the definition of "practice prostitution" in Wis JI-Criminal 1562.

3. If a definition of sexual contact is necessary, see § 939.22(34) and Wis JI-Criminal 934. The definition of "sexual contact" in § 940.225(5)(b) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944.

4. "With intent to" requires either mental purpose to cause the result specified or being aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for elaboration on the two alternatives.

5. Select the term used in element 2. For example: "'With intent to facilitate' requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose to assist the person in having nonmarital sexual intercourse with a prostitute."

1568A PANDERING — § 944.33(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Pandering, as defined in § 944.33(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who solicits another to [have nonmarital sexual intercourse] [or] [to commit an act of (sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (or) (masturbation) (or) (sexual contact)] with a person the actor knows is a prostitute.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant solicited (name of person) to [have nonmarital sexual intercourse] [or] [to commit an act of (sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (or) (masturbation) (or) (sexual contact)] with (name of alleged prostitute).

   "Solicit" means to command, encourage, or request another person to engage in conduct that constitutes a crime.[1]

2. The defendant knew that (name of alleged prostitute) was a prostitute.

A prostitute is a person who intentionally engages in sexual intercourse[2] or other sexual acts for anything of value.[3]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1568A was approved by the Committee in July 2015.

Wis JI Criminal 1568A is drafted for a violation of § 944.33(1) – a Class A misdemeanor. For violations of § 944.33(2) see Wis JI Criminal 1568B.

1. The definition of "solicit" is the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1566, Soliciting To Practice Prostitution, which is based on the definition used in § 5.02(1), Model Penal Code.

2. If a definition of sexual intercourse is necessary, the following definition provided in § 939.22(36) is suggested:

Sexual intercourse requires only vulvar penetration and does not require emission.

The definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 940.225(5)(c) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944. Likewise, the definition of "sexual intercourse" in § 948.01(6) applies only to offenses in Chapter 948.

3. This is based on part of the definition of "practice prostitution" in Wis JI-Criminal 1562.

1568B PANDERING — § 944.33(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Pandering, as defined in § 944.33(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by a person who, with intent to facilitate another in [having nonmarital sexual intercourse] [or] [committing an act of (sexual gratification, in public or in private, involving the sex organ of one person and the mouth or anus of another) (or) (masturbation) (or) (sexual contact)] with a prostitute, directs or transports the person to a prostitute or directs or transports a prostitute to the person.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

"With intent to facilitate" requires that the defendant acted with the mental purpose[4] to assist the person in (use the term selected for element 2.) .[5]

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1568 was originally published in 2012 and revised in 2015 to reflect changes made by 2013 Wisconsin Act 362. This revision was approved by the Committee in 2016; it renumbered the instruction Wis JI Criminal 1568B and revised the Comment.

Wis JI Criminal 1568B is drafted for violations of sub. (2) of § 944.33, which are Class A misdemeanors. Before 2013 Wisconsin Act 362 [effective date: April 25, 2014] sub. (2) of § 944.33 provided that the offense was a Class F felony if the defendant received compensation from the earnings of the prostitute. Act 362 revised that provision and moved it to § 940.302(2)(c), the statute addressing human trafficking. See Wis JI Criminal 1276.

For violations of sub. (1) of § 944.33, see Wis JI Criminal 1568A.

1. The definition of "solicit" is the one used in Wis JI-Criminal 1566, Soliciting To Practice Prostitution which is based on the definition used in § 5.02(1), Model Penal Code.

2. This is based on part of the definition of "practice prostitution" in Wis JI-Criminal 1562.

3. If a definition of sexual contact is necessary, see § 939.22(34) and Wis JI-Criminal 934. The definition of "sexual contact" in § 940.225(5)(b) applies only to sexual assaults under § 940.225; it does not apply to crimes defined in Chapter 944.

4. "With intent to" requires either mental purpose to cause the result specified or being aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause that result. § 939.23(3). The Committee concluded that the mental purpose alternative is most likely to apply to this offense. See Wis JI-Criminal 923A and 923B for elaboration on the two alternatives.

1570 KEEPING A PLACE OF PROSTITUTION — § 944.34(1)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 944.34(1) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally keeps a place of prostitution.

State's Burden of Proof

Before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of place) was a place of prostitution.

   "Place of prostitution" means any place where persons habitually engage in or offer to engage in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact for anything of value.[1]

2. The defendant was a keeper of a place of prostitution.

   To keep a place of prostitution is to exercise management or control over its operation.[2] This element does not require that the defendant owned (name of place), but it does require that the defendant maintained management or control of the place in question.

3. The defendant intentionally kept a place of prostitution.

This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to keep a place of prostitution and knew that (name of place) was a place of prostitution.[3]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1570 was originally published in 1990. This revision involved adoption of a new format and was approved by the Committee in August 2005.

Wis JI Criminal 1570 is drafted for a violation of subsec. (1) of § 944.34, which applies to one who "keeps" a place of prostitution. Subsection (2) of the statute applies to one who "grants the use or allows the continued use" of a place of prostitution. See Wis JI Criminal 1571.

1. "Place of prostitution" is defined in § 939.22(24) as "a place where a person habitually engages, in public or in private, in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse, sexual gratification . . ., masturbation, or sexual contact for anything of value." The Committee concluded that referring to "acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact" would make the instruction more understandable to the jury.

If further explanation is required, see § 939.22(36) for a definition of "sexual intercourse" and § 939.22(34) for a definition of "sexual contact."

While the "state must . . . prove 'habitual use' of the premises [as a place of prostitution] beyond a reasonable doubt . . . [it] need not be established by specifically proving a number of incidents beyond a reasonable doubt. Rather, what is required is that evidence be adduced at trial from which the jury can infer 'habitual use.'" Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 678, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977).

"Habitual" is defined as "customary . . . resorted to on a regular basis." Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

2. "Keep" is not defined in statutes or case law. The Committee concluded that it implies the exercise of management or control over the operation of the place.

3. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires knowledge of all the facts which make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

[This page is intentionally left blank]

1571 GRANTING THE USE[1] OF A PLACE AS A PLACE OF PROSTITUTION — § 944.34(2)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Section 944.34(2) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin is violated by one who intentionally grants the use of a place as a place of prostitution.

State's Burden of Proof

Before the defendant may be found guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following three elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of place) was a place of prostitution.

   "Place of prostitution" means any place where persons habitually engage in or offer to engage in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact for anything of value.[2]

2. The defendant granted the use of (name of place) as a place of prostitution.

   To grant the use of a place of prostitution means to give permission to another person to use a place for prostitution.[3]

3. The defendant intentionally granted the use of (name of place) as a place of prostitution.

   This requires that the defendant acted with the purpose to grant the use of a place of prostitution and knew that (name of place) was a place of prostitution.[4]

Deciding About Intent and Knowledge

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent and knowledge. Intent and knowledge must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent and knowledge.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that all three elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1571 was originally published in 1990. This revision involved adoption of a new format and was approved by the Committee in August 2005.

Wis JI Criminal 1571 is drafted for a violation of subsec. (2) of § 944.34, which applies to one who "grants the use or allows the continued use" of a place of prostitution. Subsection (1) of the statute applies to one who "keeps" a place of prostitution. See Wis JI Criminal 1570.

1. Subsection (2) of § 944.34 prohibits "granting the use" or "allowing the continued use" of a place of prostitution. This instruction is drafted for "granting the use" because the Committee concluded that would be the more common charge.

The Wisconsin Supreme Court discussed the difference between the two alternatives in Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977). The court concluded that "grants" requires "affirmative approval of the use of the premises for the purpose of prostitution on a single occasion," while "allows the continued use" requires "intentional but passive acquiescence or toleration of the use of the premises for prostitution purposes on more than one occasion." 76 Wis.2d at 677.

2. "Place of prostitution" is defined in § 939.22(24) as "a place where a person habitually engages, in public or in private, in nonmarital acts of sexual intercourse, sexual gratification . . ., masturbation, or sexual contact for anything of value." The Committee concluded that referring to "acts of sexual intercourse or sexual contact" would make the instruction more understandable to the jury.

If further explanation is required, see § 939.22(36) for a definition of "sexual intercourse" and § 939.22(34) for a definition of "sexual contact."

While the "state must . . . prove 'habitual use' of the premises [as a place of prostitution] beyond a reasonable doubt . . . [it] need not be established by specifically proving a number of incidents beyond a reasonable doubt. Rather, what is required is that evidence be adduced at trial from which the jury can infer 'habitual use.'" Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 678, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977).

"Habitual" is defined as "customary . . . resorted to on a regular basis." Webster's New Collegiate Dictionary.

3. The definition of "grant" is based on the discussion of that term in Johnson v. State, 76 Wis.2d 672, 251 N.W.2d 834 (1977). See note 1, supra.

4. Section 939.23(3) provides that when the word "intentionally" is used, it requires knowledge of all the facts which make the conduct criminal and which appear after the word "intentionally" in the statute.

1601 COMMERCIAL GAMBLING: OPERATING A GAMBLING PLACE FOR GAIN — § 945.03(1m)(a)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Commercial gambling, as defined in § 945.03(1m)(a) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally operates a gambling place for gain.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. (Name of place) was a gambling place.

   A "gambling place" is any building[1] or any room within it, one of whose principal uses is any of the following: making and settling bets; receiving, holding, recording, or forwarding bets or offers to bet.[2]

2. The defendant intentionally operated a gambling place for gain.

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[3] to operate a gambling place and to operate that gambling place for gain.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.

Jury's Decision

If you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that both elements of this offense have been proved, you should find the defendant guilty.

If you are not so satisfied, you must find the defendant not guilty.

COMMENT

Wis JI-Criminal 1601 was originally published in 1985 and revised in 1995. This revision was approved by the Committee in March 2002 and involved adoption of a new format and nonsubstantive editorial changes.

1. The instruction uses the term "building," but the statutory definition covers other areas as well. Section 945.01(4) defines "gambling place" as follows:

> (4) Gambling place. (a) A gambling place is any building or tent, any vehicle (whether self-propelled or not) or any room within any of them, one of whose principal uses is any of the following: making and settling bets; receiving, holding, recording or forwarding bets or offers to bet; conducting lotteries; or playing gambling machines.
> (am) "Gambling place" does not include a place where bingo or raffle is conducted under ch. 563, where a lottery is conducted under ch. 565, or where a race is conducted under ch. 562.

Prior gambling activity is necessary to establish a "gambling place." State v. Nixa, 121 Wis.2d 160, 360 N.W.2d 52 (Ct. App. 1984). Also see State v. Dahlk, 111 Wis.2d 287, 330 N.W.2d 611 (Ct. App. 1983), and State v. Morrissy, 25 Wis.2d 638, 131 N.W.2d 366 (1964).

2. "Bet" is defined as follows in § 945.01(1):

> (1) Bet. A bet is a bargain in which the parties agree that, dependent upon chance even though accompanied by some skill, one stands to win or lose something of value specified in the agreement. But a bet does not include:
> (a) Bona fide business transactions which are valid under the law of contracts including without limitation:
> 1. Contracts for the purchase or sale at a future date of securities or other commodities, and
> 2. Agreements to compensate for loss caused by the happening of the chance including without limitation contracts of indemnity or guaranty and life or health and accident insurance;
> (b) Offers of purses, prizes or premiums to the actual contestants in any bona fide contest for the determination of skill, speed, strength, or endurance or to the bona fide owners of animals or vehicles entered in such contest;
> (cm) Participation in bingo or a raffle conducted under Ch. 563.
> (d) Pari mutuel wagering subject to Ch. 562.
> (e) Participation in a lottery conducted under Ch. 565.

3. The instruction uses the "mental purpose" alternative for the definition of "intentionally." A second alternative is that the defendant be "aware that his or her conduct is practically certain to cause" the result. See § 939.23(3) and Wis JI-Criminal 923.1 and 923.2.

1602 COMMERCIAL GAMBLING: RECEIVING A BET FOR GAIN — § 945.03(1m)(b)

Statutory Definition of the Crime

Commercial gambling, as defined in § 945.03(1m)(b) of the Criminal Code of Wisconsin, is committed by one who intentionally receives a bet for gain.

State's Burden of Proof

Before you may find the defendant guilty of this offense, the State must prove by evidence which satisfies you beyond a reasonable doubt that the following two elements were present.

Elements of the Crime That the State Must Prove

1. The defendant intentionally received a bet.

   A bet is an agreement in which one stands to win or lose something of value dependent upon chance, even though accompanied by some skill.[1]

2. The defendant intentionally received a bet for gain.

   "Intentionally" requires that the defendant had the mental purpose[2] to receive a bet and to receive that bet for gain.

Deciding About Intent

You cannot look into a person's mind to find intent. Intent must be found, if found at all, from the defendant's acts, words, and statements, if any, and from all the facts and circumstances in this case bearing upon intent.
